Again: the very fact that they deem it necessary to insert a clause in their constitution acknowledging God to be the Ruler of nations before securing a provision for chaplains and days of thanksgiving and prayer, proves that under our Constitution such things, although practiced, are not constitutional. They at least desire to be consistent. It may be difficult to tell which is better, to have a good constitution and override it, as is done in this country, or to have a bad one and live up to it; but all will agree that a good one fully lived up to and respected in its letter and spirit is best of all.

We have a good Constitution here. Religion is left out that it may not be a subject of controversy, that it may be free. The framers of our Constitution, living so near the times of fierce persecution, knew how to avoid those furnace fires of religious intolerance which have consumed the glory of so many nations better than their degenerate descendants who have never felt persecutions and so do not know how they arise nor what they are like.

The example of our great nation in making a Constitution requiring no religious test of our citizens, a Constitution that every honest man of whatever religion or of no religion can support, and our remarkable national growth so largely derivative from it, ought to have more effect on the people of Australia as a pointer to them in framing their constitution than all the petitions of religious devotees whose misdirected religious zeal and enthusiasm have gotten the better of their judgment. The voice and lessons of history should be given the preference in attention rather than the wild clamors of religious zealots.

With many Australians so unwisely desiring what the fathers of this country knew would be fatal to our progress as a nation, and with a strong tendency here to change our Constitution in this respect or to override it, there is great need of a faithful expose of these mediæval theories which would drag our modern liberty and progress back into the quagmire of former generations and bury it beyond the hope of a resurrection.

The "New [Christian Citizenship] Fourth of July."

As was to be expected, the fourth of July is to share the fate of other national days is being appropriated to the uses of "Christian Citizenship." A suggested programme, which has been sent out "To all ministers and Christian patriots" from the headquarters of the National Christian Citizenship League, in Chicago, provides for observing "The New Fourth of July" with "rousing celebrations on definitely Christian citizenship lines." The programme is as follows:—

"5:30 A. M.—Firing of salute of seven or thirteen guns, immediately followed by simultaneous peals from all the church bells, lasting five minutes.

"6:00 A. M.—Union sunrise prayer meetings. Everybody invited.

"9:00 A. M.—Band concert or other music at place of rendezvous.

"9:30 A. M.—Form procession and march to various churches. Short service at each church, somewhat as follows:

"1. Sing 'America' (two verses); (2) short prayer; (3) run the flag to top of steeple or otherwise decorate church with flags; (4) reading of the call of the National Christian Citizenship League; (5) sing 'Coronation' (two verses). Continue line of march to next church. At each church have similar programme, varying the verses of 'America' and 'Coronation,' or using other hymns of like character. Leave the flags on each church until the following Monday at least. From last church decorated march procession to the park or grove where the chief exercises are to be held.

"12:00 M.—Basket dinner.

"1:30 P. M.—Music, band, chorus-singing of united choirs, school children, etc. Patriotic and Christian hymns.

"2:00 P. M.—Assembly called to order at speakers' stand for a programme, to include singing, a prayer, two or three ringing speeches of not over twenty minutes each, reading of the call of the National Christian Citizenship League. Presentation of the Christian citizenship crusade for enlistments.

"Close, singing 'Coronation.'"

In no way does it occur to us that the union of Church and State which "Christian Citizenship" embodies could be more fittingly symbolized than by the flying of the Government flag from the spires of the churches.

Religious Liberty in Argentine Republic.

BY JEAN VUILLEUMIER.

In his bull Indei Coetera, issued May 4, 1494, Pope Alexander VI. gave South America to the kings of Spain and Portugal, on condition of establishing thereon the Catholic faith and seeing to the conversion of the Indians. In 1810, an independent constitution was drafted, somewhat on the type of the North American constitution. With regard to religious liberty, this constitution was a compromise between the spirit of the nineteenth century and the Catholic usages and prejudices of the people. It grants "every man living on the territory of the republic the right of exercising his religion." At the same time it declares that the president and vice-president "must belong to the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman confession," and states that "the nation protects, upholds and propagates the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman religion." Accordingly, the Catholic clergy are supported by the national funds, as are also convents, Catholic colleges and church edifices.

Until about ten years ago civil marriage did not exist, and one could be wedded only by submitting at the same time to the "sacrament" as administered by a priest or by Protestant ministers representing some European State church. It may surprise some readers to learn that the Methodist pastors in Buenos Ayres secured recognition by passing as ministers of the "United States State Church"!!

Civil marriage is now recognized in all parts of the republic. Still the law provides for divorce under no consideration. At the same time, many people enter as many illegal marriage relations as they please without being interfered with in the least.

The civil register has only been in existence for a few years, and that in just three provinces. In the other provinces citizenship is yet inseparably bound to the act of baptism performed by the Catholic priests, or by Protestant ministers recognized by the government. The baptismal certificate is the only document provided for by the law with which citizenship papers can be secured.

A lively fight is being kept up nevertheless against Jesuitism and intolerance by several secular papers. One Methodist lecturer in Buenos Ayres draws large congregations when speaking on anti-papal themes, and some leading men are avowedly in favor of the separation of Church and State.

Esperanza de Santa Fe, Jan. 26, 1897.

An Appeal.

From "Baptist Principles of Religious Liberty," by Geo. B. Wheeler.

THE writer appeals to Baptists in the name of their historic struggle for freedom of conscience, in the name of the martyrs of that struggle, to be loyal to their own avowed principles of religious liberty, which principles are violated by the enactment and enforcement of religious legislation in the form of Sunday laws.

The persecutors of Baptists, the defenders of the Inquisition, and the bigots in all ages, have attempted to justify their persecutions on the ground that they were necessary for the "peace and good order of society." In the name of justice and consistency I plead with Baptists, Do not adopt the "civil-sabbath" excuse as a cloak to cover the sin and crime of enforcing religious conformity by law, and thus truly admit the claim of the persecutors of your fathers, that these persecutors were civil patriots while your fathers were society pests.

This appeal is made in the name of Christianity which teaches liberty of conscience, but which its enemies, because of the continual persecutions carried on in its name declare to be necessarily cruel to dissenters. This is an appeal to Baptists to demonstrate to all the world that a weak, persecuted church can become strong and still refuse to use that strength to persecute its dissenting brethren. The world is waiting for such a church.

The writer appeals to Baptists to remain true to their historic position on Church and State, and oppose the theocratic movement which to-day is crowding the halls of legislation, as in the days of Constantine, in quest of human power to support religious institutions, instead of appealing to the throne of grace. In the language of the Russian boy, I again appeal to you, "Send your petitions to the throne of God, and not to the Congress of the United States."

The writer appeals to Baptists to purge their garments of this modern Sunday-law persecution by withdrawing their influence from its instruments and agents, and by raising their voices against it. This is not an appeal for sympathy on behalf of imprisoned seventh-day observers. If their faith is not worth suffering for, it is not worth possessing. Their persecutors, not they, are the ones most in need of sympathy. They can afford to suffer, but Baptists cannot afford to persecute them, nor remain silent while others oppress them. Persecutions will come, but woe unto him by whom they come.

Men, whose boast it is that ye
Come of fathers brave and free,
If there breathes on earth a slave,
Are ye truly free and brave?
If you do not feel the chain
When it works a brother's pain,
Are ye not base slaves indeed—
Slaves unworthy to be freed?

* * * * *

Is true freedom but to break
Fetters for our own dear sake,
And with leathern hearts forget
That we owe mankind a debt?—
No; true freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear,
And, with heart and hand, to be
In earnest to make others free.

They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think;
They are slaves who dare not be In the right with two or three.

—James Russell Lowell.

Sunday on a U. S. Man-of-War.

A RECENT issue of the Union Signal gives the following description of the exercises by which Sunday is observed on a Government warship;—

"Sunday on board a United States man-of-war is in many respects similar to any other day in the week, save that the men are more quiet, the occasional games and recreations are suspended, there are no drills, and the morning 'church' is the feature of the day.

"On board the New York, the flagship of the North Atlantic Squadron, the Rev. A. L. Royce is chaplain. The services on this ship last about an hour, and a deep interest is taken in the responses from the book of prayer, as well as in the sermon and singing, music for which is furnished by the Admiral's band.

"This quarter of the gun deck during religious services presents an interesting scene. At one end the chaplain stands at his pulpit—a solid oak piece of furniture draped with the Stars and Stripes—on which rests the open Bible. To the right the officers of the ship are seated, and facing the chaplain are the marines, in uniforms of white duck, with blue sailor collars. To the left the rear of a powerful gun is visible, the muzzle projecting through a porthole, while to the right, and back of the officers, a rack of rifles may be seen. Here, amid the deadly weapons of modern warfare, this body of men assemble to lift up their hearts and voices to their Maker.

"Sunday on board ship is resting-day for nearly all hands, and those who are inclined to attend divine worship do so of their own free will. It is to the credit of our seamen that very few of them neglect this privilege. The Government provides a chaplain, and designates the hour for service, but does not compel the men to attend, so that it is very encouraging to find a large proportion of the ship's men at the Sunday-morning service.

"A beautiful custom in the navy in this connection is that when the ship's bell tolls for church, the national colors are hauled down from the peak, and the church pennant, consisting of a blue cross on a white field, is displayed instead. The colors are then hauled back to a position immediately underneath the pennant. Thus the sacred symbol of Christianity alone is permitted to take precedence of the Stars and Stripes; and this, the only flag that is ever hoisted above the national colors, remains flying during the hour of Sunday worship, from half past ten until half past eleven. It is then hauled down and the Stars and Stripes are again hoisted. Every flagship in the navy carries a chaplain, and most of the first-raters, such as the Columbia and Minneapolis. Some of the second-raters, like the Texas and Maine, also have chaplains. Every prominent naval station and navy-yard are also provided with chaplains, so that in the navy the Government provides in all for twenty-four chaplains, who at the time of their appointment must not be over thirty-five nor less than twenty-one years of age.

"To those chaplains on the active list, the moral and religious work of our churches in the navy is intrusted, and each is required to do the work of his church without a shadow of sectarianism. Christian unity is aimed at and largely realized in the navy, and to the building up of character the chaplains are at work with might and main. They are appointed and commissioned, like any other naval officer, by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. As in the case of other staff officers, they hold relative rank with the line, their rank terminating with that of captain, so that theirs is the privilege of the ship. The uniform is not military, neither is it unmilitary, since it consists of the ordinary clerical dress, which is especially becoming on board ship."

Would the "church pennant"—the "sacred symbol of Christianity"—be kept at the masthead while the ship went into action and sunk opposing ships and killed the enemies of the Government? Probably not. But if the emblem of Christianity is ever appropriate at the masthead of a man-of-war, why should it not be so when the latter is in action? For what is a man-of-war designed to do but to fight? She does not change her principles when she goes into battle. But think of the "sacred emblem of Christianity"—the ensign of the Prince of Peace—flying in a sulphurous canopy over a ship from whose sides great guns are hurling missiles of death against other ships freighted with human beings, and whose decks present a pandemonium of men shouting and cursing in a mad endeavor to murder their fellowmen, or shrieking and groaning from the effects of the like efforts made by their opponents!

What has Christianity to do with a scene like this? Just as much, we answer, as it has to do with a man-of-war. The purposes of the two are utterly and unalterably at variance.

Again, every feature of the service on a man-of-war rests upon the sanction of the Government, for a man-of-war is wholly a Government institution. Sunday observance, therefore, as a feature of this service, has the sanction of the Government,—a sanction which is wholly unauthorized by the fundamental law of the Government—the Constitution. This, and the governmental appointment of chaplains, are features consistent only with a union of Church and State.

True Protestantism.

TRUE Protestants are united in vindicating the rights of conscience and in protesting against intolerance.

True Protestants are united in fighting for the liberty of their antagonists as earnestly as for the liberty of their friends, ever preferring to be among the persecuted than among the persecutors.

True Protestants are united in rejecting the use of the civil power, ever preferring to see the gospel oppressed when deliverance from oppression must be obtained by the use of carnal weapons.—Count A. de Gasparin, 1852.

THE New York Press, of June 10, is authority for the following:—

“The Scottish Sabbath Alliance has come to the conclusion that milking cows on Sunday is sin. A series of experiments has demonstrated that if the cows be not fed on Saturday they will not need to be milked on Sunday. The next step will be to use gags which will prevent any mooing.”

DR. CHARLES A. BERRY, of London, recently remarked that “the most imminent danger to the Bible to-day is the man who would fight like a Trojan for the orthodox theory of inspiration, but does not sit down and read the Book for himself.” The Bible itself is in no danger, of course; for it stands by the power of God. But there are very many people who are in danger of incurring eternal disaster because they are more willing to show their Christian zeal by fighting than by humbly seeking for divine instruction.

Wanted.

FIFTY good hygienic cooks. The Sanitarium summer school will conduct a special course for the training of persons who desire to become practical hygienic cooks. There is an increasing demand for such persons to take positions in connection with our schools, sanitariums, city missions, and in private families. Those interested should address the undersigned at once.

J. H. KELLOGG.

Interesting Facts.

At this time when so much is being said concerning the nations of Europe, we believe it will be interesting to everybody to see the picture of some of the people who stand at the head of the various governments. The above heading is the name of a little book, which contains besides 74 pages of very interesting facts brought out in various ways, AN ALBUM OF 21 FINE HALF-TONE CUTS DIRECT FROM THE PHOTOGRAPHS of European royalty, and includes Victoria, Queen of England; Christian IX., of Denmark, and his Queen; Frederick, Crown Prince of Denmark; Oscar, King of Sweden; Sophia, Queen of Sweden; the King and Queen of Greece; Alexander III., Czar of Russia; and Maria Dagmar, Czarina of Russia; Wilhelm II., Emperor of Germany, and his wife; Josef I., Emperor of Austria, his Queen and her son; and others of equal importance and renown.

This little book contains a total of 96 pages, nicely bound, in heavy paper, and was sold by the publisher at 25 cents. We will send it post-paid for 15 cents per copy two copies for 25 cents. Send now. Postage stamps will be received.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50.
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion,	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
	Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

Grand Trunk Railway System

IS THE MOST POPULAR ROUTE TO THE WEST,
Combining Every Comfort and Luxury.

Solid Vestibuled Pullman Dining and Sleeping Car Trains

Through from New York to Chicago without change

Choice of route from NEW YORK to NIAGARA FALLS, SUSPENSION BRIDGE, TORONTO, DETROIT, PORT HURON, CHICAGO, and the West, Northwest, and Southwest, via

The Celebrated ST. CLAIR TUNNEL,

Which connects Canada and the United States, and is the greatest submarine tunnel in the world.

The Grand Trunk Railway System is justly celebrated for its Fishing and Hunting Resorts, as on and contiguous to it are the greatest grounds of the civilized world, among them being the

MUSKOKA LAKES, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER, THOUSAND ISLANDS, LAKE ST. JOHN REGION, WHITE MOUNTAINS, ANDROSCOGGIN,

and many others too numerous to mention.

CHAS. M. HAYS, Gen. Manager. GEO. B. REEVE, Gen. Traffic Manager. W. E. DAVIS, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt.
MONTREAL, P. Q.

FRANK P. DWYER,
Eastern Passenger Agent.

273 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS, slightly damaged, offered at half price.
Address PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

The TWO REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges	$1.85
Cloth, marbled edges,	2.50
" Gilt edges,	3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,

39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spake it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12 X 18 INCHES

On thick paper mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

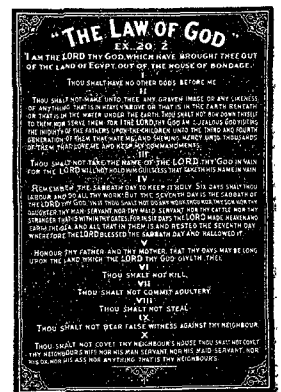

Postpaid 25 cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUB. Co.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELTON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y., "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.
192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

DON'T TAKE an agency until you find out what we have to offer. If already engaged or in business, send for our "Side-line Specialties." Begin, now where you are, and turn spare moments into cash. $75 per month. Particulars free. Write to-day. Address,

E. E. MILES, Manuf'r and Pub.,
5136 State St., Chicago, Ill.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24..

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

1139 Bond st., New York City.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELTON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., LITT. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of —Harvard University.—

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 BOND ST., NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

BAPTIST PRINCIPLES

OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

APPLIED TO SUNDAY LAWS

is An Appeal to Baptists

to be true to their historic principles and practices touching religious freedom.

—PLAIN BUT KIND.—

Of it a leading Baptist minister and editor writes:—

"I have read your pamphlet on 'Baptist Principles of Religious Liberty' with great interest and entire sympathy. . . . I hope you will continue your efforts for the promotion of religious liberty."

Fifty-two Pages.

Illustrated

Price 6 Cents.

Usual Discount in Quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Ca

—An Ideal Book of Travel.—

BY LAND AND SEA

A JOURNEY THROUGH FIVE CONTINENTS.

STARTING from the interior of the United States, the reader quickly finds himself transported, as it were, to the scenes of the journey, the several stopping places being California, Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, England, and Holland. The aim of the narrative, which has been written almost wholly from original notes and observations, has been especially directed to the object of presenting the life and nature of those regions, apart from the mental instruction and its inherent features of intellectual entertainment. The author has happily found, in the object lessons of life under its various phases and conditions, illustrations of moral truths, which are portrayed in a manner at once instructive and attractive. The book contains 392 pages, embellished with over 100 original, full-page engravings designed especially for this work, and numerous part-page illustrations, and is furnished in the following bindings:—

Fine silk-finished cloth, embossed in gold and colored ink, marbled edges	$2.25
“ “ “ “ “ gilt titles	2.75
Full Russia Leather, gold side and back titles, gilt edges, extra finish	3.90

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

AMERICAN STATE PAPERSA Book for the Times.

A most valuable work on the subject of religious legislation in the United States, from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

It includes the various prominent acts, both State and national, relating to subjects of religion, such as Bills of Rights, Amendments, Treaties, Sunday Observance, etc. In it are found various Memorials, Petitions, and Remonstrances; House and Senate Reports on Sunday Mails; documents on "The Sphere of Civil Government," "The Rights of the Jew," "Religion in the Public Schools," "Civil Laws Against Blasphemy," "Christianity and the Common Law," "Sunday Legislation," etc., etc.; Judicial Decisions on Sunday Laws and the Bible in the Public Schools. It also contains in an appendix the provisions in the Bills of Rights of all the States, relating to the rights of conscience, and

The Sunday Laws, Complete,

OF ALL THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

There are also running footnotes all through the book, containing the comments and statements of eminent men.

368 pages. Price, best binding, $2.00, Cheap edition, $1.25.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

"LAW OF GOD AS CHANGED BY THE PAPACY."

THIS chart has been thoroughly revised, and contains some of the more recent utterances of this great apostate power.

The plan of the chart is the same as the old one. On either side are telling quotations from Catholic authorities admitting and boasting of the change, while the "Commandments as Changed by the Papacy" occupy a central position.

It is a forcible presentation of the subject, and will be a valuable help to Bible workers and ministers. Size 36x48 inches. Price $1.00. Printed on thin paper for inclosure in letters and miscellaneous distribution, 50 cents per 100.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York,

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

Bound in Buckram, price, - $1.75.
" " " gilt edges, price, 2.25.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND RELIGION.

* * *

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

Cloth, 378 pp., $1.00.
Paper Covers,40.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

Something New Under the Sun is

THE "COMBINATION" BIBLE.

All the changes which occur in the Revised Version appear in foot-notes, thus escaping the awkward and cumbersome parallel versions.

RV just before a word or passage shows how the same word or passage is rendered in the Revised Version as seen in the corresponding foot-note.

RO before a word or passage in the text indicates that the words inclosed in parentheses in the foot-notes are omitted in the Revised Version.

Clear type, helps, maps, concordance, etc.

Published by the National Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Send for circulars.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUB. Co.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, JUNE 24, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 25.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

ISRAEL would form a State, and have a king, that they might be "like all the nations."

All the nations were heathen. To be "like all the nations," then, was only to be like the heathen.

All the nations became heathen, by rejecting God. Then when Israel would be like all the heathen, they could do so only by rejecting God.

It was therefore but the simple statement of a fact, when the Lord said: "They have rejected me, that I should not reign over them."

When Israel formed a State, they thereby created a union of religion and the State. But they had to reject God in order to form a State. Therefore they had to reject God in order to form a union of religion and the State.

It follows, therefore, plainly, that no people can ever form a union of religion and the State without rejecting God.

But though Israel had rejected God, yet he did not reject them. He still cared for them; and, through his prophets, still sought to teach and guide them, ever doing his best to save them from the evil consequences which were inevitable in the course which they had taken.

Long before the days of Samuel and Saul, Israel had been taught what would be the outcome of the forming themselves into a State and choosing a king. For the formation of a kingdom in the days of Saul, was but the culmination of a long-cherished desire in that direction.

After the great victories of Gideon, a hundred years before the day of Saul, "the men of Israel said unto Gideon, Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy son, and thy son's son also; for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian."

This was nothing else than a proposition then to establish a kingdom with Gideon as the first king, and the kingship to be hereditary in his family. But Gideon refused the offer, and "said unto them, I will not rule over you; neither shall my son rule over you: the Lord shall rule over you."

Gideon knew that such a proposition meant the rejection of God; and he would have no part in any such thing. But the desire still lurked among the people: and forty years afterward, upon the death of Gideon, it was manifested openly in the men of Shechem making Abimelech, a son of Gideon, king in Shechem.

But in a parable, Jotham, the only other son of Gideon, who had survived the slaughter wrought by Abimelech, mapped out plainly to the people what would be the sure result of their venture.

Jotham stood on the top of Gerizim and called to the people of Shechem and said: "The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them: and they said unto the olive tree, Reign thou over us.

"But the olive tree said unto them, Should I leave my fatness, wherewith by me they honor God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?

"And the trees said to the fig tree, Come thou, and reign over us.

"But the fig tree said unto them, Should I leave my sweetness and my good fruit, and go to be promoted over the trees?

"Then said the trees unto the vine, Come thou, and reign over us.

"But the vine said unto them, Should I leave my wine which cheereth God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?

"Then said all the trees unto the bramble, Come thou and reign over us.

"And the bramble said unto them, If in truth ye anoint me king over you, then come and put your trust in my shadow: and if not, let fire come out of the bramble and devour the cedars of Lebanon.

"Now therefore, if ye have done truly and sincerely in that ye have made Abimelech king . . . then rejoice ye in Abimelech, and let him also rejoice in you. But if not, let fire come out from Abimelech, and devour the men of Shechem, and the house of Millo; and let fire come out from the men of Shechem, and from the house of Millo, and devour Abimelech."

And so it came to pass; for in three years the distrust and dissension had so grown between the parties to the transaction respecting the kingship, that open war broke out which ended only with the death of Abimelech, and, with that, the end of their experiment at setting up a kingdom.

Now all this was held up before all Israel who should come after, as a solemn warning and a forcible admonition of what would inevitably be the result of any attempt at setting up a kingdom. And when, in disregard of all this, and against the Lord's open protest, they did at last again set up a kingdom, this very result, though longer delayed, did inevitably come.

Almost all the reign of Saul, their first king, was spent by him in envy and jealousy of David and a steady seeking to kill him. The reign of David was marred by his own great sin, which he never could have carried out if he had not been king; and was also disturbed by the treason of his chief counselor, and the insurrection of his son Absalom. The latter half of the reign of Solomon was marked by his great apostasy, and was cursed by the abominable idolatries that came in with his heathen wives, and which in turn brought heavy burdens and oppression upon the people.

At the end of the reign of these three kings, the nation had been brought to a condition in which it was not well that they should continue as one; and they were therefore divided into two—the Ten Tribes forming the kingdom of Israel, and the two forming the kingdom of Judah.

And from that day, with the Ten Tribes there was a continuous course of apostasy, of contention, and of regicide, till at last from the terrors of anarchy they were compelled to cry out "We have no king." Then the Lord offered himself to them again, saying, "Oh Israel, thou hast fled from me. Thou hast destroyed thyself. Return unto me. I will be your king." But they would not return, and consequently were carried captive to Assyria and were destroyed and lost forever.

When this happened to the kingdom of Israel, it could yet be said of Judah, "Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the saints." But this was for a little while. Judah too went steadily step by step downward in the course of apostasy, until of her too the word had to be given, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him."

Thus Judah too was obliged to say, We have no king. And Judah had to go captive to Babylon, with her city and temple destroyed, and the land left desolate. Thereafter the Lord was obliged to govern his people by the heathen powers, until he himself should come. And even when he came, because he would not at once set himself up as a worldly king and sanction their political aspirations, they refused to recognize him at all. And when at last, even Pilate appealed to them—"Shall I crucify your King"? they still, as in the days of Samuel, insisted on rejecting God, and cried out, "We have no king but Cæsar."

And this was but the direct outcome, and the inevitable logic, of the step that they took in the days of Samuel. When they rejected God and chose Saul, in that was wrapped up their rejection of God and their choosing of Cæsar. In rejecting God that they might be like all the nations, they became like all the nations that rejected God.

And such was the clear result of the union of Church and State among the people of Israel. And it is all written, precisely as it was worked out in detail, for the instruction and warning of all people who should come after; and for the admonition of those upon whom the ends of the world are come.

The Failure of "Civic Reform."

DR. PARKHURST, the noted apostle of civic reformation, has announced his retirement from active service in that line, on account of failing health. Upon his departure to seek its restoration in a foreign clime, he announced to his congregation that henceforth "my one devotion will be to my pulpit, to the life and work of this church, and to the interests of its families and individual members."

In a review of the work accomplished by this prominent clergyman as a civic reformer, the Independent (N. Y.) says: "It has been a great thing for the city that our people have been taught that religion has a right to meddle with its politics, to fight with and to master it."

A "great thing" it is, undoubtedly, for the chief city of this free commonwealth; but not a good thing. What religion is it that has this "right"? Is it the papal religion, or the Protestant? and if the Protestant, is it the Methodist, the Presbyterian, the Lutheran, Episcopalian, Quaker, or Adventist religion, or some other? When this point comes to be settled, will the controversy which must ensue be another "great thing" for this city? We are afraid it will.

But what religion has fought with and mastered the politics of New York City? Not a very good religion, evidently, if those politics are now obedient to their master.

In short, the result of this meddling of religion with city politics, is such as plainly to stamp the project of reform by such means as a total failure. "Tammany," so far from being eliminated from New York's politics, is as big a factor in them as ever. And while some changes have been made in the features of civic life in this city, there has been no real elimination of immorality. And the simple reason for this is that immorality cannot be eliminated in that way. That result can be accomplished only by the grace of God.

The earnest and no doubt sincere efforts of Dr Parkhurst to inject Christianity into the civic life of a great city have failed, as all such efforts must fail. But Christianity has not failed. That is as powerful to-day as it ever was, to triumph over sin in the individual heart.

A STRIKING sentence was recently uttered by Dr. Josiah Strong in an address: "It is a dangerous thing when the hand of the Goddess of Liberty has to rest upon a bayonet." This country is drifting toward that time, and there are indications that the drift may become a fierce current."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

The Religious World Adrift.

IN its issue of June 16, the New York Herald gives expression to some feeling of solicitude concerning the outcome of the manifest drift in religious thought and teaching which is taking the masses into altogether new channels of belief. It says:—

"What is the drift of religious thought in these latter days, and where will the current take us? Is it true that the dogmas of our fathers are slowly falling in innocuous desuetude; that we their children have slipped the old-fashioned moorings; and, if so, are there dangerous rocks ahead, or the open sea where we shall have plain sailing?

"This is a matter of very considerable consequence to us laymen. We have been brought up in certain ideas, and there is some solicitude among us to know whether the reverend clergy still cling to these ideas or whether their grasp on them is loosening. They certainly ought to be entirely frank with us, and if the basis of religious conviction is gradually shifting we ought to know it. It is not a subject in which concealment can be regarded as expedient. We don't wish to believe what specialists have discovered to be untrue, and if any modification of the old faith has taken place the pulpit should make open confession thereof.

"Are we heading for the port of agnosticism? Is religion so far unlike the exact sciences that a large part of it consists of the unknowable, and have we reached that point when, if we are to be religious, we must regard all dogmas as inexplicable mysteries, to be accepted blindly or not at all? What says the ripest scholarship of the age on this subject? The common people need some degree of bold speech by those who have the authority to speak. There should be no confusion in the public mind and it is not for the ultimate interest of the church universal that its teachers should hesitate to tell the truth, and the whole truth."

The condition of the religious world in general at this day is well expressed by the word, drifting. They have lost sight of the well-defined faith of their fathers, and are drifting on, whether to dangerous rocks or an open sea they know not, neither do they care. But one thing is certain; namely, that the soul which drifts upon the sea of religious thought without chart or compass, is in far greater danger of shipwreck than is the mariner under similar conditions on the literal ocean. For nowhere do treacherous currents cross the path of safety and more swiftly or insensibly draw the voyager away, or more surely bear him upon the rocks, than in that spiritual sea upon which every soul embarks to find its destiny.

There are two opposing currents in this great sea, which to-day are bearing their freight of human souls to different destinies. The one is that upon which the observer finds himself drifting away from the beliefs of his fathers, while he queries, as in the Herald quotation, whether he is moving toward the open sea or toward the rocks. And this current—sad to say—bears the masses of the people,—those who look upon the revelations of the inspired Word as hidden mysteries, concerning which they must seek to the "ripest scholarship" for explanation. They are becoming more and more unsettled in faith, more and more uncertain whether any definite bearings can be taken by which to shape their course.

The other current, on the contrary, is bearing forward a class of people whose faith and hope are even more definite than were those of their fathers. There is no drifting in their course,—no speculation as to their whereabouts, or seeking to the "ripest scholarship," to priest or pastor, for directions. They are following the plain directions given them by the Omniscient. More than fifty years ago God sent a message to the world which said, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." Rev. 14:7. Those who received that message, as many did and are still doing, knew that they had reached the hour of that great investigation, the conclusion of which would mark the termination of God's work for the salvation of men. Almost immediately following this message came another one, saying, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." And anon "the third angel followed them,"—a third message went forth,—saying, "If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation." This called attention to the apostate spiritual power which has presumed to change the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, and points to that change as the mark of its spiritual authority; and thus those who received it were led to return to the keeping of the true Sabbath.

Thus on the one hand are those who are drifting aimlessly on—a vast multitude—knowing only that they are getting farther and farther away from the faith of their fathers and that their course must be taking them toward agnosticism or something else; while on the other hand there are those—only a small company, alas—who rejoice in a still more definite faith than that of their fathers,—not a faith that sets aside the old paths, but which reveals more clearly and beautifully the wonderful wisdom and love of God in his great work for the redemption of mankind. They behold wondrous things out of the divine law, and with a hope based upon the definite assurances of the infallible Word, they are waiting for the glorious appearing of their God in the clouds of heaven, to purify the earth of sin and sinners.

To which of these companies, reader, do you belong? Are you drifting carelessly on into the unknown, or are you guided by the chart and compass of God's Word?

THE steamships Hecla and Mississippi were recently in collision on a fog-swept portion of the high seas. An eye-witness of the disaster relates that as the Hecla was bearing down on the Mississippi, he saw a man run forward to the Hecla's prow, and picking up a stick, hold it out to fend off the collision. A fit illustration this of the power of man's puny arm to control the forces of righteousness and evil which are ever in collision upon this earth. Only the arm of God can turn from their course the evil forces whose onslaughts upon society men are now trying to fend off by legislation.

The Importance of a Theory.

In answer to the question, "Christian Citizenship: What Is It?" a writer, in the June Christian Endeavorer, says:—

"The world is sick unto death of theories. The demand of the times is for men of action—men who do something. . . .

"The strength of the great movement we call Christian citizenship lies largely in its being practical."

This is very true; but the importance of a theory must not be overlooked; for all practice is shaped by some theory, and if the theory be bad, the practical results that come from it will be of the same character. And of this the "Christian citizenship" movement affords an illustration. For this movement is based upon the theory that righteousness is to be established on the earth by means of the good works which "Christian citizenship" aims to perform. And this theory is false, being contrary to the express teachings of the prophetic Word relative to the conditions which would prevail in the last days. See 2 Tim. 3:1-5, etc. The theory of a temporal millennium is luring vast numbers of people on to a stupendous disaster, to which their eyes will be opened only when there remains no means of escaping from it.

It is true the world is sick of theories; but it will be still more sick of the practices which must come in the effort to realize the "Christian citizenship" theory. For the theory that righteousness can be set up by means of the ballot and human legislation, can only lead to religious controversy, persecution, and confusion.

Saint-making at Rome.

RECENTLY, as all the world has been informed, two additions were made to the Roman Catholic calendar of "saints," with due ceremonials and announcement in St. Peter's church, at Rome. The canonization ceremonies are said to have eclipsed in point of display anything that has been seen on like occasions since the pope lost his temporal power. Says a London journal, "There were the glittering uniforms of soldier guards, robes of the clergy, jewelled mitres, waving banners, and swinging censers, all fitting accompaniments of the ceremony which blasphemously professes to exalt the dead to be objects of devotion."

The same journal adds that "Before declaring the two new papal saints, to whom petitions may be addressed, the pope, according to the formula, twice deferred granting the request for canonization in order to consult with the Lord." In what way he undertook this consultation it is not said; but evidently it was not by going to the Word of God, for that Word declares that dead men do not know anything, but are in their graves, oblivious to all that transpires in earth or heaven. See Eccl. 9:5, 6; Ps. 146:3, 4, etc. According to that Word, there can be no occasion whatever for saint-making or saint worship. It is very certain, therefore, that the pope did not consult with the Author of that Word.

A RECENT decision of the police court of Philadelphia affirms that the crying of any article of merchandize in the streets of the city on the "Sabbath" is a "breach of the peace," and the policemen are authorized to stop it.

Foreign Missionary Work.

WHEN the Great Missionary left his disciples, he commissioned them to go "into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." That was a gospel of religious liberty—not in its generally accepted sense, but liberty in Christ—freedom from sin. "The Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

Never in the history of the world was there more need of this gospel being given in its simplicity than to-day. Hungry, burdened, discouraged sin-sick souls are appealing for help; and not alone from our own shores, but from across the ocean, from the darkness of heathendom and from the islands of the sea comes the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." These earnest pleas have touched the hearts of thousands of God-fearing, self-sacrificing men and women everywhere who have left their homes and taken their lives in their hands, as it were, to tell the people the good news of a Saviour who can save. The good they are accomplishing, the Judgment alone can reveal.

There are many whose hearts beat in union with this good work, to whom have been intrusted this world's goods, and who would gladly contribute of their means to carry it forward, did they but know where to send their contributions. To all such, and others as well, we take pleasure in calling attention to the announcement in another column of the Foreign Missionary Board of Seventh-day Adventists, located at Philadelphia, Pa. This is headquarters of an aggressive gospel work that is being carried forward in foreign fields, and with remarkable results. Voluntary contributions will be thankfully received, and a cordial invitation is extended to those who desire to make such offerings to send them to the Treasurer of the Board, W. H. Edwards. We can assure our readers that every dollar sent there will be conscientiously expended in this great labor of love.

THE Catholic Review closes a discussion of the West Point Catholic chapel incident with the words, "No favoritism for Protestantism! No union of Church and State! No Government religion!"

So shouts this spokesman of the papacy in a country where Protestants are strongly in the majority. But no such sentiments ever emanate from the hierarchy in Spain and the Catholic countries of South America. Yet the Review ought to know that a union of Church and State, in whatever country, is an indorsement of papal principles and a step which must contribute to the exaltation of the papal church.

Compulsory, Yet Free!

In an article treating on "The First Day of the Week," by Chas. Cuthbert Hall, printed in The Congregationalist and copied in organ of the "New England Sabbath Protective League," we find the following:—

"As the day has become one of universal observance in many nations as a rest day, wherein large numbers of people are released from business, it has, of course, been necessary to have the civil government make suitable laws, which we must all obey, for maintaining the order and peace of society; but every Christian should joyfully remember that this institution of the Lord's day sprang out of love, not out of law. It is not a grievous commandment; it is a joyous consecration. It is not compulsory; it is voluntary, and as such we believe it is especially dear to Christ."

But if we "must obey" these "suitable laws" of civil government commanding the observance of the day, of what avail is it to us that in the divine economy the observance was not made compulsory, but voluntary? If we are compelled to observe it, what becomes of the liberty which we were granted in the matter by the Lord?

If the Lord made Sabbath observance free, will He uphold a law making it compulsory? Must He not be against any such law?

Non-Taxation of Church Property in Turkey.

IN the Washington (D. C.) Post, of June 12, Mr. Wm. Birney, of that city, contributes the following relative to the Eastern Question as affected by the exemption of church property in Turkey from taxation:—

"If all the real estate and personal property in Turkey bore in equal proportion the burden of supporting the government it might possibly suffice for a strictly economical administration, but about one half of it pays no tax. The mosques, their contents, and the lands of the mosques are regarded by the Moslems, who are the most religious of the human race, as the property of Allah. To tax it would be akin to sacrilege. The mosques are, many of them, costly edifices, with large grounds. Attached to each mosque is a school building, used for instruction by the clergy. The personal property, much of it silver and gold, in the mosques is valued in millions.

"Since early in the present century taxation has been so oppressive that in order to escape it many rich Muslim families have ceded their landed estates to the mosques, being permitted to continue occupancy of them for a time limited in the grant and often until the ceding families become extinct in the direct line. As soon as the deeds are made to the mosques the lands and property are exempt from taxes. These lands are known in Turkish law as 'vakufs,' and they alone are said to amount now to a third of the landed area of the Turkish empire.

"As these 'vakufs' are created they pass out of the taxable lists and the revenue of the government is diminished. The deficit must be made up by the owners of taxed lands and personalty. Christians do not as a general rule deed their lands to the mosques, but there must be some of them who escape heavy taxation in that way. The present Sultan has more than once manifested in a timid way his desire to arrest the undue aggrandizement of the church property, particularly in Constantinople, but he met in every instance with such determined opposition by the clergy that he was compelled to abandon his designs.

"In addition to the claim that all church property belongs to Allah, it is urged by the clergy that they support the government by teaching the people morality and obedience to law and that the more mosques there are the more solid are the foundations of civil government. Meanwhile the creation of 'vakufs' is going on with accelerated rapidity and the taxable lists are becoming too small to yield a sufficient revenue.

"From the above statement it is clear that two measures are imperatively demanded to usher in an era of prosperity for Turkey: First, a judicious revenue tariff act imposing duties on foreign imports, and second, a law abolishing the exemption of mosque property from taxation, confiscating to the use of the State all mosque property, real and personal, except so much as the government may deem absolutely necessary for worship, and prohibiting all conveyances, by gift, will, or deed, by private owners of their landed estates to mosques.

"Who can put these measures into operation? The Sultan cannot. Can the powers do it?

"They might consent to a revenue tariff act, but they will not. The imports into Turkey from Great Britain, Austria, France, Russia, and Italy, amount in round numbers to $80,000,000. . . .

"Would any or all the powers undertake the measure against the mosques? Nay, verily. Behind the mosques stand not only the grades clothed with priestly functions, but dependents of many classes from those engaged in mosque service to common laborers, aggregating not less than one third of the whole population. The Turkish government is theocratic, the Sultan being the Caliph or spiritual head of the church. Any attempt to impose a tax on church property or confiscate any part of it, especially if made by Christian powers, would be regarded as sacrilege committed by the infidels and would be resisted by all good Mussulmans with the same reckless bravery the Jews displayed against Antiochus Epiphanes, when that monarch sacrificed a swine in the Holy of Holies at Jerusalem. The Jihad, a holy war, would be declared. When that flag should be unfurled at Mecca it would rally 150,000,000 Moslems, outside of European Turkey, to its support. England would have a more fearful insurrection on her hands in India than she has ever met. Is such a contingency to be lightly regarded?"

"And yet, without the confiscation, total or partial, of the mosque property, no foreign power could raise a revenue from Turkey sufficient for the support of its government and the payment of the interest on its bonded debt. But as confiscation is practically impossible, no foreign power is willing to assume the administration of Turkish affairs."

Religion Not the Basis of Civil Government.

BY A. G. DANIELLS.

IN setting forth the principles that would guide him if he were sent to the Federal Convention, Cardinal Moran said that he would wish to have the preamble to the Federal Constitution declare that:—

"Religion is the basis of our Australian Commonwealth, and of its laws."

In other words, and in plain English, Cardinal Moran would work in the convention to secure the union of Church and State in Australia.

That this is the meaning of his words can easily be shown.

He would make religion the basis of the government. The basis of a thing is its foundation, that on which the thing rests. The connection between the basis of a thing and the thing itself is inseparable.

Therefore, if religion be made the basis of our government, religion and the government will be united. The government will be a religious government, because it is founded on religion. That will be a union of religion and the State.

But a union of religion and the State means a union of Church and State. For religion implies a church. It is the basis of the church. They are inseparably connected. The one great object of the church is the promotion of religion. Where one is found there will the other be found also.

It is perfectly plain, therefore, that to make religion the basis of government is to unite Church and State.

To unite Church and State in every land has been the resolute policy of the church of Rome during its whole history. And to effect this union in Australia is the object the cardinal would have in making the preamble to the constitution declare that religion is the basis of our government and of its laws.

Melbourne, Australia.

A LONDON journal announces that the pope has stated that his letter to Queen Victoria on the occasion of the Jubilee "will be written in very affectionate and sympathetic terms." A special envoy will represent "his holiness" at the celebration.

The "United Sentinels of America."

A LEAFLET has been sent us setting forth the following principles as being the foundation of an organization which takes the name of "The United Sentinels of America", with headquarters in Washington, D. C.:—

"1. We declare against any union of Church and State.

"2. We declare against any division of the public school fund.

"3. We declare against any State, municipal or national appropriation of the public moneys for any ecclesiastical institution or school.

"4. We declare war of extermination against the saloon, allowing each man to oppose it in his own way; but we do not obligate any one to any political party. No saloon-keeper can be a member.

"5. We declare against all persons for public office who owe any supreme allegiance to any foreign ruler, secular or spiritual.

"6. We declare in favor of governmental protection and fostering care of the public schools and other institutions of learning.

"7. We declare in favor of more restricted immigration and naturalization laws.

"8. We declare in favor of, protection and purity of the ballot box.

"9. We declare in favor of an equal governmental taxation of all property.

"10. We declare in favor of legal public inspection of all public or private institutions, to determine whether any persons are held in duress for penance and punishment under color of law.

"11. We hold and declare that the laws of the government are supreme in all temporal matters.

"12. We hold and declare that the Holy Bible is the fountain source of supreme law of Christian nations, and that all our principles shall be in accord with it."

In regard to these principles, it need simply be said that the last one of them totally contradicts the first. They "declare against any union of Church and State;" but believe in a "Christian nation" which cannot possibly avoid the embodiment of such a union. For that which is "Christian" embraces all that pertains to the Church; and as a nation must embody the State, a "Christian nation" can be nothing else than the embodiment of a combined Church and State.

The "United Sentinels of America" constitute a political party which proposes that all its principles shall be in accord with the Holy Bible. There is only one sense in which it could be true that the principles of a political party were in accord with the Bible, and that would mean that they express antagonism to any union of religion with the civil power; for the total separation of the religious and civil powers is scriptural. But the principles of civil government can touch the doctrines of the Bible only at this one point; anything more than this must savor of a union of Church and State.

THE Catholic Citizen, of Milwaukee, consoles itself over the decision of Attorney-General McKenna against a Catholic chapel at West Point, with the reflection that "the disposition to be punctilious in keeping Church and State absolutely separate is going to hurt our separate brethren [Protestants] quite as much as ourselves;" and adds, "Once clearly understood, the policy of separation of Church and State is a policy that we can accommodate ourselves to."

The papacy may accommodate its methods of work to that policy, but never its principles. A change of principles would obviate the necessity of any "accommodation" to the policy upheld in the Attorney-General's decision.

Sunday Closing of Shops in Australia.

THE following "Petition from Shopkeepers," which was printed in a recent issue of the Sydney (Aus.) Daily Telegraph, shows the progress of the Sunday-closing movement in that part of the eastern hemisphere:—

"SUNDAY CLOSING OF SHOPS.

"PETITION FROM SHOPKEEPERS.

"ACTION BY THE COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES.

"'Thou shalt not sell on Sunday,' is as much a commandment, from the standpoint of the Council of the Churches, as 'Thou shalt not steal.' At yesterday's meeting of the Council a petition was laid on the table, signed by 961 shopkeepers in the city and suburbs, asking the government to enforce the law relating to Sunday closing. The movement was initiated by the Council, but the work of getting signatures to the petition has been done by the city missionaries and a number of Christian Endeavorers."

Upon the significance of this action, in connection with the attitude of the churches towards the question of giving a religious character to the new Federal Constitution, a writer in the Southern Sentinel and Herald of Liberty (Melbourne) says:—

"'The movement was initiated by the Council' of the Churches, this says. That is correct. Every movement for uniting Church and State and enforcing religious dogmas and customs by law has always been initiated by the churches.

"And what is this movement for? What was the end in view in the circulation of this petition?—To ask the government 'to enforce the law relating to Sunday closing.' There you have it in plain words. And who, with this fresh action standing so plainly before him, can doubt why the Council of the Churches desires to have God recognized in the constitution for Federated Australia, or why Cardinal Moran wished that document to be put on a religious basis? Who cannot see that immediately that were done these churches represented would demand religious laws, and then insist on the government enforcing them? That the churches in this movement to put 'God' and 'religion' in the constitution desire to get control of the government for the enforcement of religion, and especially Sunday observance, by law, must be as plain as plain can be to anyone who will take a moment's time to look at the facts."

In an address at the recent opening of the Naval War College at Newport, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt said: "It is idle to talk of such a nation [as the United States] ever being led into a course of wanton aggression or conflict with military powers by the possession of a sufficient navy. The danger is of precisely the opposite character. If we forget that in the last resort we can only secure peace by being ready and willing to fight for it, we may some day have bitter cause to realize that a rich nation which is slothful, timid or unwieldy is an easy prey for any people which still retains those most valuable of all qualities, the soldierly virtues."

The "soldierly virtues" are the fighting ability and instinct; and these the nation must retain or become a prey to other nations that have not ceased to cultivate them. We must, like the nations of the Old World, maintain peace by being ready to fight for it. So we are told. This is the world's way of keeping the peace, but it is not the Christian way. The language of this official of the Government does not confirm the dictum of the Supreme Court, that "this is a Christian nation."

In a recent number of Blackwood's Magazine (London) a writer says: "To avert the battle of Armageddon is the aim of the European Concert, and we hardly know what else can avert it."

But faith in the ability of the European Concert to accomplish what it aims at should have been materially lessened in thinking minds by the rehabilitation of Turkey as a military power. For years the European Concert has been aiming at the dismemberment of the Sultan's kingdom, and the exact opposite of this seems to be the only thing they have accomplished.

The great battle of Armageddon will surely come; for no human power can avert it. See Rev. 16:14-16. But every individual who now chooses to become a child of God can stand in that day under the protection of the Almighty.

Elijah P. Lovejoy,

A MARTYR TO THE CAUSE OF LIBERTY.

BY R. M. KILGORE.

SIXTY years ago this noble man closed his brief, heroic life in the battle for civil and religious liberty, at Alton, Ill. The fair name of that free State was tarnished by, and her soil was the first to drink, the blood of one who stood bravely in defense of the God-given right of all men to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

ELIJAH P. LOVEJOY.

The bondage and slavery of three million men and women at that time were more than his sense of justice could endure. He saw in that, his, and the freedom of every other man, involved; he could not keep silent, and at the age of thirty-two, he announced to the world his position, in these words:—

"I have sworn eternal opposition to slavery, and by the blessing of God, I will never go back."

He was a Presbyterian minister, but was called to the editorship of the St. Louis Observer, the first number of which was dated November 22, 1833. His views on the slavery question were not to be tolerated in Missouri, and prominent citizens of St. Louis objected to the discussion of the subject in the columns of his paper, and "warned Mr. Lovejoy that his views were dangerous, and would lead to violence." The editor replied with an appeal "To my fellow-citizens," repeating his views as to slavery, and calling attention to the clause of the constitution of Missouri declaring that "the free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the inalienable rights of man, and that every person may freely speak, write and print on any subject—being responsible for the abuse of that liberty." The deliberate determination is announced in one of the closing paragraphs of the appeal:—

"I do, therefore, as an American citizen and Christian patriot, and in the name of liberty, law and religion, solemnly protest against all these attempts, howsoever and by whomsoever made, to frown down the liberty of the press and forbid the free expression of opinion. Under a deep sense of my obligations to my country, the church and my God, I declare it to be my fixed purpose to submit to no such dictation. And I am prepared to abide by the consequences. I have appealed to the constitution and laws of my country; if they fail to protect me, I appeal to God, and with him I cheerfully rest my cause."

The St. Louis Globe Democrat, of June 4, 1897, gives the following graphic account of the scenes that followed, and Mr. Lovejoy's replies to the attacks made against the principles he so fondly cherished. They were dearer to him than life.

The Democrat says:—

"The opposition of the people grew stronger as the editor continued his attacks on slavery, and the owners of the paper finally decided to move it to Alton, that being in a free State, and the people of the town apparently having no objection to the transfer. Before this was done, however, persons entered the Observer office, broke up some of the furniture and material, and threw the remains into the river. The press was not seriously damaged, and it was shipped to Alton, where it was immediately destroyed by persons unknown, and thrown into the river. A public meeting was held by the citizens of Alton, and this act denounced, although the Assembly declared itself not in sympathy with Mr. Lovejoy's views. A new press was procured, and the publication of the Observer was resumed Sept. 8, 1836, and continued without interruption, but not without opposition, until August, 1837. On July 11, 1837, at a public meeting, resolutions were adopted condemning the course of the Observer, and a committee appointed to present them to Lovejoy. His reply was dignified and dispassionate, but manifested an unalterable purpose:—

"As long as I am an American citizen, and as long as American blood runs in these veins, I shall hold myself at liberty to speak, to write, to publish whatever I please on any subject—being amenable to the laws of my country for the same."

"The office of the Observer was broken into by a mob on the night of August 21, and the press and printing material completely destroyed. A month later a third press was received and placed in a warehouse on Second Street. The same night it was taken out, broken up and thrown into the river. Undismayed, Lovejoy ordered a fourth press. Before its arrival excitement rose to fever heat, and on November 3 a public indignation meeting was held. Strong condemnatory resolutions were presented by a committee appointed to prepare them. Lovejoy was present, and was allowed to speak in his own behalf.

LOVEJOY'S PRINTING OFFICE AT ALTON, ILL.

"Mr. Lovejoy said:—

"I feel, Mr. Chairman, that this is the most solemn moment of my life. I feel, I trust, in some measure the responsibilities which at this hour I sustain to those, my fellow-citizens, to the church of which I am a minister, to my country, and to God. And let me beg of you, before I proceed further, to construe nothing I shall say as being disrespectful to this assembly. I have no such feeling; far from it. And if I do not act or speak according to their wishes at all times, it is because I cannot conscientiously do it.

"It is proper I should state the whole matter, as I understand it, before this audience. I do not stand here to argue the questions as presented by the report of the committee. My only wonder is that the honorable gentleman, the chairman of that committee, for whose character I entertain great respect, though I have not the pleasure of his personal acquaintance—my only wonder is how that gentleman could have brought himself to submit such a report.

THE LOVEJOY MONUMENT AT ALTON, ILL.
(Recently completed and about to be dedicated. Height 90 feet.)

"Mr. Chairman, I do not admit that it is the business of this assembly to decide whether I shall or shall not publish a newspaper in this city. The gentlemen have, as the lawyers say, made a wrong issue. I have the right to do it. I know that I have the right freely to speak and publish my sentiments, subject only to the laws of the land for the abuse of that right. This right was given me by my Maker, and is solemnly guaranteed to me by the Constitution of these United States and of this State. What I wish to know of you is whether you will protect me in the exercise of this right, or whether, as heretofore, I am to be subjected to personal indignity and outrage. These resolutions, and the measures proposed by them, are spoken of as a compromise—a compromise between two parties. Mr. Chairman, this is not so. There is but one party here. It is simply a question whether the law shall be enforced, or whether the mob shall be allowed, as they now do, to continue to trample it under their feet, by violating with impunity the rights of an innocent individual.

"Mr. Chairman, what have I to compromise? If freely to forgive those who have so greatly injured me, if to pray for their temporal and eternal happiness, if still to wish for the prosperity of your city and State, notwithstanding all the indignities I have suffered in it; if this be the compromise intended, then do I willingly make it. My rights have been shamefully, wickedly outraged; this I know, and feel, and can never forget. But I can and do freely forgive those who have done it.

"But if by a compromise is meant that I should cease from doing that which duty requires of me, I cannot make it. And the reason is, that I fear God more than I fear man. Think not that I would lightly go contrary to public sentiment around me. The good opinion of my fellowmen is dear to me, and I would sacrifice anything but principle to obtain their good wishes; but when they ask me to surrender this, they ask for more than I can—more than I dare give.

"Reference is made to the fact that I offered a few days since to give up the editorship of the Observer into other hands. This is true. I did so because it was thought or said by some that perhaps the paper would be better patronized in other hands. They declined accepting my offer, however, and since then we have heard from the friends and supporters of the paper in all parts of the State. There was but one sentiment among them; and this was that the paper could be sustained in no other hands than mine.

"It is also a very different question whether I shall voluntarily, or at the request of friends, yield up my post; or whether I shall forsake it at the demand of a mob. The former I am at all times ready to do, when circumstances occur to require it, as I will never put my personal wishes or interests in competition with the cause of that Master whose minister I am. But the latter, be assured, I never will do. God, in his providence—so say all my brethren, and so I think—has devolved upon me the responsibility of maintaining my ground here; and, Mr. Chairman, I am determined to do it. A voice comes to me from Maine, from Massachusetts, from Connecticut, from New York, from Pennsylvania; yea, from Kentucky, from Mississippi, from Missouri, calling upon me in the name of all that is dear in heaven or earth, to stand fast, and by the help of God I will stand. I know I am but one and you are many. My strength would avail but little against you all. You can crush me if you will; but I shall die at my post, for I cannot and will not forsake it.

"Why should I flee from Alton? Is not this a free State? When assailed by a mob at St. Louis, I came hither, as the home of freedom and of the laws. The mob has pursued me here, and why should I retreat again? Where can I be safe if not here? Have not I a right to claim the protection of the laws? What more can I have in any other place? Sir, the very act of retreating will embolden the mob to follow me wherever I go. No, sir; there is no way to escape the mob but to abandon the path of duty, and that, God helping me, I will never do.

"It has been said here that my hand is against every man, and every man's hand against me. The last part of the declaration is too painfully true. I do indeed find almost every hand lifted against me; but against whom in this place has my hand been raised? I appeal to every individual present. Whom of you have I injured? Whose character have I traduced? Whose family have I molested? Whose business have I meddled with? if any, let him rise here and testify against me. No one answers.

"And do not your resolutions say that you find nothing against my private character? And does anyone believe that if there was anything to be found it would not be found and brought forth? If in anything I have offended against the law, I am not so popular in this community that it would be difficult to convict me. You have courts and judges and juries; they find nothing against me. And now you come together for the purpose of driving me out, a confessedly innocent man, for no cause but that he dares to think and speak as his conscience and his God dictate. Will conduct like this stand the scrutiny of your country? Of posterity? Above all, of the judgment day? For, remember, the Judge of that day is no respecter of persons. Pause, I beseech you, and reflect. The present excitement will soon be over; the voice of conscience will at last be heard. And in some season of honest thought, even in this world, as you review the scenes of this hour, you will be compelled to say, 'He was right; he was right!'

"But you have been exhorted to be lenient and compassionate: and in driving me away to affix no unnecessary disgrace upon me. Sir, I reject all such compassion. You cannot disgrace me. Scandal and falsehood and calumny have already done their worst. My shoulders have borne the burden till it sits easy upon them. You may hang me up as the mob hung up the individuals at Vicksburg; you may burn me at the stake as they did McIntosh at St. Louis; or you may tar and feather me, or throw me into the Mississippi, as you have often threatened to do; but you cannot disgrace me. I and I alone can disgrace myself; and the deepest of all disgrace would be, at a time like this, to deny my Master by forsaking his cause. He died for me; and I were most unworthy to bear his name should I refuse, if need be, to die for him.

"Again, you have been told that I have a family who are dependent upon me, and this has been given as a reason why I should be driven off as quietly as possible. It is true, Mr. Chairman, I am a husband and a father, and this it is that adds the bitterest ingredient to the cup of sorrow I am called to drink. I am made to feel the wisdom of the apostle's advice, 'It is better not to marry.' I know, sir, that in this contest I stake not my life only, but that of others also. I do not expect that my wife will ever recover from the shock received at the awful scenes through which she was called to pass at St. Charles. And how was it the other night on my return to my house? I found her driven to the garret through fear of the mob who were prowling around my house? And scarcely had I entered the house ere my windows were broken in by the brickbats of the mob, and she so alarmed that it was impossible for her to sleep or rest that night. I am hunted as a partridge upon the mountains. I am pursued as a felon through your streets, and to the guardian power of the land I look in vain for that protection against violence which even the vilest criminal may claim.

"Yet, think not that I am unhappy. Think not that I regret the choice I have made. While all around me is violence and tumult, all is peace within. An approving conscience and the rewarding smile of God is a full recompense for all that I forego and all that I endure. Yes, sir, I enjoy a peace which nothing can destroy. I sleep sweetly and undisturbed, except when awakened by the brickbats of the mob.

"No, sir, I am not unhappy. I have counted the cost and stand prepared freely to offer up my all in the service of God. Yes, sir, I am fully aware of all the sacrifice I make in here pledging myself to continue this contest to the last. Forgive these tears. I had not intended to shed them, and they are not for myself, but others. But I am commanded to forsake father and mother and wife and children for Jesus' sake, and as his professed disciple I stand prepared to do it. The time for fulfilling this pledge in my case, it seems to me, has come. Sir, I dare not flee away from Alton. Should I attempt it I should feel that the anger of the Lord with his flaming sword was pursuing me wherever I went. It is because I fear God that I am not afraid of all who oppose me in this city. No, sir; the contest has commenced here, and here it must be finished. Before God and you all, I here pledge myself to continue it if need be till death. If I fall my grave shall be made in Alton.'

That meeting of the citizens called for the purpose of muffling the voice of Liberty, and silencing its brave defender by banishment, having failed, unbridled license was given to the fury of the mob. In less than a week the fourth press was seized and destroyed, the building fired, and Mr. Lovejoy was laid low with five bullets piercing his body. The next day, Nov. 8, 1837, the 35th anniversary of his birth, his body was removed to his residence, and the following day was carried to its burial.

"And to-day," adds the Globe Democrat, "in this same city of Alton, one of the most imposing monuments ever erected to a private citizen in any country is nearing completion, and in a few days will be dedicated with all the pomp and ceremony with which the great State of Illinois can surround it. The world has moved very rapidly during the last half century!"

Thus do they "build," again, "the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous, and say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Matt. 23. History repeats itself; and let the Spirit now at work prevail in its efforts to stifle conscience, haling good citizens to the prison and chain-gang, because they dare to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, and it will not require another "half century" to demonstrate that "the children of them which killed the prophets" are now living, and stand ready to fill up the measure of their fathers. We shall see.

Christian Endeavor Convention at Adrian, Mich.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE Christian Endeavor Societies of the Methodist Protestant Church, of Michigan, held their sixth annual convention June 11, at Adrian, in that State. It was considered to be the largest and most successful convention of the kind ever held in Michigan by the M. P. Church.

As might be expected, the discussion of the sabbath (Sunday) and of sabbath laws was one of the most important features of the meeting. The views of the society upon Sunday laws are at least free from ambiguity, judging from the following, taken from the Detroit Tribune, of June 12:—

“‘The Sabbath, How Lost, How Restored,’ formed the subject of an interesting talk by Rev. F. W. McCauley, of Toledo, Ohio. The speaker traced the manner in which various nations had lost their regard for the Sabbath and asserted the United States had lost it by patterning after Europe and introducing ideas that were entirely foreign. The United States compels foreigners to become naturalized before enjoying the privileges of citizenship; so also should the religious ideas introduced be subjected to the same treatment.

“‘If we have a country worth emigrating to and institutions worth supporting,’ he said, ‘we should also support the religion of our land instead of following after foreign ideas. Another cause of this danger is in the lack of spirituality in the Christian churches. If a church lacks this it tends to destroy the Sabbath.’

“Sunday papers, excursions, saloons, etc., also came in for a share of the gentleman’s attention.”

Notice that this minister, who apparently voices the sentiment of his church and this society made up from its younger members, would treat religious ideas just the same as any other foreign thing. Foreign religions cannot be allowed to come here unless those religions become naturalized! He won’t even let a foreign religion come here on a tariff; it must be entirely reconstructed and made over according to an American model!

In what words could anyone deny the very foundation principles of the United States Constitution and of the United States Government more clearly and surely than this reverend gentleman has done? He says, in effect, “We have a national religion; if any one wants to come here and will by choice or by constraint, if need be, accept our national religion, all right. He is welcome. If he will not do so, then let him keep away!”

This is the very argument used by the Catholic priesthood of Spain and the South American States against Protestants who presume to go to those countries and teach and practice a religion not sanctioned by their church. For the past few years the people of this country, and the Christian Endeavorers among the rest, have been highly incensed against the Czar of Russia and the Sultan of Turkey because missionaries from this country are not well received and allowed to preach and practice their religions there. But it must be apparent to every candid person that these Christian Endeavorers propose doing here precisely the same that those monarchs are doing in their domains.

How would a Christian minister in Turkey like being compelled to keep the fast of Ramadan as a condition of his stay in that country? Turkish officials could make it appear that the observance of this fast is a civil affair just as easily as the officials here can that a Sunday law is a civil law!

At the same convention, an evangelist who was present made the following very truthful and impressive remarks:—

“There never was a time when the Church needed the simple faith of the original church as much as at present. The greatest danger to the church is the so-called advancement that has been made in the past few years. It is absolutely necessary that we be imbued with power from on high if we are to accomplish anything as a church or as individuals. The church, in a large measure, has lost its hold on the masses. The reason for this lies in the fact that the church has lost its hold on God. We must come back to God and then we will be able to regain our hold on the people. We can introduce all the ideas we please, but our religion will not be what God wants it to be. As Christian Endeavorers we should develop not only in numbers, but also in power.”

The “original church” did not concern herself about forbidding people ingress into a country because they did not exactly agree with her teaching. The apostles themselves often were accused of introducing customs contrary to those of the countries where they went. Their business was to preach Christ; they believed in the power of Christ, not in the power of human law. If human laws could make men good the world would have been a heaven long ago. But it is not so and will not be until, at the coming of Christ, the wheat and the tares, which here grow in close connection, are separated,—the wheat to be taken to God’s great garner, the tares to be destroyed with fire unquenchable.

When ministers of the gospel invoke the power of human law, and try to advance Christ’s gospel by the assistance of worldly power, they drag the gospel down to the low level of politics, make it sectional and national, needlessly embitter unbelievers against Christ, whose gospel they misrepresent, and cause the eternal ruin of many souls.

To mingle the gospel of the blessed Christ with human law in order to render it more effective is a most shameful and hazardous proceeding. It may gather members into the church, but not into the kingdom of God. When resisted, it makes martyrs to liberty, and sometimes martyrs to Christ; if accepted, it makes hypocrites, fawning sycophants, who will accept and advocate anything by which their own material prospects are advanced.

When the church heeds the advice of the evangelist as quoted above and comes “back to God,” it will find something so much better than human law that it will materially change its plan for the salvation of souls and the promotion of the welfare of the nation.

A Voice for Liberty.

BY W. E. GERALD.

THE injunction of Christian Endeavorers to "look up your laws" (that is, Sunday laws) is being carried out in many places. But an opposite tendency that is quite singular for these times was seen last winter in the State of Colorado.

A bill was presented to the legislature which allowed places of amusement to be kept open on Sunday. The Denver Daily News, of February-8, contained an account of the arguments of three ministers of that city. Two were against the bill. The following are extracts from the argument of Rev. Mr. Utter, of Unity Church, in favor of religious liberty.

Speaking of the origin of Sunday, he said that "Eastern Christian kept the Sabbath (Saturday) up to the time of Constantine. Before that time nobody had transferred many of the features of the Sabbath (Saturday) to the first day of the week. The epoch-making edict of the so-called first Christian emperor commanded the people of cities and towns to abstain from labor on the venerable day of the sun. His motives in this edict have been questioned. Christian and pagan sentiments may have mingled with policy in appointing a day for worship that would be acceptable to both. But if ever there was a command that transferred the features of sacredness and rest from the Sabbath to Sunday it was this given by Constantine. He gave to the world the Roman Catholic Sunday. It is that now often spoken of as the European Sunday, but it prevails in South America, Mexico and elsewhere, and wherever the Roman Church dominates custom and sentiment.

"It is not a sacred day. After the appointed religious services it is a holiday. The Roman Catholic Church has no Sabbath, never had; never pretended to have. The Lutheran church follows the example of the mother church in its use of Sunday. So the Lutherans escaped the revival of the rigorous [by reason of their traditions—W. E. G.] Jewish Sabbath. The English reformers were not so fortunate. John Calvin, the dyspeptic, wrote their theology for them and they made Sunday into a sabbath. That Calvinistic Sunday was brought over to New England by our Puritan forefathers. (I am almost glad they were not my forefathers when I think of their Sunday.) . . .

"Should the majority put down the minority? The sabbath (Sunday) people should beware of that rule as the majority even now have forsaken all churches almost completely. Why not have a free country? Why not simply let the laws stand that forbid the disturbance of meetings and disorderly behavior in general, and repeal all the rest, and allow everybody an equal right to spend Sunday as any other day, in the way he thinks best? Because, answer the sabbatarians (Sunday people), this is a Christian nation and Christian institutions must be respected.

"But if we go back to the fourth commandment, that requires that the seventh day—Saturday—be the holy day, no authority but that of Constantine exists for not working on Sunday. Why should the Ministerial Alliance and so many other good people hasten so zealously to oppose Mr. Engley's bill? Does he propose hindering you and me from enjoying our church service or spending our Sunday as we like? Do these good brethren wish to impose their views or customs upon others by law? It is not according to my taste to have Sunday picnics; but it is in accord with my sense of justice to allow all people equal liberty, but no one liberty to do wrong.

"Some one may reply, Restraining the wrong-doers comes under the province of law—on any day. But is desecrating the 'sabbath' wrong-doing? The Sabbath is Saturday—no getting away from that. Nothing in the New Testament makes Sunday a sabbath. . . . We go too far to try to deprive others of their liberty to make it a holiday."

Further on, Mr. Utter said: "If you cannot execute a law it is better to repeal it to prevent hypocrisy." And again, "Leaning on the law in matters of religion is like leaning on a broken reed—the outcome is weakness or injury."

The principle of liberty, as enunciated by Jesus Christ, is not yet extinct, thank God, but still exists in the breasts of some men, as the utterances of this clergyman show.

RECENTLY, in an allusion to Queen Victoria's long reign, Dr. Joseph Parker, the well-known London clergyman, said: "We owe much to the queen, but the queen owes much more to us. Let her close her splendid reign by restoring to God the titles 'Head of the Church' and 'Defender of the Faith.'" These words elicited cheers from his audience. But the truth is that the queen has nothing of this kind to restore to God. The title "Head of the Church" is one which Henry VIII. assumed in deference to his own pride when he quarreled with and separated from the pope; and that of "Defender of the Faith" was bestowed on him by the pope before this separation as a compliment to the monarch for having written a book against the reformer, Martin Luther.

The only thing any person can give or restore to the Lord, is himself.

By act of the Sultan of Zanzibar, the legal status of slavery in that island has been abolished. Of the effect of the decree of abolition the United States consul at Zanzibar says: "It was thought by many persons that the effect of freeing the slaves would be to throw many thousand negroes on their own resources, and that great suffering and privation would ensue for three or four years; but from what I can see not one person will suffer in the slightest degree. In my opinion not ten per cent. of the present generation of slaves will leave their masters, and, to outward appearances, the condition of the negro is the same as before emancipation. The Arabs received the news with submission. The town was absolutely quiet, although sailors and marines were prepared to land from the British men-of-war in the harbour. I do not think there is the slightest fear of future trouble."

THE theory upon which rests the gigantic religio-political movement which has made all the world familiar with the terms "Christian Endeavor" and "Christian citizenship," speaks on this wise:—

"In her possibilities of happiness and glory under the influence of Christ, America is but a child. What she may become at maturity when a thousand millions of happy and prosperous people shall throng her cities and broad fields, when the church of five hundred millions of members holds all her affairs vigilantly, wisely, and successfully in hand by legitimate agitation and influence, when all shall be progress and little or no poverty, when the weak shall be brothered by the strong, and the darkest places of the earth enlightened by colonies of enterprising Americans, who has ever dreamed?

"Consecrated patriotism will bring it about, and ought to begin at once with far-reaching plans."

So writes, in the last issue of the Christian Statesman, the Rev. Charles Roads, who conducts a Christian Endeavor department in that journal. But this pleasing picture is altogether an illusion,—the theory which calls for "consecrated patriotism" is altogether wrong, because it is altogether contrary to Scripture. "Be sure you right," runs the familiar motto, "and then go ahead." The more far-reaching plains are laid, when the direction taken is the wrong one, the worse it will be in the end.

THE Christian Statesman, well known as the organ of the National Reform party, has been suspended as a weekly paper, and its editor, Dr. David McAllister, removed from editorial charge of the same, by the action of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod, in session at Beaver Falls, Pa., June 2. This action was taken, we learn, because of heretical articles which the editor has been for some time publishing on the subject of church unity. The editor complains of this as being a blow against "the soul of editorial liberty."

From the standpoint of an impartial observer, no one can be surprised that the intolerant spirit which the Reformed Presbyterian church embodies, and which the National Reform movement has so plainly shown, should have made itself felt internally, upon members of that body, as well as upon those without. That it should have found a victim in the person of its foremost advocate and exponent, may be regarded as an illustration of the irony of fate. We do not see that Dr. McAllister has any reason to complain.

The Statesman will be continued as a monthly journal, and will continue to be the organ of the National Reform Association. As a religious journal, however, its mission is accomplished. It has communicated the virus of National Reform doctrine to the more numerous and powerful branches of the Protestant church, and whether it is now continued or suspended will matter nothing as regards the realization of its long-advocated project of union of Church and State in the United States.

THE papal delegate to Canada, Mgr. Del Val, has decided, it is said, to notify the Canadian Catholic clergy that the Manitoba school controversy is settled, and to warn the bishops to withhold mandaments.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50.
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York..

The American Medical Missionary College.

THERE are now sixty medical students in the American Medical Missionary College. The success of the school has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the Board. Another class of twenty-five students will be admitted at the opening of the school, the 1st of October next.

The course of study in the American Medical Missionary College is equal to the best schools in the United States in grade. Those of our young people who are thinking of obtaining a medical education should address the undersigned for a copy of announcement of the American Medical Missionary College for 1897-98.

J. H. KELLOGG.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

The TWO Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen. REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE
HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST
REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges	$1.85
Cloth, marbled edges,	2.50
" Gilt edges,	3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE

Is attracting much attention. While it lasts, we will sell copies of

INTERESTING = FACTS,

Which contains an excellent picture of

Her Majesty Queen Victoria,

Together with the pictures of twenty others of European Royalty.

Price 13 Cents, Two for 25 Cents, Postpaid.
Original Price 25 Cents.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Bemidies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS,
slightly damaged, offered at half price.

Address

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LAW.

Arguments in behalf of the rights of American citizens, presented by A. T. Jones in opposition to the Blair Sunday Rest Bill. A thorough catechism upon the subject of Church and State. 192 pages.....$0.25

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELTON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N. Y., "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

DON'T TAKE an agency until you find out what we have to offer. If already engaged or in business, send for our "Side-line Specialties." Begin, now where you are, and turn spare moments into cash. $75 per month. Particulars free. Write to-day. Address,

F. E. MILES, Manufacturer and Pub.,
5136 State St., Chicago, Ill.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
139 Bond st., New York City.

A Greek-English Lexicon TO The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELTON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., Litt. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of Harvard University.

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,
39 BOND ST., NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

BAPTIST PRINCIPLES

OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

APPLIED TO SUNDAY LAWS

is An Appeal to Baptists

to be true to their historic principles and practices touching religious freedom.

—PLAIN BUT KIND.—

Of it a leading Baptist minister and editor writes:—

"I have read your pamphlet on 'Baptist Principles of Religious Liberty' with great interest and entire sympathy. . . . I hope you will continue your efforts for the promotion of religious liberty."

Fifty-two Pages.

Illustrated

Price 6 Cents.

Usual Discount in Quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR

NEW YORK, JULY 1, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 26.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

JULY 4. 1776.

WE HOLD THESE TRUTHS TO BE SELF-EVIDENT: THAT ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL; THAT THEY ARE ENDOWED BY THEIR CREATOR WITH CERTAIN UNALIENABLE RIGHTS; THAT AMONG THESE ARE LIFE, LIBERTY, AND THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS. THAT TO SECURE THESE RIGHTS GOVERNMENTS ARE INSTITUTED AMONG MEN, DERIVING THEIR JUST POWERS FROM THE CONSENT OF THE GOVERNED.

EQUALITY JUSTICE LIBERTY

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

Separation of Religion and the State.

ISRAEL'S venture of conducting a kingdom, a State, like all the nations, was a complete, a deplorable, and a ruinous failure.

Israel was the church at that time: and this awful failure in her attempt to conduct a State was traced in full detail as an instruction to the church in all ages.

The essence of that instruction is that it is not possible for the church properly to conduct a State or to manage a kingdom.

The result of that attempt of the church to conduct a State and manage a kingdom, was the ruin of the kingdom and the annihilation of the State, which they had created, and the subjection of the church to heathen powers forever after.

Then from all this the plain lesson plainly and emphatically taught is, that the heathen are better qualified to conduct States and manage kingdoms than are the people of the church: that the people who are of this world are better qualified to perform the things that pertain to this world, than are the people whose calling and profession are those of another world.

If any one will say that this is not so, then let him tell why it was that when the State which the church of Israel had established, had failed and perished, and the people had risen to the dignity of a church once more, they were put by the Lord, and kept, in subjection to the heathen powers—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome—as long as they existed as a distinct people. And why He commanded the Christian church forever after, "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers."

No, the church is not in the world to rule men; but by love to serve men. It is not the office of the church to govern States, but to serve the Lord. She is not here to compel men, but to persuade men. She has no commission to enforce the law, nor to preach the law, but to preach the gospel. She is not to condemn men, but to save men. This has ever been God's will concerning his church: and whenever she has lost sight of this, and departed in any degree from it, she has only frustrated the grace of God, and spoiled herself.

It became necessary however for the Lord to teach the heathen nations and rulers that they could not of right exercise jurisdiction in religion.

Nebuchadnezzar set up a great image and commanded all to worship it.

Among the people present were three of the captives of the church of Israel, who refused to obey the command of the king.

He called the three men and repeated to them distinctly the command to worship his god, or else be cast into a furnace heated seven times hotter than usual, especially for them.

They replied that their God was able to deliver them; but that whether he would deliver them or not, they would not hearken to his decree nor worship the golden image which he had set up.

He therefore commanded that the three men should be cast into the roaring furnace. But immediately he was almost struck dumb with astonishment at what he saw.

He cried out to his counsellors, "Did we not cast three men, bound, into the burning fiery furnace? They answered, True, O king. But lo! I see four men, loose, walking in the midst of the fire: and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God." He then called them forth, and they were taken up out of the furnace, and there was not so much as the smell of fire upon them.

"Then Nebuchadnezzar spake and said: "Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, who hath sent his angel, and delivered his servants that trusted in him, and have changed the king's word, and yielded their bodies, that they might not serve nor worship any god, except their own God."

This thing happened unto them for an ensample; and it was written for the admonition of kings and people who should come after. It happened, and it was written, to teach all kings and people, that though people be subject to the power of States and kingdoms, this power does not in any sense extend to the religion of the people. It tells all, that when the law of king or State touches the religion of anybody, such law is to be disregarded by the people, and must be changed. The religious right of the people must stand, and king and State must yield. It happened and was written to teach all kings and people that there must be no union of religion and the State.

When the kingdom of Babylon had passed away, and the united powers of Media and Persia had come in, the same lesson had to be repeated for their benefit. A law was enacted by Darius the Mede and his counselors that for thirty days nobody should ask any petition of any god or king, but King Darius. Daniel was chief minister of the empire, and he paid no attention to the law; but went just as before, and presented his petition to God three times a day. He was arrested, prosecuted, convicted, and the penalty according to the law was executed: he was cast into a den of lions. But God sent his angel and shut the lions' mouths, because that before God innocency was found in him; and also before the king had he done no hurt.

Thus God regards, and declares, the man innocent who knowingly and openly disregards any law touching his duty or relationship to God, who disregards any law touching religion. And this second example happened and was written to teach all kings and States that they never can rightly have anything whatever to do with any question of religion: to teach all kings, States, and people that God requires the absolute separation between religion and the State.

And that it was done twice, is significant: when God showed to Pharaoh, by the seven thin ears of corn, and by the seven thin kine, the seven years of famine that were coming on the land, it was said to him, "The dream is one. . . . And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice; it is because the thing is established by God." And when God has doubled unto kings and States for all time, the lesson upon the separation of religion and the State, it means that the lesson is one; and for that the lesson was doubled, it is because the thing is established by God.

And if kings and States, and churches, professing to know God, go directly contrary to this thing that has been established by God; if they will yet put forth edict and law touching religion, it can only be, because they are blinder than Pharaoh. For "the unjust knoweth no shame."

THE SENTINEL is against every form of despotism,—religious or civil.

Jottings from Jefferson.

"No man has a natural right to commit aggressions on the equal rights of another."

"THE idea is quite unfounded that on entering into society we give up any natural right."

"OUR civil rights have no dependence on our religious opinions, more than opinions in physics or geometry."

"OUR legislators are not sufficiently apprised of the rightful limit of their power; that their true office is to declare and enforce only our natural rights and duties, and to take none of them from us."

"THE impious presumption of legislators and rulers, civil as well as ecclesiastical, who being themselves but fallible and uninspired men, have assumed domination over the faith of others, setting their own opinions and modes of thinking as only true and infallible, and as such endeavoring to impose them on others, hath established and maintained false religions over the greatest part of the world, and through all time."

"THE spirit of the times may alter, will alter. Our rulers will become corrupt, our people careless. A single zealot may commence persecution and better men be his victims. It can never be too often repeated, that the time for fixing every essential right on a legal basis is while our rulers are honest, and ourselves united. From the conclusion of this war we shall be going down hill. It will not then be necessary to resort every moment to the people for support. They will be forgotten, therefore, and their rights disregarded. They will forget themselves, but in the sole faculty of making money, and will never think of uniting to effect a due respect for their rights. The shackles, therefore, which shall not be knocked off at the conclusion of this war, will remain on us long, will be made heavier and heavier, till our rights shall revive or expire in a convulsion."

WHEN force is combined with religion, or religion with force, the result is religious despotism.

The Declaration of Independence.

EVERY reader of the AMERICAN SENTINEL is doubtless familiar with the fact that on July 4, 1776, the representatives of the English colonies of America formally declared to the world their independence of all foreign rule, and in justification of their action asserted the doctrine that all men have the same unalienable rights, and that to secure these rights is the proper purpose of civil government.

The situation as it was in 1776, and that which exists to-day in the American nation, cannot however be properly appreciated without looking beyond the action which has made the fourth of July a national day, to the antecedent conditions out of which that action was evolved.

The Declaration of Independence was not simply the result of a determination on the part of the American colonies to separate themselves from British rule, for the sake of being independent. At the time when that Declaration went forth, the civilized world was just emerging from the long reign of civil and religious despotism which had characterized the Middle Ages. One by one, as the spirit of liberty developed and asserted itself in the minds of the people, the chains of that despotism had been broken; until in the Declaration of Independence the world heard a bold assertion of the doctrine of the right of all mankind to complete individual freedom.

This was not an accident of the times. It was a providence. It has been well said that "History is the progressive disclosure of the self-government of man as the providential design." The Declaration of Independence appealed to the established decrees of Providence for its justification. "We hold these truths to be self-evident," it says, "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." It asserts this as the order of government which God himself has established.

It was by a religious power that this order of government was perverted. There was never a despotism on earth until men had established false religions. The religion of love which God set up is in perfect harmony with free government. It must be so, for otherwise He who endowed men with the unalienable rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" would antagonize Himself. And anything which antagonizes that religion—which is Christianity—antagonizes free government.

It was a religious despotism which antagonized free government in the Middle Ages. The papal church dominated the States of Europe, and the civil power was employed to enforce her decrees. By her the Inquisition was established, and the power of the civil arm was made to invade conscience, the most sacred temple of human liberty. Under the tutorship of the church, the civil powers learned to disregard one and all of those unalienable rights with which the Creator had endowed the humblest being who bears His image.

The Declaration of Independence asserted again these rights before the world. It asserted not the rights of governments, or of organizations, but of the individual. And against nothing did it strike more directly or forcibly than against that ecclesiastical despotism which had so long claimed the right to control the conscience, and put fetters on the wings of the mind. It asserted the eternal truth of God against the error which had long enslaved mankind.

The value of the Declaration of Independence lies not in the fact that it accomplished our separation from the empire of Great Britain and our independence as a nation. Indeed, it was only by hard fighting that these things were accomplished, and if these be the things to be commemorated, the anniversary of Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown would be a more fitting date than the fourth of July; for it was only then that our national independence had become, practically, an accomplished fact. But national independence means nothing to the slave. Personal liberty, the enjoyment of the unalienable rights of the individual, is the thing of value, and it is the assertion of these that gives its value to the immortal Declaration.

No one can justly appreciate this great document who views it merely in the light of its national significance. Whether this Government be a better one to live under than the government of Great Britain, or what benefits have resulted from our national independence, are questions to which we can find no definite answer. Concerning these there may exist much difference of opinion. But all know, from their own experience, the individual blessings which are secured by a free government. And these blessings are as valuable to the inhabitants of one country as to those of another. The providential design in the Declaration of Independence was not that this nation should be made the greatest nation on the earth, by being different from all the others; but that all the others should become like it, in securing to the people of other lands the enjoyment of their God-given, unalienable rights.

As the Charter of individual liberty, the Declaration of Independence is as appropriate to our own time as to the year 1776. To-day, more fully perhaps than at any time in the past, it needs to be borne in mind that the proper purpose of civil governments is to secure to the individuals under them, the enjoyment of the unalienable rights bestowed upon them by the Creator. The crisis of 1776 was not greater than that which confronts the American people in 1897. The rights which were threatened then were not more sacred and valuable than those which are in jeopardy to-day. The Declaration of Independence asserts those rights, but it does not secure them against invasion, even in the very name of liberty.

As Independence day is celebrated, then, let it be with an appreciation of the blessing of individual independence—individual freedom from all despotic control, and a lively sense of the perils by which that independence is now threatened. Let it be remembered that religious apostasy, which has become a feature and sign of the times, will breed despotism in government to-day as surely as it did in the past; that already this evil work is far advanced, as seen in an ever-widening stream of religious legislation. And may there be many who, with these facts and reflections in mind, shall gather from the day new inspiration and zeal to do faithful duty as sentinels around the camp of freedom.

EVERY religion except the religion taught by Jesus Christ, is a despotism. There is no despotism in the gospel invitation.

God Used Thomas Jefferson.

Those who oppose the doctrine of separation of Church and State, advocated by Jefferson and embodied in the Declaration of Independence and the Federal Constitution, attempt to make a point against the doctrine by declaring that Jefferson was an unbeliever.

This point has no force even if true, when we remember that God has used men according to his own word who did not know him, to accomplish his will. Isa. 45: 1-6. The Lord was compelled to do this because those who professed to know him were more ignorant of his will than those who did not profess to know him.

When Jefferson battled for separation of Church and State in Virginia, the influential religious teachers were so drunk with the "wine of Babylon"—with the adulterous doctrine that the Church should wed the State—that God was compelled to select a man whom the world-embracing church declared to be an infidel, to teach his truth to the nations. It is true that there were Baptists and Quakers and Presbyterians, who united with Jefferson in promulgating right principles of religious freedom, but they were all a dispised lot of dissenters.

Let no man glory in his shame by condemning the gospel principle of separation of Church and State because God was compelled to go outside of his professed church to find a man of influence with clear enough views of gospel truth to teach complete separation of Church and State.

A. F. B.

OUR forefathers repudiated the principle of taxation without representation; they refused to be taxed in money to support a government. A Sunday law is a tax of one day in every seven to support a religion—and not the Christian religion either. Let us repudiate the tax and declare our independence.

God's Service Not Compulsory.

A LETTER from Ticonderoga, N. Y., dated June 24, takes exception to a recent utterance in the SENTINEL, as follows:—

"Dear Sir: In the SENTINEL of this date and under the heading 'Compulsory, Yet Free!' you say that the divine command of Sabbath observance is not compulsory; at least you say that we are granted liberty in the matter by the Lord. Now I would like very much to have you show by the Bible where we are granted this liberty.

"The Sabbath observance is a divine command and not a divine permission.

"You might as well say that man has his liberty in regard to any of the commandments.

"WM. H. BROWNE."

We reply that every person is at liberty to disregard the fourth commandment and every other precept of the Decalogue, just as he is at liberty to disregard the laws of health, which are no less truly God's laws. In the end, of course, if he turns not from his disobedience, the consequence will be death; but he has perfect liberty meanwhile to obey or disobey, just as he may choose. And this is just as God has ordained that it should be.

"Choose ye this day," says the Scripture,—"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." "To-day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts." "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." In every word and by every act, Jesus Christ invited sinners to turn from their sins and find life in him; but he never sought to compel anybody. And in his life as the man of Nazareth Jesus was a perfect revelation of his Father. He again and again expressly stated that he did nothing of himself, but that his Father who dwelt in him, did that which was manifested in his life. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." Every invitation which Christ uttered, was from his Father. The Father would no more compel men to do anything, than would Christ.

And the reason of this is plain. "God is love," and only love satisfies love. A forced service could not be acceptable to God; it is not even acceptable to one like ourselves. No father who was worthy the name would be satisfied to know that his children obeyed him because they were forced to do so. We recognize the service of love as the noblest, highest and best service; and can God be satisfied with anything short of the best? Will we dare offer Him anything but the best? Will we offer Him forced obedience, in place of the obedience of love?

Such a thing would be but a mockery in the sight of God, if not in our own sight. The whole purpose of God, as embraced in the plan of salvation, is to reveal Himself to mankind so that man shall be drawn and bound to Him by the cords of love. And therefore it is absolutely necessary that every one should be given perfect liberty to choose whether he will serve God or not. For the service must be of love to be acceptable, and love cannot be anything else than free choice.

And therefore any law of man which presumes to compel men to keep God's commandments, is anti-Christian,—contrary to the gospel and against every interest of God and man. This is the real character of every human sabbath law.

God sets before all men life and death. The ten commandments are the way of life, and God wants every man to walk in that way. But He cannot compel any one to keep them; for only through love can they be kept at all. And love is always an expression of free will.

Proposed Taxation of Church Property.

THE assessor of King County, Washington, in which the city of Seattle is situated, has announced that he will assess taxes on church property in that city. The authority under which he will attempt to carry out this innovation is a recent decision by the Supreme Court of the State, which annuls a legislative provision under which church property secured exemption. A Washington paper states the case as follows:—

"The constitution of the State does not exempt church property. It leaves a loophole for unjust exemptions, however, when it says: 'Provided, that the property of the United States, and of the States, counties, school districts, corporations (municipal), and such other property as the legislature may by general laws provide, shall be exempt from taxation.'

"Acting upon this clause in the constitution, the first legislature enacted a law by which personal property to the amount of $300 became exempt from taxation, along with church property, charitable institutions, and quasi-public property. Last winter the legislature increased this exemption on personal property to $500, and also exempted improvements on real estate to the extent of $500. This act was by the Supreme Court recently pronounced unconstitutional, together with the former act which permitted a $300 exemption on personal property.

"Now the $300 exemption proviso and the proviso to exempt church property are in the same clause, and are read in the same breath. There are many who contend that when the Supreme Court ruled against the clause providing for the $300 exemption on personal property it also knocked out the proviso for the exemption of church property."

The Sabbath: What Its Reception or Rejection Involves.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

IN the beginning "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it," and thus made it a blessing and a channel of sanctification or holiness to man. He then taught man to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," or to sanctify it. God made the day holy and He instructed man to treat it as holy that he might thus receive the blessing of holiness through it; but when man treats the day as common time he fails to receive the Sabbath blessing through God's appointed channel.

It is not in the power of man to make a day holy, neither can we receive the blessing of holiness through a day which the Lord has not made holy, even though we should outwardly treat it as though it were holy. So when we turn away from the day which the Lord has made holy and accept any other day in its stead, we are thus turning away from the Lord's own channel of holiness for us. This is the great loss with which we meet in following the traditions of men instead of obeying the Word of God.

So intimately related is the "holy Sabbath" to "the holy Scriptures" and to the "holy child Jesus," that it cannot be consistently disregarded by those who profess to receive the other two for what they really are, and it is worth noting that the power which professes to have changed the Sabbath has practically put itself above the Bible and Christ. So long as the Bible is received as the Word of God, and the example and instruction of Jesus is followed, so long the seventh-day Sabbath will be observed, and when the seventh-day Sabbath is knowingly disregarded, the logic of this act really demands that the Bible and the work of Jesus should be set aside.

The Roman Catholic church in its teaching openly states that the Bible commands the observance of the seventh day and no other, and that there is not a word in the Bible authorizing a change of the day, and it just as openly teaches that the church changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, and that there is no other authority for the change. It is only consistent therefore for it to treat the Bible as of secondary importance as compared with its own traditions, and to make the intercession of the Virgin Mary of more value than the intercession of Christ.

In all this the Roman Catholic church puts itself above God, but it is consistent in the way in which it does it. So long as one receives the Bible as the Word of God, and acknowledges its authority as supreme, so long will he see that the seventh day is the Sabbath, and that the intercession of Jesus is all that is needed for man or that can avail anything for man, and when one rejects the Lord's Sabbath, the logical result will be to reject the authority of the Word of God, and to receive the word of man instead, and to accept a supposed human helper as of more value than is the help of Him who alone is able to save.

But this is not a question simply of cold logic. In thus turning from God's appointed blessings and channels of blessing man meets with an irreparable loss. If we receive the salvation of God at all, we must receive it through the channels which He Himself has established, and the blessing of holiness should be so highly prized that we should be glad to receive it in any way which the Lord may appoint.

The original Sabbath still remains as a sign and a pledge of God's power to make holy, and the true keeping of the Sabbath, the entering into His rest, is the experience of His presence who only can make and keep us holy. God's purpose in the gospel has always been the same, that we should be "created in righteousness and holiness of truth," and His means of accomplishing this result have always been the same in making us "partakers of the divine nature," and so the Sabbath remains unchanged and unchangeable, a channel for this blessing of holiness to man.

How Consistent!

"LET no man judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days," quotes the Michigan Christian Advocate, of June 19, in reply to a correspondent who wanted proof for Sunday observance; and on the same page the Advocate expends a column of severe invective against the people of Mt. Clemens, Mich., for being "profaners of the Lord's day." "Has Mt. Clemens gone mad?" exclaims the Advocate. Oh no, Mr. Advocate, we reply; Mt. Clemens has not gone mad; but they believe in letting no man judge them in respect of an holy day or of the Sabbath days, and have been conducting themselves accordingly.

The sabbath desecration against which the Advocate declaims consists in playing baseball on Sunday. A majority of the citizens of Mt. Clemens, it is said, are in favor of Sunday baseball; but, says the Advocate, "There is a good precept somewhere on record to 'follow not a multitude to do evil.'" But it may be that the Mt. Clemens people have fortified themselves with this argument which the Advocate gives on the same page in its reply to correspondent aforesaid: "The whole Christian world, except the Jews and a few Adventists, is observing the Lord's day Sabbath all right;" and "This big world was not fooled, as they would fain have us believe, away back in the early centuries." The Mt. Clemens people probably reason that if the example of the multitude constitutes a standard of right, it is all right for them to have Sunday baseball when the multitude want it; and they are doubtless aware that the vast majority in "this big world" do not believe in or practice the observance of "the Lord's day."

When religious journals put arguments in the mouths of the people which justify them in disregarding the Sabbath, such journals should be the last to condemn them for sabbath desecration. If the word of man is to prevail in the matter, then the practice must be governed by the principle of majority rule. But if the Word of God is to decide it, let there be an appeal to that Word and not to the customs of the majority. The Advocate well knows that the Word of God commands, "The seventh day [not the first] is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; it it thou shalt not do any work."

THE following words from a writer in the Truth Seeker, of June 26, present religious legislation in the character of a promoter of atheism:—

"But what are we to think of a religion that purports to be of divine origin and claims divine indorsement and support in its perpetuity, and yet is obliged to appeal to the civil law for support and maintenance? For the Christian religion to appeal to the power of the civil law for support and protection is a tacit admission that God is impotent and incapable of perpetuating his religion on earth. It is also an admission that the devil is more powerful, and a hundred times more popular than God, for he never found it necessary, under any circumstances, to appeal to the law, or any other compulsory or restrictive measures to keep his soldiers in line and facilitate their advancement and strengthen their adhesion to his cause."

They Would Rule or Ruin.

AN Omaha correspondent writes us the following concerning the plans of the Omaha Ministerial Association for securing Sunday closing of the "Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition," now in progress in that city:—

"I attended the Omaha Ministerial Association to day [June 21]. The topic of discussion was the closing of the gates of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition on Sunday; or rather, the time was mostly taken up on this theme. The chairman said, We must be actively at work, or it won't be done; we must have a whole loaf if we can get it, but if not, we will demand a half loaf—the gates must be closed till after service hour Sunday morning. The president is the pastor of the Good Shepherd church here (Episcopalian). The Christian minister said, We must demand that the gates be closed all day Sunday or we will make the Exposition a failure. Others said, The disgrace of having the gates open on Sunday must not be, etc. The excitement ran almost to a white heat, and the gathering seemed more like a political caucus than a meeting of Christian men.

"A committee was appointed to visit the directors and ascertain what their mind is in the matter. Then when the ministers meet again, if the directors will not assure them that the gates will be closed, the committee are to present plans whereby the directors will be compelled to close up, or the preachers will see to it that the thing is a complete failure."

Persecution in Florida.

THE following letter comes to us from a member of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination in Florida:—

"Bartow, Fla., June 17, 1897.

"TO THE AMERICAN SENTINEL: One of our brethren, Thos. Furman, was fined to-day $5 and costs or 10 days' labor on the public streets, for 'disturbing the peace' last Sunday. The facts in the case are as follows:—

"Last week I engaged Brother Furman to do some work for me, commencing Monday morning; and he found it necessary first to get up some wood for his wife. I sent my boy with a team to deliver the wood Sunday afternoon.

"The road runs within a few feet of the church building. There were two loads hauled. There were four witnesses at the trial, who all swore they were disturbed and that it was the first load that disturbed them. At the time of the disturbance the four witnesses were all engaged inside the house making a table to use in taking the sacrament.

"There was one wagon before and two behind the load of wood. Brother Furman asked one of the witnesses if any of the other wagons disturbed him. The mayor, who presided, told the witness he need not answer that question. Brother Furman himself was not in the wagon nor on that road, but took a near path some two hundred feet on the other side of the church.

"The complaint to the mayor was (as he told me afterwards) that this work was done on Sunday, but he said he advised them to bring in the complaint as above stated. The mayor was a swift witness in the case, no doubt having in view his fees; and after pronouncing the sentence, he told the prisoner, by way of advice, that he must in the future be more quiet on 'our Sunday.'

"The town ordinance says no work shall be done on Sunday except in case of necessity or charity. When the mayor was informed by the prisoner that this was a case of necessity, he said, 'Why did you not stop when you hauled one load?' I might mention here that only a few weeks ago the mayor's grown-up son painted a large water tank on Sunday in full view of the main street,—which of course was a work of necessity. He did not stop at painting one side only, but it was necessary to finish up the job. The mayor's name is H. P. Logan, and he is a lawyer by profession.

"It certainly seems to me that no man without God's sustaining grace could work ten days under a tropical sun to satisfy the charge of disturbing a religious meeting when there was no meeting going on at the time. Brother Furman is about 26 years old, and has a wife and three small children who are wholly dependent on him for support; and his only dependence is upon the work he can find to do by the day.

"Yours for truth,

"S. T. PAGE."

The Author of Liberty.

With feasting and fireworks, dancing and song, with blowing of trumpets and booming of cannon, the nation will soon celebrate the one hundred and twenty-first anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

The pulpit and platform and press will unite in extolling the blessings of liberty. Thousands of voices from the crowded forum of the great metropolis and from the green-carpeted grove of the country hamlet, will utter these memorable words:—

"We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

While glory will be given to the author of these words—which are like apples of gold in pictures of silver—while glory will be given to the fathers of the republic who builded a nation on these principles; how many will remember the Author of liberty to "give glory to Him?"

Thomas Jefferson, in these immortal words, himself acknowledges that liberty and equality, as "unalienable rights" are endowments of the "Creator."

The same acknowledgment appears in the preamble to the Bill of Rights drafted by Jefferson and adopted by the General Assembly of Virginia December 26, 1785:—

"Well aware that Almighty God hath created the mind free; that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishments or burdens, or by civil incapacitations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, and are a departure from the plans of the holy Author of our religion, who being Lord both of body and mind, yet chose not to propagate it by coercions on either, as was in his almighty power to do," etc.

If the divine origin of liberty were not recognized by the men who promulgated the Declaration of Independence, the fact would still remain that liberty was first heralded to the world by our Lord.

The Declaration of Independence declares that "All men are created equal."

Nearly eighteen hundred years before, Christ said: "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren," and his disciples had taught that God "made of one blood all nations of men." Acts 17:26. Therefore "God is no respecter of persons." Acts 10:34.

The Declaration of Independence says that men are endowed by their Creator with the unalienable right of liberty.

Eighteen centuries before, the Author of "our holy religion" had said:—

"Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles lord it over them; and their great ones exercise authority over them. But it is not so among you: but whoever would become great among you let him be servant of all." Mark 10:42, 43, R. V.

Lording it over God's heritage is condemned by the Christian religion, and where there is no lording there is liberty.

The Declaration of Independence declares that governments are instituted among men to secure the rights of liberty and equality.

Christ, in condemning the exercise of governmental lordship and making "rulers" servants of instead of lords over the people, and in making the State "a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil" and a "praise" or protector to him who "doeth good," taught nearly eighteen hundred years before the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed that "to secure these rights [liberty and equality] governments are instituted among men."

While all this is true, how many will think, amid the din and roar, the dining and wining of Independence Day, to "fear God and give glory to him" who is the Author of all liberty, civil and religious, Christian and constitutional.

A. F. B.

How many who will talk fluently of liberty on Independence Day, will themselves be slaves of their appetites and passions? "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

THE AUTHOR OF LIBERTY.

News, Notes, and Comment.

WHEN Mr. Justice Brewer delivered that famous opinion of the Supreme Court, under which a learned English divine was admitted into this country that he might assist at the ministrations of "Old Trinity Church" in New York City, the Justice felt called upon to work out, at considerable length, and with elaboration quite extensive, the items which he had taken it upon himself to "nail up and defend"—namely, "that this is a Christian nation." He approached his subject from various directions, and always with the same results. He shed upon it many different kinds of light, and the letters only came out all the stronger. The "X rays" of an intellect unquestionably forceful, were turned upon it, and the declaration showed, through and through without a flaw, "this is a Christian nation."

* * *

Now, whatever a layman may feel himself at liberty to do, it lies not within the province of an attorney to criticise the Supreme Court of the United States, or to question the utterances of that high judicial body—"the most august tribunal in the world," as it has been styled. And the methods, or line of reasoning whereby any given conclusion has been reached in the minds of the judges, is as much beyond the purview of the practitioner as is the decision itself. Nevertheless, there is no objection to pointing out that certain facts which the court cites, as pertinent to its view of the legal question involved in a particular case, have also a significance apart altogether from their relation to the issue argued and decided therein.

* * *

In the great "Christian nation case," for example, the Supreme Court's opinion, as delivered by Mr. Justice Brewer, calls attention to the fact that nearly every "commission" or royal authority given by European powers to their citizens, to make discoveries, plant settlements, or "stake out claims," in Western mining parlance, on this continent of ours, mentions, in terms more or less specific, as among the objects contemplated in the grant, "the propagation of the Christian faith among savages now living in darkness." This, it is considered, constitutes an argument in favor of the proposition that ours is "a Christian country." So be it. We have here, at any rate, a historical datum of other, if not wider significance.

* * *

WITH the single exception of the Dutch, every nation of Europe did, indeed, deem it advisable to proclaim to the world the missionary character of its expeditions to the American shores. (I have found one English "commission" from which this announcement was omitted, I presume by an oversight.) Trade is mentioned as a desirable thing to look out for; the extension of the control of Christian rulers over lands occupied by unbelievers is spoken of as quite desirable; but these are matters of a transitory world, and only a means to an end—the saving of immortal souls to an eternal life, where time and territory and trade shall be no more. In our day, when a nation goes to war, she does not feel called upon to justify herself in the eyes of her own people or of other communities by any pretense of religious zeal or aspiration. Columbus set out westward that he might reach the East and "convert the Great Khan." But England calmly takes India by the throat and chokes her into submission, without either thinking or talking about the Gospel, though, as a matter of course, behind the bayonets and the artillery, go the clergyman and the "Established Church." What is the cause of this difference?

* * *

It is all due to the change of zeitgeist, or time spirit. After the barbarians who overthrew Rome had parcelled the fair domain of Europe out—not to their satisfaction, for they were continually squabbling, and "rearranging and shifting," but still, after a fashion—among themselves, there was, for several centuries, a very remarkable zeitgeist dominating the minds of men. The Phenicians were the great traders of antiquity. The Greeks knew and appreciated the value of wealth, and the importance of barter for its acquisition. So did the Romans. These last accumulated worldly goods, at the height of their power and magnificence, largely by plunder; but they also had ships, and profited by the exchange of the products of one country for those of another. But after Rome's eagles had flown away, never to return, commerce practically ceased. The Barons enriched themselves by robbing each other from time to time. The peasants patiently tilled the soil; there was little inducement for any one of them to "go into business," for, if he succeeded, it was pretty certain that, sooner or later, some great "lord" would make a "forced loan" out of his accumulations.

* * *

A VERY amusing illustration of the popular attitude towards trade is given by Mr. Charles Reade in his great story, "The Cloister and the Hearth," and it shows a wonderful capacity for entering into the spirit of another age, totally different from that of our own, does the imagining of such an incident. Mr. Reade tells us of a German shoemaker of the period under consideration, who was discovered by a would-be customer sound asleep at the door of his shop, in the middle of the day. The man was quite angry at being disturbed, and his wrath was rather augmented than mollified, when he learned the purpose for which his visitor had called. He entered the store reluctantly, and begged the stranger not to buy a particular pair of shoes which attracted the latter's fancy. The customer, however, insisted on having what he wanted, and got it at last. As he left, the shoemaker dropped into his chair again, his face covered with tears, and sobbed himself back into slumber, grievously moaning, "my last pair of gilded shoes—my last pair of gilded shoes!" The genius of commerce was not the zeitgeist.

* * *

AND as trade was no part of men's thoughts, to fight for it would have been considered quite as reprehensible as to live for it and work for it. Hence, wars, in order that they might be commended to the general approval, were always prosecuted under the guise and in the name of religion. There can be no doubt that the first crusade, at least, was quite sincerely organized through the influence of a religious feeling. But it was by no means so with the last. One must read "The Laws of Civilization and Decay," a most remarkable work, which has lately and deservedly passed into a second edition, in order to fully appreciate the sordid and mercenary motives by which that great expedition was governed, and the astounding atrocities to which it was driven by its controlling impulse of greed and covetousness. There were good, honest, straightforward men who left their homes and families, many of them forever, upon that fateful occasion; but they were few, comparatively, in numbers, and too poor to act alone; so they did the dirty work of the rest, and died at it.

* * *

THE Crusaders had revealed to the new Europe which had arisen on the ruins of Rome's great Empire, the wondrous possibilities of the East. Here was seen an enormous extent of territory, exhibiting a wealth and luxury and magnificence beyond the dreams of mail-clad warriors, plodding peasant, and petty village merchant. While Europe had been busy sacking castles and settling the details of long theological creeds, Asia had for centuries chiefly concerned herself with making things as comfortable and enjoyable as possible in the present life. The most orthodox believers were impressed with the importance of this course when they saw it going on before their very eyes. Legends were many of a grandeur transcendent, almost ineffable, in regions beyond their seas. A glimpse they got into a wondrous charming new world; but Saracen obstinacy prevented more than a glimpse.

* * *

It was maddening. The dwellers in the far-off Fairy Land might be weaker than those who thus blocked the way. Perhaps their vast treasures of gold and silver and precious stones and gorgeous raiment might be easily taken from them by threats; or a very slight degree of violence might prove all that was necessary. Or they might be so savage and simple-minded that a few trinkets would purchase from them a quantity of things that had a real substantial value. Anyway, they must be gotten at, somehow or other. Of course, they were pagans. And, therefore, it was not only a right, but it was a Christian duty, if their hard-headedness rendered such a step necessary, to employ any force whatever, in order to dispossess them of those worldly blessings which it was not thinkable that they should have done anything to deserve at the hands of Providence.

* * *

THEY cannot be reached from the East? Very well, then; we must try the West? By this time, the idea of the rotundity of the earth was, if not generally accredited, and though even under the ban of the Infallible Church, by no means universally rejected. Obviously, if it were true, one could get to the East by the simple process of sailing westward. It was a tempting idea. By this means, the rude and implacable Saracen, who now asserted his unholy claims to land which he had conquered, would be outflanked, and approached from the rear. And between him and the adventurers would lie exposed a Paradise of richness and glory, such as the eye of Western man had never seen, nor his mind conceived.

* * *

BUT the zeitgeist was still largely religious, and only in part commercial. The last Crusade was entered upon under an express contract between its financial promoter, party of the first part, and its commanding officer, party of the second part, that a great act of spoliation and outrage should be perpetrated before any attempt was made to invade the soil of Palestine; nevertheless, like all of its predecessors it was commissioned in the name of the Father, and Son, and Spirit, and sent forth to do the will of Deity in the work of murder and rapine. And, just so, when it was finally determined to try the experiment of penetrating the eastern arena by a western route, it was deemed necessary to insist that no worldly motive lay at the bottom of the movement—that Christianity, and not avarice was the cause of it all.

* * *

WHEN we thus contemplate the early expeditions to this hemisphere as the direct result of the Crusades; when we understand that, like the last crusade itself, they occurred at a time when men's minds were in a transition state—when the replacement of the zeitgeist of religion by the zeitgeist of acquisition was just about commencing—then we have at once the key to those expressions in the "commissions," etc., which are sometimes relied upon as evidences that "this is a Christian nation." They were just as inevitable, under the circumstances, in such instruments, as the similar language in the papal "Bulls" whereby the faithful were exhorted to go forth and expel the infidel from the blessed land of Palestine, the cradle of the Christian Church.

* * *

How far were the men of that time sincere in the use of such language? How far did its use impose upon governments, upon citizens, upon the world at large? No definite answer can be given to these questions, profoundly interesting as they are. But one thing is certain—there was an element of sincerity in those who used them, and to some extent there was a genuine belief in them on the part of those for whose benefit they were promulgated.

* * *

THIS historical review, while, as already observed, it is not presented with any idea of challenging the conclusion of our great Forum of last resort, to the effect that "this is a Christian nation," nevertheless has an important value in an altogether different question—and one of considerable importance. It is hard for us nowadays to appreciate the lofty degree of courage and manly indifference to danger which were required for the voyage of Columbus, and for the wonderful work of the Cabots. Men who ventured as they did, with the scanty knowledge that they possessed, in their frail crafts, without charts, and having compasses of the rudest kind, must have been driven by an impulse stronger than any mere idle curiosity "to see and hear some new thing." What was the secret of it all?

* * *

INCIDENTALLY, these men, and others of their ilk, may have made this land, nominally, as we have been told they did, "a Christian country." There is no denying that they were uniformly instructed to do so. But a close and impartial scrutiny of history shows that this thing was done, if at all, incidentally or accidentally. America was really discovered not because the people or potentates of Europe were desirous to "bring souls to Christ," but because people and potentates alike were full of the lust of covetousness, the "sacra auri fames," or "accursed thirst after gold," of the old Roman poet. Columbus was sent to convert the "Grand Khan." Then, as now, there were people "right around home" avowedly unconverted, and others whose conduct plainly showed that their professions of belief in the true faith were based on a misconception of their own mental condition. But the "Grand Khan" whom Columbus set out to Christianize was supposed to sit on a throne of solid gold, studded with diamonds and other precious gems, and his palace glittered with silver trappings, and pillars of alabaster, and chains of pearls, and in the vaults of his treasury lay millions of coin untold. And so, Columbus got his ships from Ferdinand and Isabella.

* * *

THE wrath of man worked salvation. A mighty nation has grown up in the land that Cabot ran against when he was groping for a "northwest passage" to the treasure house of El-dorado. As great as any in many other regards, this nation stands unique in the family of commonwealths, as the representative of political ideas to which she owed her birth, and which are the foundation stones of her existence. One of those ideas—a very vital one—one of transcendent consequence—is the idea of a total separation of Church and State. How far this idea is consistent with her posing as "a Christian nation" is not the question here. The purpose of these present paragraphs is simply to point out the fact that, if those whose first coming hither made her life a possibility did anything to give her this characteristic, at least the doing of it was not the active cause of their coming—that, if the only hope and aim in life of those who fitted out and those who conducted the great voyages of discovery had been the propagation of the gospel and the glory of the Saviour, as they understood it, we should never have had a Columbus, a Cabot, a Smith or a Raleigh to tempt the waves, or a Bancroft to record their achievements.

Ans. J. Ringgold.

Political Prayer in Ohio.

An illustration of "religion in politics" was furnished at the opening of the Ohio State Republican convention, at Toledo, June 22. The incident calls out the following from the New York Journal of June 24:—

"The country clergyman who opened the proceedings of the Ohio Republican convention with a supplication to the Almighty on Tuesday had a rather singular idea of the ethics of prayer. However, he had a very correct estimate of the mental characteristics of a Republican convention, for it is recorded that at various points in his appeal the assembled delegates applauded wildly, and at the close they clambered upon their chairs and cheered themselves hoarse.

"Through the efforts of this suppliant, a Deity, supposed to be all-seeing and omniscient, was explicitly informed of the condition of affairs within the Republican party. Especially was he commended to keep an eye on a certain "typical American and father of the Republican party."

"Continuing, the preacher begged the Almighty to take an active part in fastening the protective system on the United States. He seemed to recognize no impropriety in appealing to that Great Power which rules all the nations of the earth to aid this one people in its effort to discriminate against all others, and to cut off from our markets the workers of every other country. A device which is successful in proportion as it reduces the workers of other lands to want and misery is a curious thing to recommend to the God of all the nations, but Ohio's political preacher was equal to the occasion. The assembled Republicans shouted themselves hoarse when he lifted up his appeal:—

"May there be among our lawmakers such wisdom and patriotism and loyalty to American interests as shall mend the breach in the wall of our prosperity, and by protecting our industries give employment to labor, and thereby create a market at home and abroad, upon the pivot of which turns national prosperity."

"For years the prayers offered by political preachers in Congress, Legislatures and conventions have been a scandal to the godly and a cause for merriment among the impious. Of the egregious bad taste of such a performance as that at Toledo there can be no doubt. That all thought of the sacredness of the office the clergyman was filling was banished by the matter and the manner of his supplication was made evident by the fact that his auditors treated the prayer as they would a political stump speech, interrupting with applause whenever stirred by the speaker's sentiments. Such incidents only blunt the sentiment of reverence, yet they will be repeated as long as political preachers are called upon to open political gatherings with prayer. It would be better to omit the opening ceremonies, since the very class of pulp-iteers least fit to discharge the duties of the office invariably seek it."

REPORT comes from Somerville, a suburb of Boston, that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the place intend to stop the sale of soda water at the drug stores on Sunday and the sale of goods from bake shops. Also, that the board of aldermen have forbidden Sunday sprinkling of the streets. Upon this an antichristian journal remarks: "These fanatics are determined to convince enlightened mankind of what many have already ventured to assert—that religion is a curse."

Are You a Member of the International Religious Liberty Association?

THIS Association was organized to care for the families of those who were imprisoned for conscience' sake, and to disseminate the principles of religious liberty, especially by means of the printed page. The Association is supported by members who pay one dollar a year as a membership fee and by donations from those interested in its work.

Since its organization, multiplied millions of pages of literature have been distributed and thousands of dollars given in aid of the oppressed, but the signs of the times indicate that the heat of the battle is still ahead of us.

All members receive free, as fast as they are published, all issues of the Religious Liberty Library, a monthly publication with occasional extras, devoted to the discussion of current religious liberty questions.

July 1st is the date for sending letters to members of the Association asking for their annual offerings. These letters will cost nearly $125.00, a sum with which we could circulate half a million pages of tracts. Can not this sum be saved to the cause of truth by our friends sending in their dues and donations this year without waiting for our annual letter. We hereby kindly request that this be done. Those wishing to become members can do so on the payment of $1.00.

Address all communications to the International Religious Liberty Association, 39 Bond St., New York, N. Y. Write your name and address plainly, so that we can print it with our list of subscribers to the Library. Remember the Library is free to members. We sincerely hope that our friends will respond promptly and thus make the annual letter unnecessary.

A. F. BALLENGER, Secretary.

The Sunday Newspaper and Sunday Excursion Train.

BY A. SMITH.

A GREAT cry is raised by many of the clergy of the land against Sunday excursion trains and Sunday newspapers, holding them responsible as leading factors for much of the prevailing wickedness that exists at the present time.

A newspaper carefully conducted on the principles of civil usage is altogether proper as a promoter of intelligence and social freedom, and is therefore just as properly issued upon one day as another, except for religious reasons only. For the clergy to oppose it therefore, for supposed sabbath desecration, otherwise than by moral suasion, is to transcend the authority conferred upon them as ministers of the gospel by the Author of the Christian religion.

The same principle is true concerning the running of excursion trains, or any other trains, upon Sunday or any other day observed as the sabbath.

That church people themselves are largely responsible for the so-called sabbath desecration complained of, the following quotations indicate. In 1887, there was held in Elgin, Illinois, a Sunday law convention, many leading evangelists being present, at which the following resolution was passed:—

"Resolved, That we look with shame and sorrow on the non-observance of the sabbath by many Christian people, in that the custom prevails with them of purchasing sabbath newspapers, engaging in and patronizing sabbath business and travel, and in many instances giving themselves to pleasure and self-indulgence, setting aside by neglect and indifference the great duties and privileges which God's day brings them."

"Dr. Knowles, the editor of the Pearl of Days, said that the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad found that when their trains were not running on Sunday five hundred Christian ministers in New York City went and used competing lines, giving all their traffic to them. Then the directors said, if these other roads can get the patronage of the preachers on Sunday then what harm is there in our carrying other people on Sunday."—Battle Creek Daily Journal.

The following extract is from an article written by Rev. C. H. Zimmerman and published in the Union Signal, of Nov. 5, 1891, under the heading "So-called Christians Are the Offenders":—

"A pamphlet before me with the above title alleges that moral and religious citizens are responsible for the inauguration of sabbath desecration by railroads. Rail road directors were unwilling to run Sunday trains when the petitions were first sent to them; but they were signed by church members and the directors at length yielded to the demand. These church trains developed an appetite for Sunday travel. If respectable, moral and religious persons could take an excursion to church, others could take excursions to the sea-shore. Though only a few local trains were at first run on Sunday, the public demand increased rapidly, until now they are running all over the land. Carroll D. Wright, then chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor, said in his official report: 'It can safely be asserted that all the facts, so far as ascertained, show that the inauguration and establishment of the Sunday-train system on the railroads which centre in Boston was wholly the work of church-going people, and that it was also for their convenience in going to special churches to which they had become attached. It was not called for, however, by any necessity in enabling them to attend the public worship of God.'

In this land of liberty, no person is obliged to do any work upon a Sunday newspaper, nor to sell, buy or read it; neither has he any right to forcibly restrain any one else from perfect freedom of choice in the matter. It is also an indefeasible right for any person to go where he pleases by a Sunday excursion train or any other so long as his conduct is strictly civil; and he is amenable to God alone as to how he spends the Sabbath, whether that day be the first, the seventh, or any other day of the week. It is altogether proper for a minister, or any other believer, to persuade men, even with earnest entreaty, to discontinue Sabbath-breaking, but they have no right to use the lash of the law nor the revengeful methods of a boycott to effect a reform.

Men and boys are largely confined in the dusty shops and factories of our towns every day, week in and week out, except on Sunday, while their wives and sisters toil in their hot kitchens or laundries, seldom getting a breath of heaven's air free from the grime and odors of the none too clean city. But the clergy, largely free from the discomforts of their parishoners, are, some of them, able to go to a lake-side or beautiful park, taking their families and servants with them, and spend weeks of the "heated term" in the enjoyment of the beauties of nature, forbidding the poor of their congregations, under proposed legal penalties, from availing themselves of the only feasible opportunity of enjoying like pleasure, because, forsooth, the Sunday excursion train is their only means to this end.

Every person has a right to keep Sunday as the sabbath if he chooses to do so and to persuade as many others as he can; but when an attempt is made to enforce it by civil law, the advocate will find himself arrayed on the side of the prince of darkness. When an appeal is made to the Bible to sustain Sunday sanctity, a Gibraltar of divine authority will resist the attack, for God commands in his Word the sanctity, not of the first, but of the seventh day.

Grandville, Mich.

"ETERNAL vigilance is the price of liberty,"

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

WE have received from the author, Mr. W. H. Wild, a copy of his beautiful picture-chart, entitled, "The Two Ways." It is designed as a study of the way of salvation that delivers from the way of destruction. It is a beautiful picture, a suggestive chart, an interesting study, and an excellent daily counsellor. All the children will certainly be charmed with it; and all the older folks must surely be pleased with it, on sight. It is 23x30 inches in size, and is printed in twelve clearly defined colors. It must be seen to be appreciated. Price, 75 cents. Address Wild and Hilliard, 67 Kendall St., Battle Creek, Michigan.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50.
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

A Departure.

THE AMERICAN SENTINEL never has, and under its present management, never will, pose as a money-making enterprise. The sole object of its existence is to promulgate the principles for which it stands in defense, and never was it more determined in this than now. We may frankly say, however, that were it not for the loyalty and liberality of its friends it would not be on a paying basis to-day, for it is a well-known fact in newspaper circles that it is rarely the case that a paper is able to pay its way from its subscription receipts alone. The SENTINEL now has a circulation that enables its influence to be felt, and requests have been made for advertising space. After due consideration the management has decided to open its columns to a limited amount of commercial advertising, taking great care to admit only such announcements as it can be assured are perfectly reliable, and which it can, if necessary, personally endorse in its editorial columns. We trust that this move may prove of mutual advantage to all concerned.

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS.

—HAVE you ordered "Interesting Facts" advertised in another column? It is worth the money.

—WE have quite a quantity of slightly damaged books that we will sell cheap. Send for list of same.]

—"THE little Webster dictionary you advertise is the best thing of the kind I ever saw, and I would not be without it for three times its cost." This is what a subscriber writes us.

—CONCERNING the value, as a seller, of the Cyclone Washer, advertised in another column, Mr. J. B. Crow, of Bowling Green, Ohio, writes: "My profits for the past six weeks' whirl of the Cyclone are $100. I have washed all kinds of clothes, and can say that it is the greatest machine on the market. Every lady who has purchased one of me is more than pleased with it." Write to Messrs. Coon Bros., Battle Creek, Mich., for further particulars regarding rates, territory, etc.

—WE place in our columns this week the new advertisement of the Capital City Commercial College and Capital City School of Shorthand, located at Des Moines, Iowa. The SENTINEL is personally acquainted with these schools, and their management, and knows whereof it speaks when it says that they stand among the very first schools of the kind in the United States. The teachers are all specialists, and the instruction and business discipline are unsurpassed. To those who are contemplating a course in book-keeping or shorthand, we would suggest that they write for an elegant catalogue, which will be sent free, by addressing Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa, not forgetting to mention the fact that you were advised to do so by the SENTINEL.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELBOYN, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N. Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. Its successful combination of a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words. Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELDON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., LITT. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of—Harvard University.—

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address.

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,
39 BOND ST., NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

MONEY MADE IN A MINUTE.

I have not made less than $16.00 any day while selling Centrifugal Ice Cream Freezers. Anyone should make from $5 to $8 a day selling cream and from $7 to $10 selling freezers, as it is such a wonder, there is always a crowd wanting cream. You can freeze cream elegantly in one minute and that astonishes people so they all want to taste it, and then many of them buy freezers as the cream is smooth and perfectly frozen. Every freezer is guaranteed to freeze cream perfectly in one minute. Anyone can sell ice cream and the freezer sells itself. My sister makes from $10 to $15 a day. W. H. Baird & Co., Dept 194, Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa., will mail you full particulars free, so you can go to work and make lots of money anywhere, as with one freezer you can make a hundred gallons of cream a day, or if you wish, they will hire you on liberal terms.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

DON'T TAKE an agency until you find out what we have to offer. If already engaged or in business, send for our "Side-line Specialties." Begin, now where you are, and turn spare moments into cash. $75 per month. Particulars free. Write to-day. Address,

E. E. MILES, Manufacturer and Pub.,
5136 State St., Chicago, Ill.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

The Stomach:

Its Disorders and
How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS,
slightly damaged, offered at half price.
Address PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LAW.

Arguments in behalf of the rights of American citizens, presented by A. T. Jones in opposition to the Blair Sunday Rest Bill. A thorough catechism upon the subject of Church and State. 192 pages. $0.25

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK CITY.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spoke it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12 X 18 INCHES

On thick paper mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

Postpaid 25 cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

Bound in Buckram, price, - $1.75.
" " " gilt edges, price, 2.25.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

Grand Trunk Railway System

IS THE MOST POPULAR ROUTE TO THE WEST,
Combining Every Comfort and Luxury.

Solid Vestibuled Pullman Dining and Sleeping Car Trains

Through from New York to Chicago without change

Choice of route from NEW YORK to NIAGARA FALLS, SUSPENSION BRIDGE, TORONTO, DETROIT, PORT HURON, CHICAGO, and the West, Northwest, and Southwest, via

The Celebrated ST. CLAIR TUNNEL,

Which connects Canada and the United States, and is the greatest submarine tunnel in the world.

The Grand Trunk Railway System is justly celebrated for its Fishing and Hunting Resorts, as on and contiguous to it are the greatest grounds of the civilized world, among them being the

MUSKOKA LAKES, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER, THOUSAND ISLANDS, LAKE ST. JOHN REGION, WHITE MOUNTAINS, ANDROSCOGGIN,

and many others too numerous to mention.

CHAS. M. HAYS, GEO. B. REEVE, W. E. DAVIS,
Gen. Manager. Gen. Traffic Manager. Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt.
MONTREAL, P. Q.

FRANK P. DWYER,

Eastern Passenger Agent,

273 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

"LAW OF GOD AS CHANGED BY THE PAPACY."

This chart has been thoroughly revised, and contains some of the more recent utterances of this great apostate power.

The plan of the chart is the same as the old one. On either side are telling quotations from Catholic authorities admitting and boasting of the change, while the "Commandments as Changed by the Papacy" occupy a central position.

It is a forcible presentation of the subject, and will be a valuable help to Bible workers and ministers. Size 36x48 inches. Price $1.00. Printed on thin paper for inclosure in letters and miscellaneous distribution, 50 cents per 100.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE

Is attracting much attention. While it lasts, we will sell copies of

INTERESTING = FACTS,

Which contains an excellent picture of

Her Majesty Queen Victoria,

Together with the pictures of twenty others of European Royalty.

Price 13 Cents, Two for 25 Cents, Postpaid.
Original Price 25 Cents.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

The TWO Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE
HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST
REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges	$1.85
Cloth, marbled edges,	2.50
" Gilt edges,	3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

Something New Under the Sun is

THE "COMBINATION" BIBLE.

All the changes which occur in the Revised Version appear in foot-notes, thus escaping the awkward and cumbersome parallel versions.

RV just before a word or passage shows how the same word or passage is rendered in the Revised Version as seen in the corresponding foot-note.

RO before a word or passage in the text indicates that the words inclosed in parentheses in the foot-notes are omitted in the Revised Version.

Clear type, helps, maps, concordance, etc.

Published by the National Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Send for circulars.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

—An Ideal Book of Travel.—

BY LAND AND SEA

A JOURNEY THROUGH FIVE CONTINENTS.

STARTING from the interior of the United States, the reader quickly finds himself transported, as it were, to the scenes of the journey, the several stopping places being California, Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, England, and Holland. The aim of the narrative, which has been written almost wholly from original notes and observations, has been especially directed to the object of presenting the life and nature of those regions, apart from the mental instruction and its inherent features of intellectual entertainment. The author has happily found, in the object lessons of life under its various phases and conditions, illustrations of moral truths, which are portrayed in a manner at once instructive and attractive. The book contains 392 pages, embellished with over 100 original, full-page engravings designed especially for this work, and numerous part-page illustrations, and is furnished in the following bindings:—

Fine silk-finished cloth, embossed in gold and colored ink, marbled edges	$2.25
" " " " " gilt titles	2.75
Full Russia Leather, gold side and back titles, gilt edges, extra finish	3.90

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

AMERICAN STATE PAPERS

A Book
for the Times.

A most valuable work on the subject of religious legislation in the United States, from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

It includes the various prominent acts, both State and national, relating to subjects of religion, such as Bills of Rights, Amendments, Treaties, Sunday Observance, etc. In it are found various Memorials, Petitions, and Remonstrances; House and Senate Reports on Sunday Mails; documents on "The Sphere of Civil Government," "The Rights of the Jew," "Religion in the Public Schools," "Civil Laws Against Blasphemy," "Christianity and the Common Law," "Sunday Legislation," etc., etc.; Judicial Decisions on Sunday Laws and the Bible in the Public Schools. It also contains in an appendix the provisions in the Bills of Rights of all the States, relating to the rights of conscience, and

The Sunday Laws, Complete,

OF ALL THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

There are also running footnotes all through the book, containing the comments and statements of eminent men.

368 pages. Price, best binding, $2.00, Cheap edition, $1.25.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, JULY 7, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 28.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

JUSTICE is above statute.

It is the business of legislators and courts to discover law, not to make it.

THERE is slavery in every other pathway than that of the law of God.

BEING a good stickler for "the law" proves nothing more than that the man may be a good Pharisee.

GOD does not care anything about governments, but He does care a great deal about men.

It is the business of the law to protect society; of the gospel, to reform the criminal. There is no reforming power in a statute.

THERE are a great many creeds and denominations in the world, but—from a moral standpoint—only two classes of people; namely, those who believe on Jesus Christ unto salvation, and those who believe not. From God's standpoint, this is the only difference there can be between any two individuals on earth.

It was because of envy that Cain murdered Abel, and this evil sentiment has been the actuating motive in every case of religious persecution from Cain's time to our own.

The wicked envy the happy estate of the just, which is theirs by virtue of "righteousness, and joy, and peace in the Holy Ghost."

"In order that every man may enjoy the religious Sunday," said the Rev. Mr. Reed, of Haverhill, Mass., in a recent discourse, "every man must observe the civil Sunday." Was it then an oversight on the part of the Creator that in his Sabbath commandment he makes no allusion to a civil sabbath, or provision for its observance? Sunday observance, to be sure, is not commanded by the Creator, but if it were, could not one person observe it independently of the actions of some other persons? Is our obedience to God dependent upon the uncertainty of the obedience of others around us? We think not.

Christian Profession and Anti-Christian Practice.

In the United States there are multitudes of people who profess to be Christians.

The vast majority of this multitude are diligently endeavoring to secure legislation enforcing their religious views upon all the people.

They desire and require that religion shall dominate politics, shape the laws, and control the State: they want a union of religion and the State.

In truth they want a religious State; an earthly, political, kingdom of God; with "Christ reigning as King on Capitol Hill" and throughout the nation, through themselves as his representatives.

All this is seriously proposed by people who seriously profess to be Christians.

What, then, is it to be a Christian? What is Christianity anyhow?

In the Scriptures it is written that Christ left us "an example that we should follow his steps;" and that "He that saith that he keepeth His commandments ought himself also so to walk even as He walked."

It is Christianity to follow His steps alone, to walk only as he walked. For again it is written, "As my Father sent me, even so send I you;" "As he is, so are we in this world;" and we are "in Christ's stead."

What steps, then, did Christ take toward the domination of the politics of his day? What steps did he ever take to gain control of the government, or to dictate in the affairs of the State?—Just none at all. Everybody knows that he never in any way gave the slightest indication of any such thing.

This, too, in spite of many solicitations of different kinds. He was not only more than once openly invited to do so; but it was the long expectation of the whole people to whom he came. So strongly was this implanted that they were willing to take him by force and set him at the head of the government.

Yet never by a word, a look, or any sign whatever, would he countenance any such thing. On the contrary he openly repudiated every suggestion of the kind; and withdrew himself from the people who were bent on having it so, and went away by himself alone and prayed for the people that they might have better views of himself and of his mission to the world.

Was this because politics was so pure, laws so just, and government so altogether correct, that there was no call for any readjustment, no room for any reforms? Was there at that time no need of careful watching to see that none but good men should hold office?

Were such as these the reasons why Christ had nothing to do with politics, nor with affairs of government in any way? Not by any manner of means. Corruption in politics and in office was never more rife than at that very time, and in Judea. Then as it was altogether from choice, and not at all from lack of necessity or opportunity that Jesus had nothing whatever to do with politics nor any of the affairs of the government, wherein do the churches, leagues and societies of the United States to-day follow his steps in their persistent intermeddling in these very things? And when they do not walk as he walked, wherein are they Christians?

It was his steady refusal to countenance the political aspirations of the people, which, more than anything else, caused the scribes, the Pharisees, the lawyers, the priests, and the Herodians, to reject and persecute him. These were the church-leaders of that time, and correspond to the sects, leagues, unions, and Endeavor societies of the present day.

It was to the Pharisees with the Herodians that he announced the everlasting principle of the separation of religion and the State, in the words, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things which are God's." And when the whole combination together had made against him the false charge that he would make himself a king, he answered them and all other combinations for all time, "My kingdom is not of this world." "My kingdom is not from hence."

Such was ever his word and his attitude. Such has been his will concerning his church, from the foundation of the world. He is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever;" and it was impossible that, when he came into the world, he should walk contrary to all the instructions that he himself had given before he came into the world.

And now to all the church combinations, leagues, unions, and endeavor societies, that are afflicting this nation with their mischievous schemes for molding the politics, shaping the laws, and directing the government of the country, he pointedly exclaims, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

Why do you call him Lord, and then do your own will? Why do you profess to hold his Word in reverence, and then utterly disregard that which from beginning to end is one of the great vital principles of that Word? Why do you bear the name of Christ, while in this great matter you walk directly opposite to the way in which he walked?

Since the Bible, from beginning to end, treats so fully and so plainly on this subject; and since all history speaks with one continuous voice, warning all men of the essential evils that follow in the train of every step that is taken to unite religion and the State; it is difficult to understand how anybody who professes to have any respect for the Bible, or has knowledge of the A B C of history, and cares at all for mankind, can for one moment countenance any suggestion of a connection between the pulpit and politics, between church and civil government, between religion and the State.

Yet the ones who profess to be the only true believers of the Bible, and the ones who profess to be the best qualified to gather the true lessons of history—these are the very ones who are most diligently engaged in forcing upon this nation the evils of a union of religion and the State, of church and government, of the pulpit and politics.

Surely nothing can explain this contradiction between profession and practice, but worldly ambition that can never learn anything, and religious bigotry that is never content without power.

Yet though this may explain the contradiction between profession and practice on the part of those who are seeking to afflict the nation with this great evil; what suggestion can possibly be made in explanation of the indifference and unconcern on the part of the rest of the people? How is it that they can view with a listlessness almost absolute the steady grasping growth of this power that is determined to bring the whole nation under the curse of a religious despotism after the very image of that of the Dark Ages itself?

It is reported from Paris that the Roman Catholic priest who preached the funeral sermon for the victims of the late dreadful disaster in that city, in his discourse represented God as demanding a holocaust of good, charitable, believing people to appease his anger against the freethinkers and other sinners of the gay French capital. This is quite in harmony with the pagan conception of God which leads men to torture themselves with various forms of penance in order to appease his wrath or move him to pity. The Christian conception of God is expressed in the Scripture, "God is love," and "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." There is plenty of paganism which tries to pass for Christianity.

Liberty and Law.

LIBERTY and law are not, as very many people think, two things set over against each other, and requiring to be properly balanced to secure a successful and happy existence. People who hold to this idea show thereby that they have no true conception of either the one or the other.

God is the author of liberty; he is also the author of law. He has not made two things which antagonize each other. In the truly Christian life, liberty and law meet and dwell in perfect harmony. They lead the individual in one and the same path.

Law is opposed to license; but license is not liberty, it is a form of despotism. Individuals who commit acts of license are the slaves of their vices and passions. He who is not such a slave has no desire to do an act which the order and peace of society, or the good of any of his fellows, demands should be forbidden. In his life is manifested "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." And "against such there is no law."

The pathway of perfect liberty coincides with the pathway of perfect law. Perfect liberty is the liberty of the divine life, and the perfect law is the divine law, and the divine law is an expression of the principles of the divine life. The Christian life is the life that is actuated by these principles. The Christian life moves in the pathway of the perfect law, and finds only perfect liberty.

The law of God is the "law of liberty." Jas. 2:8, 12. It is because of this that the Christian finds in it his delight. "O how love I Thy law!" is his testimony; "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth." Ps. 119:97, 103. "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More are they to be desired than gold,—yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honey comb. Moreover by them is thy servant warned; and in keeping of them there is great reward." Ps. 19:9, 10. He sees in God's law, as does every one who becomes acquainted with it, the pathway of everlasting life, and of "the glorious liberty of the sons of God."

Man's law is for the restraint of evil doers, that there may be peace and order in society, without which men could not engage successfully in the pursuits of life. In pursuance of the purpose of that law, the transgressor, when caught, is forcibly deprived of his liberty. Either by incarceration, or by other penalties, restraint is put upon the evil-minded person so that he is forcibly kept within the pathway of civility. The law of man takes no account of the individual further than this.

We are apt to form our conceptions of God's law from what we know of law as made and executed on this earth. It is natural and easy to do so, especially as the law of man often professes to re-enact or enforce the law of God. But all this is an egregious error. In character and purpose, the two are altogether distinct. They are different also in their methods of operation.

The law of man deals with the outward acts. It operates upon the individual only from without. God's law, on the other hand, deals with the secret thoughts and motives of the heart. It operates upon the individual from within. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Ps. 19:7. It leads the individual not only to conduct himself civilly, but to do that which is right in all things, because such is the desire of his heart. Having that law in his heart, he has a supreme love for the right.

The law of God therefore could not be made effective through the restraints employed by the law of man. The former leads man into perfect liberty; the latter lead him into less liberty than he already enjoys. To try to make the law of God effective through depriving a man of his liberty is to endeavor to make it operate in precisely the opposite manner from that to which it is ordained by its Author.

This is the trouble with all sabbath laws, and all other forms of religious legislation. They are contrary to the divine law in the employment of coercion to secure obedience, if in nothing else. They would compel men to offer a forced tribute to his Maker, which would only be an insult to Him. He who has the law of God in his heart has perfect liberty, and in this perfect liberty offers to God a tribute of love; and this is acceptable and well-pleasing to Him.

"God is love;" and his law is a law of love,—the love of that which is holy and pure and just. But we can attain to this only in Christ. Only in Christ can the law of God get into our hearts at all. And Christianity is the manifestation of the power and wisdom of God in putting Christ into the heart of a man for his salvation. By this the individual knows the perfect liberty, love and righteousness of Christ's own life; for of such an one it is written, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2:20.

The life of Christ is everlasting, and it is retained by faith. By faith, not by force, the law of God is made the rule of life; and faith is not of force, but of the free will of the believer. The fountain head of the Christian life is liberty, and the stream is liberty, through all its flow.

And thus it is seen that the law of God is but a delineation of the pathway of perfect liberty, which those enjoy who by faith have Christ living in their hearts.

THERE are two laws in the spiritual world,—the "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," and the "law of sin and death." The one means liberty, the other slavery.

Not Pessimistic.

CHRISTIANITY is not pessimistic; it is the most optimistic of anything on earth. While it says that "in the last days perilous times shall come", and that evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived, and that there shall be oppression and persecution of all who "will live godly in Christ Jesus," it also points with equal and even greater emphasis to the approaching end of all the evils which fill the earth with mourning, and the establishment of the glorious and eternal kingdom of righteousness and peace. And to every individual, whatever may be his circumstances and into whatever evils he may have fallen, it brings peace and happiness now, and an assurance of eternal joy in the kingdom of God. "The mourning cometh," is its welcome word to the waiting believer; therefore "look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh".

The Christian religion is the sovereign remedy for "hard times", or for any trouble by which an individual may be afflicted, whether within or without. The SENTINEL would have every one whom it can reach accept and put in practice the principles of Christianity. These represent the highest optimism of which the mind can conceive.

ALL movement is not progress. Many a wheel goes round that does not go on. Revolutions are not necessarily evolutions. Professional agitators, secular as well as religious, would do well to take note of this fact.—N. Y. Observer.

A Sign of the Times.

THE second Sunday after the recent notorious lynching of a negro criminal at Urbana, Ohio, the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of that place, preached a sermon in justification of "the punishment of crime by the people," in which he said:—

"Down in the hearts of the people there are times when the justice which is found in the divine law against crime asserts itself, with a power beyond moderation and control,—times when the sense of justice says the criminal ought to die."

Every outbreak of mob violence, then, against a real or supposed criminal, may be regarded as a case of the "justice which is in the divine law" asserting itself, and, of course, "the justice which is in the divine law" is sacred, and its assertion of itself is to be regarded as the movings of a divine force, and a thing not to be forbidden or repressed.

This is a plain justification of such outbreaks of mob violence as that by which this sermon was called out. And when such words are spoken by the professed ambassadors of Christ, the fact may well be regarded as a sign of the times. When those to whom the people look for an exposition of the divine truth that all men ought to receive, justify the work of the lawless passions of human nature, the people are under the leadership of blind guides, who can only lead them into the ditch.

"The justice which is in the divine law" never asserts itself through the agency of a mob.

Papal Lutheranism.

From "Present Truth," London, Eng.

THE Norwegian constitution has had an article to this effect:—

"The Evangelical-Lutheran religion is and continues the public religion of the State. The citizens, who profess the same, are obliged to see that their children are educated in it. Jesuits, and orders of monks and nuns are not to be tolerated."

The other day the Norwegian Storting discussed an amendment proposing to expunge the last clause. The debate resulted in striking out all of the clause save the declaration that Jesuits are not to be tolerated. As these pioneers of Rome are accustomed to working in secret the clause will not shut them out. The pity of it is that the Storting did not see that the first clauses only establish a papal system under another name.

Wherever the Lutheran church is established, as in Scandinavia and Germany, it differs very little in its spirit from the Roman church. The Word which Luther preached was the power of the Reformation. In harmony with the gospel, Luther declared:—

"It is by the Word that we must fight; by the Word overturn and destroy what has been established by violence. I am unwilling to employ force against the superstitious and unbelieving. Let him who believes approach. Let him who believes not stand aloof. None ought to be constrained. Liberty is of the essence of faith."

After the initial victory of the Reformation had been won by the power of the Word, Luther was persuaded to depart somewhat from these principles, and the work of reform ceased in the hands of his followers. Religion was put into a creed, and supported by the sword of the prince. So it comes that Lutheranism now is not reformed, and is an opponent of the very gospel by which the great Reformer shook the foundations of the papacy.

A Forced Conscience.

"THE rules at West Point," says the Independent (N. Y.), of July 1, "do require cadets to attend divine service on Sunday at the cadet chapel, unless they prefer, 'on the ground of their religious faith or conscientious objections' to 'attend some other place of worship.' No conscience is forced."

In other words, no conscience is forced when cadets are required "to attend divine service on Sunday," either at the Government chapel or at some other. Can this be true? How about those cadets who may prefer not to attend divine service at any chapel? Is such preference to be regarded as evidence that they have no conscience at all? And are not the other cadets compelled to attend the service of their preference? Can compulsion and freedom of choice unite in dictating the same course of action? If the individual submits to compulsion, does he still retain his freedom?

The same thing is illustrated in many of the State Sunday laws, which provide that observers of the seventh day shall not be compelled to observe the first day of the week, provided they do conscientiously refrain from work on the seventh day.

Such requirements cannot be in harmony with freedom of conscience.

The Right of Private Judgment.

It is a favorite argument urged by Rome against the doctrines of Protestantism that Protestants adhere to the right of private judgment in the study of spiritual truth, and that this principle has caused the many divisions which exist to-day in the Protestant ranks. Rome points to these divisions, in contrast with the unity which pervades the ranks of her own adherents, as an evidence that Protestantism represents a departure from the truth and Church of God.

In this argument there is an appearance of truth, but no reality. As a matter of fact Protestantism does not lay claim to any "right of private judgment," and it is only Protestantism which rescues an individual from the fatal fruits of this error.

The whole papal system of doctrines represents the fruits of private judgment. This judgment has been set forth before the church and the world in various forms. In one case it is the "bull" of a pope, in another the decree of a church council, in another the pronouncement of some other church "authority"; but always it is a human judgment, an emanation from a fallible and sinful source. It is the fruit of an exercise of private judgment.

Protestantism leads men away from the fallible human teacher, to that Teacher which is infallible and divine—the Holy Spirit. Protestantism does not for a moment claim that any individual ought to attempt to apprehend divine truth by the exercise of his own judgment. And it just as strenuously opposes his reception of any doctrine as spiritual truth by the exercise of any other person's judgment; while the papacy teaches that it is all right to receive doctrine and hang upon it the eternal destinies of the soul, provided that doctrine be the pronouncement of a fallible mortal called the pope, or of a collection of fallible mortals sitting in the capacity of a church council.

But the pope, it is said, when speaking "ex cathedra," is infallible. Who said so? Who proclaimed him to be infallible? The cardinals did so, at that memorable conclave which was assembled at Rome in 1870. But is a cardinal infallible? Were any of the cardinals of that conclave, or all of them together, infallible? And if not, was their pronouncement infallible? Out of fallibility, comes infallibility—out of the impure fountain, a pure stream! Strange phenomenon, unknown elsewhere in all the world of cause and effect!

Protestantism proclaims the Holy Spirit as the divine Teacher and Guide into all spiritual truth. It does this upon the authority of the word of God. For of the Spirit it is written: "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth." John 16:13. And also: "The Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:18), and "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." Ib. Therefore we are counseled, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Jas. 1:5. The true Protestant goes to the Word of God for wisdom in spiritual things, and with humility and faith asks God to enlighten his understanding. And the promise of Him who cannot lie is that it shall be done.

This is not exercising his own private judgment,—far from it. He first learns from that Word that his own judgment counts for nothing in the apprehension of spiritual truths, because such truths must be spiritually discerned. He lays aside his own preconceived opinions, and opens his mind and heart to the illumination of the Holy Spirit; and that illumination is shed always upon the Word. The relation of the Spirit to the Word has been well likened to that of a locomotive to the rails upon which it runs. The Spirit speaks through the Word, and departs not from it. "He shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak." John 16:13. He speaks not his own words, but the words of Christ. John 14:36. And all Scripture is the Word of Christ. 1 Pet. 1:10, 11.

Instead of coming, then, to a fallible mortal like himself, for enlightenment in those truths which pertain to salvation, the true Protestant comes to God, who is in truth infallible, and views his Word under the illumination of the Holy Spirit, the divine Guide who cannot err. But why, then, it may be asked, are Protestants so divided in their views of scriptural truth? The answer is, that they have not taken the truly Protestant course, but have too nearly followed the principles of the papacy. They have held too much to the opinions of men, either their own opinions, or those of some others. Their very denominational names indicate this, as do the creeds upon which they stand. God's Word is true, and his promises are sure, whatever may be the short-comings of his professed followers. And as certain as that his Word is true, so certain is it that the Holy Spirit does guide into all truth those who humbly seek the Lord for enlightenment. How he does this, it is not our business to inquire; nor does it matter. But he does it, as certainly as that there is any spiritual truth to be known.

The unity of the papacy, is the unity of blind submission to the spiritual guidance of a man. Christian unity is the unity of intelligent submission to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. In the former there is the exercise of human judgment, which is private judgment, on the part of him who "as God, sitteth in the temple of God", and of his counsellors; in the latter there is the enlightenment of the individual understanding by the illumination of the Holy Spirit upon the infallible Word.

And in the latter, also, there is spiritual growth; and only by it can spiritual growth be realized. For one cannot grow spiritually on a papal Bull, a decree of a church council, or a church creed. In short, he cannot grow on the word of man, because there is no element of growth in it. In the creeds and decrees which men have fixed there is no room for growth. Nor is it ordained that the child of God shall experience a fitful and uncertain spiritual growth by hearing an occasional pronouncement upon spiritual things by priest or pastor. He is to grow daily, hourly, if he will; and this can be realized only through the instruction of the ever-present Spirit.

"The right of private judgment" as exercised in spiritual things, is a papal principle entirely; and the more Rome inveighs against it, the more she condemns herself and justifies the Protestant principle of becoming wise unto salvation through the Word of God and the guidance of the Spirit.

THE London correspondent of the New York Times, Mr. Harold Frederic, speaks in a recent letter of the progress of the Romeward movement in the Established church. He says that recently the new Bishop of London displayed a mitre, the first one seen in St. Paul's since the Reformation. He reports a large advance in the employment of the confessional and mentions a recent early morning service in a parish church where he saw "twenty nun-clad women of a Church-of-England order who, during prayers, bowed at the name of Jesus but knelt at the mention of the Virgin Mary!"

THE relation of Church and State has been the vexed problem of the civilization of the centuries. The unholy alliance between Church and State has been the principal disturber of the peace of nations. Whenever the Christian church has sought the favor of rulers or governments it has been a subject and not a sovereign.

Whenever rulers or governments have sought the favor of the Church they have become the abject slaves of ecclesiasticism, the worst bondage ever known to man. Under monarchical government there is a State religion, and religious liberty, if enjoyed at all, is granted as a privilege and not conceded as a right; whereas religious liberty is never a privilege but always a right.—Rev. Jas. M. King, Secretary National League for Protection of American Institutions.

Is it Christian?

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Interior, who is a Doctor of Divinity, in a late number of that paper, gives a very interesting description of the way the Sultan of Turkey visits the mosque on Friday to pray. He is not charitable enough to admit that he goes to the mosque for any other purpose than to be seen of men, which, of course, may be true, but it is a well-known fact that tens of thousands of professed Christians go to church for the same purpose. But of all the statements made in regard to the Sultan, the most remarkable, to the writer, was the following: "Such is the way the despot of the Bosphorus who is so heartily and affectionately hated by all Christians makes his progress to his place of devotion."

An inspired apostle has instructed Christians that they should pray for kings and for all that are in authority. This does not mean good kings alone; indeed at the time when the apostle wrote those words the greatest monarchs of the earth were opposed to Christianity, and so, of course, there was greater need of praying for them. Another apostle has instructed us to "honor the king." The question is whether the Christians of the Sultan's dominions have obeyed these injunctions? If Paul and Peter could honor Nero and pray for him, why should not the Armenian Christians who live in the Sultan's dominions pray for him? It is highly probable that if they had prayed more and plotted less many lives might have been spared.

But to the most interesting point: Do Christians hate Abdul Hamid? Granting even that he is their enemy, should they hate him? Here are some words from Christ, the Author and Founder of Christianity: "For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those who love them. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again. But love ye your enemies and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil." Luke 6:32-35.

Now, in view of these words, if we hate anyone, even the Sultan of Turkey, are we Christians? Or, in other words, Is it Christian to hate? The fact that it probably may be truthfully said that the majority of professed Christians actually hate the Sultan is a sad reminder that actual Christians are not nearly so numerous as they are supposed to be.

The power of love as seen in the early church conquered heathenism and Rome. Is there any better way of subduing Mohammedanism and Turkey?

THE most powerful force in the universe is love.

“Christian Citizenship,” or “Converting Men by Nations.”*

“CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP” is the name of a new movement which has for its object the regeneration of society by means of Christian laws, made and administered by Christian men. That society needs regenerating, no Christian will deny. That the church, with its present methods, has utterly failed to regenerate society, is equally apparent.

In view of these patent facts, it was seen that something must be done, and that soon. Consequently, at the annual meeting of the National Reform Association, held at Allegheny, Pa., Nov. 16, 1893, its secretary, Rev. H. H. George, sounded the key-note of Christian Citizenship in the following words:—

“I will never say a word disparagingly of evangelistic work. But I do think the church is making a mistake in so confining herself to that work, as if the prospect of saving the soul was the great end. The tremendous power of the government is against us. If that were not so, they would be converted by nations, so to speak. But when the government is against the conversion of nations, we are moving against the tremendous machinery of the government in working for the conversion of men. You go down to Washington to-day, and there is a saloon in both houses of Congress; and so the influence is spreading all over the country. Now we are working right against the power of this and everything else. I do not know but it would be better to stop evangelistic effort, if possible, if this other work would be made successful, and go to converting men by nations—nations full of men—rather than to try to save one man against the tremendous machinery of a nation like this, whose influence is very largely against the conversion of souls; while, if it could be turned in that direction, they could be saved by thousands instead of one. So I think the great question of the hour is the conversion of this nation to Christ.”

Since the time of this utterance there has been a marvelous change in the means and methods of Christian workers. Pastors and evangelists have come to devote less time to revival work, and more time to political reforms. The brethren of the congregations have been counseled to “leave the prayer-meetings with the sisters, and attend the primaries,” and “pull wires for the kingdom of God.” They have been told that “when the primary and the prayer-meeting are held on the same night, the true prayer-meeting is the primary.”—“Christian Citizenship,” by Carlos Martyn, p. 65, Funk & Wagnall Co., New York.

It is well known that the National Reform Association has for many years urged that the salvation of this nation depended upon securing an amendment to the national Constitution, accepting Christ as the ruler of the nation, and the Bible as the basis of all legislation. By this it was hoped to convert the nation to Christ. All members of this association are greatly encouraged by the change which this Christian Citizenship movement has wrought in the means and methods of church work. Rev. J. T. McCrory, of Pittsburg, Pa., a leading official in the National Reform Association, and president of the Pennsylvania Christian Endeavor Society, referred to the change at the Washington Convention, 1896 (Official Report, p. 125), in these words:—

“Let me call your attention first to the fact that the aspect of the cross is undergoing a great change in this regard. There was a time, not so long ago either, when the cross was viewed almost exclusively in reference to the salvation of the individual. . . . Now, if I understand it aright, it is one purpose of this great Endeavor movement to enthrone Christ in our national life. . . . Over yonder, in Scotland, they have just been engaged in doing honor to the martyrs of former centuries. Who were these men? They were the men who sought in their day to get Christ into national life, and they lost their heads for it. They stood, in their day, for what they called the crown rights of King Jesus,—the same thing precisely that the Christian Citizenship movement of Christian Endeavor stands for in this country to-day.”

If the agitation for a formal national recognition of Christianity, or for the enactment of laws with a view to advancing the kingdom of God,—if such agitation is a desirable change from old paths of Christian work, then Christians have reason to rejoice. If devoting less time to saving men as individuals and more time to saving men as nations is an indication of a return to apostolic power and purity, then the omens are promising. For no intelligent observer can fail to discern this change in means and methods of church work. If, however, this change is for the worse instead of for the better, then this radical transformation should startle every friend of evangelical Christianity.

There are many who deplore this new departure. They see in it a movement away from New Testament principles.

The Herald and Presbyter, of June 3, 1896, contained these weighty words:—

“The gospel began its mission for the renovation of the world with the exhortation, ‘Repent and be baptized every one of you.’ It did not direct its efforts to institutions, but to individuals. And so it must be now. So it will be if the Spirit is poured out. To talk about the revival of civic righteousness as the great need of the times is reversing the divine order; it is putting the effect before the cause; it is trying to build the house without gathering the material. We cannot have a Christian city without Christian citizens. Men’s hearts must be renewed before we can hope for new social and civic conditions. Let us labor and pray for what people now-a-days sneer at as ‘an old-fashioned revival’—of the fashion of the first revival when Peter preached on the streets of Jerusalem.”

Rev. Arthur S. Burrows, pastor of the First Baptist church of Charlestown, Boston, Mass., writes thus in opposition to the employment of governmental power to further the gospel:—

“Soul-freedom is the bulwark of religious liberty, the inevitable outgrowth of the New Testament principles, that each must hear for himself, must repent for himself, must believe for himself, must confess Christ for himself, must be baptized on his own confession (Rom. 14:22). We come into this world one by one, we must go to Christ one by one for his pardoning grace, and we leave this world one by one to be rewarded according to our works, if we be Christ's, and to be judged if we be not Christ's (2 Cor. 5:10). Hence the State has no authority over the religious beliefs and observances of men, whether orthodox or heretic, atheist or heathen."—From "For What Does a Baptist Church Stand?"

* “Religious Liberty Library, No. 49.”

The Christian Advocate (Methodist, New York), of April 29, 1897, in reply to a question whether a Methodist minister should follow the political plans pursued by a prominent clergyman in New York City, in attempting to create a better public sentiment, replied in part with this gospel advice:—

"The true course of the individual pastor who desires to create a better public sentiment than exists, is to deepen the tone of piety and conscientiousness in his own church; to consider that it is by the church in its normal life that the community is to be raised permanently."

Jesus said: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke 24:49.

Jesus did not say: "Tarry ye in the halls of legislation, until ye be endued with power from the State."

Jesus said: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Acts 1:8.

Jesus did not say: "Ye shall receive power after ye have gained control of legislation."

Jesus said: "Without me ye can do nothing." John 15:5.

Jesus did not say: "Without the power of the State ye can do nothing."

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." When Peter and the rest of the apostles, filled with the Holy Spirit, began evangelistic work on the day of Pentecost, they were outlaws in every country under heaven. Imperial Rome ruled the world. The death penalty hung over the head of him who would teach a new doctrine. But "against the tremendous machinery of the government" three thousand were converted in one day. And just as long as the church trusted alone in the Holy Spirit, she went forth conquering and to conquer. And just in proportion as the church began to "pull wires for the kingdom of God" at the court of Constantine, in that same proportion she lost power with the Prince of Peace. The church stopped converting men by individuals; and began "converting men by nations," and immediately there appears the "Holy Roman Empire."

The Reformation of the sixteenth century, whose power, like an earthquake, shook the throne of the papal pontiff, was but the natural result of turning from the arm of flesh to the arm of God. When Luther was urged to appeal to the State for aid in furtherance of the Reformation, he quickly replied: "There is no sword that can further this cause, God alone must do everything." "It is with the Word that we must fight, by the Word must we overthrow and destroy what has been set up by violence." "Christians fight, not with sword or muskets, but with suffering and with the cross. Christ their captain handled not the sword; . . . he hung on the tree."

D'Aubigné, the historian of the Reformation, contrasting the power of the Reformation with the power of Rome, uttered these inspired words: "Rome had been established by the law of a carnal commandment; the Reformation by the power of an endless life." "The gospel of the Reformation had nothing to do with the world and with politics. While the Roman hierarchy had become a matter of court intrigue, the Reformation was destined to exercise no other influence over princes and people than that which proceeds from the gospel of peace."

All evangelical Christians now freely admit this early apostasy. They admit that friendship with the world, and reliance on human power, caused this ruin. They also agree that the power of the Reformation resulted from reliance alone on the power of God. Then why do they not cry out against this modern reunion with the world? It will cost the friendship of a world-loving, compromising church; but it will bring its reward.

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins."

"If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand."

Let the watchman give the trumpet a certain sound. Let him enter into his closet and shut to the door, and plead for "power from on high," that with all boldness he may speak the word.

In closing, we step aside to let another cry aloud against the worldward tendency of the church, but join with C. H. Spurgeon and George C. Needham in a fervent "Amen."

"Renounce all the policy of the age. Trample upon Saul's armor. Grasp the book of God. Trust the Spirit who wrote its pages. Fight with this weapon only, and always. Cease to amuse; and seek to arouse. Shun the clap of a delighted audience, and listen for the sobs of a convicted one. Give up trying to 'please' men who have only the thickness of their ribs between their souls and hell; and warn, and plead, and entreat, as those who feel the waters of eternity creeping upon them.

"Let the church again confront the world; testify against it; meet it only behind the cross; and, like her Lord, she shall overcome, and, with him, share the victory. O Spirit of the Lord, bless this witness!" †

A. F. BALLENGER.

THE "faithful and true Witness" addresses the church to-day in the language of Rev. 3:15-18.

† "The Devil's Mission of Amusement—A Protest." By Archibald C. Brown. Introduction by C. H. Spurgeon, and prefatory note by Geo. C. Needham. Fleming H. Revell Co.

News, Notes, and Comment.

THE great distinctive characteristic which differentiates the religion of the Master from all other religious systems in the world is its absolute separation from the State, its perfect independence of the civil power, its flat repudiation of the "arm of the flesh," its perfect trust in "the sword of the Spirit." This idea had never occurred to any of those who had set up as moral guides for the people, or directors of their political destinies. It was a new and a strange doctrine. It was nothing short of a revolution in human thought. There was no germ of such a conception in any existing philosophy or cult.

* * *

THE great Confucius put the offering of sacrifices among his "eight objects of government," and mentions as a matter of course the appointment of a "Minister of Religion" to preside over the sacred ceremonies of the country, and "regulate the services paid to the spirits and gods." Plato was so fully persuaded in his own mind not only that religion was a State matter, but that it was exclusively a State matter, that he discountenanced private or household devotions altogether, and, in his ideal commonwealth, proposed to compel every person to attend to these things in the public temples. He declared that among the greatest evils in civil affairs was "ignorance of the true God"—meaning the god provided by the State for the worship of its citizens—and that "he who disturbed the foundations of religion disturbed the foundations of the State"—meaning that one who did not "conform" to the church by law instituted was necessarily a traitor.

* * *

ARISTOTLE sang the same strain. Chief among all the necessities of a State, he placed "the service of the gods." For them, he held the temples ought to be built at the expense of the community, and for their worship men "ripe for the priesthood" should be "set apart" by the government; for subordinate branches of the public ritual, he would have "magistrates" assigned, leaving the more important and gorgeous ceremonials for the priesthood proper. Cicero devotes one book of the three which compose his work "On the Laws," as it now stands to the exposition of a system of ecclesiastical regulations, such as he deemed an essential part of a perfect polity.

* * *

THE "fathers" and people of the early church were deeply tainted with this pagan notion. It was under its dominating influence that the bishops entered into that "dark intrigue" with Constantine, whereof the first fruit was the first Sunday law. St. Augustine thus frankly warned the Britons: "If you will not unite with us in showing the Saxons the way of life, you shall receive from them the stroke of death"—meaning to frighten them into a nominal submission to the See of Rome, as the only condition in which they would be aided in the defense of their homes. And these same Britons declared that their kingdom was "held of Christ."

* * *

NONE of the great "reformers" succeeded in shaking off this intellectual yoke completely. Luther started out well, but when the time came that he could avail himself of the temporal power he so detested while it worked the will of the papacy, he was not proof against temptation. The avowed aim of Zwinglius was to establish a theocracy after his own heart, which should crush with pike and sword the un-Christianized peoples of Europe, and smite the Romanists hip and thigh. Wycliffe was, for his followers as to doctrine, a pope and Ecumenical Council on a small scale, as well as a "regulator" of life.

* * *

COMING down to later times, we find many philosophers and statesmen saturated with the same fallacy. Machiavelli did not hesitate to enumerate among the duties of rulers close attention to "all the circumstances and events" of a national life "however false or frivolous soever they may appear to themselves." Bismarck never doubted the expediency, nay, the substantial necessity, of a State-established and State-supported church. Gladstone has written himself down as of like opinion. Macaulay could not express frankly a contrary view. Coleridge maintained that we must have "national faith," and that the State "has a right to demand of the national church that its instructions should be fitted to diffuse throughout the people legality, that is, the obligations of a well-calculated self-interest, under the conditions of a common interest, determined by common laws." And Mr. Matthew Arnold considered that all who oppose a union of Church and State "think unworthily" both of government and religion.

* * *

It has been well said that man is so inconsistent a creature that there is no reasoning from his belief—meaning, of course, his professed belief—to his conduct, or from any one part of his belief to any other part. This fact is perfectly familiar to every student of psychology, and is often forced upon the consideration of the most superficial observer of his own kind. But surely it is a monstrous thing, and one worthy of every effort to eradicate, that those who profess and call themselves Christians should tolerate for an instant in their own minds the slightest inclination toward a united Church and State. There can really be no question of expediency about the subject, so far as a Christian is concerned. A Christian has one Authority, and one only for his view of the nature and scope of religion. When he finds out what this Authority has to say, there is, for him, an end of the matter. All the glamour of an establishment does not dazzle him. All the arguments of "police" that professors of philosophy, or self-chosen "heads" of the people can bring to bear, do not move him. What does the Master teach? "My kingdom is not of this world;" "The kingdom of God is within you;" "Put up again thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword,"—and so on.

* * *

So that we must abandon this particular inconsistency of trying to follow the Master, and, at the same time, trying to mix and intermingle religion with civil affairs, if we would be more than professional Christians. Plainly he who will only be worshiped "in spirit and in truth," is not to be worshiped under the superintendence of a public purveyor of spectacles. Plainly the kingdom which is not of this world is not to be served in any manner whatsoever by the machinery of kingdoms that are altogether of this world. What Confucius thought about such religion as he saw around him is nothing to us. That a later generation imported into Christianity the theories and practices of paganism is nothing to us. That neither Matthew Arnold nor Macaulay could so resist the glitter and grandeur and hoary antiquity of the "Established Church of England as to "think straight and see clear" in the premises, is nothing to us. We have His Word.

* * *

It is certainly and painfully true that many excellent persons, besides the great men mentioned above, are unwilling to take Him at His word, and are strenuously striving, day and night, to establish for Him a kingdom which is somewhere else than "within" the heart and mind of the race. And it is also true that many such are quite sincerely oblivious of their own inconsistency thus manifested. I was talking a few days ago to one of these people. He dwelt at some length on the uselessness of laws to make people really good. He laid it down with dogmatic emphasis that this was the work of "the Spirit," and could be done by "the Spirit" alone. Then the conversation drifted to some other topic, and at last we got to talking about "Sunday laws." On this subject, he waxed eloquent again. He declared, among other things, that in his belief, the whole morality (sic) of the nation was bound up with these enactments; that if they were swept away, the very basis of society would be shaken—with other propositions of like meaning and phraseology. I let him talk awhile, and then asked him how he reconciled the assertion that only "the Spirit" could make men moral, with his position that our national morality—conceding that there could be any such thing—is dependent on Sunday legislation for its existence and maintenance. I have not yet received my answer.

* * *

ONE would think that this great distinctive "trade-mark" of the Master's religion—this attribute so grand, so great, so absolutely and exclusively its own, would be the constant theme of sermons in Christian churches, and of conversation wherever religion is spoken of among Christians. One would expect to see the force of this wonderful doctrine displaying itself in every manifestation of Christian life, private and communal; that missionaries would use it in their first attempts to open the way for the gospel in the savage soul. Alas! The missionary too often arrives as the accredited minister of a church which has already lived for centuries on the mammon of unrighteousness. The savage too often sees in his visitors only rivals of his own priesthood, who would substitute themselves for the latter in the capacity of a State-supported hierarchy, with all that the words imply.

* * *

THERE is always something unpleasant about the way in which nations of the higher or more civilized type deal with those lower in the scale of humanity. The cool robbery of our Indians by England, France and Spain, and the cruelties practiced by the conquerors of South and Central America, form discreditable chapters of history. And so, in the taking possession of India, England committed many atrocious acts, and defied the principles of common justice over and over again. But England has a genius for governing as remarkable as her appetite for new colonies. And it forms a legitimate subject for congratulations to Her Majesty in connection with the the great Jubilee, that the vast Indian empire is one of the most peaceful and contented portions of her territory at the present time. The fact fairly entitles India to be spoken of as "one of the brightest jewels in England's crown."

* * *

IN nothing have the English exhibited more tact than in their dealing with the religious sensibilities of that wonderful Indian population. No different sects of so-called Christians have ever hated each other with more bitterness than do the Mahomedans and Buddhists of Hindostan. To keep the peace between them, while extending no undue favor to either sect, is a task which has called forth the highest qualities of British statesmanship. Incidentally, it has broadened the English mind, and undoubtedly done an immense deal of good by leading, at any rate, toward that much to be desired, but apparently unattainable goal—the absolute equality of all religions and of no religion before the law among English-speaking nations.

* * *

IN India, for example, it is, as usually with us, a profanation of a Christian church for a man to enter and remain in one with his hat on his head; and, accordingly, to do so is disorderly conduct. On the other hand, with that curious way the Orientals have of doing just the opposite of what we do in many things, it is a profanation of a Buddhist temple for a man to enter it with his shoes on his feet. And that is likewise considered disorderly conduct by English law, as administered in Hindostan, and is punished accordingly. And now that learned Hindoos have taken up with English ways, and are gradually coming to share in the government of their country, under English auspices, and English direction, it is no uncommon thing for a native Hindoo magistrate to sentence an Englishman for his infraction of some custom or usage dear to the Hindoo heart for religious reasons alone.

* * *

PERHAPS the time may come when the "higher education" of the natives should be so diffused that there will arise a considerable body of men who will object to foreign domination and develop a capacity for organization and discipline which will endanger the white man's rule. But that event is far distant, if, indeed, it shall ever occur. From their writings, it appears that cultured Hindoos are rather disposed to regard English rule as a welcome release from the internal contentions which for so long a period preceded its establishment, and as the only reliable safeguard against their re-appearance. Altogether, Her Majesty has reason to be proud of India.

* * *

SOME interesting figures have lately been given, showing the comparative weight of Bibles and cartridges which the soldiers of different armies are required—or allowed—to carry. If my memory serves me, it appeared that Germany gave more weight, so to speak, to the instruments of murder than England, in proportion to the legal weight of Scripture, considered as an item of military equipment, while France almost disregarded the good Book altogether in fitting out her soldiers.

* * *

CERTAIN writers have tried hard to extract some fun out of these disclosures, but it is no laughing matter. Little matters like these have a moral, and the moral of them is that the two things, war and Christianity, are incompatible, and can by no means be made to harmonize. The incongruity is what suggests humor in the instance now under consideration. It is, of course, apparent on the surface of the statement. But it is an incongruity to be condemned, not laughed at.

* * *

THE spirit of religion, as we understand it, is the spirit of peace. Men will go to war to the end of time, as they have done from its beginning, on all sorts of pretexts, sometimes self deceived as to their own motives, sometimes seeking to deceive others in regard to their reasons for so doing, sometimes with brutal candor confessing the unrighteousness of their controlling impulse. But under any and all circumstances, war is a thing outside of the pale of Christianity. There may be a human standard of conduct, measured by which a war is not only a right, but a duty—as in case of an unwarranted invasion of a country. But Christianity, like ordinary municipal law, is "silent in the clash of arms." The Gospel and the cartridge are not properly placed in the same knapsack.

Ans. J. Ringgold.

Doing Righteousness.

BY C. H. KESLAKE.

"HE that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous." 1 John 3:7.

This does not mean that he that does righteousness thereby becomes righteous, but it does mean that he that does righteousness does so simply because he is already righteous, and the righteousness that he does is the evidence that he is righteous.

It is simply impossible for an unrighteous person to do a righteous act, measured by God's standard of righteousness. Any deed performed is no better in the sight of God than the motive by which it was prompted.

Of motives men cannot safely judge, and an act that may appear to our fellowmen to be righteous, because the motive for such cannot be known, may appear to be entirely the opposite to Him who only can discern the motives.

In order then to do that which is righteous a person must be righteous.

Just here it will be in order to inquire: What is righteousness? There must be some standard of righteousness by which every act, or the motive that prompts the act, may be tested.

The Word of God says that "all unrighteousness is sin," and that "sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John 5:17; 3:4)—not of any law in general, but of some law in particular; for again it is written (Rom. 3:20) "By the law is the knowledge of sin." What this particular law is by which sin is known is told us in Rom. 7:7: "I had not known sin, but by the law; for I had not known lust except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." But the law that says "Thou shalt not covet," is the law of God—the ten commandments.

As therefore sin is the transgression of that law, and all unrighteousness is sin, it follows that the ten commandments are the standard of righteousness. Every act, and every motive that prompts the act, by whomsoever committed, is either approved or condemned by that law.

To be approved every act must, in the very nature of things, be as good as the law itself. It cannot possibly accept anything that comes, in the least degree, short of it.

It becomes therefore a matter of importance to know what God's law is—what is its nature, its character.

Two scriptures will suffice in deciding this question.

The Apostle Paul says (Rom. 7:12,14): "The law is holy, and the commandment holy and just and good," and "the law is spiritual."

It must therefore be plain that any act that is righteous must be holy, just, good and spiritual. And as "he that doeth righteousness is righteous—does righteousness because he is righteous—it follows that he only can do righteousness who is holy, just, good, and spiritual.

This is a condition that no man is in naturally, and one that he cannot work out for himself. It must be accomplished by a power greater than he himself possesses. It must be wrought for him by God in Christ through the operation of the Holy Spirit. He who has the Holy Spirit dwelling in him will be spiritual, he will love spiritual things, and as the law is spiritual he will love it, and with the Psalmist will exclaim, "Oh, how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day." Ps. 119:97.

Furthermore, he who is filled with the Holy Spirit will have Jesus abiding within him all the time, for the apostle prays that "He [God] would grant you according to the riches of his glory to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." Eph. 3:16, 17.

Christ is our righteousness, for God has made him to be such unto us. 1 Cor. 1:30. Christ dwells in us, not to be a passive spectator of what we do, or try to do, even though we "try to do right," but he is there to himself do—not try to do—that which is righteous. And when he does a thing, no matter what it is, we may be sure that it is altogether righteous; for he cannot deny himself, and in him there is no unrighteousness.

It is therefore only as Christ dwells in the heart, to rule in all our members, that one can do righteousness—that which the law would approve.

What is true of the ten commandments as a whole is true of all its parts. Each commandment of the Decalogue is spiritual, holy, just, and good. The Sabbath, therefore has just this character, and no man can keep it without Jesus Christ abiding within any more than he can keep any other of the commandments. To attempt to enforce the keeping of the Sabbath by human law must therefore be a wicked thing. For it not only makes a person a hypocrite, but it is also a denial of Jesus Christ. It really puts human law—or man, who makes such law—in the place of Christ. The only remedy for the violation of the Sabbath is Christ.

Sabbath-keeping is an act of righteousness. When a man is righteous he will love to do righteousness. He will therefore love to keep the Sabbath. For that kind of a man human law is unnecessary. He is where human law cannot affect him. He is far above it, seated in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, delighting to do God's will, because the law of the Lord is in his heart.

For an unrighteous person, human law would be inadequate. All it can do is to make a man civil, or punish him for his incivility. In no sense could it make him obey to the slightest degree the law of God.

What is needed, then, is not law—human law, but Christ—not human law to punish an unrighteous person for not doing that which, in his condition, is absolutely impossible, but a divine Christ to live and dwell in him, supplying the power as well as the willingness to keep all the commandments, and all because it will be his delight to do so.

Fulfilment of Prophecy.

"Signs of the Times," June 17.

In a recent speech in the National House of Representatives, Mr. Wheeler, of Alabama, uttered the following words:—

"The trouble is, Mr. Speaker, that the country has changed. From 1776 to 1865 the dominant spirit which controlled in this republic was one of honor, glory, chivalry, and patriotism. The dominant spirit of to-day is the pride of gold, of palaces, of marriage alliances with dukes and princes and counts, and an exercise of the whole power of the Government in the interests of money changers, millionaires, and monopolies, and this, too, whether they are Astors, Vanderbilts, or Rockefellers of America, or Barings and Rothschilds from across the sea."

This sounds very much like the prophecy of Thomas Jefferson, spoken in the beginning of our national history:—

"The spirit of the times may alter, will alter. Our rulers will become corrupt, our people careless. A single zealot may commence persecution, and better men be his victims. It can never be too often repeated that the time for fixing every essential right on a legal basis is while our rulers are honest, and ourselves united. From the conclusion of this war we shall be going down-hill. It will not then be deemed necessary to resort every moment to the people for support. They will be forgotten, therefore, and their rights disregarded. They will forget themselves, but in the sole faculty of making money, and will never think of uniting to effect a due respect for their rights. The shackles, therefore, which shall not be knocked off at the conclusion of this war will remain on us long, and will be made heavier and heavier, till our rights shall revive or expire in a convulsion."

THE Holy Synod of the Russian church is seriously discussing the question whether or not to encourage the circulation of the Scriptures in the vast empire of the czars. The rulers of the Orthodox Greek church have never taken up the position of the Roman communion that the Bible in the hands of the laity is a dangerous book when not accompanied by the commentaries and explanations of the church; but a strong body of the clergy exists which looks upon the free circulation of the Bible among the masses of the people as something, nevertheless, which contains the elements of perils to the church. The present metropolitans of St. Petersburg and Kieff are of this opinion; so is M. Pobiedonosteff, the powerful lay member of the synod. On the other hand, Russian law confers on the synod the monopoly of printing the Scriptures in the Russian and Slavonic languages, and as it is a body in chronic want of money, its business managers recognize that the more Bibles and Testaments are put into circulation, the greater will be the income of the synod from their sale. The circulation of Bibles, New Testaments and portions within the empire, including Russian Poland, exceeds three quarters of a million copies, of which probably half a million are editions by the Holy Synod. It will be interesting to watch the conflict between those who maintain that the stability of the church is endangered by unrestricted Bible circulation, and those who favor it as a source of vast revenue.—N. Y. Independent.

"THE Christian patriot", says a religious journal, "will now pray and labor that our nation may have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ". How can this be? Did Jesus Christ die for the governments of the world? And can a government believe unto righteousness? Would a profession of belief expressed in the Constitution of the nation constitute faith in Christ? Such questions answer themselves. Let each individual person find peace by believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, and the nation will take care of itself. God wants men, not governments. He has a better government to set up than any to be found on the earth; but he has no men, only such as he can obtain from this earth by the power of his grace. Man is in the image of God, and is therefore very dear to him. A single being in his image, is dearer to God than all the governments in the world.

A CHANGE from one despotism to another, or from one set of officials to another, will not deliver society from the defects of human nature. Much less will that blessing come from the increase of despotism and the multiplication of officials. It has failed; it must inevitably fail. It violates a law of social development as immutable as the law of gravitation, one that punishes those that fail to heed it with equal certainty and severity. I refer to the law set forth by Mr. Spencer, that the more peaceful and industrious a nation becomes, the less is its need of the restraints of either custom or legislation. . . . No abridgment of liberty that philanthropists or statesmen may deem essential to the safety of modern civilization will permit them to realize their Utopian dream.* The millennium lies in another direction—in the direction of greater liberty.—Franklin Smith, in Popular Science Monthly.

POPULARITY is an assumed test of worth and wisdom. It is taken for granted that the man most talked about is the best guide, the party polling the most votes must represent timely ideas, and the daily with the most flaring headlines must be nearest the truth. But no reasoning could be more unsound, as all history proves. Somehow the righteous minority, the saving remnant, does not stay vanquished, but manages to snatch the prize of victory at the last moment. From the days of Gideon's three hundred and the famous Daniel's band, to these closing days of the nineteenth century, God has never forsaken the "faithful few," but has used them to accomplish His wonders in the earth. There is a positive advantage in being on the side of the minority, always provided that the minority is on the side of God and great ideals, for God is multitudinous above all the nations of the earth.—Union Signal.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS.

—THE Pacific Press Pub. Co., of this city, has for sale a chart, "The Law of God," 12x18 inches, which, aside from being a superior work of art, has the preamble of the Law, which is usually omitted on like charts. Price 25 cents.

—"By Land and Sea" is an intensely interesting book of travel, written in the author's inimitable style, from original notes, and profusely illustrated. For price consult advertisement, and send to Pacific Press Pub. Co., New York, for a copy.

—THE SENTINEL has patronized the Grand Trunk Railway system much in the past and believes it is but voicing the sentiment of hundreds of its readers when it says that for comfort, luxury and quick service it is not excelled.

—It may be interesting to know that over one thousand of our subscribers have taken advantage of our "Unprecedented Offer," by sending us $3 50, for which they receive in return a Bible that ordinarily retails for $6, and the SENTINEL for one year. Not a word of dissatisfaction has ever come from those to whom the Bible has been sent, while the words of praise are almost unnumbered.

—THERE are few people who are not troubled with some sort of stomach disorder. The most rational treatment of of dyspepsia we know of is found in the book, "The Stomach: Its Disorders and How to Cure Them," advertised on another page. The book is written by J. H. Kellogg, M. D., Superintendent of the great Battle Creek Sanitarium, and can be had from the Modern Medicine Company, Battle Creek. Price, $1.50.

—IN another column we place the announcement of the South Lancaster (Mass.) Academy, a preparatory school, established in 1882, and which has been in successful operation ever since. The high grade of instruction and discipline maintained, together with the healthful location and pleasant surroundings of the Academy, have won for it an enviable reputation as a place where parents can, with safety, place their children for their preparatory education. A personal interest is taken in every pupil in the school, and it is the aim of the management to equally develop the mental, moral and physical nature of those under its tutorage. The cost is nominal, being only $120 a year for tuition and board. Those interested can secure a catalogue and learn further particulars by addressing the Principal, Prof. J. H. Haughey, South Lancaster, Mass.

The Gospel Primer.

A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE - - - .25

Address this Office.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY.

Is most healthfully and beautifully located. Combines religious and industrious with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

Sacred History, Sacred Music, and the Holy Scriptures.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year. Vegetarian diet. For further particulars and calender, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

DON'T TAKE an agency until you find out what we have to offer. If already engaged or in business, send for our "Side-line Specialties." Begin, now where you are, and turn spare moments into cash. $75 per month. Particulars free. Write to-day. Address,

E. E. MILES, Manufacturer, 5136 State St., Chicago, Ill.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

AGENTS' OUTFIT FREE. No Capital
Weekly sales pay big money.
We make a high grade BICYCLE as low as $24.00. Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere on approval, direct from our factory.
ALPINE CYCLE CO., Dept. 68 Cincinnati, O.

WOMEN AS WELL AS MEN CAN MAKE MONEY.

I have an ice cream freezer that will freeze cream perfectly instantly. The cream is put into the freezer and comes out instantly smooth and perfectly frozen. This astonishes people and a crowd will gather to see the freezer in operation and they will all want to try the cream. You can sell cream as fast as it can be made. And sell freezers to many of them who would not buy an old style freezer. It is really a curiosity and you can sell from $5 to $8 worth of cream and six to twelve freezers every day. This makes a good profit these hard times and is a pleasant employment. W. H. Baird & Co., Dept 194, Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa., will send full particulars and information in regard to this new invention on application and will employ good salesmen on liberal terms.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. Its successful combination of a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Paraphrastic Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.50.

We propose to make it possible for each and everyone to be the possessor of

A First-Class High Grade Bible.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the
AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge. Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality,

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.	B. C. 445.	25 Rē'hūm, Hā-shāb'nah, Mā-a-sē-jah,
36 Behold, ^d we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:	^d Deut. 28. 48. Ezra 9. 9.	26 And Ā-hī'jah, Hā'nan, Ā'nan, 27 Māl'luch, Hā'rim, Bā'a-nah.
37 And ^e it yieldeth much increase	^e Deut. 28. 42. ^{at}	28 ¶ ^e And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lē'vites, the porters, the singers, the Nēth'i-nims, and all they that had separated themselves

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00

With this book reading is made easy. No more stumbling over the hard words. All proper names are divided into syllables, and the accent and diacritical marks render their accurate pronunciation a simple matter. With a little study of the Key to Pronunciation to be found in every copy of this Bible, the reader loses all fear of the long, hard names of Scripture, and pronounces them with ease.

WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.50

As is indicated by the name, this is a teachers' Bible. It contains fifteen pages of illustrations and diagrams, copious helps of the latest revision, Bible index, concordance, dictionary of Scripture proper names with their pronunciation and meaning, and many other excellent features.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT.

Wabash, Ind., Oct. 14, 1896.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: My Bible received this day, for which accept thanks. I am very well pleased. I think I have just what I need in the way of a Bible. It is not only a teacher's Bible, but also the very best for a student.

Yours truly,

T. M. MORRIS.

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 15, 1896.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: I received my Bible, and am very much pleased with it. It is a first-class Bible; just what it is claimed to be.

MRS. E. F. NOBLE.

Brattleboro, Vt. Nov. 22, 1896.
AM very much pleased with it.

MRS. E. C. MILLARD.

Graettinger, Iowa, Nov. 30, 1896.
We are all more than pleased with the Bible in every way. As a book it is thoroughly well made and elegant in all its parts. As a Bible the self-pronunciation is a new feature, and this is only one of its many excellencies. The type is a great delight to me.

MRS. S. M. OLESEN.

It is only by special arrangement with the publishers of this Bible that we are able to make this

UNPRECEDENTED OFFER.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.50 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SEVEN new names at the regular subscription price, $7.00.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

Address all orders to

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT,"—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, JULY 15, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 28.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

*The American Sentinel is published in the interests
of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.*

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

It is impossible to regulate conscience by law.

THE truly wise man is he who can discern the signs of his own times.

It requires a whole week for the proper observance of the fourth commandment.

No person can keep the Sabbath before being converted to God. And the converted individual will keep the Sabbath of his own volition.

THE correct standard of Sabbath-keeping—that which is acceptable to God—is infinitely above anything that can be defined in a human statute.

RIGHTEOUSNESS is no concern of the civil law. The Scripture says that an unrighteous person cannot perform righteousness; consequently, every law which is enacted to enforce righteousness is a square denial of the Word of God.

THE worship of God is a matter which concerns the conduct of an individual not alone on the Sabbath, but on every day of the week. Freedom of worship does not mean that a person should be free to do as he may choose in religion on one day of the week, and be obliged to do as some one else may choose on another day.

THE person who is not willing to make a sacrifice to keep the Sabbath, might as well not pretend to keep it at all. When the Lord comes to gather his saints, he will call for "those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Ps. 50:5. People who want legislation to take all the sacrifice out of keeping the Sabbath, need not expect to get any benefit out of their keeping of it.

A RELIGION which will combine with civil government must be a religion which will fight, and fight with carnal weapons; for every civil government keeps a standing army for the purpose of fighting. Hence a union of religion with the State means the exaltation of an anti-christian religion.

"To What End?"

IN a study of "history in the light of the ideals furnished by Greek literature," "the most eminent Greek scholar in Germany" lately remarked that "The same forces which have worked in Greece and Rome, are at work in our century: toward what end we may not know —God knows."

Such a statement by such an eminent scholar, is worthy of notice. Being so well versed in the history of Greece and Rome, he is well qualified to discern whether the same forces are now at work in society and nations.
And when he declares that the same forces are at work to-day, the word comes with an authority that demands attention.

That the statement is true, and with an emphasis, is perfectly plain to every one who has any knowledge of the times of Greece and Rome. And to any one who has no knowledge of those times the truth of the statement will become perfectly plain, upon only a meagre reading of the history of those times, and but slight attention to the course of affairs in our own day.

But having it so plain to his mind that the same forces which have worked in Greece and Rome, are at work in our century; why should he say that to what end these forces are now working "we may not know"?

Why may we not know? Do we not know to what end these forces worked in Greece and Rome? There is no room for any possible question, that irretrievable and awful ruin was the only end to which these forces worked in Greece and Rome.

That being beyond all question, and it being also perfectly true that the same forces are now at work in society and nations, how then can there be any possible question that to this same end and no other, these same forces are now working?

Human nature is the same now that it was in the former days: the same in Europe and America to-day that it was in Greece and Rome in ancient days. Human nature being the same, and the forces working being the same, the end can be nothing else than the same that it was before. The material being the same upon which the same forces act, only at different dates, the like causes must inevitably produce like results.

In view of the plain and well-known facts of the history that records the ruin of Greece and Rome as the clear result of the same forces that are at work in the nations to-day, surely it is a willful shutting of the eyes to palpable truth to say that we may not know to what end those forces are working to-day. It will not pay to shut the eyes, even to unwelcome truth, for the dubious honor of being reckoned "an optimist." No, no; let all open wide the eyes to the truth as it may be, and prepare to meet that which it portends, rather than for a moment to gloze it, and thus we and our fellow-men be unprepared for calamities which, though unwelcome, the truth shows must inevitably come.

However, while the professor thinks that we may not know to what end these forces are working, he says that "God knows." Very good. But shall it be said that God knows that which involves all the interests of whole nations of people, and yet will not let any of those people know?! Shall it be said, and even though said shall it be believed, that "God hath forsaken the earth"? Has he abandoned the nations to blind fate? No: with absolute certainty every person may say, No.

This is certain by the indisputable fact that when these forces were working in Greece and Rome, God, knowing, did tell to all the people precisely to what end those forces were working. He did this then. And with him "there is no variableness neither shadow of turning": he is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." Therefore, being ever the same, and having told Greece and Rome to what end the forces in them were working, it is certain that he has told and will continue to tell the nations to-day what the end is to which these same forces are now working.

In ancient time God did by the scriptures of his prophets distinctly, and more than once, name the nation and kingdom of Greece. By the prophet Daniel, "in the third year of Cyrus," the Lord told how that the fourth king of Persia from Cyrus should stir up all his dominion "against the realm of Grecia."

He then also told how that the power of Grecia through her "first king" should overthrow and break in pieces the kingdom of Persia. And then how the dominion of Grecia would be "divided toward the four winds of heaven."

He told also that in the latter times of these divisions "when the transgressors are come to the full," another nation "of fierce countenance and understanding dark sentences should stand up," and "break in pieces all kingdoms;" and how that it itself, in turn, should be broken in pieces.

Such was the end to which worked the forces that were in Greece and Rome. God knew it, and told it to Greece and Rome. Such also is the end to which these same forces are now working; and God knows it, and also in the scriptures of the prophets tells it to the nations to day.

Thus doubly it will not do to say "We may not know" what is the end to which these forces are working in our century. It will not do, because the lesson of the history is plain enough to cause any one to know; and it will not do, because the Lord has told it as certainly to the people to-day as he did to those anciently. To hold that "we may not know," is only to shut the eyes both to the plain lessons of the history and the plain instruction of the revelation of God given for the express purpose that we may certainly know.

It is very likely that the most eminent scholars of Greece in the days of Alexander, observed that "The same forces which have worked in Babylon and Persia are at work also in our day, but to what end we may not know—God knows." Yet they might have known, not only by the plain lessons of the history, but from the revelation of God.

It is likely also that the most eminent scholars of Rome in the days of Theodosius and the Valentinians, observed that "The same forces which have worked in Persia and Greece are at work also in our century; to what end we may not know—God knows."

Yet they ought to have known full well—both from all the history itself, and from the clear statements of the revelation of God. To say that they might not know, was but to shut their eyes to both sources of all-sufficient knowledge on the subject.

Truly all through the history of Assyria, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome, God did know to what end those forces were working, and he told all those nations just what that end was: and it was ruin only. He had this information written out for their instruction. But when, against this specific instruction, and ignoring the palpable lessons of the history, clear to every observer, the people of those times insisted that we may not know, and the ruin came upon them unawares and found them unprepared, that was their fault—their supreme, unmitigated fault.

It is true that the same forces which worked in Greece and Rome are at work in our century. And to what end we may know, both because of the clear lessons of the history, and because God knows. These forces are working to the same end now that they worked before. God knew it before and told those nations. God knows it now, and has told, and will continue to tell, these nations. That end is ruin. If eminent scholars and other people will insist that we may not know, that is certainly their fault; for the information is abundant, both out of the Bible and in the Bible.

We sincerely admire and honor eminent scholarship. But we must be allowed to remark that it is not the most eminent mark of the most eminent scholarship to ignore or evade the plainest lessons in both history and Revelation, on a subject which most eminently and imminently concerns all the greatest nations of the century.

The same forces which have worked in Greece and Rome are at work in our century, and to what end we may certainly know. We may know it both because the lessons of the history are so plain that none need to mistake; and because God knows, and he has told.

THE trouble with a great many churches, spiritually, was unwittingly stated the other day in a funeral discourse, when the minister said: "Fourteen years ago to-day, this corpse joined this church." When accessions of that nature have been going on for some time, it is but natural that the church should seek to be galvanized into a semblance of life by the power of the State.

What the Lord Wants.

"I WANT to give my appetite to the Lord," said a victim of intemperance recently, who had come forward for prayers at the close of the service in one of the missions of New York City. He thought that if the Lord would take his appetite for strong drink, and give him a simple, unperturbed appetite, it would be just what he needed.

"Why, my dear man," came the reply from one better instructed in divine truth, "the Lord doesn't want your appetite; he wants you."

This reply states a vital truth of the Christian religion. The Lord wants the individual himself; and when an individual gives himself to God, the Lord takes along with the individual everything bad there is about him; not because the Lord wants these things in themselves or has any possible use for them, but because He must take them in order to make the individual what He wants him to be.

The same truth bears with equal emphasis upon the question of giving the Government over to the Lord. The Government is very bad, say a large class of the church people to-day; it is godless, corrupt, perverted from the principles of right, and we must turn it over to the Lord, and have Him make it what it ought to be.

When we have a government of God here, everything will be all right.

Subtle delusion! The Lord doesn't want the Government. He wants the individuals who are carrying on the Government. By the provisions of his grace he is reaching after each one of these to-day; and if they would but give themselves to him, the problem of government would disappear. All God wants is a chance to make each individual as good as it is in his divine power to make him. Then the problem of good government will take care of itself. Under such conditions there could not possibly be anything but good government.

First, last, and always, the Lord wants the individual; and the idea that the Lord is going to save men by reforming the Government is a subtle scheme of the arch-enemy designed to cheat men out of the salvation of their souls.

Politics and Prosperity.

THE non-appearance of that prosperity which was promised by the political party now in power is emphasized just now by the strike of some hundreds of thousands of miners in the middle States. Together they constitute a host which far outnumbers the combined United States army and States' militia; and should they become turbulent, very serious consequences would certainly ensue. It is hoped that the controversy may be settled by arbitration, the miners themselves being so confident of the justice of their cause that they have already expressed their approval of this method of settlement.

At this rate of prosperity, the question bids fair to arise whether the United States does not need a large standing army like those of Europe; not to ward off an invasion from without or to conquer some neighboring country, but to keep the peace within her own borders. While it is no doubt true, as has been often asserted, that the vast majority of the American people are lovers of peace and order, it must be admitted that a point is reached under the pressure of destitution where even the most peacefully inclined men will resort to violent measures for the relief of their suffering families. That the destitution of the striking miners is appalling, is admitted by all observers; and it is certainly no less true that the miners represent but a small part of the number whom the prevailing industrial conditions are driving to the point of desperation. Let the forces of discontent and despair be once called into action under one leadership and with a common purpose in view, and nothing short of the repressive power of a great standing army would suffice to prevent the horrors of revolution.

The doctrine that national prosperity depends upon the kind of politics by which the country is dominated, is a fallacy. The causes of prosperity and of "hard times" lie deeper down than the agitated surface of politics. Not the organizations, but the people themselves, as such, are the arbiters of national prosperity. As it lies with each individual to determine, by the exercise of individual virtues, the degree of his own prosperity in this life, so it lies with the people as a whole to determine their prosperity as a united body. But that which greatly darkens the outlook for prosperity is the fact that individualism as a guiding principle of life is fast losing its hold upon the minds of the people. They are being taught to depend not upon their own individual virtues, but upon the power of organizations, in which their own individuality must be submerged and lost. This can never bring permanent prosperity, for it is contrary to nature and to the institutions and purposes of the Creator.

In the present condition of things, such a régime seems an absolute necessity, it is true. And it seems such from the popular point of view. What can one individual do against a thousand? But it is the purpose of God in the gospel to answer just this question, and to show to people that the individuality He has given to each need not be sacrificed to opposing numbers. He will join the individual with Himself, so that, in this alliance, it is impossible he should ever be outnumbered. "One shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight."

While the people are seeking to vote prosperity into existence by turning "the rascals" who "have not fulfilled their pledges" out of office, let it be remembered that the service of God—the exercise of those virtues which are conserved by the power of God in the individual life, through faith in Jesus Christ—assures to each person the enjoyment of a prosperity sufficient for every temporal need, and a certainty of success with respect to that which is the true purpose of existence amid the vicissitudes and inequalities of this life.

Conscience and "Patriotism."

THE incongruity of trying to follow the dictates of conscience and of what is commonly termed "patriotism," at one and the same time, is illustrated by the following, which was published recently in a New York City daily:—

"Lamar Fontaine, of Mississippi, killed sixty men in sixty minutes during the war. He bears a written certificate to this effect from Gen. Robert E. Lee. Now Mr. Fontaine does not care to be called colonel.

"It was in the battle of Waterloo Bridge, just below Warrenton, Va., in August, 1862, and immediately before the second battle of Manassas, that General Lee witnessed Fontaine's feat of killing 'sixty Yankees in sixty minutes.'

"Stonewall Jackson, under whom Fontaine served, was flanking Pope. The Confederate sharpshooters had possession of a long frame building, and were pouring death into Pope's ranks, when Lee rode up.

"The general had heard of Fontaine's wonderful ability as a marksman, and paid him a visit. A Federal battery was then directed on the sharpshooters.

" 'Train your glass on No. 1, at gun No. 1,' Fontaine said to General Lee, 'and you will see him jump up in the air in a minute and another man will have to take his place.'

"Then he went on and killed sixty men, one after another, each in about a minute, until Lee told him to stop.

" 'Doesn't your conscience ever hurt you when you do work of this kind?' inquired Lee.

" 'Why, general,' replied Fontaine, 'when I enlisted in the army it was with the understanding that I was to kill as many of the enemy as I could. If I had any conscientious scruples against it I would quit the army. Don't you expect us to kill?' "

And that is what every man who enters the army enlists to do. He does not enlist to follow the dictates of conscience, but the dictates of his superior officer, which are given with a view of bringing him to the highest point of efficiency as a fighter; for the one purpose of an army is to fight. And the best fighter is the one who can kill the greatest number of the enemy. An army composed of such men as Fontaine would be almost invincible.

But the "soldier of the cross" must follow always the dictates of conscience, enlightened by the Word of God. His pattern must be, not some man of military renown, but the Prince of Peace. His life must make manifest not feats of arms seen in the slaughter of his fellows, but "the meekness and gentleness of Christ."

War a Natural Condition.

STRIFE is an exhibition of human nature; and there seems to be no way in which human nature manifests itself more readily. The mere trifling is sufficient to set the elements of contention in motion, regardless of the possible results. How this has been illustrated in recent history is mentioned in a London (Eng.) daily of recent date, as follows:—

"Cicero said that the natural state of man is war. Certainly, whether savage or civilized he lets very few opportunities pass, as is proved by the trifles which have produced many terrible conflicts between nations. The Franco-German war, in which the loss of life was over 100,000, and the loss of money very nearly £1,000,000,000, resulted from a little bit of Royal match-making. Spain had a marriageable princess, and the German House of Hohenzollern a marriageable prince. Both were, apparently, anxious to join fortunes, but France objected. The King of Prussia generously agreed not to press the matter, but France, to make sure that a German should never rule the country on her south-western frontier, insisted on getting a promise that the proposal of marriage should not be renewed at any future time. Naturally Prussia declined to humiliate itself, and, unfortunately for herself, France thereupon declared war.

"Perhaps our influence at Constantinople is of great importance, though some argue that it is of very little moment. Either way, it has cost as heavily, both in lives and money. That war of the Crimea, by the way, began in an absurdly trifling event. The cupola of the church of the Holy Sepulcher was out of repair. The Greek monks claimed the right of putting it in order. The Roman Catholic monks disputed their right. Russia supported one party, France the other. The monks came to blows; the diplomatists lost their heads. And then followed the war, with its frightful consequences.

"England's two wars with China have had admirable results, but the causes of them were really very trifling. The first one, in 1840, was about whether John Chinaman should be permitted to smoke Indian opium or not; and the second, that of 1856, resulted from the seizure of a villainous pirate by an armed Chinese vessel. The pirate was Chinese, and he sailed in a Chinese ship, but he cunningly hoisted the Union Jack. Under these circumstances, the pirate's capture was held to be an insult to England, and China's refusal to apologize led to hostilities.

"We all know that the Red Indians fought for the love of the thing, but we must have been pretty fond of it ourselves in days gone by, for we fought France 272 times between 1110 and 1815, and the cause in most instances was nothing more than revenge."

Strife is as foreign to the divine nature, as it is natural to human nature. The divine nature is the nature of the Prince of Peace, and it is the mission of the gospel to eradicate human nature from the heart and substitute for it the divine nature, which God gave to man at creation. In this, not in arbitration or peace treaties, lies the guaranty of permanent peace.

How the Youth View It; or, a Chapter in Real Life.

BY J. F. BALLENGER.

GEORGE THOMPSON—Hello, Charlie! how are you getting along in mathematics?

CHARLIE BROWN—All right; I have got to simple proportion,—what father calls the single rule of three.

George—Haven't got to the single rule of seven yet, have you?

Charlie—No; what do you mean? There is no such rule in my book.

George—You are not up with the times. If you had been over to the church last night and heard Elder Twist preach on the seventh-first-day-Sabbath, you would have learned something of the single rule of seven.

Charlie—What does the single rule of seven have to do with the Sabbath? What joke are you trying to play on me now? Be sober now, George, and tell me what you mean. You are always getting off some of your nonsense.

George—No; I am not. Elder Twist said last night in his sermon that the first day was the seventh day, and the seventh day was the first day; and that any day was the seventh day, and that the first day was any day; and that the Sunday law ought to be enforced to compel everybody to keep the first day.

Charlie—O, nonsense, George, you must have misunderstood him. A law like that would compel us to keep every day, and how could we do that? You are too full of your mischief, George, to listen to a sermon long enough to understand what the minister is saying.

George—Well, say; there comes Anna Hughes, our Sunday-school teacher; she was there, let us ask her.

Charlie—I will, when she comes up.

Charlie—Good morning, teacher; if you are not in a hurry, I would like to ask you a question.

Miss Hughes—Certainly; if I can assist you in any way I will be glad to do so. What is your question?

Charlie—George Thompson says that Elder Twist stated in his sermon last evening that the first day was the seventh day, and that the seventh day was the first day, and that any day was Sunday; and that we should have a law to compel everybody to keep Sunday. You were there, did you hear him say anything of the kind?

Miss Hughes (laughing)—I guess that George did not pay very good attention to what the minister was saying. We should be very careful when we try to repeat what our pastor says. I think Brother Twist is an excellent good man, and a very deep and profound reasoner, and sometimes it requires very careful attention to understand him.

George—Excuse me, Miss Hughes; did not the elder say we could call Monday the first day, and that would make Sunday the seventh day. Or, if we call Sunday the first that would make Saturday the seventh; or we could call any day the first day, and thus make any other day the seventh day of the week?

Miss Hughes—In that last word is where you misunderstood Brother Twist. He did not say that you could begin to count at any day and make any other day the first day of the week. He did not mean that.

George—Then what did he mean?

Miss Hughes—He did not mean that the Sabbath day in the fourth commandment was the seventh day of the week, but only a seventh part of time or one day in seven, and that you could commence to count where you choose.

George—Then the Bible does not recognize such a period as a week, does it?

Miss Hughes—O yes; the week is mentioned several times in the Scriptures. I think it is some place in Matthew we read that "In the end of the Sabbath as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." And again, I think it is either in Luke or John that it speaks concerning the holy women, that "They returned and prepared spices and ointments and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment," and then in the end of the Sabbath early the first day of the week they came to the sepulchre bringing the spices they had prepared, etc. And either in Acts or one of the Epistles, I am not sure which, Paul says, "Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, when the people came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them till midnight," etc. And in several other places the week is mentioned.

George—In these texts you quoted, which day is referred to as the first day of the week?

Miss Hughes—Our Sunday, of course.

George—Then our Sunday is the first day of the week, is it not?

Miss Hughes—Why, certainly it is.

George—If those women you speak of kept the day just before the first day of the week, and the first day of the week is our Sunday, then which day did they keep?

Miss Hughes—Why, our Saturday, I suppose.

George—Then our Saturday is the seventh day of the week, is it not?

Miss Hughes—Yes; according to our count of the days of the week.

George—Then is not our Saturday the seventh day of the week, or the Sabbath according to the fourth commandment?

Miss Hughes—It must be if we abide by the present numbering of the days of the week.

George—You said, Miss Hughes, that the day Christ rose from the dead and the day the disciples met to break bread was the first day of the week, and that it answered to our Sunday. Then how could Elder Twist say that we could call Monday the first day of the week and Sunday the seventh, or that we could begin with any day and call it the first day of the week?

Miss Hughes—I presume that Miss Lovejoy is waiting for me, as we are going to Pleasant Lake to attend the picnic to-day; so I will have to leave you and Charlie to discuss the subject between yourselves until some day when I can have more time, and perhaps I can give you further information on the subject.

Charlie—I tell you, George, you got our teacher cornered, and I more than half believe that you are right.

George—I know that I am right. You think, Charlie, that I am a wild boy, and so I am; but I am not without feeling. When I go to meeting and hear the preacher talk about the love of God and how Christ came to die to save us from sin and give us the power to keep his Father's commandments, I am interested. But when I go and hear the minister mix up things as Elder Twist did last night, and tell the people that they ought to keep the first day of the week in honor of the resurrection, and that any day may be the first day of the week, and then want to enforce the law compelling everybody to keep Sunday, I don't take any stock in such preaching.

Charlie—But look here, George, if we had no Sunday law most of the people would stay at home and work or play or do something else. I would rather go fishing on Sunday myself, or play ball than go to meeting, and I would if it was not for the Sunday law.

George—Well, then, what good does the law do you? It does not take the desire out of your heart; and just as long as that is there you might as well go. And what good does the meeting do you while you are all the time wanting to go fishing or play ball? If there is not power enough in the preaching to take the desire out of the heart, you will never be any better by going, though you should go every Sunday as long as you live.

Charlie—That is all true. But don't you think, George, that we ought to go to meeting and Sabbath-school?

George—Yes, indeed I do, Charlie; I believe everybody ought to attend religious services. If no one went to church we would soon all be heathen. But what good does it do to compel us to go when we don't want to go? If the preachers would preach plain so that I could understand them and not put such queer interpretations upon the Scriptures and mix things up so, I would like to go to church, and I am sure I would be interested.

London, Ont.

“THE outrage at West Point is only one of the many injustices we have to suffer,” exclaims the California organ of the papal church—the Monitor—in its issue of June 12. A church that is always complaining of injustice and railing against its enemies, as is the habit of the Monitor, thereby most conclusively proves that its character is non-Christian. Jesus Christ never did such things; he manifested another spirit entirely.

The Protestant Pilgrimage to Rome.

THE Protestant world is on a pilgrimage to Rome,—not a pilgrimage by railway and steamship, but one no less real; though with this difference from the ordinary pilgrimage, that it contemplates no return voyage to the place whence it started. It is a spiritual pilgrimage; and the waymarks of the journey are to be noted in the changed aspects in which the travellers view the Word of the Lord. Upon this point we give three quotations from Francis de Pressensé, a well-known member of the Protestant society of France, and a writer for several Paris journals:—

“In old times a Protestant would take his Bible, and, reading it, or simply turning over its leaves, every word shone before his eyes as a divine Word. To-day, when he opens the sacred Book, he must begin by asking himself: “This part, is it really authentic? Is that Word so? Was it said by our Lord himself, or is it merely the conception of John that I read? Is it from an eye-witness, or is it not more likely a statement to be looked on as a compromise opinion between Hebrews and Christians of that remote period?”

Of the work of modern theology of which this “higher criticism” forms a part, M. de Pressensé says:—

“Modern Theology gives us a Bible of which the disintegrated parts would require, indeed, to be printed in various colors—according to the various times and different writers—and a Bible that savants alone, after innumerable efforts, will be able to read with discernment.”

“Modern theology gives us a Christ impalpable, in-tangible, something like a crepuscular phantom, with neither divinity nor humanity, without historical reality in the past, without heavenly divinity in the present."

And all this is only a repetition, with some variation in form, of what was done in the first centuries by the so-called Christian church, and which led to the establishment of the papacy. In other words, it is but traveling over again the road by which the early Christian church went from Zion to Rome, where she became established upon the throne of the Cæsars. Then, as now, the first step was taken in an attack upon the Word of God,—not openly, but by the setting up of a system of mystical interpretations, by which the Word was robbed of its meaning, and consequently of its life giving power. This opened the way for the doctrine that the common people could not understand the Word anyway, but must depend upon the pronouncements of the church prelates, and finally of the bishop of Rome,—the pope. In this day "higher criticism" is doing the same thing, and modern theology is leading the seeker after truth to look upon the Word as a barren field for his own personal exploration, and to depend more and more upon the opinions and traditions of men.

Religion in the Public Schools of Ontario.

THE following from a resident of Kenmore, Ont., in the Canadian Baptist, of May 27, tells how the principle of religion in the public schools works in a district where the majority of the people are Roman Catholics:—

"In the eastern counties of this province, in districts where Protestant ratepayers are in the minority, the so-called public schools are practically Romish. The teachers in such cases are almost always Roman Catholic, which in itself, though not technically an injustice, is nevertheless an evil, for the door is thus thrown open to priestly influence and control. Think of a string of popish 'saints' days' and 'holy days' being observed as public school holidays in the Province of Ontario! Protestant pupils bringing home the tale that 'to-morrow is Saint so-and-so's day, or the feast of the holy something-or-other, and there will be no school.' Yet such is the invariable custom in some sections. And this is but a small thing compared with other abominations which they do. Prize books which inculcate the Romish religion are purchased from the general school funds and awarded to Protestant and Catholic children alike. Here are a few sample sentences from a book received in this way by a Protestant child a few months ago:—

"The Immaculate Virgin was by her incomparable holiness, the masterpiece of her divine Creator. She it was who was to crush the serpent's head and save us from the curse pronounced on the first woman by bringing forth into the world the God-Saviour. She was that root of Jesse who was to produce the heavenly flower."

"Jesus Christ offered at the last supper and offers to God every day by his ministers, the sacrifice of sacrifices, that is to say, his body and blood under the appearances of bread and wine. O sublime mystery of faith! O abyss of power and mercy! Jesus speaks—and that which was but a moment before bread and wine is changed immediately into his body and blood. Then by an act of his sovereign will he gave to the apostles and to all their successors in the priesthood the power to renew upon the altar, until the end of time, the ineffable wonder he had accomplished."

"'Feed my sheep;' it was in these memorable words that Jesus Christ invested St. Peter and the popes who succeeded him with the supreme power over the pastors as well as the people—a power which he had promised a year before when he said, 'Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church.'"

All this only shows the injustice that is inherent in the principle of bringing religious instruction into the public schools. It matters not what religion it is that might be taught. The feelings and sentiments of the dissenting tax-payers would find expression in protests similar to the above. The only way to avoid injustice, discord, and religious controversy is to leave the teaching of religion to the Church, the home, and those schools whose support is wholly voluntary.

THE Ohio law prohibiting Sunday baseball has been pronounced unconstitutional by Judge Ong, of the Court of Common Pleas. The case was that of the State against the Cleveland baseball club, and was brought before him on appeal from the decision of the State Supreme Court, by which the law was upheld. The basis of Judge Ong's decision is that baseball is not a crime on any week day, and that under the constitution all statutes make Sunday merely a day of rest and not of religious observance. The county will, it is said, appeal the case to a higher court.

Lord Salisbury on Arbitration.

IN a speech before the House of Lords, July 8, the English premier referred to arbitration as a method of settling international disputes, and after expressing himself as in sympathy with the principle, mentioned the Delagoa Bay Railway dispute as an illustration. With regard to the prospect of an award by the arbitrators, he said, he could only say he was informed that it would speedily be given; and as that information had been regularly supplied to him for several years, the only consolation for them was that they were all supporting the sound principle of arbitration. The laughter which followed from the peers evinced their sympathy with Lord Salisbury's view of arbitration as a thing of practical value.

"STAND fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" is the admonition that comes to us from the Apostle Paul. Christ hath made us all free, but there are very many who do not know that they have been set at liberty, and refuse to accept their freedom. They are letting slip the greatest blessing it is possible for them to realize. Is it so with you?

Heavenly Citizenship.*

By the late A. J. Gordon, D. D.

A MAN'S dwelling in one country, and holding citizenship in another and far remote country, is not an unknown circumstance. In such a case, we may have the singular anomaly of one being most a stranger in the land in which he is present, and most at home in the land from which he is absent. Our blessed Lord was the first perfectly to realize this idea respecting the heavenly country. For he speaks of himself as "He that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man who is in heaven." So truly a citizen of the other world was he, that even while walking and talking with men he regarded himself as there, not here. And this saying of his occurs in that discourse where, with an emphatic "verily, verily," he declares that "except a man be born [margin] from above he cannot see the kingdom of God."

Here is the key to the whole mystery. As the only begotten of the Father, Christ's native country was above; and during all the days of his flesh he neither relinquished his heavenly citizenship nor acquired an earthly residence. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people," is a significant note in the prophecy of his birth. And four times in the Gospels is our Lord's advent to earth spoken of as a visit. But it was a visit which never for a moment looked toward a permanent abiding. At his birth he was laid in a borrowed manger, because there was no room for him in the inn; at his burial he was laid in a borrowed tomb, because he owned no foot of earth; and between the cradle and the grave was a sojourn in which "the Son of man had not where to lay his head." The mountain top whither he constantly withdrew to commune with his Father, was the nearest to his home. And hence there is a strange, pathetic meaning in that saying, "And every man went unto his own house; Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives."

Now, as it was with the Lord, so it is to be with his disciples. "For our citizenship is in heaven," says the apostle. Herein is the saying of Lady Powercourt true: "The Christian is not one who looks up from earth to heaven, but one who looks down from heaven to earth." A celestial nativity implies a celestial residence; and with a certain divine condescension may the Christian contemplate the sordid, self-seeking children of this present evil age and say, with his Lord: "Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world."

Let us be admonished, however, that to say this truly and to live it really, may subject us to the experience indicated by the apostle: "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." There is a certain quaint beauty in the apology which an old reformer made for the hard treatment which he and his friends received from the men of this world. "Why, brethren," he would say, "they do not understand court manners or the etiquette of heaven, never having been in that country from whence we come; therefore it is that our ways seem strange to them." Would that in the Christians of to-day celestial traits were so conspicuous as to occasion like remark! Perhaps it is because there are so few high saints in the Church that there are so many low sinners outside the Church, since the ungodly can never be powerfully lifted up except by a church that reaches down from an exalted spiritual plane.

What means that lofty address of the apostle, "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling"? (Heb. 3:1.) The reference is not merely to our final destiny as those who are to be called up to heaven, but to our present service as those who have come down from heaven: sons of God rejoicing in a celestial birth, bringing the air and manners of glory into a world that knows not God. As such we are exhorted to "consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus;" an apostle being one who comes forth from God, and an high priest one who goes in unto God. And Christ Jesus not only fulfils both these offices in himself, as he says, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again I leave the world, and go to the Father," but he makes us partakers with him of the same heavenly calling, sending us into the world, as the Father has sent him, and permitting us "to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," as he has entered in by his own blood.

Confessing that our citizenship is in heaven, it should be easily determined what our conduct and bearing towards the world must be. One is expected to pay taxes and make investments where he holds residence. Therefore all calls to bountiful giving and all demands for rigid self-denial are to be esteemed as reasonable assessments, not as gratuities. Christianity is no paradox, in which believers are required to do peculiar things for the sake of being peculiar, and to exhibit startling contradictions for the sake of arousing the contradiction of sinners against themselves. When we are called to lay up treasures in heaven, it is because that is our country; when we are enjoined not to love the world, neither the things that are in the world, it is because this is not our country.

THE LATE DR. A. J. GORDON.

*"Religious Liberty Library," No. 47.

Two practical errors spring from an earthly theology; viz., that the world is the Christian's home, and the grave the Christian's hope. On the contrary, one possessed of a clear advent faith would choose for himself such an epitaph as that which Dean Alford composed for his tomb: "The inn of a traveler on his way to Jerusalem." Ah, yes, that is it! A pilgrim's portion, food and raiment and contentment therewith; the mansion which fortune has provided, or the cabin which penury has reared, each alike counted a hospice where one lodges as "a pilgrim and stranger in the earth;" and the grave a narrow inn whose windows look towards the sunrising, where the sojourner sleeps till break of day,—this, without question, is the ideal of the Christian life as outlined in the Gospel.

An impracticable ideal, it will be said. But it was not so in the beginning. To say nothing of apostolic Christianity, let us ask what it was that gave the Christianity of the first two centuries such extraordinary vigor in its conflict with heathenism. An eminent writer, Gerhard Uhlhorn, has shown with a graphic hand that it was just this quality of absolute unworldliness which constituted the secret of its power. The men who conquered the Roman Empire for Christ bore the aspect of invaders from another world, who absolutely refused to be naturalized to this world. Their conduct filled their heathen neighbors with the strangest perplexity; they were so careless of life, so careful of conscience, so prodigal of their own blood, so confident of the overcoming power of the blood of the Lamb, so unsubdued to the customs of the country in which they sojourned, so mindful of the manners of "that country from whence they came out."

The help of the world, the patronage of its rulers, the loan of its resources, the use of its methods, they utterly refused, lest by employing these they might compromise their King. An invading army maintained from an invisible base, and placing more confidence in the leadership of an unseen Commander than in all imperial help that might be proffered,—this was what so bewildered and angered the heathen, who often desired to make friends with the Christians without abandoning their own gods. But there can be no reasonable doubt that that age in which the Church was most completely separated from the world was the age in which Christianity was the most victorious in the world.

It was also the era of undimmed hope of the Lord's imminent return from glory, so that it illustrated and enforced both clauses of the great text: "For our citizenship [R. V.] is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus." (Phil. 3:20.)

Our Lord set forth his departure from the world under the parable of "a certain nobleman who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." (Luke 19:12.) As a Roman, living in Judea, on appointment to the governorship of that province, would go to Rome to be invested with office, and then return to rule, so Christ has gone to heaven to be invested with the kingship of this world, and now he and his watchful servants are eagerly waiting for the same thing; he, sitting at God's right hand "expecting till his enemies be made his footstool," and they expecting till he shall return to reign over the earth. Of the kingdom, the King and his kinsmen, the same avowal of unearthly origin is made by Christ: "My kingdom is not of this world, even as I am not of this world;" "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world."

The kingdom is the "kingdom of God," the "kingdom of heaven;" its constituency are those who are "begotten of God," and "born from above." True, this kingdom is now in the world in its rudiments and principles, in its citizens and representatives: those who, like their Lord, have been sent hither to accomplish the work of gathering out a people for his name.

But, lest we fall into fatal error, let us not imagine that we are now reigning with Christ on the earth, or that the kingdom of God has been set up in the world. The church's earthly career during the present age is the exact fac-simile of her Lord's—a career of exile rather than of exaltation; of rejection rather than rule; of cross-bearing rather than of scepter bearing. Grasping at earthly sovereignty for the Church while the Sovereign himself is still absent has proved, as we shall show hereafter, the most fruitful root of apostasy. It may be said that this picture of the Church, as despised and rejected in the world, suffering, outcast, and in exile, does not correspond to the facts. Not to the facts of our own generation, we admit, wherein the world is on such excellent terms with Christians. But that it represents the character of the dispensation as a whole cannot be questioned, when we recall the Dark Ages and martyr ages of the Christian era; the prisons, and racks, and dungeons, and stakes, which stretch on through so large a portion of this age. And the pictures of prophecy are composite pictures, gathering up the main features of the entire dispensation and presenting them in one. Viewed thus, prediction and history perfectly accord.

"The kingdom is now here in mystery, and to be here hereafter in manifestation," one has tersely put it. And to this the predicted destiny of believers corresponds. "Your life is hid with Christ in God; when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory" (Col. 3:4). "Sons of God, therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not" (1 John 3:1).

"The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God" (Rom. 8:19). "If we suffer, we shall reign with him" (2 Tim. 2:12). Obscurity, rejection, exile, and trial in the world now; manifestation, vindication, enthronement, when the King comes, —this is the foretold calling of the children of the kingdom.

The unprecedented exemption of the church from persecution, and the extraordinary triumphs of the gospel which have characterized this nineteenth century, may tend to seduce us into the notion that the kingdom has already come, though the nobleman who had gone into a far country has not yet returned. That we may think truly on this subject, let us hear our Lord's voice, saying: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke 12:32).

In spite of widespread conquests of the gospel the church is still "a little flock," amid the vast populations of Pagans, Mohammedans, Infidels, and Apostates. This flock in every age has been branded with opprobrium, and torn by persecution, and beaten by hireling shepherds, and the end is not yet; for, as good Samuel Rutherford says, "So long as any portion of Christ's mystical body is out of heaven, Satan will strike at it." However favored in our times, this flock is not the kingdom; but it has the promise of the kingdom, in which rejection shall give place to rule, and crucifixion to coronation. When? "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (1 Peter 5:4). What temporary respite from persecution we may enjoy, so that for the time it may be said as of old, "Then had the churches rest," no permanent peace is guaranteed until the Lord's return. "And to you who are troubled, rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven" (2 Thess. 1:7).

Persecution in Moncton, N. B.

Moncton, N. B., July 8, 1897.

EDITOR AMERICAN SENTINEL: Bro. Andrew Turner was to-day brought before Justice Grant, of this city, for violation of the Sunday law. The complaint was laid by one Smith H. Brown, who runs a milk wagon on every day of the week.

The complaint was for doing servile labor on the "Lord's day, commonly called Sunday."

The complainant did not appear, and the magistrate dismissed the case, taxing the costs of the court upon Mr. Brown, and ordering that his goods and chattels be seized to pay the costs.

It was very evident that had any one appeared against Brother Turner, he would have had to suffer the full penalty of the law, as the magistrate stated emphatically that men may keep any, or as many days as they wish, but the law says that they must keep Sunday. He also declared that "it was fitting that one day in seven should be set apart by the law of the land as a universal Sabbath."

The neighbors and friends of Brother Turner were present and testified in a marked manner to the high esteem in which he is held by all who know him. It should be a source of joy to him, that the Lord has chosen him to bring the light of the message of Rev. 14:9-12 before magistrates in this place.

D. G. SCOTT.

THE SENTINEL will have an offer to make next week that will interest every reader of the paper. Look for it.

Religion and the State in Japan.

BY JOHN A. BRUNSON.

In order to reach just and accurate conclusions in reference to the relation existing between religion and the State in Japan, it will be necessary to take a brief survey of the prevailing religious systems of the country.

The religious beliefs of the Japanese people may be divided into two classes—Shinto and Buddhist. It is not easy to define clearly either of these systems of religious belief, or the relation that they sustain to each other; for many of the Japanese exhibit a spirit of tolerance in matters theological that amounts to indifference, worshiping indiscriminately at either Shinto or Buddhist shrines. As a matter of fact, the two religions are so thoroughly interfused in practice that the number of pure Shintoists or pure Buddhists is exceedingly small. This rather remarkable and somewhat anomalous condition of things may be explained by the fact that Buddhism, after its introduction into Japan in the sixth century generously received into its pantheon all the native Shinto deities, explaining that they were only avatars or visible manifestations of some Indian god, and therefore it would be proper for converts to Buddhism to continue to worship their ancient gods as before. By this compromise discontent among the Shintoists was allayed, and the Buddhist propagandists found their work of gaining adherents to their faith greatly facilitated. But mark the result—an instance of ecclesiastical hybridism, a corrupt system creditable to neither, so that the Buddhist gains were of rather doubtful nature.

Shinto is the native cult of the Japanese, being indigenous. Strictly speaking, it hardly deserves the title of religion, since it has neither creed, sacred books, nor code of morals. Certain modern Japanese writers, in their over-weening vanity, account for the absence of ethical teachings on the ground, that the innate purity of the Japanese people render such teachings entirely superfluous. Say they, only such depraved peoples as Chinese and Westerners need the restraining and constraining influences of a formulated ethical code.

Shinto recognizes a continued existence beyond the grave, but fails to teach whether it is one of joy or pain. Hence the doctrine of rewards and punishments is not inculcated as an incentive to right conduct. Its services are few and simple, demanding little more of its votaries than a visit to the local temple on the occasion of the annual festival. It is a combination of ancestor-worship and nature-worship. Homage is paid to the departed ancestors of the imperial family, who are supposed to be direct descendants of the sun goddess, and to the names of other distinguished dead. In the realm of nature there are gods and goddesses of fire, wind, ocean, rivers, etc.

The priests enjoy an unusual degree of freedom. They are not bound by any vows of celibacy, neither are they prohibited from seeking other professions, if preference so dictates. They are not distinguishable by their costume from other men, save when engaged in offering the morning and evening sacrifices, at which time they wear a robe peculiar to themselves. In short, the sum of man's duty as taught by Shinto may be expressed in a single line: "Follow your natural impulses, and obey the Mikado." As a religious system, it is vague and shadowy.

Buddhism, on the contrary, with its profound metaphysics, its gorgeous ritual and exalted ethics, powerfully appeals to the religious instincts of the people. It was introduced into Japan from Corea and China in the year 550 A. D. At first it was rejected by the emperor, and was more or less opposed for half a century or longer. But gradually it won its way to general acceptance by dint of prudent concessions and ardent, persistent labor. It soon became the predominant religion of the country, the Mikados themselves, the supposed descendants of the Skinto sun goddess, adopting it. Having once gained the ascendancy, it was comparatively easy to hold it, and it is to-day the prevailing religion of Japan.

As propounded by Shaka Muni, its founder, Buddhism may be called an atheistic philosophy. It teaches that ignorance is the genesis of all misery and suffering, and enlightenment the way of escape therefrom; that happiness and salvation come from within—from recognizing the impermanence of all phenomena, from the extinction of desire, the root of life. The salvation to be obtained is Nirvana, which Colonel Olcott, the modern apostle of Buddhism, defines as "A condition of total cessation of changes, of perfect rest; of absence of desire and illusion and sorrow; of the total obliteration of everything that goes to make up the physical man." It contains its decalogue, the precepts of which are as follows: refrain (1) from destroying the life of beings, (2) from stealing, (3) from unlawful sexual intercourse, (4) from falsehood, (5) from intoxicating liquors and drugs, (6) from eating at unseasonable times, (7) from dancing, singing, and unbecoming shows, (8) from using garlands, scents, perfumes, cosmetics, ointments and ornaments, (9) from using high and broad beds, (10) from receiving silver and gold. It is needless to add that priests and people live in constant violation of these moral precepts. Lying and licentiousness are prevailing sins of Japan, and frequently the priests set the example.

Numerically the Buddhists of Japan are strong.

They are also active and aggressive, and vigorously oppose the advance of Christianity among the people. They are divided among themselves into various sects which detracts somewhat from their power, but nevertheless their hostility is the devil's most potent factor in retarding the progress of the gospel in Japan. They have learned, in recent years, lessons in propagandism from Christian missionaries, and are advocating the establishment of schools and kindergartens, the founding of orphans' homes and the education of women as indirect methods of spreading their tenets. They also make use of the printing press, sending out large quantities of tracts, papers and magazines, and are urging the priests to devote more time to viva voce preaching.

At the last annual meeting of the California State Sabbath Association, a prominent clergyman from San José said in a speech that about thirty members of his church could not keep the Sabbath because there was no State Sunday law. Do professed ministers of the gospel really believe that the Lord is dependent on a State law for securing obedience to one of his requirements?

The Power of Choice.

BY JESSE JARED.

AMONG the many blessings of our beneficent Father the power of exercising the will in all our actions is one of the strongest manifestations of an all-wise Creator. When we consider this subject in its great magnitude, it seems strange indeed that finite man should attempt a work that is so entirely foreign to our Creator, and still have it in mind to do honor to a Being of supreme love.

In contemplating this, as with most themes of God's dealings with man, our minds revert to the period in human history when all was as the mind of infinite Love only could devise. At that time when an all-wise Creator, who took in ages at a glance, placed man—the crowning being of his creation—in the position of ruler of the world, it must certainly have been that all was done which an all-wise Creator could consistently do to preserve him in perfect accord with the will of the Sovereign of the universe. Certainly if it were at all in keeping with God's nature to enact laws to restrain man from going contrary to the divine will, it would be expected that man would be placed under restraint sufficient to forever prevent him from reaping the fruits of a course of rebellion, which the Eye that beholds the end from the beginning, assuredly took in.

But what do we find to be God's plan of dealing with the creatures of his hand? Do we find such restrictions as would make it impossible for them to do other than what their Creator marked out as best? No; we find man made the recipient of the needed instruction, and warned of the fruits of transgression, but still left as free as the zephyrs that stirred the foliage in their Eden home. How easy it would have been to have prevented all that sin has wrought, had it been just in God's sight to enact even one measure to restrict man's will in regard to the service due the Lord. But a Being of love, as God is (1 John 4:8, 16) could accept only a service of love, and this could be rendered only by beings capable of serving the Creator from choice.

When man was placed in this position, there was a possibility that his choice would fall on the wrong side. What a short step it would have been to have deprived man of the power of going wrong! But He that "spake and it was done," did not deviate from the ways of righteousness. After man fell through the influence of the wily tempter, and was no longer the free being that he was before, God pledged the sacrifice of heaven's best Gift that he might again liberate man's will. Gen. 3:15.

Passing through the centuries, we come to the time when God saw the wickedness of man was so great in the earth, that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually; and we find that God bore with their unbridled iniquity for one hundred and twenty years.

If ever there was need of a "national reform movement," certainly there was need of it then. But do we find the divinely-instructed Noah trying to effect the passage and enforcement of laws that would restrain that noble race from their course of immorality? No; we find only the record of his life of faith, and his preaching of righteousness. And after the great ark was finished, do we read that God caused man to go into the ark with the beasts? No; man was free to do as he pleased, and God could but close the great door on those that had obeyed the call of mercy.

We find all through the Scriptures striking evidences of God's plan to leave man free. He would devise ways almost without number to cause man to turn from the ways of death. When one servant was maltreated and the covenant people strayed from the ways of life, the yearning heart of infinite Love would institute other means whereby those that would might see and turn from the ways of death. And finally, the treasures of the universe were poured out in the gift of the only-begotten Son.

He came to a people that were in daily expectation of the Messiah, whom they thought would so reform the nation that the Jewish people might compel all to conform to the principles of the religion for which they were such ardent sticklers. But in all of the life of Christ do we find one instance of trying to reform the nation as such? He wrestled with the woes of this life for upwards of thirty-three years, and proclaimed the good news of salvation throughout the length and breadth of Judea in such divine power that the hardened officer returned word to the bigoted priests that "never man spake like this man." Whenever the touch or cry of distressed humanity reached him, his divine virtue went out to them in a degree that filled them with unutterable love and restored the stricken form to a condition of perfect health. All this was the manifestation of the life of God in mortal clay.

In all those years of our Saviour, who had all power in heaven and earth, can we point out one instance where he favored compulsion in the least degree. No; never do we detect the slightest indication of a spirit to use other than persuasive means to cause men to accept the offers of redeeming love. Amid a scene of universal rejoicing, that noble spirit was overcome by grief at the sight of the city that would not yield to the gentle pleadings of infinite Love.

If our divine Pattern would not compel even an assent to the doctrine he came from the throne of the universe to promulgate, how can fallen, sinful men engage in a work of judging and condemning their fellow-mortals? "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

Religion in the Schools in Australia.

In Australia there exists a "National Scripture Education League," the purpose of which is to secure the teaching of religion in the public schools. In pursuance of this object, a meeting of the League was held in Melbourne, May 20, which was attended by about one hundred clergymen of the city and suburbs. Bishop Goe, of the Church of England, presided. The following comments relating to the occasion are from the Bible Echo (Melbourne), of June 7:—

"The object which the League has in view, as stated by the chairman, is 'the introduction of religion into our State schools.' And a communication read by the secretary stated that 'it is only through the ballot box that we can succeed.' The League, therefore, is evidently a religio-political organization. In view of this, it is not strange that the following resolution was introduced, and, with the exception of the negative vote of the writer, unanimously passed:—

"That the ministers of religion and laymen here present pledge themselves to make every exertion to stir up the people in their districts so as to secure the return of members of Parliament favorable to the restoration of Scripture teaching in our State schools, and for this purpose pledge themselves to vote for no candidate whose opinions are not in harmony with the programme of the League."

"This, as must be apparent to all, contemplates a purely political campaign. It means that both ministers and laymen shall engage actively in the business of political engineering, and shall 'make every exertion' to control the votes of the people, even by going to the length of obtaining beforehand a distinct 'pledge' from the electors that they will vote only as the League wishes them to vote. This is politics straight.

"And how purely political this movement is may be better appreciated from statements made by Professor Harper in introducing the foregoing resolution. He said, 'We are going to have some power.' Of course he meant political power, State power. But to seek such power in religious work is to deny the gospel. In the gospel there is all the power any Christian needs for the successful accomplishment of Christian work. Paul says the gospel is 'the power of God.' More than this, when Christians seek to accomplish their ends through the 'ballot box,' they thereby limit their power to numbers, and place their strength upon a purely numerical basis; for there vote simply stands against vote. On such lines they cannot succeed unless they are in the majority. But God's method of reckoning the strength of His people is very different. When they are connected with Him, and depend upon His power for the performance of their allotted work, He says 'One man of you shall chase a thousand,' 'and two put ten thousand to flight.' Josh. 23:10; Deut. 32:30.

"Again, Professor Harper said they intended to take such an attitude that politicians and men running for office would understand that the churches were 'a body of voters to be reckoned with.' This again degrades the church to a mere political level, and estimates its influence by the intimidating threat of how many votes it can cast in a political campaign.

"We are in hearty sympathy with the idea that the children need religious instruction, that no education is complete without such instruction, and that there is a lamentable want in this respect at the present time, as evidenced by the moral corruption and irreligious tendencies characteristic of the rising generation. But we are not in sympathy with the League's proposed method for remedying the evil. Religion, pure religion, the religion of Jesus Christ, cannot be inculcated through political measures and acts of Parliament. Neither has God made it incumbent on the State to see that men are brought up in faith. That is the work of the Church. And when the church endeavors to make the State do this work it is shirking its own responsibility. God never said to the State:—

"And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.' Deut. 6:6, 7.

"No; this is God's instruction to His people, to the church, to parents. Here rests the responsibility; here is the tap-root of the whole question; here is the solution of the whole difficulty. Let parents do their duty in this respect, and the problem is solved. But if they fail, if they are not religious themselves, if they do not fear God and obey his commands, where is the hope for their children? We hear a great deal about our 'godless State schools;' but the difficulty is not with the State schools, but with the 'godless homes' in which the children are brought up."

THE "New England Sabbath Protective League," says its organ, the Defender, bases its conviction that "all classes and conditions of labor" ought to be made to take a weekly day of rest, upon "the great principle so felicitously expressed by Henry Ward Beecher, when he declared of Sunday: 'It is meant to be the one day in which a man shall feel, I am not a toiler, I am not a worker, I am not an underling, I am not an apprentice, nor a journeyman; I am not a man on wages; I am not a hired man,—I am a MAN!'" This is very well so far as it goes; but the Lord wants an individual to be "a MAN" every day in the week, by becoming a son of God. Why not become reconciled to the Lord's way, and trust in the power of divine grace to make us what we ought to be, instead of in the power of a human statute?

A WARM friend of the SENTINEL at Marquette, Kansas, writes: "To test whether subscribers could be secured for the SENTINEL here, I went out and in two hours received six subscriptions, the money for which I enclose. I am sixty-nine years old and not able to do much, but I simply wanted to learn whether or not the people here were willing to buy and read on the subject matter of the SENTINEL, and have found that they are. I shall do more soon."

FULL particulars of the unprecedented offer of the SENTINEL will appear next week, and we trust our friends everywhere will prepare to take advantage of it.

"RELIGION and the State in Japan," by J. A. Brunson (see page 442), comprises two articles, the second of which will appear next week.

By mistake, last week's issue was sent out as No. 28, which is the number of the present issue.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,				.50.
"	"	Three "				.25.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS.

—DON'T forget to look on our last page next week for the unprecedented SENTINEL offer which will appear there.

—EVERY child should have the "Gospel Primer." The only book of the kind published. Price, 25 cents. Order from the publishers.

—THE "National Sunday Law," being the arguments of A. T. Jones before the House Committee, in opposition to the Blair Sunday Rest Bill—is a thorough catechism upon the subject of Church and State. Price, 25 cents. See advertisement and send for it.

—"THE Empires of the Bible" is a book invaluable to Bible and history students. The late discoveries of valuable historical records in Babylon and Egypt are placed side by side with the Bible account of the same time, and together they form a story of thrilling interest. Price, $1.50. Address as per the advertisement on another page.

—THOSE who contemplate taking a business or short-hand course this year should investigate the merits of the Capital City Commercial College, Des Moines, Iowa, an advertisement of which appears in another column. This institution has fitted hundreds of young men and women for usefulness in practical life, among them being quite a goodly number of SENTINEL readers. Write to Messrs. Mehan & McCauley for their elegant catalogue giving full particulars, saying that you do so at our suggestion.

The Gospel Primer.

A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE 25

Address this Office.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELDON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D.; LITT. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of Harvard University.

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 BOND ST., NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY.

Is most healthfully and beautifully located. Combines religious and industrious with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

Sacred History, Sacred Music, and the Holy Scriptures.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year. Vegetarian diet. For further particulars and calender, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond Street, New York City.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

DON'T TAKE an agency until you find out what we have to offer. If already engaged or in business, send for our "Side-line Specialties." Begin, now where you are, and turn spare moments into cash. $75 per month. Particulars free. Write to-day. Address,

E. E. MILES, Manufacturer and Pub.,
5126 State St., Chicago, Ill.

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LAW.

Arguments in behalf of the rights of American citizens, presented by A. T. Jones in opposition to the Blair Sunday Rest Bill. A thorough catechism upon the subject of Church and State. 192 pages.....$0 25

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK CITY, OAKLAND, CAL.
Kansas City, Mo.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

The Stomach:

... Its Disorders and
How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS,
slightly damaged, offered at half price.

Address PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

The TWO REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE
HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST
REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges . . . $1.85

Cloth, marbled edges, . . . 2.50

" Gilt edges, . . . 3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spake it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12 X 18 INCHES

On thick paper mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

Postpaid 25 cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

"LAW OF GOD AS CHANGED BY THE PAPACY."

This chart has been thoroughly revised, and contains some of the more recent utterances of this great apostate power.

The plan of the chart is the same as the old one. On either side are telling quotations from Catholic authorities admitting and boasting of the change, while the "Commandments as Changed by the Papacy" occupy a central position.

It is a forcible presentation of the subject, and will be a valuable help to Bible workers and ministers. Size 36x48 inches. Price $1.00. Printed on thin paper for inclosure in letters and miscellaneous distribution, 50 cents per 100.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York,

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.50.

We propose to make it possible for each and everyone to be the possessor of

A First-Class High Grade Bible.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the
AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge. Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality.

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.	B. C. 443.	25 Rē'hūm, Hā-shāb'nah, Mā-a-sē-jah,
36 Behold, ^d we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:	^d Deut. 28. 48. Ezra 9. 9.	26 And Ā-hī'jah, Hā'nan, Ā'nan,
37 And ^e it yieldeth much increase	^e Deut. 28. 12 11	27 Māl'luch, Hā'rim, Bā'a-nah.
		28 ¶ ^e And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lē'vites, the porters, the singers, the Nēth'i-nims, / and all they that had separated themselves

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00

With this book reading is made easy. No more stumbling over the hard words. All proper names are divided into syllables, and the accent and diacritical marks render their accurate pronunciation a simple matter. With a little study of the Key to Pronunciation to be found in every copy of this Bible, the reader loses all fear of the long, hard names of Scripture, and pronounces them with ease.

WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.50

As is indicated by the name, this is a teachers' Bible. It contains fifteen pages of illustrations and diagrams, copious helps of the latest revision, Bible index, concordance, dictionary of Scripture proper names with their pronunciation and meaning, and many other excellent features.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT.

Wabash, Ind., Oct. 14, 1896.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: My Bible received this day, for which accept thanks. I am very well pleased. I think I have just what I need in the way of a Bible. It is not only a teacher's Bible, but also the very best for a student.

Yours truly,

T. M. MORRIS.

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 15, 1896.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: I received my Bible, and am very much pleased with it. It is a first-class Bible; just what it is claimed to be.

MRS. E. F. NOBLE.

Brattleboro, Vt. Nov. 22, 1896.
AM very much pleased with it.

MRS. E. C. MILLARD.

Graettinger, Iowa, Nov. 30, 1896.
We are all more than pleased with the Bible in every way. As a book it is thoroughly well made and elegant in all its parts. As a Bible the self-pronunciation is a new feature, and this is only one of its many excellencies. The type is a great delight to me.

MRS. S. M. OLESEN.

It is only by special arrangement with the publishers of this Bible that we are able to make this

UNPRECEDENTED OFFER.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.50 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SEVEN new names at the regular subscription price, $7.00.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

Address all orders to AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS. AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR

NEW YORK, JULY 22, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 29.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no tears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

IN this day a person can believe almost anything except the Bible without being counted a heretic.

ABOUT the gloomiest outlook in the world is that for the ushering in of the kingdom of Christ through the gateway of politics.

A VERY poor way of making a man a good citizen is to teach him that he must educate his conscience by the laws of the State.

THE lowest conception of the character and dignity of the law of God, is that which teaches that its effectiveness depends upon its being reinforced by State enactments.

HE who insists that it is a Christian duty to vote, is not consistent if he fails to designate the party for which Christianity demands the vote should be cast. Is that party the Republican, or the Democratic party, or some other?

THE Christian patriot must be he who loves the Christian's country. But that country is a heavenly country. Heb. 11:14-16. The individual who says "my country" of any land on this earth, either does not mean what he says, or proclaims that he is not a Christian at all.

LIBERTY, like every other valuable possession, is lost by not being put into use. "From him that hath not [or does not use what he has] shall be taken away even that which he hath." This is a law of nature. He who does not prize a thing sufficiently to use it for its intended purpose, does not deserve to have it.

"THE Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver; the Lord is our King; he will save us." Isa. 33:22. The Christian's life is ordered by laws which are righteous and eternal, and judgments which are infallible and irrevocable. The government of heaven is as superior to the governments of earth as God is superior to man.

What Only Can Be the End?

THE forces which worked in Greece and Rome wrought steadily and only to ruin as their end.

Those same forces are steadily at work to-day among the nations, and to no other end than they wrought before.

The forces that wrought in Greece and Rome are the chief forces at work in the great nations to-day: they are deliberately chosen to be the chief and all-guiding forces for to-day.

All through Europe, and all over the United States, to-day, the leading and all controlling forces in education are Greek and Roman. And by compulsory education laws it is sought to oblige all to surrender to these forces. But as originally these forces only ruined Greece and Rome, to compel people to surrender to these forces is only to compel them to the way of ruin.

Nor is it only the State schools that are so led; but private, denominational, and independent schools, academies, colleges, and universities, are all conducted after the same lead; so that Greek and Roman conceptions and ideals practically dominate the whole educational world of Europe and America to-day. Greek and Roman literature, ethics, philosophy, art, and mythology, are the supreme models, they are indeed the goal of all intellectual effort of the students, throughout the whole educational system of our time.

But what did all this, in its veriest perfection, do for Greece and Rome?—It wrought only their ruin. It is not enough to say that all of it could not keep them back from ruin: it all only helped forward their ruin. What less can it do for people to-day? When through all the formative years of children and youth, they are caused to dwell intellectually in Greece and Rome among the Greeks and Romans of the "classic ages," what can they be expected to be, but Greeks and Romans all the rest of their lives?—just such Greeks and Romans too, as their models were. And being such Greeks and Romans as their models were, how many generations can pass ere the nations of to-day will have reached the same end as did the Greece and Rome that are their models?

To-day, in the schools, children as young as twelve years, are put through daily drills in Greek and Roman mythology. They are required to read and study the wicked and even abominable conceptions in which the myth is involved. These things they are taught and are required under penalties to learn, when it would be difficult for them to learn anything worse if they were turned entirely loose among the professional liars, thieves, adulterers and murderers, in the very dives of the worst cities in the land. And in this sink of abominable conceptions they are kept until they graduate from college or university, especially when they take the classical course.

It is nowise different when the youth are induced to take up the study of what passes popularly for art. For the chief models are Greek and Roman; and Greek and Roman art was idolatry, and Greek and Roman idolatry was abomination of every sort. Their extolled philosophy and their boasted wisdom were after the same order. Their philosophy was a lie; their wisdom was foolishness.

Such being the great forces that wrought in Greece and Rome, how could such forces work to any other end than ruin? And such being the deep and leading forces which are working to-day, by every means that can be invented, how is it possible for such forces to work to any other end than ruin?

Seeing the inevitable tendency of such education, it is not strange that sober thinkers in both Europe and America should begin to call for something better in education. In view of the situation as it really is, it is proper enough that the question should have been raised, "Does College Education Educate?" One leading educator who is striving for better things very pertinently remarks:—

"There is another and most important point at which the subject matter of an educational system touches the well-being not only of the student but of the nation at large: that is the ethical influence.

"It cannot but be manifest to every thoughtful observer that one of the most discouraging signs of the times, is the want of honest thinking and practical common sense which is daily exhibited in high places and in low, in the rulers of nations, the dispensers of law, the managers of great enterprises, and so on down to the political "boss," or, if there be a lower level, the politician of the saloon.

"Trickery and juggling with words in absolute disregard of facts; plausible expressions disguising well-known facts and the disposition to build upon inequitable technicalities in defiance of the most manifest principles of right and wrong, are the things which give daily support to the views of the anarchist who regards all law, order, and government with hatred, and is pleased to see their representatives discredit themselves and bring daily distress and alarm to those who would fain believe in an advancing evolution of the human race and a millennium in even the far-distant future."

Yet surely it should not be thought strange that these things should appear in the lives of people whose education has been largely in a literature of which the warp and woof is composed of just such things. People whose minds have been taking in just such stuff as this, through all their formative years, cannot well be expected to let out anything else in their after years.

If the nations desire anything better to appear in their characters than appeared in the characters of Greece and Rome, they will have to give their youth an education better than that of Greece and Rome. And to give the youth an education better than that of Greece and Rome, their minds will have to be fed with something vastly different from the foolishness, the chicanery, and the abominations generally that are found in the classical literature of Greece and Rome.

"Christian Citizenship" in France a Century Ago.

THE duties of Christians with respect to the State were clearly defined in the "Imperial Catechism," which was imposed upon the church in France by the new empire which had been evolved from the Revolution. They were as follows:—

"Ques. What are the duties of Christians, in respect to the princes who govern them? and what, in particular, are our duties towards Napoleon the First, our emperor?"

"Ans. Christians owe to the princes who govern them, and we owe in particular to Napoleon the First, our emperor, love, respect, obedience, fidelity, military service, the taxes usual for the preservation and expenses of the empire and of his throne. . . . To honor and serve our emperor is, then, to honor and serve God himself.

"Q. Are there not special motives which ought more strongly to attach us to Napoleon the First, our emperor?"

"A. Yes; for it is he whom God has raised up in difficult circumstances to reëstablish the public worship of the holy religion of our fathers, and to be its protector. He has brought back and preserved public order by his profound and active wisdom; he defends the State by his powerful arm; he has become the help of the Lord by the consecration which he has received from the Sovereign Pontiff, the head of the universal church.

"Q. What ought we to think of those who should be wanting in their duty towards our emperor?"

"A. According to the holy Apostle Paul, they would be resisting the order established by God himself; they would be rendering themselves worthy of eternal damnation."

This catechism was highly approved at the time by the papacy, whose legate in France recommended its use in all the dioceses.

The "Christian citizenship" of that day failed. What will be the result to-day? In that day it professed to be following the dictates of Scripture, as it does to-day. And it cannot be denied that the principle of being in subjection to "the powers that be" applied as well in France a hundred years ago as it does in America to-day. That Napoleon was a wicked man and a despot, has no bearing upon the principle. The kind of subjection of which the Apostle Paul wrote in the thirteenth of Romans, is as proper under one government as under another. It did not mean that Christianity should be in subjection to the State, or joined with the State. It did not mean that "every soul" has two masters, of which the State is one, in the sphere of morality. And what it did not mean then, it does not mean now.

Christian citizenship is heavenly citizenship. It is a high privilege, much higher than any earthly government can grant, which is extended to men by the King of the Universe. It is a birthright privilege, obtained by being "born again," of water and of the Spirit. It is the privilege only of the sons and daughters of God.

Applying the Sunday Law in New Hampshire.

THE endeavor to make an individual or class of the people conform by law to some other individuals' standard of righteousness, naturally provokes retaliation. Instead of making for righteousness and peace, it produces exactly the opposite.

This is illustrated by the effort to enforce the Sunday law in Somersworth, N. H. A restaurant keeper is retaliating upon the mayor (who is proprietor of a livery) for having enforced the law upon the restaurants, and now a lawyer of the town, says the Boston Globe, of July 10, has raised the question whether the business of running the church is to be made an exception to a law which forbids all unnecessary work and noise on the first day of the week. This lawyer has, says the Globe, notified Marshal Heaton that he must stop the unnecessary and excessive ringing on Sunday of the Methodist Church bell, near his residence.

There can be no reason why the law should not apply as well to the church business as to any other, if it be, as said, a purely civil regulation.

THE Golden Rule, of June 17, states with reference to the Sunday observance feature of the Christian Endeavor convention, that "California is in especial need of all the help Christian people can give in the maintenance of the Lord's day, because in that State especially the sabbath is rapidly becoming a holiday rather than a holy day, since there is no sabbath law there."

Does not California have God's Sabbath law,—the fourth commandment,—the same as in other States? And is a law of the State so much higher than God's law that it can make the day of rest a holy day, while the law of God can but make it a holiday? Is there less force in God's law than in man's law? Has an act of the legislature any power to produce holiness? These questions answer themselves.

"Hoist By His Own Petard."

UNDER this heading the Lowell (Mass.) Mail, of July 10, prints the following:—

"SOMERSWORTH, N. H., July 9.—Mayor B. F. Hanson, of this city, who is the proprietor of a livery stable, was arraigned in the police court this morning on complaint of Louis Jacques, for an alleged violation of the Sunday law. It appeared from the evidence presented in the case that horses had been cleaned, carriages washed, and teams let on Sunday, for which money was also received, on the sabbath.

"The mayor pleaded not guilty and stated that the teams which were taken out on Sunday were engaged on a week day. He also claimed that the prosecution was brought against him through spite. The court found the mayor guilty and imposed a fine of $5 and costs. Mayor Hanson appealed.

"The prosecution is the alleged result of Mayor Hanson's action in closing soda water and confectionery stores and restaurants on Sunday, in an endeavor to enforce the laws governing sabbath breaking.

"Jacques has been fined twice within the past month in the police court for keeping open on Sunday, and Jacques states decidedly that he will not permit the mayor to run his livery stable on Sunday if he has to close."

Politics and Religion.

IN 1891 the Methodist Conference held in Des Moines, Iowa, censured the government of that State because certain laws were not more stringently executed. In a subsequent speech the governor alluded to this censure, and in course of his remarks uttered this sentiment, which seems more and more like a true prophecy as time passes:—

"I think I can safely say that, so far as worldly people are concerned, they do not believe that our politics and religion can be mixed without converting the entire mixture into politics alone in a very short time. I want to say further that those who attempt to do this will sooner or later learn that their churches have become political instead of religious organizations, and that they must thereafter be content to wield such influences over the consciences of men as other political organizations are able to do, and no greater or better."—Signs of the Times.

The Maintenance of a Good Cause.

It is a truth which is made prominent in the volume of inspiration that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." "The words that I speak unto you," said Jesus to the Jews, "they are spirit and they are life." John 6:63. And the exhortation is given by the apostle Peter, "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby." 1 Peter 2:2.

The cause of spiritual truth must be maintained by the Word. The cause which opposes spiritual error must be thus maintained. The Word furnishes life and the principle of growth; and without the Word, they will soon fail and come to naught.

No man can live on an experience. He cannot live upon his opposition to something else. Nor can any organization of men maintain itself in this way. The experiment has been tried many times, and has always failed. Many a would-be Christian tries to live on an experience which he had when he first started in the service of God, or perhaps at some other special season. It seems to go very well for a short time, but he soon finds that the power of it is gone. To repeat over and over the statement of the blessings he enjoyed on that particular occasion, becomes monotonous. It soon palls upon his listeners, and upon himself. It fails to produce enthusiasm or to stir people to action. They must have something new, something fresh. This is a law of their natures.

Neither does opposition to error furnish the principle of life and growth. Of this we have an illustration in the work of the "A. P. A." This organization exists for the purpose of combatting the papacy. It maintains a number of journals, which aim to arouse public opposition to Rome by crying out the evils which are charged against her. In every way, the effort is made to spread before the people the real or supposed wickedness by which the papacy is endangering American institutions and liberty. The same thing has been done by other organizations in the past; but they have each failed and gradually faded into oblivion. The cause for which they stood had no food upon which to maintain its life. There was no life principle in mere opposition; and hence, while for a time the cause seemed to flourish, it came ere long to an inevitable decline, which could only terminate in dissolution.

It is all very well, of course, to call attention to the evil of the principles and work of the papacy, and the danger which they threaten to the national interests. But to repeat this day after day, becomes at last monotonous. No matter how great or how real these evils and dangers may be, the continual shouting of them becomes first a familiar and then a tiresome sound. Of itself, it can only tend to produce indifference, even in the minds of those who have lent their support to the work. The enthusiasm of the movement declines, and only time is then necessary for its complete extinction.

What is lacking is the power of the divine Word. It is this alone that can cause growth in true and right principles. A bad cause can flourish upon the depravity that is inherent in human nature; but a good cause, which stands in opposition to the movements of the world's agencies of evil, must be maintained by the power of divine truth. It is not looking at error, or crying out against it, that strengthens the heart in opposition to it; but a growth in the principles of righteousness. And it is by the Word that this growth must be attained. The Word of the infinite One is itself infinite in depth and breadth, and the finite human mind can never exhaust its treasures of truth. There are always fresh revelations, new meanings and vistas of truth afforded by it to the inquiring mind; so that as one studies the Word, he becomes more and more built up and rooted and grounded in eternal principles of truth and righteousness, and hence more and more antagonistic to error and injustice, in all their forms.

All other forms of opposing evil than by the eternal Word, must certainly fail. Evil is not to be overcome by evil; the devil cannot be successfully fought with fire. We are directed to "overcome evil with good." It is the Word that makes us good, by faith in it; and by the Word must our goodness be retained, and ourselves nourished and strengthened in adherence to the right, and opposition to the wrong.

A Mystery.

ONE of the apparent mysteries of the Christian profession is the fact that so many good people who claim to believe the Word of God should be seemingly blind to some of the plainest truths of revelation.

Here, for example, are hundreds of thousands of Christian young people who have pledged themselves to "strive to do whatsoever he [Christ] would have me do," and yet deliberately and continually disobey one of his plain commands. In support of this statement we will ask who ever read a command or law of any kind plainer in its meaning than the following:—

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

Most of the words used in this expression of the will of the Creator are common words of one syllable. The whole expression, in point of simplicity, would not be out of place in a child's "First Reader."

Yet here are multitudes of the most intelligent young people in the land who are seemingly most anxious to do "whatsoever He would have me do," who never observe the seventh day at all from one year's end to another. It is a singular thing, to say the least.

They are careful not to worship other gods, to bow down to graven images, to swear, dishonor their parents, kill, commit adultery, steal, bear false witness, or covet; there is no question in their minds for a moment that all these are things which He would not "have me do." Yet the thing stated in the fourth precept—the very bosom—of this same law, is set aside as though it were a matter of no consequence.

Oh, well, it is said, in this one precept of the Decalogue there has been a change; and we, as Christians, now keep the Sabbath on the first day of the week, in honor of Christ, who on that day rose from the dead.

But was it not Christ who commanded the observance of the seventh day? and must not that therefore be one of the things which he would have all people do, as well now as then? Aside from the self-evident fact that a moral law must in the very nature of things express the will of Christ and be the same in all ages, it is plain that Christ himself spoke the law which commands rest upon the seventh day. For the first words of the speaker on that memorable occasion were, "I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." The deliverer from bondage is Jesus Christ. He it is who was divinely anointed to "proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." Isa. 61:1. He it was who went before the host of Israel in a pillar of cloud and of fire; and they "drank of that spiritual Rock which followed [or went with, margin] them; and that Rock was Christ." 1 Cor. 10:4.

Would you strive to do whatsoever the Lord Jesus Christ would have you do? Then consider who it is that has brought you up out of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Or have you not yet been delivered from the bondage of Egypt? "Out of Egypt," it is written, "have I called my son." If you are a son of God, you have come up out of that realm of spiritual darkness and bondage into the spiritual Canaan. You have left the company of the idolators, and have "come out from among them," that you might be separate unto the Lord, one of "a peculiar people," unlike the nations of the world. 2 Cor. 6:17, 18. And He who has brought you out of Egypt and its bondage says to you, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. . . . The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

Many, no doubt, fail to discern this plain truth concerning the will of God, because they are among the "wise and prudent." It is to the "babes" that truths are revealed which the "wise and prudent" fail to discern. Matt. 11:25. Human "wisdom" and "prudence" can darken the plainest language in which God's will was ever spoken. Pride of opinion is exceedingly strong. This was almost the last thing which the disciples of Christ were willing to surrender, and which darkened their minds to the comprehension of some of his plainest and most important utterances. See Mark 8:31, 32; 9:31, 32. If human wisdom, human teaching and traditions, were set aside, there would be no disagreement among people respecting the identity of the duty imposed by the fourth commandment.

"It is certainly a great task to undertake to be at the same time a temporal lord and a religious man, because whoever considers the evangelical laws will see that the pontiffs, while taking the name of the vicar of Christ, have really created a new religion which possesses only the name of Christ; for they command poverty and wish for themselves wealth; they urge humility and themselves follow pride; they demand obedience and will suffer themselves to be commanded by no one."—Vettori, secretary to a Catholic cardinal in the time of Leo X.

Religion and the State.

BY W. A. COLCORD.

RELIGION and civil government occupy two separate and distinct realms.

Religion pertains to man's personal relation of faith and obedience to God.

Civil government has to do only with man's duties as a citizen.

Religion concerns man's relation to a future state and the world to come.

Civil government deals with men only in their civil relations to each other in this present world.

Religion has to do with the heart, the spring of actions, and its relation to the individual possessing it.

Civil government deals only with outward actions, and their relation to and effect upon others.

The object of religion is to regenerate men, and fit them for another kingdom, by purifying the heart of each individual.

The object of civil government is to protect men in the enjoyment of their natural rights in this life, by restraining, through fear of temporal punishment, those who would not recognize these rights from any higher motives.

Religion works from within.

Civil government operates from without.

The business of religion is to gather out of the nations subjects for a kingdom where civil governments will not be needed.

Civil government became necessary when sin entered the world. Then men became covetous, untruthful, lustful, thievish, murderous, and prone to do all evil. They then needed something more than moral restraint, or the fear of God, or even the fear of future punishment, to deter them from encroaching upon the rights of their fellowmen. But when man is redeemed, and sin is no more, he will need no such restraints. He will do right because he loves and chooses the right. Even in this world, those who have been born again, whose hearts have been regenerated, need not the restraints of civil authority to make them do right. They do not refrain from theft, murder and adultery, because they fear what the State may do to them should they transgress in any of these respects. They do not desire to steal, murder, and commit adultery. They do right from a higher motive than the fear of what men may do to them. When tempted to do evil, with Joseph they say, "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God." Concerning such John says, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." 1 John 3:9.

It is therefore evident that religion and civil government occupy two separate and distinct realms; that civil government exists and is necessary because of sin; that in proportion as men are genuinely converted, civil governments have less to do; and that finally, in the redeemed State, there will be no civil governments at all.

THE "Christian" powers of Europe are trying to make the Sultan see that he ought not to take possession of Thessaly after having conquered it. It can hardly be wondered at that they should find the task a difficult one, in view of the fact that their own example in such a case is almost always to the contrary.

Religion and the State in Japan.

BY JOHN A. BRUNSON.

HAVING given in brief outline some of the principal features of the religions of Japan, we now inquire into the relation they sustain to the State. And we remark at the outset, that owing to the indefiniteness of the Japanese conception of both religion and State, it is not easy to determine just what the relationship between them is. For example, the emperor is regarded till this day as a heaven-descended monarch, and prominent among the myriad deities of the Shinto pantheon are the apotheosized spirits of dead rulers.

Prior to the days of Jimmu Tenno, who is accounted by Japanese annalists as the first human sovereign, the Japanese believe that their country was ruled directly by the gods themselves. Jimmu Tenno himself is supposed to be fifth in descent from the sun-goddess Amaterasu, and the present emperor a direct descendant of Jimmu Tenno.

Concerning this fact Griffiths remarks: "In this enlightened age, when all authority is challenged, and a century after the moss of oblivion has covered the historic grave of the doctrine of divine right, the Japanese still cling to the divinity of the Mikado." One of the titles of the emperor is Ten shi, literally, son of heaven. For ages he was considered too sacred to be looked upon by the rude gaze of the populace, and even to-day no one is allowed to look down upon him from an eminence. While residing in Kobe, it was our privilege to see his majesty as he rode by in closed carriage. Thousands of eager spectators thronged the streets, but all heads were bared, and not one, even of the most curious, was allowed to stand in upstairs windows or view the procession from any height at all.

This doctrine of the divine origin of the Mikado, that has been implicitly believed by the masses for centuries, implies an interfusion of religion and State that approximates a theocracy. And we are constrained to believe that their institutions were theocratical in former years.

Professor Chamberlain, an authority in things Japanese, says in reference to the early days of Shinto, "the Japanese had no notion of religion as a separate institution." And even after the introduction of Buddhism, the Mikado still being the "Son of Heaven," the theory of government was unchanged. But what was the extent of influence exerted by religion upon legislation does not seem to be clear. For centuries a dual form of government existed. The heaven-descended Mikado, too sacred to be serviceable, was little more than a royal figure-head, while the Shogun, or generalissimo, vigorous, aggressive, ambitious, virtually held the reins of control in his hands, and guided the chariot of State according to his own selfish desires. But with all his power he never claimed the prerogatives of the emperor. He was theoretically his majesty's servant, while in fact he was master. He upheld the popular superstition concerning the divinity of the Mikado, and inculcated reverence for his person.

The laws that were promulgated were an admixture of moral and civil duties. In the "Legacy of Iyeyasu," a code of laws numbering one hundred, sixteen consist of moral maxims, fifty-five pertain to politics, twenty-two refer to legal matters, and seven relate to episodes in Iyeyasu's personal history. There was no sharp discrimination made between law and morality—between the duties of the citizen and the excellencies of the man. This confusion of the civil and moral in governmental affairs existed till the promulgation of the constitution in February, 1889. At that time the constitution, which clearly defines the duties and privileges of citizens, was given, and since then Japan has taken her place among the constitutional monarchies of the world. It is true that even now Shinto is the national religion.

In 1868, as the result of a concatenation of circumstances partly religious, partly political, and partly literary, Buddhism was disestablished and disendowed, and Shinto again installed as the religion of State. The Council for Spiritual Affairs was established and given equal rank with Council for State. Shintoists were led to rejoice at the promise of an era of prosperity before them. But their system was too weak and shadowy to influence the hearts of the people. Buddhism soon rallied, and in consequence the Council for Spiritual Affairs was reduced to the rank of a department, then to a bureau, and finally to a sub-bureau. In name Shinto is still the official cult. Certain temples are maintained out of public moneys, and the presence of certain State officials is required from time to time at ceremonies of a half-religious, half-courtly nature. But its practical influence upon the government is small. This fact is clearly shown by an article of the constitution which declares that priests and religious teachers of all kinds are not eligible to seats in the Imperial Diet. Buddhism, though disestablished, is far more potent, and in an indirect way, capable of exerting a far greater influence upon legislation.

Under the constitution a good degree of religious freedom is now enjoyed. In defining "Rights and Duties of Subjects," Art. XXVIII reads: "Japanese subjects shall, within limits not prejudicial to peace and order, and not antagonistic to their duties as subjects, enjoy freedom of religious belief." This definition of rights has already proved a blessing to persecuted Japanese Christians, and has multiplied the liberties of the missionaries and enlarged the sphere of their usefulness. The wave of religious legislation has not yet reached Japan, and may the Lord restrain it till the Third Angel's Message shall have been heard throughout its length and breadth.

Sabbath Theories.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

If a record had been made of the various and contrary positions which have been taken by the Protestant ministry in regard to the nature and obligation of the Sabbath, it would present a mass of contradictions and absurdities such as could scarcely be equalled in the whole range of religious discussion.

The latest addition to this tower of Babel that we have seen is by Bishop Vincent, of the M. E. Church. The Chicago Times-Herald, of May 24, reports him as follows:—

"Bishop Vincent, of the M. E. Church, talked to the students of the University of Chicago last evening on Sunday observance. He spoke in Kent Theater, and at the beginning of his address surprised his hearers by saying that he did not care on what day anyone observed the Sabbath, just so one day of the week was set apart for meditation and rest. It made no difference, he stated, whether the day was observed between sunrise and sunset, or within other division of time.

"Bishop Vincent drew his conclusions from the text that the Sabbath is made for man and not man for the Sabbath. But, although the eminent divine was liberal in his views as to the particular day to be set apart, he was equally positive in his statements as to what uses the day should be put. He said that he was in favor of a return to the old Puritan Sunday rather than have the day of rest used for anything else than religious purposes. He raised the question of how far a young man might use the day in recreation or business, concluding that the doer must be his own judge, and that society was incompetent to decide in individual cases.

"He argued, in conclusion, that for the safe-guarding of American institutions, the people must have a day of rest, and that the day should be spent in religious observance. The contrary would be certain to carry us into anarchy and ruin."

The M. E. Church ministers have very generally and strenuously maintained the doctrine of a change of the Sabbath from the definite seventh day to the definite first day of the week. To sustain this idea certain scriptures have been quoted as proof that this was an apostolic practice. True, this is nothing but a card-board theory with neither foundation nor cohesion, but at least it had the merit of being definite. Now Bishop Vincent sweeps away the whole idea of the transfer of the Sabbath from one definite day to another, and leaves the observance of the day to be determined by individual opinion!

While the bishop's theory gives up much that his church has strenuously maintained, albeit without any proof, he brings forward nothing for unanimity but much for division. But the bishop is certainly consistent in one thing. He acknowledges that society cannot control the individual conscience in the matter of Sabbath-keeping. Will all the M. E. Church be as consistent upon this point as is Bishop Vincent?

From the report of the general secretary of the Christian Endeavor society, given at the San Francisco convention, it appears that five thousand new societies have been added to the organization during the past year, making the present membership fully 3,000,000. The whole number of local societies is 50,747. The organization is strongest in Pennsylvania, where it has 3,443 local branches, New York coming next, with 3,049. The "Christian Citizenship" banner for the city which should make the best report of work done in this line, was captured by Indianapolis.

Connecticut's New Sunday Law.

A NEW Sunday law has just gone into effect in the State of Connecticut. It provides that,—

"Every person who shall do any secular business or labor, except works of necessity or mercy, or keep open any shop, warehouse, or manufacturing or mechanical establishment, or expose any property for sale, or engage in any sport, between 12 o'clock Saturday night and 12 o'clock Sunday night, shall be fined not more than $50."

The old law provided for the observance of the day only from sunrise to sunset, and the maximum penalty for its violation was $4. Thus it is evident that the new law is meant to be much more stringent.

THE whole number of Government chaplains in the United States is given as fifty-seven, of whom fifty-two are Protestants.

Personal to Our Readers.

WE wish a few earnest words with you. We are not given to sensationalism, but we want you to look at matters just as they are, and then help us to save what can be rescued from a sinking craft. The immortal Lincoln once said in the dark days of slavery, "These are bad times, and seem out of joint." This was true then, but it is doubly so now. Society is rotten to the core; politics is the very essence of corruption; murder and rapine stalk like giants through the land; the rich are growing richer and the poor poorer. Only a short time ago thirty thousand employes of the sweat shops of this city marched passed the SENTINEL office, having struck against the oppression and tyranny exercised over them, and now well nigh a quarter of a million coal miners of the country are arrayed against the greed and injustice of soulless corporations. An unrest has taken possession of the toiling masses that amounts to frenzy; their minds are filled with dreams of rebellion bordering on anarchy. Statesmen look into the future with deep forebodings. Men's hearts are literally failing them for fear, and the anxious inquiry on all sides is, "What shall the end be?"

The religious world is fast imbibing the idea that the solution for this intricate problem—the panacea for the gigantic evils that confront us, is to be found in a recognition of God by legal enactment as the ruler of the nation. The devil never invented a greater deception. But nevertheless plans are being laid, stakes set and lines drawn to accomplish this very thing.

Now, as never before, an opportunity is presented to tell the people what all these things mean, and the only avenue of escape from the inevitable ruin that will follow. This can be done in no better way than by inducing them to become readers of the AMERICAN SENTINEL. Will you help us to place the paper in their hands?

Now, for the purpose of introducing the SENTINEL more generally among those not now readers of it, we have determined to make the following unprecedented offer: Any such person can have the paper sent to his address until January 1st next, for only twenty-five cents. This is but little more than the cost of the white paper on which it is printed, and it is made in the hope that every member of the SENTINEL family will lay his plans to send us at least one new subscriber under this special offer, for it is our experience that these short-time subscribers invariably become regular readers. Here is an opportunity to do real missionary work in a worthy cause rarely offered.

Of the future of the SENTINEL, just a word. It will endeavor to keep fully abreast with the times, and keenly alive to its mission. It will deal fearlessly and faithfully with every question within its province. It has in contemplation several substantial improvements, among them being a department called "Religious Liberty for Young People," which can hardly fail to interest hundreds of our young people who have heretofore paid little attention to the subject.

Can we not count on our friends everywhere for a long pull, a strong pull and a pull altogether for at least five thousand new subscriptions by September 1st?

A WARM friend of the SENTINEL at Vancouver, B.C., writes: "Please find enclosed my subscription for the coming year. The SENTINEL is, in my opinion, the best paper of its kind published in the known world to-day. I cannot do without it, nor should any thinking man."

Charity the Key to Liberty.

BY C. W. KENISTON.

God is love.

True love, forgetful of self, seeks to bless others, and is therefore unselfishness.

Unselfishness is an attribute of God's character.

Instead of seeking to gain happiness and pleasure for self, he uses his almighty power in distributing these things to his creatures.

But these gifts can only be received into an unselfish heart; so one of the conditions for the reception of God's gifts is unselfishness, or a willingness that others should be favored instead of self.

God's happiness and joy are infinite because his almighty power is exerted in the diffusion of good to his children. Our joy will be great in proportion as we also work for the good of those around us; and while thus working our power for so doing will increase and grow continually, bringing an ever-increasing return of the very things dispensed. This is the pursuit of happiness. The chance to follow this pursuit is the broadest kind of liberty, the true province of life.

God's law is the law of liberty, because the keeping of its precepts calls out the trait of unselfishness in the doer, thus opening the gate of liberty to him. Nothing but unselfish love, to God first, and then to man, can be the keeping of this law; so there must be a likeness to the character of God in the one who would keep his law before it can be kept by that one. This is wherein God writes his law in the heart. It is this unselfishness planted in the heart that moves men to the voluntary worship of God by keeping his commandments. Without it they cannot serve him nor keep his law.

This power of service is the gift of God; and the voluntary submission and desire which make it possible for us to be recipients of this power are the first steps toward the possible practice of unselfishness and the enjoyment of liberty. This kind of service is true religion, and such as have this kind will practice it regardless of all obstacles and hardships. So the brave and loyal servants of God and his law are not the servants of compulsion, but of volition. God knew all this, and his wisdom compels not, but says, "Whosoever will, let him come." He leaves us free to serve him or not to serve him, as we choose.

Now, if God has left this power of choice with us individually, then no man or combination of men, no government or combination of the same, can have any right to interfere in any way with any one, no matter how great or how humble, in the practice of religion in the way he sees it, or in the non-practice of any. The civil law is for the regulation of civil affairs only, and may compel men while they remain among their fellows to be civil in their outward acts; but not to be religious either inwardly or outwardly.

Thomas Jefferson saw these points when he said in the Declaration of Independence that "All men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." He held that governments are instituted among men to protect them in the enjoyment of their rights, not to take them away; and this protection is what the United States Constitution was intended to impart, in that clause known as the First Amendment, which declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Let each and every citizen and lawmaker, as well as all Christians, zealously cherish these rights. And, reader, consider, if your neighbor differs from you in his religious practice, he is no more different from you than are you from him; and if God in infinite wisdom has left us all at liberty to choose our own service and the manner of it according to conviction, then we ought also freely to grant the same to our fellowmen. In so doing the blessings of liberty may be gathered in rich measure; for as has been shown, the reward of unselfishness is liberty.

WHEN Mr. McAll, the founder of the McAll mission in Paris, went to that city, he knew but two French words,—"God," and "love." The prevailing religion was against him, the power of the State was not in his favor; yet by the power expressed in those two words he established his gospel mission and was highly successful in rescuing souls from the slavery of sin. He was encouraged to undertake his seemingly difficult task by these words, addressed to him one day by a stranger: "Sir, I have something important to tell you. You are now in a quarter inhabited by workmen. We all have left a religion of superstition and tyranny; if some one came to teach us a religion of liberty and sincerity, many of us would be ready to listen."

"The truth shall make you free."

Sunday Laws from a Youth's Standpoint.

BY J. F. BALLENGER.

CHARLIE—Do you really think, George, that Sunday laws are wrong?

GEORGE—Yes; I know that they are wrong.

Charlie—What makes you think so?

George—Well, I will tell you. Somebody sent father some papers called the AMERICAN SENTINEL, and I read them, and I tell you, Charlie, I got more out of them on religious liberty than I ever knew before; and father says he has, too.

Charlie—What do you mean by religious liberty? I don't know that I just understand what that means.

George—Why, that means that the Government should not make laws to try to compel men to be religious or to keep Sunday, but to leave every one free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.

Charlie—Oh yes, I see; it means the same as the First Amendment to the Constitution, where it says "Congress shall make no laws respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." We had that in our lesson on "civil government" in school just a few days ago.

George—That's it, exactly, Charlie; Sunday laws are contrary to the Constitution and take away our religious liberty; and the paper I spoke of shows that Sunday laws are not only contrary to the Constitution, but also contrary to the words of Christ, for you know he says, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." The things of Cæsar means the government of the State, and the things of God, the government of God. To keep a day as a Sabbath holy unto God is something that belongs alone to God, and the State should have nothing to do with it.

Charlie—Would it not be wrong for me to work on Sunday?

George—If you believed that Sunday is the day that God commands you to rest on and then you should go right on and work on that day, you would be sinning against God, and you would have to give an account to Him alone and to no one else. But suppose you believed that the seventh day or Saturday is the Sabbath and kept it, as many good people do, and as the commandment plainly tells us to do, and then went quietly about your work on the first day of the week, wherein would you harm any one else? Could not everybody else go to meeting or stay at home or do as they liked just the same as though you were sitting in the house or at church, or just as they do on other days of the week.

Charlie—Why, yes, I should think so. But would I not be casting a bad influence if I should work on Sunday?

George—No; not if you believed that the seventh day and not the first day is the Sabbath. Suppose you honestly believed that the seventh day or Saturday is the Sabbath, and that you ought to keep it, and that God commanded you to work six days, and then you would keep Sunday because you were afraid or ashamed to work on that day; what kind of an influence would that be? Would that not be a bad influence rather than to go on and work on the first day as God commands you, and as He himself did? and would not the State be exerting a worse influence in compelling you to keep Sunday contrary to your religious convictions than you would were you to act according to your convictions.

Charlie—I believe it would, and I am almost convinced that Sunday laws are wrong and Sunday-keeping, too. Are you going to keep Saturday, George?

George—If I ever make a profession of religion and join a church I will keep the seventh day. I could not do otherwise, as the commandment is just as plain as words can make it.

Charlie—I wish you would bring those papers over and let me read them; I want to post up on this question.

George—I will be glad to do so, for I know you will be interested. But I suppose we will have to go, or we will be late to school. I want to see you and have another talk with you on this subject.

Charlie—All right; come over to our house next Sunday and bring your Bible and those papers, and we will study up on this question.

George—If nothing happens I will. Good day.

The Ohio Baseball Sunday Law Decision.

THE decision of Judge Ong, in the Common Pleas Court at Cleveland, Ohio, July 9, in the case of the State of Ohio vs. John Powell, representing the Cleveland baseball club, adds one more chapter to the fund of legal literature respecting the validity of Sunday laws. The substance of Judge Ong's ruling (which we take from the Cleveland Recorder, of July 10), is as follows;—

"It will be observed that Section 7032A provides that 'whoever on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, participates in or exhibits to the public with or without charge for admittance, in any building, room, ground, garden or other place in this State, any baseball playing, he or she shall, on complaint made within twenty days thereafter, be fined in any sum not exceeding $100, or be confined in the county jail not exceeding six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.' It is perfectly apparent to the mind of the court, and we think it must be to every one learned in the law, that such a statute must and does rest for its validity on one of two predicates, to wit: it must either be unlawful or an offense to play or exhibit baseball on Sunday because it is Sunday, or it must rest, in order to be an offense, upon the fact that it is an immoral game or exhibition falling clearly within the police power or regulation, and therefore, a crime and a violation of its provision punishable as therein provided.

"Can the statute, then, be upheld, and is it a constitutional act as resting upon the predicate that it is unlawful and a crime to play baseball on Monday, or any other day of the week. If it rests upon the fact or is made a crime because it is played on Sunday, then it is clearly in conflict with the constitution and cannot be upheld, because the doctrine is well settled, and especially in Ohio, that all statutes which inhibit common labor,—statutes that refer to 'the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday,' are not enacted or enforced to compel the observance of that day as a day of religious worship, but as a day set apart by the statutes of Ohio as a day of rest.

"No statute could be upheld under our constitution for one moment that required the people of the State of Ohio to attend any kind or any form of religious service on Sunday or any other day of the week. Such an act would be clearly in violation of the spirit and language of the organic law of the State, but no more so than would be a statute which undertakes to make the omission or commission of an act a crime because it is done or omitted to be done on the first day of the week.

"Again, if the power did exist to enact the statute under consideration and inhibit the exhibition or playing of baseball upon Sunday, then it would be clearly void because it makes no exception in behalf of that class of people who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as Sabbath. The Supreme Court of Ohio have two or three times very distinctly declared that a statute providing for the observing of the first day of the week, as a day of rest, is void and unconstitutional unless it contains a provision exempting those who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as Sunday for the operation of the statute.

"Whether the legislature of Ohio may or may not enact and place upon the statute books a section that would be constitutional and valid as inhibiting the playing of baseball on the first day of the week, we are not called upon to say; but clear it is to the mind of the court that as the statute now exists, enacted and grouped among a lot of immoral games, such as gambling, sale of intoxicating liquors, etc., the provision therein referring to the game of baseball is unconstitutional and void."

This decision, while its practical effect is against Sunday legislation, still comes far short of what might have been stated with perfect truthfulness, upon the subject. The judge discriminates between rest and religious worship, two things which are distinct from each other in all ordinary cases, but which blend in one when we come to the matter of the observance of the Sabbath. Hence his argument at this point is defective. But this is purely a matter of religious belief—a truth which rests wholly upon a scriptural basis; and it serves here to illustrate the fact that a Sunday law must, in its very nature, involve a religious controversy.

The court which is called to pass upon the validity of a Sunday law cannot avoid coming in contact with a religious question; namely, whether the mere act of resting on Sunday is or is not an act of religious worship. And this is a question which no lawyer or judge, as such, is competent to answer. It is answered by revelation, and by that alone.

Hence a Sabbath law is, in its very nature, a thing which has no business outside the province of religion, and therefore no proper place upon any of the statute books of civil government.

The "Calf Path" Reviewed.

BY MRS. HENRIETTA REAMS.

THE CALF PATH.

ONE day through the primeval wood,
A calf walked home, as good calves should,
But made a trail, all bent askew—
A crooked trail, as all calves do.

Since then two hundred years have fled,
And I infer the calf is dead;

But still he left behind his trail,
And thereby hangs my moral tale.

The trail was taken up next day
By a lone dog that passed that way;
And then a wise bell-wether sheep,
Pursued the trail o'er vale and steep,
And drew the flock behind him too,
As good bell-wethers always do.
And from that day, o'er hill and glade,
Through those old woods a path was made,
And many men wound in and out
And dodged and turned and bent about,
And uttered words of righteous wrath
Because 'twas such a crooked path;
But still they followed—do not laugh,
The first migration of that calf;
And through this winding wood-way stalked,
Because he wobbled as he walked.

This forest path became a lane
That bent and turned and turned again.

This crooked lane became a road
Where many a poor horse with his load
Toiled on beneath the burning sun,
And traveled some three miles in one;
And thus a century and a half
They trod the footsteps of that calf.

The years passed on in swiftness fleet;
The road became a village street,
And this, before men were aware,
A city's crowded thoroughfare.
And soon the central street was this
Of a renowned metropolis;
And men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that calf;
Each day a hundred thousand rout
Followed the zigzag calf about,
And o'er his crooked journey went
The traffic of a continent;
A hundred thousand men were led
By one calf near three centuries dead;
They followed still his crooked way
And lost a hundred miles a day,
For thus such reverence is lent
To well-established precedent.

A moral lesson this might teach
Were I ordained and called to preach,
For men are prone to go it blind
Along the calf paths of the mind,
And work away from sun to sun
To do what other men have done;
They follow in the beaten track
And out and in and forth and back,
And still their devious course pursue
To keep the path the others do.
But how the wise old wood-gods laugh,
Who saw the first primeval calf!
Ah! many things this tale might teach
But I am not ordained to preach.

—Sam W. Foss.

This parable of the "calf path" is a telling and truthful one, and worthy of more serious thought than the humorous spirit of the poem is likely to inspire.

It has ever been the policy of the Deceiver to make a jest of the vital issues of life, and, by holding up a ludicrous phase of truth, banish all serious reflections and convictions.

Nevertheless, there is illustrated in this satire a law of nature as fatal to faith in God as our fallen nature and the author of the first "crooked path" can make it.

THE "CALF PATHS" OF THE MIND.

There is a well-known psychological fact known as the law of habit, which may be simply stated thus—

Every time we think, feel or act in a certain direction, there is created by that thought, feeling or action a tendency to think, feel or act in the same direction again. Every time we think, feel or act over that line it becomes easier to do so, until eventually, that which at first required an effort, we do mechanically without any effort of the will or intelligence.

The first thought or feeling cut out a channel or groove, as it were, which becomes the "trail," to use the figure, of all our future thoughts and feelings on that subject, until some new conviction cuts out a new channel and alters the course of our thought path; and even then our thoughts and actions often involuntarily take the old path from sheer force of habit.

This is, in brief, the key-note to all established human custom, law, usage, tradition and philosophy.

THE "CALF PATHS" OF TRADITION.

Away back at the fountain heads and springs of the human race, the ancestral fathers, heroes, and leaders of the several races set for generations to come the customs, usages and traditions which have constituted the peculiar characteristics of that race, nation, tribe, clan or family, from time immemorial.

Whatever were their peculiar conceptions of propriety, hospitality, civility, utility or devotion, they passed from being confirmed personal habits to family customs and usage, and ultimately became the written or unwritten laws of etiquette, government and religion of the tribe, clan or nation. However much they may have become expanded, modified or embellished, or degenerated in their development, the original concept remains, time-honored and revered, because of its antiquity and family, tribal or national associations.

So natural is the tendency in the human family to follow in the wake of established precedent. So by the influence of earliest associations and by the power of confirmed habit do the tides of human thought, feeling and belief flow on in the old traditional ruts, enlarging, deepening, broadening, accumulating influence, prestige and power, as they flow down the ages.

Now and then a reformer, moved by the abuses and corruptions of the traditional path, and fired with zeal and eloquence for a new theory, cuts out a new channel of thought and becomes a founder of a new system, sect or government.

He, the "father" of that thought, wins "children" to his idea, and they in turn bequeath it to their children, who grow up in the path of that thought, system or creed, and so it is inherited from generation to generation, and winning new adherents from the old traditional path, it grows into a broad and beaten thoroughfare of intellectual life.

THE CROOKEDNESS OF HUMAN CONCEPTS.

That it is impossible for the path of human tradition to be anything but a "crooked" one is clearly set forth in the Scriptures of truth:—

"If any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know." 1 Cor. 8:2.

"The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise that they are vain." 1 Cor. 3:20. Again, the Word says:—

"Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness." 1 Cor. 3:18, 19.

And again in 1 Cor. 1:19, 20: "For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and I will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

In 1 Cor. 2:6, 7, 8, the apostle declares, "Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought: But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory. Which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." "Which all are to perish with the using, after the commandments and doctrines of men." Col. 2:8, 22.

How terrible was Christ's rebuke to the hypocrite Jews because they had "made the commandments of God of none effect" by their traditions! and he declared unto them, "But in vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 15:1-9.

From the precedent of Eve's error down to this present day, all history witnesses to the Lord's testimony that this is "a crooked and perverse generation" (Deut. 32:5; Ps. 125:5; Phil. 2:15).

Since, then, it is impossible for us with our natural powers and inclinations to form true right concepts (Prov. 20:24; 21:2; 16:9, 25); since "the world by wisdom have not known God;" since all 'osophies and 'isms of men are "in vain" to teach us the way of truth and right, and without it we shall perish; to whom, then, shall we look for truth and righteousness and life? Where is the source, the fountain-head, of truth and life (for they are inseparable) that we may "seek" and "find" right concepts, true judgments and understanding, by which we may "make straight paths for our feet?"

The words of Jesus are our answer: "I am the way (Matt. 7:13, 14), the truth (John 17:7), and the life (1 John 5:11, 12): no man cometh unto the Father but by me" (John 14:6 also Acts 4:12).

"For with thee is the fountain of life; in thy light shall we see light." Ps. 36:9.

"In whom (Christ) are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." "For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the godhead bodily." Col. 2:3, 9.

Here, then, is the Source of all true wisdom, and knowledge, and life; and without Him we "shall not see life." John 3:35, 36. But how is He revealed to us?

Jesus has answered that too. "For it is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." Luke 4:4. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." John 6:63. Paul admonishes the Colossians, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom." Col. 3:16.

David testified by the Spirit of God, "Thy word is true from the beginning, and every one of thy righteous judgments endureth forever." "Therefore I esteem all things to be right; and I hate every false way." Ps. 119:160, 128.

"The Word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing assunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and the marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Heb. 4:12.

Ah, when the Word of God comes into our soul it breaks down all partition walls of "caste" and "set," and ploughs straight through the elegantly-paved thoroughfares of false etiquette, false creed, false sophistries and philosophies of men; for it is "no respecter of persons," titles, nor traditions, though they be hoary with age, and can number their worshipers by millions. It cuts straight through the crookedness of our old accustomed channels of thought, and it seems verily like the "dividing asunder of soul and spirit," "joints and marrow," to surrender to that Word our life-long habits of thought and action; to step out of the beaten path of custom, and walk alone with God in the "straight and narrow way that leadeth unto life." But "blessed is he that is not offended in me," saith the Lord. Let the surgical Word do its blessed work. It is written of its mission, "I wound to heal."

It has ever been the merciful endeavor of the gospel to straighten every crooked path (Isa. 40:4), as it is the settled and malignant purpose of the Prince of Error to make crooked the straight path of the just by all "the deceivableness of unrighteousness" of which he is the master magician.

WHILE the church forces are working to have a general Sunday rest law accepted as a panacea for the ills of the laboring men, the latter are bent on settling the labor problem by a shortening of the working day. According to an outline of their plan given in the July Christian Endeavorer, their aim is to secure an eight-hour day of work, to begin with May 1, 1898. By this means they hope to secure work for the unemployed, two millions of whom could, it is said, be accommodated by this reduction of the working hours. Also "better work," by a reduction of the strain of ten hours' labor, and an "opportunity for social, intellectual, and spiritual culture."

These are precisely the things which a general Sunday law is professedly designed to secure. Whether the church forces will win over the federations of labor to their proposition or not, remains to be seen.

BESIDES the "Christian Citizenship League," there is in the political reform field the "Good Citizens' League," which is now fairly launched, with headquarters at Washington, D. C. The purposes of this league are defined in Article II. of its Constitution, as follows:—

"1. To unite for efficient and concerted action, and for mutual encouragement, all friends of good government. 2. To promote the study and practice of citizen duty from the standpoint of the Bible and good morals. 3. To agitate the question of purity in politics, to the end that its members, together with all other good citizens, shall be active in attending the primaries and conventions of the parties, thereby securing the nomination for public office of 'able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain.' 4. To foster truth, and the diffusion of knowledge concerning the principles of American institutions among all the people, the alleviation of suffering, the uplifting of humanity, and as far as possible, the abatement of poverty. 5. The social intercourse and improvement of the members."

The president of the league is Hon. S. E. Nicholson, of Indiana.

THE pastor of the South Street Methodist Church, of Brockton, Mass., Rev. O. W. Scott, in a recent Sunday discourse, advocated a "strike" of railroad men and electric men who were "compelled to work on the sabbath." He said he believed that such a strike would succeed, because of the moral and material help which would be contributed to it.

There are signs which point to a closer union of the Sunday and laboring men's movements, by which a great impetus will be given to the former.

WE have a foe to our national prosperity in private immorality. Intemperance that debauches the individual will ruin the nation. The strength of a republic is found in the character of its citizens. If anything is treason that saps the nation's life-blood, that weakens her defenses, then that is treason which robs her citizens of strength of body, clearness of brain and pureness of morals. We need a body of patriotic citizens who are brave enough to be true to themselves.—Pastor First M. E. Church, Salt Lake City.

WE hope to be able in our next issue to present again the customary contribution from the pen of Jas. T. Ringgold, under the head of "News, Notes and Comments."

WE begin next week a series of five very instructive articles, by A. F. Ballenger, under the title, "The Faithful Bride and the Fallen Woman."

THE best time to begin in the work of advancing the cause of human freedom, is To-day.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy, Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
" " Six months,	-	-	-	-	.50.
" " Three "	-	-	-	-	.35.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY.

Is most healthfully and beautifully located. Combines religious and industrious with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

Sacred History, Sacred Music, and the Holy Scriptures.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year. Vegetarian diet. For further particulars and calender, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

50 YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

TRADE MARKS,
DESIGNS,
COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain, free, whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Oldest agency for securing patents in America. We have a Washington office. Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice in the

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,

beautifully illustrated, largest circulation of any scientific journal, weekly, terms $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Specimen copies and HAND BOOK ON PATENTS sent free. Address

MUNN & CO.,
361 Broadway, New York.

AGENTS' OUTFIT FREE. No Capital

Weekly sales pay big money. as low as $24.00. BICYCLE Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere on approval, direct from our factory. ALPINE CYCLE CO., Dept. 68, Cincinnati, O.

The Gospel Primer.

A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE - - - .25

Address this Office.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELDON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., Litt. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of Harvard University.

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address,
Pacific Press Publishing Co.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y., "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business

Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

FIGHTING AGAINST

GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library.

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

READ THIS ANNOUNCEMENT CAREFULLY;

 IT WILL APPEAR BUT ONCE!

Beginning with this week,

The AMERICAN SENTINEL

Will be sent to any person, not now a subscriber to it, until JANUARY 1st next, for

☀ ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. ☀

This offer is made solely for the purpose of introducing the paper among those who are not now readers of it, and furnishes an opportunity to do real genuine never before given, which every friend of religious liberty should be eager to improve.

MISSIONARY WORK IN ITS BEHALF

In his day, Jefferson declared the time would come when the people would

GROW CARELESS OF THEIR LIBERTIES;

We are face to face with conditions which indicate that that time is now here, and

ALL THE PEOPLE SHOULD KNOW IT.

No paper can so effectually do this work as the SENTINEL and it ought to have a place in a

HUNDRED THOUSAND HOMES

In this land by the close of the year. Will not every one of the 15,000 men and women who compose the SENTINEL family lend a helping hand in placing it there?

This offer will remain open only until SEPTEMBER 1st. It should be taken advantage of at once!!

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond Street, New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, JULY 29, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 30.
Single Copy, 3 cents

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

FREEDOM. to be enjoyed, must be deserved.

THERE is no other foundation of national greatness than individual virtue.

"NONE are more hopelessly enslaved than those who falsely believe they are free."

ABOUT the only proof that many people can give that they are free, is that they are residents of what is called a "free country."

CONGRESS, in combination with the sugar Trust, is just now affording the country some object lessons on the point of what may be expected of a "Christian nation."

THE great gold mines just discovered in the Klondike region are as nothing in comparison with the gold mines the Trust magnates of the country have discovered in the pockets of the masses who are compelled to buy their commodities.

THERE are plenty of people in the world who are willing to "contend" for the faith, by argument or by the sword, and even to lay down their lives for it on the field of carnal strife. But it is living for the faith—living out the faith in its meekness and gentleness and longsuffering—that tests the character.

GREAT attention is being given in the religious world to some alleged sayings of Christ heretofore unknown, discovered among documents recently unearthed at Behneseh, Egypt. If people would only give as much attention to the authentic record of Christ's sayings which they have in the Bible, their time would be spent to better purpose. There is plenty of meaning yet in the familiar sayings of the Lord which remains to be discerned. It is just as well and perhaps better to discover new truth in an old saying, as to discover some new saying, especially when the authorship of the latter is involved in great uncertainty.

THE world lost freedom in the beginning by departing from the truth, by turning to paganism; and those who would regain that freedom must turn from paganism to the truth—the gospel.

Pagan or Christian—Which?

IN view of the facts of the every-day history of Greece and Rome, it is strange that anybody would ever think of giving the professed wisdom of these nations any place whatever in any system of education.

Yet, however such a thing may be excused in an education that is altogether of this world, and whose goal is only this world—education by the State—it is impossible to justify it in education that makes any claim whatever to being Christian.

Greece and Rome were absolutely pagan. Their education, their ideals, their literature, were essentially pagan. And what place can paganism ever properly have in Christian education? Pagan text-books in a Christian school! Pagan standards in a Christian education! The things are positively contradictory.

Christianity and paganism are at the most extreme opposites. Christianity came from heaven: paganism came from beneath. Christianity is of God. Paganism is of the devil. To give pagan literature preference over Christian literature, is plainly to prefer paganism to Christianity. To give the pagan classics a more prominent place in any study than is given to the Bible, is certainly nothing else than to allow that the author of paganism is worthy to be believed and followed more than is the Author of Christianity.

In the Bible, God reveals himself as a teacher. "I am the Lord thy God which teacheth thee to profit." "Who teacheth like Him?" "Learn of me."

Shall it be for one moment allowed then, and of all people by those who profess to believe in the God of the Bible, that Socrates, or Plato, or Cicero, or any other pagan, or any other man, is a better teacher than God is?

In the Bible, God reveals himself as the Source of the highest and best, indeed of all true, wisdom. His word, the Bible, is the storehouse of this wisdom which he has given to the children of men.

Shall, then, the words of men, and of such men as were the authors of these classics, be given the preference over the word of God? Why should the words of these men, or of any other men, be given, or allowed, more prominence in any line of study, than is given to the word of God? and of all people by those who profess to believe the Bible to be the word of God?

Are the doubting queries of the proud ignorance of Socrates worthy of more consideration than are the certain truths of Him "that is perfect in knowledge"? Are the vain imaginings of Plato to be accepted and studied as philosophy in preference to the original ideas of Him who is very Wisdom itself? Shall the dark abominations of the mythology of Homer and Virgil and other Greek and Roman poets occupy the minds of the youth, rather than the pure glories of the heaven which has been opened to men through the moral perfection of Jesus Christ? What right to the name of Christian has any school, institution, or scheme of education, that does do the things here indicated?

Yet the truth is that that which professes to be Christian education, does do these very things all over this and other professedly Christian lands. One of the leading infidels of the United States was graduated from the the theological department of a college which was "founded for the purpose of fitting young men for the ministry" of the gospel, and in which all the teachers had to be Christians. And of the instruction there given he has made the following extremely suggestive statement:—

"It struck me as rather curious that in a Christian college the main drift of all its teachings was to pagan literature. Hardly any attention was given to the Bible except in a formal way. That which really interested the students and professors was Greek and Latin. Homer, Xenophon, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Livy, and Cæsar, entirely superseded Moses, Abraham, David, Solomon, and even Jesus. The spirit of the college curriculum was non-Christian writings."

In this statement, the students in nine tenths of the professed Christian, and even theological, institutions in our land will readily recognize their own experience. The result of such training cannot possibly be anything else than infidelity. True it may not in all cases be the positive, outspoken, and professed infidelity of the one from whom we have quoted the above passage. It may be the infidelity of the "higher criticism," of the "Ethical Culture," of the "scientific," or of the "philosophical" style. Yet it will none the less be infidelity. It will be paganism as really as was that of the authors, in whose "learning" they have been trained.

It is a recognized fact that "first impressions are most lasting." It is a law of the mind that first impressions shall be the most lasting. In the study of a strange language, the student enters a world as entirely new as was the real world when he first became conscious that he was in it. The first thoughts and impressions that he gets in that language will be the most lasting and will inevitably color all that ever come after. Let the first thoughts that a student ever obtains in Greek, be pagan thoughts, then let him begin the study of the Bible in Greek, and the pure and exalted thoughts of the words of the Lord will be over-shadowed and darkened by the pagan notions that have already pre-occupied the mind. This is the whole secret of the "Higher Criticism," the so-called scientific study of the Bible. The first studies of these men in Greek, for instance, were in pagan Greek. All their thoughts in Greek were pagan thoughts. The whole mold and impress of their mind, in Greek, was pagan. Then when they come to read the Bible in Greek, instead of reading it with God's thoughts in it they read it with pagan thoughts only. Thus God's Greek was, in their minds, dragged down and confused with the pagan Greek. And as they knew full well that the world has got far beyond the ideas of the Greeks, when God's Greek is confused with pagan Greek, it is easy enough for them to "see" that the world has also got "far beyond" the Bible. Thus as it is perfectly proper and scientific to test pagan Greek by advanced views, and accept or reject its statements accordingly, so when God's Greek is confused with pagan Greek it is equally proper and "scientific" to test the statements of the Lord in the same way.

Thus once more, and by precisely the same means, it has come to pass that what the Greeks knew is sought after as wisdom, while what God has said is considered foolishness. And what God has said is considered foolishness just because of the fact that what the Greeks produced is accepted as wisdom. And the same result is fast coming to pass, that came before—by this very "wisdom" the world does not know God.

At the first, when Greek thought prevailed, "the world by wisdom knew not God." It was by means of that very Greek "wisdom" that the world was caused not to know God. This same result will surely follow to-day wherever Greek thought is allowed to prevail. And as it is indisputable that in the great mass of the educational institutions of the land—professed Christian as well as other—the whole educational system is corrupted with this same Greek and Roman "wisdom," the result can be nothing else than that the world will again be caused not to know God: and the end of it must be only that which came to Greece and Rome.

The sum of it all is, that in anything and everything that makes any claim to being Christian education, the word of God—the Bible—must be given the leading place in every line of study that may be proposed or undertaken. And any would-be teacher who is not prepared to give to the Bible just this place in every line of study, is not fit to teach in any Christian school. Such teaching only is truly scientific as well as truly right. Only such a school can be truly called a Christian school.

It is estimated that $2,000,000,000 of war material was afloat on the occasion of the late naval review at Spithead, Eng. "Evidently," says the New York Observer, "peace nowadays comes at a high price."

The Power of Christianity.

THE Christian religion is simply a manifestation of the life of Christ. The Christian is "dead," and his life is "hid with Christ in God." Col. 3:3. As expressed in the language of Paul in his letter to the Galatians, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2:20. As "God was in Christ," revealing himself to the world, and "reconciling the world unto himself," when Jesus walked through Judea, so Christ is in his followers, and thereby God is still manifest to the world in human flesh. Col. 1:27.

This is the testimony which the world has that Christianity is true and that Jesus Christ exists to-day as the Saviour of fallen men. The world beholds him in the persons of his true followers; and beholding him, they see also his Father, of whom he is the express image. John 14:9, 10.

Christ does not give to the world hearsay evidence concerning himself. He does not ask men to believe on him because it is recorded that over eighteen hundred years ago he lived as a man on the earth, teaching the kingdom of God and working miracles. He does not ask them to believe because some person says that all this is true. To the question, Is there a Christ, the Christian answers, Yes. And to the query, How do you know? he replies: Because he is living with me. And that answer would be accepted as primary evidence in any court of law.

The world may scoff at the doctrines and creeds of the churches. It may ridicule the statements of Scripture and appeal to history and to "reason" to prove that Christianity is all a myth. But when it meets Christ face to face, it finds evidence which it cannot gainsay. All its specious arguments fall to the ground, and it is obliged to confess that there is a "mystery of godliness"—God manifest in human flesh. It sees a life that it knows is not the life of the individual as he once was—a life which bears the unmistakable stamp of the divine.

The Christian knows that Jesus Christ lives, by the evidence of his own experience; for he has been crucified, buried, and raised to life again with Christ; and Christ living in him, the world has also visible evidence that Christianity is true, and that its Saviour is no myth. It matters not that but few of those who profess Christianity have been "born again,"—that the vast majority of nominal Christians give to the world no sign of the life of that divine One whose name they have taken. If in but one individual there is presented the mystery of God dwelling in human flesh, the claims of Christianity are proved. And now, as in all ages, there are a number, scattered through all lands and among all races, through whom this testimony of a living Christ is given to the world.

This is the power of godliness which is to convince the world and draw men and women from it into the pathway of righteousness. If all the church were but in this condition, Christianity would sweep all countries like a mighty tidal wave. But when the church seeks for power from the State, as she is doing in all lands to-day, she denies before the world that Christ exists and justifies the world in its unbelief.

Reverse the Order.

At the opening of the great Christian Endeavor convention in San Francisco, the vast audience, in response to successive strokes of the chairman's hammer, responded with the words,—

"The world for Christ;"
 "The nation for Christ;"
 "Myself for Christ."

The arrangement of these phrases may have been only an accident, but this order of conquest is the one adopted by very many who start out to be reformers, with the result that no reform is accomplished. "Myself for Christ" belongs first in all true Christian endeavor, and then if we take care that we ourselves continue to be "for Christ," God will take care of the result in the nation and in the world.

The Christian's Warfare.

For what does the Christian soldier fight? A Roman Catholic journal, The Pilot (Boston), answers the question thus:—

"The Christian soldier fights for his country, sustained not by the hope of subsequent political rewards, nor even by the nobler expectation of the gratitude of posterity, but simply for the love of his country, and his conviction that it is his duty before God to lay down his life for her at need."

And this is about the idea which many Protestants hold on the same point. But it is not Bible doctrine. The very first thing Christianity requires of any person, under all circumstances, is that he lay down his life. He must be "dead," and his life "hid with Christ in God." Col. 3:3. "Subsequent political rewards" and the "gratitude of posterity" are ruled out altogether. And God never calls an individual to lay down his life for the sake of his country. He must lay it down because it is full of sin, and take in its place the life of Christ, which is all righteousness. "Whosoever will save his life," said Jesus, "the same shall lose it." The truly Christian soldier lets Christ live in him (Gal. 2:20), and by that life wages ceaseless warfare against all sin.

Religious Liberty in South America.

THE Rev. John Lee, chairman of the Committee on Religious Liberty for Protestants in South America, is still endeavoring to get the papacy to grant religious liberty to Protestants in the Catholic countries of that continent. Having failed to accomplish anything by appeals to the pope and Cardinal Gibbons, he has finally addressed a letter to President McKinley, to which he has received through the State department the following reply:—

"On October 26th last our Minister at Lima reported that the Peruvian bill concerning the registration of the marriages of foreigners failed for lack of agreement between the two houses. The Senate passed a bill satisfactory to the foreign element, and the House of Deputies amended it by providing for civil marriage. The session came to an end before an agreement could be reached.

"On March 31st last the department advised our Legation at Lima of its hopes that Peru would adopt a marriage law more consonant with the general practice of modern nations, and expressed its concern lest the civil rights of American citizens in that quarter might be impaired through the deficiency of existing law. It was further stated that this Government would be glad to learn that the subject would be revived at the next session of the Congress and satisfactorily disposed of."

It is in respect to the marriage laws of Peru and some other South American countries that the disabilities imposed upon Protestants are most conspicuous. The papacy disclaimed all responsibility in the matter, on the ground that the restrictions placed upon Protestants were in the nature of civil regulations, and a letter received from the "Cardinal Secretary of State" through Cardinal Gibbons, stated that "the Protestants in Peru, far from being restricted in the free exercise of their worship, are rather accorded a larger degree of toleration than is compatible with a strict construction of the political constitution of these countries." Now, as ever in past times, religious intolerance seeks refuge behind the "law of the land."

The appeal to the United States Government was made on the strength of the following testimony touching the situation in Peru, in a letter from Dr. Thomas B. Wood, a Protestant missionary:—

"Since the coming of Mgr. Macchi, the apostolic delegate, to Peru, we have been falling under a series of new restrictions beginning in December, 1893, with a local decision excluding our marriages from civil registry in Callao, and ending in November, 1895, with a supreme executive decree outlawing them sweepingly, and declaring that their previous recognition had been contrary to the constitution, without stating in what respect. The decision of 1893 specifically named the Methodist Episcopal Church as having its marriages excluded from civil registry, with no need of such specific mention, as the decision was made to cover all marriages not solemnized by a Roman Catholic priest.

"After I had started our work in Lima and transferred it from the place of its beginning to larger and more central quarters, the archbishop wrote officially to the executive, asking that my operations be stopped. His ground was not a charge that I was violating any law, but the sweeping pretension that my propaganda was from the nature of it hostile to the State religion, and, therefore, hostile to the State."

And this charge of hostility to the State is the very one which Protestants in the United States are trying to establish against their fellow Protestants who oppose the disabilities sought to be put upon them by Sunday laws. The papacy is familiar with all these make-shifts. If Protestants would not refuse to see, they would know that in this they are following in the track of the church of Rome.

The Wisdom of Faith.

THE Bible says that to suffer oppression with the people of God is better than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. This was said of Moses, who chose rather to be persecuted for Christ's sake than to sit on the throne of the Pharaohs. It was faith that gave Moses the wisdom to make that choice; and events have amply demonstrated the value of that faith. To-day, as we know from the testimony of God's Word, Moses lives in the midst of the bliss and glory of heaven. But where would he have been if he had chosen the throne of Egypt? The question is answered by this incident which occurred not long ago, related in a London journal:—

"Brugsch Bey, the famous explorer of the tombs of ancient Egypt, who discovered the mummy believed to be that of the Pharaoh who oppressed the Israelites, recently found another mummy, on the coffin of which was the royal cartouche, indicating that the body was that of one of the Pharaohs. He was delighted with his discovery, and with great care packed it up for conveyance to Cairo. On arriving at the railway station, he was directed to have his 'luggage' put in the luggage-van. The Bey was concerned about its safety and insisted on its going in the carriage with him. The officials consented on the condition that the fare was paid as for a living passenger. Brugsch Bey accordingly paid Pharaoh's fare, and the mummy went in the passenger coach. At the custom house of Cairo a new difficulty arose. The custom officers demanded duty. The Bey explained that the package was the mummy of Pharaoh, and that no duty could be levied upon it. But the officers were convinced that it might be made dutiable under some category, and they searched their list for a suitable class. Finally, they decided to charge for it as dried fish, on which a duty is imposed. The Bey scorned to contend about the small charge involved, and the mummy having been weighed and the duty paid, the dead body of Pharaoh entered the capital of Egypt as a package of dried fish. With such contempt did they treat the body of a potentate, who, in his lifetime, doubtless received the homage of all who came into his presence. In his case with startling force were the words of the prophet fulfilled that the terrible ones shall be despised and shall become as chaff. Isa. 24:5."

Our "Moral Progress."

AS SHOWN BY A COMPARISON OF THE ANCIENT GLADIATOR WITH THE MODERN WAGE SLAVE.

"Twentieth Century," July 17.

A LEARNED and elegant historian has devoted considerable vivid rhetoric to a presentation of the gladiatorial pastimes of old Rome. He tells us that these popular diversions were an amazing demonstration of the moral degradation of mankind in antiquity. "They display," he observes, with the irritating fatuity from which even the profoundest learning is not exempt, "more vividly than any mere philosophical disquisition the abyss of depravity into which it is possible for human nature to sink. They furnish us with striking proofs of the reality of the moral progress we have attained." Here we have an echo of the Pharisee who stood up in the temple to pray and thanked the Lord he was not as this publican.

The type of Roman imperial society being military its horrors were of a sanguinary character. The type of modern competitive society being industrial, its horrors are exempt from bloodshed, but they are horrors. Horror for horror, the ancient wage slave, the gladiator, was not more barbarously treated than the modern wage slave, the toiler. Posterity, which alone can pass final judgment upon this question, may reasonably be expected to conclude that if anything the wage slave of the nineteenth century was rather worse off than his fellow of the first.

Yet the gladiatorial shows of antiquity were undoubtedly horrible. They owe their origin, it seems, to religious fervor, and gladiators were hired at first to fight at funerals. They slew one another at great men's tombs in order to propitiate the immortal gods in favor of the deceased. The Roman nobles were in the habit of bequeathing large sums for this singular purpose. The individuals who witnessed these combats acquired a passionate taste for the excitement of them, and before very long the funeral of a rich man was the occasion for the gathering of an enormous mob eager to see the gladiators fight.

Two sons achieved some note for filial piety as early as 264 B. C. by compelling three pairs of gladiators to fight at the funeral of their father. Julius Cæsar was the first to have these combats at the obsequies of a woman. He was so much attached to his daughter that when she died it required some unusually sanguinary fights to assuage his woe. At last the public appreciation of these contests acquired such intensity that the politicians provided them gratuitously for the voters. No candidate for high office under the Roman republic, and particularly during the career of Cicero, could hope to be elected unless he hired an army of gladiators to slaughter each other in the arena before the assembled people. . . .

The number of these trained fighters in Rome became so large during the reign of Augustus that he felt alarmed and restricted their importation. He further deemed that no greater number than 120 should fight at once. His successor, Tiberius, endeavored in other ways to abate the ardor for gladiatorial spectacles, but in vain. The nobles maintained whole regiments of fighters in private gymnasia of their own. The games attained the most colossal proportions and the slaughter was on horribly wholesale scales. Even rich tradesmen kept their gladiators and exhibited them in ferocious battles as a means of attaining social position.

To the modern mind the scene in a Roman arena is all but incredible. Tens of thousands of spectators were seated about the ring. At the signal, wild animals, lions, tigers, elephants, wolves, all made savage by hunger and ill treatment, were brought within the circle. Then the gladiators emerged by the score and fell to fighting the beasts and one another until the arena swam with blood and the ground was heaped with corpses of the slain.

The gladiatorial shows demoralized the population on a vast scale. "It is abundantly evident," says Lecky, "both from history and from present experience, that the instinctive shock or natural feeling of disgust caused by the sight of the sufferings of man is not generally different from that which is caused by the sight of the sufferings of animals. The latter, to those who are not accustomed to it, is intensely painful. The former continually becomes by use a matter of absolute indifference." This is unquestionably true. We are not to suppose that the Romans lacked the finer feelings of humanity because they took delight in the sanguinary scenes of the circus. Far from it. The contemporaries of Cicero, of Virgil, of Horace, of Tibullus, gave abundant evidence of a nobility of mind and heart. . . . It simply happened that circumstances had made them utterly indifferent to human torture in a single respect.

If this seems incredible, we have but to look at the conditions prevalent in the industrial world to-day. We see on every side an indifference to human suffering in comparison with which the ancient Roman delight in savage slaughter is almost altruistic. The wealthy classes now look upon the slow agonies of the exploited masses with amazing indifference. Nothing is more characteristic of the degraded state of contemporary public opinion than the calmness with which revelations of the atrocity of the wagesystem are contemplated. The facts brought to light by the miners' strike are ample proof of this curious fact. One father of a family maintains six children on thirty cents a day. His seventh child died from inhaling coal gas when a month old. In one mining settlement the children fought savagely for a quart of milk until one little boy of seven cut open the head of his brother with his father's pick.

Fifty per cent. of the children in the mining camps were born dead last year. Thirty per cent. of the mothers died in child birth. The miners spend fourteen hours daily under ground. They live on meat rejected by the Boards of Health of the large cities as diseased when they get any meat to live on. They drink alcohol by the pint to keep warm in winter. Their clothing is a black mass of grimy, filthy rags. Nor are these a tithe of their ills. Every day some terrible fact is brought to light indicating that an enormous population is kept in a condition of suffering and despair absolutely horrifying. But how calm and unmoved we remain in the face of all this. The condition of the miners of this country is so much more terrible than the lot of the gladiators in ancient Rome that we should be ashamed of the comparison.

Nor is the contrast more favorable in other directions. It was shown in this city two weeks ago that the men who run freight elevators at the large receiving stations remain on duty thirteen hours out of the twenty-four at a wage of $1.45 per day. Some of these men have families to support. The very mention of such a thing ought to make us blush with shame for our social system. Any man who observes the employes of the elevated railroad in New York can see they suffer from overwork and under pay. They are gaunt, hungry, miserable objects. Every corporation with a public franchise is an instrument for a like degradation of the working classes. These wretched men are on duty early and late. They are absolute slaves. The still more atrocious wage slavery of children is contemplated with equal indifference. When we pause to reflect upon the conditions of modern civilization we are appalled by the hideous abomination of them. Suffering, misery, degradation, exploitation, protrude themselves upon the notice of all, but we have grown so indifferent that we do not even care.

If an ancient Roman could be summoned to argue this matter with a modern American it would not be easy to see which ought to come out better in the discussion. The Roman could point out that the agony of the gladiators was a short one. They were well treated and liberally paid. They did not have to go hungry and naked most of the time. A death of utter exhaustion and debility, brought about by weary years of slow starvation and grinding penury can scarcely be preferable to slaughter in a crowded arena, with the chance of proving the victor and thus becoming the idol of the capital of the world.

The moral to be drawn from the gladiatorial shows is not that we are superior to the ancient Romans, but that the constant presence of human suffering makes us at last indifferent to it. The whole ethical tone of society has been lowered by the conditions of modern capitalism. This is why men, otherwise enlightened enough, will calmly advocate the most fiendish cruelties in order "to keep the mob in check." Such men are as savage and ferocious as the Roman nobles in the time of Tiberius.

A True Theocracy.

BY E. J. WAGGONER.

It is quite common to speak of Israel as a theocracy. This is indeed what God designed it to be, and what it should have been, but what in the truest sense it never was. Least of all was Israel a theocracy when the people demanded an earthly king, "that we also may be like all the heathen," for in so doing they rejected God as their King. It is passing strange that people will refer to what Israel did in direct opposition to the wishes of God, as a warrant for similar action on the part of the church now, and to their rejection of God as evidence that they were ruled by his power.

The word "theocracy" is a combination of two Greek words, and means literally, "the rule of God." A true theocracy, therefore, is a body in which God is sole and absolute ruler. Such a government has rarely been seen on this earth, and never to any great extent. A true theocracy existed when Adam was first formed and placed in Eden, when "God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Gen. 1:31. God formed Adam of the dust of the ground, and set him over the works of his hands. He was made ruler "over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." Gen. 1:26. He therefore had all power given to him. But at his best state, when crowned with glory and honor, Adam was but dust, with no more power in himself than the dust on which he walked. Therefore the mighty power that was manifested in him was not his own power at all, but the power of God working in him. God was absolute Ruler, but it pleased him, so far as this earth was concerned, to reveal his power through man. During Adam's loyalty to God there was therefore a perfect theocracy on this earth.

Such a theocracy has never existed since, for man's fall was the acknowledging of Satan as the god of this world. But individually it existed in its perfection in Christ, the second Adam, in whose heart was God's law, and in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. When Christ shall have renewed the earth and restored all things as in the beginning, and there is but one fold and one Shepherd, one king in all the earth, that will be a perfect theocracy. The will of God will be done in all the earth as it now is in heaven.

But now is the time of preparation. Christ is now gathering out a people in whom his character will be reproduced, in whose hearts he will dwell by faith, so that each one of them, like himself, may "be filled with all the fulness of God." Eph. 3:17-19. These gathered ones constitute the church of Christ, which, as a whole, is "the fulness of him that filleth all in all." Eph. 1:22, 23. So while the true theocracy is first of all in the heart of individuals who day by day sincerely say to their heavenly Father, "Thine is the kingdom," the multitude of them that believe—the church—when perfectly joined together in the same mind by the Holy Spirit, constitutes the only true theocracy that has ever existed in this earth. When the church is apostate, it seeks by alliances with the world, by assuming kingly power, to exhibit a theocratic form of government, but it is only a counterfeit form, with no divine power, whereas God's true followers, few in number, and scattered throughout the world, and unknown to the nations, furnish an example of a real theocracy.

Through the prophet who opened his mouth to curse, but who instead uttered blessings, God said of his people Israel, "The people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations." Num. 23:9. The people of God are in the world, not of it, for the purpose of showing forth the excellency of Him who has called them out of darkness. But this they can do only as God is acknowledged as supreme. The church is the kingdom in which God rules alone, and all its power is his power, its only law God's law of love. It is God's voice alone that it hears and follows, and it is God's voice alone that speaks through it.

New Jersey's Sunday Law in Court.

FOUR members of the Arlington, N. J., baseball club, were, on the 16th inst. tried in the Criminal Court in Jersey City, for alleged violation of the "Vice and Immorality" Act, the offense being that of Sunday ball playing. The trial is thus described:—

"The defendants were playing ball on the previous Sunday, and were arrested by Captain McKaig and Detective Holtic at the instigation of the Rev. T. J. Komers, pastor of the Lafayette Reformed church. They are members of the Arlington baseball club, which has inclosed grounds near the Reformed church, and they played in the presence of the officers for the purpose of being arrested and making a test case.

"Captain McKaig admitted that the Rev. Mr. Komers had walked to the station on Sunday to make the complaint.

" 'Why didn't you arrest him for violating the law?' asked Lawyer Speer.

" 'He didn't violate any law,' answered the captain.

" 'Don't you know that it is a violation of the law to travel on Sunday except in a case of necessity or charity?'

" 'I do not.'

"Lawyer Speer read the statute, which provides 'that no traveling, worldly employment, or business, ordinary servile labor or work, either upon land or water (works of necessity or charity excepted), nor shooting, fishing, sporting, hunting, gunning, racing, or frequenting of tippling house, or any interludes or plays, dancing, singing, fiddling, or any music for the sake of merriment, nor any playing at football, fives, ninepins, bowls, long bullets or quoits, nor any other kind of playing sports, pastimes, or diversions shall be performed, used, or practised by any person or persons within this State on the Christian sabbath or first day of the week, commonly called Sunday.'

"The jury, after deliberating four hours, was unable to agree upon a verdict, and was discharged."

AN evidently timid sister—but a warm friend of the SENTINEL—writes:—

"I like the SENTINEL. It's the best paper of its kind I know of. I would like to get some to take advantage of your special offer on it but I don't know who would like to subscribe."

To all who find themselves in this situation, we would kindly suggest that they follow Job's example: "The cause which I knew not I searched out."

Connecticut's Sunday Law.

ACCORDING to reports sent us from some Connecticut journals, the new Sunday law in that State will not in most places be rigidly enforced. In Meriden, it is said, the law will remain practically a dead letter, owing to the difficulty of determining what are works of "mercy or necessity." This is certainly a just view of the statute. Even were it no infringement of religious freedom, it would still be void on the ground of indefiniteness. It does not undertake to specify what acts are to be classed as works of "mercy or necessity," and the individual is left without authority on the subject other than his own best judgment; which under such circumstances no person ought to be punished for using.

It Makes a Difference.

Popular Preacher.—It makes no difference which day you observe as the Sabbath, so that you observe one day in seven. The fourth commandment does not specify the seventh day of the week.

Sunday Law.—Allow me to make one correction. It makes no difference what day, provided that day be "the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday."

Popular Preacher.—Oh,—why,—yes; of course; that is what I meant. You know I am always one of your staunch supporters.

TOMMY—Pa, the Chinese invented gunpowder, didn't they?

MR. FIGG—Yes; but it never really amounted to much for killing purposes until the Christian nations took hold of it.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE FAITHFUL BRIDE AND THE FALLEN WOMAN.

THE last act of sin's awful tragedy is presented in the closing chapters of Revelation by means of the most startling symbolical scenes.

The two central symbols in these scenes are two wonderful women. The one wonderful because of her infinite purity, the other wonderful on account of her unspeakable shame. One is represented as "clean," the other as "filthy."

The striking contrast in character appears also in clothing. Of one it is written: "To her it was granted to be arrayed with fine linen, clean and white;" of the other, "and the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color decked with gold and precious stones and pearls." One is dressed in the righteousness of saints; the other is drunk with their blood. One is clad by her lawful husband, the other by those who share her shame. One is clothed by the King of heaven, the other by the kings of the earth; one with the loyal white of her heavenly King, and the other with the purple and scarlet of earthly courts. One faithfully waits for her husband from heaven, the other shamefully revels with the rulers of earth; one is a stranger to earth, the other is a stranger to heaven.

These two women have nothing in common. They symbolize opposing kingdoms; one is a friend of God, the other a friend of the world. Of one it is written: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of this world is enmity against God?" Of the other,

"Ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."

It is hardly necessary to state that these two women symbolize two churches, one "the church of a living God," the other, "the synagogue of Satan." Paul wrote to the church at Corinth, "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." All through the Scriptures a pure woman represents the true church of Christ, and an impure woman a fallen church.

Though the Lord left his church in a persecuting world, he did not leave her powerless. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." The story of the apostolic church, the church of the Holy Ghost, throbs with power:—

"All of one accord"—"a sound from heaven"—"a rushing mighty wind"—"tongues of fire"—"filled with the Holy Ghost"—"great power"—"pricked in their heart"—crying "what shall we do"—"three thousand souls" saved—lame man "leaping and praising God"—"wonder and amazement"—Pharisees frightened—soldiers afraid—hypocrites flee—Stephen steadfast—stoned to death—"Threatening and slaughter"—Saul prostrate—Paul "filled with the Holy Ghost"—"confounded the Jews"—stoned to death—dragged out of the city—resurrected—feet fast in the stocks—"midnight"—"praises unto God"—"a mighty earthquake"—"doors were opened"—"bands were loosed"—jailer converted—Herod vexes the church—"arrayed in royal apparel"—"the angel of the Lord smote him"—"eaten of worms"—"gave up the ghost"—"great wonders and miracles"—"much people was added unto the Lord"—"of the devout Greeks a great multitude"—"of the chief women not a few"—"a great company of priests were obedient unto the faith."

Oh, what an inspiring conflict! On the one side are stones and stocks, on the other, the Holy Ghost; on the one side principalities and powers, on the other side, "power from on high." On the one side, the high priest and Herod, on the other side, the Holy Ghost. On the one side Felix and Agrippa, Cæsar and Rome, on the other, the HOLY GHOST.

"To say nothing of apostolic Christianity, let us ask what it was that gave the Christianity of the first two centuries such extraordinary vigor in its conflict with heathenism. An eminent writer, Gerhard Uhlhorn, has shown with a graphic hand that it was just this quality of absolute unworldliness which constituted the secret of its power. The men who conquered the Roman empire for Christ bore the aspect of invaders from another world, who absolutely refused to be naturalized to this world. Their conduct filled their heathen neighbors with the strangest perplexity; they were so careless of life, so careful of conscience, so prodigal of their own blood, so confident of the overcoming power of the blood of the Lamb, so unsubdued to the customs of the country in which they sojourned, so mindful of the manners of 'that country from whence they came out.'

"The help of the world, the patronage of its rulers, the loan of its resources, the use of its methods, they utterly refused, lest by employing these they might compromise their King. An invading army maintained from an invisible base, and placing more confidence in the leadership of an unseen Commander than in all imperial help that might be proffered—this was what so bewildered and angered the heathen, who often desired to make friends with the Christians without abandoning their own gods. But there can be no reasonable doubt that that age in which the church was most completely separated from the world was the age in which Christianity was the most victorious in the world.

"It was also the era of undimmed hope of the Lord's imminent return from glory, so that it illustrated and enforced both clauses of the great text: 'For our citizenship [R. V.] is in heaven from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus.'" (Phil. 3:20.)—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

This, in brief, is the history of the church of the living God, the faithful bride, for the first two centuries. At this point she slowly retreats before the scarlet woman, until she hides from view for more than a thousand years in the wilderness home prepared by her Lord. A. F. B.

REPORTS from Russia state that Russian Quakers are being made to feel the heavy hand of the government because of their refusal to engage in military service. "All accounts show," says a London journal, "that they are a temperate and industrious people. But they refuse to bear arms or to put themselves in training for killing their fellowmen whenever statesmen fall out and give the word. This is unpardonable in the eyes of military governments. But if the authorities really knew it, these people, and all conscientious Protestants who suffer in Russia, are the best friends the government has."

Our Special Offer.

WE are glad to say that already we are receiving many substantial evidences, in the way of good words and large lists, that our special offer on the SENTINEL as announced last week is being appreciated. Pledges of earnest effort in its behalf come from almost every State in the Union.

One State tract society secretary writes that his State alone will increase the list 2000; another says, "The offer you make can not fail to bring a large list of subscribers. for the price is a popular one, and the paper ought to be in the hands of the people everywhere." Another one writes, "We hope to have every friend of the cause in this State, as far as possible, a subscriber to the SENTINEL before the offer closes." Still another says, "We have sent out circular letters to all the librarians of the churches and also isolated friends of the paper, urging that they individually try to secure subscriptions for it in the various localities where they live. We have also written many personal letters to our workers to the same effect, which we feel sure will bring some good lists." Another encloses a personal note accompanying a nice list, saying, "I wish I could tell you how much I appreciate the SENTINEL. I think it is growing better and better, and has a place in the cause that no other paper can fill. You can count on us here doing everything in our power to get the paper more generally read." A president of a State conference writes, "The other day I met a man who has read the SENTINEL for only a few weeks, and who had never before known of it, and he said, 'I am astonished at the amount and excellent quality of the matter that this little sheet contains.'" A subscriber, sending a remittance, appends these words: "I cannot do without the AMERICAN SENTINEL. May God grant that you may live a thousand years, for every editor seems asleep but yourself." We could fill the whole paper with similar kind and appreciative words that come to us every day, but we forbear.

We quote them simply to show the trend of feeling toward the SENTINEL and its work, and particularly the the special offer we are now making.

We trust our friends everywhere will do what they can to secure many subscribers under this offer, for it is our experience that these short-time subscribers invariably become regular readers of the paper, and thus ardent advocates of civil and religious liberty.

Remember that the offer remains open only until September 1st. Now is the time to take advantage of it and do missionary work in a worthy cause.

News, Notes, and Comment.

THE English and American attorney has always been notorious for his conservatism. The profession is not equally conspicuous for this quality, in France. Perhaps the difference may be partly accounted for by the fact that the French lawyer relies mainly on his appeal to abstract considerations, on reasons pure and simple to establish his case, whereas the advocate in the United States and Great Britain produces his "authorities" and brings to bear the force of history, so to speak. "It is a maxim of these fellows," said a wit of years gone by, "that whatever has been done before may be done again; this they call a respect for precedent." Constant appeals to precedent naturally imbue the mind with attachment to the past, and create mistrust and dislike of innovations.

WHATEVER the cause, the lawyer with us is the most conservative of men. "The thing as it is" suits his fancy, especially if it be a thing whose roots he can trace back into the hoary past, and whose growth he can mark through the rolling centuries. He receives, without appreciating, the suggestion that the thing as it is became so only by progress, by change, by cutting off part of this branch, by training those other limbs in a certain direction.

Now, conservatism is an excellent good thing in its way. And its way is that of a brake on the wheels of progress. To be always moving, yet to move with care and caution; to make haste slowly; to test by theory and practical experiment all suggested alterations in our modes of governing and of administration—this is the necessary condition of a healthy social organism. Violent and radical departures from the established state of things are justly to be deprecated; but decay soon attacks any system which has not the vitality that proves all things, and holds fast that which is good.

THE antiquated and cumbrous phraseology of law-papers has been the theme of satire for laymen, but it has ever had a mysterious charm for the Bar; old customs are followed centuries after they originated, and after all the conditions that gave rise to them, and, in some manner, perhaps, justified their adoption, have passed away never to return. Principles are still gravely laid down in law-books which philosophy has long since abandoned as untenable; even fallacies of definition are clung to by law-writers for no other apparent reason than because they were once enunciated, by some eminent man, who wrote in the infancy of human intelligence, or under the fatal paralysis of personal interest or ambition.

No one has been more servilely followed in this regard than Mr. Justice Blackstone. The "hold" which his famous "Commentaries" have maintained on the legal mind is one of the most curious phenomena of psychology that have ever come under my observation. It is not too much to say that later authors, as a rule, approach this learned jurist with the awe of a neophyte at the shrine of some great god of old. The odor of sanctity exhales from the inspired pages, the words of Infallibility are received with bended knee direct from the throne.

THE work of Mr. Justice Blackstone consists of law, history and philosophy. His law is obsolete, his history imperfect and misleading, his philosophy exploded. His English is excellent I admit, but his servility is disgusting, and he does not know the meaning of manliness or candor. Even when he seems able to "think straight, and see clear," he darkens his wisdom with the clouds of flattery, and "crooks the pregnant hinges of the knee where thrift may follow fawning."

THE law with which Mr. Justice Blackstone had to deal was made by that same Parliament and King to whom Mr. Justice Blackstone was indebted for his official position. Of that law and of its makers the Justice was bound to speak with admiration, with reverence, with love, under the penalty of losing his salary. He discharged his talk with conspicuous skill; and, in so doing, he inoculated the fountain of our jurisprudence with a poison that contaminates it to this day, and will perhaps never be thoroughly eradicated.

"LAW," says Mr. Justice Blackstone—meaning by "law" the creation of the power that created him a Justice—is a rule of civil conduct prescribing what is right and prohibiting what is wrong." And my conservative profession has gone on, repeating this dictum, poll-parrot-wise, ever since. I have just found it in a recently issued text-book, the writer whereof shows in more than one passage that he knew better, and that he transcribed this nonsense to the bewilderment and deception of coming generations, for no other reason than because Mr. Justice Blackstone had written it.

OF course, in the eyes of the latter, the government could do no wrong. It followed that the law of that government in the mass, and in every detail, was perfect, and that whatever it required was right, and whatever it forbade was the reverse. In fact, the distinction between right and wrong was itself the work of that law. A thing was right for no other reason than because the law commanded it, a thing was wrong for no other reason than because it was prohibited by law. "Government is based on the law of God," we were told. How then was it possible that the government should err?

* * *

It is nothing less than shameful that such erroneous views as Blackstone's should be steadily inculcated upon the minds of young men in our land. Lawyers play a leading part in our political life; they do much to guide and direct the course of public events; more than other men, they are, as a class, looked to for advice and opinion on the great problems of our complex system. What shall we say of those who pervert the understanding of our future lawyers at the very outset of their studies and do all in their power to send these young men forth to their work in the world with deluded and distorted brains?

* * *

A LAW may, it is true, command what is right. And it is also true that a law may prohibit what is wrong. But this is a mere accident in either case. The law does not command a thing because it is right, nor prohibit it because it is wrong. Neither does a thing become right because a law commands it, or wrong because a law forbids it. The right or the wrong of a thing is no element of the law in regard to it. And on the other hand, the legality or illegality of a thing has no connection whatever with its quality as right or wrong. A government may pass a law providing that its flag shall consist of red and white stripes, and fix their number; but it could not, by any enactment, make the red stripes white or the white stripes red, or make an odd number even, or an even number odd.

* * *

WE get rid of much confusion when this distinction is properly established. For instance, we are sometimes told that it is the duty of all good citizens to obey the laws. But a good citizen has only one duty, as such, in this world; his sole duty is to do right. Once we eliminate the infallibility of law as a doctrine inconsistent with the facts of history and American principles of government, we see that it is by no means unthinkable that this duty of doing right may bring a good citizen directly in conflict with human law. To assume that such a law commands what is right and prohibits what is wrong is to assume for the law-making power the right of conscience over the community. But the right of conscience is an individual right which each person must exercise for himself. The legislature cannot determine questions reserved for the tribunal set up in the breast of every man. On the contrary, the acts of the legislature must themselves be arraigned before that tribunal and the rightfulness or wrongfulness of them must be there determined as in a court of last resort.

* * *

A VERY antique maxim of the law goes with the notion that it is concerned with the distinction between right and wrong—the maxim that there can be no wrong without a remedy. This is solemnly uttered now and then by our most erudite and profound jurists. But it is either false, or it is a mere truism. It is false, if it means that there is no moral wrong without legal redress. It is so far false, that many atrocious moral wrongs are and always have been not merely remediless at law, but actually accomplished by means of laws, sometimes passed for that express purpose.

* * *

It is a mere truism if it means that there is no legal wrong without a legal remedy. It appears as a truism in the Latin—"ubi jus iti remedium;" jus here means a legal right; remedium means a kind of action, or legal process; so that the significance of the sentence is simply that wherever a legal right exists, some form of practice may be found for its enforcement. In this sense, the maxim has been sometimes appealed to where the legislature has failed to specify the manner in which the provisions of a statute are to be availed of in the courts.

* * *

WE see, then, that the law knows nothing, and cannot by any possibility know anything, of right or wrong; but is confined exclusively to dealing with rights and wrongs. And these rights and wrongs are altogether of its own creation, and exist by virtue of its will, and may, at any time, be reversed, and converted one into the other at its pleasure. In different communities and at different stages of the world's progress these rights and wrongs differ widely; because men's notions of what is expedient, or conducive to the social welfare, are by no means fixed or universal. But right and wrong are independent of epochs, as well as of latitude and longitude.

* * *

SOUTH CAROLINA for years had no divorce law. It was the opinion of her people that it was unwise to allow the severance of the marriage tie for any reason whatsoever. There was, therefore, no jus of separation for husband and wife, and no remedium, or procedure for securing it. Then the legislature passed a law allowing divorces under certain circumstances. At once, the jus arose. If no particular way of sifting the facts, or of adjudicating upon them had been provided, then the courts would have supplied the remedium. Later still, the law was repealed and jus and remedium fell together. But it is plain that the right of conjugal fidelity and the wrong of conjugal infidelity were always the same in South Carolina as they were everywhere else, and that the absence or presence of a statute on the subject did not in the least affect its moral aspect.

* * *

It is to be hoped that some day a writer will be found who will give us a book on the general principles of law which shall be, from beginning to end, American—faithful to American ideas, consistent with American public policy. Such a man must begin at the beginning. He must cut loose from Mr. Justice Blackstone altogether. He must frame his definitions for himself, and not copy the language of that commentator; he must carve out his conceptions as a sculptor chisels a new statue from the virgin marble, and not fancy that his task is merely the cleaning or polishing, or trimming of some ancient torso, dragged from the dust of the Feudal ages.

Notes from the Epworth League Convention.

BY M. C. GUILD.

THE Epworth League Convention that has just been held in this city closed last evening.

It is estimated that there were over 20,000 delegates in attendance. They came from all parts of the United States and Canada. The League was organized in 1889, and it now claims a membership of over two million.

Many of the speeches made were calculated to influence this large body of young people in favor of the religio-political movements that are now so prevalent.

The subject of "Christ in Politics" was quite fully discussed at the different places of meeting. One of the speakers, Dr. A. W. Thornton, told his audience that he spoke to a prominent politician when looking for new ideas on the subject, but the man answered flippantly, "He isn't in it."

Mr. F. D. Fuller, of Topeka, Kan., who was to speak on "Christ in Politics," told his large audience, with a good degree of consistency, that he had taken the liberty to change his subject to "The Leaguer in Politics." To some who were present this change seemed very appropriate.

Mr. Fuller plead for Leaguers and Christians generally to take a more active part in voting. He charged the running of Sunday cars in this city to the church members. In his opinion Sunday cars had prevailed because too many Christians had neglected to vote. Some who knew of the strenuous efforts put forth by the ministers and the church members who were opposed to Sunday cars at the recent election, were somewhat amused at this statement.

The speaker urged Christian voters to attend the caucus and the primary. He cautioned his hearers that they might be beaten at the polls for some time, but urged them to keep up the fight.

In the absence of one who was to speak on "Christ in Politics," Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts occupied the time, taking for his subject, "The Lord's Day and the Rest Day." He said that it was a thirty years' war before foreign missions were thrust upon the church and made a part of its work, and he counseled all the Leaguers to organize a "Lord's Day Committee," as there never was a time when the sabbath was more imperilled and less defended than now.

Mr. Bruce L. Brice, of Clarksville, Tenn., stated that thus far the Christ like had been very singularly absent in the various political parties. He held that the present corrupt condition of politics was largely due to the unwillingness of good men to take part in political strife. That corruption exists, they realize, but fear of contamination mingled with a feeling of disgust holds them aloof from the scenes of bickering and discord. This course he thought could not be justified.

The Leaguers were implored to keep off the Sunday cars in this city, yet notwithstanding this, multitudes of them rode on the cars the following Sunday.

Among the resolutions was one pledging themselves to put forth the most earnest efforts to awaken and instruct the public conscience in regard to Sunday observance and heartily indorsing the work of the American Sabbath Union.

Resolution 7 reads thus: "We hold that it is our Christian duty to participate in all matters that concern the national, State, and municipal government, and urge and entreat our young people, without respect to their political affiliations, to ally themselves with all movements for civic reform and social righteousness."

There were many earnest speeches and many good things said at this convention. It is lamentable that such political sentiments as the foregoing should be mingled with the good instruction given.

All agreed that the present state of politics is corrupt and impure. The remedy proposed by the League is to plunge in and purify the corrupt pool.

We do not question their motives; but when will professed followers of Christ learn,—

That Christ, their Lord, never meddled with politics, though he lived in an earthly government here below, "leaving us an example, that ye should follow in his steps." 1 Peter 2:21.

That the gospel (not politics) is "the power of God unto salvation."

That the Christian's citizenship is in heaven, and that while he is in the world he is not to be of the world.

That for the child of God to plunge into the muddy pool of politics will never cleanse the pool, but that he himself will be stained and polluted thereby. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." Job 14:4.

Toronto, Ont., July 19.

REMEMBER—the SENTINEL will be sent until January 1st next, to any one not now a reader of it for only twenty-five cents.

THE first subscription under our special offer came from Nebraska; the largest single list is from Ohio, and the second largest from Virginia.

The "Civil Sabbath" in Brazil.

IN Brazil, according to the testimony of Protestant missionaries, the people of the larger cities and towns keep what Sunday-law agitators in America have termed a "civil sabbath,"—that is, a day of rest in each week, for the purpose of mere rest, and not for worship. On the question of its practical effect and utility in promoting the general welfare, Rev. D. G. Armstrong writes the following in the Missionary Review of the World:—

"No Sabbath! True, in many of the large cities, like Rio and Sao Paulo, all the chief stores are closed and many of the wheels of business are stopped on Sunday; but this is not due to any religious motive or any recognition of man's moral obligation to keep the sabbath. It is due only to the force of circumstances. The clerks and operatives combined and demanded of their employers one day in seven for rest and recreation, and the employers were forced to yield. But instead of spending their forced leisure in the refreshment of mind and body, both employers and employed while away the day in dissipation and pleasure, attending the theatre and racecourse, and perhaps walking through the streets in some idolatrous procession headed by Romish priests, thus ending the day more jaded than if it had been spent in the routine of business, and ill prepared for the week's labor."

Mr. Armstrong says, as will be observed, that this is no Sabbath at all. And certainly there is no Sabbath rest in such a rest day. The Sabbath rest is inseparable from religion. The advocates of Sunday laws, of whom the leaders are always clergymen, will not be satisfied with such a day of rest as is described in Mr. Armstrong's letter from Brazil. What they want is a Sunday law that will fill the churches. But there is only one way to enjoy the true Sabbath rest, and that is by that keeping of the Sabbath which is the result of faith in Jesus Christ.

Preaching the Gospel in Spain.

SOME degree of religious tolerance is accorded Protestant residents of Spain, and in the absence of permission to maintain regular houses of worship, the Protestant clergymen improve the opportunity occasionally afforded to preach the gospel to the open-air congregations which gather at funerals. One such incident is related by Rev. W. H. Gulick, missionary of the American Board, in a letter to the Independent, as follows:—

"A little child in the Protestant congregation in Bilbao died. There was nothing in the circumstances of the death to complicate the case. All the usual papers had been taken out, and every legal requirement had been complied with; but, when the funeral procession reached the city cemetery, the priest in charge refused to permit the burial until certain requirements imposed by himself had been met. Among other things he demanded that the parents should bring a certificate from the parish priest to the effect that the child had not been baptized in the Roman Catholic Church. This is not required by law, and the pastor refused to submit to the imposition. In the discussion that followed a large number of people gathered around the little coffin. Fortunately, the cemetery is comparatively near the town. Begging the friends to wait, the pastor ran down the hill, and quickly found himself in the presence of the mayor and of several aldermen who happened to be present. He at once explained the case, calling attention to the fact that the friends of the deceased were waiting in the cemetery. Though these gentlemen were all well-known Roman Catholics, they unanimously agreed that the official papers that the pastor showed them were quite legal and were all that were required, and they wondered that the priest in charge of the cemetery should have raised any obstacles to the burial. The mayor said: 'I will soon put it right,' and going to the telephone he called up the priest and had a conversation with him. In a moment he returned to the pastor, apologized for the annoyance that he had suffered, and assured him that there would be no further trouble.

"He hastened back, and was surprised and glad to find that the crowd had not diminished in numbers. With very poor grace the priest surrendered the coffin, and to the eighty or one hundred persons who were now gathered around the little grave, the pastor preached the gospel for more than half an hour, and the baffled priest had the chagrin of seeing that he had only provided the Protestant with an interested and attentive audience that otherwise he would not have had. And, as for himself, quite unexpectedly he had received a useful lesson in constitutional law."

THE life that is "by the faith of Jesus Christ," is the short and only road to eternal wealth and prosperity.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50.
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELTON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N. Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5½ x 2½ in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY.

Is most healthfully and beautifully located. Combines religious and industrious with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

Sacred History, Sacred Music, and the Holy Scriptures.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year. Vegetarian diet. For further particulars and calender, address,
J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

$30 CASH will buy a good second-hand high grade ARIEL BICYCLE.

Freight charges prepaid east of the Mississippi. Address, T. W. JONES, care of Pacific Press, 39 Bond St., New York.

The Gospel Primer.

A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE25

Address this Office.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELTON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., Litt. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of Harvard University.

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond st., New York City.

50 YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

TRADE MARKS, DESIGNS, COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain, free, whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Oldest agency for securing patents in America. We have a Washington office. Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice in the

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,

beautifully illustrated, largest circulation of any scientific journal, weekly, terms $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Specimen copies and HAND BOOK ON PATENTS sent free. Address

MUNN & CO.,

361 Broadway, New York.

Our Premium Bible.

(See advertisement on last page.)

REDUCTION IN PRICE

For a short time.

The Sentinel 1 Year and Bible, postpaid, $3.00

The Sentinel 6 Months and Bible, postpaid, $2.50

The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel, $2.00

The Bible given as a present for 6 new yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each; 12 for 6 months at 50 cents each.

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence urge our patrons to order at once.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough for us to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we quote. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of the writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

HEAR WHAT THEY SAY.

"I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted."

"The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished."

"The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it."

"My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it."

"I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted."

"I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible."

"It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price."

"I received your premium Bible and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent."

"I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected."

"I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had."

"We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight."

"I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap."

"The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it."

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond St., New York City.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spoke it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12x18 INCHES.

On thick paper, mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

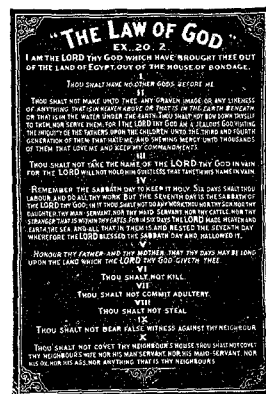

Postpaid, 25 Cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

The Stomach:

Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion,	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dyspepsia,
B Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50.

Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

BETTER THAN EVER!

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

We propose to make it possible for each and everyone to be the possessor of

A First-Class High Grade Bible.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the

AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality.

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.	B. C. 443.	25 Rē'hūm, Hā-shāb'nah, Mā-a-sē'-jah,
36 Behold, ^d we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:	^d Deut. 28. 48. Ezra 9. 9.	26 And Ā-hī'jah, Hā'nan, Ā'nan,
37 And ^e it yieldeth much increase	^e Deut. 28. 22-23	27 Māl'luch, Hā'rim, Bā'a-nah.
		28 ¶ ^e And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lē'vites, the porters, the singers, the Nēth'i-nīng, ^f and all they that had separated themselves

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00

With this book reading is made easy. No more stumbling over the hard words. All proper names are divided into syllables, and the accent and diacritical marks render their accurate pronunciation a simple matter. With a little study of the Key to Pronunciation to be found in every copy of this Bible, the reader loses all fear of the long, hard names of Scripture, and pronounces them with ease.

WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.00

As is indicated by the name, this is a teachers' Bible. It contains fifteen pages of illustrations and diagrams, copious helps of the latest revision, Bible index, concordance, dictionary of Scripture proper names with their pronunciation and meaning, and many other excellent features.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT.

Wabash, Ind.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: My Bible received this day, for which accept thanks. I am very well pleased. I think I have just what I need in the way of a Bible. It is not only a teacher's Bible, but also the very best for a student.

Yours truly,

T. M. MORRIS.

San Francisco, Cal.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: I received my Bible, and am very much pleased with it. It is a first-class Bible; just what it is claimed to be.

MRS. E. F. NOBLE.

Brattleboro, Vt.
AM very much pleased with it.
MRS. E. C. MILLARD.

Graettinger, Iowa.
WE are all more than pleased with the Bible in every way. As a book it is thoroughly well made and elegant in all its parts. As a Bible the self-pronunciation is a new feature, and this is only one of its many excellencies. The type is a great delight to me.

MRS. S. M. OLESEN.

It is only by special arrangement with the publishers of this Bible that we are able to make this

UNPRECEDENTED OFFER.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.50 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $7.00.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

Address all orders to AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 5, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 31.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THE service of God is not servitude.

THE preachers are not the successors of the prophets.
Only prophets can be the successors of prophets.

ENFORCED idleness on Sunday might not be so bad if the law could force the devil to be idle too.

WILL some one who takes exception to the view that politics should be kept separate from religion, please send us a copy of the moral law—the decalogue—of politics?

THE commission of Christ to his disciples,—“Go ye therefore into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature,” does not mean, Go ye therefore into all the world and control the politics of every nation.

THE person who claims to be a worshiper of God, while obeying some other power than God, by that disobedience to God proclaims himself a worshiper of a false god. In other words, we worship the power which we obey in religious conduct.

THERE is a principle in human nature which demands a pope in the Church and a monarch in the State. The divine nature which God puts in the place of human nature, substitutes the government of God for both that of pope and monarch, in the heart.

It is very surprising how small an amount of Scripture proof will suffice to convince a person of something he wants to believe; and what a large amount is required to convince him of a plain truth which he does not relish.

If the Church has the power of God, the Omnipotent, with her, why should she seek for power from the State? What else can her plea for State and national legislation be but a confession that she has lost the power of God, by having withdrawn herself from him?

The Bible Is Science.

OF all the mistakes that men have made with reference to the Bible, one of the greatest is in thinking that it is not scientific.

The truth is that the Bible is the most scientific book in the world: the foundation of, and the guide to, all correct science that is known, or that can be known, in the world.

Our word science, is from the Latin word scientia, which signifies knowledge. The Latin scientia corresponds to the Greek word gnosis, which signifies knowledge. Accordingly science is simply knowledge.

But is not the Bible knowledge? The Bible comes to the world from God: everywhere its claim is “Thus saith the Lord;” “God spake;” “the word of the Lord,” etc. “All Scripture is given by inspiration of God; and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.”

And does not God know?—He does. Is not that knowledge which comes from God for the instruction of men?—It is. Then as science is only knowledge; and as the Bible is knowledge, it certainly follows that the Bible is science.

It is true that science signifies knowledge of more than a common order. The Latin scientia signifies “being skilled in knowledge,” knowledge of a high order; and the Greek gnosis signifies "higher knowledge," "deeper wisdom." But is not God's knowledge of a high order? Is not he skilled in knowledge? Is not his wisdom deep? There can be no higher knowledge than that of God. There can be no deeper wisdom than his. Therefore as science is higher knowledge; and as there can be no higher knowledge than that of God, it is certain that the knowledge of God is science, and that it is science of the highest kind. And as in the Bible the knowledge of God is revealed; and as the knowledge of God is highest science, it is certainly true that in the Bible is the highest science.

It is written: "He that is perfect in knowledge is with thee." Science is knowledge. Perfect knowledge is perfect science. The knowledge of God being perfect, is perfect science. This knowledge of God is revealed in the Bible. It is therefore perfectly certain that in the Bible, and the Bible itself, is perfect science.

Another definition of science is given as: "Accumulated and established knowledge, which has been systematized and formulated with reference to the discovery of general truths, or the operation of general laws." The Bible meets this definition more fully and exactly than any other book in the world. The Bible is the knowledge of God. This, being perfect knowledge, is established knowledge; for He is "the same yesterday, and to day, and forever," and with him "is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." In the Bible this knowledge is accumulated, "line upon line, and precept upon precept; line upon line and precept upon precept." In the Bible this perfect knowledge has been, and is, systematized and formulated with reference to the discovery of general truths, or the operation of general laws—in other words, of principles. According to this definition therefore, the Bible is strictly science.

Yet another statement, by a scientific writer, is that "All sciences are the products of the mind." Very good. But shall it be said that the Bible is not the product of mind? Of course it will not be claimed that whatsoever is the product of mind is science. But shall it be claimed that the Bible is not sufficiently the product of mind to be worthy of recognition as science? or shall it be said that it is not the product of a mind that may be recognized as scientific? All of this must be said, all of it is said, when it is said that the Bible is not science, or is not scientific.

The Bible is the word of God. Words express thoughts. The word of God, then, is the expression of the thought of God. It is therefore inevitably the product of the divine mind. And how can it possibly be said that the product of the divine mind is not science? How can it be thought that the divine mind is of such a low order that it cannot properly be considered scientific? With any recognition of God at all, no such thing can be said or thought. As certainly as God shall be recognized at all, he must be recognized as God. And He who created the mind, shall not He think? He who created minds whose product is expected to be accepted as science—shall not the product of His mind be accepted as science?

ence—shall not the product of His mind be accepted as science?

Science, then, being the product of mind; and the Bible being the product of the divine mind, it is certainly true that the Bible is not only science, but it is divine science. And when the Bible meets fully and fairly every definition of science, it is not scientific for any scientist or anybody else to say that the Bible is not science.

By all these considerations, and many more that can be given, therefore, it is perfectly plain that the phrase "Science and the Bible," that is so much used nowadays, is altogether invalid. It is unsound from the beginning, and has not a particle of merit. It is one of those boastful, self-assertive, things that are set forth with great show of knowledge, but which, having no merit of their own, are obliged to beg their way. This one begins by begging everything. It is expected that by the very weight of its appearance of superior knowledge, everybody will at once fall prostrate and humbly pray it to accept all that it is forced to beg. Instead of this, however, the brazen thing should have its mask plucked off, and itself be made to stand upon merit only. It must not be allowed to receive anything to which it cannot present a strictly just and valid claim.

Now, this phrase, "Science and the Bible," assumes, in itself, that the Bible is not science. To admit the correctness of the phrase, as it is asserted, is to allow that the Bible is not science. But why should the phrase be admitted? There is not a single definition of science, that is not fully met by the Bible as science. Strictly and truly, yea supremely, the Bible is science. Why then, upon what principle of reason or propriety, should this phrase be admitted as valid when on its very face it denies that the Bible is science?

If any one wants to deny that the Bible is science, let him do it. But let him do it by presenting what seem to him considerations that show that it is not science, instead of flaunting a phrase that begs all that it is bound to show. This however cannot be done: the very word, "science," itself is against it. Every accepted definition of the word is against it. The root idea of the word, the very nature of the word itself, will have to be obliterated before it can be shown, or even fairly claimed, that the Bible is not science.

There is therefore no place for any such expression as "Science and the Bible" or "The Bible and Science"; because the Bible is science. As the Bible is science, what such expressions really say is, "Science and Science." This indeed might be well enough, if that were meant; but when the only thing intended is the begging suggestion that the Bible is not science, there can be no place for it in the world.

No; the Bible, being strictly and truly science, the only way in which there can ever be any contrast or "conflict" between science and the Bible, is between God's science and man's science, between divine science and human science, between perfect science and imperfect science.

Between God's science and man's science, there may very easily be a contrast; but with any one who has any respect for God at all, can there ever be any question as to which justly belongs the preference or which shall have precedence?

Between divine science and human science there may indeed arise a "conflict;" but in the mind of any one who recognizes God at all and has any respect for him, can there ever be for a moment any question as to which shall surrender or give way? And when such a conflict does arise, and the human refuses to surrender, or give way, to the divine, but continues the conflict, what is that but to argue that the human is greater than the divine, and that therefore the divine must surrender and give way to the human?

But for the human to continue a conflict with the divine, and thus to argue that the human is greater than the divine, is simply for the human to supplant the divine, and itself set up claim for recognition as such, or else to claim that there is no divinity.

And this is the essential defect of the phrase "Science and the Bible": it argues that the Bible is not science, and in that it argues that the Bible is not the knowledge of God, that it is not the product of the divine mind—in short, it argues that the Bible is not of God. The phrase "Science and the Bible" is therefore infidel on its very face.

But the Bible is the knowledge of God. The Bible is a product of the divine mind. It is accumulated and established knowledge which has been systematized and formulated with reference to principles. It is therefore fully and emphatically science in every true sense of the word.

"Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." "I will never leave thee, nor forsake them." "He that is perfect in knowledge—[science]—is with thee." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge [science]." "If thou criest after knowledge [science], and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge [science] of God." "In God, the Father, and in Christ, are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge"—all the treasures of philosophy and science. That is the everlasting truth. And let all the people say, Amen.

The Sabbath for Man.

THE following truthful words concerning the Sabbath were uttered by one of the speakers at the late Christian Endeavor convention at San Francisco:—

"The land is full of very queer notions regarding the Sabbath, and many Christians have a vague understanding of it. They regard the Sabbath as a Jewish institution just as the Egyptians regarded the Nile as an Egyptian river, never thinking that the river was running hundreds of miles before it ever came to Egypt; and so it is with the Sabbath. It was in existence before the first king was born, before Abraham was born,—it had existed all along. It passed through Jewish institutions . . . but it is not at all Jewish. Our Lord himself said that the Sabbath was made for man,—not for the Jew, not for the American, but for man wherever found."

Sunday-Law Statistics.

"In 1894," says the report of the "New York Sabbath Committee," "out of a total of 98,296 arrests by the police, 582 were for violations of the Sunday statutes, exclusive of excise cases. In 1895, out of 112,997 arrests, 1,415 were for similar violations. This increase of arrests was due to the greater efficiency with which all laws began then to be enforced, and in the case of the Sunday arrests, to the efforts to suppress illegal Sunday traffic in stores and by pedlars, on complaint of dealers and employes for the protection of their own right to the Sunday rest. For the first half of 1896, there were 431 arrests for Sunday violations, out of a total of 53,322."

Thus in the period of time which this report covers there were 2,428 arrests which were entirely needless, and the trouble and expense of which—to say nothing of the injury to the victims—might have been avoided but for the idea, handed down from the Dark Ages, that religious institutions ought to have the "protection" of the civil law.

The "Civil Sabbath" "Corpse."

THE likening of the "civil sabbath" to a corpse, which would become offensive and demand burial, was a feature of one of the speeches made at the late Christian Endeavor convention in San Francisco. The occasion was a meeting of the "Sabbath Observance Committee" of the convention at the Central M. E. Church, July 9. The speaker—who represented Wisconsin in the sabbath observance department of the society—said:—

"The holiness of the [rest] day is the soul of it. Without that it becomes a dead corpse, something that will fill the land with poison, and the land would be ready to bury the sabbath whenever the soul is taken from it. We must teach the workingmen of the land that in order to secure the rest part of the day they must keep it holy."

Now, as the "civil sabbath" does not pretend to be a holy day, but is simply a rest day or sabbath prescribed by the civil law, it is according to this speaker's language nothing else than a dead corpse, whose burial the land will demand unless it can have a soul put into it to give it life. But the law cannot put a soul into it; the law cannot impart holiness to a day or cause it to be kept holy. All that the law can do is to make the "corpse," which in itself is a menace to the whole land. Is this a proper thing for the law to do?

The words of this speaker are true. Holiness is the soul of the Sabbath; and robbed of this quality it becomes worse than useless. But what is to impart holiness to the "civil sabbath?" There will be vast multitudes of people all over the land observing the day because the law has commanded it, and not even pretending to keep it holy, because they do not care anything about religion. The great majority of the people here, as in other lands, are not Christians—do not, indeed, even belong to any church. And to each one of these the "civil" or soulless sabbath will be as a "dead corpse"—a "savor of death unto death." This must be so, unless in some way these multitudes shall be converted to Christianity so that they will keep the Sabbath holy. But where is the promise that such a miracle will be speedily—or ever—accomplished?

Yet the churches are calling for Sunday laws—for a "civil sabbath"—as if this were the one great thing which the country needs. Do they think the country needs the polluting presence of a "dead corpse"? Do the rest of the people think so?

If not, then let us dispense with the "civil sabbath."

It should be remembered, too, that only God can make a day holy; and there is no proof that He ever hallowed the day set apart by the Sunday statutes.

Wisdom and Sunday Labor.

BY H. E. OSBORNE.

As the tiny forest leaf indicates the direction of the gentle summer breeze when greater objects do not yield to its influence, so the trifling deeds of man first betray the tendency of his course. In his great efforts he is guarded. In the less important acts, the motives which prompt thereto are most clearly revealed.

In a little incident of recent occurrence, this principle served to illustrate the animus of that class of religionists who become so zealous for the formal observance of supposed religious duties that they welcome civil enactments to force them upon their fellows. The facts involved are these:—

Connecticut has remodeled her Sunday law. Conformity to the "reform" ideal was sought and partially realized. The provisions and penalties of the new law have been noticed in these columns. In a quiet rural district of this State resides an aged Christian who consistently observes the seventh day as the Sabbath, in harmony with the fourth section of God's great law. On the other six days he quietly follows his agricultural pursuits.

This devoted Christian recently received from an anonymous friend a letter enclosing a newspaper clipping quoting the revised Sunday statute. On the margin was written in ink, "A word to the wise SHOULD be sufficient." (Emphasis his own.)

This warning is but a new rendering of the old adage, "A word to the wise is sufficient." Why did the writer revise this saying, the truthfulness of which is beyond dispute? Why did he insert for the positive assertion the doubtful subjunctive? Plainly because his faith in the wisdom of the person addressed exceeded his confidence in the application of the adage quoted. In other words, this person knew that wisdom had no condemnation for Sunday work. Had he believed that the possession of wisdom would lead to abstinence from labor on Sunday, he would have made his neighbor's future course subject to his wisdom or folly. But as the sentence was written, it clearly revealed the fact that the would-be monitor regarded the wisdom of the subject of his counsel as above impeachment. Furthermore, it degraded the author's warning from the plane of admonition and friendly caution to the lower level of bluffs and intimidations.

This man's evident conception of the relation of wisdom and Sunday labor is amply sustained by the Scriptures. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: a good understanding have all they that do his commandments." To be wise, then, is to fear the Lord. To "do his commandments" is to give evidence of "a good understanding" possessed. Therefore, since "his commandments" declare "six days shalt thou labor, . . . but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," and "in it thou shalt not do any work," how could this servant of God manifest wisdom in yielding to his neighbor's threat?

With the apostles he may say, "We ought to obey God rather than men." God has spoken, and "a word to the wise is sufficient." Therefore he still works.

Making It Easy.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THOSE ministers who are looking to legislation as the great and sure panacea for all the ills that afflict the nation, often express the idea that suitable legislation well enforced will make it much easier for people to do right, and much harder for them to do wrong.

In the sentiment expressed in these words, we may see a wide departure from the gospel idea of reform. The minister of Christ is looking to something beside Christ as a means of accomplishing what the power of Christ is set forth in the Scriptures as accomplishing alone. It is not questioned that civil law does deter men from committing crime, and that such laws are a necessity in the present condition of the world; but when a minister of the gospel comes to depend on civil law as the best known force for reformation, he actually admits that he knows of nothing better.

The object of the civil law is to prevent men from doing things which they want to do, but which are a damage to society as a whole. This is as far as the power of man can go. To the thief it says, Steal, and I will put you in prison; to the murderer, Kill; and you shall hang for it. The natures of these would-be criminals are not changed by the law; and let them once feel sure that they will escape detection and the law will not deter them from the commission of crime.

But the work of the gospel is far different, far better than this. Its object is so to change a man's natural evil disposition that he will love right and truth, and would practice them even if the law were against those things. The power by which this can be done is the power of God, and that power is in the gospel. By it, the very heart of man is changed, and the whole being in all its purposes is renewed and made like Christ. Civil law can only take cognizance of the outward conduct; it cannot touch the heart. Civil law strains as well as it can the foul stream of depraved humanity; the gospel cleanses the source of the stream and makes it all pure. The civil law is content if a man does good according to its standard; the gospel makes a man good himself. The real goodness that arises from a changed heart cannot be legislated into being. Says Lacratelle, "Les vertus nees de la religion, se cachent dans la religion meme." (The virtues born of religion, are hidden in religion itself.) They cannot be found outside of it.

So when a minister of the gospel turns to the civil law as the chief means to promote virtue, he has certainly mistaken his calling. An intelligent physician would recommend the best remedy he knew for a disease, and should not a minister of the gospel recommend the best he knows to cure the evil in the hearts of men? And if he recommends the civil law, what is that but saying that he knows nothing better?

It is a fact that a great many of the clergy have determined upon the renovation of the world by means of the civil law. The broad way is to be hedged full of legal enactments, making progress there extremely difficult; and the narrow way is to be, by municipal regulation, widened into a boulevard and made attractive and easy to walk in. It seems almost a wonder, since men conceive there is such a power in law, that some one of these ministers does not propose an injunction in order to shut up the broad way altogether, so that none can ever walk in it again!

Sad indeed is it that those who have been called to preach the gospel should value it so little; that those who have the promise of the power of God to reform men, should cast it aside as though it were of no particular account, and take in its place the power of human laws. The snows of Lebanon are exchanged for the muddy waters of Babylon, the cloven tongues of fire for the policeman's club; cringing fear is to take the place of intelligent faith, dread of earthly penalty that of loving service to a kind heavenly Father. So the divine Master is wounded in the house of his professed friends, and the gospel way of reformation thus cast aside by the ministry as though it were not as efficacious as man's way, is brought into discredit.

In their efforts to make the way of reform easy, they let go of the power that alone can change the heart, to take the power that can only affect the outward conduct. Such a reform from a Bible standpoint, and that should be the minister's standpoint, is valueless; it never can accomplish any lasting, any real good.

The Israelitish Theocracy a Warning and Admonition to Us.

BY THOMAS R. WILLIAMSON.

"Now all these things happened unto them for examples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come." 1 Cor. 10:11.

National Reformers and those who in these times favor the enforcement of Sunday laws, point us back to the Scripture history of ancient Israel as authority for the setting up of an earthly theocracy. They say that as God approved the action of the government then when the worship of God was enforced by law, therefore God would approve now if the keeping of Sunday were enforced in like manner by earthly governments.

Now if we examine the record we shall find that after the entering of the land of Canaan by Israel, the period during which a purely heaven-made theocracy endured did not outlast the time of the judges, and during the rule of the judges the nation did not serve God through any fear of their earthly rulers, as the judge kept no court, had no army immediately at his call, was not surrounded by warriors who hastened to inflict punishment at his command, and though the judge, as in the case of Deborah, might command and lead an army, yet the people furnished that army or they refused to furnish it as best pleased them. Part of the people did not respond to the call of Deborah and Barak, and Deborah and Barak visited no punishment upon the disobedient ones. They denounced the punishment of God upon them and then left them entirely to him, and God punished them as he saw fit. That was the time of a pure theocracy, a true government of God directly over the people.

It was so in the wilderness too, the people were punished by God direct, in most cases, for disobedience to divine commands, and Moses was the direct mouthpiece of God.

Under the judges, there was no support by the people of an expensive retinue of princes and nobles in the form of a governing body surrounding the ruler, who directed all movements and who controlled all interests of State or church or family.

The government was exceedingly mild and people feared God, if they feared him at all, because he himself dealt directly with the nation.

God named and selected each succeeding judge, whether that judge were Eli, or Samuel, or Samson, or Gideon. When the people chose for themselves, as in the case of Abimelech, they generally chose badly and they then suffered for it, and in that choice they forsook the theocracy; for a true theocracy is never anything but the direct government of God without the intervention of any but inspired rulers chosen by the Deity himself.

This state of things did not continue. Israel desired a king, and God through Samuel directed that they be provided with one. They wished to be "like all the nations" (1 Sam. 8:20); and God in anger, not in gentleness, not in approval, granted their request. Hos. 13: 9-11. And though the theocracy still remained,² yet from that time it had a human mixture in it; it was the rule of God, through a king backed by the power of an army, and the king, working his own human will by means of an armed force, became to the people a god, not merely the instrument of Jehovah, but a veritable deity, served and obeyed more abjectly and servilely than God ever required any one to serve a human being. The king was god. The government was the divinity of the nation.

When the king served the Lord the people did so too, because the king commanded them to do so, and when the king became an idolater the people blindly followed their ruler because they were commanded or led by him in that direction; and if it be true, as Paul says, that "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey" (Rom. 6:16), then the people of Israel under the kings were for the most part servants of the reigning monarch and not servants of God. When they served God, they served him because the government bade them do so and for fear of the penalties which might be brought upon them by command of the government, and that was not genuine service of God, but service of the government; and when the government served idols the people just as readily followed the government, and so the government was to them a deity.

Twenty-one kings reigned in Jerusalem before the captivity, and twelve of them followed evil courses, and in nearly every instance the people followed the evil-minded monarch in his evil course.

After the captivity, if we accept the record as written in Maccabees and Josephus and the New Testament, we find the same state of affairs. The people were inclined to follow the government. When Ezra or Nehemiah or Zerubbabel or Judas Maccabes commanded the service of God, the people served the Lord; and when murderous Herod commanded the slaughter of innocent babes, or Annas or Caiaphas commanded direct enmity to the Son of God, the people obeyed and the rulers worked their own tyrannical wills. This is the record of theocracy as administered by human government backed up by armed force, and it is a record that shows to us in this age of progress that we had better have as clear a separation between Church and State, or religion and the State, as is possible.

The union of the two can result only in evil, for mankind can hope to furnish no greater proportion of righteous rulers now out of a given line or number than could be produced in olden Israel with their continuous line of inspired prophets and priests.

Paul warned the Christians of his day that evil men could spring up among them, not sparing the flock.

Acts 20:29,30. Scarcely an epistle has been given us from apostolic pens that does not chronicle the tendencies of Christians to depart from the truth, or the efforts of professed Christians to rule the church in their own sinful way. James calls the members of the church adulterers and adulteresses (James 4:1-5); and Jesus, in the messages to the seven churches (Rev. 2 and 3), brings charges against five churches of them, and serious charges, too, they are; and if the Bible itself tells us of failure on the part of God's people to serve him when the government was in their hands, of repeated and wicked departures from him, and even in the Christian age shows us that the Lord's people have the very same ancient tendency to depart from him—that in short, professed Christians are no fitter to trust with absolute control of State or nation than were the Israelites when God committed just such a trust to them; that his people are just as likely to stray and wander and rebel now as they ever were, we may see also that religion and the State would better occupy entirely separate spheres. Still further, we see that mixing religion and the State in European countries, mingling civil and religious affairs, has not made the governments of those countries or their people Christian, but has had a tendency to make the people formalists, and therefore hypocrites; for formalism and hypocrisy are in religion synonymous terms.

Were it possible to enforce a Sunday or Sabbath law so perfectly that every living soul would be compelled to conform to the law, it would yet remain a fact that mankind generally, in obeying the law, would, like ancient Israel, obey not from fear of God but from fear of the government, and they would therefore serve the government as a god, and would be government worshipers and not Jehovah worshipers. But to worship anything instead of Jehovah, even to worship a government instead of Jehovah, is idolatry, and cannot be acceptable to God, for "they that worship the Father must worship him in spirit and in truth." "The Father seeketh such [and only such] to worship him." John 4:23,24. This kind of worship no government but a true theocracy, without the intervention of any earthly armed force, can ever bring about or procure.

"And one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" Luke 12:13,14. "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's." Matt. 22:21. "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not." "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day." John 12:47,48. "My kingdom is not of this world." John 18:36.

If Christ, as declared in these Scriptures, utterly disclaims kingly rule or the right to judge before the last day, where and how can his professed followers acquire such power in his name? It is certain that as the theocracy that was set up long ago failed to make men serve God in spirit and in truth, and as Christ claimed no kingly power over unbelievers before the last day and threatened the enforcement of no judgments upon them until that time, there can remain no right in his followers now to set up a civil government in his name or to control in his name any government that is already set up.

God made no mistake in establishing the Israelitish theocracy, just as he made no mistake in creating the world; but man has marred and mangled every heavenly gift that God has committed to his control, whether it be the earth, or the Sabbath, or marriage, or organized government; and it is better in the matter of a theocracy to await God's own good time. Let the Father in the times and seasons which he has put in his own power bring his king, the Lord Jesus Christ, to the world and establish the King of glory upon the throne of universal and everlasting dominion.

That will be the only theocracy worth our consideration and our contemplation.

Tallmadge, Ohio.

Cravings for Monarchy.

A FRENCH journal is quoted as saying that it was the Americans who did most to make the Queen's Jubilee a success. This is doubtless an exaggerated statement; but it shows how the American craze for that which pertains to royalty is becoming conspicuous in the eyes of the nations.

And now comes the statement from Kansas, made in all seriousness, that the feature of the "fall festivities" in that section is to be a "queen," who will be none other than Mrs. Mary Lease, the Populist orator. At least, such is the program of the committee in charge of the festivities, and they have telegraphed for her acceptance of the "honor."

The queen will wear a $20,000 crown—a sufficient proof of the genuineness of her royalty—and will reign one week. This will be a short reign, to be sure, but it is as long as the reigns of some of the monarchs who have figured in history.

In case Mrs. Lease should decline to be a queen, it is hardly to be doubted that no very long search will be required to find some other head that will be willing, for the sake of the honors of royalty, to carry a $20,000 crown for a week.

"Dialogues of Devils."

Diabolus.—One of the greatest foes to our cause, next to the power of Christianity, is honest industry. It keeps the minds and hands of the people busy with other things than those we would have them engaged in.

Beelzebub.—That is true; but I have a plan in mind which will remedy that.

D.—Ha! what is it?

B.—Why; I will have a Sunday law passed, making honest industry a crime one day in each week, and innocent recreation as well. That will fix things just as we want them. The Christians, of course, will not be affected—they will spend the day in worship the same as before; but they are only a few. All the rest will then be where we can have full swing at them, and our job will be dead easy. We know well enough that minds and hands must have employment of some kind, and the Sunday law will give us a monopoly of furnishing the same to every one who does not care for Christianity. How is that?

D.—Good! We'll attend the reform ministers' meeting this evening, and have a committee of them sent to work the legislature right away.

Always Demoralizing.

ENFORCED leisure is always demoralizing, for when hands are idle under such circumstances, his Satanic majesty is busy finding some mischief for them to do. No enforced Sunday rest applies to him. The report of the "New York Sabbath Committee" for 1894-1896 says:—

"The general suspension of business is seized upon for illegal traffic. Large numbers of people are employed in supplying demoralizing amusements and the means of dissipation on the day of leisure, and are constantly on the watch to change the laws which stand in their way, and to stir up prejudice against them."

Of course; what other result could be expected?

Too Inquisitive.

Johnnie.—Mama, didn't you tell me I was born on Sunday?

Mama.—Yes, Johnnie; but why do you ask?

Johnnie.—Because, mama, I want to have a birthday celebration every Sunday.

Mama.—Why, Johnnie, that would be nonsense! You don't celebrate the day of the week when the event took place, but the day of the month, and that comes but once a year.

Johnnie.—But, mama, don't we celebrate every Sunday because the resurrection of Christ was on that day?

Mama.—Why—yes, Johnnie, of course; but—but—that's different; I can't explain to you just how, but you'll understand it when you get older. Run away now, and don't be asking so many questions.

A Suggestion.

As many readers of the SENTINEL are taking advantage of our special offer to send the paper to their friends, we would suggest that it would be well to notify such friends that the paper has been ordered to their address, so that they may not refuse to take it, thinking it had been sent them without being ordered, and later they would be asked to pay for it.

The Holy Ghost and the "Holy See."

To write the history of the harlot woman, the apostate church, is but to reverse every statement in the history of the bride of Christ, the true church. Of the scarlet woman it is said, she "is fallen." From what did she fall? Why did she fall? The true church began with the "power from on high." The other church began with "false brethren," without power from on high, who followed Paul with false teaching, and who were rebuked by the Holy Ghost. Acts 15:12, 28. Two statements of Scripture will clearly contrast the true and the false:—

"He [Barnabas] was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and faith: and much people was added unto the Lord." Acts 11:24.

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers to feed the church of God which he has purchased with his own blood. For I know that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them."

From the above it is clear that the power of the true church is the Holy Ghost which labors to lead men to the Lord. The apostate church, on the other hand, was to be led by men whom the Holy Spirit had not made shepherds, and who therefore were filled wholly with self, and who would consequently draw away disciples after themselves.

Of this falling away from the Lord and His Spirit to men and human power, Paul speaks more definitely. After warning the Thessalonian church against the error that "the day of the Lord is now present" (R. V.) he writes: "That day shall not come except there come a falling away first and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped, so that he as god sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." After describing the result of this falling away, in the utter ruin of all who fall with it, he says: "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord; because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through the sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." 2 Thess. 2:1-13.

This truth that the Holy Spirit is to sit in the temple of God, instead of the man of sin, is more clearly stated thus:—

"In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom also ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:21, 22.

From these scriptures it is clear that the Holy Spirit, God's representative on earth, sits in the temple of God, the church, for the purpose of exalting God. "He shall not speak of himself . . . he shall glorify me." John 16:13, 14. The falling away, therefore, as above described, was the seating of man in the seat of the Holy Ghost, and the exaltation of a sinful man in the place of the Saviour of men.

There is in the true church a "holy see," or holy seat, which the Holy Ghost occupies as the vicegerent of Christ; but how changed all this in the church of the "falling away." There we have the "holy see" occupied by a man who claims to be himself the "vicegerent of the Son of God."

It is sincerely hoped that the reader will not get his gaze so riveted on the "mother of harlots" that he will fail to see the mother's characteristics in the daughters. It is also hoped that the reader will not select certain churches and declare that they compose the falling daughters. The falling away begins with the individual; and to just the extent that the Holy Ghost is unseated in the hearts of the members of your church and my church, just to that extent has there come a falling away; and then just to that extent are they a part of the great Babylonian family.

It is the province of the Holy Spirit, from its seat in the temple of God, the church, to dispense power and wisdom, to teach and govern, to plan and execute. In all things it is the privilege and place of the believer to be managed by the Spirit and not to manage either the Spirit or his brethren. "There is no man or set of men that can manage men. All ye are brethren: the Holy Spirit of God alone can do this."

The Spirit not only furnishes power but pleasure as well. "The kingdom of God. . . is joy in the Holy Ghost." Any Christian or Christian church which harbors any joy not furnished by the Holy Spirit is guilty of enthroning the world in the temple of God, and by that means becomes a member of the family of the scarlet woman. "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God" is the inspired description of the religious world in the "perilous times" of "the last days."

How many there are who look with scorn on the scarlet woman, yet who, because of their own friendship with the world, which is spiritual adultery (James 4:4), are themselves really members of the harlot family. "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Be not drunk with the wine of Babylon, "but be filled with the Spirit."

A. F. B.

News, Notes, and Comment.

IN a certain Southern city, there is just now a rather abnormal zeal manifested in the matter of running down wicked violators of the "Sunday law." Certain Hebrews are among the chief sufferers from this spasm of virtue on the part of the municipal authorities. It is a well-known custom among the tailors of that race to take their work home and do it in their private apartments. Inasmuch as they are naturally clannish in their habits, the houses—nay, the entire neighborhoods, in many instances—wherein they elect to abide, are generally filled with them alone, so that nobody is likely to be disturbed by their pursuing their own national and traditional manner of living and acting.

* * *

It is a part of the religious life of these people to refrain from "worldly" or secular labor on the seventh day of the week. This they do in pursuance of a "commandment" which thousands of those "who profess and call themselves Christians" have read out to them in their churches on the first day of every week, without otherwise paying any attention to it whatsoever. That they may keep pace with competitors, these conscientious Hebrews must work on this first day, if they are to "observe" the seventh. The municipality in question has a "Revised Version" of its own. Therein, a certain famous text reads as follows: "One man esteemeth one day above another; another man esteemeth every day alike; let this be prevented by the police." The authorities have—in spasms—the courage of their convictions.

* * *

WHEREFORE, the blue coated missionaries of the gospel according to Puritanism are now amusing themselves in that town, and endeavoring to divert the public mind from their alleged intrigues with the gambling fraternity, by entering (with force and violence, where necessary), without the shadow of justification in law, without even the formality of "warrants" previously obtained, the dwellings of the unfortunate Hebrew tailors, dragging them forth, men, women and children, and carrying them off by scores to the station houses, all in the interest of true religion—and costs.

* * *

OF course, these "domiciliary visits" of the police, and their tyrannical behavior belong to the Russian system of civil administration, and have no place or excuse in free America. Equally of course, any policeman who might undertake thus to trespass vi et armis on the habitation of a wealthy citizen, or one of "high" social standing, would expose himself to the dangers of shot-gun and revolver, which, under the circumstances, would be legally as available against him as against any private person who might venture to indulge in similarly outrageous conduct. But the average Hebrew tailor is poor, and as to his social standing, it is as the things that are not.

* * *

IN free America, every citizen is, by virtue of his citizenship, a conservator of the peace. Whatever judges may say, we must ever maintain as a political principle that no man in our country should have in this regard, rights, privileges or duties in any wise different from the rights, privileges and duties of every other man. What, then, is a policeman? He is simply a man who is paid a salary for devoting his attention exclusively to the duty of preserving the peace, etc., which duty all other free-men are expected to discharge without pay whenever occasion demands. Neither in the detection of crime, nor in the arrest of criminals, may an officer arrogate to himself other powers than those of citizenship. He may not break in a door, where the public interest would not justify another in so doing; he may not arrest without a warrant where by the general law a warrant is required; for false and malicious and causeless interference with the liberty of the citizen, he is as responsible as those are who unfortunately live without his blue cloth and brass buttons.

* * *

THE average policeman understands all this perfectly well; and he is careful not to exceed the legal limits of his authority where by so doing, he would subject himself to trouble at the hands of those who have money at their disposal, or possess that mysterious yet powerful attribute known to the initiated as "influence." When he wants to do what he knows he has no right to do, he visits the "down town" districts, and tramps about among the humble and lowly, and bullies and harries and "badgers" them to his full, and when he has the "Sunday law" as a lever, so to speak, his violations of the fundamental law of American jurisprudence and of the express language of State constitutions are hailed with delight and vociferously applauded by some excellent persons.

* * *

MANY of the Hebrews of whom I am speaking are peculiarly fitted to be the subjects of police usurpation and outrage. They come from Poland and from Russia. In their own country, violence is all they know of law. For centuries they have been ground down by the iron heel of military despotism. To them a uniform is the badge of irresponsible and often of malicious power. The notion that any one of them possesses a political "right" which a uniformed officer of the law is under any obligation to respect is a new one to them, and my observation of them leads me to believe that it can never be thoroughly comprehended or appreciated by the older immigrants, though the first generation born here, and those who arrive young enough to get the benefits of the public schools, take to freedom naturally enough.

BUT this is the inherent vice of all sumptuary laws, "which vex the citizen and interfere with individual liberty"—that they are not, and never, from their very nature can be, used for the vexation of any but the poorer classes in the community. If a rich man wants to work on Sunday, he goes to his store or office and gratifies his desire, and the policeman will never be born who will dream of objecting to the proceeding. It is only the day laborer, the toiling artisan who lives "from hand to mouth," whose scanty wage for hardest drudgery barely suffices to keep body and soul together—he alone it is whose liberty is curtailed under cover of the "Sunday law." Surely this inexorable fact alone is an all-sufficient reason why the representative body of a free government should "reform it altogether."

* * *

VIRTUE of the municipal sort is certainly spasmodic. But it is radical enough while the fit is on, in a vowed purpose, if not in execution. And so, while Sunday tailoring is to be stopped in the town unmentioned, "Sunday club drinking" is also loudly doomed to go. The startling statement is printed that there are nearly three hundred "clubs" within the city limits, and that people drink liquor in them on the first day of the week. This the "grand jury" justly regard as calculated to bring down the wrath of Providence on the wicked burg, and they propose to put a stop to it in time.

* * *

THERE are, say, three hundred clubs. About six of these are what is called "fashionable." It is not denied that the members of all six get strong liquors at their respective clubs on Sundays, and pay for the same then and there (sometimes). Now, after all the flurry and flare and fuss and feathers of the proposed "crusade" are over, what will we find? If it be true that history repeats itself, and that human nature is pretty much the same at all times, we will find this—that a few "clubs," whose members are "workingmen"—that is to say, hand-workers, of one kind or another—and who are too poor to hire more than one room for their club meetings, have been broken up; and that not the slightest attempt has been made to break up one fashionable organization, whose members are "brain-workers" of one kind or another, or else absolute idlers, but are rich enough to own or to rent an entire house to meet in.

* * *

WHEN a mechanic's club has been "raided" on a Sunday and the members walk "up town" in a body and see at the great windows of palatial mansions rich men, attended by liveried waiters, engaged in precisely the same acts for which they have just been arrested and turned out into the street, their respect for American law and American justice, for American liberty and American equality, is not likely to be much enhanced. But this is the nature, again, of all sumptuary laws. And because of this, their nature, their existence is an evil and a menace; their administration a scandal and a reproach; and they ought to be reformed out of the statute book.

* * *

I HAVE no animosity toward wealth. I have no desire to excite the poor against the rich. I do not advise the raided tailors, nor the members of a raided club, to set in motion a raid against a luckier body. Two wrongs do not make a right; and this sumptuary Sunday law would be just as objectionable if it were enforced against every body as it is now, when it is only enforced against poor people. It is the principle of the thing that offends justice.

* * *

I go with anybody who happens to be going my way. And I know that there are many who will not listen to argument about principles, but will take sides with great ardor if you can point them to an undeniable evil of practice. All poor people—all toilers—all they of severe and narrow living—ought to band together against the Sunday law, if for no other reason, than that they alone suffer from its application. Its enforcement makes of them a distinct and branded class in the community. It surrounds them with police conditions on fifty-two days in the year from which the men of money are altogether exempt. It insults their intelligence and their manhood by proclaiming that they are not fit for the liberty accorded to others. It robs them of innocent pleasures. It puts a strait jacket on their bodies. It curtails the freedom of their souls by denying them the freedom of choice in their conduct that is part of American citizenship.

Ans. J. Ringgold

Sunday Enforcement in Muncie, Ind.

A PRESS telegram from Muncie, Ind., under date of July 18, gives the following with reference to the new crusade for Sunday enforcement in that place:—

"Muncie has not experienced such exciting times on Sunday for many years as to day, when the steps were taken to close every business house in the city in strict accordance with an old law. The Young Men's Christian band issued a manifesto last week notifying all who engaged in their regular vocation on Sunday that affidavits for their arrest would be filed by the members of the band. For three days the threat has been the chief topic of conversation, and it was supposed that the city would be closed up as tight as a clam to-day, and that possibly the street cars would not venture out. On the contrary, all the meat shops with a single exception, cigar stores, drug stores, ice cream parlors, and delivery wagons, bakeries, candy stores, bicycle stores, soda fountains and some groceries did business as usual, and the usual regard was paid to the saloon law. The street cars not only ran, but the company carried out its programme at West Side Park with a band concert, balloon ascension, and baseball game, unmolested by the sheriff.

"The churches were largely attended. At High Street M. E. Church, Rev. Mr. Naftzger, the pastor, was not present, but the discussion of the threat was so warm pro and con that it was decided to take a vote as to how the members of the church stood on the Blue Law enforcement, and when those favoring the action were asked to stand, the number was, it is said, very small, and there was loud hand clapping from those who refused to arise. In the church, W. A. Thompson, one of the leading lawyers in the State, denounced the stringent action proposed, while strong arguments were heard on the other side. During the day members of the "band" were collecting evidence for affidavits to cause arrests Monday."

Sunday Enforcement in Chattanooga.

BY C. P. BOLLMAN.

CHATTANOOGA has "turned over a new leaf" in the matter of Sunday observance, and is likely ere long to turn over another. The so-called reform was on this wise:—

A new head was recently selected for the Police Board, and immediately orders were issued to close all saloons on Sunday, in harmony with the city ordinance to that effect. The saloon men—

"Grumbled and said 'twas no use;
'Twas horrid injustice and horrid abuse."

The authorities were however firm, and the saloons closed as per their order. But in all other respects the city pursued the even tenor of its way. Groceries, fruit stands, confectionaries, news stands, soda fountains, ice-cream saloons, livery stables, street-car companies, etc., continue to do business as before, and each week the saloon men grow more desperate. They demand that the law shall be enforced impartially upon all, if enforced at all, and threaten to stop even the running of the street cars unless the order closing the saloons shall be revoked.

The Police Board has replied that so far as the city is concerned there is no discrimination. The city ordinance prohibits only Sunday liquor selling and Sunday barbering and either says nothing about other lines of business or else permits them; and that while it is true that the law of the State prohibits all business alike, it is no more their place to enforce the State law than it is the business of the saloon-keepers; and that if they (the saloon-keepers) wish the law enforced it is their privilege to swear out warrants against all violators of the statute. This the saloon men threaten to do. The matter may also be brought before the grand jury, though that seems unlikely.

THE B. Y. P. U. CONVENTION.

July 15–18 the seventh annual international convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America was in session in Chattanooga. About 7,000 delegates and visitors were present representing every section of the United States and the Dominion of Canada. Among the addresses of welcome was one by the mayor of the city, Hon. George W. Ochs. Among other things the mayor said:—

"There is something so peculiarly American in the Baptist church that it appeals with especial force to the patriot. The church typifies liberty in its purest sense; liberty of soul, liberty of thought, liberty of action, liberty of conscience, the total separation of Church and State, the absolute independence of each separate church organization. It unites the jealous guardianship of sacred teachings of Scripture, with an equally vigilant watchfulness of the priceless jewels of liberty. In the formation of our national Constitution it was the Baptist church that stood inflexibly for full religious freedom, never receding from that position until victory was won.

"It was a Baptist pioneer, who in the dawn of our nation's history, first lighted the torch of religious liberty; he held it aloft, proclaiming that civil magistrates had no right to coerce the consciences of men, that the ritualism and formalism of a State church were obnoxious to soul liberty, that man's responsibility in religious matters was to God alone; and in spite of persecution, contumely and indignities he persevered and the sparks which showered from that blaze kindled by Roger Williams, lighted the fires which chastened our fundamental laws and perpetuated the principles which underlie the whole superstructure of our free institutions.

"By such teachings your church produces men and women who live in perfect fulfillment of our highest ideals, and thus it best serves society's needs; for the true source of a happy, a prosperous and a contented State, is a broad, liberal and independent church. These truths taught by your exalted society make your progress a resistless march of triumph and explain the marvelous strides you have made."

Nothing that the writer heard was so loudly applauded as was this tribute to the religious liberty principles of the Baptist church. But deserved as it was so far as the remote history of Baptists is concerned, it is greatly to be feared that many who bear the Baptist name to-day do not know the real meaning of the term, religious liberty. However, the official utterance of the convention concerning Sunday observance was very mild indeed. It does not necessarily include any but perfectly legitimate means. Resolution 6 reads:—

"That we pledge ourselves to renewed efforts to secure a more general and fitting religious observance of the Lord's day, and to use all rightful and available means to check the growing tendency to secularize the day and give it over to worldly business and amusements."

All this might be done without any appeal to civil law, and is what consistency demands from every believer in Sunday sacredness; but unfortunately the speeches made in support of the resolution revealed the fact that in the minds of many Baptists, among the "rightful and available means to check the growing tendency to secularize the day and give it over to worldly business and amusements," Sunday laws occupy a prominent place.

One of the speakers, a Baptist pastor from Knoxville, in his words of welcome to those from other States, referred to the statute-intrenched Sunday of Tennessee, in these words: "We are proud to have you see among us, what others say is the truest Americanism in our fair land—an American sabbath; and we are trying to preserve it." This gentleman possibly did not know all that has been done in Tennessee to "preserve" this "American sabbath;" he possibly did not know how "soul liberty" for which Baptists of past generations contended and for which not a few of them laid down their lives, has in this closing decade of the nineteenth century been outraged in the State of Tennessee in the interests of the so-called "Americanism" which he is proud to exhibit to visitors from other States. Oh, that Baptists would be true to their history; true to the noble men and women who counted not their lives dear unto them that they might have conscience void of offense toward God; and above all, true to the principles of the glorious gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Recent Changes in Sunday Laws.

THE report of the "New York Sabbath Committee" for 1894-1896, gives the following summary of recent changes in the Sunday laws of the various States:—

"Vermont, in the revised Sunday law of 1894, omits the old-time prohibition of traveling and visiting, except for necessity or charity, and of being present at any public assembly except for worship and instruction.

"In Rhode Island, the General Law of 1896 provides for the exemption of those who keep another day than Sunday as the Sabbath.

"In New Jersey, by the Amendatory Act of April 28, 1893, it is made 'not unlawful' to publish or sell newspapers, to sell milk, to ride or hire horses and carriages for recreation on Sunday; subject to the power of the local authorities to regulate or prohibit by ordinances the acts thus made lawful, in their several municipalities.

"In Georgia, a law passed in 1895 permits the running on Sunday of special fruit and vegetable trains, under careful restrictions.

"Public ball games and other sports on Sunday, forbidden in most of the States by the general statutes, have become in some places so serious an evil by reason of the large and noisy crowds assembled and the temptation to mischief, that special ordinances have been found necessary to suppress them.

"The work of barbers, which in some States has been held to come under the general prohibition of labor on Sunday, has been forbidden by special statutes, on demand of the barbers themselves, in Missouri, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Colorado and Montana, as well as in New York as mentioned above.

"California, which had been for a number of years without any Sunday law—except that, as in the other States, by the common law Sunday is a holiday, dies non juridicus—in 1895 passed 'An Act to provide a day of rest from labor;' it declares that 'every person employed in any occupation of labor is entitled to one day's rest therefrom in seven,' and makes it unlawful for an employer of labor to cause an employé to work more than six days in seven, except in cases of emergency. The position of California in this respect is unique, no such law being found in any other State. An unsuccessful attempt in 1895 to enact a suitable Sunday law has aroused public sentiment, and led to renewed efforts for reform.

"Oklahoma, the latest received into the sisterhood of States, has enacted Sunday laws mainly copied from those of New York.

"Idaho is the only State in the Union where as yet no statutory provision is made for the protection of the weekly rest-day.

"In the District of Columbia, the Sunday laws which were in force at the time the district was ceded to the United States, are still nominally in force. A bill is now before Congress, and is understood to have the approval of the District Commissioners, to provide more effectually for the prevention of labor and traffic on Sunday."

This summary is given as showing the trend of public sentiment in the matter of Sunday legislation. At first glance, however, it is liable to be misleading. There seems to be a trend of public sentiment in the direction of greater Sunday liberty; but this is true only of the present sentiment as compared with the sentiment prevailing at the time the old laws were enacted. It must be remembered that most of the Sunday statutes of the States had their birth before the modern era of religious liberty. As compared with more recent times, the present sentiment respecting Sunday legislation shows a marked increase in the desire for Sunday enforcement.

"Faith or Fact."

THIS is the title of a book of 331 pages, which comes to us for review from the firm of Peter Eckler, of this city. The author is Mr. Henry M. Taber, and his endeavor is to show that faith and fact are antagonistic to each other. To this end he cites a numerous array of facts bearing upon quite a wide range of topics, which seem designed to include every prominent manifestation of human thought and action to which religion has given rise.

The purpose of the author does not appear to have demanded any great effort at substantiating his "facts" by proof. For example, on page 99, he states that "Three Baptists (who religiously observe the seventh day of the week) have been for months languishing in a prison in Tennessee for the crime(!) of attending to their gardens or performing some ordinary farm duties on Sunday." But no Baptists were ever imprisoned in Tennessee for Sunday labor. Mr. Taber might easily have learned the truth on this point if he had been anxious to state the matter correctly.

As a presentation of the superstition, credulity, hypocrisy, errors, inconsistencies, follies, fanaticism, injustice, and crimes of which men have been guilty in the name of Christianity, Mr. Taber's book would be well worth perusing, provided it were a profitable occupation to peruse such records,—which it is not.

As regards its intended impeachment of faith, it is sufficient to say of Mr. Taber's book that it is based upon a false assumption and is therefore a failure from the start, as every work of the kind must be. It assumes that Christianity is responsible for all the crime and folly that have been perpetrated in her name. As well might it be assumed that Liberty is responsible for all the crimes that have been committed in her name. "Freethinkers" believe in liberty, while condemning lawlessness and anarchy. Why can they not be as fair towards Christianity?

Christianity is no more responsible for the frauds which have used her fair name to mask their baseness, than is the United States mint responsible for the counterfeit coins which rogues have put into circulation. The very fact that there have been and are spurious Christians, is proof of the value of genuine Christianity.

A United States coin is counterfeited because, for the rogue's purpose, it is worth counterfeiting. For the same reason there are counterfeit Christians. But who ever heard of a counterfeit "Freethinker"?

Faith is not superstition; it is not credulity. It is the assent of the mind and heart to the Word of God, as a revelation of truths which lie beyond the range of finite vision. It is a means of knowing all-important facts which could not otherwise be ascertained.

Gratifying Results from Our Special Offer.

NOTHING could give the publishers of the AMERICAN SENTINEL more genuine satisfaction than the remarkable manner in which its friends have responded to our "special offer," the announcement of which appeared first in our issue of the 22nd ult. A week, at least, should elapse before returns could in reason be hoped for, yet as we close the forms of this week's paper, we are gratified to state that over one thousand new subscribers under the offer have been received, and these only from less than one half the States where the SENTINEL circulates. Over fifty have sent in clubs of from five to twenty subscriptions each; long lists have come through the State tract societies and individual subscriptions are numbered by the scores. This is something quite remarkable in newspaper circulation, and especially at this time of year. It demonstrates beyond a question of doubt that the SENTINEL has a very warm place in the hearts of its constituency, for it is the love of the principles for which the paper stands in defense, and the desire that they shall be known among all men, that have led to this unselfish activity in its behalf.

We are profoundly grateful for this evidence of appreciation, and it stimulates us, as nothing else could, to redouble our efforts in giving the SENTINEL's message in no uncertain tone. So let us together, editors and readers, unite hand in hand in "pressing the battle to the gates," so that all the people in all the land may know, and know in the light of God's word, what the dangers are that threaten us, and the way of escape.

Toleration in Russia.

THE Berlin correspondent of the London Standard telegraphs that while celebrating Christmas eve in the German manner the Czarina was asked by her husband to express a wish. She whispered:

"Please permit a little more religious toleration."

The Czar answered, smilingly: "That will come by and by."

The Czar has remembered his promise, and has recently issued a ukase cancelling that of his father, which ordered that every non-orthodox person in Russia who married an orthodox person should sign a document declaring that he would baptize and educate his children in the orthodox faith. The ukase of Emperor Nicholas permits children of mixed marriages to be educated in the religion of their parents—sons in that of their father's and daughters in that of their mother's.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy, Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
" " Six months,	-	-	-	-	.50.
" " Three "	-	-	-	-	.35.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELTON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Library Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY.

Is most healthfully and beautifully located. Combines religious and industrial with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

Sacred History, Sacred Music, and the Holy Scriptures.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year. Vegetarian diet. For further particulars and calender, address,
J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

AGENTS' OUTFIT FREE. No Capital Needed.

Weekly sales pay big money. We make a high grade BICYCLE as low as $24.00. Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere on approval, direct from our factory. ALPINE CYCLE CO., Dept. 68, Cincinnati, O.

The Gospel Primer.

A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE - - - .25

Address this Office.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELTON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., LITT. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of Harvard University.

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond Street, New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond st., New York City.

50 YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS, DESIGNS, COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain, free, whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Oldest agency for securing patents in America. We have a Washington office. Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice in the

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,

beautifully illustrated, largest circulation of any scientific journal, weekly, terms $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Specimen copies and HAND-BOOK ON PATENTS sent free. Address

MUNN & CO.,

361 Broadway, New York.

Our Premium Bible.

(See advertisement on last page.)

REDUCTION IN PRICE

For a short time.

The Sentinel 1 Year and Bible, postpaid, $3.00The Sentinel 6 Months and Bible, postpaid, $2.50*The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel, $2.00*The Bible given as a present for 6 new yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each; 12 for 6 months at 50 cents each.

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence urge our patrons to order at once.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough for us to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we quote. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of the writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

HEAR WHAT THEY SAY.

"I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted."

"The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished."

"The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it."

"My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it."

"I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted."

"I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible."

"It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price."

"I received your premium Bible and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent."

"I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected."

"I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had."

"We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight."

"I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap."

"The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it."

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond St., New York City.

The TWO Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen. REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE
HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST
REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges	$1.85
Cloth, marbled edges,	2.50
" Gilt edges,	3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

The Stomach:

... Its Disorders and
How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

BETTER THAN EVER!

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

We propose to make it possible for each and everyone to be the possessor of

A First-Class High Grade Bible.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the

AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality,

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.	B. C. 443.	25 Rē'hūm, Hā-shāb'nah, Mā-a-sē'-jah,
36 Behold, ^d we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:	^d Deut. 28. 48. Ezra 9. 9.	26 And Ā-hī'jah, Hā'nan, Ā'nan,
37 And ^e it yieldeth much increase	^e Deut. 28. 51.	27 Mā'luch, Hā'rim, Bā'a-nah.
		28 ¶ ^e And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lē'vites, the porters, the singers, the Nēth'i-nims, ^f and all they that had separated themselves

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED. ■

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00

With this book reading is made easy. No more stumbling over the hard words. All proper names are divided into syllables, and the accent and diacritical marks render their accurate pronunciation a simple matter. With a little study of the Key to Pronunciation to be found in every copy of this Bible, the reader loses all fear of the long, hard names of Scripture, and pronounces them with ease.

WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.00

As is indicated by the name, this is a teachers' Bible. It contains fifteen pages of illustrations and diagrams, copious helps of the latest revision, Bible index, concordance, dictionary of Scripture proper names with their pronunciation and meaning, and many other excellent features.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT.

Wabash, Ind.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: My Bible received this day, for which accept thanks. I am very well pleased. I think I have just what I need in the way of a Bible. It is not only a teacher's Bible, but also the very best for a student.

Yours truly,

T. M. MORRIS.

San Francisco, Cal.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: I received my Bible, and am very much pleased with it. It is a first-class Bible; just what it is claimed to be.

MRS. E. F. NOBLE.

Brattleboro, Vt.
AM very much pleased with it.

MRS. E. C. MILLARD.

Graettinger, Iowa.
We are all more than pleased with the Bible in every way. As a book it is thoroughly well made and elegant in all its parts. As a Bible the self-pronunciation is a new feature, and this is only one of its many excellencies. The type is a great delight to me.

MRS. S. M. OLESEN.

It is only by special arrangement with the publishers of this Bible that we are able to make this

UNPRECEDENTED OFFER.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $6.00.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

Address all orders to AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 12, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 32.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

HE who does not understand his own rights, cannot be expected to know what are the rights of others, and in the natural course of events must develop into a despot.

THE government of God is the only government which guarantees every individual under it the full exercise of all his rights, and actually secures for him all that it guarantees.

THE basis of all successful government is love. When the American people cease to love the principles of liberty upon which this Government was founded, the latter must give place to a despotism.

"MANKIND could be no more justified in silencing the honest opinion of one person than that one person would, had he the power, be justified in silencing the opinion of mankind."—John Stuart Mill.

"EVERY institution in which the doctrine of a particular church is inculcated ought, for its own sake and the State's sake, to be guarded most jealously from any connection with State support."—Bishop Philipps Brooks.

WHERE in all history is there any record of a good civil government managed by the church, or conducted upon a religious basis? On the other hand, it is easy enough to point to some exceedingly bad governments which have been run by the Church, or have been established upon "Christianity." The pagan governments controlled religion, and they were bad enough; but the papal governments, in which religion—and "Christianity" at that—was the controlling power, were infinitely worse.

This question is meant especially for the "Christian citizenship" and Christian Endeavor people.

A LULL in the battle for the maintenance of religious liberty, does not mean that the enemy is idle or has abandoned his purpose of overthrowing it. We may confidently look for him to return to the attack suddenly, and with greater power and determination than ever before.

Salvation Is Science.

THE one subject of the whole Bible, is Salvation. Whatever other subject may be touched upon or dealt with in the Bible, it is always subordinate to the great subject of salvation.

This fact does not stand in any way against the great truth that the Bible is science. Instead of this fact arguing for a moment that the Bible is not science, it argues forever that Salvation is science.

Instead of standing thus: The Bible treats solely of the subject of Salvation, therefore the Bible is not science; the true argument runs thus: The Bible is science; the Bible treats solely of Salvation; therefore Salvation is science.

Salvation is truly a science. It is more than a science. It is the chief of all sciences, the one most worthy of investigation. It is the science of sciences.

That Salvation is truly a science is plain from this consideration: With the mind, man explores the realm, and delves into the secrets, of all other sciences. Indeed "Physical Science" is defined by a scientist as "a product of our thinking as to external things." But while it is with the mind that man deals with all other sciences, Salvation deals with the mind itself.

The first word in the call to Salvation is, "Repent," which is literally "change your mind." The first of all the commandments is this, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all . . . thy mind." And it is written, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." "So then, with the mind, I myself serve the law of God."

As it is with the mind that man investigates all other sciences, while Salvation has to do with the mind itself, it is certain that Salvation is a science as truly as is any other. Shall the product of that which deals with all other things be science, and the product of that which deals with that which deals with all other things, be not science?—That will never do. Assuredly there can be no other right way than that. While the product of that which investigates all other things is science, much more the product of that which investigates that which investigates all other things is science.

This just conclusion demonstrates not only that Salvation is science, but that it is greater than all other sciences. Because since it is with the mind that all other sciences are dealt with while Salvation deals with the mind itself, in the nature of things it follows that the science of salvation is greater than the others. Beyond all question that which deals only with the thing that deals with all other things, is greater than those other things.

That Salvation is science is further suggested by the fact that those who are well acquainted with all other sciences, are deeply interested in this. And that it is the greatest of all sciences is further shown by the fact that those who most thoroughly understand all other sciences, are more deeply interested in this than in all the others; and while they thoroughly understand all the others, they are so deeply interested in this that they may understand it.

The ones here referred to as thoroughly understanding all other sciences, are the angels of God. Surely no man who admits the existence of such intelligences, can fairly question that the angels do, more thoroughly than all other created persons, understand the recognized sciences. Those who traverse the stellar spaces as familiarly as the florist his flowery paths—shall it be said that they do not understand astronomy? Those who gladly joined in the joyful anthem of all the sons of God when the morning stars sang together at the laying of the foundations of the earth—shall it be suggested that they do not understand Geology? Those bright minds which saw the origin of every other form of living creature—shall it be intimated that they do not understand Biology?

No, No! They thoroughly understand all these things. Each one of them understands all these sciences infinitely better than all men together ever understood any one science. Yet with this thorough knowledge of all the recognized sciences, the angels "desire to look into" the subject of Salvation. For unto the prophets "it was revealed that not unto themselves but unto us they did minister the things that are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things THE ANGELS DESIRE TO LOOK INTO."

The Greek word here rendered "desire" means "to set one's heart upon." And the Greek word here rendered "look into" means "to stoop to a thing in order to look at it; to look at, with head bowed forward; to look into with body bent; to look carefully into, to inspect curiously—of one who would become acquainted with something." It is the word used to tell that the disciple "was stooped down and looking into the sepulcher."

Such is the attitude of the angels of God toward the subject of Salvation. They desire to look into the subject of Salvation to become acquainted with it, that they may understand it and learn by it. For again it is written, "Unto me who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all see what is the fellowship of the mystery which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers IN HEAVENLY PLACES MIGHT BE KNOWN by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Now if the men who are acknowledged to be the best of all men acquainted with certain sciences, should turn their whole attention intently to the investigation of another subject and should continue that to the exclusion of everything else, that subject, even though it had never before been thought much of, would be instantly raised to the dignity of a science: and not only to the dignity of a science, but to the dignity of the leading science. The very fact that such eminent scientists should give such attention to a subject, would of itself be the best possible evidence that they considered that subject more worthy of their attention than the other sciences; and would be sufficient evidence that they considered that a greater science than the others. And if any should treat lightly, or scoff at, such work of such men they would be looked upon as persons of inferior calibre and sadly lacking in the "scientific spirit."

Very well; here are the angels of God, who are thoroughly acquainted with all other sciences, yet turn their whole attention intently upon the subject of Salvation, and have continued to do so age after age. This is evidence enough that they consider salvation a greater science than all the others put together: the one science most worthy of their thought. This being so with the angels, is not this ample evidence that all who slight or scoff at Salvation, or who count it second to any or all other sciences, are greatly lacking in the true scientific spirit?

Yet further: All sciences are the products of mind. Salvation is of God. It is God himself who reveals, and works out, Salvation. It is the product of God's thinking. It is therefore divine science, the science of God himself.

From this and the other considerations here presented, it follows that Salvation is not only science, but that the science of salvation is the highest, the deepest, the broadest science that is known not only in this world but throughout the whole universe.

“THE mixing up of politics with religion under any circumstances, is fraught with manifold and multiform dangers. There is no tyranny so cruel, no yoke so intolerable, as priestcraft when vested with temporal authority. More political atrocities, butcheries, crimes and enormities, have been committed in the name and on account of religion, than have arisen from any and all other causes combined.”—Bishop Venner.

Sin and Crime.

THE minds of religious people are naturally shocked at any exhibition of what they regard as a sin; and under the influence of this shock they are prone to forget the important distinction that is to be maintained between sin and crime. A failure to observe or to respect this distinction leads to very serious results.

Religious people are shocked alike at exhibitions of both sin and crime. And there are some sins which occasion a greater shock to the sensibilities of such people than do many serious crimes. To the mind trained to revere the name of God, it is as shocking to hear the street urchin shouting profanity as it is to see him appropriating an article which does not belong to him. A mock celebration of the “Lord’s Supper,” by some persons who wished to make sport of it, would be quite as distressing a sight to Christian people as an exhibition of assault and battery. But would the one thing be therefore as properly a subject of legislation as the other?

It is very distressing to some good people to witness “Sabbath desecration.” And it distresses them for precisely the same reason that a mockery of religion would distress them. On their way to church of a Sunday morning, it may be, they pass a group of boys indulging in a noisy game of baseball. On any other day nothing more would be seen in this than an exhibition of healthy, innocent sport; but being Sunday,—the day which they regard as the holy Sabbath—the sight gives them a painful shock, and they naturally feel that Sunday baseball ought to be suppressed by law.

Now it is for religious reasons that these good people are shocked at the sight of a Sunday ball game, and it is a fact that whatever is wrong for religious reasons, is a sin. What these good people really ask, therefore, is that the civil law shall forbid a thing because it is a sin. But it is certainly true that while good people are greatly shocked at some sins, they are but little disturbed by others which are quite as bad. A sin is to be viewed in the light of righteousness,—not the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, but the righteousness of God. Is Sabbath desecration any worse in the sight of God than covetousness, or idolatry, or pride? Is the self-sufficient person who scorns the gospel offer of salvation, or the proud church member who refuses to humble himself as the Scriptures enjoin, less guilty in the sight of God,—in other words, less guilty as a sinner—than is the youth who desecrates the Sabbath? Is the one sin to be passed over while the other is punished?

From the Word of God it is plain that Sabbath-keeping is a spiritual matter, and that mere cessation of work on the Sabbath day does not satisfy the requirements of God’s law. They who worship God acceptably must worship him in spirit and in truth; and the proud or covetous person, or any person who is not truly a Christian, cannot keep the Sabbath, and is just as guilty of Sabbath desecration in God’s sight, even though he may go through all the forms of worship, as is the ball player who spends the Sabbath in recreation.

Considered as a sin, therefore, it is altogether inconsistent and improper to demand that Sunday baseball be suppressed by law. It must be dealt with, if at all, as a crime. But it is not a crime, because, considered apart from religion, it would not be condemned as wrong.

A wound to our sensibilities may be felt as keenly as would a wound to our bodies, or even more so; but this fact cannot justify the civil law in undertaking to guard our sensibilities against injury. Our training and education in religion may have been faulty. The heathen is trained to reverence his idols, and would be greatly shocked at an application to them of the doctrines of Christianity. The devout Catholic might easily be shocked at the actions of the consistent Protestant; and the good Protestant who has looked with horror on a game of Sunday baseball, may, by changing his religious views so as to regard the seventh day as the Sabbath, arrive at a condition where he would pass an exhibition of Sunday ball without any shock whatever.

Very little intellectual progress has been made in the world without a shock to some person’s ideas and sensibilities. To say that these ought to be protected by law, would be to disregard alike the lessons of history and the dictates of reason.

God deals with sin. He alone understands sin perfectly and is competent to deal with it justly and effectively. Crime is a different thing. The law of man cannot properly take any cognizance of the question whether a thing is right or wrong on religious grounds. That is the question of whether or not it is sinful; and must be left to another and higher authority than that of man. Crime must be based upon a different ground,—that of the right of every individual to liberty in the pursuit of whatever he may deem essential to his welfare. And the individual rights of all being equal, the rights of one cannot interfere with the rights of another. “To preserve these rights, governments are instituted among men;” and this alone is the province of the civil law.

DON'T forget our special offer—twenty-five cents for the SENTINEL from now until January 1, next, to all who are not at present readers of it.

Governmental Recognition of God: What Does It Mean?

BY A. G. DANIELLS.

WE believe that God is, and that His existence and authority ought to be recognized by every intelligent being in the universe.

Nevertheless, we cannot approve of the proposal to make a formal recognition of God in the constitution of any civil government. The whole idea is wrong, and the consequences must be disastrous.

In proof of this we submit the following simple, undeniable facts:—

The recognition of God is an act of faith. Heb. 11:6.

A statement of that recognition is a declaration of faith. Matt. 16:15, 16.

To incorporate in the constitution of a civil government a recognition of God, or a declaration of faith, is to insert a religious clause.

To insert a religious clause in the constitution is to give the government a religious basis.

A religious basis confers power for religious legislation.

Power to legislate on matters of religion implies power to execute religious laws.

Power to execute religious laws means compulsion in matters of religion.

To compel the conscience in religious matters is to invade the rights of men.

To invade the rights of men is to subvert good government, whose primary object is to protect those rights.

Thus it is proved that—

To insert a religious clause or a declaration of religious belief in the constitution of a civil government lays the foundation for the subversion of that government.

It is difficult to see how any one can reasonably deny the correctness of these propositions. They are self-evident. They show that the worst possible consequences will follow if the proposal of the churches should carry.

THE TRUE RECOGNITION OF GOD.

As already stated, we believe that God is worthy of the grateful recognition of every intelligence in the universe. We believe, too, that there are proper lines on which we should seek to express and secure such recognition. But we do not believe that the formal recognition of God in civil and political compacts is the proper means for the expression of such recognition.

That is not the kind of recognition God asks. It is not the kind that will honor Him. Nor is it the kind that will benefit the nation.

The recognition that God asks of men is personal faith in Him, and obedience to His just requirements. To recognize God truly means to recognize the sacred rights He has conferred upon men. The only true governmental recognition of God that can be made is for the government to recognize the teachings of Christ regarding the total separation of Church and State, and to frame such laws as will safeguard the rights and liberties of all its citizens.

MR. A. F. PURDY, of Fillmore, Nebr., in sending us a club under our special offer, appends the following: "I have been a reader of the SENTINEL for several years, and it is, according to my judgment, one of the best friends this country has."

Christian Unity.

WHILE the religious world is busily devising and discussing plans for securing Christian unity, there is a true Christian unity in the world to which all are led who receive and love the truth of God. The Apostle Paul has written that in Jesus Christ—who is the embodiment of divine truth—there is neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian nor civilized, male nor female. All earthly distinctions of race, class, or condition, are broken down, and nothing is left but "a man in Christ Jesus." And this makes all believers one.

This unity, we repeat, exists to-day, as it has always existed since the day when it was first exemplified in the Christian church. Let a man who holds the Christian faith—the glorious truth which has brought to him the salvation of God—meet with others of "like precious faith," and whether it be an African, a Turk, a Russian, or one of any other race or class, there is a greeting like that between old friends, though they may never have seen each other before. They are acquainted though they have never met, and all difference of circumstances between them is ignored and lost in the significance of their one common and mighty circumstance of having been created new in Christ Jesus.

This mighty truth fills all the horizon of vision in the Christian life, and leaves no room for denominational divisions. In Christ, there is neither Methodist nor Presbyterian, Catholic nor Protestant; but the old self with all its connections and titles is gone, and only Christ is left.

Let people of all sects find the truth, and they will find Christian unity. They will find the truth when they find Christ, for he is "the way, the truth, and the life." In the same prayer in which the Saviour prayed for the unity of his followers, he said, "Sanctify them through thy truth; Thy Word is truth." By the study of the Word, and faith in it, is Christian unity to be realized.

This is not the way in which this unity is being sought by the churches. It is being sought through a confederacy; not through love, but through force; and the result will be not Christian unity, but a union which will bring persecution to those who put their trust in the Lord of hosts alone.

MR. J. BANTA, of Romulus, N. Y., a warm friend of the SENTINEL, and who has sent us many subscribers, writes: "I am pleased to learn that the friends are responding so liberally to your special offer. This is right, for the SENTINEL is the best little paper of its kind published anywhere, and I wish it great success."

Church and State in Australia.

As stated recently in the SENTINEL, the people of Australia are in the midst of a contest over the question whether or not there shall be a formal recognition of God in the constitution of the new Federation of the Australian colonies. The convention which met recently at Adelaide, to draft the constitution, left this recognition out, though the delegates were put under the pressure of numerous petitions from the churches asking its insertion. The churches have not given up the contest, and are now petitioning the colonial parliaments for an amendment to the constitution which will recognize God in the way they demand. One of the petitions that is being circulated reads thus:—

"To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of ———, in Parliament assembled:—

"The petition of the undersigned members and adherents of the ——— congregation within the Presbyterian church of ——— humbly sheweth: That your petitioners are earnestly convinced that in the Bill for the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia now before your Honorable House, there ought to be a recognition of the Almighty God as having sovereignty over nations and as supreme Source of all righteous law and equitable government. That this recognition could be easily and briefly effected by some such wording of the Preamble as the following: 'Whereas the people of New South Wales, Victoria, etc., in dependence upon Almighty God, have agreed to form one indissoluble Federal Commonwealth,' etc. That your petitioners therefore pray that your Honorable House will make such amendment in the Preamble to the said Bill as will embody the desired recognition. And your petitioners will ever pray."

The following counter petition is being circulated by those opposed to the Church-and-State movement:—

"To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of ———, in Parliament assembled:—

"We, the undersigned adult residents of ———, believing that Religion and the State should be kept entirely separate; that religious legislation is subversive of good government, contrary to the principles of sound religion, and can result only in religious persecution, hereby humbly but most earnestly petition your Honorable body not to pass any measure or amendment for the insertion of any religious clause or declaration of religious belief in the Constitution of the Australian Commonwealth which might be taken as a basis for such legislation, but that in this respect it be allowed to remain as framed and adopted by the delegates to the Adelaide Federal Convention."

The following reasons are set forth as the basis of this counter petition against governmental recognition of God:—

- "1. Because religious freedom is right.
- "2. Because religious legislation interferes with religious freedom.
- "3. Because a religious declaration in the Constitution lays the foundation for religious laws, the enforcement of which means religious persecution.
- "4. Because faith is a voluntary act and cannot be forced.
- "5. Because, to say in the Constitution, which speaks for all the people, 'We believe in God,' would be to say what is not true, for 'all men have not faith.' 2 Thess. 3:2.
- "6. Because a religious basis to the Constitution and laws of a nation would practically disfranchise every logically consistent unbeliever; but unbelievers have the same rights in civil government as believers.
- "7. Because only that which is Cæsar's is to be rendered to Cæsar. Religion pertains to God, and is therefore to be rendered only to God. Matt. 22:21.
- "8. Because civil government can of right have nothing to do with religion.
- "9. Because, as all history shows, any legal connection between Church and State is injurious to both.
- "10. Because all force in religious matters is contrary to the spirit of the gospel, which is to teach by persuasion and conviction, and not by law or force, and law means force.
- "11. Because Christ said, 'My kingdom is not of this world' (John 18:36), and it is wrong, therefore, to attempt to make it of this world.
- "12. Because if a small concession is made to religious bigotry, more will be demanded, and intolerance will follow.
- "13. Because any movement in favor of religious legislation is contrary to the principles of Protestantism, and a virtual concession to the papacy, which for so many ages has steadily warred against liberty of conscience."

Many of our readers will recollect the time when a similar agitation prevailed in the United States, when Congress was asked by a great petition of the churches and religious societies, to make a governmental recognition of God and give governmental support to certain religious dogmas. How soon that agitation may break out again, more fiercely than ever, no one can say. It is just as likely to occur here as in any other part of the world. Human nature is the same and the demands of the churches are the same, here as in Australia. Such occurrences elsewhere should admonish all lovers of liberty to redouble their own watchfulness at home, and be prepared to spring to the post of duty at a moment's call.

The Christian Endeavor Convention of '97.

BY BAXTER L. HOWE.

ON the title page of the official programme of the 16th annual convention of Christian Endeavor, appear the following words of explanation and caution:—

"Since this is an international as well as an intersec-tional and interdenominational convention, it is confidently expected that no speaker will transgress the rules of Christian courtesy or will give cause for offense to delegates of other nations, other sections, other creeds, and other races than his own. Nevertheless it is manifestly impos-sible for the convention or for the Endeavor cause to be responsible for every utterance of every speaker among the hundreds who will have part, and it disclaims all such responsibility. It is also believed with equal confi-dence that no auditor will take offense where offense is not intended, but that all will exercise the charity which 'is not easily provoked' and which 'thinketh no evil,' and in all matters throughout the convention, will man-ifest the true spirit of Christian Endeavor."

These words contain the principle of the Golden Rule and should be borne in mind by all who speak or write concerning the work of the convention or those who took part in its deliberations.

The convention was opened by the president, Francis E. Clark. Rolla V. Watt extended a welcome to the del-egation from abroad, and assured them that here (in California) bigotry was confined to a few narrow minds. "Here all men are allowed to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences." We would to God that this was true of every State and government repre-sented by the thousands who came to San Francisco to attend this convention. With a much stronger desire we wish that we might see this principle of "allowing every one to worship according to the dictates of his own con-science" welling forth from the hearts of these earnest, enthusiastic Endeavorers.

All the provisions made for places of meeting were used; and the second night an overflow meeting for about two thousand people was held in the street.

Many of the speakers seemed to realize the need of earnest Christian work for backsliders and sinners, and appealed to all Christians to let the work of God take deep and fast hold of the individual heart and then carry the same blessed truth to friend and neighbor. Said one speaker: "Men will not be saved by legislation, but by thorough consecration and true Christian Endeavor on the part of the church."

Another class of equally earnest and influential speakers also see the need of reform, but see no difference between the manner in which the simple Man of Nazareth advanced the kingdom of God in the earth, and the prim-aries, caucuses and polls of to-day. By this element much is made of earthly governments and our relation to them as Christians. One speaker, in dwelling upon this sub-ject, said: "Our Christianity is identical with our citizen-ship. The best American citizen is the best Christian, and the best Christian is the most loyal American." Some of these men plead eloquently for a church party that will mass the church vote for men who will pledge themselves to the principles of the church.

While there was an apparent union of purpose, and a determined loyalty to the Endeavor Union, these two ideas of reform were very noticeable throughout the con-vention. What the enemy of all true Christian endeavor is seeking to do is to draw all these earnest souls, who are striking at the evil where God is seeking to destroy it (in the individual heart), into the scheme of saving the world by nations. If the great Union is deceived into massing its thousands to save the world by the civil law, the Christian Endeavor Association will go down in ignominious ruin.

Christ is the head of the church, and he has, by the right hand of God, been exalted far above all principality and power and might and dominion, and every name that is named not only in this world, but also in that which is to come . . . and has been made head over all things to the church. Then if the church wants any help where must she go? To the highest power—the Head—most certainly. May God give those who see the enemy advancing to overthrow a work that was started and has been carried forward in good faith, the grace to "Cry aloud and spare not" and show God's people their trans-gressions.

Our citizenship is in heaven from whence we look for our Lord. We are ambassadors for God. We are stran-gers and pilgrims on the earth. We are in the world, but not of the world.

In the opening of the convention, while the leader smote four times with the Carey hammer upon the desk, the thousands present pledged themselves to take the world for Christ, the nation for Christ, the family for Christ, and themselves for Christ.

When Christ would save the world he first "emptied himself," became a little child, lived the Christ life in the family, and went forth to live, suffer, and die for the world.

Sacramento, Cal.

Not Based on the Law of God.

• It is a common idea that certain human laws are based upon the law of God. For example, it is frequently asserted that the common statute against "Sabbath desecration" is based upon the fourth commandment of the Decalogue. There is an assumption in this which is but little, if anything, short of blasphemy. Does man's law rise higher than the law of God? Is the divine law a mere underlying principle upon which man needs to rear the superstructure of thought and expression which will apply it to human affairs? To affirm such an idea would be to deny that God has the attributes of deity. No; the law of God is as high as heaven itself and cannot be made a basis of anything by finite man. Moreover, it is perfect, and therefore will allow of no additions. Human law cannot be based upon divine law. Human law can be based only upon those principles of justice which govern the relations of each man to his fellows. If it is not based upon this, it has no foundation in truth and right.

In Jail in Pennsylvania for Not Keeping Sunday.

IN the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, in this present month, in the great commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and in a town named after the chief founder of this free Government, a good man is sent to jail for refusing to keep Sunday. In a letter to the SENTINEL he tells the story of his experience, as follows:—

“Washington Jail, August 4, 1897.

“EDITOR AMERICAN SENTINEL: At my trial before Justice Berry, of West Washington, yesterday, the charge against me was that of servile labor on Sunday. They proved by witnesses that I carried a stand and box a distance of a block and a half. I replied to the charge, pleading my case by the principles of God's Word. The justice showed me every mark of respect. After my reply the squire said he respected the stand which I took in harmony with my convictions; and while making out my commitment he said he would be willing to trust me to take it myself to the sheriff's office. When I entered the jail the inmates flocked around me to learn why I was put in; and when I explained they expressed their disapproval,—some in a rather profane manner. A colored man came to me and wanted to know if I had not preached in their church a couple of times (stating name of the church). I said, yes. He said he was a member of the church and that his wife had been telling about me and described me, so he had recognized me when I came in. Then the prisoners wanted me to preach to them that evening and I did so. I spoke from Isa. 52:3. They took a vote to have preaching each evening during my stay. The vote was unanimous in favor of gospel services.

“The prisoners number in all about forty-two. My sentence is for six days. The Lord willing, I hope to find a man to continue services after my release.

“My jailer is glad of the work I am doing and gives me encouraging words. The prisoners are friendly. But I would exhort all my brethren and sisters not to court persecution in any way; for prison is prison, and the influence is exceedingly bad, almost beyond description. One is brought in contact with criminals of every class and description, with their profane language and other forms of vice.

“The Sunday reformers put people in such places for Sunday work. If they would stop and reflect for a moment, and consider what an influence they are placing those under whom they send to prison, it ought to make them shudder to think of meeting the action in the Judgment.

“Yours in the faith once delivered to the saints,
“W. H. ARMSTRONG.”

The fact that the sentence is light and the officers of the court and jail kindly disposed towards Mr. Armstrong, does not in the least palliate the evil of the principle upon which he was committed to prison. Pennsylvania has a law on her statute books which commands all persons in the State to keep Sunday, by refraining from “any worldly employment or business whatsoever” on that day; and to this law she has rigidly held notwithstanding there has been much agitation in recent years to secure its modification or repeal. The lenient treatment which is in many cases accorded the victims of the Sunday law by judges and sheriffs is prompted by their sense of right and justice, and is not at all justified by the statute. And as mild measures and treatment fail to accomplish the end sought by such laws, others more severe will be resorted to, without any change in the principle upon which they rest; until finally the death penalty itself will be the reward of those who persist in their refusal to honor a religious institution in which they do not believe. All this is contained in principle in Pennsylvania's Sunday law as it stands to-day.

No Conception of their Own Rights.

FROM a personal investigation conducted amongst the immigrants from some of the more despotic governments of Europe, it appears, says a writer in a New York daily, that these victims of oppression have, for the most part, become so confirmed in the soul slavery which was their lot in the Old World, that they are utterly ignorant of the fact, and cannot be made to grasp the idea, that they have personal rights, which both individuals and governments are bound to leave inviolate. Only their children, born and reared in this country, are capable of assimilating the knowledge that they have a birthright to liberty.

With such facts before us, it is not difficult to perceive the providence of Him by whom all men were created equal, in setting up this free Government for a beacon light of liberty to the oppressed in all the world. But is it not true to-day that this Government has so far departed from the plan of the Creator, that it is most frequently the case that these downtrodden victims of European despotism, meet on these shores the same injustice and oppression, in a slightly less degree, from which they sought to escape by crossing the seas? Without the promulgation of the doctrine of individual liberty made by our heroic forefathers who put forth and maintained the Declaration of Independence, and founded a great republic upon the American Constitution, what would have been to-day the condition of the masses of mankind, under the rule of the classes?

It is bad enough, certainly, as it is. But when this Government shall become—as it is fast becoming—a despotism like those of the Old World,—when Liberty is chained and dies in her own home—when the experiment of a “government of the people, by the people, and for the people” proclaims itself a failure—a condition of things will be reached which only the coming of the Lord can relieve.

The Fourth Century and the Nineteenth Century.

THE Church having commenced the treasonable work of placing man in the seat of the Holy Ghost in the temple of God, and thus having lost the "power from on high," she naturally sought for power from beneath, the only power remaining. A church will have power—if not the power of God, then the power of men. Ministers filled with the Holy Ghost will add men to the Lord; but ministers, of every church and at all times, if they are not filled with the Holy Ghost, will seek power by leading away disciples after themselves.

How many ministers to-day who bear the Protestant name are resorting to the most humiliating methods to fill their pews and platters—to lead disciples away after themselves. They are doing just what was done in the third century and onward by the "falling away" which made the papacy; and at the same time talking wisely of the apostasy in the early church. And when the faithful watchmen point to the parallel between the fourth century and the nineteenth, and warn men against the nineteenth century image of that fourth century church, they are declared to be enemies of Christ just as the faithful at that time were declared to be.

We are tracing the tracks of the scarlet woman through the early centuries for the sole purpose of showing that the trend of the popular church to-day is in the same path. Every point made has its parallel in the Protestant churches to-day, and we sincerely hope that the reader will see it and take warning. If the world has a seat in your heart while you profess to be Christ's, it matters not what church you belong to, you are covered by that symbolical robe of purple and scarlet. "Come out," is the call. Let the Holy Ghost sit in the temple of God. Dethrone the world, the flesh, and the devil, and let the Holy Spirit occupy the "holy see" of your heart, and thus escape the falling away of the nineteenth century.

Having lost the power of God, the bishops of the early centuries made use of worldly methods to gain disciples, and thus obtain power. Bishops vied with bishops in "methods of reaching the masses."

One method is thus described and indorsed by Augustine, sometimes called a saint:—

"When peace was made [between the emperors of Rome and the Church] the crowd of Gentiles who were anxious to embrace Christianity were deterred by this, that whereas they had been accustomed to pass the holidays in drunkenness and feasting before their idols, they could not easily consent to forego these most pernicious yet ancient pleasures. It seemed good then to our leaders to favor this part of their weakness, and for those festivals which they had relinquished to substitute others in honor of the holy martyrs, which they might celebrate with similar luxury, though not with the same impiety."—Aug. Epist., p. 29.

By such means did the early church seek and obtain the power of the world.

Look on that picture, then on this, from a prominent minister of a popular Protestant church:—

"The Church has gradually toned down her testimony, then winked at and excused the frivolities of the day. Then she has tolerated them in her borders, and now she has adopted them and provided a home for them under the plea of 'reaching the masses and getting the ear of the people.' The devil has seldom done a cleverer thing than hinting to the Church of Christ that part of her mission is to provide entertainment for the people with a view to winning them into her ranks."

"This thing is working rottenness in the Church of God and blasting her service for the King. In the guise of Christianity it is accomplishing the devil's own work. Under the pretense of going out to reach the world it is carrying our sons and daughters into the world. With the plea of 'Do not alienate the masses by your strictness,' it is seducing the young disciples from 'the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ.' (R. V.) Professing to win the world, it is turning the garden of the Lord into a public recreation ground. To fill the temple with those who see no beauty in Christ, a grinning Dagon is put over the doorway."

"It will be no wonder if the Holy Ghost, grieved and insulted, withdraws his presence; for what concord hath Christ and Belial, and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?"—Archibald Brown, in "Devil's Mission of Amusements" endorsed by Spurgeon and Needham.

Hear this from the author of the "Spirit-Filled Life":—

"It is positively painful to see the substitutes that are being tried to-day for the power of the Holy Ghost. Miserable substitutes are they all! One church is trying this plan, another that, and not one of them has found a new plan that is a permanent success. They are floundering, and some of them are foundering, and no wonder. It will be no loss to the kingdom of God if churches which ignore the Holy Ghost should founder. Let us go back to the Pentecostal methods. The trouble is that the churches have lost their way to that 'upper room.' Let a church only find her way back there, and obtain her Pentecost; let pulpit and pew be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire, and the people will come running in to see it burning. That church will not need to cater for amusements as a bait to catch the masses, but the people will come crowding into her pews, climbing into them as Zaccheus climbed into the branches of that sycamore tree when he wanted to see the Lord; for the people still want "to see Jesus," and they have heard that he is "to pass that way." We cannot improve on Pentecost's methods."—The late Jno. MacNeil in "Spirit-Filled Life," pp. 112, 113.

And now let the reader weigh every word of the following faithful witness as found in the most influential Methodist publication in America:—

"The pulpit has come to be a stepping-stone. In the lower ranks of the ministry it is a stepping-stone to the higher, and in the higher ranks it is a stepping-stone to the high offices of the church. In the rural districts the average preacher employs his ministry to help him into a city church, and in the city the preacher in the suburbs faces toward the great central churches. I do not stop to note and name the noble exceptions—the godly men who in the suburbs and in the country are doing their work with Christly unworldliness. I state the general deplorable fact, known and read of all men, everywhere recognized, and honored and acted upon in the administration of the Church—the degradation and shame of the ministry, the curse of the churches. How rare is it that a preacher of the gospel refuses a high ecclesiastical office tendered him! Preaching the gospel is not accounted by us the greatest work in this world—the highest position and honor ever conferred on mortal man. We sometimes write this noble sentiment and praise it with our lips, but in our hearts and lives we scorn and trample on it. We account a great many things higher than preaching the gospel—yea, almost any semi-secular office of Church or State that seems to offer higher worldly honor or larger salary.

"And so we are constantly drawn off, and almost every man seems to have his price. Professorships, lectureships, secretaryships, editorial tripods, agencies, political office, real estate speculations, almost everything and anything tempt and draw away the ministry from their heaven-appointed work. To this there are noble exceptions; but this, I repeat, is the drift, the dominating spirit everywhere recognized and honored and acted upon in the high councils and administration of the church. From these high places this spirit descends through all the lower ranks of the ministry, corrupting the aspirations of our young men, and poisoning the very fountains of ministerial supply.

"Let us now note how this our lack of undivided purpose of the Christly consecration to the great central ends of our ministry vitiates our entire ministerial life, and first, our inner spiritual life at all points. We lose faith in gospel preaching and the Christly passion for saving perishing men, and half unconsciously fall into the spirit and methods that help us climb the ladder of ecclesiastical position and honor.

"In the same way our studies are vitiated. Instead of the Word and in the Word, its inner spirit and life, Christ, the cross, the pentecost, we read and study almost everything else—apologetics, dogmatics, 'the genuineness,' 'the authenticity,' magazines, reviews, the latest book about the Bible, the latest moralizing novel. The literary and scientific spirit, as antagonistic to the spirit of our mission as mammon itself, possesses us; and we come to our people with sermons far away from the spiritual wants and daily lives of people. Toiling, tempted, starving for the bread of life, we give them husks. This is the complaint of the people against the pulpit as I hear it on all hands to-day.

"Thus our preaching is vitiated. The style of preaching that saves perishing men, that the common people hear gladly, that succeeds among the slums, . . . that steadfastly withstands the popular vices that are steadily creeping into our wealthy churches, is not the style that helps us into the wealthy churches, the doctorates, and the high offices. So our preaching becomes careful and timid, without moral earnestness and without power.

"In the same spirit, lecturing is largely taking the place of preaching the gospel. . . . I can but look on with sadness when I see one of these men descend from his high calling to the lecturer's platform: and standing there in the awful presence of two or three hundred unsaved young men and women, give off for an hour a Christless, gospelless lecture, employing the lecturer's tricks to call forth clapping. O for some Whitefields and President Finneys to call us back to gospel preaching, and show us how to save the people, the churches, the nation."—Ignotus in "Christian Advocate" (N. Y.), Feb. 25, 1895.

"The nineteenth century," says the late Dr. Gordon, "is presenting almost the exact facsimile of the fourth century in this particular. The notion having grown up that we must entertain men in order to win them to Christ, every invention for world-pleasing which human ingenuity can devise, has been brought forward till the churches in multitudes of instances have been turned into play-houses, with theater-boards announcing the courses for the gay season, boldly set up at the doors; and there is hardly a carnal amusement that can be named, from billiards to dancing, which does not now find a nesting-place in Christian sanctuaries. Is it then Phariseism or pessimism to sound the note of alarm and to predict that at the present fearful rate of progress, the close of this decade may see the Protestant church as completely assimilated to nineteenth century secularism as the Roman Catholic church was assimilated to fourth century paganism?"—From "How Christ Came to Church," by the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, pp. 81, 82. Copyrighted by the American Baptist Publication Society.

This is just what the faithful witnesses for the truth have been saying for years. They have been saying "that the nineteenth century is presenting almost the exact facsimile of the fourth century."

What next? After the Church of the fourth century had filled its churches with unconverted men, the next step was to obtain power from the Roman government to control them. The Church next asked to be clothed with the purple and the scarlet robe of royalty and to sit on the scarlet beast, on the throne of earthly dominion.

A. F. B.

MR. W. H. CHANDLER, of Coatsville, Penna., a short time since, ordered the SENTINEL and premium Bible, as advertised in another column, and, upon their receipt, writes: "My Bible and paper received. The paper alone I think is worth the money paid for both, and ought to be in the home of every family in the land."

"THE law knows no heresy, is committed to the support of no dogma, the establishment of no sect."—Judge Samuel F. Miller.

News, Notes, and Comment.

AGAIN a correspondent calls upon me to "explain" myself. This it is to write over a signature. I have sometimes lamented the absence of personal responsibility in American journalism—have wished that our papers would have the name of each editorial contributor printed at the end of his article. But I see now that anonymity is not without its advantages, at any rate, for the writer. If he overstates or understates or blunders in any way, the "Messrs. Editors" are promptly called to account, and, save as it may affect his chances of promotion on the "staff," the individual escapes.

* * *

YET the use of a signature undoubtedly tends to make the writer careful and painstaking about what he writes. One is more fearful of saying the wrong thing, and of saying the right thing in a wrong way, than when he is sheltered under the ægis of the collective "we." And I believe that the influence of the signed paper is vastly greater than that of the unsigned. The reader may not know his man. But it is something for him to be reminded through the name affixed that he is addressed by a being like unto himself, and not by a mere abstraction, or "composite body."

* * *

BUT to my correspondent. He wants to know why I take it upon myself to say that a lawyer cannot dispute the decision of a court as to what is the law, while such privilege is open to an ordinary layman, and he observes that this was not the view adopted by Mr. Lincoln. The answer cannot properly or profitably be given in a single paragraph.

* * *

EVERYBODY knows that, in order for men to get along together in a high state of civilization, certain fictions are necessarily assumed to be true. Some of these are social. Others are legal. Legal fictions may be compared, in the operations of the body politic, to the square root of minus a in the operations of algebra and of the higher mathematics. There is admittedly no such thing as the square root of minus a ; the very definitions, the basic assumptions of algebraic science expressly repudiate it, and render its existence impossible. Yet we have a symbol for this non-existent thing, and we assume, therefore, that it does exist. We carry out long and complicated calculations in which it frequently appears, and is dealt with just as we deal with the square root of plus a . The result thereof is materially affected by its presence, and the processes in which it plays a part. These results are practical and real, and by means of them we may build a railroad, a locomotive or a steamboat.

* * *

It is so in jurisprudence. On that broad, and sometimes dangerous, yet often salutary consideration known as "public policy" is based the acceptance of certain general rules which are the expression of that which is not. But working under these rules, the affairs of human life are administered, if not in consonance with exact justice, yet so as to preserve the public order, and keep the popular mind in a reasonable state of content. More than this it is vain to expect of any machinery that is the work of mortal hands.

* * *

ONE of the most important of all legal fictions is that every person knows the law. This applies to civil as well as criminal jurisprudence. If I commit a trespass, ignorantly, on another's land, the owner is entitled to damages, though they may be merely nominal. If I do in a strange country what is therein forbidden it is no excuse for me that the same act was not only tolerated but commended in my own land, and that I had no reason to suspect that the rule was otherwise abroad. So far, the assumption that every person knows the law is applied with absolute strictness.

* * *

BUT, now, as a matter of fact, nobody knows the law. This is, among other reasons, because the law is human, and therefore its language needs an expounder. The merchant does not know the law; and, accordingly, he consults counsel. Counsel does not know the law; so he asks the court of first resort to say what it is. This court does not know the law; therefore the judge signs and seals the "Bill of Exceptions," in order that the highest State court may pass upon the points involved. If a "Federal question"—that is to say, a question under the Federal Constitution or a United States statute—be in issue the Supreme Court at Washington is the tribunal of last resort. But, like the judges of the highest State court, the members of this august body do not profess to know the law. They listen, for information, to the arguments of eminent counsel; they consult authorities for light; they discuss with each other, carefully and laboriously, all aspects of the case before them. And then they deliver—what? Not the law as it must be taken by all men, for all time, but the opinion of all or a majority of the judges who are at the time upon the bench, as to what is the law governing the particular case before them.

* * *

THERE is no finality even here. Sometimes a "re-hearing" is granted, and the court, after more mature deliberation, or upon the strength of new points adduced, or new authorities cited, reverses its decision. Always, there is a chance, owing to the infinite variety of circumstances, that a case apparently exactly similar to one already decided will to the court present some variance calling for a decision of a different kind from that delivered in the first. New judges succeeding the present members of the court may take exactly the opposite view to theirs where the facts are to all intents and purposes identical.

* * *

From all this we see that human law differs radically from physical law, for example, in that it is, in the last analysis, a matter of opinion and not a matter of demonstration. Change your professor of natural philosophy as often as you please—you will get the same statement of the law of gravitation. Change your judges, and you will very probably change your law and get new ideas of constitutionality, interpretation and application.

* * *

This judicial opinion, which is the law for the time being, binds an attorney as it does not bind the people at large. Setting aside matters of conscience, all are bound alike to obey the law as it is judicially construed. But the attorney, who is an officer of the court, who holds his position subject to its judgment upon his conduct as such, who comes before it to inquire concerning its judgment on certain facts, is, according to the etiquette of the profession, debarred from criticising the court's conclusions. He is like to a military officer attending a council of war. He gives his ideas; he argues his positions; he defends and attacks a series of propositions. But when he and the rest have all exhausted their resources and the commanding general has ordered that a certain movement shall be undertaken, it would hardly be considered appropriate in him to return to his men and denounce his superior's estimate of the surrounding conditions and determination as to the most advisable course for his army, under the circumstances.

* * *

And here I am reminded of that fine and philosophical distinction made by Cardinal Newman between assent and belief. I cannot agree with that master of beautiful English in his position that belief is a matter of will. If I remember rightly, he boasts—he always gloried in the extent and intensity of his "faith"—that he was able to believe in the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius, and in the "winking virgin" by merely resolving (through grace, of course) to do so. This is beyond me. Nevertheless, I cheerfully concede that belief is one thing and assent is another.

* * *

And I suppose that assent to a court's opinion of the law is all that can be demanded of an attorney. There is certainly no obligation on him, when he takes his place on the Bench of the Supreme Court, to officially indorse the opinion of any or all of those who have preceded him, or of those with whom he thus becomes associated, "Respect" fairly sums up his accepted duty in this regard. Not even assent is required of him.

It is manifestly impossible to keep the action of the Supreme Court of the United States altogether out of the domain of politics. The fact that it has frequently to deal with matters over which contending statesmen have striven fiercely before the people, concerning which party platforms have given forth no uncertain sound, which have aroused the fiercest passions, and have been keenly discussed from every possible standpoint by a ubiquitous press, exposes its work to all the dangers and all the advantages of the widest publicity. And this suggests some points of peculiarity in the composition of the Supreme Court which are not generally attended to, and may form the subject of a future contribution.

Ans. J. Ringgold.

Sunday Enforcement in Muncie, Ind.

In our last issue, we made mention of the inauguration of a crusade by the "Young Men's Christian Band" of that place, for the enforced observance of Sunday. From a report published in the Indianapolis News, of July 30, it appears that the movement has already borne fruit, but not of a very Christian character.

Recently, this "Christian Band" published in all the papers in Muncie, a pronouncement, setting forth the character of the Band and its intentions. This manifesto declared that "The Young Men's Christian Band is an organized body of earnest Christian young men, who are banded together for the purpose of doing 'whatsoever the Master would like to have them do.' Their motto is 'Not to be ministered unto, but to minister.'" It stated that for a long time the members of the band have viewed the "wholesale desecration of the Christian Sabbath" and the decrease of Sunday observance as being "one of the greatest dangers to our Christian nation and to Christ's cause." Also, that "decadence of Sabbath observance is an outrage on labor and capital." It recited the fourth commandment, which commands the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath, and quoted also the Indiana statute for Sunday observance, as being "based upon this divine law,"—forbidding all secular labor except works of charity and necessity, and all rioting, hunting and fishing on the first day of the week—and warned all grocerymen, meat markets, bakeries, fruit stores, confectioneries, notion stores, bicycle shops, ice cream parlors, tobacco stores, and even drug stores and news stands that the running of their business on Sunday could not be considered a work of necessity or of charity. The closing paragraphs read thus:—

"Without fear or favor, and with no other than a Christian motive, we call upon every person who has been following his regular vocation and doing business on Sunday to close up and observe the day as a day of rest. We also invite and urge the hearty coöperation and assistance of every loyal citizen, young people's society and church society in enforcing the law by filing affidavits against any and all who are found doing business contrary to the spirit of the law on Sunday.

"Beginning with Sunday, July 18, the members of our band will make affidavits against any and all persons engaged in the above named businesses whom they may find selling on Sunday.

"With malice toward none and charity for all,' we are the

"YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN BAND."

The membership of the band is said to include four Sunday-school superintendents and five Christian Endeavor presidents.

On the Sunday following this pronouncement the stores were open as usual, and members of the band were seen at several places of business collecting evidence for the prosecution of proprietors for Sunday work. This did not tend to make the majority of the citizens feel more pleasantly disposed toward the band.

Monday evening, July 26, a meeting of the band was announced at the office of their attorney, in the business section of the city. Several members were present at the appointed hour and were waiting the arrival of the president, who had gone to the house of a clergyman to get some resolutions that had been passed on the subject of Sunday enforcement by the Ministerial Association. At this juncture three of the "best citizens" of Muncie, as they are called, entered the place of meeting, for the purpose, as alleged, of talking matters over and getting information of the band's intentions. However this may be, a fist encounter was the result, in which blood flowed freely. While the members of the "Christian Band" were doing their best to avoid defeat in this carnal warfare, the president arrived, bringing the resolutions and a revolver which he had borrowed from a friend for anticipated emergencies. The president entered with ardor into the fray, and at once brought his revolver to bear upon the forces of ungodliness, but happily without serious results, owing to the fact that his friend had taken the precaution to load it with blank shells. Cries of "murder!" and "help!" issuing from the meeting place quickly called a crowd of several hundred citizens to the scene, with several policemen, by whom the contestants were taken in charge and escorted to the police station. Afterwards those of the "Christian Band" who took part in the encounter swore out warrants against their opponents charging them with assault and battery, upon which charge the latter must stand trial in September.

To such results does the combination of force with religion lead. Having started out to enforce a religious institution upon the people of the town, it was perfectly consistent with this step for these representatives of this "Christian Band" to use fist and revolver in fighting the battles of their cause. It was all simply the use of force.

But force is not to be combined with Christianity.

Force is an element of carnal warfare; and the Christian's warfare is not with carnal weapons, but with the "sword" and power of the Spirit, which God has provided for the conquering of all opposition to the cause of righteousness and truth. 2 Cor. 10:3-5.

Persecution in New Brunswick.

BY G. E. LANGDON.

B. R. BLEAKNEY, a member of the Seventh-day Adventist church at Goshen, Albert Co., N. B., was summoned recently to appear before Justice Robeson for "plowing on the Lord's day" (Sunday). It was a strange sight to see a criminal(?) going to court with a Bible in his possession with which, to defend himself.

For years Mr. Bleakney has been a deacon of the Goshen Baptist church, but last summer he, with his wife, was expelled, as was said, "not because we do not consider you Christians, but because you are not in harmony with the church."

His arrest is a clear case of persecution. He lives on a back road, and the nearest house in sight of his work was two and one half miles distant. The informant is a maid about fifty-six years old, who lives two miles from Mr. Bleakney's under a big hill. She has left her home and spent several Sundays spying around so she could be disturbed with his quiet work.

When it was learned that she could not induce other magistrates to engage in the inquisitorial business, one willingly volunteered his services. Rather than not prosecute the peace-loving Adventists, the case was submitted to him. Not being satisfied with the fines stated in the "Lord's Day Act" of New Brunswick, which fixes the maximum penalty at four days' imprisonment or $8, this justice sought to place the fine under another code, where $40 could be imposed. This code was entirely beyond his jurisdiction, and the case was withdrawn.

After the court was ended the justice(?) stepped up to Mr. Bleakney, who had made no remarks, and said, "You needn't feel too keen, sir, for we have two more cases against you, and we'll show you that you'll have to obey."

It is a shame to our country that laws fit for the Dark Ages are on our statute books, to be used against inoffensive, God-fearing people, by every capricious person who can skulk through the fields and woods for miles in order to find an old neighbor over sixty years old, seeking to eke out an honest livelihood, and following the perfect Pattern in working six days and resting on the seventh.

It will not be out of place in closing to say that the better class of people are not in sympathy with this effort to deprive a man of his civil rights and his "soul liberty." Mr. Bleakney found many friends who were not anxious to see a person persecuted for conscience' sake.

At Tupperville, Ont., August 10, Mr. Y. Bell, an observer of the seventh-day Sabbath, will be tried in the civil court for having done work on Sunday.

Another "Great Discovery."

ANOTHER "great discovery" has been made by "prospectors" in search of Biblical support for Sunday observance; and Mr. Gamble's great "find" of a perambulatory attachment to the ancient weekly Sabbath, must now sink into insignificance. For this new "great discovery" brings to light nothing less than a plain, unequivocal command, "On Sunday thou shalt rest."

The discoverer is the Ram's Horn, a Chicago journal which has made quite a reputation in the religious world. Contrary to Mr. Gamble's style, however, the Ram's Horn brings out its discovery in the form of mere casual mention, thus: "It is true that there is a more profound objection [to the Sunday newspaper] in the fact that it is hostile to the law of God, which says, 'On Sunday thou shalt rest.'"

The exposure of such a "nugget" as this—worth millions if it is only genuine—ought to create a great rush to this new Klondike of the Sunday supporters; only—what must be very disappointing—the Ram's Horn omits to tell where it is located. When its latitude and longitude become known and when it is proved that this wonderful nugget is genuine gold, there will be the greatest excitement and joy in the Sunday camp that was ever known.

But meanwhile it is all a question of only "when."

A CONGRESS to consider the question of Sunday enforcement was recently in session in Brussels, Belgium. It was decided that Sunday rest could be applied to nearly all the industries in the country, and a special effort will be made to secure a cessation of Sunday work by the the railways.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

THE statement is made by Hon. Carroll D. Wright, the well-known statistician, that "every dollar received in revenue from the liquor traffic costs the Government of the United States twenty-one dollars."

To Our Friends.

WE wish it were our privilege to look into the face and shake the hand of every member of the SENTINEL family, but this is impossible. We wish also that our circumstances were such that we could respond to every letter containing subscriptions under our special offer that have come to us during the past two weeks, but we cannot well do this either. However, we want you all to know that the SENTINEL gratefully appreciates the self-sacrificing efforts that are everywhere being put forth in its behalf. In hundreds of instances, we know that the letters of remittance have come to us watered with a tear and hallowed by a prayer, that the "silent messengers" will go forth to bless those who receive them. With such a spirit back of the message the SENTINEL bears, is it any wonder that the people are ready to respond, and send us such lists as we are daily receiving? Certainly not; for that is the chord, when touched, that moves the universe to action.

"OURS is a civil government, strictly and exclusively; its jurisdiction extends over only civil affairs. A Christian government implies a State religion. Religious liberty does not mean liberty for the Christian religion alone."—Rev. J. L. Wilkinson, Baptist.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50.
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25.

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

UNION COLLEGE,

Founded in 1891 by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, and located at College View, a suburb of the city of Lincoln, Nebraska.

The climate is healthy and the sanitary conditions excellent.

Purpose of the College.

This College was established not merely for the purpose of teaching the sciences, but also of giving instruction in the great principles of God's Word, and the practical duties of every-day life.

Text Books.

The Bible holds the first place in the educational system, and only such text books are used as harmonize with the inspired Word.

Courses of Study.

The usual work in the classical, scientific and preparatory courses is done, and in addition special biblical courses are offered in English, German, Danish and Swedish. Those who cannot remain long in school will be permitted to select from the regular course such studies as they may be qualified to pursue.

Thorough instruction given in music, drawing, painting, stenography, book-keeping and commercial law.

Industrial Department.

An industrial department is connected with, and forms a part of, the regular college work. Each student has an opportunity of spending two hours daily in some useful physical labor under a competent instructor.

Employment for young men: Practical farming and gardening, use of tools, shoe making, tailoring, tent making, baking and dairying.

For young ladies: Domestic work, sewing, cooking, laundrying, flower culture, etc.

Expenses low. Send for catalogue.

Address,

UNION COLLEGE,

College View, Nebr.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY.

Is most healthfully and beautifully located. Combines religious and industrial with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO

Sacred History, Sacred Music, and the Holy Scriptures.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year. Vegetarian diet. For further particulars and calender, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS.

DON'T forget—our special offer on the SENTINEL closes September 1st.

HAVE you taken advantage of our latest combination offer to secure a first class Bible cheap?

THE SENTINEL from now to January 1st, next, for only twenty-five cents, to those not now subscribers to the paper.

THERE are few commercial colleges in the land equal to the Capital City Commercial College, of Des Moines, Iowa, as a school where one may receive a good business training or a thorough course in short-hand. Anyone who contemplates taking such a course, would do well to send for an elegant catalogue giving full particulars. The SENTINEL is personally acquainted with the school and its proprietors, and heartily recommends it as among the best of the kind to be found anywhere.

PRINCIPAL HAUGHEY, of the South Lancaster Academy, writes us that the outlook for that worthy institution the coming year is very encouraging. Quite extensive preparations are making along various lines of improvement, and arrangements have been made whereby students can secure an education at the lowest possible rate. The location of the school is excellent; the discipline is first class, and the student who cannot succeed under the environment of South Lancaster Academy, would fail anywhere. Catalogue giving full information can be had by addressing Prof. J. H. HAUGHEY, South Lancaster, Mass.

WE this week place in our columns the new advertisement of Union College, of Nebraska. Among the many attempts to establish colleges and normal schools in and about Lincoln, which is known as the city of schools, none has met with more decided success than this institution, and the secret of it is found in its method of conduct. Its students are in demand everywhere as teachers, missionary workers and business men, for their reputation has gone out ahead of them as young men and women of sterling mental and moral worth.

We could say much more in favor of this excellent institution, which ranks as one of the best in the State, but forbear. We would advise those in proximity to it, to write for catalogue, or any other information desired, addressing, UNION COLLEGE, College View, Nebraska.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But for all of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 25 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, . . . $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

Our Premium Bible.

(See advertisement on last page.)

REDUCTION IN PRICE

For a short time.

The Sentinel 1 Year and Bible, postpaid, $3.00

The Sentinel 6 Months and Bible, postpaid, $2.50

The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel, $2.00

The Bible given as a present for 6 new yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each; 12 for 6 months at 50 cents each.

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence urge our patrons to order at once.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough for us to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we quote. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of the writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

HEAR WHAT THEY SAY.

"I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted."

"The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished."

"The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it."

"My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it."

"I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted."

"I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible."

"It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price."

"I received your premium Bible and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent."

"I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected."

"I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had."

"We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight."

"I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap."

"The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it."

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond St., New York City.

The TWO Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen. REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE
HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST
REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges	$1.85
Cloth, marbled edges,	2.50
" Gilt edges,	3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

The Stomach:

... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dyspepsia,
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	Quacks and Nostrums.
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

BETTER THAN EVER!

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

We propose to make it possible for each and everyone to be the possessor of

A First-Class High Grade Bible.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the

AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round Corners. Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality,

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.	B. C. 445.	25 Rē'hūm, Hā-shāb'nah, Mā-a-sē'-jah,
36 Behold, ^a we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:	^a Deut. 28. 48. Ezra 9. 9.	26 And Ā-hī'jah, Hā'nan, Ā'nan,
37 And ^e it yieldeth much increase	^e Deut. 28. 22. 51.	27 Māl'luch, Hā'rim, Bā'a-nah.
		28 ¶ ^e And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lē'vites, the porters, the singers, the Nēth'i-nīms, ^f and all they that had separated themselves

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00

With this book reading is made easy. No more stumbling over the hard words. All proper names are divided into syllables, and the accent and diacritical marks render their accurate pronunciation a simple matter. With a little study of the Key to Pronunciation to be found in every copy of this Bible, the reader loses all fear of the long, hard names of Scripture, and pronounces them with ease.

WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.00

As is indicated by the name, this is a teachers' Bible. It contains fifteen pages of illustrations and diagrams, copious helps of the latest revision, Bible index, concordance, dictionary of Scripture proper names with their pronunciation and meaning, and many other excellent features.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT.

Wabash, Ind.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: My Bible received this day, for which accept thanks. I am very well pleased. I think I have just what I need in the way of a Bible. It is not only a teacher's Bible, but also the very best for a student.

Yours truly,

T. M. MORRIS.

San Francisco, Cal.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: I received my Bible, and am very much pleased with it. It is a first-class Bible; just what it is claimed to be.

MRS. E. F. NOBLE.

Brattleboro, Vt.
AM very much pleased with it.

MRS. E. C. MILLARD.

Graettinger, Iowa.
We are all more than pleased with the Bible in every way. As a book it is thoroughly well made and elegant in all its parts. As a Bible the self-pronunciation is a new feature, and this is only one of its many excellencies. The type is a great delight to me.

MRS. S. M. OLESEN.

It is only by special arrangement with the publishers of this Bible that we are able to make this

UNPRECEDENTED OFFER.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $6.00.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

Address all orders to

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 19, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 33
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

NO SENTINEL next week. The next issue will be dated September 2.

It is never the legitimate business of the State to use its power in an attempt to settle a religious controversy.

ALL religious legislation is an effort to compel the carnal mind to act like the spiritual mind; in other words, to do an impossibility.

RIGHTS are independent of citizenship. The foreigner who becomes a naturalized citizen of the United States, neither loses nor gains any natural rights by the process.

THE power of the State, exercised through the policeman's club, may soften the head, but it never softens the heart. The gospel, on the other hand, works by softening the heart.

THERE is much more honor given to the Deity in writing his name with a capital initial, than in trying to compel people to act in conformity with the religious ideas of some person or sect.

A "GOVERNMENT of the people, by the people," whether by the majority or a small part of the people, cannot be a government of God. Any attempt to make it such can be nothing else than an effort to exalt man into the place of God. God governs by spiritual agencies alone. His rule in the kingdoms of men is only that of "an overruling providence."

"You are a good man; but we have a law, and the law must be obeyed." If this is a valid ground now for sending an individual to jail for working on Sunday, why was it not a valid ground for putting to death Him who taught a religion contrary to the law of the Roman State in the days of Pontius Pilate?

ONE very important question now before the American people, whether they are aware of it or not, is that of whether there shall be set up in this Government a State or national "conscience." Such a thing, of course, could not exist in peace with the individual conscience, and the latter would be forced to surrender or involve its possessor in persecution. Every Sunday law sets up a State conscience in the matter of the observance of the Sabbath.

God the Teacher In the Sciences.

THE mistake that men make in thinking that the other sciences are not to be found in the Bible, is second only to the mistake that they make in thinking that the Bible itself is not scientific, and that Salvation is not science.

God is the Author of all true science, and to all who will have God for their teacher He will give knowledge of the other sciences as well as of the science of Salvation. He has done this before, and the fact is recorded that all may know that he will do it always for all who will have him for their teacher.

Solomon was but a youth—about eighteen—when he became king of Israel. Yet with God for his teacher, in a short time he became the greatest scientist that ever lived either in ancient or in modern times.

He knew thoroughly the whole range of Botany "from the cedar that is in Lebanon to the hyssop that springeth out of the wall." He knew just as thoroughly, zoölogy and ornithology and entomology and ichthyology. For he spoke not only of trees from the mighty cedar of Lebanon to the tiny hyssop, but "also of beasts, and birds, and creeping things, and fishes."

Solomon was better acquainted with all these sciences together than any other man has ever been acquainted with any one of them. Yet this was not the complete range of his scientific attainments; for he was just as well acquainted with meteorology and others as with any of the ones named. Nor did he hold this knowledge in any exclusive spirit. He taught it freely to the people; and to all people, too, for they came to him from all nations to hear his instruction in science and philosophy. Thus a thousand years before Christ, hundreds of years before the so-called and boasted wise men of Greece had ever breathed, there was in Israel an understanding of science that has never been attained in any nation since.

Nor did this knowledge pass away with Solomon. Four hundred years afterward, when the first captives were taken from Jerusalem to Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar had a selection made of certain youth from among the Jews to be taught in the learning of the Chaldeans. These youth were selected upon both their mental and physical standing. They were chosen by a strict examination. The requirements, in the examination which they must pass, were that they should have "no blemish" but should be "well favored, and skillful in all wisdom and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them."

It is well known that at that time Babylon itself stood high in scientific attainment; and was qualified to conduct an examination in science. And it is a fact that there were found even among the youth of the Jews those who were able successfully to pass such an examination. The fact that the Jewish youth understood these things, demonstrates that the sciences were understood and taught in Israel; and shows that the scientific instruction established by Solomon had remained among the people of Israel and was still taught in their families and in their schools.

Among these Jewish youth selected to be taught in the Chaldean learning, were Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. Daniel was about eighteen. At Babylon they were put under the Chaldean instructors to be taught. They remained in the Chaldean school three years. At the end of that time there was an examination held. The result was that of all who were in the school, none were found as learned as these four youth.

Nor was it only the other students in the school that were surpassed in knowledge by these four. They outstripped all the men in the empire. For "in all matters of wisdom and understanding that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm."

No man can teach what he does not know. No man can teach ten times more than he knows. This testimony therefore shows that Daniel and his three brethren knew ten times more than did the men who were over them as instructors. It must be borne in mind that Babylon is held even at this day, to have been then well versed in a number of the recognized sciences. All these things were certainly taught in that school where were these four young Jews. Yet when examination came these four were found to be ten times better versed in all these things than were all the professed wise men in all the realm. And that is certainly ten times better than were their own Chaldean teachers.

Well then, since no man can teach ten times more than he knows or understands, the question is, How did these youth learn what the examination demonstrated that they knew? Whence came to them this knowledge that was so far beyond that of all the wise ones of Babylon, including their own teachers?—Here is the answer: "As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom."

God was their teacher. This is why they learned so much more than all the teachers knew who were placed over them as instructors. God was Solomon's teacher; and this is why he too had understanding in philosophy and science beyond all that the rest of the world knew or that it has ever known since. These examples are sufficient to make it plain that God is a capable instructor in the recognized sciences as well as in religion. Yea, more than this: these examples make it perfectly plain that God is a better teacher in all true philosophy and in all true science, than is any man or all men together. The idea that true science can be taught without God; or that heathen infidels and atheists are better able to discover it than God is to teach it, is a most pernicious error.

These examples are given in Holy Writ to teach all men that God is as ready and willing to be their teacher in all these things as he was to be the teacher of Solomon and the four brethren in Babylon. God will teach people to-day as truly and as fully as he did those in that day. All that is needed is the faith and devotion in people to-day, such as was in those of that time. There is no respect of persons with God. God favored Solomon and Daniel and his brethren, no more than he is ready to favor every soul every day. Let men, youth and children to-day choose God for their teacher in all things, as did Solomon and the four in Babylon, and they will find him to be to-day the all-efficient teacher that he was then in all philosophy and all science—we say not "as well as in religion," because the religion, the Salvation of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ, is both philosophy and science.

But people do not believe, even many professed Christians do not believe, that the religion of Christ is philosophy; they do not believe that the Salvation of God is science. They do not believe that even the recognized sciences are known to the Lord or that, if known to him, he cares to teach anything concerning them. They do not believe that the Bible is science, nor do they believe that the Bible knows anything of the recognized sciences. They do not believe that God will teach these things to men. Therefore they go to the heathen, to infidels and atheists, to learn all that and think that such men are wondrous wise, and that they themselves are wise, in following the "science" of such teachers, that is without God, that leads away from God and from faith in his word, his wisdom and his power.

A good illustration of this is found in the fact that Harper's "Haydn's Dictionary of Dates," the standard work on the dates of important events, says that the sun dial was invented by Anaximander, who lived about 530 B. C., when there stands in the Bible that is in everybody's house the plain circumstantial mention of "the sun dial of Ahaz" which shows that the sun dial was in use in Jerusalem two hundred years before Anaximander ever breathed. Thus it is expected that the people shall give to Anaximander credit for the invention of a thing that the Bible shows was in daily use two hundred years before he lived. If that was indeed a thing so new in Greece that Anaximander could claim it as an original invention, then the belated science of the Greeks may sincerely be deplored. But as for us we must be pardoned for not believing that Anaximander was the original inventor of a thing that we know was in use two hundred years before he was born. There are in the Bible more interesting facts and truths than many people think.

Oh that those who profess to believe the Lord would believe him indeed! Oh that they would believe that he is what he is! Oh that with a whole heart they would choose him, for all that he is to the children of men, that they might find him to be the great, wise, and blessed teacher that he is to all who will choose him for their teacher in all things. "Behold, God exalteth by his power: who teacheth like him?"

Human Law Cannot Deal with Sin.

God's law fixes the penalty for Sabbath desecration, and what right has any man or any government to change that penalty? "Sin is the transgression of the law"; and "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Thus says the Word of God, and that Word is truth, and must stand. Nothing short of the death penalty for Sabbath desecration, therefore, can be just. No other penalty than this was inflicted for it, when God inflicted the penalty upon the transgressor. If the Government therefore is to deal with Sabbath desecration, it cannot properly prescribe anything else than the death penalty for every instance of transgression.

The Lord, however, makes a further provision for the transgressor. He provides that the sinner who repents and exercises faith in Jesus Christ, shall be pardoned. Can the State also make this provision? Can it say to the transgressor, Repent, and you shall be pardoned? That is a just provision, certainly, for it is made by the Lord himself. But the law of the State can contain no such provision, for it would amount to a total nullification of the law itself.

It is plain, therefore, that human law cannot undertake to enforce the law of God, or to deal with anything as a transgression against God. It cannot enforce morality or punish immorality. It can, properly, undertake only to restrain men from the commission of such deeds as interfere with people in the exercise of their natural right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Upon this ground the law prohibits stealing and murder, and not because these acts transgress the law of God or are of immoral character. The proper aim of human law is to provide all persons the opportunity, so far as human power can secure it, of enjoying the life which the Creator has given them, and the opportunities this life affords for the pursuit and realization of happiness, without molestation from their fellow-beings.

But this does not afford the law any just ground for undertaking to prohibit the desecration of the Sabbath.

A Plausible Project.

THE ministers of San Francisco, Oakland, and Alameda, Cal., have formed an alliance for the purpose of supplying the citizens with instruction and guidance in practical politics, so that the conscientious voter may know how his vote should be cast to advance the cause of righteousness. This scheme has a very plausible look upon its face. Who should know how to vote righteously better than the clergy? Who are more interested in promoting the cause of righteousness in the earth than those of high station in the churches? So plausible is this that it was long ago thought of and put into effect in nearly every country of the civilized world. That is to say, the management of political affairs was put into the hands of the very good men who stood at the head of affairs in the church. And the result was that the civil governments became no better, but a great deal worse.

"Oh, but it is going to be different this time. It is true that the church people never managed politics with good results before, but they are going to do better now. They are going to avoid all the mistakes that were made before." Will they? Where is the evidence of it?

THE doctrine that an individual is morally bound to obey every requirement of the Government as being an act of God, depends for support upon the idea that God and not man made the governments of the earth. To expose the folly and wickedness of this idea it is only necessary to ask if the United States Government and the Turkish government were made by one and the same being. What God makes, is perfect; but where is there a perfect government on the face of the earth? The imperfections of all human governments stamp them as the work of finite man.

How far short the best human government falls in practice, of the ideal set up in the theory upon which it is built, may be seen from the miscarriage of the principle of majority rule in our own country, as set forth in another column. When the United States is spoken of as "this free Government," the speaker probably has in mind the theory of popular government, with the principles of liberty which it incorporates. In practice, there is very little room for the exercise of individual choice in the filling of public offices and the enactment of State and national laws. The choice in such matters lies with the political "boss" and his henchmen who control the party, and the man of wealth whose gold can support a campaign and purchase legislation. So that, however the pious citizen may aim to cast his vote for the glory of God, he finds himself obliged in reality to follow the lead of some politician to whom very likely the words of Scripture would apply that "God is not in all his thoughts." In theory, the Government is "of the people, by the people, and for the people"; in practice, as seen to-day, it is "of the people" but not by or for them. This is not the fault of the theory; it does not argue any lack of wisdom on the part of those who made this an independent Government. It is only the natural selfishness of the unregenerate heart manifesting itself in popular government, through the opportunities which present-day conditions have put within its reach. Selfishness seems to have quite as full opportunity given it to do its baneful work under a popular government, as it has under a monarchy.

Persecution in Austria.

IN Austria, one of the most religious countries of Europe, it appears that an individual who acquires the idea that it would be wrong for him to violate the divine command, "Thou shalt not kill," at the order of the government, and acts upon his conviction, is looked upon as exhibiting all the symptoms of lunacy. So we may conclude from the following, published in the Independent (N. Y.), of August 12:—

"Dr. Bela Skarvan was a Hungarian army physician on the staff of a military hospital. Six weeks before his time of service expired he informed his superiors by writing that, as he was an adherent of Count Tolstoi, he could no longer be a member of any military organization, and declined to serve any longer. At first the medical staff thought they had to do with a lunatic; but finding Dr. Skarvan firm in his convictions, his arrest was ordered and inquiries instituted as to what had best be done. He was examined before the military authorities and remained inflexible, and then, after some more weeks in jail, sentence was pronounced on him. For entertaining revolutionary ideas he was to be deprived of his rank and condemned to three months' hard labor in jail. Further, the University of Innsbruck, from which he had received his doctor's diploma, was requested to take his name off its books; and in order that his utter ruin might be secured, an order was issued prohibiting him from practicing as a physician in any part of the Austro-Hungarian dominions."

Very likely Dr. Skarvan was deemed guilty of a treasonable lack of "Christian patriotism."

The Kingdom of God Not of This World.

BY A. SMITH.

ANY man in the world has a natural right to remove from the land of his nativity to any other country, and, by prescribed formula, to change his citizenship if he chooses to do so. Moreover, he has a right to return to his native country, as a citizen of his adopted country under its protection, as a foreigner in his native land. To advocate this principle in a legitimate way is not in any sense anarchistic or treasonable.

The kingdom of God is as real and tangible as any earthly government, but more completely perfect. This kingdom is also called the "kingdom of heaven," Matt. 13:24; the "commonwealth of Israel," Eph. 2:12; and a "holy nation," 1 Peter 2:9.

Of this nation, any one may become a citizen by adoption through faith in Jesus Christ, the king. All such are called citizens. See Eph. 2:19 and Phil. 3:20, Revised Version. All others are called aliens, strangers, foreigners, etc. See Eph. 2:11, 12, 19.

In becoming a citizen of the kingdom of heaven one thereby ceases to be a citizen of any nation of this world; and all that he is, and all that he has on earth, is transferred to the nation of his adoption. He cannot exercise any earthly franchise or engage in political discussions disconnected from the interests of the kingdom and glory of God without the loss of spirituality, and the disfavor of his heavenly King.

For obvious reasons, the land of one's nativity seems dearer than any other in the world; yet, to the child of God, all earthly countries become the same, though differing in natural aspects and political environments; he being a stranger and foreigner on earth wherever he may go.

It is the duty of the citizen of the kingdom of God to lead a quiet and peaceable life wherever his lot on earth may be cast, to observe the laws and usages of the respective governments, even though oppressive, so long as to do so will not violate the principles of the government of God.

A citizen of the kingdom of heaven need not go from nation to nation on any mission or duty without the protection of his King. Of God's ancient people, it is written, "When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people; He suffered no man to do them wrong: yea, he reproveth kings for their sakes." Ps. 105:13, 14.

Earthly governments are usually represented in the Bible by wild beasts. All beasts are proper creatures of God, useful and beautiful in their sphere. But a beast cannot be a Christian in the likeness of God; no more can any nation which God symbolizes by a beast. The Government of the United States is represented by a two-horned beast. See Rev. 13:11.

Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world." John 18:36. Again, to his people, "Ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world." John 15:18. And again in prayer to the Father, concerning his people, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." Chap. 17:14. Therefore, if his kingdom is not of this world, and his subjects are also not of this world, but hold their citizenship in heaven, they have no proper citizenship in this world, although that right may still be recognized by their fellowmen.

Paul said, concerning the kingdom of God, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal." 2 Cor. 10:4. All agencies and implements of destruction used in war, and all methods of coercion employed in civil life are carnal methods, absolutely disallowed in the kingdom of Christ. Jesus said of his people, "The devil shall cast some of you into prison." Rev. 2:10. But he gives no commission to his ambassadors (ministers of the gospel) or any of his subjects to imprison the devil or any of his followers; much less to act as the devil does toward their fellow-religionists or anybody else.

State Religion.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

A DISTINGUISHED Catholic theologian, in an article upon the subject of labor and religion, written for American workingmen and published in the Catholic Mirror of July 24, says:—

"As the State (any State) has no religion and can have none, and yet it is dependent upon it for its own very life, it should foster and encourage the private enterprises that teach it, and which try to enforce it upon the individual character to reach the body politic."

In regard to the above statement, it may be said, first, that if by "religion" Christianity is meant, and that therefore the continuance of a State is dependent upon its promotion of the Christian religion, the argument will not hold, simply because it is not true. The Roman State, firmly united to Christianity, as the author above quoted conceived it, fell; while the Chinese State, which antedated the Roman State by several centuries, has survived it by centuries. Many other States which have fostered and protected "Christianity" have fallen and perished. It may be greatly doubted if the Christianity that will allow itself to be fostered and protected by a State is of as much value as a preservative as are some other religions.

To day the world wonders at the vitality of the Ottoman Empire, which persists in living in spite of the concert of European doctors which have again and again assembled for its post-mortem. Lately it has shown so much vigor that the Christian press refer to it dolefully as the "rehabilitation of Turkey." No one who has studied the subject doubts that the chief reason of this reserve vitality and life of the Turkish State is religion; but it is the religion of Mohammed. So we repeat, if the writer above quoted means Christianity by the word religion, his logic is extremely faulty.

But there is another point suggested by his statement: Can a State have religion? As regards this, it is certain that it cannot have religion like a person. Circumcision is one of the requirements of Mohammedanism and baptism one of the requirements of Christianity, but the Ottoman State cannot be circumcised, neither can the German State be baptized. In fact, none of the individual acts required of a believer in any religion can be performed by a State. Hence, a State cannot have or practice religion as individuals do.

But we are accustomed to speak of "State religion," and States do have religion in a certain way. They throw the mantle of their favor and protection over and around one religion. When the Ottoman Empire thus favors Mohammedanism, it makes it the religion of the Ottoman Empire or State, and when any State whose people profess the Christian religion, by its laws or in any way, do the same thing for "Christianity," fostering and encouraging it, then that State has religion, the "Christian religion," in the only way that a State can have religion.

There may of course be degrees in the closeness of the connection of a religion and a State. It may be tacitly understood and adhered to, or there may be a distinct pronouncement of the same. Furthermore, a tacit agreement, relying on ancient and well-established precedents, may be more active and stronger than an absolute pronouncement, which the people have outgrown, and which, for this reason, is not lived up to. In other words, the thing itself is of more account than the name of it. Viewed in this light, more States have religion than we have imagined.

A Chief Magistrate Invites Anarchy.

THE tendency of the times to "take the law into one's own hands"—which means to set passion in the seat of justice—was illustrated in a marked manner recently in West Virginia. The matter has elicited general newspaper comment, as well it might. The facts and their significance are well set forth in the following from the New York World:—

"W. S. Kimes shot Ben Hall three times for 'alienating the affections' of his (Kimes') wife. On trial Kimes received the purely nominal sentence of twenty-four hours' confinement in jail and a fine of $100.

"Governor Atkinson has now remitted even this trivial sentence, and in doing so he has preached an extraordinary and dangerous doctrine from the chair of a State's chief executive. 'My only regret,' he says, 'is that Kimes did not kill Hall. He ought to have done so.' 'Every man who has a soul in his body will agree with me that he ought to have killed him.' . . . 'Kimes did what every man should have done under the circumstances, except that he should have practiced with a revolver or double-barreled shotgun, so that when he made the attempt he would have brought Hall down.'

"That is to say, Governor Atkinson has issued a proclamation setting aside the laws of his State against murder and manslaughter, and notifying every man whose wife may go astray that he may kill the man who becomes her companion, without the slightest fear even of a fine.

"The fact is, as every intelligent person knows, that no man ever 'alienates the affections' of a wife. It is safe to assume that in such cases the alienation was effected long before the other man came upon the scene, and in face of the obligation resting upon every husband to retain the love and regard of his wife. When a governor not only uses his pardoning power in one case, but in effect promises to use it in every case, to shield murder done for this cause, thus authorizing jealous and hot-headed men to make themselves judge, jury and executioner, without even hearing testimony, that governor becomes an enemy of the law which he is sworn to maintain, an instigator of crime and its official protector."

Minority Government in the United States.

Albert Hart, in "Christian Register."

THE most familiar principle of American politics is that the majority invariably rules. This principle is supposed to be the foundation of popular government, to distinguish republics from oligarchies and monarchies, and civilized republics from anarchies: it is the stock theme of those who boast of the free system of America. It is the principle nearly universal in clubs, meetings, and stock companies.

The principle of the supremacy of the majority is supposed to apply with peculiar force in the United States, where a long course of political training has accustomed people to submit to a political defeat without a military struggle. Where, in a Spanish-American State, a party beaten at the polls takes refuge in a revolution, we comfortably assure ourselves that we are willing to wait for a slow change of public opinion; and we compare ourselves favorably with people who consent to accept "the will of an autocratic emperor or of a titled House Lords."

In practice there is not and never has been in the United States, or elsewhere in the world, such a thing as majority government. If we have never known the will of an absolute monarch or the weight of a small, conquering host, we nevertheless submit regularly and patiently to the rule of a fraction of the population. Out of our population of seventy millions, nearly half is cut off from voting because of its sex; and all the male children and minors are also excluded. Unnaturalized foreigners are in most States not allowed to vote. The total number of voters in 1896 was only about sixteen millions; and of these only some thirteen millions, perhaps, actually cast votes for presidential electors.

Assuming that all the persons who cast their votes are actuated by intelligent principles, the political machinery in use in the United States, is, nevertheless, so arranged as to prevent the will of the majority of voters from prevailing. Most elections are but a choice between two complicated propositions. Shall the representative of one party, with its variety of schemes and policies, be chosen? or shall a man who has another set of promises be preferred? Shall a member of a legislature be chosen who will vote for three measures of benefit to his community and for two which will bear against those interests? or another person, who will vote for four measures in favor of his district and for only one against it, but who is notoriously venal? The poor majority finds itself confused, and in most cases ends by voting the straight ticket put up by the party with which it is in general most in accord. Where the country supposes that two tickets represent two distinct lines of policy, what is the guarantee that the party which gets the majority will press that issue to a settlement?

The voter is not able to bring up for a vote men who do distinctly stand for his principle, because the nominations of candidates are in few hands. In the city of Greater New York the "Republican organization" numbers, perhaps, five thousand persons, the "Democratic organization" not many more; and the "organizations" nominate the candidates. In such a case it is nearly impossible for voters, in large districts, to know the character of candidates put forward. Add to this the fact that most municipal and many State tickets are made up by a previous combination, the friends of one candidate agreeing with the friends of a candidate for a different office that their votes shall be joined for both persons, and we have a state of things in which the shrewd and able minority which controls the party machinery must in most cases impress its candidates, and thus its policy, upon the blundering majority.

Another political engine distinctly intended to further minority government is the Gerrymander. Its effect, wherever applied, is so to combine groups of votes as to enable the minority party to elect more persons than are chosen by the majority party. Further, without any such jugglery, our peculiar system of presidential elections is such that it is a well known fact that at least three Presidents of the United States have received a smaller number of popular votes in the aggregate than their defeated opponents.

In carrying on popular elections, third parties and third candidates favor minority government, because, under the almost universal American custom, a plurality of votes elects, so that persons are very often chosen who have less than a majority of the votes cast. A more serious disturbance is bribery. It need hardly be pointed out, in a country in which money is regularly used in many States at every important election, that buying votes is a transfer of a national majority into a ruling minority, and, eventually, if unchecked, into an oligarchy of men rich enough to buy votes on a great scale.

Quite aside from party fealty is the practice of "log-rolling." This exactly corresponds in legislation to the making of slates in elections. A agrees to vote for B's amendment, if B will vote for A's; and A and B, combined, thus force through a measure neither part of which could perhaps have secured a majority upon its own merits. In Congress the practice of log rolling has been elaborated into a system by which bills of the greatest importance become laws. The so-called conference committees are, in effect, a machinery for framing bills which have no majority in either house. In theory they are formed to draft some middle measure by which each house may yield something in the point in dispute. In practice they frame new measures, including details not voted for or insisted upon by either house. The conference committees are merely a delegation of the power of the majority to a small minority.

The natural result of the complications which prevent the will of the majority from being ascertained, or, when ascertained, from being carried out, leads directly to the most objectionable form of minority government; namely, to one-man power. The agent through whom the majority is now usually compelled to yield to the minority is the political boss, whose rule is extending from the great cities into State politics, and is threatening national politics. He alone is able to make a combination of men and measures which, through our peculiar political methods, may receive the legal plurality of votes. He heads and represents the majority in a small clique of political leaders who control a section of party, which is dominant in the party itself; and that party has the support of the majority of voters in a city or a State.

The noteworthy thing about the whole system is that the majority still appears to retain its powers.

Dispensing With State Prayer.

THE legislature of Kentucky, some time since, passed a bill appropriating $300 to pay for prayers by the chaplain during its session. When this fact was known, the "Jessamine Liberal League" protested against the measure through the press and served notice that it would get out an injunction restraining the State treasurer from disbursing public funds for such a purpose. When the bill came to Governor Bradley, however, he refused to sign it, and is alleged to have said in reference to it that "to pay for praying for such a legislature would upset the whole plan of salvation." State Treasurer Long is also reported as adverse to the measure, and is quoted as saying that "it had long been a custom to pay for prayer in the legislature; but the new constitution had forever set such an unjust and unwarranted thing aside as nothing short of a species of petty robbery in the name of religion." So it appears that the Kentucky legislature will, for a time, dispense with official prayers.

It is certainly true that to take money from the people by taxation or any other method of compulsion, to expend for religious purposes, is wholly contrary to the plan of salvation; for that plan knows nothing of compulsion. In this matter, therefore, Kentucky is setting an example worthy of imitation by her sister States.

A Significant Incident.

BY S. S. CRAW.

As a grand climax to the day's proceedings at the Chautauqua Assembly in Champaign and Urbana, Ill., August 6-15, the following episode took place on Sunday the 8th inst.:—

A large cross without decoration of any kind was held by an attendant at one side of the stage, and a large American flag at the opposite side of the stage. While the grand old song "America" was being sung by the assembled thousands, the cross and flag were borne toward each other, the flag being caused to fall in graceful folds about the cross.

To the casual observer, perhaps, there is nothing significant in this transaction; but to the student of prophecy, to those whose attention has been called to the spirit of the times in which we live, and to those who discern which way the wind is blowing, so to speak, that one event means a great deal, and the idea carried out to its logical conclusion means nothing less than a union of Church and State.

To this end the leaders of all the different religious societies are laboring. Deny it as they will, it is bound to crop out here and there, either at Chautauqua assemblies or at some of their great conventions.

In conversation with the ordinary individual, when the subject of religious liberty is presented to him and the danger is shown him of a union of the ecclesiastical with the civil power in America, about the first dodge that he makes is to cite our national Constitution and quote the First Amendment thereto with great gusto; but how many are there out of a thousand or out of ten thousand who are aware that our Government, executive, judicially and legislatively, has committed itself and established a precedent that is a menace to our liberties. All it requires is a practical application, and we would have the Dark Ages over again and thereby would history again repeat itself. The camel has his head already in the tent, and it is only a question of time and a short time at the longest, when his whole body will be inside the tent; and then what?

And what makes this thing all the more difficult to believe is that Protestants are helping it along. Were the papacy at the helm it would not be wondered at so much perhaps. However, the papacy is only biding her time, and when the final blow is struck that will deprive us of our liberties, America can thank so-called Protestantism for it. Let us study our Bibles more diligently and see for ourselves whether these things be so.

"THAT which is protected by government may justly be compelled to maintain it. I would like to see all church property in the land taxed to the last dollar's worth."—
Rev. Dr. Shipman, Christ Church, N. Y. City.

The White and the Scarlet, the Conflict of Colors.

"THE marriage of the Lamb is come and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen clean and white."

White is the royal color of the kingdom of heaven. "The Ancient of Days did sit whose garment was white as snow." "And he was transfigured before them. And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them." "The angel of the Lord descended from heaven . . . his raiment white as snow." "He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment." "I counsel thee to buy of me . . . white raiment that thou mayest be clothed." Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments, and they shall walk with me in white." "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow." "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." "I beheld, and lo, a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands." "And white robes were given unto every one of them." "And unto her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints."

From this it is plain that the white robe is heaven's symbol of power and purity. It is the only robe which the Lord, the lawful husband, ever places upon his wife, the Church. In this white robe she faithfully waits the return of the Lord. To accept any robe from the hand of another is to be untrue to her absent Lord.

"I saw a woman sit on a scarlet colored beast. . . . And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls."

Purple and scarlet are the royal colors of earthly rulers. "If thou canst read the writing and make known the interpretation thereof, thou shalt be clothed with scarlet and have a chain of gold about thy neck, and thou shalt be third ruler in the kingdom." "Purple raiment that was on the kings of Midian." "And the soldiers . . . put on him a purple robe, and said, Hail, king of the Jews." "And they stripped him and put on him a scarlet robe, . . . and mocking him said, Hail, king of the Jews."

"And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls." Where did this woman get her gaudy attire? Not from the lawful husband of the Church, for he clothed his bride in white raiment. "They which are gorgeously apparelled . . . live in kings' courts." The sad truth is, the woman has forgotten her lawful Lord and has exchanged her white robe of heavenly purity and power for the purple and scarlet robe of earthly kings. And what did this earthly power cost this fallen woman? She paid an infinite price. It cost her all. She is now only a harlot, soon to be hated even by those who now share her shame.

What a faithful picture of the apostate church of the Dark Ages. She deliberately solicited civil power at the hands of the Roman emperors. She disdainfully doffed the pilgrim white and donned the purple robe. She threw away the "sword of the Spirit" and grasped the sword of civil power. Thus attired she sat no longer in "heavenly places in Christ," but in earthly palaces arm in arm with Caesar.

No longer in possession of the Holy Spirit, the shield against heretics (Acts 5:9-13), she now sought the civil arm. She passed from the "everlasting arms" of her lawful Lord into the arms of earthly emperors. Let her tell the shameful story herself:—

"For many ages after the conversion of Constantine it was easier for the church to repress heresy by invoking the secular arm than by organizing tribunals of her own. . . . But in the thirteenth century a new race of temporal rulers rose to power. . . . Philip Augustus was refractory toward the Church in many ways. . . . The Church was as clear as ever upon the necessity of repressing heretics, but the weapon, secular sovereignty, which she had hitherto employed for the purpose, seemed to be breaking in her hands. The time was come when she was to forge another weapon of her own; . . . which in the task of detecting and punishing those who mislead their brethren should employ all the minor forms of penal repression while still remitting to the secular arm the case of obstinate and incorrigible offenders. Thus arose the Inquisition."

The reader is now invited to look in another direction, and with Christian candor see if he does not discern some traits of the mother of harlots in popular Protestantism of to-day. Bear in mind that the "mother" began to fall when she became worldly, when the church began to be filled with unconverted men and women. Wealth and luxury and fashion took the place of poverty, plainness and purity. Let the author of the Fletcher Prize Essay, Rev. George Guirey, a prominent member of a popular Protestant church, point out the similarity between the mother and the daughters:—

"Is there not some reason for the common impression that the worldly spirit in the Church is weakening her power with the public. Are there not evidences at hand that seem to confirm the impression that the Church in the Roman empire in the fourth century is repeating itself in the United States to day? . . . The enervating influence of wealth, luxury and fashion tells upon the church, producing spiritual declension, neglect of holy vows, and indifference to responsibility. The blandishments of the world are too much for human nature to withstand. And we see the sad spectacle of the great moral and religious activities of the Church dropped down into the rut of the ordinary routine of mere business officers, while her beautiful and glorious life is shorn of its spiritual power."—The Hallowed Day, pp. 57, 58.

It was after the Church of the fourth century was "shorn of spiritual power" that she sought the civil power. It is the inexorable logic of cause and effect that the Church "shorn of spiritual power" should grasp after the civil power. This is certainly what the Church of to-day is doing, and strange to say, this is just what this Protestant clergyman advocates. On the same page he thinks that the Church "with her vast resources and advantages" consecrated to the service of God, "and with the leverage of civil law in her hands," could accomplish great things for God.

To-day the lobbies of the halls of legislation are fast being crowded as in Constantine's day with clergymen in quest of the purple and scarlet robe—the leverage of civil power. Within a few years this sentiment has been reinforced by what is known as the "Christian Citizenship" movement. A few of many quotations from its advocates will show that the Church is seeking civil supremacy now as in the fourth century. The following from a prominent speaker at the Boston Christian Endeavor convention shows that the fatal fall of the Church of the fourth century is regarded as a triumph:—

"In less than three centuries from the ascension of Christ, Christianity, in the person of Constantine the Great, had ascended the throne of the Cæsars and wrapped itself in the royal purple and ruled the Roman empire."

With the false idea that the Church triumphs when she wraps herself in civil robes and rules the nations, the reader will not be astonished at the following utterances from the leaders in the new movement called Christian citizenship. They are all, save one, quoted from official reports of speeches made at International Christian Endeavor conventions held in Boston and Washington:—

"Taking an interest in politics does not mean that the minister of the gospel should bring politics into the pulpit, but it does mean that he should take his pulpit into politics. It does not mean that he should bring politics into the church, but it does mean most emphatically that the church should be translated into political power."—Official Report, Washington Convention, p. 109.

"Christians must arise in the interests of righteousness and take control of civil affairs."—Official Report, Boston Convention, p. 103.

"We have a right to make and enforce human laws that shall call for the observance of the laws of God." Official Report, Washington Convention, p. 304.

"When the primary and the prayer-meeting are held on the same night the true prayer-meeting is the primary."—"Christian Citizenship," by Rev. Carlos Martyn, p. 65.

Pages of such quotations might be presented, but these must suffice.

Oh, where are the Spirit-filled men and women who will call the churches to repentance,—call them away from the political primary back to the prayer-meeting of Pentecost? Where are the men and women clothed with the "power from on high" who will persuade them to turn from the purple and scarlet of political power to the snow white robe of the Prince of Peace? These are perilous times. Reader, have you received "power from on high?"

A. F. B.

Duty of Obedience to Civil Rulers.

"Bible Echo," Melbourne, Aus.

Or the Christian's duty to respect, obey, and pray for civil rulers, the Bible speaks in plain terms. It says: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God." "I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." "Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the king." "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work." "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the king as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evildoers, and for the praise of them that do well." "Seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace."

LIMIT OF OBEDIENCE TO CIVIL RULERS.

But it should ever be remembered that honor and obedience to earthly rulers are always to be rendered in subjection to the will of God. While they are the "higher powers," they are not the highest. "If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province," says Solomon, the wisest king who ever sat on a throne, "marvel not at the matter: for He that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they." Eccl. 5:8. While the law of the king is supreme in civil things, the law of God is over and above all law. In any case of conflict between the two there is but one course left for Christians to pursue,—"we ought to obey God rather than men." Acts 5:29.

It is too evident to need discussion that the law of Him who made us must stand first. Therefore, if civil rulers require idolatrous worship, all men have the right, with the three Hebrew captives, to say, "We will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." If they forbid the worship of the true God, all, like Daniel of old, may fearlessly continue to worship him. If they require the observance of some other day as the Sabbath than the one ordained by God, all have a right to disregard such requirement, and to keep the day divinely set apart and blessed. Nay, more; it is the duty of all to do so.

The Authority for Sunday.

It is not often that the advocates of Sunday rest feel called upon to bring forth out of its obscurity the Scriptural authority for Sunday, being for the most part content to rest upon the assumption that the day so generally observed throughout the Christian world must be the Scriptural Sabbath. Occasionally, however, the disembodied spirit, as it were, of Sunday authority is called upon to materialize, for the edification of its adherents and the discomfiture of those who believe in the day set apart by the Creator. The results obtained are not always satisfactory to the former.

One occasion of this kind is reported from Ellis Mound, Ill. Two members of the Missionary Baptist church at that place, Messrs. Denson and Atteberry, by name, were put on trial for heresy, in having "gone off with the Advents." The former is an adult, possessing a good knowledge of the Scriptures and ability as a speaker and writer, while the latter is a youth of sixteen years, who at the time of his trial had been studying the Bible only a few weeks. Accordingly, Mr. Denson's case was disposed of by simply calling upon him to state whether he kept Saturday or Sunday, after which he was expelled from the church by a vote,—only four voting out of a membership of one hundred and twenty. The consideration of young Mr. Atteberry's case, however, was deemed a fitting opportunity to "expose the fallacy of the seventh-day theory," which the pastor of the church, or "moderator," proceeded to do, as follows:—

Moderator.—"Willie, did you ever work on the first day of the week, the Lord's day?"

Willie.—"I have worked on the first day of the week."

Mod.—(After expressing some regret and making some further remarks) "Willie, don't you believe the Saviour rose from the grave on the first day of the week?"

Willie.—"Yes."

Mod.—"Did he not meet with his disciples on the same day?"

Willie.—"Yes."

Mod.—"If they met for worship on the first day of the week, should we not do the same?"

Willie.—"They didn't meet for worship."

Mod.—"Then what did they meet for?"

Willie.—(Quotes from the Bible) "They were assembled, the doors being shut for fear of the Jews." (Laughter at the moderator's expense.)

Mod.—"Did not Paul meet with the church at Troas and break bread on the first day of the week?"

Willie.—(After opening Bible and reading from Acts 2:46) "If breaking bread makes a day sacred, then all days are sacred."

Mod.—"There; that will do. Sit down. As I said before, we don't want to discuss this subject. I only ask these few questions to show the fallacy of the seventh-day theory. Sit down." (Mr. Atteberry's case was laid over for further consideration.)

Those in the audience who were not entirely satisfied with this materialization of evidence for Sunday's claims, could reflect for their consolation that this was but a small part of the evidence that might have been given,—that there was much more that might have been brought out, just as good as this!

THE Czar, or rather, the church authorities by whom the Czar is controlled, have taken the matter of Sunday rest in hand, and advices from St. Petersburg report him as "promulgating a decree prohibiting under severe penalty any form of labor on Sunday or on the fourteen principal Russian feast-days." The Greek Catholic church, like the Roman Catholic, understands that Sunday, as a religious day, rests upon precisely the same authority as do the other feast-days of the church. The authority for one and all is church authority, and nothing more.

Should They Not Be Ashamed?

BY C. F. ADAMS.

"Now in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also into writing." The proclamation that he made was for the restoration and rebuilding of Jerusalem. (At the time mentioned, the Jewish nation was subject to the Medo-Persian kingdom.)

Upon Ezra, the priest, rested the burden of this work. When they had chosen from all the tribes of Israel, men fit for the work, and all was ready for their journey to Jerusalem, "then," writes Ezra, "I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance. For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken to the king saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against them that forsake him. So we fasted and besought our God for this; and he was intreated of us."

The principles of the gospel have been always the same. The people of God back in that day professed to that earthly kingdom that God would protect them against their enemies. They now saw that their path was beset with foes and they must either depend wholly on God, as they said they would, or go to the king for protection, thus denying their profession.

Ezra says, "We fasted and besought our God for this: and he was intreated of us."

The church to-day claims the Lord as her glory and strength and that she must, in her controversy with evil, use the "sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

Notwithstanding this, a large portion of it, associated in organizations, such as the "National Reform Association," "American Sabbath Union," "Women's National Sabbath Union," etc., are saying in word or action what was said in a speech by W. F. Crafts, in a plea for legislation in behalf of the church, made before a committee of Congress in 1888. He said, "What we ask for, is law;" and why do they ask for law? It is to furnish them power to overcome the world; yet all the while they are professing that "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." All this they do and are not ashamed.

"O, Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

If the church would but practice what she preaches, and possess what she professes, the world would see her good works and be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven.

Hastings, Iowa.

A Baptist Clergyman on Sunday Laws.

In pleasing contrast with what is usually put forth from the "orthodox" pulpit on the subject of Sunday laws, is the following from a recent discourse by Rev. Dr. Read, pastor of the First Baptist church of Los Angeles, Cal. His reasons for opposing the Sunday crusade certainly commend themselves to the candid judgment:—

"First, this movement is contrary to the plain teachings of the Bible. In Luke 20:25, our Lord said: 'Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and to God the things which be God's.' This divine law is our warrant for a complete separation of Church and State. Jesus himself would not allow the sword to be used in his defense.

"Religious duties should be enforced only by religious motives and moral means. The observance of the Lord's day is a religious duty, and hence should not be enforced by civil penalties. All that the State should be asked to do for Christians in anything pertaining to religion is to afford them protection, in the exercise of their natural and inalienable rights.

"And it is self-evident that in this respect all persons have equal rights. The Jew has as good a right to worship on the seventh-day Sabbath as the Christian has to worship on the first day, . . . and any civil statute which imposes any disability upon the Jew or upon any Sabbatarian is obviously wrong.

"It is claimed by the advocates of this movement for Sunday laws that it is wholly as a rest day, and not as a religious day that they ask the State to require the observance of the Lord's day. But I ask these men if they would consent to have the State pass a law requiring all business to be suspended on Wednesday instead of Sunday? Having conscientiously observed the first day, . . . would they be willing to lay aside their business for another day and so forego all the profits of their business for one sixth part of their secular time? But this is precisely what they propose to compel every conscientious Jew and Seventh-day Adventist and Seventh-day Baptist to do! Thus this proposed law interferes not only with religious obligation, but also with one's duty to support his family, by honest toil. When the citizen shall rest, how he shall rest or where, is a question with which the State has nothing to do, any more than it has with the ways and times of his activity. If the State may prescribe when the citizen shall rest and how long, on the ground that such rest promotes health and morality, then it should go farther and prescribe what church he shall attend and what forms of religious worship he shall observe!

"Again, this proposed Sunday-closing law is in direct conflict with the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees religious liberty to all citizens.

"And yet again this proposed law is in direct opposition to all our Baptist principles and our splendid history in the past. From the beginning we have been the champions of freedom and we shall be to the end. During the last two years in our own beloved land under the Stars and Stripes of our beautiful flag, there have been more than one hundred cases of relentless persecution in Tennessee and Maryland. Godly men have been fined, put in prison, and even in the chain-gang with the worst of criminals; all, and only, because they did not observe the first day of the week as their day of rest and worship.

"And last, I believe that all such efforts to promote religion and morality are not merely failures, but are worse; they are criminal blunders, inasmuch as they do most certainly exasperate and disgust many citizens who are not Christians, and turn them away from the churches, and from the Bible, and make it very much more difficult to bring them under the influence of our holy religion. Moreover, such a resort to force in efforts to secure the proper observance of the Lord's day is a virtual confession of the inadequacy of moral motives and moral suasion. And let it be known that any observance of the Lord's day which is not the free choice of the soul itself is not pleasing to God and will not receive His blessing!

"As Christians let us be faithful in testimony for the truth and for duty, and live right lives, and then leave every man with his God and his own conscience; let us ask protection and only protection from the State, rendering to Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and to God the things which be God's."

THE Independent (N. Y.), of August 12, gives the following item of news from Spain, which contains a lesson in religious liberty:—

"For many years Pastor Fritz Fliedner, son of the famous Kaiserswerth reviver of the order of deaconesses, has been the leading missionary of Protestantism in Spain. Among his successful operations has been the establishment of a Protestant college in Madrid, costing $50,000, which is now under roof and rapidly approaching completion. This success has aroused the opposition of the clericals, and the bishops of Vitoria, Santander, Leon and Valencia, together with the archbishop of Burgos, have united in a strong appeal to the government, demanding that this insult to the religion of the State be stopped, and that the noble sacrifices of the people for the preservation of the integrity of the State be rewarded by such protection to their religious rights. At latest reports the government has ignored this appeal."

Trial of Mr. Bell, of Tupperville, Ont., for Sunday Desecration.

THE following notes relative to the trial of Mr. Bell, at Tupperville, Ont., for Sunday work, as announced in our last issue, are from a letter by Eld. P. M. Howe, a member of the Adventist community at Chatham, Ont. Elder Howe was present at the trial, and sends the following under date of August 11:—

"Brother Bell asked me to talk for him in the case. They brought only three witnesses against him. The constable laid the complaint. The chief witness, Mr. McKay, swore that he was forty rods or more away from Mr. Bell at the time, and that he thought Mr. Bell was working. When I asked Mr. McKay what he was doing so far back on his farm on Sunday, he replied, 'I was salting my sheep.' He thought that was a work of necessity and did not think Mr. Bell was doing work of necessity, for he had a horse in the field. The justice refused to take any of the testimony in cross-examination. The whole matter was illegally conducted from start to finish.

"We explained Brother Bell's reasons for pleading 'Not Guilty,' and held that the enforcement of the statute as now amended would involve every farmer in trouble if he had an enemy who wished to take advantage of it to get revenge.

"All testified that Brother Bell was a kind, good neighbor, and very accommodating. He had furnished wheat for seed and flour for bread for a long time to the chief witness who came into court to swear him into jail if possible. It is a singular fact that Sunday laws are all based on false premises, and when enforced, nearly every case is so obscure that men must be found who will swear falsely to secure conviction.

"Brother Bell works every Sunday, but has been careful to go back into his fields. I visited his place yesterday, and the potato patch where he was seen July 25th is about eighty rods back from the road. It is fifty-five rods from where his neighbor was salting sheep, with several rows of thick high corn growing between.

"The justice in summing up the case said that this trouble had all arisen over a little matter of difference in religious belief; but in his mind he believed that the testimony taken showed that Mr. Bell had worked on the sabbath, the 25th of July, and other sabbaths. I asked him if he was trying Mr. Bell for sabbath breaking; so he corrected himself and called it the 'Lord's day.'

"He said he felt like being very easy with Mr. Bell, because of his peculiar belief about keeping Saturday, but the law of the land must be obeyed. Therefore he would only fine Mr. Bell $5 and costs, or fifteen days in jail, with ten days to pay fine or take an appeal."

Upon notice being given that the case would be appealed, the justice concluded to dismiss the case, without costs, which was accordingly done.

THE National Reform Association is in the field again with a call for a national convention to be held in Philadelphia, December 7-9, for the furtherance of National Reform plans. This means that another special effort will be made this winter to force the Government to profess Christianity, by act of Congress.

THE Atlanta Journal (Ga.), of August 2, makes mention of the arrest of Dr. Joseph Jacobs, proprietor of a drug store in Atlanta, for doing work in his store on Sunday. The Sunday law of Georgia has been quite generally disregarded by merchants and business men throughout the State, and the case of Mr. Jacobs will test the practicability of enforcing it to the letter upon all classes of citizens.

Sunday at Atlantic City.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., is enforcing a Sunday-closing ordinance which "regulates" the running of amusements on that day. The following cases of arrest have been reported:—

G. DeDoneau (Parisian Illusions); convicted and sentenced to ten days in the city jail.

John T. Flood & Co. (Merry-go-Round); bound over to court.

Haines & Clements (Toboggan Slide), H. Gable, manager; tried and sentenced but served with writ of certiorari, and case will be reviewed in the Supreme Court.

This list is furnished by the mayor of Atlantic City.

THE following letter from a subscriber in Missouri is appreciated: "I am seventy-six years old, and am afflicted in many ways, but when I received your invitation to kindly aid in securing a few subscribers under your special offer, I thought how pleased I would be if I could send you even one subscription, but I am glad to tell you that I have been able to secure five, for which I enclose the money, and I hope to send you others before the offer closes. I have been a constant reader of the SENTINEL ever since its first issue, and I prize it highly. My prayer is that God may bless it and every one employed thereon."

ELD. D. F. CURTIS, of Wasioja, Minn., a veteran minister and staunch friend of the SENTINEL, in sending in his third subscription order, says: "I rejoice to learn of the additions to your list under the special offer, and could but wish that it might increase to 100,000. May the Lord bless the SENTINEL to the good of the people everywhere."

The Last Call.

IN accordance with the usual custom of the office, no paper will be issued next week, hence this is the last opportunity we will have of speaking a word concerning our special offer before reaching the limit of its duration. To say that we have been gratified at the response fails to express our feelings; and more when we say that there seems to be no abatement of interest, but rather an increase. As we go to press, we are close to the three thousand mark of new subscriptions, and nearly all have been received in a little over two weeks. We wish that the SENTINEL family could have an opportunity to glance over our daily mail, and note the sentiment pervading the letters containing subscriptions.

Something of the interest manifested may be judged when the fact is known that nearly two hundred individuals have sent in clubs, some of them containing as high as thirty-five and forty names. One man in Montana forwards a list of thirty-six subscriptions as the result of two afternoons' effort among the business men of his town. An old lady over eighty years of age, who was an eye-witness of the thrilling scenes surrounding the martyrdom of Elijah P. Lovejoy, and in whose breast beats as strongly as ever the true principles of religious liberty, writes that she could not keep her room when she read our special offer, but felt impelled to go out and work in its behalf, and as the result forwards us a nice list of subscribers. We might multiply incidents of this character to almost any length, but it is not necessary. We simply mention them to emphasize the character of the constituency back of the SENTINEL.

And now less than two weeks remain before our special offer closes. Will not those who have not, as yet, because of force of circumstances, done anything in its behalf, secure for the paper at least one new subscriber? Is this unreasonable? Is it asking more than we can expect?

Jefferson in his day declared the time would come when the people would grow careless of their liberties. Will any one, alive to the events transpiring around us, deny that that time is now here? Certainly not; and it therefore behooves every lover of his country who prizes liberty of conscience to keep his eyes open and help to tell the people what all these things mean. So, under these circumstances, every effort made to circulate the AMERICAN SENTINEL is but a labor of love put forth to bless humanity. Who would hesitate to lend a helping hand? We believe not one; and therefore we confidently expect that the next ten days will roll up a list exceeding what we have already received. Shall it not be so?

Just Our Aim.

MR. A. P. BRANAMAN, of LeRoy, Illinois, in remitting for a club of SENTINELS, says: "I am glad to tell you that the SENTINEL is gaining ground here. Wage the battle on the strongest foundation, which is the plain truth; give the people to understand the times in which we live, and what manner of men we ought to be."

A WARM friend of the SENTINEL writes us from one of the western States saying, that in conversation with a member of the conference committee, it was thought feasible to recommend that the workers throughout the conference be invited to devote two or three hours each day for several days canvassing for subscriptions to the SENTINEL under its special offer. Is not this an idea worthy of consideration?

Remember This.

REMEMBER our special offer closes September 1st, and in order to secure its advantages our friends must not wait until that date before sending in their orders.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,				.50.
"	"	Three "				.25.

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond Street, New York.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des. Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY,

Is most healthfully located. Combines religious and industrial with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year.

For further particulars and calendar, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. Its successful combination of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5½ x 2½ in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business

Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most of all, not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 23 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, . . . $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

UNION COLLEGE,

Founded in 1891 by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, and located at College View, a suburb of the city of Lincoln, Nebraska.

The climate is healthy and the sanitary conditions excellent.

Purpose of the College.

This College was established not merely for the purpose of teaching the sciences, but also of giving instruction in the great principles of God's Word, and the practical duties of every-day life.

Text Books.

The Bible holds the first place in the educational system, and only such text books are used as harmonize with the inspired Word.

Courses of Study.

The usual work in the classical, scientific and preparatory courses is done, and in addition special biblical courses are offered in English, German, Danish and Swedish. Those who cannot remain long in school will be permitted to select from the regular course such studies as they may be qualified to pursue.

Thorough instruction given in music, drawing, painting, stenography, book-keeping and commercial law.

Industrial Department.

An industrial department is connected with, and forms a part of, the regular college work. Each student has an opportunity of spending two hours daily in some useful physical labor under a competent instructor.

Employment for young men: Practical farming and gardening, use of tools, shoe making, tailoring, tent-making, baking and dairying.

For young ladies: Domestic work, sewing, cooking, laundrying, flower culture, etc.

Expenses low. Send for catalogue.

Address,

UNION COLLEGE,

College View, Nebr.

The TWO REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE
HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST
REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges	$1.85
Cloth, marbled edges, - - - - -	2.50
" Gilt edges, - - - - -	3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia.
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

Our Premium Bible.

(See advertisement on last page.)

REDUCTION IN PRICE

For a short time.

The Sentinel 1 Year and Bible, postpaid, $3.00

The Sentinel 6 Months and Bible, postpaid, $2.50

The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel, $2.00

The Bible given as a present for 6 new yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each; 12 for 6 months at 50 cents each.

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence urge our patrons to order at once.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough for us to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we quote. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of the writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

HEAR WHAT THEY SAY.

"I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted."

"The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished."

"The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it."

"My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it."

"I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted."

"I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible."

"It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price."

"I received your premium Bible and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent."

"I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected."

"I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had."

"We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight."

"I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap."

"The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it."

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond St., New York City.

BETTER THAN EVER!

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

We propose to make it possible for each and everyone to be the possessor of

A First-Class High Grade Bible.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the

AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality,

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.	B. C. 445.	25 Kē'hūm, Hā-shāb'nah, Mā-a-sē'-jah,
36 Behold, ^a we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:	^d Deut. 28. 48. ^e Ezra 9. 9.	26 And Ā-hī'jah, Hā'nan, Ā'nan, 27 Māl'luch, Hā'rim, Bā'a-nah. 28 ¶ ^e And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lē'vites, the porters, the singers, the Nēth'i-nims, ^f and all they that had separated themselves
37 And ^e it yieldeth much increase	^e Deut. 28. 51.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00

With this book reading is made easy. No more stumbling over the hard words. All proper names are divided into syllables, and the accent and diacritical marks render their accurate pronunciation a simple matter. With a little study of the Key to Pronunciation to be found in every copy of this Bible, the reader loses all fear of the long, hard names of Scripture, and pronounces them with ease.

WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.00

As is indicated by the name, this is a teachers' Bible. It contains fifteen pages of illustrations and diagrams, copious helps of the latest revision, Bible index, concordance, dictionary of Scripture proper names with their pronunciation and meaning, and many other excellent features.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT.

Wabash, Ind.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: My Bible received this day, for which accept thanks. I am very well pleased. I think I have just what I need in the way of a Bible. It is not only a teacher's Bible, but also the very best for a student.

Yours truly,

T. M. MORRIS.

San Francisco, Cal.
AMERICAN SENTINEL: I received my Bible, and am very much pleased with it. It is a first-class Bible; just what it is claimed to be.

Mrs. E. F. NOBLE.

Brattleboro, Vt.
Am very much pleased with it.
Mrs. E. C. MILLARD.

Graettinger, Iowa.
We are all more than pleased with the Bible in every way. As a book it is thoroughly well made and elegant in all its parts. As a Bible the self-pronunciation is a new feature, and this is only one of its many excellencies. The type is a great delight to me.

Mrs. S. M. OLESEN.

It is only by special arrangement with the publishers of this Bible that we are able to make this

UNPRECEDENTED OFFER.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $6.00.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

Address all orders to AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 2, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 34.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

"We ought to obey God rather than men."

THE State is political; Christianity is not and cannot be, political.

CHRISTIANITY knows but one creed, and that is, "I believe the word of the Lord."

It is not possible that "civil righteousness" should be either civil or righteous.

THE aim of the SENTINEL is to be intolerant of no man, and tolerant of no wrong principle.

THERE can never be any permanent national prosperity which does not go hand in hand with justice.

FROM a political point of view, there is no subject more important, or one less understood, than that of natural rights.

LOOKING towards the Christian's country, the view is the same in all countries. Hence the Christian can feel as much at home in one part of the earth as in another.

THE man who asks people to believe that the first day, or any day, is as good as the seventh day which God sanctified, asks them to put no difference between a holy thing and that which is common.

Fashion in religion, like fashion in anything else, is of the devil. Religious legislation is always an effort to force people to follow the religious fashions of the times.

IN secular matters the minority can properly acquiesce in the decision of the majority; but in religious matters this cannot be. In religion no man can determine duty for his neighbor; the majority cannot decide for the minority. Hence a civil government cannot justly undertake to be religious.

Science With the Bible, and Without the Bible.

SALVATION is the one great subject of the Bible.

Other things are referred to, and to some extent discussed in the Bible; but always in subordination to the one great and only subject, which is Salvation.

Salvation itself is science, and while this is treated in the Bible as the one great science—the science of sciences—yet other sciences are not ignored, but are often referred to.

It is true that in the Bible no science is considered without God; yet this is nothing against its being science. The idea of science without God is a vain and fallacious thing, infinitely more incongruous than the drama of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. It is a palpable contradiction, for how can there be true knowledge where the very Source of knowledge is ignored?

In all science without God, "There is a painful uncertainty, a constant searching and reaching for assurances that can be found only in God." In all the discussions of such science there is betrayed a conscious inability, sometimes acknowledged, to trace things back to the first great principle, to that which is fixed and final, and where the mind can rest in assured certainty.

In the Bible, however, that is, in science with God, there is none of this uncertainty. In that there is no feeling about for a standing place; there are no proffers of "a working hypothesis;" but everything is placed at once upon God as the origin and ultimate of every phenomenon, the sure resting-place of the mind after every "last analysis."

In science without the Bible, that by which things are held together is Cohesion. But when it is asked, What is Cohesion? the only answer is "That by which things are held together." In science without the Bible, that by which all things are held up or held in place, is Gravitation. But when it is asked, "What is Gravitation?" the only answer is, "That by which all things are held up or held in place." But such answers as these are not answers at all: they are simply the saying of the same thing in another way.

Yet it is a fact that such is just the instruction that is given in the books, and such is the teaching that is given to students. But by it the mind of the student is caused to travel in a circle, and is left wandering there, ever inquiring and finding no certain or satisfactory answer. It is proper for a student to ask, "What holds, in their places, the worlds and all things?" And it is proper enough that the answer should be, "Gravitation." It is then proper for him to ask, "What is Gravitation?" But it is not in any sense proper to answer that, "Gravitation is that by which all things are held in their places." It is proper for the student to ask, "What is it that holds things together?" And it is proper enough that the answer should be, "Cohesion." It is then proper that he should ask, "What is Cohesion?" But it is not in any sense proper, nor is it at all sensible, to answer this question by saying that "Cohesion is what holds things together."

Yet that and such as that throughout the curriculum, is what is offered as science. It is science without God, science without the Bible; but it is not genuine science. By it, all that any person can ever know is merely something about things; he cannot know the reality of the things themselves.

In science with the Bible, it is altogether different. In that, when a child or a student asks, "What holds all things in their places?" he can be told that it is Gravitation. And when he asks, "What is Gravitation?" he can be answered, "God made the worlds by his Son, who, being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power." Heb. 1:1-3. Thus, gravitation is the power of God manifested in his word through Jesus Christ. When it is asked, "What holds all things together?" and it is answered, "Cohesion;" and when it is asked, "What is Cohesion?" the true answer is, "God hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son, . . . by whom all things were created, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions or principalities or powers, all things were made by him and for him; and he is before all things and by him all things consist"—[hold together]. Thus Cohesion is the power of God manifested through Jesus Christ our Lord.

All things came neither by evolution, nor by the "nebular hypothesis," but by the word of God. For "by the word of the Lord were the heavens made and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. For he spake, and it was." And "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things that are seen were not made of things which do appear."

Gravitation was taught in the Bible more than twenty-three hundred years before it was discovered by Newton. That the air has weight and that dew is formed by distillation, was taught in the Bible more than twenty-five hundred years before science without the Bible had "discovered" it. That there is a difference in the radiance of the stars, and not simply a difference in their distance, was declared in the Bible more than fifteen hundred years before modern science had learned it. That there is healing in the sunshine was taught in the Bible twenty-three hundred years ago, and medical science has only lately "discovered" it. The science of meteorology—the sources of the wind and the rain, the circulation of the waters and of the atmosphere—was revealed in the Bible more than twenty-five hundred years before science without the Bible had become at all acquainted with it.

The world of science and philosophy to-day is going farther and farther astray, "in wandering mazes lost," because of its persistent ignoring of God in the Bible. By such pretended knowledge and wisdom the world is fast coming to the point where again it does not know God. And through the glamor of this so-called science and philosophy, even the professed Church of Christ is fast forgetting God.

He who believes the Bible and thus becomes so acquainted with God and the power of his word, that he knows and rests with perfect confidence in the knowledge that God possesses and has revealed in the Bible a philosophy and a science that is as far beyond any that this world ever knew, as heaven is higher than the earth, is counted as fairly beyond the pale of respectability. But all that makes no difference with the truth. And it is the everlasting truth that in the Bible there is more and better science, truer and more profound philosophy, than this world ever knew or ever can know without that book.

God is. He is the former of all things. He is the only true teacher. He is ever ready and is waiting to be the teacher of all. He will willingly teach all who will be taught by him. And to all such he will teach all knowledge and all wisdom, all science and all philosophy. For in him are hid all the treasures of philosophy and science, and ye are complete in him who is the head of all principality and power.

Doing Evil That Good May Come.

UNDER the heading of "The First Sunday Law Case," a late issue of the Providence Journal contains the following:—

"A certain deacon in a Connecticut town, feeling that the new Sunday law ought to be enforced, purchased a pound of crackers of a fellow-citizen on the first day of the week for the express purpose of having him hauled into court. The seller was promptly acquitted. This is a further indication of the impracticability of the law; but the interest in the case lies in the conduct of the deacon. It never occurred to him, apparently, that his zeal had led him into an unneighborly and unchristian action, and that he who tempts a man to break the law is as much to blame as if he had broken it himself. But Sabbatarian enthusiasm plays the deuce with moral perceptions."

War and the Duel.

A DUEL is a combat between two individuals. War is a combat between two nations. It is a duel on a grand scale.

In this country duelling is condemned. The individual who engages in a duel is regarded as lacking in the essential elements of moral character. He is classed with the gambler and with those who yield to the control of vice and passion. Yet the same ones who thus condemn the individual duel defend the national duel as an entirely proper and even honorable proceeding. The vast majority of the church people take this course, and even go so far as to maintain military organizations in their own midst. And while they justify duelling between nations, they affirm that the combatants in such a case may be "Christian" nations.

Such inconsistency is of course perceived in those nations of the Old World occupying a lower plane of virtue than that on which this country assumes to stand; and they are not slow to point it out. The following from the New York Journal, of August 25, sets the case before us upon its merits, and might be read with profit by several millions of our "Christian citizens":—

"If France and Italy had any wish to know what is thought in the United States of duelling they have been fully informed. The press of this great country has spoken copiously, with the set-to of Prince Henry and the Count of Turin for a text, and it is decided that the duel is nonsense—that nothing could be more irrational than to endeavor to determine the merits of one question by settling the merits of another; that for the Count to prove himself a more successful swordsman than the Prince left as it was before the disputed point of Italian courage in Abyssinia.

"This is true, as obviously true as that man is a fighting animal. But it is unfortunate that the philosophers of Italy and France can inquire with force whether if we are so convinced of the folly and essential savagery of the duel, we ought not to sink or sell our navy and disband our army. For, after all, what argument is there that tells against the duel which does not also bear with equal weight against war? What does war prove except the superior strength or courage of the victorious nation? The duel between individuals and the combat between peoples are alike an appeal to force—the last arbitrament, to which we still resort in common with the lower animals.

"While every nation of Europe is armed to the teeth, waiting like a Klondike miner with his hand on his pistol to repel any attempt to jump his claim—while there are more soldiers in the civilized world than any other age ever saw—it is rather queer to witness the duellist haled before the court of reason and required to listen to philosophical lectures delivered with a Quaker accent.

"And the Italian or French defender of the practice of private war may express interest in the phenomenon of the survival in full strength of the spirit of the duellist among people who have abandoned the duel. In an industrial community such as ours, where the theory is received that the law affords reparation for all wrongs, and that it is disreputable as well as foolish for individuals to fight, the peaceful citizens desire that their government—which is themselves in the aggregate—should be guided not by Christian maxims of non-resistance to evil, but by the duellist's code. They wish their government to be sensitive upon the point of honor, to respond to rudeness by laying its hand upon its sword, and to resent an affront or avenge an injury precisely as the whiskered pandour and fierce huzzar would be expected to do by his duel-approving comrades.

"It is all utterly unreasonable and perfectly human."

Romanism in the United States Navy.

SOME idea of the manner in which Romanism is intrenching itself in this Government, may be gained from the following letter written by an officer on the U. S. battleship Oregon, to a Protestant minister, and published in the Herald and Presbyterian, of August 25th (the names of the parties in the correspondence being suppressed, for politic reasons):—

"Dear Friend:—I will write you these few lines concerning a little incident which happened on board the United States ship Oregon, last Friday, to let you know how things are going in this grand United States navy.

"Last Friday was, as you know, Good Friday, quite a day among the Catholics. Early Friday morning, just before breakfast, there was an order issued by the captain that there would be no meat eaten by the crew or officers that day, which caused quite a bit of dissatisfaction among some of the men. But that was only a 'starter.' About 10.30 A. M., a big, burly priest came on board ship, and the whole crew had to attend a meeting in the officers' quarters, where they had a great many large candles burning and a lot of other foolishness. All the officers, with the exception of two, were dressed in big robes of white. When the priest left the ship all the crew were lined up on the quarterdeck, and, as he went over the gangway, the captain gave the order to salute him, which they all did with the exception of thirty-four, myself among the thirty-four. And we were every one of us punished for not saluting the priest, under a charge of not obeying orders.

"When I enlisted in the navy I did not think I was joining a Catholic institution, and I told the captain so, and he came near putting me in the brig (ship's prison) for saying it to him. Now that the officers know I am against the Catholics, I expect that they will make my life miserable the rest of my time on the Oregon, just because I let them know I am an American.

"Now, I would like to have you advise me on this subject. I have already been told by an officer that the best thing I could do was to get out of this, and, if I did not, I would be disrated to a seaman.

"April 22, 1897."

THE Bible Sabbath begins and ends at sunset. The Sunday sabbath begins and ends in the darkness of midnight.

Political Prayer.

It is not very consistent for a journal which is published in the interests of the papacy, to decry that which savors of the papal principle of union of Church and State; but it is plain that papal journals can see the evil readily enough and know how to state the truth when it is a case of union of the State with some other religion than the papal. The Catholic Mirror, for example, takes occasion from some recent utterances by the Senate chaplain of Congress, while in the discharge of his official duties, to comment upon the folly of political prayer. The Mirror says:—

"The offensive practice of Protestant ministers making 'prayers' of a certain character in legislative or political bodies has been often noted, and every now and then something of the sort occurs in Congress. Then there is a laugh from the irreverent, or an expression of disgust from serious and sensible people who feel that by these exhibitions religion is brought into discredit.

"A few days ago the chaplain in the Senate, Rev. Hugh Johnson, delivered one of these political prayers, in which he said:—

" 'We recognize Thy hand in this work of commercial legislation now near completion in so short a period of Congressional history. We thank Thee for the courage, the disinterestedness, and the generosity exhibited by Senators and Representatives, and that party interest and feelings and local interests have been subordinated to the expressed will of the majority in this legislation.' "

"The reverend gentleman, it may be explained, alluded to the tariff bill. Not a few persons, it is to be feared, will be profane enough to give expression to a good deal of mirth at the idea of the 'courage, disinterestedness and generosity' of the Senators and Representatives in connection with the pending 'work of commercial legislation.' It will be hard to believe that the hand of the Almighty directed some of the proceedings of the honorable members who have been laboring over the complicated and difficult schedules recently in Washington.

"Such 'prayers' have a sound of cant and hypocrisy, and it is not just to term them prayers at all, but rather political speeches. No clergyman of decent instincts and of proper reverence for the Almighty would address such offensive instruction to the divine Author of all things, patronizingly informing him of the satisfaction of critical observers here below with his direction of mundane things."

"Fashionable Deseccration of Sunday."

UNDER this heading a New England journal says:—

"The church-going element of New England is stirred because the aristocratic sojourners of Newport turned last Sunday into an occasion of merry-making. First the nabobs had their showy carriages manned by lackeys in bottle-green livery bowling along Bellevue avenue and the ocean roadway until it seemed as if every swell turnout in the country was in the procession. Then Oliver H. P. Belmont gave a reception which was attended by a small army of well-dressed men and women and which was enlivened by the music of a brass band. Besides this there were eight more elaborate receptions including one given by Chauncey M. Depew. At the Casino, dinners were given by the dozen, the guests numbering all the way from ten to twenty, and in other ways the decorum prescribed by Christianity for observing the sabbath was trampled upon."

A Sunday law is essentially a restriction upon the poor. It can never be anything else than class legislation. The unfortunate circumstances which surround the poor sufficiently emphasize the contrast between them and the rich, where no Sunday law exists. And anything which tends to deepen this contrast, as a Sunday law does, can only tend toward anarchy and revolution.

Official Religion.

"CONVERTED BY MISTAKE."

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

It is well known that the larger part of the population of Europe that turned from their native paganism to the papal church in early times were converted in the mass; that is, the chief of the tribe, for political or other reasons, cast in his lot with the imperial religion, and his people followed him in religion as they followed him in war. This notion of religion, which left no place for a change of heart and life, was thoroughly papal and has always been the religion of the natural man. It was against this religion of lifeless form that the Protestant Reformation lifted the standard, calling men to personal faith and to the new birth by the incorruptible Word. To the survival of that old idea of religion is due the crusade in all Christendom for religion and morality by politics and religious legislation. Men whose religion is but a cloak easily conceive the idea of forcing others to wear the same cut of garment.

Apropos of this subject of official religion, the Echo has recently reminded us that a Tartar tribe in Russia was last century "converted" to Mohammedanism by an official's blunder:—

"They were converted by mistake—by a slip of the pen—in a fit of absence of mind. Up till then the Kirghiz Tartars were Shamanites—worshippers of nature, spirits, and ancestral ghosts, as all the Central Asiatic tribes were before the advent of Mohammedanism, and as some of them in obscure regions still are. In communication with the Kirghiz chief, he was addressed as Mohammedan by the Russian Minister. His tribe was supposed to be Islamic, and was officially described as such. After a time the St. Petersburg officials discovered that they had made a mistake. 'You might have made Christians of them, once you were about it,' exclaimed the head of the orthodox faith. They might. But there the Mohammedan designation was in the official records of the empire, and Mohammedans the Kirghiz had to be, willy nilly.

"The spectacle presented by a Christian State persuading a nation to embrace Islamism was curious. Of course there was no compulsion. The Kirghiz Khan, being a polite man, made no bother about the affair. He became a passable Mohammedan. And of course, his tribe followed his example. They are not very strict Mohammedans. Much of their old Shamanic faith still survives.

"A still more curious example of chance in religious acceptance is that of Russia herself. When Vladimir sent envoys abroad—to Byzantium, among other places—in search of a new religion for his subjects, he was induced to become a Christian because of the splendor and the riches of the Christian capital. God must have specially favored a State so opulent, he argued. So his heathen Muscovites were officially informed that Christians they must become. But there was another Mohammedanism which was then competing with Christianity. But abstention from strong drink was one of its commands. It is historically known that this was the Russian peasant's objection to embracing the prophet's faith, then triumphant in Central Asia and Asia Minor."

"Civil Righteousness" and Religious Prejudice.

THE Martinsburg, Pa., Weekly Herald, of August 12, makes this allusion to the recent arrest of W. H. Armstrong, in that State, for "Sunday desecration":—

"The evil power of 'civil righteousness' and the religious prejudice of a lot of 'good' church people is in sad evidence at Washington, Pa. Rev. W. H. Armstrong, a devout minister of the church of the Seventh-day Adventists, was last week fined and imprisoned in the Washington county jail, for serving God according to the way he believes. His arrest was due to a number of 'zealous' church people, who charged him with 'Sunday desecration.' The first words of the justice of the peace before whom Rev. Armstrong was brought, were: 'There is a nest of Adventists in town that will have to be cleaned out.' Thus religious jealousy and prejudice was allowed to prejudice his case. Religious persecution and not the evidence, decided.

"The same forces are organizing for an aggressive campaign against 'sabbath desecration' as they term it, in Bedford County and similar persecutions are bound to follow. How rapidly the events are leading us up to a closer union of Church and State. Reader, if you are in favor of complete religious freedom, express your sentiments without fear of preacher or people, and help stay the tide that is trying to sweep away our civil and religious liberties."

Crumbs.

BY S. O. JAMES.

SATAN delights in oppression and succeeds in persuading a certain class of minds that even in its worst forms it is only wholesome discipline and that they themselves are the divinely-appointed agents to administer it.

It is a good thing to seek for glory, honor and immortality with the hope that by patient continuance in well-doing we may have eternal life, but let those who are seeking to force measures which can be secured only by the spirit of meekness, gentleness and love beware lest their power be suddenly wrenched from them and their glory turned into shame.

THE freedom with which some men attempt to lay down the rules of religion for others is not the freedom that comes from God.

MEN take liberties that bind their own souls in the worst of bondage.

HONEST men are sometimes misled with regard to methods. Peter used the sword for his Master's sake, but the Master's timely and mild rebuke, so useful to him in future life, seems of little worth to the hasty impetuous throng who will have him to be king of this nation.

NO MAN can of himself free himself from the bondage of sin into which all have fallen, but when freed by the Great Emancipator, the Lord Jesus Christ, he immediately partakes of his spirit and heartily desires that others may taste the sweet boon. It then becomes his business to learn what will enslave and what will tend to freedom.

HAPPY is that soul who can see that it is not necessary to deprive any of one God-given right in order that others may be free or have a greater measure of freedom.

A LARGE company of Christians are now praying for a Sunday law; in other words, they would have the great God so move upon the minds of a majority in this nation that a stringent law would forbid all labor upon a day which he has never in any sense made sacred,—thus robbing that part of the people who keep the day he has blessed of one sixth of their time. By what mysterious principle in logic or precedent in the dealings of God with men do they expect an answer to their prayers?

OH that men in their work of Christian endeavor would study more carefully and prayerfully the things that are characteristic of God, of his law, and of his people and work, as well as those peculiar to the enemy.

"THE carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Yet in the face of this plain Scripture declaration, men will pass laws to enforce the law of God.

"I Sit as a Queen." "Christ Has Come."

"I sit as a queen and am no widow and shall see no sorrow." These are the boastful words of the fallen woman, the fallen Church of all the Christian centuries. She has been clothed with the purple and scarlet of civil power, and has seated herself as queen beside the Cæsars on the throne of earthly glory. Her waiting for the return of her loving husband is ended. He had given her His promise as the Prince of Heaven that he would return for her. With tender loving tones he told her of his infinite love and of his untold riches, and of his sure return. "Let not your heart be troubled. . . . In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." To the plaintive reply, It will belonesome when you are gone, he had quickly answered, "I will not leave you comfortless." "I will pray the Father, and he shall send you another Comforter." "He shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak; and he shall show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine and show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: Therefore said I that he shall take of mine and show it unto you." "Lovest thou me?" "I have loved thee with an everlasting love." "If ye love me keep my commandments."

Oh what a divine story of infinite love! How could this woman so quickly forget "the chiefest among ten thousand," the one "altogether lovely" who poured out his princely life to redeem her? How could she part with that snow white garment which had been given by her faithful Lover, every thread of which he had woven amid weariness and woe, and washed in his own blood—how could she bear to be clothed in that blood-stained robe of purple and scarlet which cruel hands had placed on her pale and patient Lord? How could she receive the crown of a queen from the power that had platted that crown of thorns? How could she forget his love? How could she send him that cold and cruel message of rejected love, "I sit a queen and am no widow." Cæsar is now here—a cepted Lord, and she has ceased to look for the return of her lawful spouse.

This is the sad story as told by the Lord himself; let us now trace it in the annals of history. A single paragraph will tell how in the fourth century and onward, when the Church became wedded to the State, the doctrine of the personal second coming of Christ was rejected, and the adulterous union of the Church with the Roman empire was declared to be the fulfillment of the "blessed hope" of the apostolic church:—

"This state of matters, however [the general belief in the literal second coming of Christ], gradually disappeared after the end of the fourth century. The change was brought about by two causes,—first, Greek theology, which reached the West chiefly through Jerome, Rufinus, and Ambrose; and, second, the new idea of the Church wrought out by Augustine on the basis of the altered political situation of the Church. . . . He himself had at one time believed in it; he too had looked forward to the holy Sabbath which was to be celebrated by Christ and his people on the earth. But the signs of the times pointed to a different prospect. Without any miraculous interposition of God, not only was Christianity victorious on earth, but the Church had attained a position of supremacy. The old Roman empire was tottering to its fall; the Church stood fast, ready to step into its inheritance. It was not simply that the world-power, the enemy of Christ, had been vanquished; the fact was that it had gradually abdicated its political functions in favor of the Church. Under these circumstances Augustine was led, in his controversy with the Donatists and as an apologist, to idealize the political side of the Catholic church,—to grasp and elaborate the idea that the Church is the kingdom of Christ and the city of God. Others before him may have taken the same view, and he on the other hand never forgot that true blessedness belongs to the future; but still he was the first who ventured to teach that the Catholic church, in its empirical form, was the kingdom of Christ; that the millennium kingdom had commenced with the appearing of Christ, and was therefore an accomplished fact. By this doctrine of Augustine's the old millenarianism, though not completely extirpated, was at least banished from the realm of the dogmatic. For the official theology of the Church it very soon became a thing of the past; certain elements of it were even branded as heretical. It still lived on, however, in the lower strata of Christian society."—Encyclopedia Britannica, Vol. XVI, p. 317.

Turning now from the "mother" to the daughters, of the Reformation periods, let us see if they are not repeating the history of the mother of harlots. Through all the long night of apostasy the Lord has had a faithful bride who was true to his love and who was making herself ready, and patiently "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." As above stated, they were regarded as heretics by the reigning queen, and "confined to the lower strata of Christian society;" but this great truth lived in the same lowly "strata" in which Christ planted the truth, when he taught it to the fishermen.

At the dawn of the Reformation the "blessed hope" was revived.

"The German and Swiss Reformers all believed that the end of the world was near."—Ib. 318. After the successors of the early Reformers had become entangled with human governments "they took up the same ground in this respect which the Roman Catholic church had occupied since the days of Augustine."—Ib. 318.

We will let the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, that godly Baptist minister, who though dead yet speaketh, state in his kindly way the present attitude of the daughters of the Reformation periods, on this subject:—

"It is to be regretted that our Protestant Christianity, in its separation from Rome, never passed entirely out of the baleful shadow of this pseudo-millennium. For many to this day confound the Church with the kingdom, and apply the promises of the glory of the age to come, to the present triumphs of the gospel. God forbid that in the slightest degree we should undervalue the missionary and evangelical victories which have so signally marked this century; but if we are tempted to predict the speedy conquest of the whole world to Christ through these successes, we need to be admonished to speak according to the Word. The present is the dispensation of election; the declared purpose of preaching the gospel to the Gentiles in this age is to take out of them a people for His name (Acts 15:14), and it is a premature grasping of the kingdom to apply to this period those glorious predictions of universal righteousness in the age to come, with which Scripture abounds."

Next let a prominent Methodist clergyman, signing himself "Ignotus," tell in his powerful style another phase of the same truth:—

"Our ministry have been dazzled and bewildered by the splendor of our unparalleled material progress. They have shared it and have been lifted by it out of the poverty and sacrifice of the fathers, clothed in purple and fine linen, and made to fare sumptuously every day. They have come to glory not in the cross, but that in preaching the gospel they have gotten beyond all its crucifixions and sacrifices, and that henceforth the world would be saved by our national progress and our splendid ecclesiastical equipage.

"All this we have accounted the good time coming, the breaking of the millennium. This is the style of boasting and conceit that has characterized our pulpits for the last twenty years, and now we awake—if we do awake—to find our progress has been material and selfish—progress toward death. I am not saying that our nation is near its downfall, but I do say we are rapidly hastening in this direction. We need only to make progress. The inevitable tendency of our current economics and politics is to anarchy through tyranny, rebellion, revolution."—Christian Advocate, Feb. 14, 1895.

We will now submit a few quotations from the leaders in that gigantic movement of the churches called "Christian Citizenship," to show that the control of civil affairs by the Church is now, as in the days of Augustine and onward, coming to be regarded as the fulfillment of Christ's promise to come again:—

"Not until the kingship of Jesus is established over our land and the world, and his teachings made the rule in public affairs, will the Christian Citizenship League have achieved its purpose to prepare the way of the Lord.

And then it shall be found that not only has the way for his coming been prepared, but that he has indeed and in truth come."—The Christian Citizen, the organ of the National Christian Citizenship League, Dec., 1896.

This is exactly what the mother of harlots said in the fifth century when she had gotten control of public affairs and seated herself as a queen on the throne of the Cæsars. She said, "Christ has come."

"We mean to lay hands on politics, we mean to wash politics clean and clothe her in white raiment, and make her an obedient handmaid to the Great King."—"Official Report," Boston Christian Endeavor Convention, p. 214.

This is just what the mother thought to do, but instead of clothing politics in "white raiment" she made her own white raiment scarlet with sin, and then she thought she had reformed politics, and that she was ruling as the handmaid of the Great King, when in reality she was ruling as the "great harlot" the arch-enemy of the Great King.

"What is my work as a member of a good citizenship committee? It is to enthrone Christ in every town and city in the State, to have every mayor and councilman a Christian, then Christ will rule."—Official Report, Boston Convention, p. 215.

An official description of the Christian Citizenship meeting of the Christian Endeavor Convention, held on Capitol Hill, Washington, D. C., July 11, 1896, reads thus:—

"Never before has our government permitted the area around the Capital, the very heart of the nation, to be used for other than governmental purposes. And indeed a governmental purpose was that, since the 50,000 represent nearly 3,000,000 young people whose force of character will make them the country's governors before many a moon has passed. That grand exhibition of young manhood and womanhood is the clearest omen yet seen of the coming time when Christ, whose right it is to reign, shall be supreme on Capitol Hill."—Official Report, p. 289.

Pages of similar quotations might be submitted, but these must suffice as samples, showing that the Roman Catholic conception of the kingdom of Christ pervades the Protestant churches. It is this papal conception that is spurring them on to gain control of civil affairs that they too may sit as queens and be widows no longer.

Meanwhile the faithful bride prepares and waits. Meanwhile she listens to the tender messages brought by the Holy Spirit from the loving Lord who shows her "things to come." Like Stephen, filled with the Holy Ghost, she looks up to heaven and sees her husband seated at the right hand of God. As he passes from the holy to the most holy apartment of the heavenly sanctuary she follows with her loving looks. To the Spirit's tender message from Him, "Surely I come quickly," she lovingly answers, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

THE Wesleyan Methodist, of July 7, takes occasion to refer to the AMERICAN SENTINEL as being "out and out infidel, and preposterous in every way." We think this will be news to most of our infidel or "freethought" exchanges. Is it because the SENTINEL is the only paper in the land which sets forth the Bible as being the truest and highest science, and God as the author and teacher of all true science, that the Wesleyan Methodist charges it with being altogether "infidel"?

THE occasion of this pronouncement by the Methodist came about on this wise. An inquiry came to it from a correspondent in Michigan, couched (in part) as follows:—

"A few days ago a small paper called the AMERICAN SENTINEL came into my hands, in which was a communication opposing the amendment to the Constitution of this Government by which we shall recognize the name of God as the supreme ruler of the universe and arbiter of nations, claiming that it would lead to a union of Church and State, which I perceive to be a preposterous idea. Is not God the Creator of all worlds, the Giver of all life and intelligence to all rational beings, and are they not all dependent upon Him for every blessing enjoyed, both temporal and spiritual, and can there be anything wrong in acknowledging his supreme authority and our inferiority, seeing that he is infinitely wise and just and good, and that his goodness extends to every creature and is stamped upon every object in creation?"

The Methodist printed this communication, and added the information to which we have referred.

OF course God is "the Creator of all worlds, the Giver of all life and intelligence to all rational beings," and they are "dependent upon him for every blessing enjoyed, both temporal and spiritual," etc. The SENTINEL has never denied this; on the contrary, it has taught it in every issue. Nor has it ever contended that there would "be anything wrong in acknowledging his supreme authority and our inferiority." It is part of the mission of the SENTINEL to urge all persons to do that very thing. Did any "out and out infidel" organ ever adopt this course?

BUT note this point: an individual acknowledgment of God as the Creator and Sovereign of the universe, and of his claims upon all men, is a different thing altogether from a governmental acknowledgment of this kind. The SENTINEL would be well pleased to see all individuals in the land confess their dependence upon God and his right to their allegiance and service. But it objects to any action of this kind from the Government.

WHY? and wherein is the difference? Simply because governmental recognition of God is opposed to individual recognition of him. It is opposed to any recognition of God that is pleasing to God himself. For true and acceptable recognition of God is of faith; but governmental recognition of God is of force, and not of faith. The Government would be nothing without force; and whatever the Government does, is carried out not by faith, not by love, nor by persuasion, but by force. The Government never wastes one moment in arguing with or beseeching individuals to secure compliance with its wishes. It simply puts its desires into the form of enactments, and he who fails to comply therewith does so at the peril of his property and his personal liberty.

A GOVERNMENTAL recognition of God, therefore, means a recognition of him by the force of the pains and penalties which the government has at its command for the execution of its purposes. When the Government makes a recognition of God, it means that you must recognize God in precisely the same manner, no matter whether you believe in it or not, or be counted out of the Government altogether. For the people being the Government, what the Government does is done by the people. You are either not of the Government, or else you participate in the Government's action. If you are a part of the Government, you must conform to the Government's religion. If you are not a part of the Government, you must suffer the penalties which belong with disfranchisement.

THE complexion of the Government, of course, is continually changing. It alters with every election. Its requirements are constantly varying. And to all these changes, the participant in the Government must conform. When the Government changes its manner of recognizing God, he must change with it, no matter how it may suit his own convictions. When the Government endorses a religious dogma—as for example, the dogma that Sunday is the Sabbath—he must likewise endorse it, though he may not in the least believe it to be true. This leaves no room for faith; it cuts squarely across all individual freedom of choice. And therefore it is, as before stated, opposed to the only recognition of God which he can accept. "Without faith it is impossible to please Him."

THERE are a multitude of participants in State and national government in this land who do not believe in God at all, and therefore do not believe in any recognition of him. And there are multitudes more who do recognize him, who would be certain to dissent from his recognition provided by the Government. Either these would have to be counted out of the Government, or the governmental recognition of God would be a lie and a piece of base hypocrisy; for when the Government speaks, it speaks for all those composing it. It would be a lie and hypocrisy in the case of every dissenter from it; and in a land where there is so little unanimity of religious belief as is seen here, the dissenters would be by no means few. Many of these, however, for the sake of policy, would pretend to acquiesce in the popular view; hence the recognition of God could not fail to be a lie and a piece of hypocrisy at the very best. At the very best it would be a base insult to Him whose all-seeing eye discerns the secret motives of men's hearts. And who cannot see, in addition to this, the religious controversy, the struggle for supremacy between the sects, which such a proceeding would necessarily engender?

* * *

FOR all these reasons the SENTINEL is opposed to a governmental recognition of God; and for being so opposed, it is denounced by the Wesleyan Methodist as being "out and out infidel, and preposterous in every way." If to oppose a lying, hypocritical act alike insulting to God and unjust to man, is "preposterous," then we prefer to be preposterous; and we will let the Wesleyan Methodist occupy the opposite ground.

* * *

It is announced from Rome that the pope is disappointed in the encyclical put forth by the Pan-Anglican Conference of the Anglican church, because it not only does not favor a closer union between the English and Roman churches, but advocates "resistance to the usurpations of the holy see."

* * *

THE United States has sent a representative of its War Department, in the person of an aged general of wide experience in the military affairs of this country, to inspect, and of course report upon, the development of militarism in Europe. In fact, it is said that he has already sent two reports of his observations to the War Department regarding the conduct of the late conflict between Turkey and Greece,—and that now he remains to witness the autumn maneuvers of the German army. To the traveler through Germany, and the transient resident in its garrison towns, which term might apply to most of the German towns and cities, it would seem that the business of Germany is war, and that all its commercial and other prosperity is used but as a means to further the one great end of development of militarism. The American general is well qualified by his intimate knowledge of the terrors and barbarities of battle, and the impossibility of reconciling the end and purpose of a military life with the requirements of a Christian life, to warn the government of this country against the further development of militarism in the United States. It would be an unexpected thing if he should do so. But he could have no better text for such a warning than the great military plays which he is now witnessing.

Intolerance in Manitoba.

RELIGIOUS intolerance has shown itself in Manitoba. The situation is set before us in the following letter, from a reader of the SENTINEL in Winnipeg:—

Winnipeg, Manitoba, Aug. 23, 1897.

EDITORS AMERICAN SENTINEL: I write to inform you that the spirit of persecution has again broken out in this province. During the present summer three of our people have been arrested in different parts of this field for Sunday labor. The first was Jacob Nickel of Morden, who was released and sent home when it was found he would go to jail rather than pay a fine. This occurred in June.

Last week John McKelvy was incarcerated in the jail at Portage La Prairie, for Sunday work. His time in jail was to be five days, which will expire tomorrow, August 24.

Last Friday Edward Kelly of Winnipeg was summoned to appear the next day, to answer to the charge of carrying on his ordinary occupation on "the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday." I enclose an extract from the evening edition of the Free Press:—

"On the docket of the city police court this morning, appeared the name of the well-known barber, Mr. Edward Kelly, who is charged with violating the Sabbath ordinance by shaving customers on Sunday. This case is likely to develop into one of the most interesting that has ever come before the police court. Mr. Kelly is a Seventh-day Adventist, and in accordance with his religious belief he observes Saturday as the Sabbath day. On that day his shop on Market Street is closed. On Sunday, however, Mr. Kelly keeps his shop open for his customers. It is understood that the Barbers' Union is behind the prosecution in this case.

"Mr. Kelly discussing the matter this morning, said: 'I observe the Sabbath day and keep it holy as my Bible teaches me. The Sabbath day, according to my Bible teaching is Saturday and on that day my shop is never opened. I have arranged with my customers to shave them on Sunday. This is a matter of conscience with me and I consider this prosecution an injustice.'

"'But your religious beliefs will scarcely be accepted as excuse for violating the laws of the land?'

"'I am obeying the laws of God. I will obey the laws of man when they do not conflict with the laws of God, but when they do I will not raise man above God. I will go to jail before I will submit to injustice. If by going to jail I can help mankind to see the truth of the gospel I will willingly go.'

"The case was enlarged until Monday at Mr. Kelly's request. On Monday he will be ready to submit his defense to the court."

On Monday the case was again enlarged till Friday, the 27th. Mr. Kelly desires to become acquainted with the law in the case, and carry it to the Supreme Court if convicted in the lower courts. We await the outcome with deep interest.

Yours truly,

W. H. FALCONER.

We have opened this department for the express purpose of directly introducing ourselves to the younger portion of the large and growing SENTINEL family, in whom we feel a deep personal interest. Soon they will enter life's duties in earnest, and it should be with the widest comprehension of what that implies. We shall seek to fill the department with matter interesting, timely and instructive. We hope it will meet a genuine demand, and help to awaken a lively interest in one of the most vital subjects that can engage the attention of young people at this time.

A Short Talk on Natural Rights.

ONE of the first things that it is important every individual should have some knowledge of, is the subject of natural rights.

We cannot ignore rights. We have rights of our own, which we want other people to repeat. And other people have rights, which we ought to respect, but are not always careful to respect. No one is too young to possess rights. They belong as well to the baby in its cradle, as to the grown-up man or woman.

Nothing comes more natural to the average little boy or girl than to want to do something which will interfere with somebody's rights. Of course, they do not think of it in this way; they are thinking of their own amusement or of getting something that they want. They like to tease little folks smaller than themselves, just to see them get angry without being able to "pay back." They are quite apt to believe that "might makes right," or at least to act among their playmates as if they believed this. They do this without thinking of anything but their own amusement and satisfaction, but when they are treated in this way themselves, they have a keen sense of its injustice. They feel instinctively that they have rights, which are being invaded.

The rights that we and all other people have, come from God, and this is what makes them sacred. What God gives us, nobody has any right to take from us. God meant that we should all have rights or privileges, and be free to enjoy them: and anyone who interferes with them is interfering with the plans of God. It is a shocking thing that a mere creature of God's hand should seek to amuse and gratify himself by marring the designs of the Creator.

God is our Creator. He gave all living creatures their life, and he gave it so that they might enjoy it. He did not make any of his creatures to be miserable. So every person has a right to life and a right to liberty, and such things as he must have to enjoy life. This is what some of the great men who lived here a hundred years ago, said in the famous Declaration of Independence. Here are some of their words: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." These truths, they said, are "self-evident;" that means that they are so plain that no argument is needed to prove them. It means that everybody who has intelligence ought to know without being told, that God has given all persons an unalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. So then we all ought to know this much about the subject of natural rights. And we ought to act as though we knew it, too.

Most young boys are very apt to forget, or to act as if they never knew, that all God's creatures have a right to life and happiness just the same as man has. For instance, as they walk through the fields or woods and spy a bird upon the fence or the limb of a tree, their first thought, very likely, is to find a stone or other missile to throw at it. They do not mean to be cruel; they are only thoughtless; but thoughtlessness is one of the worst things in the world. Thoughtlessness causes a terrible amount of suffering, not only to the lower animals, but to human beings. Let us suppose, my boy, that your aim was true, that the stone did what you meant it to do, and the bird dropped dead to the ground. What have you done? You have taken away life; but can you give life? No; you could not put life into the very smallest insect. The greatest man in the world, or all the men in the world together, could not do it. It required infinite power and wisdom to give life to that little bird; but you, just for a moment's "fun," have taken this away, and it is gone forever.

The great God gave that little bird a right to life; he gave it power to fly through the air, he gave it a joyous freedom, an eye to be pleased with nature's beautiful forms and colors; he gave it a right to the enjoyment of these things: and this God-given right you and other equally thoughtless boys take away just for the "fun" of it. What must the great Creator think of such cruel and wanton interference with his plans? Is he pleased with it, do you think?

But boys are not the only ones to blame; far from it. Think of the deliberate slaughtering of these beautiful feathered creatures of God's hand, just to enable silly girls and women to conform to the fashion of wearing birds in their hats! Fashion is one of the cruelest things in the world. And in this case it is one of the wickedest. And yet some people who call themselves Christians will take away the most sacred God-given rights from his creatures, just to conform to worldly fashion.

Let us treat all God's creatures—even the insects that mind their own affairs and harm no one—as we would want to be treated if we were in their place. Let us remember that God-given rights are sacred things; and let us pause and think twice before we stretch out our erring hands to mar the handiwork of the infinite God—before we wantonly take away something that is infinitely beyond our power to restore. It is the Creator himself who has told us that we should be careful to do to others what we would want others to do to us.

A Lot in It.

"MAMA, why did Cain kill Abel?" asked Charlie, looking up from Doré's picture of the murder of Abel in the large family Bible.

"I think it says somewhere," said Mrs. Ross, rather absently, without glancing at the eager face of her boy on the floor, "that it was because Cain's works were evil, and his brother's righteous."

Charlie's face was puzzled and unsatisfied.

"But why, mama, did he want to kill Abel, if Abel was doing right?"

"Because Abel's right doing condemned his wrong doing, and made him feel uncomfortable."

"But, mama, now think real hard, and tell me why Abel's right doing made him feel uncomfortable?"

"Why—why—because," said Mrs. Ross, slowly, "I suppose it annoyed him just as it annoys us to have people differ with us in opinion, and question our judgment and works."

Charlie thought a moment. "Yes; that's it. It annoyed me yesterday when Esther would not agree with me about how to sharpen a pencil. Cain wanted his own way, and of course did not want any one to have any other way than his. It's quite natural, isn't it, mama? But after all, mama, why couldn't Cain have his own way?"

"He could. No one hindered him that I know of. Did any one hinder him?"

"N-No," said Charlie, slowly; "but everybody knows that it wasn't right. Why wasn't it right? What is right, any way?"

"Why, right is right," said Mrs. Ross, "because it is right."

"What made it right?" questioned Charlie.

"O I do not know that I can explain it so you can understand. It is right because it is in the very nature of things. The universe could not exist if right were not right. Why, Charlie, it's the very nature of God himself."

"Did God tell Cain and Abel what was right to do?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Ross.

"And you say he is right. Then he must have told them to do what he is."

"That's just it, Charlie."

"Then Cain must have been angry at what God is, if Abel did what God is."

"Abel was representing God," said Mrs. Ross, "and it must have been as you say." Mrs. Ross laid down her sewing as if a new thought had come to her. "Can you tell me any text that tells what God is?"

"God is love," answered Charlie promptly.

"Yes; then love is right. What is it that makes you trust me, Charlie?"

"Your love," said Charlie, smiling. "It's because I know you love me."

"Then because I love you, you trust me, and can safely do anything that I tell you to do, because my commands are the commands of love. And you know I will not tell you to do anything but what will be for your good. Because God is love, and love works only good all his creatures may safely trust in him, and do just what he says. Abel did this. He recognized that God is what he is, that is, love; and obeyed his commands, believing in their blessing to him. God's commandments are just what God himself is, and the word God comes from the same word as good. He is the supreme Good."

"But when Cain heard God's commands, he did not believe in them, and did not do them, and this shows that he doubted that God was what he was, and trusted in himself as being better, wiser, and higher than God. In fact, dear, when any one sets his way above God's way, he puts himself in the place of God in his own estimation, at least."

"Yes," said Charlie, "I heard papa read the other morning about a 'man of sin,' who opposed and exalted himself above all that is called God. But mama, I never knew before what there was in one's own way. Why, there's a lot in it," said Charlie, wrestling with a set of suggestions he could not put into words.

"So there is," said Mrs. Ross, looking far away. "There's Calvary and the dark ages in it."

"What you mean, mama?"

"You asked me why Cain killed Abel," said Mrs. Ross.

"Yes; and you said it was because his own works were evil and his brother's righteous."

"Yes; and then we found that right was the very expression of what God is, and that Abel was expressing God's own nature, and that Cain was angry about it."

"Yes, mama, here it is in the Bible: 'And God said to Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if not, sin lieth at thy door.'"

"Now, Charlie, what was Cain really angry at?"

"At God," said Charlie, in an awe-struck tone.

"Yes, Charlie; and now I will ask you why did Cain kill Abel?"

"Why, really," said Charlie, slowly, "it was to get rid of being reminded of God; to get God out of the way. He really hated God."

"I believe that that was the bottom reason. Cain did not know all that was in his heart; but hate was there, and it is directly opposed to love, and God is love. Abel was representing God to Cain, and Cain could not bear his meekness and love. Did he leave him alone then? Did he give him liberty to go on representing God?"

"No, mama. Even after God spoke to him he still kept his anger. It says that when he was walking in the field with Abel that he rose up and slew him."

"Now, Charlie, was that blow struck only at Abel, or would he have killed any and every one who represented God as did Abel? Would he have hated the same God likeness in every one?"

"Everybody," said Charlie. "It was not Abel as a person that he was mad at, but God."

"Who has most fully represented God's love to this world?"

"Jesus," said Charlie reverently.

"Yes, and were there any Cains in his day?"

"Oh yes, mama; I see what you mean. The high priests, the scribes, and the Pharisees, and the mob that shouted 'crucify him.'"

"Now, Charlie, why did they kill Jesus?"

"For the same reason that Cain killed Abel,—because they could not bear God's love. They did not want to even have a God over them, but wanted to rule themselves,—wanted to show themselves to be God, and get God out of the way, and every one that reminded them of him."

"Can you think of any angel who wanted to have the highest place?"

"Lucifer," said Charlie.

"You may turn and read what is said of his ambition in Isaiah 14:12-14."

Charlie read, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning. . . . for thou hast said in thy heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God, . . . I will be like the Most High."

"Then Jesus says he beheld him fall like lightning from heaven, that he is now the god of this world, that it is his spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. There are two classes of influences at work in the world, and we may choose which influence we will come under. One influence is of God, the other of Satan. One leads to right doing, one to wrong, one to love, the other to hate, one to liberty for all, the other to bondage and persecution. In love is life and every blessing of full liberty; in self is bondage, destruction and death. You can see how choosing wrong, how setting up one's own way above God's way, leads to hatred of those who take an opposite course, and who represent God on the earth by obeying his commandments. The disobedient in all ages have been persecutors, and in times past, because they had power to do so, have imprisoned godly persons, have had them burned at the stake, tortured and put to death as Cain did Abel, and as the Jews did Jesus, simply because they were so deceived by choosing wrong that they wanted to get God out of the way. But in getting God out of the way, they cut themselves off from the only source of love, life and liberty, and left for themselves and their followers only isolation and death. The history of many a nation who has forsaken God shows this to be the truth.

"Now can you see clearly why Cain killed Abel?"

"Yes," said Charlie, "and there's a lot in it,—a whole lot in it. I should think people better read God's word, and do as he says, so that they will be safe, and kept from being on Cain's side of the question against God and his people; for there's a whole lot in it." F. B.

Religious Liberty.

RELIGIOUS liberty is simply the liberty to worship or not to worship God, unmolested by the State, whose province it is to control men's actions by physical force.

Religious liberty, in its accepted sense, is an inherent right to every man, and is not transferable.

Every man is possessed of a will and the power to exercise it. In religious matters there is, in the economy of God, no such thing as compulsion. Every individual is left free to obey or not to obey, just as he sees fit. Christ himself declares, "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge [condemn] him not." John 12:47. One man may consider it his duty to obey the word of God, another may not so regard it. It is the right of all men to follow the dictates of conscience, no matter what their opinions on the subject may be, unmolested by police authority, so long as in its exercise they do not deprive anyone else of an equal right.

Home Work.

WE design to make this department intensely practical by providing interesting studies in different phases of the question of religious liberty, and also by arranging for home work.

There are many remarkable instances in history where the rights of conscience have come in conflict with the powers of the State, and some of the utterances of those against whom the laws were directed are memorable, and should be indelible stamped on the minds of all. Here is one:—

"Let us reject this decree. In matters of conscience the majority has no power."

Who said this and what were the circumstances surrounding its utterance? What was the result?

We would suggest that our young friends look the matter up, and write out a concise statement of the case, say not to exceed 250 words, and if you will forward the same to us, we will be glad to give space in this department to the one which, in our judgment, seems to be the most meritorious. From whom shall we hear first?

Our Special Offer Closed.

WITH this issue closes our special offer on the SENTINEL. When we determined to make it, it was with some misgivings, fearing that the hot weather, the hard times and the busy condition of our friends would militate against its success. However, we had faith to believe that the principles for which the paper stands in defense where so strongly entrenched in their hearts that when an opportunity was offered to do missionary work in its behalf, it would be embraced. We are glad to say that we have not been disappointed. The time for work was only about one month, yet during this period we have received nearly 5000 new subscribers. Considering all the circumstances, we think this quite remarkable; indeed, in conversation with a newspaper man a few days since, when he was apprised of the results of the offer, he could hardly believe us, and declared that there was not another paper in the United States with an equal circulation that could accomplish the same results in the same time and with the same effort. We told him frankly that we agreed with him, from the fact that we did not believe there was another paper in the land that had the constituency back of it that the SENTINEL had, and that there was where the secret lay.

Now, just a word to those who have so cordially responded to this offer. We thank you most sincerely for the effort, and desire to assure you that it will be our earnest endeavor to make the paper more than ever reflect the spirit of the message it bears. We shall bring it into the closest possible relationship with all the people, and will try to make its teachings so clear, so lucid, so forcible and convincing that they cannot but arrest the attention of those into whose hands it falls.

We have introduced into this issue some improvements which we trust will be appreciated. More are to follow. It is our ambition to make the SENTINEL so valuable a paper that anyone who has once been a subscriber will feel that in failing to read it, he will sustain a personal loss. We want its weekly visits to be warmly welcomed by every member of the SENTINEL family. And now, we sincerely hope that your kindly interest in the paper will not cease, but as opportunity presents cooperate with us in raising the circulation of the only paper of its kind in the United States till its influence shall be felt throughout the length and breadth of the land.

MR. D. DICKIE, of Orchard Lake, Mich., writes: "I am becoming more and more interested in the SENTINEL, as it is a staunch advocate of equal rights for all and special privileges for none. Our present condition is of our own doing. The majorities have voted for it. Now we are in a bad fix, and how shall we extricate ourselves? Experience is generally a dear teacher, but the lessons learned are salutary if heeded. The crisis through which we are passing is a most striking example of man's inhumanity and injustice to his fellow-man. May the SENTINEL raise its voice like a trumpet for the right."

A Suggestion.

WE have received several orders to discontinue copies of the SENTINEL sent to parties under our special offer, because of the impression that they would later be asked to pay for what they themselves had not ordered. We would again suggest the propriety of those who send the papers in this manner, notifying the parties to whom the paper is mailed that it is sent them free of cost.

MR. R. G. W. COLLINS, of Dodgeville, Wis., in remitting for twenty-four subscriptions, says: "I enclose you a list of subscribers I have secured for the SENTINEL, which includes some of the best men of the city. I have not been well or could have done much better. Success to the little giant."

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50.
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.35.

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY,

Is most healthfully located. Combines religious and industrial with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year.

For further particulars and calendar, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELTON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But more, it is not all of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

UNION COLLEGE,

Founded in 1891 by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, and located at College View, a suburb of the city of Lincoln, Nebraska.

The climate is healthy and the sanitary conditions excellent.

Purpose of the College.

This College was established not merely for the purpose of teaching the sciences, but also of giving instruction in the great principles of God's Word, and the practical duties of every-day life.

Text Books.

The Bible holds the first place in the educational system, and only such text books are used as harmonize with the inspired Word.

Courses of Study.

The usual work in the classical, scientific and preparatory courses is done, and in addition special biblical courses are offered in English, German, Danish and Swedish. Those who cannot remain long in school will be permitted to select from the regular course such studies as they may be qualified to pursue.

Thorough instruction given in music, drawing, painting, stenography, book-keeping and commercial law.

Industrial Department.

An industrial department is connected with, and forms a part of, the regular college work. Each student has an opportunity of spending two hours daily in some useful physical labor under a competent instructor.

Employment for young men: Practical farming and gardening, use of tools, shoe making, tailoring, tent making, baking and dairying.

For young ladies: Domestic work, sewing, cooking, laundrying, flower culture, etc.

Expenses low. Send for catalogue.

Address,

UNION COLLEGE,

College View, Nebr.

The Stomach:

Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

AMERICAN STATE PAPERS

A Book
for the Times.

A most valuable work on the subject of religious legislation in the United States, from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

It includes the various prominent acts, both State and national, relating to subjects of religion, such as Bills of Rights, Amendments, Treaties, Sunday Observance, etc. In it are found various Memorials, Petitions, and Remonstrances; House and Senate Reports on Sunday Bills; documents on "The Sphere of Civil Government," "The Rights of the Jew," "Religion in the Public Schools," "Civil Laws Against Blasphemy," "Christianity and the Common Law," "Sunday Legislation," etc., etc.; Judicial Decisions on Sunday Laws and the Bible in the Public Schools. It also contains in an appendix the provisions in the Bills of Rights of all the States, relating to the rights of conscience, and

The Sunday Laws, Complete,

OF ALL THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

There are also running footnotes all through the book, containing the comments and statements of eminent men.

368 pages. Price, best binding, $2.00, Cheap edition, $1.25.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS, slightly damaged, offered at half price.
Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND RELIGION.

✱ ✱ ✱

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

Cloth, 378 pp., $1.00.
Paper Covers,40.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

—An Ideal Book of Travel.—

BY LAND AND SEA

A JOURNEY THROUGH FIVE CONTINENTS.

STARTING from the interior of the United States, the reader quickly finds himself transported, as it were, to the scenes of the journey, the several stopping places being California, Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, England, and Holland. The aim of the narrative, which has been written almost wholly from original notes and observations, has been especially directed to the object of presenting the life and nature of those regions, apart from the mental instruction and its inherent features of intellectual entertainment. The author has happily found, in the object lessons of life under its various phases and conditions, illustrations of moral truths, which are portrayed in a manner at once instructive and attractive. The book contains 392 pages, embellished with over 100 original, full-page engravings designed especially for this work, and numerous part-page illustrations, and is furnished in the following bindings:—

Fine silk-finished cloth, embossed in gold and colored ink, marbled edges $2.25
" " " " " gilt titles 2.75
Full Russia Leather, gold side and back titles, gilt edges, extra finish 3.90

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spake it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12x18 INCHES.

On thick paper, mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

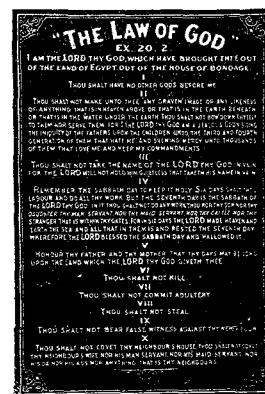

Postpaid, 25 Cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

Interesting Scenes and . . . Historical Facts

Descriptive of the World-Renowned

YO SEMITE VALLEY,

By J. M. HUTCHINGS,
OF YO SEMITE.

Read About the Big Trees
of California.

496 Pages,

29 Chapters,

155 Illustrations.

DRIVING THROUGH LIVING TREES

The High Sierra, with its Magnificent Scenery, (Ancient and Modern Glaciers, and other Objects of Interest.

If you cannot go to Yo Semite Valley, you can see the pictures of some of the most interesting scenes there. You can read about it in this book.

 The former Price was $3.25,
We offer it now for $1.60, postpaid.

Address—

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 9, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 35.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

ALL just legislation is not for the purpose of making men do right, but of compelling them to respect human rights.

If God had intended that men should be compelled to do right, he would have made it impossible in the first place for them to do wrong.

STATUTES and decisions of courts that are not entitled to respect do more to produce anarchy than all the incendiary speeches that were ever uttered.

It does not belong to man to say what is morally right. Only God can tell that, and he makes it clear to each individual by his Word and his Spirit.

A MAN-MADE sabbath law is a robbery upon both man and God. It robs man of his freedom of choice, and it robs God of the service which might be rendered to him through man's free choice in Sabbath-keeping.

SIN cannot be separated from the individual sinner. A "corporation sin" is simply the sins of its individual members. A corporation, as such, cannot sin. If it could, it could repent, and be saved, as such; and we would have in heaven the spectacle of saved corporations,—a strange sight, indeed.

It is impossible that Christians should let their light shine before men by a strict observance of Sunday, because in this there is no light. The world is getting to understand the subject well enough to know that there is no good Scriptural argument in favor of Sunday as the Sabbath. Hence they can see in strict Sunday observance only an exhibition of fanaticism or hypocrisy.

WHETHER the Sabbath shall be preserved or lost, is not the question that is before the American people, or any people. The question is whether the soul shall be lost or not, and this is the question of whether an individual—any and every individual—shall believe on Jesus Christ for salvation. To the soul that thus believes, the Sabbath cannot be lost; and to the soul that does not believe, the Sabbath counts for nothing. Let ministers and religious workers therefore seek to have souls believe on Jesus Christ, and not to have the Sabbath "preserved" by legislation.

The Science of Salvation.

THE angels of God are acquainted with all the natural sciences, yet they are more interested in the science of Salvation than in all the other sciences.

This testifies that in the estimation of the angels, the science of salvation transcends all other sciences, and is more worthy of their attention than are all the other sciences together.

The prophets were acquainted with natural science, yet the only use they ever made of this knowledge was to employ references to it as a means of making clearer to men the science of Salvation. This testifies that in their estimation the science of Salvation transcends all other sciences.

Solomon was a universal scientist. He knew more of all the sciences than any other scientist knew of any one of them. For twenty years he taught the sciences to the people. Yet, after all, he sums up all in the words, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; the sum of all that hath been said is, Fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. For God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil."

This, being the candid conclusion of the greatest scientist that ever lived, is worthy of respect as valid testimony to the fact that the science of Salvation is more important than all other sciences together.

It must be borne in mind that the science that Solomon knew, was divine science; it was science learned under the teaching of the Lord himself. It must be borne in mind too that the prophets and all the other writers in the Bible, wrote only under the inspiration of God, they wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; then the fact that the Lord himself in writing for the instruction of men that which is most for their good and the best for them to know, put all the stress upon the subject of Salvation. Other sciences are glanced at, yet only for the purpose of making plainer to the understanding the subject of Salvation. This testifies that in the estimation of the Lord the science of Salvation is more important than all the other sciences; and all who believe in God can only acknowledge that it is so.

Why is this so? How is it that God gave to Solomon and to Daniel such deep knowledge in the sciences, and yet has not preserved for men any treatise nor even a single chapter on any science except the science of Salvation? There is a reason for this, and the reason is that Salvation is the one thing that men need first of all, and more than anything else, or than all other things together.

Solomon indeed had understanding of the sciences more than any other man who ever lived: yet a man might have all that, he might understand all that, as Solomon did, and what good would it do him, if he did not have the science of Salvation first of all? Solomon had it all; yet when he turned his heart from God, from the science of Salvation, what good to him was his knowledge of the other sciences? How much power was in the sciences to hold him back from sin? How much power was there in his great scientific knowledge to keep him back from his natural self, and from the devilry and corruption that was in him.

Everybody knows that when he turned his heart from God's science, from the science of Salvation, though he had all the others, he was just as bad, he was just as wicked, he was as thoroughly swallowed up in idolatry and every profane practice, as though he had not known the A B C of anything.

Here we see a master mind; and yet the one who had such an understanding, such wisdom, in all the sciences, demonstrated in his life that all such knowledge is absolutely impotent for any good in a man or to a man, without the science of Salvation being there to control, and hold in righteousness the balance over all.

Mention was made a moment ago, of the fact that God did not bring to us any of Solomon's treatises on science. Now we call attention to the fact that he did bring to us a record of Solomon's life after he turned away from God. He did bring to us a record of the enormous failure which that man made in spite of all this knowledge, when he forgot the science of Salvation. Why, then, did God consider it more important for you and me to record all that man's life after he turned from God, than to bring to us a record of the scientific instruction that he gave? The record of the failure, the enormous failure, made by Solomon is of more value to mankind than would have been all the scientific teaching that Solomon ever spoke put in a book for mankind to-day. Because in that failure it was demonstrated to all the world how altogether vain and less than nothing, is all knowledge of all things without the knowledge of the salvation of God.

Another great example is seen in the Greeks. The natural mind never can attain to a higher, closer, or more perfect thinking than the Greek mind did. In that is portrayed the perfection of human thinking without God.

But what did it do for them? That is the question. What did their literature do for them? What did their philosophy do for them? What did their art do for them? What did their religion do for them?—It sunk them into such wickedness as is unfit to mention.

Rome learned from Greece and followed her example and came to the same end.

It must be borne in mind that the Greeks and Romans were not low, degraded, ragged, ignorant heathen; they were aristocratic, cultivated, and most highly educated heathen. The things which they knew and taught are the pinnacle to which teachers of to-day aspire. Julius Cæsar was one of the most accomplished men that ever lived—in courtliness, etiquette, æsthetics, and manners generally. But, what was his character? The most guarded description of it, to be anywise full or fair, would be unfit to print.

Therefore, when the fact stands thus demonstrated in threefold measure before the world, of the absolute impotence of every effort of the human mind in its perfection to attain to any good when the heart is turned from God, what can the Lord do for the world if these three world-lessons will not teach the people? What can he do for men if they will follow in that way, in spite of these examples of solemn warning? In all this history, men are taught the impotence of the highest effort of the mind in all branches of science, art, and literature, to do men any good, to keep them back from sin, to lead them toward any good of any kind whatever, when they forget the science and literature of Salvation, which God has given to purify the hearts of men.

Religious Office Seeking.

It is announced from Washington that the news of a vacancy in the grade of chaplain in the army, has brought in applications from three hundred ministers for the situation. This matter being under the direction of the war secretary, that official has fixed an age limit for the office, and has decided to require a physical examination of candidates, as in other departments of the service.

In the service of God the office seeks the man, and not men the office. "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him." 2 Chron. 16:9. God wants men; and when he finds a man that he can use, he has an office to put him in. The true Christian is never an office-seeker. He simply seeks to know and do the will of the Lord, and be faithful in whatever work God may call him to. There could be no stronger proof needed that the office of army chaplain is not of God's establishing than the fact that it is besieged by applicants and is under the control of the civil government.

"Christian Citizenship" Committee Work.

SOME idea of the systematic work being done by the "Christian Citizenship" movement for the furtherance of its cause, may be obtained from the following sketch of some of the committees now engaged in active work in the State of Illinois:—

"1. Committee on Legislative Departments.—This includes committee on the board of aldermen, county commissioners, the legislature of Illinois, and the Congress of the United States.

"2. Committee on Executive Department.—This includes the town officers, assessor, collector, etc., the mayor, with the departments under him, the sheriff, coroner, etc.; the governor, secretary of state, etc.; the president, the army, navy, and other great departments of the General Government.

"3. The Judicial Department.—This includes justices of the peace, county, State, and United States judges, and judges of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"It is expected that these three committees will learn thoroughly what these different departments are. They will learn who are our representatives in these different departments. They will report from time to time on their actions."

"5. Committee on Sunday Rest. It is expected that this committee will report as to whether there is any work done on Sunday, except works of necessity or mercy. If the members of the committee find that there is such work done, they will recommend a plan to the full committee for causing such unnecessary Sunday work to cease.

"6. Committee on Obedience to All Laws, by Members of the Full Committee and Their Friends.—This committee is to carefully digest the local laws and the laws of the State, and see whether there are any laws that have been unnoticed and are thereby being violated, and make a full report of the situation."

"8. Committee on Notification.—This committee will consist of the secretary and his assistants, and the duties will consist in notifying every member, associate member, or honorary member, of the various caucuses, primaries, and elections to be held. It will also notify the members of the regular and special meetings of the general committee.

"9. Committee on Candidates.—The duty of this committee will consist in making sketches of all candidates that are to be voted for at the various elections. It is expected that the records of the candidates will be carefully examined and truthfully reported to all the members of the general committee.

"10. Committee on Patriotic Celebrations.—It will be the duty of this committee to cultivate a higher appreciation of the value and sacred obligations of American citizenship. They will urge the best methods of celebrating Washington's birthday (and Lincoln's birthday, if it seems best), Decoration day, and Fourth of July. They will stimulate not only the holding of meetings, but the decoration of the houses with American flags, etc. It is expected they will work especially among the young people, including the children of the public schools."

This sketch is taken from the August Christian Endeavor. It is probable that in other States the work is similarly organized, and certain that it will be soon, if not so already. It will be seen that every candidate for office under this Government is to be brought to the test of "Christian citizenship," and if he does not pass the test, the whole force of the organization will be brought to bear, so far as it can be, to defeat him.

Of course such an organization will not indorse any candidate who is not in its view a Christian; and thus it will seek to impose a religious test for public office, contrary to the national Constitution.

How much real Christianity there is in this movement may be determined by a comparison of the work outlined above with the work of Jesus of Nazareth when he walked and taught in Judea, and with the gospel commission given by him to his disciples, just prior to his ascension.

True Christian Endeavor.

BY H. F. PHELPS.

"I THEREFORE, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. 4:1-3.

This is true Christian endeavor; and this is individual work. "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith," is another exhortation to true Christian endeavor.

Some people are calling for a church party, that they may secure the election of church members to office, and clothe them with civil authority to examine others who may not be in harmony with their faith. They are calling for a church party, that they may bring all dissenters into the unity of their belief by the power of the State. This is not true Christian endeavor, as history will testify.

There was a church party in the time of Constantine, with which he exchanged his influence in religion for the influence of the church party in political matters. Thus an unholy alliance was formed, and the church party led the empire to ruin. This was not true Christian endeavor.

Inasmuch as the formation of a church party in this century is for a political purpose, for the sake of controlling the civil power in the interests of the church; and inasmuch as the logical result of the existence of such a party will be another such an unholy alliance as was formed in the fourth century; it follows that the logical result of such an alliance will be the ruin of this nation; and as the influence of this nation is world-wide, the ruin will be world-wide.

True Christian endeavor will not bring ruin, but salvation; for self-examination and keeping the unity of the Spirit, will bring the peace of Jesus Christ, which is salvation. True Christian endeavor is to follow Christ, and no one will deny but that Christ was the greatest leader in religious thought that the world has ever seen. He could have formed a church party, but he did not. He could have become a political leader, but he did not. And at one time when some of the people were determined to make him such, by making him king, he departed from them and hid himself. Christ made no mistake in thought or act. And the very fact that he did not form a church party nor become a political leader, nor even a religio-political leader, is evidence most positive that the followers of Christ should not attempt such a thing; and that such a course is not true Christian endeavor.

The example that Christ set is for believers to follow. Christ "emptied himself," and became a little child, that he might save others. And the fact that he did this is positive proof that salvation is not in a church party or any of its methods. Christ was emptied of himself who was all righteousness, and he who knew no sin became sin for us; and this is positive proof that we, who are all sin, must be emptied of self, or made righteousness in him, that we too may be instruments of salvation to others. And as Christ in the emptying of himself became a little child, so we too must become as little children; for it is said of us: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

As Christ was emptied of himself that he might save others,—not by the control of primaries and caucuses; not by or through a church party or a political alliance; not by the power of the civil arm, but by the power of his own love and goodness; "by the power of the Spirit of God,"—even so the Christian must be emptied of self and become as a little child, that others may be saved,—not by a church party, or by political methods; not by the power and authority of Cæsar; but by the power of divine love, manifested in and through the believer.

This is true Christian endeavor. And the spirit of true Christian endeavor will lead the believer, as it led the Apostle Paul, not to be critical of others, but "giving no offense in anything," "in all things" to approve himself, even "unto much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distress, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings, by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report; as deceivers and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." 2 Cor. 7:3-10.

Let our good Christian endeavor people make a note of all this and follow, not their political leaders, but the Word of God. In so doing the blessing of heaven will follow them.

Religious Liberty in the South Sea Islands.

BY E. HILLIARD.

IN the South Pacific Ocean, near 21° S. latitude, lies a little kingdom known as the Tongan or Friendly Island kingdom. Its present population is 20,000. The inhabitants are of a dusky skin, and their habits and manner of living are similar to the people of the other South Sea Islands.

About seventy years ago, missionaries were sent among these Tongan Islanders to convert them to Christianity. As the result of a few years' labor, the entire population, nearly, accepted Christianity, and a marked change in religious customs was manifest. Idol worship and heathen superstition was exchanged for the worship of God and the principles of his Word. Everything has been gradually revolutionized until slight traces only of former times can be seen.

The methods of governing the people also have been changed. As far as the writer has been able to learn, Church and State were kept separate until the year 1887. About this time, some difficulty was experienced with a certain clergyman in the Wesleyan church. He withdrew from that religious body, and became a bitter enemy to it. Soon after, he became an active politician in the affairs of the kingdom. He was appointed a prominent position by the aged king, and soon after he became installed in his office, he inaugurated a plan for a new church organization. Other government officials coöperated with him in executing this plan, and by so doing flagrantly violated the governmental constitution which they had adopted.

In the granting of religious liberty, this constitution says, in its Declaration of Rights, Article 5: "All men are free to practice their religion and to worship God as they may deem fit in accordance with the dictates of their own conscience, and to assemble in such places as they may appoint." It was adopted in 1875, in the reign of George Tubou, amended by the legislative assembly in 1880, and ratified by the same body in 1882. The leading ones in the adoption of this constitution were the leaders in the open violation of the principles of religious freedom which it guaranteed to the people. Many things are labeled religious freedom, which strongly savor of religious bigotry, intolerance and even open persecution.

This was the case with this new church organization. Of course the church must have a name; and so the name of "Free" Church was given to it. It was a free church as long as men and women joined it of their own free will; but its members were not entirely made up of such ones. Some were compelled to join. Nearly all of the members of the old organization (Wesleyan) were natives, whose forefathers had been converted from heathenism to Christianity. When persuasion failed to woo them to the so-called Free church, then force was used and the power of the government brought to bear upon them, as the following sworn statements will show:—

THE SWORN STATEMENT OF A NATIVE.

"I, ———, make oath, and say as follows: On Monday afternoon, February 7, 1887, I heard the inspector of police tell the governor of Nina Fooou that the Nina Fooou fakaogos—i. e., Wesleyans—were to be sent by the government to him to do as he liked with, but he was not allowed to go off his premises. Early Tuesday morning I saw some men tied under the trees at the governor's place. This was at six o'clock. At about 8 o'clock, I saw the people, five men and one woman, brought by the police from the shade, and the men tied to stakes driven in the ground in front of the governor's house, exposed to the sun. I saw two men flogged, and I believe there were more. I saw two men, a native minister and a man with a red shirt on, repinioned. The men had their wrists tied behind them, and their elbows lashed together as close as they could be brought by a man applying a knee to the back, and so getting a 'purchase.' I do not know when the people were first tied under the trees. Later on I saw a native minister carried away, as he had fainted, and they placed him under an orange tree. This was about an hour and a half after he had been put in the sun."

This oath was taken in the office of the British Vice Consul. Another swore to the following:—

"I, ———, do hereby swear that on the morning of the twelfth inst., I witnessed several natives being thrashed and brutally treated in front of ——— (a high chief's) house, he himself watching the whole proceedings. Upon making inquiry, I found they were Fakaogos (Wesleyans) who had refused to join the Free church. They came from a village about twelve miles from Nukualofa. They were thrashed until they could scarcely speak; some fainting and others with blood streaming down their faces, were at last compelled to give in and become converts to the Free church."

THE AFFIDAVIT OF A EUROPEAN.

"I, ———, was at ——— on January 22, 1887, when a whole lot of painted men, naked to the waist, came up to turn the Wesleyans to the Free church. I recognized some of them. A man was asked to turn over, and he would not. He was then violently pounded with guns, and they threatened to club him. He did not turn over and they shot his pigs."

All of this cruel work was carried on in utter disregard of the constitution of the kingdom, which guarantees religious freedom to the people. When the spirit of revenge roots deeply in the soil of the human heart, government constitutions and laws are incompetent to restrain. It may have its beginning in the heart of the individual, but it is not always confined to that individual. Sometimes it breaks away, overflows its confines, and becomes a torrent that sweeps millions into the abyss of eternal ruin. Often personal hatred is meted out upon helpless, innocent subjects under the cloak of piety. The ones that carried on the fiendish work in the above-mentioned place will not admit for a moment that it was religious persecution; and yet church matters were the primary cause all the way through.

One of the singular features of this persecution is, that there was not a particle of difference in the creed of the old organization and that adopted by the new. It was simply a resolute determination on the part of one man, who was afterwards joined by others, to break up the old church, that a new order of things might exist under new leaders. How contrary such a spirit is to that of the meek and lowly Nazarene, who said, "Resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Not one of Christ's true followers ever raised a hand to compel any one to observe any religious institution, join any church, or accept any religious dogma. Men who are acquainted at all with the Saviour of mankind, know that he will not accept a coerced subject, and they never will go beyond persuasion, which, backed by the Spirit of God, is the only method of saving souls for whom Jesus died.

Tonga, Friendly Islands, South Pacific Ocean.

An Uncertain Sound:

BY DAVID M. TRAILL.

OUR esteemed contemporary, The Ram's Horn, in its issue of August 7, gives an interesting account of an interview between a correspondent and "the only temperance cabinet officer," Secretary of the Navy John D. Long. After some excellent points on the good to be gained by abstinence from intoxicants, the writer proceeds as follows:—

"Then I turned to a purely religious subject and asked: 'Is prayer for divine guidance offered in the bi-weekly cabinet meetings, and do you as a Christian often feel God's presence there?'"

"'Why, no, of course not,' he answered, 'The meeting is just like any other business conference.'"

"'But do you not need wisdom from every available source at such times?'"

"'We certainly do need wisdom,' he replied lightly.

"'And is not God the source of all true wisdom?' I insisted.

"'Yes; of course,' said he.

"'And do you not desire the prayers of the Christians upon the Cabinet deliberations?'"

"'They can pray if they wish to,' he answered seriously, but with a view-point exactly opposite to the one I presented.

"Far be it from me to criticise the Christianity of this honored body or any member thereof. But it does seem that there is something lacking in such a picture of the heads of an avowedly Christian nation directing the affairs of its people with no open acknowledgment of or request from the professed Ruler and Governor of that nation! Is not the ideal of every earnest Christian and may we not hope in the next century to have a Theocracy, where the chosen chiefs of the people will actually consider God as their Ruler and Head, and will accordingly openly invoke his presence in their midst and earnestly plead for his help in their undertakings?"

It is indeed extraordinary what false conceptions some honest and evidently intelligent persons will form of the duties of the cabinet and other governmental officers. The cabinet officers, on entering office, are sworn to fulfill the duties of their respective positions in accordance with law. Now the Treaty with Tripoli, made in 1796, and which according to Article VI of the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, declares that this nation is in no sense founded on the Christian religion. Why then should these officers turn the business conferences of the nation into prayer-meetings and so violate the spirit of the supreme law of the land? True that the Supreme Court has declared this to be a "Christian nation," but the decisions of no court are infallible and those of the Supreme Court have frequently already been reversed both by itself and by the people, and it is possible to do so again.

Furthermore, if some of the cabinet officers should decide to hold a prayer-meeting, according to what form of worship ought they to pray? Should our Catholic Attorney-General or the Catholic Secretary of State decide to get a priest to perform mass with all the accompanying Credos, Ave Marias, genuflections and signs of the cross, what would the Ram's Horn think of it? And vice versa, would not our Catholic fellow citizens have a right to object to the Protestant form of worship in the same case? We would like to suggest to the Ram's Horn that it might be more in accordance with God's plan if public servants, in seeking wisdom from above, would follow the example of Daniel and Solomon as regards the time and place of their supplications. See Dan. 2:17-23; 6:10; 1:20; 1 Kings 3:5-12.

The writer is also much mistaken in supposing that an American Theocracy is the "ideal of every earnest Christian." Doubtless many honest but misguided persons are grasping at this ignis fatuus, but Bible-studying Christians know that a Theocracy will never be inaugurated till "He comes whose right it is." Ezek. 21:25-27. Our Saviour disclaimed the present kingship of this world. John 18:36. It was offered to him (Luke 4:5, 6) by the prince of this world (John 14:30; 12:31; John 9:24; 2 Cor. 4:4), but refused under present conditions. On another occasion some good-intentioned but mistaken individuals tried to elevate him to the throne by force, but he very effectually prevented it. John 6:15.

If the writer of the above quoted article would seek the knowledge of God's plans of government for this world and compare them with his own plans, he would readily see that the "something lacking" is in his own view and not in that of Secretary Long. The Ram's Horn would not then give such an "uncertain sound" and would do more effective work in preparing the readers for the great battle between truth and error, between a false theocracy and God's system of government.

What of the Night?

Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh, and also the night!—Isaiah.

Some Signs of the Times.

From "Are We Nearing Anarchy?" by Chas. W. Super, President of Ohio University.

It is sad to think that though Christianity has for eighteen centuries been proclaiming peace and good-will to men, no professedly Christian nation is yet ready to beat its swords into plowshares and its spears into pruning hooks.

Turning now to our own country, what are some of the signs of the times? . . . What evidence, for example, do they furnish regarding security to life and property and the impartial administration of justice? One thing is plainly evident—there is a growing disregard of human life. Fifteen years ago less than a thousand homicides and murders were committed in the United States. Within this time the record has been getting steadily darker. In 1888 the number was 2,884; in 1890, it was 4,290, and in 1895 it passed the 10,000 mark.

That these figures are not an exaggeration will be clear to any one who takes note of the contents of the daily newspaper. There is no nation in Europe whose government collects statistics that has one-fourth as many homicides in proportion to the population. We have even passed Italy in this respect.

This growth of savagery is attributed, and no doubt justly, to the increasing laxity in the administration of our criminal laws. On the one hand, the law-abiding [?] portion of the people have lost confidence in the courts, and rather than take the risk of allowing vicious criminals to escape, they dispose of them when caught, red-handed. On the other hand, the criminally inclined exercise less restraint upon themselves, and run the risk of acquittal after they have been arraigned. It is not probable that a man who has murder in his heart usually deliberates carefully before the commission of a crime, but the uncertainty of conviction is "in the air"—is a theme of common conversation and has a baleful influence upon the minds of those who prey upon the public peace.

Either the standard by which the public judges its law makers is more rigorous now than formerly, or the quality of the article is very inferior. It is, however, certain that an extraordinarily large number of persons are eager to serve the government, whether Federal, State, or municipal, in almost any capacity. If there ever was a time when the officesought the man that time is not now. With every succeeding change of administration, the number of these increases. With the elective offices the case is hardly, if at all, different. For every seat in Congress, in the State legislatures, in municipal councils and even in school boards, there are usually from five to ten times as many candidates as can be elected.

What can we say of the sense of commercial integrity now prevalent among us? There is a widespread conviction that for a number of years there has been an increasing laxity in this respect. Men past middle life who have been engaged in mercantile pursuits for thirty or forty years, say that more persons now, than ever before, buy goods which they have no intention of paying for; or if they expect to pay when purchasing, they soon find it easier to repudiate their obligations than to meet them. To pay debts is hard work when it demands careful economy and self-denial; it is doubly hard when the repudiator loses nothing of his former standing in the community.

In many States laws seem to have been purposely framed to shield the debtor who does not want to pay. The assumption is that men get into debt unwittingly, or through the wiles of those who have something to sell, and not by a voluntary act. The enormous number of failures that have occurred during recent years, are for the most part caused by "inability to make collections." Let any one take the trouble in any small municipality where everybody is known to everybody else, to ascertain the number of persons whose commercial honor is beyond question, and he will probably be surprised at its smallness.

Coincident with the desire of so many persons to serve the public at the public expense, is the willingness of legislative bodies, no matter what their name, to appropriate money for the establishment and maintenance of all manner of public and private enterprises. Ours might be called an era of confiscation. There is much talk by public servants on the importance of economy, but nobody is willing to economize. Thousands of cities and towns have not only taxed themselves heavily for street paving, water works and other public improvements, but also to assist private enterprises that could not exist without such aid. . . .

In most cases where large or relatively large sums of money are voted away by legislative bodies, charges of venality are freely made, and when they are sustained or can be made probable, the culprit or the suspects are voted out of office. But usually their successors are no better—proof enough that our standard of public morality is low. We seem to take it for granted that such offenses must come, even if we are willing to bring woe to him by whom they come. Furthermore, it is loudly asserted that in this country the churches, the great bulwarks of conservatism, have lost their hold upon the masses, especially in the large cities. The alleged reason is that the membership of the churches has, in a great measure, forfeited its character for uprightness, for fair dealing and for sympathy with the toiling millions.

Many of the struggles inaugurated by labor against capital are more or less tinged with hostility to the Church. We are told that many of the clergy are more eager to hypnotize capitalists in order to get their money for some pet project, than to lead them to right living; that if a man is a liberal giver to ecclesiastical enterprises no questions will be asked as to his moral character, that this eagerness to get money for the church extends beyond its membership, and that the clergy are chary of denouncing bad men, no matter what their business, if they will only "shell out;" that the distinction between church membership and non-church membership is virtually obliterated; together with much more of the same sort. No careful observer will admit these charges in all their breadth, but who will dare say that they are largely false.

The decay of the old-fashioned orthodoxy has gone no farther among a certain class than it was a hundred years ago, but it has become more general. Has the spirit of brotherly love taken its place? The weak, the down-trodden, the oppressed and the neglected, are in many places yielding to despair. Having no hope or sympathy in this life and no expectation beyond, what is left for them but a practical application of the motto, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." If the rich and the well-to-do make this their philosophy of life and are actuated by no higher motives for themselves or their children, can we consistently expect anything from the rest?

MR. J. ALEX. CHILES, attorney-at-law, Lexington, Ky., in remitting for several subscriptions he secured for the SENTINEL, says: "I am a constant reader of your invaluable paper. Every week it comes fraught with good, instructive and profitable information on topics of vital importance, and so much interested am I in the dissemination of these principles that after having read the paper, I take pains to place it in the hands of others. You are doing a great and good work. May you be blessed in it."

IN Baltimore during the past two or three months, there has been quite a controversy going on between a Catholic priest by the name of O'Keefe on the one side and several clergymen of the Methodist Episcopal persuasion, the Methodist Protestant school, etc., on the other. The debate has been marked by the acrimony that too often characterizes ecclesiastical disputes, and the "calling of names" has been painfully frequent and severe. The subject-matter of the discussion is that old topic, "Sunday" and "The Sabbath."

WHEN some man greater than Buckle or any of his imitators shall arise, to exhaustively study and impartially delineate "The Genesis of Ideas," we shall have the most interesting and important book that the race can use. And the most curious and instructive chapter in that work will be the one that deals with the origin of the Sunday notion, and its strength and persistence among the Protestant denominations, who, in everything else, are hysterically hostile to the authority and the practices of the Roman church.

FOR everybody knows that the statements made a few days ago by one of the Protestant divines who has plunged into the midst of the fray in question, to the effect that for the "observance of Sunday," we have "the practice of Christ and his apostles," and "a divine command," are absolutely erroneous. The Catholic father, of course, has the decided advantage here, and he is quick enough to seize it. In very vigorous and perfectly sound paragraphs he exposes this fallacy and brands the devotion of Protestants to Sunday as the badge of a servitude which they repudiate to the dominance of his church.

THE reverend father is perfectly correct in this statement. It is really not a question of religion at all,—this substitution of Sunday for Saturday as a day of "religious rest." It is a question of history, pure and simple. This history is studied by Protestant divines in embryo, when they are preparing for their life work, just as it is studied by those who are qualifying themselves for the Roman Catholic priesthood. About many matters in human history there are disputes; facts themselves are sometimes contended for and against with much display of learning; how admitted situations came about and who was really responsible for certain things is frequently debated with zeal and bitterness. But there is no doubt and no room for doubt, concerning this Sunday question. Catholic, Protestant and agnostic have only to be sincere, and they will speak with one voice on the subject.

THE Founder of Christianity was a Jew, and he observed the "Jewish Sabbath." The first apostles were Jews, and they did the same thing. Their converts were, in the beginning, all of their own race, and it was never suggested to them that it was obligatory or expedient that a change should be made from this ancient, established and commanded way. We have a very clear account of the expansion of the Christian cult, so as to include Gentiles as well as Jews within its fold. We know that the extent to which the newcomers were bound to conform to the requirements of the Mosaic law gave rise to some discussion. And we are able to trace, though perhaps a little obscurely, the gradual increase in the proportion of Gentile to Jewish Christians, and side by side with this increase, the gradual rejection of the "Jewish Sabbath," and the adoption of Sunday in its stead.

NOW the various stages of this process do not bother the good Roman Catholic in the least. He opens his "Labbaeus"—that monument of Jesuit industry which contains in many ponderous volumes the "decrees" of many ecclesiastical councils, some of them long since denounced as mythical by certain inquirers. And, turning to the words "dies dominicus" he gets a long list of references to search out, to discover just how and when there accumulated around Sunday that "sanctity" and "holiness" which in the days of the Master and those who surrounded him pertained to the seventh day alone. It was all the work of "the church"—"the Holy Catholic church."

AGAIN and again does the "Holy Mother" warn her children not to "Judaize" (sic) by showing external respect to the Sabbath. Penalty after penalty is laid upon those who shall fall into this heretical custom. It is evident enough from these "decrees" that a strong antipathy existed at a very early date between the "orthodox" Hebrews and the Christians. Probably the work of conversion never made very great progress among the Hebrews at any time. The Gentile Christians were particularly anxious to be distinguished in the eyes of other people from the Hebrew race at large, because there was a great aversion to these last among the population of the Roman empire, easy enough to understand from their haughty exclusiveness, and not necessarily implying any reflection on their manner of life. Hence "the church" frequently enjoins a total disregard of the Hebrew Sabbath.

BUT Protestantism knows no "Labbaeus." Its ostensible essence, its one and only excuse for existence, is the utter repudiation of "councils," general and special, and of all their works. The Word of our Lord and Saviour is its code of laws, its only authority for points of religious faith and of religious practice. Not what has "the church" desired, but what did He do and say, is the sole question with which Protestantism has any concern. And upon "this rock" does Protestantism split to pieces when "the Sunday question" is in issue. Within the compass of divine revelation, as Protestantism receives it, there is no warrant, either in language or action, for the injunction not to "Judaize" by observing the Sabbath. Gentlemen who undertake to deal with this matter from the standpoint of the Protestant pulpit simply invite disaster and reproach.

* * *

"MAN," says Macaulay, "is so inconsistent a creature that it is impossible to reason from his belief to his conduct, or from any one portion of his belief to another." This general axiom is so commonly illustrated in the daily life around us that its manifestation occasions no surprise to any observant mind. But I think it is a little remarkable to find men clinging with peculiar and conspicuous tenacity to the one article of their professed belief which gives the lie to all the rest—the insistence on which is utterly inconsistent with all their other professions, and which cuts the very foundation from under the entire fabric of their avowed faith. And this is the psychological phenomenon presented by thousands of Protestants in their position on the Sunday question.

* * *

FOR, I verily believe that there is no point of their entire theological system which these men would not sooner give up than this dogma of Roman Catholicism, that Sunday shall be substituted for the Sabbath. This badge of their servitude to Rome they flaunt in the face of the world, as if, in good sooth, they were proud of the collar that they wear. Calling upon all good men and true to unite against this enemy of American institutions, seeking to exclude the members of Rome's communion from all public positions of honor and trust; crying out in the next breath that the work of Romanism in the effacement of the Sabbath day shall be perpetuated as an "institution," and submission thereto be made compulsory on all by means of penal enactment; and declaring that beside this great issue, all that Luther and Melancthon and Calvin and Wycliffe stood for is dwarfed into insignificance! Surely, there is something anomalous here.

* * *

It must be borne in mind that the point is not the manner or way in which Sunday is to be observed. It is perfectly true that in this regard there is a great difference between Catholic practice and Protestant practice.

The chief observance exacted by the Roman church is attendance at "mass," at least once during the day. For the balance of the time, the faithful, it seems, are left pretty much to their own devices. On the other hand, most "evangelists" deem it righteous to abstain throughout the whole twenty-four hours alike from labor and from diversion. But this distinction is immaterial. *To observe, or mark out, or distinguish, the day from other days in any fashion whatsoever on religious grounds is to accept the Roman Catholic church as a religious ruler and guide—to acknowledge her supreme authority, to confess her right to command us that we shall leave undone the thing that the Master did, and do, instead, in the name of His religion, that which he never did. Thus millions of Protestants weekly pass under the yoke, and, mirabile dictu, they are proud of it!

* * *

VERY suggestive is the announcement lately made in our European dispatches that Pope Leo is studying "the arbitration question" with deep interest. The desire to pose as the arbiter of international affairs is no new thing at Rome. The popes have ever been keenly alive to the exaltation of such a position, and the hold it would give them on the minds, if not the affections, of mankind. There was a time when this position was claimed as a matter of right by the successors of St. Peter. Gerohus, a writer in the twelfth century, published a work containing a scheme for universal and perpetual purification, "as feasible certainly," says Mr. Hillam, "as some that have been planned in later times." According to this scheme, all disputes between governments were to be referred to the pope; any sovereign refusing to abide by the decision of a controversy was to be excommunicated and deposed, and every other monarch was to attack the recusant at once, under penalty of the same treatment. Later on, Innocent III. claimed that his spiritual authority included a right to decide all issues that might arise between one nation and another or between rival claimants to a throne.

* * *

THERE is comfort for the true friend of humanity in the present condition of European affairs. No matter whether "the Powers" are afraid of each other, whether each has about as much to manage as it is equal to, whether anarchism makes them shy of war, whether they dread the cost, or mistrust the practical value of the big ships they have built of late at such tremendous expense—whatever the motive, the peace of Europe is to be preserved by common consent. "So mote it be." And there is good reason to believe that this healthy state of mind will endure for some time to come, and differences, as they arise, will be settled by arbitration, instead of by an appeal to arms. But it is not likely that the Pope of Rome will ever be selected to arbitrate an international disagreement.

For only nations or the rulers of nations can be allowed to sit in judgment on the affairs of nations. It is simply unthinkable that such matters should be intrusted to the discretion of a private citizen. And, hard as it is for popes and some other people to realize the fact, the "holy father" is now, has been for many a day, and is likely to remain, a private citizen, and nothing else, so far as this world and this world's business are concerned. It may be true—and, if true, it must be a great comfort to the venerable Leo—that the hold of the papacy on the minds and hearts of its children has been rather strengthened than relaxed by the taking away of the temporal power. Perhaps its influence over personal thought—in the domain of mind—is greater than it was under the conditions of the past. But Rome is not at present a member of the family of nations to arbitrate or terrify.

* * *

THERE is another conclusive reason why the Powers should never select a pope to decide between them. Just as the Bible cannot be used in the public schools except as a sacred book, so the pope can do no public act except as pope. To recognize him as such, by charging him with the performance of a public duty, would be to pave the way for a return to mediæval conditions. Custom would, as it so often does, gradually ripen into right. Men's minds would be accustomed to the idea that there was something about the pope which peculiarly qualified him to guide their destinies, and thus the path be opened for usurpation. Let us hope, then, that papal interest in arbitration may remain purely speculative for some time at least.

Ans. J. Ringgold.

Christian Endeavor Convention at Sioux Falls, S. D.

NEVER has our city been so excited and so filled with enthusiasm as during the Christian Endeavor Convention held here August 19-23.

The sides of the streets, the show windows of all the business houses, and some of the residences, were decorated with the colors of the society—white and yellow. On every hand were seen their banners, consisting of a square flag divided in a straight line between the upper left-hand and lower right-hand corners. The lower part is yellow, the upper part white. In the upper right-hand corner is the monogram C. E., and along the dividing line were the words, Sioux Falls, and in the lower left-hand corner was the number '97.

The first meeting of the convention was held in the large Germania Hall. It was the occasion of extending the welcome of the city to the Endeavorers. President Langdale introduced the speakers. The first was Mayor

Stites, who said he welcomed them because "We believe that your society will be and is a powerful aid in the advancement of Christian thought, and the consequent promotion of the best American citizenship." Miss Mary V. Olmstead, president of the city Union, said: "To the committee of '97 is given the privilege of welcoming a gathering which claim a rearguard of 6,000 members throughout this young State. To-night the Christian Endeavor Union reaches its decennial milestone. In 1887, eight societies and 200 members; in 1897, nearly 200 societies, with a membership of 6,000."

Mr. G. F. Knappen welcomed the convention in behalf of the Epworth League. He welcomed them because "You are instruments in the hands of God in tearing down the strongholds of Satan."

Rev. T. L. Fisher, in behalf of the churches of the city, said he welcomed the convention because they stimulated patriotism; because the work of the Endeavorers was to overcome denominational names. "A lack of unity is the cause," he said, "of our inefficiency. You will bring about this unity. I welcome you because you are the bodyguard of Jesus Christ."

In his response, W. H. Mullins said: "The work of Christian Endeavor is to put patriotism into politics." "We can serve Christ in no better way than by placing good men into office." "Our object is to unite all the people of the world into one."

In their business session six resolutions were adopted—the third of these reads as follows:—

"It is with alarm that we view the increasing desecration of the Sabbath, and we would urge upon all Christian Endeavorers the necessity of keeping sacred the Sabbath to our Lord's service and of taking steps to protect the sanctity of the day and also its civil observance. We also heartily commend the action of the Sioux Falls Retail Clerks' Union in denouncing the desecration of the Sabbath."

In an out-door address, Saturday evening, on Christian Citizenship, Fred B. Smith said: "The foundation of this government rests upon the maintenance of the Christian Sabbath. Do away with the Sabbath and the Government falls." Such statements as these make it plain how a disregard of the Sunday sabbath can be construed into treason. We may then look for a fulfilment of Rev. 13:15.

Hon. H. H. Russell, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, in an address given Friday evening, urged the necessity of enforcing the "Sunday-closing law." Of this it may be said that to close saloons on Sunday is a very doubtful kind of temperance measure. I doubt if there is a saloon-keeper in this State but would rather have a Sunday-closing law on our statute books than not. He knows that his sales of liquor will simply be greater on the day before; and by closing on Sunday his nefarious business will be given the sanction of law. The scheme is altogether one to enforce the sacredness of the Sunday sabbath.

G. W. ROGERS.

Sioux Falls, Aug. 29.

Some Questions.

1. What is an "unalienable right"?
2. What is the difference between right and a right?
Has any person a right to do wrong?

Can Proper Sabbath Observance Be Enforced by Law?

LET us look at the question a moment. What is the Sabbath?—A day set apart by Jehovah for religious worship. How must it be observed? Christ in John 4:24 says, "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

First of all we want to clearly and distinctly understand that no service is acceptable to God that does not come from the heart—that is not done willingly and gladly. Now true Sabbath-keeping is something more than just to refrain from physical labor on that day in strict compliance with the letter of the law. The person who truly observes the Sabbath does so because he loves to do as God commands, and through this cheerful, willing obedience he is led to view Jehovah as he is—the Creator of the heavens and the earth and all that they contain.

But suppose a man should say, "I don't believe in God. I don't believe one day is any better than another, and therefore I see no necessity of esteeming any one day above another?" Has he not a right to this opinion? Surely he has, just as much as any one else has to believe God to be the being the Bible describes him to be.

Now suppose, in compliance with a law of the land, this same man should refrain from work on the Sabbath day—go to church and to all outward appearance act just like those who were true worshipers.

Is that heart worship? No; because he doesn't believe in it. How does the Bible say God regards that kind of service? Read Romans 14:23: "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Then Sabbath-keeping by this man, without a change of heart, would be to him sin, and "the wages of sin is death." Such a man would be pretending by his actions to believe a thing in which he had no faith, and such a person we call a hypocrite—one of the most despised of all men.

Therefore it is absolutely impossible for the civil law—which takes cognizance only of outward acts and not the thoughts and intents of the heart—to enforce true Sabbath-keeping, and when it tries to do so it can only make hypocrites.

W. E. C.

Who Made the Trouble?

"MAMA, here is a picture of a prophet and a king, and the king is saying to the prophet, 'Art thou he that troubleth Israel?' What had the prophet done to make trouble?"

Mrs. Ross thought a moment, and then said, "That must be Elijah you are thinking of; but before I answer your question, I want you to hand me the Bible, and I'll read you the prophet's answer. 'And he answered, I have not troubled Israel, but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and hast followed Baalim.'"

"O, then, it was not the prophet that made the trouble, and the king was wrong in blaming him; was he, mama?"

"Yes; it was Ahab himself that had brought the trouble on the people by forsaking God, and breaking his commandments."

"How did it bring trouble, mama?"

"In the same way that it always brings trouble for people to forsake the commandments of God. In forsaking God and his law, they cut themselves off from the source of love, as I have often told you before. The law says, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart . . . and thy neighbor as thyself.' The love of God alone will enable one to love his neighbor as himself, and make him carry out the Golden Rule that says, 'As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them.' This is the law. Ahab had forsaken this principle, and led others to do the same, until great trouble was in the land. He married a very wicked woman called Jezebel, who was an idolator. She served self, and had that idol represented in a god called Baal. Baal was the name of the sun-god. She was a sun-worshiper."

"And was it very bad to worship the sun? What harm could it do, mama, to bow down to the sun?"

"To this sun-god the people ascribed human passions, so that the sun-god was only a representative of themselves, and in reality it was self-worship. In the worship of the sun, they did the vilest kind of things, and broke every commandment of God, corrupting themselves in the name of religion. They got drunk, were gluttons, committed adultery, bore false witness, coveted, and broke the Sabbath. They went to great lengths in their wicked worship."

"But, mama, we read of people doing these same things to-day without being sun-worshipers." "Self-worship is the same thing, and the world is full of it," said Mrs. Ross.

"But how did it trouble Israel? Israel were God's people. They did not need to be troubled by all this, did they? Couldn't they do right even if others did do wrong?"

"Yes, certainly. There's nothing on earth to hinder people from doing right. But for all this wicked men and women can make it very hard and painful to do right."

"How, mama?"

"Well, Ahab and Jezebel were the king and queen of Israel, and they had set up this vile worship. They had altars all through the land, and 450 priests, with many singers, and great display. They enticed the people to come and worship Baal, and drew them away from God. Those who saw where this idolatry would lead, and who determined to be true to God, were persecuted: for Ahab and Jezebel and those who worshiped Baal were determined that the whole kingdom should join them in the worship of Baal, and they would not allow any one to worship God openly. Those who were brave enough to do so, were put to death. Jezebel tried to put all the prophets to death."

"She didn't kill Elijah, though. Couldn't she catch him?"

"Not very well; for God protected his servant. He permitted her to kill a great many others to show what was in this sun-worship, for there was persecution and death in it."

"But, mama, what did the king blame Elijah for if he had done nothing to trouble Israel?"

"Something had happened that made the king feel that Elijah was greatly to blame."

"What, mama?"

"About three years before this, Elijah had reproved the king for his wickedness. He said to him then, 'As the Lord liveth before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.'"

"Why, mama, how did Elijah dare to say that? Could he stop the rain?"

"No, not of himself; but he had read what God had said would happen to those who forsake his law. He knew that it was written in the Book of Moses that curses would come upon those who were disobedient, because there is nothing but cursing in the way of transgression. Famine, pestilence, plague, war, desolation and distress, all follow in the wake of evil. The nations who forsake God thrust aside his protecting hand, and invite the satanic hosts to hover over them, and a land like the garden of Eden becomes a wilderness under the influences of the evil one."

"When Elijah said there should be no rain, he knew he was in harmony with the truth of God, and that if he asked for the drought he would ask for that which was sure."

"And didn't it rain?"

"Not for three years and a half. Of course famine followed. People had nothing to eat, and the beasts of the field died, and great distress came upon the people."

"Ahab thought that all this happened because Elijah had shut up heaven. He was very angry, and tried to find the prophet so that he might put him to death; but God cared for him."

"But, mama, this did make it hard for the people. What good did the famine do?"

"The Bible says when the judgments of the Lord are in the land the people learn righteousness. You know, dear, when the storm broke on the sea last summer, how the people who had been swearing, smoking, reveling and talking unbelief, suddenly began to pray and to call for God to save them."

"Yes, I remember."

"So it was in this famine. The people in their anguish began to inquire why all this evil had come, and if it was because they had forsaken God? and they began to desire to go back to him who was full of blessing."

"And did they, mama?"

"Yes; you will have to read the story for yourself. God showed the poor, bewildered people by a great sign that he was the true God, and that Baal-worship was all a delusion and a wicked thing."

"And then did they get something to eat?"

"Yes. Elijah went up into Mount Carmel, and began to pray for rain. He prayed seven times."

"What did he want to pray so many times for, mama? Couldn't God hear at first? God must have known all about it anyway. I don't understand why he prayed seven times."

"Well, Charlie, prayer does not change God's mind. He knows what he will give us when we ask. But Elijah needed to pray to get his own heart and mind into the right condition to receive the promised blessing. You know sometimes mama promises you something that you ask for a great many times before she gives it to you, because she is waiting for you to get into a condition of mind or body in which it will be a blessing to you. Perhaps, if God had sent rain the first time Elijah would have been forgetful of the power of God, and thought he had a great deal to do in bringing the rain."

"Did the rain come, mama?"

"O yes. It came in great showers all over the thirsty land. When Elijah saw the first cloud he ran to Ahab, and told him to hurry home; for there was a sound of abundance of rain, and the prophet was so glad that he ran all the way to the palace before Ahab's chariot."

"I suppose the people all repented then, and praised the Lord for his blessing of rain."

"Some did return to God, but many others grew harder than ever, just as Pharaoh did in Egypt, and just as the people on the boat did when the storm was over. When Jezebel heard all that Elijah had done, she sent word to him that she would kill him, and he fled for his life, though it had been proved that he was not the one who had troubled Israel, but it was those who had forsaken God."

"Are there any troublers in Israel now, mama?"

"Yes, I am sorry to say that there are many who are substituting the traditions of men (and some of these traditions are Baal traditions), for the commandments of God, and they are much annoyed at those who love God and keep his commandments."

"But there's one thing; they can't go as far as Ahab and Jezebel went in troubling Israel."

"That is yet to be proved, my dear. But whatever others do, let us see to it that we ourselves are not making the trouble by forsaking God and his good commandments. And now while you read the story, I must go and look after dinner."

F. B.

Why We Have Rights.

God is the Creator of all beings upon the earth. But it is not merely as the Creator that God reveals himself to us in his Word and in his works. In these he reveals to us his character.

God might have made men without giving them any rights at all. He might have made them merely for his own amusement, as boys make their play men of snow, or as dolls are made for the little girls.

He might have made mere automatons,—that is, people who would have no will or choice of their own in anything that they did, but would act just as some power outside of themselves obliged them to.

Some people wonder why the Lord did not make automatons who would have been compelled to do right, instead of men and women who have the power to choose to do right. Such people seem to have no idea of the value of freedom.

The Bible tells us that "God is love." It is this that God reveals to us in his Word and in his works. This is his character. Everything that God does is prompted by his love for the beings he has made.

This is why he has given to us those unalienable rights that are spoken of in the Declaration of Independence.

God made all his creatures to be happy; so he gave them a right to life, to liberty, and to all things that they must have to make them happy. God himself never takes any of these things from us; but sometimes men take them from us, and sometimes we lose them by not caring enough for them ourselves.

If we were automatons we would never have any character. If we only did what we could not help doing, we would have no credit, nor any blame, for doing it.

We all like to have credit for doing well, and God means that we shall have credit for it. When we come to the end of this world, he is going to say, "Well done," to everyone who has done well here in this life.

It would only be ridiculous to say "Well done" to an automaton. So God gives us all freedom of choice, in order that we may have the credit of having done noble deeds of our own free will.

God has a character, and his design is that the beings he has made in his own image, shall have a character. We would not be in God's image if we had no character. What an honor it is that God has bestowed on us in making us in his own image! This is the highest proof that he does not mean us to be slaves.

God's character is love, and he wants men to have the same character that he has. Did you ever know any one of a very loving nature who did not want to be loved in return? This is the way it is with God. He is more loving than any of us, and he wants to be loved in return by all the human family.

So he wants love to be our character, the same as it is his. But if we should do right only because we had to, there would be no love in that. If you, my boy or girl, did what your father and mother wish you to do, from no choice of your own but only because you could not do differently, would they see in it any proof of your love for them? Of course not; and so we must have freedom of choice to show our love for God.

How perfect and how beautiful is God's plan for the happiness not only of himself but of all his creatures! And how strange it is, and how wicked, that anyone should interfere with this plan, and try to take away man's freedom. Yet this is just what men have been doing all the way along in the world's history since Cain killed Abel; and they are doing it still.

Men are trying to have laws made to compel other people to do right, or rather to do what they think is right, for it does not rest with man to say what is right, but only with God. One of the most common ways in which some men try to compel others to do what they think is right, is in passing laws to compel people to keep the Sabbath.

God does not want any one to be compelled to keep the Sabbath. Real Sabbath-keeping is one way in which men can show their love for God. Yes; it is one of the greatest and most important ways in which men may show that they love God. And God longs for their love, and in the highest degree deserves to have it. But when men pass laws to compel people to keep the Sabbath, they not only rob the people of their God-given freedom of choice, but they rob God himself of the love which would come to him through the free choice of people in the keeping of his holy day.

The men who make such laws do not generally realize how they are interfering with God's perfect plan and robbing him, and what a wicked thing it is. We must do what we can to enlighten them and save them from the consequences of such terrible mistakes.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy, Per Year, - - - - $1.00

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY,

Is most healthfully located. Combines religious and industrial with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year.

For further particulars and calendar, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,000 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words. Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5½ x 2½ in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most, if not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, . . . $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

UNION COLLEGE,

Founded in 1891 by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, and located at College View, a suburb of the city of Lincoln, Nebraska.

The climate is healthy and the sanitary conditions excellent.

Purpose of the College.

This College was established not merely for the purpose of teaching the sciences, but also of giving instruction in the great principles of God's Word, and the practical duties of every-day life.

Text Books.

The Bible holds the first place in the educational system, and only such text books are used as harmonize with the inspired Word.

Courses of Study.

The usual work in the classical, scientific and preparatory courses is done, and in addition special biblical courses are offered in English, German, Danish and Swedish. Those who cannot remain long in school will be permitted to select from the regular course such studies as they may be qualified to pursue.

Thorough instruction given in music, drawing, painting, stenography, book-keeping and commercial law.

Industrial Department.

An industrial department is connected with, and forms a part of, the regular college work. Each student has an opportunity of spending two hours daily in some useful physical labor under a competent instructor.

Employment for young men: Practical farming and gardening, use of tools, shoe making, tailoring, tent making, baking and dairying.

For young ladies: Domestic work, sewing, cooking, laundrying, flower culture, etc.

Expenses low. Send for catalogue.

Address,

UNION COLLEGE,

College View, Nebr.

The Stomach:

Its Disorders and How to Cure Them

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dyspepsia,
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

AMERICAN STATE PAPERS

A Book
for the Times.

A most valuable work on the subject of religious legislation in the United States, from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

It includes the various prominent acts, both State and national, relating to subjects of religion, such as Bills of Rights, Amendments, Treaties, Sunday Observance, etc. In it are found various Memorials, Petitions, and Remonstrances; House and Senate Reports on Sunday Mails; documents on "The Sphere of Civil Government," "The Rights of the Jew," "Religion in the Public Schools," "Civil Laws Against Blasphemy," "Christianity and the Common Law," "Sunday Legislation," etc., etc.; Judicial Decisions on Sunday Laws and the Bible in the Public Schools. It also contains in an appendix the provisions in the Bills of Rights of all the States, relating to the rights of conscience, and

The Sunday Laws, Complete,

OF ALL THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

There are also running footnotes all through the book, containing the comments and statements of eminent men.

368 pages. Price, best binding, $2.00, Cheap edition, $1.25.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS,
slightly damaged, offered at half price.
Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND RELIGION.

♦ ♦ ♦

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

Cloth, 378 pp., $1.00.
Paper Covers,40.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

CATHOLIC TESTIMONY.

The following tracts and leaflets are direct quotations from those high in authority in the Church of Rome, and can be relied upon as representative testimony.

From Sabbath to Sunday.

Contains, among other important testimony, Father Enright's $1,000 challenge for Bible proof of Sunday sacredness. Price, ½ cent.

Who Changed the Sabbath?

This question is disposed of by adducing evidences from Catholic sources. Price, 1½ cents.

Christian Sabbath.

A reprinted article from the Catholic Mirror, which paper is the organ of the Catholic Church in the United States. It puts forth the question "Why Do Protestants Keep Sunday?" Price, 2 cents.

A Challenge to Protestants.

A pithy little leaflet quoting some strong words from a representative Catholic priest to the Protestant world. Price, 25 cents per 100.

Rome's Arraignment of Sabbath-Breakers.

This is a report of a sermon delivered by Father O'Keefe, a Baltimore Catholic priest, in which two facts are set forth and from a Scriptural standpoint. (1) That the only Bible Sabbath is the seventh day or Saturday. (2) That for first day observance or sacredness, there is no Bible warrant. Sixteen well filled pages, 1 cent.

The Law of God as Changed by the Papacy.

A chart 5½ x 11 inches, printed on thin paper, containing the Law of God as changed by the Catholic power. This is flanked by papal assumptions and admissions, giving the whole history of the change in a nutshell. A citation is made from each quotation to its original source, making it a document of especial importance. 50 cents per 100.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

A MARVEL IN BIBLE MAKING.

Large Type S. S. Teachers' SELF-PRONOUNCING COMBINATION BIBLE.

Containing the King James and the Revised Versions on the Same Page. Showing in Simple Form all Changes, Additions and Omissions, and Enabling all Readers to See at a Glance wherein the Two Versions Differ.

Both Versions Combined Without Duplicating.

The King James Version, set in full and conforming exactly to the Oxford Teachers' Edition, and, wherever a change occurs, the letters r. v., referring to a foot-note at the bottom of the page, showing the reading as it appears in the Revised Version. Thus, in the same book, we have both the King James and the Revised Versions, complete and intact, without materially increasing the size of the volume or reducing the size of the type. Both printed together in the same column, showing the differences at a glance, and enabling the reader to practically read both at one and the same time; or, in other words, consuming in the comparative reading of the two texts not more than one-half the time required in the old way.

EITHER VERSION ALONE OR BOTH TOGETHER.

The great point of excellence in this arrangement is that while it enables one to read both Versions in almost exactly the same time, it does not mar, or in any way hinder, the reading of the King James Version alone and independently, where one does not care to refer to the revisions.

How to Read the Combination Bible.

Below is part of page 608 of our Combination Bible. The following Key shows how it is to be read:

KEY—The first RV on page 608 appears in verse 37 of the 9th chapter, before "dominion." In the King James Version the reading is "dominion over our bodies," etc. By referring to the foot-notes it will be seen that the word "dominion" is changed to "power." Hence the Revised Version reads "power over our bodies," etc.

In the 38th verse the King James reads, "because of all this;" by reference to foot of page it will be seen that the Revised Version reads, "yet for all this."

In verse 28 there is an RO, which denotes an omission. Refer to the foot-notes and "(having)" will be found. Every omission is placed in a parenthesis in the foot-notes, and the Revised Version in this instance reads, "every one that had knowledge and understanding."

Thus it is seen that the Revised Version is easily read in connection with the King James Version. The system is so simple and so easily understood that no reader finds any difficulty in comparing one version with the other.

Specimen of Type used in the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Size of Page 5 x 7 3/4 inches.

They that sealed the covenant.

NEHEMIAH, X.

The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Levites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 29 The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,

2 ^c Sēr-a-ī'ah, Āz-a-rī'ah, Jēr-e-mī'ah,

3 Pāsh'ūr, Ām-a-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah,

4 Hāt'tish, Shēb-a-nī'ah, Māl'luch,

5 Hā'rim, Mēr'e-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah,

6 Dān'iel, Gīn-nē-thon, Bā'ruch,

7 Mē-shūt'lām, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'a-mīn,

B. C. 445.

Deut. 28.

48.

2 Kin. 23. 3.

2 Chr. 29.

10; 34. 31.

Ezra 10. 3.

ch. 10. 29.

2 Heb. are at the sealing,

or, sealed.

h ch. 13. 1.

3 Heb. at the sealings,

ch. 9. 38.

g ch. 8. 9.

4 Or, the governor.

b ch. 1. 1.

c See ch. 12.

1-21.

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

30 And that we would not give ⁴ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

31 ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Jeshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nethinim,—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

The Bible Closed.

BINDING.

Imperial Seal, Tuck Edges, known as the "Divinity Circuit," Leather Lined, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges.

This is a regular

$8 Bible,

Something unique,

and a good one.

It will be mailed postpaid

on receipt of only

$4.00.

Agents Wanted.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 16, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 36.
Single Copy, 3 cents

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

No human law can add anything to the law of God.

ENFORCED idleness is never promotive of good order nor of morality.

GOVERNMENTS were made to serve men, not men to serve governments.

THE wrong side of the question always tries to make up by the use of force, what it lacks in argument.

HUMAN law cannot strengthen the moral and religious safeguards which protect society. These can be strengthened only by that which purifies the heart.

SOME persons would get along very much easier in life if the time and effort they spend in trying to "get around" the truth and evade their duty were spent in searching out the truth and living it.

EVERY individual has an unalienable right to rest on Sunday, in accordance with what may be his convictions of duty. But his right to rest on Sunday cannot be secured by taking away another person's right to work on that day. Rights do not thus conflict with each other.

GOD made men different from one another; he gave to each an individuality. But there is a power working in the world that tries to force men to act as though they were alike,—a power that sets fashions and prescribes customs for men in dressing, eating, thinking, and worshipping,—a power that has a few worldly moulds in which it would have all human thought and action run. All this is directly contrary to the plan of the Creator.

HUMAN law is powerless to stay the flood of degeneracy which is sweeping in upon the world in these last days. Human law can (to a large degree) prevent crime; but it cannot prevent that corruption of the heart which incites men to the commission of crime. There must be laws against crime; but our hope of safety must be not in legislation, but in the saving power of God given to the world in the gospel, both for society in general, and our own selves in particular.

The Science of Salvation.

FROM the history of Solomon, and of Greece and Rome, which we have reviewed, we can see why it is that the Lord did not preserve to man any of the treatises that even he himself gave upon science. Suppose that men had it all, as had Solomon, and could teach it as Solomon taught it. With the heart not surrendered to God, with the soul not saved, what good would science do them? It could not restrain them from any kind of wickedness or corruption that is in the human heart.

The sciences are not what the world needs to-day, first of all. More than all else, the heart needs to be purified, the soul needs to be saved, the whole character rebuilt, the mind transformed into the very image and glory of God, so that the life shall reflect his righteousness, to make manifest the knowledge of God alone to all the world. Though men have all that all the sciences can give, it will profit nothing without salvation; for it will be but a little while till they will have none of it at all.

There is another thing: God wants all men to think right on every subject. There are men to-day thinking on scientific subjects, but they do not think right. They get so far along that they find no place for God at all. The man without God, without the guidance of the thought, the mind, of God, is not able to think right on these subjects. And the mind is not right until it is renewed in the image of Him who created it. The mind is to be transformed, renewed. We are to have another mind altogether. Every thought is to be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ.

That is the work of salvation. It is to restore the image of God in the soul; to bring the mind where it will be but the reflection, the outshining, of the righteousness, the thought, of the living God. When that is done, and the work of God is finished in this world, in making known the knowledge of God to all people, then the Lord will open to men the whole universe for all eternity. Then all these other subjects will be open for our study, and the Lord can say to us, Go where you will, I can trust you. The wide universe is open to you. There is nothing kept back from you. It is all your own. It belongs to you. Go where you please, stay where you please, do what you please, think on whatever subject you please, delve into it as deeply as you please, you will do it rightly.

This is not at all to say that men are utterly to ignore all other sciences till we reach the other world. It is simply to say that the science of salvation is to lead in the study of all others. Has not the Lord set us an example as to what attention we should pay to these things, and what use we are to make of them? What is the purpose of reading and studying upon the other sciences?—That these may help us better to understand and to teach the things of the science of salvation, than we could do without that knowledge. That is the use made of them in the Bible. By this the Lord shows us that the science of salvation must take the lead of all the other sciences known in the universe.

It must take the lead of all others in this world, and when we get into that other world it will still take the lead even there. For “the cross of Christ will be the science and the song of the redeemed throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity.”

When the Lord has shown how absolutely vain is all science, all learning of all kinds without his salvation, then we say again, What can he do for men if these things which he has set before the world will not instruct them that that is not the way to take? If men will not be instructed by these things to take the right way, to allow that God’s science is the chief, and that what he knows is the best, then how can mankind hope to escape the evil that has come upon all these that have gone before?

The science of God’s salvation is the one thing for men to know, first of all; that it may lead us, guide us, balance us, and hold us everywhere in all things, and against all things evil. And it will do all this. That is the blessed truth:—

“Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ.” Eph. 3:8, 9.

What is that mystery of God?—“Christ in you, the hope of glory.” Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God, the gospel, the power of God unto salvation—that is the mystery of God; that is the science of salvation. That is the scientific truth, around which all other sciences center. That power of God unto salvation every man must have to hold him back from the evil that is in him. The evil that is born in every man will carry him to perdition, in spite of all science, all literature, all art, all religion, that the world can furnish, or that it ever could furnish, unless he lays hold upon the power of God unto salvation, which comes to men by faith of Jesus Christ.

Without that power in the heart, even the science which God taught—to say nothing of the literature, the art, the religion, and all that the heathen taught—is impotent to hold back man from sinning. Without that, every vestige of evil that is in a man will show itself, in spite of all the science that he can ever know.

The mystery of God, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory; Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God; Christ and him crucified—that alone, that all in all, that over all, in all, through all, now and through eternity,—that is the science of salvation, the chief of all sciences. That is the science which leads all other sciences, which rightly takes precedence of all, and which must guide in the study of all. Let it be so with all forever.

Then let the Lord by his Spirit so draw us to himself; let the heart be so opened to that power, to the fellowship of that mystery, to the Spirit of God, that he may implant there Jesus Christ, his grace and his virtue. And as we hold our hearts open to him always, and to none but him, as a flower to the sun, we shall obtain in all its fullness, his righteousness, his power, his salvation, his mercy, his truth, his joy, his gladness, his peace—O, and his eternal life!

Religious Controversy.

For several years a controversy has been in progress in London, Eng., over the question of teaching religion in the Board (or public) schools. A large party composed of adherents of the Established church demand that religious instruction be given the young pupils in the schools, and a spokesman for this party has recently laid down the proposition that “no instruction is worthy the name of education unless it rests upon religious faith, influencing character by religious motives, and regulating and restraining conduct by religious sanctions.” If the church party wins in the contest, the basis of the religious instruction given is to be, the Bible, the Lord’s Prayer, and the Apostles’ Creed.

The contest is said to be raging now with great bitterness, and people in this country should take warning from such object lessons and carefully avoid all ground for such unhappy controversy here. Religious teaching cannot be put upon a par with the teaching of arithmetic or geography. All true religion is taught by the Word of God and the Holy Spirit.

A VICTORY has been scored at Cleveland by the church party who are working to secure Sunday observance by law. On August 31, Judge Neff granted a temporary injunction against Sunday ball playing in that city, and this is regarded as a fatal blow to Sunday sport there.

Nations and War.

BY T. R. WILLIAMSON.

WHY is it that the very words "nation" and "war" seem almost to be synonymous terms? No sooner does a feeble State begin to push its puny head up into political air and to struggle for a breathing space and standing room, but it must strive with competitors for a bare existence. There seems to be an idea abroad that there is not room enough for any State, whether it be large or small, to live within its own borders.

A province becomes a duchy, the duchy gathers an army and forthwith expands into a State of power and pretensions. Its ruler audaciously robs a contiguous realm of part of that realm's territory and fights through a term of years for possession of his new acquirement, and thus a powerful kingdom is established, a covetous eye is cast over a mass of adjoining States, they are annexed with their consent more or less forced, and the kingdom has become an empire, and the end is not yet; the empire reaches after more and still more possessions; it has become one of a family of empires, each wanting the earth, and every step of the history of each of those countries has been a war.

This is very like the story of the growth of every important nation in the world; war, war; either threatened or actual, upon any or upon no provocation. Look in any direction we may and each independent State appears like a gigantic individual whose face wears a continuous scowl. The ugly look is sometimes thinly wreathed with smiles, but no one is deceived thereby; the smiles are those of one whose both hands are armed and whose intentions are known to be hostile.

The constant, constant strife and rivalry for power, place, preferment, employment, wages, upon the part of human beings, is seen in magnified proportions and more forbidding aspect in the case of nations. For a nation to entirely disarm is to invite encroachment or revolution.

When an individual refuses to carry weapons, to have hem in the house, or to resent affronts and injuries; when meekness is made an attribute to the character, it seems as if all surroundings become hostile, and octopus tentacles of ill will reach toward the defenceless seemingly from every quarter; and a nation living with peaceful intentions toward its own and other peoples, unarmed and following only the pursuits of peace, with no menace in its looks and naught but friendliness in its life, would perish from the face of the earth before the covetous propensities of the national beasts of prey around it. Such a nation in this world is impossible except it be a scattered people as the Christian nation, the isolated, earth-strewn Israel of God.

The King of such a people, breathing peace to all, could not live upon earth. He was crucified because he was of a loving and a peaceful nature. Peace is not the natural condition here, nor is it permanently desired by the world's people. Nations are armed for battle and desire to show their powers.

But the increase of Christ's government "shall be peace as long as the moon endureth."

Tallmadge, Ohio.

"Faith Cure."

It seems evident that the boasted enlightenment and progress of the nineteenth century has done little if anything to free the minds of the masses of the people from superstition. For never, apparently, were there so many bogus "healers" in the country claiming to exercise divine power, as there are to day; and all seem to be doing a thriving business.

The term "faith cure" is commonly applied to the work of these frauds, about which there is, in strict truth, neither faith nor cure. The only "faith" that is present in such cases is a blind confidence in the powers of the "healer," and the only cure that follows is a product of the imagination or of the unseen spiritual agencies of evil.

There is a true faith cure; and its existence is argued by the presence of that which is counterfeit. Not only this, but that we have reached a time when it is to be especially manifested, is indicated unmistakably by the marked revival of superstition which is seen in the land to-day. It is the devil's plan to flood the world with counterfeit imitations of that which is genuine, in order that people may be deceived and accept the false for the true.

What, then, is true faith cure? The answer is simple. It is the power of God manifested in the healing of disease through faith. And what is faith? Is it a mere blind confidence in somebody? Is it something devoid of reason? No; certainly not. There is nothing more reasonable than to believe in the power of God.

We see the manifestations of God's power on every hand. What is it that causes life and growth in all the world around us? It is not our power; no, nor the power of any man nor of any government. Is it then power that creates itself? To believe this requires the credulity of a "freethinker." If power could create itself, the problem of a "perpetual motion" would have been solved long ago. If nothing could create something, could not man, who is much more than nothing, create something? Yet he cannot create the very lowest and simplest form of life.

Faith is the characteristic of the Christian. The Christian knows God, for he has experienced the power of God in making him a new being—giving him a new creation. He has experienced crucifixion and death of the "old man"—his former self—with Jesus Christ, and with Christ he has been raised up and exalted to heavenly places, and experiences the divine life working in him, which is Christ living in him. When Christ lives in an individual, that individual cannot be ignorant of him. He is in the closest companionship with Christ, and can only look with pitying amazement upon the one who would try to persuade him that Christ does not exist.

Thus knowing the Lord, knowing God's companionship and power in his own experience daily, and seeing God's power in all the forms of life and growth around him, is it unreasonable that he should believe in that power? Would anything be more unreasonable in him than that, knowing this, he should refuse to believe in that power?

The Christian believes that He who created all things and maintains them in life, can heal the sick of all diseases. This is only reasonable in the highest degree. He believes that God's Word is true; and finding that Word full of gracious invitations to ask of his heavenly Father for that aid which it is beyond his own power to supply, for the healing of both body and soul, he simply takes God at his word, and thus experiences true faith cure. It is the same power, and the same faith, whether it be for the healing of the body, or of the soul. The soul of the unregenerate man is sick unto death; and that which is called conversion, is its healing,—a true instance of faith cure; for it must all come through faith.

Faith being thus in the highest degree reasonable, is the direct opposite of superstition. The two cannot go together. The superstitious person knows nothing of true faith, and the man of faith is never superstitious. And wherever faith is not, there superstition has access. Faith, not education, is the safeguard against superstition. Faith, indeed, is itself an avenue to the highest education,—the knowledge of God. But that education which is without God, prepares no one to detect spiritual error when it appears in the form of truth. And this is abundantly proven by the ease with which "educated" people fall victims to the "faith cure" "Christian science," and kindred delusions of the times.

Faith cure—the genuine—is all right; it is the only salvation for the race, or for any individual. And therefore it is of the utmost importance to each individual that he should obtain the genuine faith cure, and no counterfeit; for it is something each one must obtain for himself.

Truth and Freedom.

JESUS said to the Jews (and the words apply equally to all people), "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

In this, as in everything else that Jesus said and did, he was revealing the mind of God, his Father; for he came to manifest his Father to the world. It was the Father who spoke through Christ, in all that Christ said.

God wants every person to know the truth, and he wants them to know it in order that they may be free. God has no use for slaves. Only in freedom can an individual serve him. The service of God is to love God and do what he has commanded because we love him and our fellow creatures. In love there can be no slavery.

The truth of God delivers the soul from bondage. And no chains or fetters that can be forged by man can shut out this truth from the soul. God's truth breaks the bonds of a perverse disposition, of evil habits, of fear, and of everything that can hold back the soul from the pathway of righteousness that leads to eternal life.

If we would be free we must know "the truth." But what is this? The answer is found in the words of Jesus, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." We must know "the truth as it is in Jesus." Is this a narrow view of truth? No, indeed; it is the broadest view of truth, the only complete view of truth that can be had.

He who sees not Christ in his investigation of truth, sees not enough of the truth to escape falling into many delusions concerning it.

God wants all persons to serve him; not for his good, but for their good—in order that they may realize all the good and the happiness that life can contain. And to serve him they must be free; no forced service can be acceptable to him. No plan to force men to serve him can for a moment have his approval.

And to be free, men must know the truth,—which is to know him who is "the truth"—"Christ, the wisdom of God and the power of God." In the spiritual life—which is the true life—knowledge is not power, save as it is the knowledge of Christ as the power of God unto salvation. He who holds this knowledge, and only he, has truth and freedom.

Overlooking Parental Duty.

THE Union Signal, of August 26, says that where there is a tendency in the denominational school to leave the spiritual development of the young people under their care entirely to the church, the result is, invariably, that there has sprung up in the college itself a worldly spirit utterly destructive of all spiritual growth. This shows that the moral training of the youth must not be left to the church; and it might just as truthfully have been added, that where the moral training of the youth is left to the schools and colleges, the same spirit destructive of spiritual growth generally takes possession of the pupils.

Parents and guardians must do the first and most important work in religious training. The denominational school and the church can at best do little more than supplement the work that is done in the home.²

THE press reports contain an account of a recent case in England against the London Times, under the old law of 1781, for advertising a Sunday concert contrary to the act. The judge avoided the issue by a legal subterfuge, ruling that the statute had not been violated inasmuch as "admission" to the concert was free, although it was a fact that the seats had been previously paid for. Such an evident disinclination to enforce these antiquated religious statutes, in the land of their origin, ought to be brought to the attention of Canadian and American judges who are so zealous in the enforcement of these laws which they have derived from England.

A Conversation.

BY J. E. EVANS.

MR. A. TO MR. B.—How do you regard this subject of religious legislation, or Church and State?

MR. B.—I have always been opposed to a union of Church and State in America.

MR. A.—You do not, then, believe in Sunday laws?

MR. B.—I certainly do. We must legislate for the masses, to secure the laborer against the mercenary employer. If we do not, the working class will have no Sabbath, and will be compelled to work seven days in the week.

MR. A.—But suppose a firm has in its employ those who keep the seventh and those who observe the first day of the week as the Sabbath, which day shall be selected as the day for rest?

MR. B.—We must legislate in favor of the greatest number.

MR. A.—The majority might be those who observe the Sabbath of the fourth commandment.

MR. B.—It does not make any difference which day we keep. If you count from Monday Sunday will be the seventh.

MR. A.—Suppose a man has seven sons, and when he dies he makes his will to the effect that his first son shall have $500, and each of the first six sons are to have the same amount, but the seventh son shall have $1,000. Now do you think that the first son could contest the will in court, saying that he was the seventh? They would say, You are not the seventh, but the first-born. But he would say, "That depends on where you begin to count." Again, we read in the Word of God that Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of the second coming of Christ. Would it be possible to make Adam the seventh?

MR. B.—We must have one day in common, when all can unite in worshiping God. The comfort and wish of the majority must be considered. If we allow each person to select his own day of rest, society would be broken up and there would be no order.

MR. A.—Then if this nation should go through the experience that France did at one time, and the majority should decree that we should have no Sabbath, I suppose you would submit gracefully.

MR. B.—We do not ask that those who keep the seventh day shall be compelled to work on that day, but that they shall not work on the first day.

MR. A.—The poor man has a large family to provide for, and it takes all that he can earn during the six days to secure for them the necessities of life. He conscientiously believes that he should observe the seventh day as the Sabbath; but he must submit to the wish of the majority, and be robbed of one seventh of his income, notwithstanding he has the God-given right to work six days. Do you think that is just?

MR. B.—This is a Christian nation, and I suppose he would have to abide by the will of the majority, or go where he could keep whatever day he chose.

MR. A.—We speak of the Christian religion because it is the religion of Christ. But when the people desired to make him a temporal king, he declared plainly, "My kingdom is not of this world." His people are said to be pilgrims and strangers on the earth, chosen out of the world, and that they seek a country. If all were Christians it could only be a nation of Christians. The majority are not Christians. A large portion of those who profess to be Christians, are Catholics, and they tell you that this is a Catholic Christian nation. Of course, it would have to be decided who are Christians, and all who could not pass the examination would have to find some other place or suffer death. This is not at all imaginary. It has already been worked out. Christian, is Christ-like; but do statistics indicate that this is a Christ-like nation?

MR. B.—If men will not do what is right of themselves they should be compelled by the law. Look at Great Britain. The union of Church and State has been a great blessing to that country, and has made it what it is.

MR. A.—I suppose you are an American citizen, and as such you believe in the principles underlying the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

MR. B.—Yes, sir.

MR. A.—Do they not both say, that religion or the duty that we owe to our Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence, and therefore all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience? George Washington said, "The Government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion." And General Grant believed that Church and State should be kept forever separate.

Those who founded this nation came here to secure "a new order of things." The old order was a union of Church and State, which brought about the persecution from which they fled. Still they persecuted one another, and that spirit lingered until "the times of '76." Then the laws of this Republic were based upon principles which would, if faithfully followed, have made further persecution impossible. Prior to this the Baptists and the Quakers experienced the evil results of the unholy alliance of the religious with the civil power. Then how can you believe that the union of Church and State has been a great blessing to Great Britain?

Mr. B.—What is good in one country may not be good in another. The same principle holds good in regard to eating and drinking. What agrees with one may not agree with another at all. We are commanded to obey the powers that be.

Mr. A.—But the powers that be differ greatly in their requirements, and the laws of a country are continually changing. Therefore the logic of your argument leads you to the position that whatever is, is right. But you will not be ready to admit this. The Saviour made this point clear when he said, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." There are certain duties that we owe to God alone. These are moral or religious duties. The duties we owe the civil government are purely civil. The moral law is the sum of all morality, and God alone can enforce it, for it takes cognizance of the thoughts and intents of the heart. The Inquisition was the logical result of man taking the place of God.

Mr. B.—Are we not told to submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake?

Mr. A.—Yes. But a little further on in the same chapter we read, "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully." And you will see that we could not endure anything wrongfully for conscience' sake if we submitted to every ordinance that man might consider it his duty to enforce. The experience of those who had Daniel put into the lions' den, and of those who caused the three faithful Hebrews to be cast into the heated furnace, ought to teach us the folly of trying to regulate religion by State law. Moreover, the angel that liberated the imprisoned disciples commanded them to go and do the very thing which the civil authorities had forbidden. To preach Christ a king was contrary to all Roman law, yet when they were again arrested Peter said, "We ought to obey God rather than men."

New Orleans, La.

The True Recognition of God.

"Southern Sentinel," Melbourne, Aus.

God is worthy of the grateful recognition of every intelligence in the universe. We believe, too, that there are proper lines on which we should seek to express and secure such recognition. But we do not believe that the formal recognition of God in civil and political compacts is the proper means for the expression of such recognition.

That is not the kind of recognition God asks. It is not the kind that will honor him. Nor is it the kind that will benefit the nation.

The recognition that God asks of men is personal faith in Him and obedience to His just requirements. To recognize God truly means to recognize the sacred rights He has conferred upon men. The only true governmental recognition of God that can be made is for the government to recognize the teachings of Christ regarding the total separation of Church and State, and to frame such laws as will safeguard the rights and liberties of all its citizens.

Church and State in Australia.

THE CHURCH BESIEGING THE COLONIAL PARLIAMENTS.

BY W. A. COLCORD.

HAVING failed to secure from the Federal Convention the religious declaration in the Constitution which they desired, the leaders in this movement now purpose to accomplish through the Colonial Parliaments what they failed to get in the convention. Says Professor Rentoul, of Melbourne:—

"Let the churches unite to see that this great blunder is not perpetuated. . . . Let them bombard Parliament."—Melbourne Argus, May 7.

From this it will be seen that this whole movement is a church affair, led on by certain church leaders. That the latter do not take their defeat in the convention with the best grace is evident from a further statement by the same gentleman:—

"The convention, by their refusal, have simply forced upon us, needlessly, the labor and expense of having this good thing effected through the respective colonial legislatures."—Melbourne Age, April 26.

But this being the only course left to secure what they demand, they purpose pursuing it. Their plan is to enter the arena of politics, turn the churches into political machines, and "bombard Parliament." That none may think we are overstating matters, we will give a few further proofs.

At a meeting of the commission of the Presbyterian Assembly, of Victoria, held May 6, the "Public Questions Committee" submitted a report in which they say:—

"The committee ask the commission's special authority to use all efforts to secure concerted action on the part of the various churches in the respective colonies of Australia and Tasmania, so that the various Parliaments shall be effectively moved to decide in favor of an amendment in the preamble of the Constitution, giving effect to the people's wish that there should be recognition of God as Ruler of nations and Source of righteous law."—The Argus, May 7.

The next day the Assembly passed the following motion:—

"That in view of the coming general elections, ministers be instructed to press upon the people the imperative duty of supporting only such candidates as will vote for Scripture instruction in the State schools, and such as promise to maintain the recognition of God in the Constitution of the proposed Commonwealth."—The Age, May 7.

And the moderator of the same Assembly, in the course of an address delivered at a meeting of the Presbyterian Elders' Association, held in Melbourne, May 5.—

"Reviewed the history and the special influence of the Presbyterian church, and stated that its present great duty was to see that modern democracy was not an unchristian and godless democracy."—The Age, May 6.

The South Australian Anglican Synod is likewise bent on doing the same thing, as the following will show:—

"At the meeting of the Anglican Synod to-day, the standing committee was instructed to take any steps necessary to secure the recognition of divine providence and the belief therein as the best foundation of the nation's well-being in the proposed Federal Constitution before its final adoption."—The Argus, May 7.

And the Sydney Council of Churches has passed the following resolution:—

"It is hereby resolved that a petition be prepared and presented to Parliament (to be signed by the chairman on behalf of the Council), urging the insertion of the said clause before the Constitution is adopted by the legislature of this colony."—Adelaide Daily Telegraph, April 30.

These are sufficient to show the plans that are being laid, and the steps that are being taken, to unite religion and the State in Australia.

Enforcing the Sunday Law.

"Bible Echo," Melbourne, Aus., July 19, 1897.

This week we have additional evidence that the Council of Churches is a religio-political organization whose chief aim is to unite Church and State and enforce religious dogmas, chiefly the Sunday institution, on the people by law. The following is from the Sydney Morning Herald, of July 5:—

"As a result of the recent deputation from the Council of Churches to the colonial secretary, the inspector-general of police (Mr. Fosbery) forwarded instructions to heads of the police in the eastern suburbs that the sabbath observance law must be strictly obeyed by all shopkeepers. Yesterday the police were very busy all the morning in notifying the various shopkeepers of the fact. The instructions to the police are that the law is to be rigidly enforced."

Here is proof of what the church leaders are after in their vociferous clamors for what they are pleased to call a "recognition of God in the Constitution." They simply want a constitutional basis for enforcing religious observances on the people by law. They want laws to force upon men the observance of a day which God has never commanded them to observe. This is what they mean by recognizing and honoring God.

Let those who fear God and desire to keep His law, have nothing to do with this movement. It is not Christian. Christ forces no one to serve him, neither has he commanded men to keep Sunday in opposition to the law of God, which commands them to keep holy the seventh day. Christ kept the Father's law and taught others to keep it, and the true followers of Christ will do the same.

Papal Infallibility.

"Herald and Presbyter," August 11.

A ROMISH priest preached on this subject a few sabbaths ago. His method of proof was as follows:—

"The church cannot err in proclaiming doctrines. There can be no new dogmas of any kind whatsoever. The doctrines taught are those given to the church by Christ himself. 'Go therefore, teach ye all nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, behold, I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world.' Matt. 28: 19, 20.

"Here we have our Lord giving to his apostles the power given to him from on high. In delegating that power he strengthens it by telling them that he is with them for all time. So there is no danger that they will fail. They will be infallible because God is there with them to help them to accomplish their duty. Therefore, infallibility is a gift of God to St. Peter and his successors."

Christ's address quoted from Matthew was not to Peter, but to the eleven disciples (see verse 16). As it was physically impossible that the eleven should teach all nations, the command was evidently given, not to them only as individuals, but to all who should believe on him through their word. John 17:20. What he commanded them he inspired the evangelists to record. The infallibility is in the Scriptures, which were written for our instruction. But if it was in the apostles, as this man claims, what right has he to take ten from eleven, leaving one as the only infallible apostle, with authority to transmit his exclusive prerogative to a long line of successors, some of whom were notoriously wicked? No wonder that Rome withholds the Scriptures from the people. If they could read that twenty-eighth chapter of Matthew for themselves, they would see that Christ has no idea of giving Peter any exclusive position or authority. If Peter was to be his vicegerent, if the other ten and all the rest of the "five hundred" were to look up to Peter as their sole and infallible leader, that was the time for our Lord to say so, and to emphasize the duty of obedience to the head of the church.

THE "American party," as it has just christened itself, has assembled fifty delegates, representing nine States and one territory, in convention at St. Louis, and has permanently organized for open political work. Of course its declaration of faith embodies a strong attack on the Democratic and Republican parties, both of which are denounced as "false to the doctrines and principles of equality and a standing menace to popular government." Language of this sort is usually the accompaniment of the birth of a new political organization. Such a body must give some raison d'être. If the political future of the United States be safe in the hands of either of the two great parties who now contend for its mastery, the newcomer is an intruder, unnecessary and undesirable.

BUT our country has gotten along with substantially the same politics, and same party representatives of politics, for more than a century, and gotten along fairly well. Every candid man acknowledges that the purest patriotism is compatible with either the tendency to minimize Federal authority for which Democracy stands, or the disposition to rely rather on the government of Washington than on the States for the promotion of the general welfare and happiness of the people, which is the inspiring spirit of Republicanism. So long as the battle between these two great conceptions is honestly waged, the citizens are safe. Nor is there any serious danger that the pendulum will swing too far in either direction, while the people are true to themselves. Centralization reached its climax just after the civil war. A country which so triumphantly emerged from the unprecedented conditions of "reconstruction," with its institutions substantially unimpaired, and throttled "Caesarism" as it did secession, may count with confidence on its ability to take care of itself.

AND the waging of this eternal war between the forces of local self-government and the forces of centralization to which Democracy and Republicanism are devoted is the one great business of Federal politics. All the important legitimate considerations which enter therein are fairly comprehended in this issue. Other matters are of detail—eddies on the surface, giving no indication of the general course of either stream, possessing but transient interest, passing and coming with no effect of permanent consequence on the progress of events.

IF, then, the two great organizations really exhaust the possibilities of our national political life, why a new party? Is it gotten up to deal with a matter not legitimately within the scope of free American politics? Does it represent an un-American idea which it proposes to carry into effect by un-American methods? There is a hostility to "aliens" discernible in its platform which is strongly suggestive of this notion, and it appears to be held by some who profess to be cognizant of the facts. "The separation of Church and State" is among the things which are called for. But will the new party stand up manfully and sincerely for any such thing? Will it, for instance, denounce the Sunday laws, the employment of public chaplains, the exemption of church property from taxation, the reading of the Bible in the public schools, and all similar outward and visible signs of the inward and intimate union of Church and State which exists in this country to-day?

THE States are the places to begin this work. Create a healthy rational public opinion in the respective States, so that their statutes and their customs may reflect the absolute and unqualified acceptance of the American doctrine of separation between Church and State, and the few instances where this principle is violated in the course of our Federal administration will soon disappear of themselves. A more sublime mission for any man or set of men to embark in could not well be conceived. I wish I could believe that there is a prospect of its being assumed by disinterested patriots in every county and township of the land. But I see no reason for believing that the St. Louis movement indicates anything of the sort.

ONE does not expect uniform scientific accuracy in the utterances of an orator whose main object is to "make a point" for or against some man or thing. Nor is the language of avowed eulogy to be sifted and criticised after the method applicable to the definitions of mathematics. And, finally, a bishop may fairly claim some license in the way of hyperbole, which would be generally denied to a mere layman. But these general propositions, like most other human words, are subject to some limitation.

I AM moved to the above remark by the fact that at several law school commencements recently held, the chief speaker has seen fit to quote, with apparent or express approval, the famous assertion of good old Bishop Hooker to the effect that law "has her seat in the bosom of God." Taken in connection with the occasions mentioned, this oft quoted statement is either meaningless, or utterly false, as well as absurd and blasphemous.

THERE is law which all Christian people regard as the expression of Deity's will—it is made up of moral precepts, or a law enjoined on the race, and of physical processes, or a law observed and formulated by the men of science. All the operations of nature that we see going on daily around us, Christians refer to the Maker and Director of the universe. They also believe that His will has been expressed for their guidance, as well as in the course of the flying bullet, or the running of the rivers. But neither the moral nor the physical law is within the purview of a lecture course at a law school. And any other religious dogma has as much application and relevancy to the commencement exercises of such an institution as this statement of Bishop Hooker's.

* * *

On the other hand, applied to the law which lawyers have to deal with, and which the students thus addressed have been investigating, the language of Bishop Hooker is preposterous and wicked. All of this law, from the inception of social development to the highest and most complex system of civilization, is the work of men's hands, and of their hands alone. There is nothing whatsoever sacred, or divine anywhere at all in or about it. It arose from human necessity, just as clothing is adapted to our natural wants. But a suit of clothing may just as fairly and reverentially be said to owe its origin to Deity as any human law, "common" or "statute."

* * *

"GOVERNMENT" is a machine, likewise, of human construction alone. It is a means or way devised by men for the enforcement and application of the common will known as "the law." It has no sanctity, nor peculiar claim to unwilling respect, save in so far as it can coerce. No individual is under any obligation to surrender his conscience to its decrees. On the other hand, its action adds nothing whatever to an existing moral obligation. Right and wrong are matters of that law which has its seat in the bosom of Deity. Human law knows nothing, can, from its very nature and its origin, know nothing about either.

* * *

THESE fundamental truths cannot be repeated too often, or insisted upon too strenuously, while Bishop Hooker's words are quoted and indorsed. It is treason to American institutions for any speaker to instill into the minds of our young men the subtle poison of this idea that there is something sacred about human law and human governmental machinery. Thus are they induced to receive the old conception of the divine right of kings in a new form, and one more pernicious and demoralizing than it ever assumed in the worst days of its practical application. For to believe in the divine mission of the community is a mental slavery infinitely more deplorable and hapless than to worship at one man's feet, as the Heavenly-appointed ruler of our lives.

* * *

THESE young aspirants for the bar ought rightly to be told that the subject of their studies is not only destitute of any trace of divine authority, or sanction, or character, but that it is a piece of human patchwork, which, in its glaring inconsistencies, its false assumptions and ridiculous requirements, its cast-iron conservatism, its cumbrous methods, its lethargic movements, its extravagant cost, and in many other regards, is a standing reproach to those that made it, and the most serious reflection on human intelligence that can be found. The more intelligent among them discover all this before they come to receive their diplomas. What is the use of inflicting cant upon them?

* * *

EVERY young attorney should shake off all awe of this human legislation and practice, and recognizing its manifold imperfections and flaws, should make it a part of his life-work to reform it as much as he may. The opportunities to know where the evils lie, and to intelligently work for their mitigation, are given to lawyers as they are given to no other men in the land. It is unfortunate that those best qualified to help the progress of the race in this matter should be rather inclined to accept the situation as they find it, than to bestir themselves for the adoption of better things. The aim of the "commencement orator," it seems to me, should be to counteract this tendency as much as possible, and to set the young practitioners hot upon the trail of abuses, with a zealous ambition to reform them.

* * *

At this writing it seems assured that the New Orleans bishopric of the Roman Catholic church, recently rendered vacant by death, will go to the celebrated Bishop Keane, erstwhile of the Catholic University at Washington. Public attention is thus called anew to the strange controversy which has for some time been going on in the Catholic church of this country between the "liberal" and what would be called in Europe the "ultramontane" wings of the priesthood. The Vatican has long taken a deep interest in her United States affairs. She seems at times to cherish a hope that, should her European influence gradually slip away from her, the loss will be more than compensated by accessions on this side of the water.

* * *

How to make the most of her chances here is the disputed problem with her leaders. Some years ago we had what was called the "Cahensley movement." This resulted from a suggestion by a foreign prelate that immigrants to this country should be always served by a priest of their own nationality—thus preserving, as far as possible for the church, the distinctions of race prejudices and race customs which our naturalized citizens bring with them from their various native lands. The best thought of the Roman church prevailed against this innovation.

BUT a little while afterwards the cry arose that teachings of a "broad" and liberal sort were undermining the strength of the church in the United States, and weakening the hold of the priesthood on the minds and hearts of their charges. This was the state of affairs which Cardinal Satolli was invested with the duty of inquiring into and reporting upon. One of the results of the cardinal's inquiries was the removal of Bishop Keane from his place at the Washington University and his call to Rome, where, we are told, he was awarded a comfortable position on the "staff" of Pope Leo. It was generally supposed that this was the last to be seen of the too-liberal bishop in our country. Now, Satolli has gone back to Italy, and Bishop Keane returns to us, and is made the incumbent of one of the most important sees in the country. The change probably marks a reversal, or, at any rate, an important modification of the strict policy favored by Satolli. Roman diplomacy is always astute, and nowhere are the signs of the times more carefully studied than in the ancient palace on the banks of the Tiber. Concessions to the spirit of liberty that prevails in the United States are now in order. These may produce no rupture or schism in the church, but will they really strengthen it? Is there any alchemy of mortal mind or thought that can fuse together the doctrines of liberty and infallibility?

Geo. T. Ringgold.

Coal Miners Shot Down.

AS WE go to press the newspapers are full of the account of the shooting down of nearly one hundred unarmed Hungarian miners at Hazleton, Pa., by Sheriff Martin and thirty-eight deputies. It seems that the miners were marching along the highway from one mine to another when they were intercepted by the sheriff, who ordered the company to disperse, and upon refusing to do so, and showing signs of ignoring his word, orders were given to fire, which was done with the above results. It is reported that all but five of the dead and wounded were shot in the back, which would indicate that much of the firing was done after they had started to flee away. The particulars are too meager to express an opinion as to the merits of the case.

We believe in upholding the majesty of righteous laws at any cost, but at the same time we are free to say that our sympathies are with the struggling miners who through the greed of soulless corporations are in many cases reduced to starvation's very door. It is occurrences like these, likely to happen any day, that are filling men's hearts with fear, for they can see in them the precursor of a coming storm the like of which the world has never known. It is but a fulfillment of the prophecy of James 5.

Why George Didn't Go Fishing.

"HELLO, George; say, don't you want to go fishing to-morrow?"

George Sellers, the person thus addressed, was a youth whom Father Time had just ushered into the 'teens. At the sound of a familiar voice he looked up from the paper he had been reading, upon the front porch of his home, and saw his young playmate, Fred Atkins, looking at him from the roadway a few rods distant.

"Yes," he said, in reply to the query that had reached him, "I'd like to go well enough, but"—

"Well, come on and go," said Fred. "My brother Will got home from college this morning, and we're going to the lake to-morrow, and I know where there's some fine fishing."

"Well, I'd like to," said George, rather slowly, "but to-morrow's Sunday, you know, and my pa wouldn't let me go."

"Why, is that so? I thought he worked on Sunday himself," was Fred's reply.

"So he does; but he says I've got to keep Sunday, and that he would keep it if it wasn't for losing his job. They had a meeting of some kind in town the other night that pa went to, and he says they're going to have a law passed to make everybody keep Sunday; and then he's going to keep it."

"Can't he keep Sunday if he wants to without having a law to make him do it?" queried Fred, in a tone of surprise.

"Well, he don't think so, I guess," answered George. "He says he can't afford to lose his job, so he can't keep Sunday till they have a law to make everybody stop work Sunday, so that nobody will lose their jobs."

"What makes him think he ought to keep Sunday, anyway? Does he read it out of the Bible?"

"No; I never heard him read anything like that out of the Bible; but he said when he got home from that meeting he went to, that the man who spoke told them that Jesus Christ kept Sunday. He had a saw there like carpenters use, and he held it up and said it was the saw that Christ laid down every Saturday night."

Fred laughed. "That's a likely story; I don't believe he had any saw that Christ used, any more'n he had a piece of Noah's ark."

"Well, I don't know as he said that, exactly, but he made pa think so, and a lot of others, I guess. It was the first time they had ever been to such a meeting."

"How did he know that Christ worked on Saturday?" asked Fred. "Why," he continued, after a moment's pause, "I heard my Sunday-school teacher say that Christ's parents were Jews, and if that's so they must have kept Saturday and Christ must have kept it too."

"Yes, that's so," commented George.

"What else did he say?"

"Oh, I don't know," said George, "I didn't listen to all pa said about it. Oh yes," he added, with a sudden recollection, "pa said he told them he never heard of anybody gettin' poor on account of keepin' Sunday."

"Then I don't see what he wants of a Sunday law, or what the people want of it, if folks who want to keep Sunday can get along all right without it," observed Fred. "If the Lord wants people to keep Sunday can't he take care of them when they do it?"

"I should think so," said George; "ma says the Lord takes care of everybody, and if he takes care of people when they're doing wrong, I should think he'd take care of them when they do as he wants them to."

"If your pa believes this, what makes him afraid to begin keepin' Sunday right now," Fred ventured.

"I don't know," George answered, reflectively, "unless it's because he isn't sure God wants him or anyone to keep Sunday. He was lookin' in the Bible the other evening, turnin' over the leaves and hunting for something that he couldn't find, and after a while he asked ma how the preachers knew that Sunday was the Sabbath, anyway. And ma she said she didn't know, but she guessed it must be so if the preachers said so."

"I've always thought," observed Fred, "that the preachers knew a lot more about some things than they could get out of the Bible. I guess that's one reason why I never cared much about goin' to church. Well," he added, as he turned to go, "I'm sorry you can't go with us to-morrow, and as long as your pa can't find anything in the Bible that says it's wrong, I should think he might let you. I know the Bible says the seventh day is the Sabbath, but that's Saturday and not Sunday, and nobody but Jews keep Saturday."

"Yes," they do," replied George, quickly; "some Christians keep it; ma knows of some that do. There were some people in the town where she used to live that kept it. I don't remember what she called them, but they weren't Jews."

"I wonder how they managed to live and not work on Saturday?" queried Fred, pausing, "Saturday's the busiest day in the whole week."

"That's so; but they got along all right, and they were strict in keepin' it, too, ma says."

"And did they want a law to make other folks quit work on Saturday?"

"No; I guess no one ever heard of such a thing as that. They probably thought if the fourth commandment said to keep the seventh day, that was all they needed. And I should think," added George, "that it would be, if it was the word of the Lord."

"Yes; so should I," said Fred. "Well, good bye, and if I were you I'd tell your pa he must find me a Bible text for keepin' Sunday if he wanted me to keep it."

"I'll do it," answered George. "Good bye."

The Object of Civil Government.

WE have seen that all persons have rights; and that these rights are given each person by the Creator, and are unalienable.

We have seen also why it is that the Creator gives to each one these rights,—that it is because he has a purpose to be fulfilled in each member of the human family, and a claim upon each one, which would utterly fail if men were not left free to choose between good and evil. Only in this way can God receive what is due him, and man attain to the highest pinnacle of blessing.

But how are these rights to be preserved? How are the life and liberty of each one, which God has given them, to be protected from violence and destruction in this evil world?

Is each one to defend his own rights, using what force may be necessary to repel any invasion of them?

If it were left that way there would be no government at all. There would be no laws against crime, and each one would determine for himself what was a punishable offense and what punishment was deserved by the offender. And he would decide this, as individuals are so prone to do, not after calm reflection, but under the excitement and anger which the offense produced.

In addition to this, his rights would be defended by no power stronger than his own arm.

Such a state of things would be anarchy, worse than anything that we have seen or imagined.

To avoid this, men have formed civil governments; and by means of these, laws against crime are enacted by assemblies of chosen men; the person accused of wrongdoing is tried by men who can proceed in the matter with calmness and impartiality; sentence against the offender is executed without anger, haste, or barbarity; and the power of the whole people together is exercised to defend the rights of each individual.

The Declaration of Independence sets forth the purpose of civil government, in the declaration that "to preserve these [unalienable] rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Thus it is seen that the civil government exists for the benefit of the individuals who enter into it. But the natural tendency in governments is to reverse the proper order, and to hold that the individual exists for the benefit of the government.

When this is done, the rights of the individual, instead of being protected by the government, are sacrificed to the government. Human life and liberty, which the Creator gave to man, and which no government can give him, are considered to be at the disposal of the government. This perverted state of things—this false conception of the purpose and province of civil government—has come to be the prevailing one all over the world.

Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration of Independence, said: "Our legislators are not sufficiently apprised of the rightful limits of their power, that their true office is to declare and enforce only our natural rights and duties, and to take none of them from us. . . . The idea is quite unfounded that on entering into society we give up any natural right."

And when society, or the government, tries to compel us to give up some of our natural rights for the sake of its purposes, it is going contrary to God's order, and our obedience must be to God rather than to it.

Civil government is not the greatest thing in the world. It is, as we have seen, only an instrument to serve something else; and that which it is designed to serve must be greater than it. And that greater thing is MAN.

Man is the most important thing in the world,—the crowning work of God's creation. Man is made in God's own image; to him alone, of all things in the world, is given this overwhelming honor.

The civil governments were made by man; but man himself is the work of the infinite God.

Man, it is true, seems but an insignificant thing,—a being of faults and weaknesses, appearing only for a moment, as it were, amidst earth's myriad forms of life and then passing again into oblivion. And of himself he would be only this.

But ah, he is connected with the purposes of God, which reach throughout eternity! Can this be said of any civil government? No, indeed; earthly governments are but transient things; once dead, they have no future. But who can fathom the eternal purpose of Jehovah in the creation of man? To what heights is man, in the unfolding of that purpose, to attain in the eternal ages?

And that this life may afford the conditions suitable to man's preparation for the future life, civil government has been instituted here by the ordinance of God. But it derives all its importance from the greater importance of man,—the importance of the human individual.

God deals with man individually; his eternal purpose relates to each individually; and in his view, which shows all things truly, no one individual is of more importance than another. He gave his only-begotten Son to save you, reader, as an individual,—not partly to save you and partly to save some one else, or many others, but wholly to save you, wholly to save each one by himself, of the human family.

And this reveals the estimate which God has put upon the individual,—a value which far transcends any that can belong to earthly governments.

THE proper study for mankind is God.

Step Out.

WE cannot hope to make this department what it should be without the active coöperation of those for whom it is specially intended.

Abraham Lincoln was counted as a learned man, but it was not because he had read many books. The secret lay in the fact that he appropriated, digested and made his own personal knowledge that which he gleaned from the few books he actually perused. So, in this work, if we want to really master the underlying principles of religious liberty, so that we can turn them to account,—know how to apply them to specific cases, it is necessary that we make them a part of our being, and to do this one should read, discuss, ask questions, and then put his thoughts on paper. This will teach clearness of idea and exactness of expression.

Have an idea and then learn to state it clearly so that everybody will understand what you mean when they read your writings.

Some people have a reputation for being "deep writers"—and rather difficult to understand. In the majority of cases this lack of clearness is due to the same cause that makes it impossible to see an inch below the surface of the Missouri river—mud!

We speak thus plainly of this matter, for we want our young friends to understand that "writing for the press" is not such a wonderful thing. It's simply having an idea and then expressing it in a clear and entertaining manner. This comes only by practice, and we therefore urge the readers of this department to lose no time in developing their talents along this line, and no subject is more fruitful with ideas and themes than that of religious liberty.

Let us hear from you. You will find in the SENTINEL a warm friend of every effort to rise from your present surroundings to something higher.

W. E. C.

Union College.

THE advertisement of this institution of learning has appeared in our columns for some little time, because we know whereof we speak when we say that it is in every way worthy of patronage. It affords facilities and opportunities that can be found in but few other schools, and those who contemplate taking a course of study should not fail to investigate its merits. The president, in response to an inquiry as to its prospects for the coming year, writes: "The outlook for Union College is very promising. Many young people are seeking ways to secure the benefits that come through a training such as this institution can give. Not a day passes without receiving letters from young men and women who are making arrangements to be present with us the coming year." Besides the courses of study already arranged for, a new course for teachers has been prepared and is offered for entrance the coming year. This course supplies a need that has long been felt and will meet with general favor. The college is open September 15, and is prepared to receive all who seek an education of the highest order." Any one desiring information should address, N. W. Kauble, president, College View, Nebraska.

The Reason Why.

THE Signs of the Times, in its issue of the 2nd inst., thus speaks of the interest of the people in working for the SENTINEL:—

"A brother in Waukon, Iowa, over seventy-five years of age, recently secured eight subscribers for the AMERICAN SENTINEL. Our older brethren are prone to deem themselves on the retired list, while there is still work that they can do. Here is an example for them. The SENTINEL is always full of that information for the want of which the people of the United States are being unwittingly led into the delusive web of Church and State union."

This is only one of more than a score of similar instances where men and women passed their allotted span of life, did valiant service in securing subscriptions for the SENTINEL under our late special offer. Their hearts were bound up in the work, and they couldn't help it.

MRS. J. M. ABELL, of Elmhurst, Cal., in remitting for her subscription, writes: "I have watched every advancing step the SENTINEL has made from its first number, and more than once has my heart beat faster at its intrepid uplifting of truth and freedom as revealed in the Word."

MR. L. E. HILDRETH, of Stoughton, Wis., in sending a club of twelve subscriptions to the SENTINEL, says: "The AMERICAN SENTINEL is one of the best antidotes I know of to administer to the average politician who finds himself in the bewildered condition incident to the button-holing Church and State lobbyists who besiege him in the halls of Congress."

ELD. H. F. PHELPS, of St. Paul, Minn., press agent of the International Religious Liberty Association, of that State, and who has done much to disseminate the principles of religious liberty among the people of the Northwest, writes saying: "I want to say for your encouragement that I have read the AMERICAN SENTINEL from its very first issue, and feel that I am in a condition to judge of its merits, when I say that the last is the very best—the best of the wine at the last of the feast. In the beginning I used to wonder if there was enough to the subject it treated to keep it running right along without becoming exhausted, but there seems to be no end. More and more and better and better is the story now. Long may it live and much good may it do."

A WARM friend of the SENTINEL, from Nebraska, thus speaks of the Young People's Department lately begun: "I am very sure this is a move in the right direction. Our children ought to know more of the fundamental principles of religious liberty than the most of them do, and the simple manner in which the subject matter is presented cannot fail to awaken an interest never before known; and more, I mistake greatly if those of older years are not among the most interested readers of this department."

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS, slightly damaged, offered at half price.
Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromising opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE
International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy, Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00
" " Six months,	-	-	-	-	.50
" " Three "	-	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

UNION COLLEGE,

Founded in 1891 by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, and located at College View, a suburb of the city of Lincoln, Nebraska.

The climate is healthy and the sanitary conditions excellent.

Purpose of the College.

This College was established not merely for the purpose of teaching the sciences, but also of giving instruction in the great principles of God's Word, and the practical duties of every-day life.

Text Books.

The Bible holds the first place in the educational system, and only such text books are used as harmonize with the inspired Word.

Courses of Study.

The usual work in the classical, scientific and preparatory courses is done, and in addition special biblical courses are offered in English, German, Danish and Swedish. Those who cannot remain long in school will be permitted to select from the regular course such studies as they may be qualified to pursue.

Thorough instruction given in music, drawing, painting, stenography, book-keeping and commercial law.

Industrial Department.

An industrial department is connected with, and forms a part of, the regular college work. Each student has an opportunity of spending two hours daily in some useful physical labor under a competent instructor.

Employment for young men: Practical farming and gardening, use of tools, shoe making, tailoring, tent making, baking and dairying.

For young ladies: Domestic work, sewing, cooking, laundrying, flower culture, etc.

Expenses low. Send for catalogue.

Address,

UNION COLLEGE,
College View, Nebr.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

SOUTH LANCASTER ACADEMY,

Is most healthfully located. Combines religious and industrial with intellectual training.

Thoroughness of instruction, solidity of character and usefulness in life are the principal objects of attainment.

Board and Tuition Only $120 Per Year.

For further particulars and calendar, address, J. H. HAUGHEY, Principal, South Lancaster, Mass.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But not all of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, - - - $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELTON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y.
"that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. Its successful combination of a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5½ x 2½ in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

CATHOLIC TESTIMONY.

THE following tracts and leaflets are direct quotations from those high in authority in the Church of Rome, and can be relied upon as representative testimony.

From Sabbath to Sunday.

Contains, among other important testimony, Father Enright's $1,000 challenge for Bible proof of Sunday sacredness. Price, ½ cent.

Who Changed the Sabbath?

This question is disposed of by adducing evidences from Catholic sources. Price, 1½ cents.

Christian Sabbath.

A reprinted article from the Catholic Mirror, which paper is the organ of the Catholic Church in the United States. It puts forth the question "Why Do Protestants Keep Sunday?" Price, 2 cents.

A Challenge to Protestants.

A pithy little leaflet quoting some strong words from a representative Catholic priest to the Protestant world. Price, 25 cents per 100.

Rome's Arraignment of Sabbath-Breakers.

This is a report of a sermon delivered by Father O'Keefe, a Baltimore Catholic priest, in which two facts are set forth and from a Scriptural standpoint. (1) That the only Bible Sabbath is the seventh day or Saturday. (2) That for first day observance or sacredness, there is no Bible warrant. Sixteen well filled pages, 1 cent.

The Law of God as Changed by the Papacy.

A chart 5½ x 11 inches, printed on thin paper, containing the Law of God as changed by the Catholic power. This is flanked by papal assumptions and admissions, giving the whole history of the change in a nutshell. A citation is made from each quotation to its original source, making it a document of especial importance. 50 cents per 100.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

Grand Trunk Railway System

IS THE MOST POPULAR ROUTE TO THE WEST,
Combining Every Comfort and Luxury.

Solid Vestibuled Pullman Dining and Sleeping Car Trains

Through from New York to Chicago without change

Choice of route from NEW YORK to NIAGARA FALLS, SUSPENSION BRIDGE, TORONTO, DETROIT, PORT HURON, CHICAGO, and the West, Northwest, and Southwest, via

The Celebrated ST. CLAIR TUNNEL,

Which connects Canada and the United States, and is the greatest submarine tunnel in the world.

The Grand Trunk Railway System is justly celebrated for its Fishing and Hunting Resorts, as on and contiguous to it are the greatest grounds of the civilized world, among them being the

MUSKOKA LAKES, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER, THOUSAND ISLANDS, LAKE ST. JOHN REGION, WHITE MOUNTAINS, ANDROSCOGGIN,

and many others too numerous to mention.

CHAS. M. HAYS, GEO. B. REEVE, W. E. DAVIS,
Gen. Manager. Gen. Traffic Manager. Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt.

MONTREAL, P. Q.

FRANK P. DWYER,

Eastern Passenger Agent.

273 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion,	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

The TWO Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen. REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges . . . $1.85

Cloth, marbled edges, - - - - - 2.50

" Gilt edges, - - - - - 3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

... OUR . PREMIUM . BIBLE ...

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the
AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round
 Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality,

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00, WITH SENTINEL, ONE $3.00

REDUCTION IN PRICE

FROM $3.50 TO $3.00,

For a SHORT TIME ONLY.

The Sentinel one year and Bible, postpaid,	$3.00
The Sentinel six months and Bible, postpaid,	2.50
The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel,	2.00
The Bible given as a present for six NEW yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each
“ “ “ twelve 6 months “ at	.50 each

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence we urge our patrons to ORDER AT ONCE.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we print. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

What our Patrons Say of It.

I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted.

The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished.

The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it.

My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it.

I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted.

I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible.

It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price.

I received your premium Bible, and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent.

I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected.

I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had.

We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight.

I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap.

The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

They that sealed the covenant. NEHEMIAH. X. The points of the covenant.

25 Re'h'm, Ha-shab' nah, Ma-g-s'- jah, And A-h'i'jah, Ha'nan, A'nan,
 26 Ma'vuch, Ha'rim, Ba'q-nah.
 27 ¶ And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lev'ites, the porters, the singers, the Neth'i-nims, and all they that had separated themselves

28 Behold, we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:
 29 And it yieldeth much increase.

d. Deut. 28. Exod. 9. 28.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $6.00.

Address all orders to

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
 39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 23, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 37.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

RENDER to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's.—Mark 12:17.

It is not more legislation that the people need, but more religion.

WE would not discount law; we want good laws, and we must have them; but we want also something to make such laws effective.

LAW is the instrument and public sentiment the power which makes it effective. There can be no good government without a good public sentiment; and public sentiment cannot be created by legislation.

THERE is but one genuine "sure cure" in the earth today, and that is the grace of God. The richest man has not money enough to buy it, and the poorest has not poverty enough to shut him from it.

THERE are a great many people in this country who seem to be not yet convinced that two wrongs do not make right. A lynching, for example, is an effort to set one wrong right by perpetrating another.

THE "sabbath laws" of the States are as numerous and as well enforced now as they were fifty years ago; yet they have not prevented the incoming of a flood of moral degeneracy since that day.

"THE powers that be are ordained of God;" but this fact does not set the fiat of civil government above the commandment of Jehovah.

NO MAN or assembly of men have the power to manufacture right, or to absolve any individual from the obligation to obey the dictates of conscience.

THE weekly Sabbath is a holy day, because God made it holy, and it is impossible to change this fact. And being a holy day, its character cannot be other than religious. Any other kind of weekly sabbath is a counterfeit.

THE Sabbath is God's, but he forces no man to keep it. Why should men go further than God and try to force people to render to God the tribute of Sabbath observance.

"Who Is He That Condemneth?"

"God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world."

And to his disciples forever he himself says: "As my Father sent me, even so send I you."

Then no Christian is ever sent to condemn anybody in this world. No Christian has ever been made a minister of condemnation.

As to transgressors, the only office of law is to condemn. Then, as no Christian is ever sent to condemn, no Christian is ever sent to enforce law or to demand of others the enforcement of law.

As the only office of law, with respect to transgressors, is to condemn; as in this world there will be in every place, transgressors of law; and as no Christian has ever been made of Christ a minister of condemnation; it is certain that no Christian has ever been made by Christ a minister of the law.

Therefore it is perfectly certain that all these preachers, people, organizations, and combinations, professing to be Christian, who are making such a clamor for the enactment and enforcement of law, have forgotten the mission of Christ and of Christians in the world and are engaged in a work to which the Lord never sent them.

The Son of God was not sent to condemn the world, and he did not condemn. He said: "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world."

When there was brought to him for judgment that woman who had been taken in the very act of gross sin, he said to those who brought her, "Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone at her." And when none could cast a stone because they themselves were wrong-doers,—none were without sin,—and they all had gone out and left him alone with the woman, he said to her, "Woman, hath no man condemned thee?" And she said, "No man, Lord." Then said the Son of God, "Neither do I condemn thee. Go, and sin no more."

Now all who believe on him are counted the sons of God. And to all such he says, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." "Condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned."

Therefore it is perfectly plain that all these preachers, people, organizations, and combinations, professing to be Christian,—professing to be the sons of God—in all their work of throwing stones at supposed or even actual transgressors, in condemning them to arrest, fine and imprisonment, have forgotten the spirit and the method of the Son of God. In all this they have taken upon themselves an office, and are performing a work, to which the Son of God was not sent and which he never performed; and to which they as sons of God were never sent and which as sons of God they never can perform.

Condemnation is not what the world needs. The world is already condemned, overwhelmingly condemned, and needs no more condemnation. Every soul in the world is already condemned many times over; for all have done wrong many times over. For every wrong deed each soul is condemned by the law of God which he has certainly transgressed: and in addition to this, each one condemns himself, and has already many times condemned himself for the wrong things that he has done. With everybody thus doubly condemned, and many times at that, surely it is not condemnation that this world needs.

Now what kind of a spirit can it be anyhow that cannot be content without heaping more condemnation upon people who are already condemned, even to death, many times over? Surely it can be only a spirit of vindictiveness akin to that of the devil himself, that cannot be satisfied with seeing people twice condemned many times over, but must hunt out and spy and set traps for opportunities to condemn them yet more.

In no such business as that will or can the disciples of Christ ever be engaged. These are of another spirit. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world." And "As my Father sent me, even so send I you. . . . Receive ye the Holy Ghost." This is the spirit that characterizes the children of God, the disciples of Christ. It is the Spirit of Christ; and "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Being the Spirit of Christ, it does the work of Christ. He condemns not.

God knowing that men are so fully condemned already; and not being of such a vindictive spirit as to want to put more condemnation upon people already doubly condemned; sent not his Son, nor his Spirit, into the world "to condemn the world, but that the world through him MIGHT BE SAVED."

It is salvation, not condemnation, that the people of this world need. And what a fearful perversion of things it is, when people professing the knowledge of Salvation, and professing to be the preachers and ministers of salvation, turn to preaching and ministering condemnation instead of salvation—and this too upon people who are already doubly and many times condemned.

There is more power in salvation, than there is in condemnation, to turn and hold people away from wrong courses. When the Lord Jesus said to that woman who was actually guilty of gross wrong-doing, "Neither do I condemn thee, Go and sin no more," there was more power in that gentle, forgiving word to turn her into the way of righteousness and to keep her there, than there ever could be in all the condemnation of all the Pharisees in Judea and in the United States put together.

Oh that professed Christians would be Christians indeed. Oh that they would study to represent Christ indeed. Oh that they would court his Spirit, instead of indulging the vindictive spirit that cannot be satisfied without condemning people who are already repeatedly condemned even to death.

"Let this mind be in you that was also in Christ Jesus." "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." "As my Father sent me even so send I you. . . . Receive ye the Holy Ghost." "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "As he is so are we in this world." "Condemn not and ye shall not be condemned. Forgive and ye shall be forgiven."

Teaching the Heathen.

THE civilized nations of the West are busily instructing the nations of the Orient, but not in the ways of righteousness and peace. Their teaching is almost wholly of that "art" which is the opposite of peace. Says an English journal:—

"The Great Powers are glad to send competent military and naval instructors to Asiatic lesser powers, to drill their men and teach them war. They compete with one another to get the orders for arms and war supplies. There are said to be about two hundred German instructors in China, working to get China into a "fit" condition. When the "Christian" West gets the heathen East well versed in the art of war, it is not difficult to see that both together will fill the earth with such war as never was.

"While thus the nations are fulfilling the numerous scriptures which speak of the state of unrest and strife which is to close the history of the earth, what is the religious world doing to fulfill those scriptures which show that, before the coming of the Lord, the gospel of his kingdom will be preached as a witness to all nations? There is something more important for all Christians than the questions of territorial extensions and political combinations which agitate men's minds. The gospel is for sinners, no matter where they are or who they are, and the order of the Lord to every believer is that his invitation shall be taken to them. Yet Europe alone spends a thousand times as much on war as all Christendom spends on missions."

Helping Our Enemy.

"Sunday School Times."

REVENGE is a poor investment. The best way to "get satisfaction" out of one who has injured us is to help him to be a less injurious sort of person. We cannot do this by scowling at him, turning our backs upon him, or retaliating against him. If he is affected with moral poverty, we must enrich him. If he is a small pattern of a man, we may help him to grow by setting before him a pattern of largeness. But our contempt is not likely to enrich him, nor to cause him to wax larger and nobler. The very best thing that we can do to our enemy is to afford him all the moral help in our power. To make him better is to better all who have anything to do with him.

Christianity.

"God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself."

The great trouble with men is that they have gone away from God, and have become enemies in their minds by wicked works.

They have gone so far away that they have lost sight of God; their minds have become so confused that they have forgotten him; their eyes have become so blinded that they cannot see him; their hearts have become so perverse that they cannot discern him even though they be standing in his very presence.

"There is none righteous, no, not one. There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips. Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. Their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known. There is no fear of God before their eyes."

This is the kind of world that God had, and has yet, to deal with. Yet in Jesus Christ he came and dwelt among men to reconcile the world unto himself. He sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He made peace through the blood of his cross that he might reconcile all things unto himself. And you that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreprouvable in his sight.

Thus to a world steeped in sin, God brought reconciliation: with a world overwhelmed with rebellion he made peace. To the people of this world, God sends neither condemnation nor antagonism, but peace and reconciliation only.

In Jesus Christ is this peace and reconciliation given to the world. All who truly receive Christ truly receive this peace and reconciliation. And every one who receives this peace becomes a peacemaker in the world and to the world—he preaches only peace, peace to all, by Jesus Christ. Every one who receives this reconciliation, in it, and with it receives also the ministry of reconciliation—he antagonizes nobody, he condemns nobody, he ministers reconciliation to all, he persuades men to be reconciled to God.

"All things are of God who hath reconciled us to himself and hath committed unto us the ministry of reconciliation. To wit: that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them, and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation."

"So then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God." Thus every Christian is an ambassador for Christ to the world: he is an ambassador of peace, an ambassador of reconciliation. No Christian is ever an ambassador of condemnation, of legislation, nor of law: every Christian is an ambassador of salvation, not condemnation; of justification, not legislation; of the gospel, not the law.

Every Christian preaches peace by Jesus Christ; for he is our peace and Lord of all. To the Christian is committed no ministry but the ministry of reconciliation. To him is committed no word but the word of reconciliation. No Christian has anything to do with governing or managing men: his business is solely to serve the Lord, to beseech other men to be reconciled to God, and to persuade them to serve the Lord.

The bane of Christianity, and the curse of the world, ever since the days of the apostles, has been the consuming desire of professed Christians to "boss" other people and to control and run the world. But God did not send Jesus Christ on any such mission as that, nor has he ever sent any Christian on any such mission. For "as he is, so are we in this world."

"We have seen and do testify that God sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world." And he never attempted to save anybody by superintending the police, by running the politics of cities, by regulating the affairs of the State, nor by any other worldly means or method. He sought to save men only by spreading the knowledge of God and winning men to God. He did it only by ever revealing to men the Fatherly love and care of God for all mankind. When he found himself obliged to tell the scribes, the pharisees, and the lawyers, that they were hypocrites, it was not done in a spirit of denunciation; but rather with sorrow that such was the truth and that he was obliged to state it.

It is eternal life to know God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. God desires that all men shall have eternal life. And as nothing but the knowledge of God can bring eternal life, the Lord Jesus came into the world to give to men the knowledge of God. This was his sole mission to the world. To this one thing all the faculties and energies of his whole being were devoted.

This is the sole mission of Christians in the world. Men need the knowledge of God to-day as much as when Jesus was in the world. Yet Jesus is not now in the world as he was then. But believers in him are here in his stead. These are sent as was he. And as he is so are we in this world.

Christians are sent, as verily as was Jesus, to be the saviours of the world—not of themselves nor by themselves, but of God and by God. Jesus said of himself, "I can of mine own self do nothing." He did not come to save men of himself and by himself: he came to save the world by bringing and revealing to men the knowledge of God. So likewise Christians are not sent to save men of themselves nor by themselves, nor by any plans or methods of their own; but by bringing to men and holding before the world the knowledge of God.

This is the only mission, the sole purpose of existence of Christians in the world. To this one thing all their faculties and energies are devoted. And wherein any Christian comes short of this, so much he fails of being the Christian that Christ has sent him to be in the world. Here is the Lord's design for every believer: "Now thanks be unto God who always causeth us to triumph, and maketh manifest the savor of his knowledge by us in every place."

Thus the purpose of existence of the Christian in the world, is to glorify God, to make manifest the knowledge of God in every place, and so to bring to men eternal life. And every sincere Christian shuns, as he would a viper, anything and everything that would tend in the least degree to exalt itself against the knowledge of God. He brings every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, in whose stead he is in the world. The only person whom he ever has any ambition or desire to control, is himself. The only rulership he ever cares for is that over his own spirit. The only power that he ever chooses to exercise over flesh, is power over his own flesh.

This is Christianity—the Christianity of Christ. These are Christians, for they are like Jesus. God is seeking for such. The world needs such, that it may find the knowledge of God and Jesus whom he sent, and may have eternal life.

"An Extraordinary Utterance."

WHAT the New York World, of September 16, styles "an extraordinary utterance," was delivered in this city on the preceding Sunday, by a Roman Catholic priest, "Father" Ducey. He said:—

"No law of man which conflicts with the law of God can exact obedience and submission from men. There is a higher law, as Seward said before he was stricken down for his efforts to preserve the independence of man. And we claim to-day, as moral teachers, that the higher law still exists. And no laws passed by corruption in the interests of trusts and monopolies, against the interests and welfare of God's creatures in contradiction of the laws of God, are binding on the conscience of any man."

The World says it feels in duty bound to protest against "the dangerous doctrine preached" in this utterance, and inquires:—

"What is it except an incitement to every man, no matter how ignorant or reckless, to become his own interpreter of the validity and the justice of laws? What practical difference is there between the anarchism of Goldman and Most, ranting against all law, and this broad assertion of the existence of a 'higher law' in the consciousness of men? Who is to decide when 'the law of man so conflicts with the law of God' as to relieve men from obedience? Is it to be Father Ducey or his hearers? And what will become of government or of society if this doctrine of every man his own judge is to prevail?"

Does the World mean to deny that there is any "higher law" than the statutes of men? If so, it is most certainly in the wrong.

And if there be a "higher law" which is binding upon the consciences of men—even the law of the Most High God—what attitude shall men assume toward it? When man's law comes in conflict with it—as it has very often done in the history of this world—who is to point out the duty of the individual? Will the State do it? The State says, Obey my laws. But in case of a conflict between them and the law of God, the individual's duty is to the latter. There is no condition or circumstances whatsoever under which any individual is absolved from the duty of obedience to the law of God.

How then is the duty of the individual to be determined? That is the inquiry of the World. Does the individual become "his own interpreter of the validity and the justice of laws?" No; not in the case of the Christian; far from it. But that is the way it appears in the eye of the State. And the State usually proceeds to deal with him accordingly. This is precisely what happened in the case of the martyrs who went to the dungeon and the stake for conscience' sake.

It is the function of conscience to guide an individual in choosing between right and wrong. It is not the business of the State to define right and wrong. The State is exercising its legitimate function when it is protecting the individual in the enjoyment of his rights. Nor can conscience, alone, define right and wrong. Conscience must be educated in the principles and precepts of right and wrong, as revealed by a higher authority, before it can become a safe guide. The Word of God defines right and wrong for every individual; the Spirit of God illuminates the Word of God in the mind, when its meaning is earnestly and prayerfully sought, so that the pathway of right and duty is clearly seen. And thus the individual is not alone,—a self-constituted “interpreter of the validity and the justice of laws”—though he appears to be so in the eye of the State. The State deals with him as such; but God sees to it that nothing befalls such an individual that is not for his own good.

The genuine Christian is never an anarchist. His doctrine is the doctrine of the Prince of Peace. No anarchist, no foe of law and order and peace, was ever at the same time a humble, conscientious, prayerful student of the Word of God.

The really “extraordinary utterance” is not that given by “Father” Ducey, but that made by the World, in asking “what practical difference” there is between this obedience of conscience to the higher law of God, and “the anarchism of Goldman and Most, ranting against all law.” That is an extraordinary question, indeed.

The “Sabbath Logion.”

No small amount of discussion has arisen in the religious world over the alleged discovery of certain unknown, or lost, sayings of Christ, one of which relates to the Sabbath and has been designated as the “Sabbath logion.” “Except ye keep the Sabbath,” it declares, “ye shall not see the Father.”

Whether one of Christ’s sayings or not, it is true, and it may well be read with an emphasis on the word “keep.” Not everything is Sabbath-keeping which claims to be such. God has not left it to the caprice or short-sighted wisdom of man to determine what is a proper observance of the Sabbath. In the fourth commandment he has said, “Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy”; and a further commentary upon this point is given in Isaiah 58:13, 14.

God made the Sabbath for a purpose; and that purpose must be fulfilled. Only that is true Sabbath-keeping which fulfills that purpose. What that purpose is we are told in the words of God to his chosen people: “Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you.” “It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever.” Ex. 31:13, 17. See also Eze. 20:12, 20.

The Sabbath is a “sign” between God and his chosen people. His chosen people are the children of faith, the seed of Abraham, or children of Israel. See Gal. 3:7, 29; Gen. 32:28. But of what is it a sign? We find an answer in the words, “In six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.”

The Creator is the true God; and in the keeping of his Sabbath we find a sign that we are worshipers of the true God. It makes all the difference in the world to the worshiper whether he is worshiping the true God, or some other. And in the Sabbath he is to find an evidence that he is truly a worshiper of Jehovah. But this he cannot do unless he keeps it holy, as God has specified. Otherwise he will see nothing of God in the Sabbath, and it will be to him but as any other day of the week.

Politics and Religion.

A WRITER in The Vanguard, Mr. John Ratliff, argues for the union of religion and politics, and lays down the principle that a man’s religion and his politics are not divorceable. This is a principle that is getting a good deal of sanction in the religious world at the present time.

How is it when two “Christians” conscientiously vote, one the Republican ticket and the other the Democratic ticket, at an election? Is Christianity joined to opposing political principles? If so, there are occasions when it opposes itself.

Mr. Ratliff speaks of “political sins.” What is a “political sin?” It is the support of the “other faction,” or the “other party,” of course. A definition of “political sin” would amount to this and nothing more.

Who can make a just standard of right and wrong but God alone? Men have set up many standards of right and wrong, but they have all been unreliable, because they were the work of fallible beings. In politics we have only those standards of “right” which men have set up; and we find as many such standards as there are parties.

To make men understand right and wrong,—to convict them of sin, in other words—is the office work of the Holy Spirit; and to impress the truth upon the soul, the Spirit uses the Word of God. But politics commands neither the agency of the Word nor of the Spirit.

In Judea, over eighteen hundred years ago, Jesus Christ walked among the people, and taught them of the kingdom of God. He is the perfect example for every Christian. To the extent to which he engaged in politics, the Christian may rightfully engage in politics. To the extent to which he sought to get control of earthly power, the Christian may properly exert himself for that purpose to-day.

Jesus Christ was the mystery of the manifestation of God in human flesh. And every true Christian presents the same mystery to-day, for in him Christ lives and manifests himself to the world. In his true followers Jesus Christ lives on earth to-day, and what he does to-day is what he did in Judea so long ago. For he changes not, but is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." If he was a politician then, the Christian will be one now. But if not, then the Christian will not concern himself in that way.

Is Our Government Intolerant of any Religion?

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE Christian Citizen quotes from Daniel Agnew, LL. D., ex-chief justice of Pennsylvania, the following statement:—

"I have shown that this is a Christian nation—that this continent and the provinces were settled by a Christian people—that the States formed from them continued Christian, and set the legal evidence of their belief in their early constitutions—that other religions are exceptional, and were tolerated for individual conscience' sake only—that the Constitution of the United States formed by the same people, contemporary with their State constitutions, and with identical provisions for the toleration of individual freedom of conscience, expressly reserved to them all their ungranted rights, among which are their Christian institutions—that the Constitution itself carries internal evidence of its Christian character, that its continued existence rests on the fabric of the States; and that infidels, pagans, cavaliers and Mormons derive from it no support in their warfare against Christianity. I have shown, also, that the safety of this Christian character, peace, order and prosperity demand its citizenship to be protected against promiscuous and loose naturalization."

Of Dr. Agnew the Citizen says: "The opinions of such a man cannot fail to be of great importance to all thinking people. Recently he delivered an address, which has been published, the purpose of which is to establish the Christianity of the Constitution of the United States."

But if the nation is so overwhelmingly Christian, as Dr. Agnew holds, and "the Constitution itself carries internal evidences of its Christian character," what is the need of any further tinkering of the Constitution? If the inside of the Constitution is right, the outside surely ought to be, especially when the nation is Christian anyway!

To the statement of the venerable doctor, that other religions than Christianity are only tolerated in this country, we strongly demur. An Austrian, a Spaniard, or a Russian may properly use the term as expressive of the attitude of those governments toward a Jew, a Mohammedan or an infidel; but an American, never! According to the letter and spirit of the national Constitution and the genius of the American Government, the Christian no more tolerates the Jew than the Jew tolerates him. If one holds another view it is because he has grown up cherishing a false and alien idea of the principles of the United States Government.

It is true that some of the early State constitutions, following in the line of the colonial charters, which were granted in the days when the Church and State were firmly united, did establish religions which were not annulled by the United States Constitution, but an example of liberty was set in that great charter, and those States which had a religion incorporated in their constitutions have either abolished the religious parts of their constitutions or these have become atrophied by long disuse.

But a determined effort is being made to animate those dead constitutional provisions, to change the great Constitution which towers above them all and to make it an engine of tyranny. Religious despotism is embedded and ingrained in the hearts of men or else it could never continuously rise, as it does, to blast and curse the earth. It is as much out of place in our land as a snake in a fair garden, but it is here, and unless it is crushed out it will spoil our fair inheritance.

The "Continental Sunday."

FROM statistics published by a reliable European journal, it appears that so far as concerns the cessation of Sunday work, the "Continental Sunday" will bear comparison with the "American Sabbath."

In Germany, we are told, all employers of labor in industrial lines of work are forbidden either to compel or permit their employees to work on Sunday. This prohibition does not apply to persons working alone, or to those engaged in agriculture, fishing, or the professions or liberal arts.

In commercial establishments (such as retail stores, banking, insurance, and similar institutions) all work is prohibited during the first days of the three special holidays of Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost, and is limited to five hours on all ordinary holidays and Sundays.

The individual German States may extend these restrictions at their pleasure.

In Austria, there is a general prohibition of Sunday work, the only general exception being for work that is deemed absolutely indispensable and for commercial establishments, in which Sunday work is permitted during six hours of the day.

In Switzerland, no woman can work on Sunday except at home or in a small shop, and no minor (a person under eighteen years of age), except in a few specified industries; and adult males are allowed to do Sunday work only in some specified industries, and in certain cases of emergency, the nature of which must be demonstrated.

In England, a distinction is made between the work of adult males and that of women and minors. The former are not restricted in the matter of Sunday work, but no woman, "young person" or child can work in factory or workshop on Sunday except in certain special cases. Jews are allowed to work on Sunday provided they observe Saturday as a day of rest.

In Germany, Austria and England, much of the legislation governing Sunday work is of recent origin, as late as the year 1895.

It will be observed that the prohibition of Sunday work is more rigid in Austria and Germany than in England; yet in the latter country the Continental Sunday is not nearly as conspicuous a feature of the week as in the former. Except in the matter of open public houses, Sunday is observed quite as well in England as in the United States. The "Continental Sunday" is not therefore a product of lax Sunday legislation. It is rather the result of the general indifference of the people toward religion; and nothing can more surely foster this indifference than the idea that the Sabbath is an institution that can be properly subjected to State regulation.

Liberty. *

BY MISS LETTIE E. REED.

THE history of nations has been one ceaseless struggle for liberty.

What was it made the pilgrims leave home and native land and seek the dangers and perils of a new land? It was that they might gain liberty. Yes; rather than have their freedom taken away from them, they set forth on a stormy sea, landed on an unknown shore, endured starvation, and faced the cruel savage. Oh, how dear to the heart is liberty!

But as time passed on they were again under the tyrant's sway, they were again forced to assert their freedom; and by spilling their life's blood in defense of it they shook off the tyrant's yoke. They asserted their independence in these immortal words, which although so often quoted and but recently listened to at our Fourth of July gatherings, I cannot refrain from repeating: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Not only is this wonderful document famous for its assertion of a nation's independence and freedom, but it asserts the liberty of the individual. Personal liberty, the enjoyment of the inalienable right of the individual, is the thing of value, and it is the assertion of this, that gives value to the immortal Declaration.

Let me ask, What is Liberty? Some will say, "Why, the right to do as I please, of course." It is evident, however, that to this there must be some limitations. I might please to do what would justly displease many others. For "all men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights." I might please to do something that would infringe upon the liberty of some other person. Yes, I might even wish to take away their liberty to satisfy my own selfish desires. So my liberty would in this sense mean their slavery. It is evident, then, that liberty, in its truest sense, must be a blessing which is possible to every one at the same time and not to a few only and that at the expense of many.

Not only is this true with regard to individuals, but also with organized bodies, such as churches. There must, therefore, be some boundary line recognized between man and man, else liberty is impossible. Hence, I point you to God's law, which defines this boundary line, and which if obeyed will result in perfect liberty to all.

Too often when a church becomes powerful, it wishes to rule all others, and force them to see and believe as it does. And it is a sad truth that some have gone farther than to wish others to bow to their creeds. They have sought to change that instrument which was instituted among men to guard their liberty; they have sought this that they might take away man's liberty. Now if they are in the right why do they not seek God to bring others to the same view? Why, the very act of seeking man's power in itself condemns their belief.

So it was I think that God's invisible hand was in the forming of the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence, because they teach perfect liberty to all men alike. No people can be more fully bound to acknowledge the unseen Hand above which overrules in the affairs of men, than the people of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of a free and independent nation, seems to be distinguished by some token of Providential agency.

But it is a sad truth that this nation has begun to retrograde. The outlook for the future is terrible. Oppression and injustice abound everywhere. How was it that other great nations had their end? For answer let me disquiet and bring up the Shades of empires buried long ago, and learn a lesson from their fate. Come, old Assyria, what laid thee low? "I fell by my own misdeeds and injustice." Oh, queenly Persia, flame of the nations, wherefore art thou fallen? "Because I trod people under me; I fell by my own misdeeds."

And thou, muselike Grecian queen, fairest of all thy classic sisterhood, why liest thou here? "I scorned the law of God, banished and poisoned the wisest and justest men. The beauty of justice and liberty I trod down to the earth; lo, therefore, am I fallen." And thou, majestic Rome, with thy sevenfold crown all shattered at thy feet, why art thou fallen? "I made iniquity my law, I trod nations under me, millions of bondmen who wet the soil with tears and blood, cry up against me; do you not hear them crying to God? Lo, by this I had my downfall."

So it was that all nations and empires came to their ruin by oppressing their fellowmen. And do we hear a cry of distress coming up from any oppressed in this land?

* From an oration delivered at the Commencement exercises of the Southern Iowa Normal School.

Aye; we do hear it; and just so surely as we hear and heed it not, this fair land of ours will come down to ruin as did those of the past.

A ROMAN Catholic paper says that "Catholic citizens who see in public libraries anti-Catholic books, should make protest to the library authorities until the libelous volumes are taken out." It is thus that Rome is trying to veil the dark record of her past doings from the eyes of the rising generation.

A Panacea for Human Ills.

BY W. H. MCKEE.

SUCH a thing as a universal cure-all,—one general prescription which will remedy all ills—is an impossibility in medicine. The physicians are agreed that this is so, and intelligent men generally acknowledge that they are correct. But there are other ills to which humanity is heir besides those which directly afflict the flesh. In their efforts to cure these it would seem that even the wise men become foolish. Men who ought to know better, who in reality do know better, will champion with enthusiasm some legislative or political measure as an infallible remedy for all the ills from which the body politic suffers, or to which it is heir. That some men should be always looking to the latest medical fad or nostrum for renewed health and the continuation of life is sad. But it is sadder still to find virtually all men looking to legislation to remedy by one authoritative pronouncement all the difficulties under which society labors, financially, and perhaps even socially and morally. Humanity can furnish no universal panacea for physical, moral, or social, ills.

There is, however, a remedy for all the ills of every kind to which mankind is subject. It is a mistake to say that humanity is heir to any ills. It is not, for we are all children of God—all creatures of his hand. If we are all his children we are all his heirs. He casts off and disinherits none. If the children deny the relationship and repudiate the Father, it is they who refuse the inheritance. God repudiates none. Christ has said, "Whosoever will, let him come." All that is necessary, then, for the ownership and possession, in undivided right with the Son of God himself, of all the beauty and perfection which an omniscient and omnipotent Creator has made, is simply its acceptance.

But in God's plan there is no poverty, no disease, no imperfection, no sin, no death. He is not the God of the dead, nor of the dying, but of the living and the ever-living. His children are all heirs together "of the grace of life." Here then is the remedy for all the ills of life,—the acceptance of the heirship to the grace of eternal life, with all its accompanying bliss and perfection. Neither strikes nor labor combinations, nor coöperative societies, nor tariff laws, nor financial legislation, nor religious legislation, will do away with poverty or business perplexities, or sin and immorality.

There is one universal prescription, however, that, when accepted and applied, will accomplish this, and nothing else either will or can. That is, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." It is a simple prescription. It is expressed in very plain language. No man need fail to understand it. The terse Saxon of this short and pithy sentence appeals equally to the cultivated and the uncultivated, to the educated and to the ignorant. Every man, also, bears unconscious testimony to his belief in the efficacy of this remedy, in the fact that he would exact from all others an adherence to this rule in their dealings with him, whether he intends to reciprocate or not.

Of course the advocacy of this remedy means much. It is open, in the present condition of the affairs of the world, and so long as that condition lasts, to the criticism of being Utopian. But it is not Utopian, for it is not imaginary, neither is its eventual application or realization imaginary. The advocates of this remedy are all those who pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This is the prayer of all Christian men and angels. God hears prayer. He answers prayer. They who pray this prayer in word and heart and life, and so quietly and unostentatiously live out the precepts of God's word in all their business and social relations, are "engaged in a work which God wants done, and which every good being in the universe wants done," and will eventually succeed in their efforts, realize the fulfillment of what the world has called their Utopian dreams, and live in the eternal enjoyment of the answer to their daily prayer. It is true that they will not meet with what the world, at present, calls success, which can be reckoned in dollars and cents, or in worldly fame and reputation, but their returns will be in values which moth and rust can not corrupt, which the breath of slander can not tarnish or steal away, and which they will enjoy forever, while they themselves are held in eternal and unfading remembrance.

The men and women who are doing this are not theorists, or fanatics, or idle dreamers. They are practical people. They are the only practical people which this world holds. Their minds are touched with no cloud of unsoundness, they are the only actually sane people who walk the earth. It is the characteristic of an unsound mind that it sees everything with distorted vision, and has no just appreciation of true proportions and proportionate values. In the mental sight of such a mind the sense of true perspective is utterly lost. This is why to so many men the present obscures the future, the finite the infinite, and this transitory life the possible eternal existence which lies beyond. This is why men neglect the simple remedy which God prescribes, and give themselves to the use and advocacy of political fads and legislative nostrums.

THE attention of all eyes in the political circles of the nation is being drawn to the contest now being waged over the possession of the mayorship of "Greater New York." It is a contest which throws some light upon the question of the adaptability of politics for the promotion of the cause of righteousness in the earth.

THE striking feature of the contest, thus far, is the struggle between "machine" politics and independent politics for supremacy in the Republican party. On the one side is the independent nominee, the Hon. Seth Low, well known as President of Columbia College; and on the other side is "boss Platt" with the State "machine," determined to nominate, and, if possible, elect a candidate who will represent the Republican "organization." And the "boss," it is said, has applied for and secured the influence and authority of the national administration to aid him in the work of subordinating all other interests to that of the success of the "party."

INDEPENDENT politics is the theory upon which political procedure in this country was started out. But it is little more than a theory to-day. "Machine" politics, the politics of the "boss" and the dictator, is the almost universal reality. A person who will not be true to the "organization"—national, State, or local, as the case may be—soon meets the denunciation and opposition that is always accorded to a "traitor." And as in the present instance, his greatest costest is not with the opposite party, but with his own party "organization."

IT is the dream of those who are looking for moral reform through politics, that some plan of action can and will be devised which, "wisely and vigorously carried on," "will gradually but surely substitute leaders for 'bosses,' statesmen for politicians, and patriots for plunderers." This quotation is from a speech made at the late San Francisco convention of Christian Endeavor. Another speaker said: "We will stand for political intelligence, integrity, independence and industry; and we are rapidly reaching the conclusion that Democracy should stand for decency, Republicanism for respectability, and Populism for purity; or else we must obey the divine injunction by coming out from among them. In plain English, after we have done our best, if we cannot clean our parties out, then we should resolutely undertake to clean them up."

THAT is the trouble with politics to-day; they are sadly in need of "cleaning up." As one speaker at the late Epworth League convention in Toronto portrayed it,—“Why is it that in the northern half of the continent politics is looked upon as unclean and contaminating? The heart of the body politic is shut out from heeding the words of Christ by an accursed partisanship. The Ministerial newspapers would have them believe the Opposition were all knaves and asses, while the Opposition papers would have them believe that the government was hopelessly corrupt.” Or as another speaker said: “Politically we have fallen upon evil times. We have fallen upon times when, in certain sections, the ballot-box is corrupted, men are bought like chattels, or coerced into casting their votes for private gain rather than for the public good. . . . There are two distinctive elements at work in the contest for political supremacy. The first represents wealth and corporate power that rushes on with the force of a tornado, yet lacking in the purifying effect of the storm. The other is composed of men of small capacity and less personal character and integrity. Small men are in the saddle riding roughshod over the morals, the intelligence and the integrity of our national life.”

ALL this is true enough, and “the half has not been told;” but why is it so? Is it because the right political plan has not been followed? Can it be remedied by a revolution in political procedure? That is the remedy upon which our would-be reformers are confidently depending; that is the remedy which they are determined to adopt.

BUT the remedy will not fit the cause. The cause does not lie in any political defectiveness, but in the moral defectiveness of the people. Get the hearts of the people right, purify them of their corruption, and politics will straighten out of itself. But the reformers are going to reform politics, in order to straighten out the people. It is the old mistake of putting the cart before the horse.

THE much cherished remedy will not “work.” When corruption is in the heart, it must show itself; for “out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.” When men of corrupt hearts engage in politics, there will be corrupt politics. Either they must be shut out of politics, or there will continue to be the same corruption that is so much in evidence to-day.

BUT men of corrupt morals—men who will stand by the "machine" and the organization in opposition to any reform, either of their own free will or under the pressure of political influence—are in the majority; and they are largely in the majority, too. Do the minority count on devising a scheme or system that will "turn down" the large majority, and keep them down, so that we shall henceforth have pure politics? The idea is Utopian, truly.

* * *

THE real remedy, if one there be, must be that which will make good men out of the bad men that are in politics; and there is but one known cure for a bad heart; namely, regeneration, through the grace of God. The more this is preached and accepted, the less corruption there will be, in politics or any other sphere of human action. But when the nation undertakes to cast out corruption by vote,—to vote itself into purity and goodness—it will but display the wisdom of the small boy who tries to lift himself by the straps of his boots.

* * *

THE progress of lynch law in this country was startlingly illustrated the other day by the administration of mob vengeance upon five men in the very respectable State of Indiana. Usually the victims of Judge Lynch have been negroes guilty—or supposed to be guilty—of some revolting crime. In this case the victims were white men, charged with no worse crime than theft.

* * *

AT this rate of progress how long will it be before lynch law will come to be regarded as the proper method of dealing with almost all classes of criminals, wherever the circumstances afford an opportunity for putting it into execution. As a cheap and expeditious way of getting rid of persons who have made themselves obnoxious to a community, it seems to be a success; besides which, it apparently satisfies the feelings of the people much more than the administration of justice through the regular course of the law. And these features of the case are all, seemingly, that the people care to take into consideration.

* * *

It is no less true, however, that the progress of lynch law is the progress of anarchy. If we would note whether or not anarchy is making progress in this country, we should look, not at the number and luridness of the speeches of Herr Most and his associates, but at the lynchings and the crimes which call them forth.

* * *

It may be well to inquire, What is anarchy? The word means, the setting aside of the head, or ruler; hence the disregard of all law and authority. And where is this exemplified more fully or in greater degree than in the setting aside of the laws and authority of Jehovah?

* * *

"THE Lord hath prepared his throne in the heaven, and his kingdom ruleth over all." His law is the highest law in the universe. The transgression of that law is sin. Sin and anarchy are really synonymous terms. The progress of wickedness in the earth is the progress of anarchy. When men disregard the law of God, it is certain that they will have no great scruples about setting aside the law of man.

* * *

THE Spirit of God is in the earth, restraining men from wickedness and seeking to draw them back to God. By persistence in sin, however, men drive away this Spirit, and as it is withdrawn from them, there is a loosening of every bond which restrains them from utter lawlessness. Because of the fearful wickedness of these last days, God is withdrawing his Spirit from the earth, and the result is seen in the increasing riot of human passion in every form. One evidence of this appears in the commission of revolting crimes, and another in the lynchings which so commonly follow. They are both symptoms of the same malady, for which the grace of God is the only cure.

A Dreadful Alternative.

SPEAKING of the case of the young Cuban girl, Evangelina Cisneros, whose present circumstances and prospective fate have awakened the sympathies of Anglo-Saxons on both sides of the Atlantic, the Primitive Catholic, of September 15, says it is now suggested by the Spanish government that in lieu of the sentence of twenty years' imprisonment in an African penal settlement, she be sent to a convent. In the eyes of some people this would be regarded as at least a mitigation of sentence; but to us, it is about the most dreadful alternative that could be imagined. The young woman herself, of course, strenuously objects to such a disposition of her case.

In this connection it may be proper to mention that Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is reported to have written to the pope asking him to exercise his influence in securing justice for Miss Cisneros. "A single word from you," she is reported as saying to him, "will surely induce the Spanish government to abstain from this act of military vengeance, which would greatly discredit it in the eyes of the civilized world."

But the pope has given his blessing upon the Spanish arms in Cuba, and it is in vain to expect that he will pronounce a "single word" to the contrary.

* * *

ONE of the most curious mental phenomena of the times is the persistence of some good church people—men who essay to be ministers and teachers of divine truth—in calling the United States a Christian nation. Who would think of calling an individual a Christian who would spend more money many times over for strong drink, for tobacco, for firearms, for sports and amusements, for jewelry and for unnecessary display, than he would give to the cause of God! Yet this is precisely what is done by this "Christian" nation.

Where Sky and Earth Meet.

"MAMA, how far off is it to where the sky touches the earth?"

Mrs. Moore smiled at the serious face upturned to hers, in anticipation of a serious reply to such a question. "It's a long way, Willie," she said, "a long way."

"Is it further than I could walk in a whole day, mama?" asked Willie.

"Yes," said Mrs. Moore, "further than you could ever walk in all your life."

"Why, mama," he exclaimed in surprise, "I didn't think it was so far away as that. It doesn't seem to be so very far."

"No, it doesn't seem very far, Willie, but we can't always tell about things from the way they seem. When folks only look at appearances, they often make great mistakes. But there are a great many people older than you who think they can reach the sky without going very far."

"Tell me about it, mama," said Willie; "I don't understand."

"Well," said mama, "what would you do, Willie, if the sky and earth really met a little ways off, where they appear to meet?"

"Why—I would go there and climb up from the earth and go up into the sky, where everything is nice and beautiful, I guess," Willie answered, after a moment's pause.

"Well," said Mrs. Moore, "that is just what many people are trying to do. They think that by a little effort they can get to a place where the earth touches heaven, and then everything will be just right, as it ought to be. It seems so easy to them that sometimes they wonder why they haven't got there before."

"Do you mean, mama, that people go on a journey? or how do they try to get to where the earth and sky come together?" queried Willie.

"No; not a journey, Willie," said Mrs. Moore; "what I mean is that they think they can take themselves to the sky by their own efforts, just as you thought you could walk to it, and it seems to them to be quite an easy thing to do."

"But what kind of efforts, mama, if they don't go on any journey?" said Willie.

"Well, you know, Willie, there were once some people who thought they could get to the sky by building a tower; so they set out to build one that would reach to it from the earth. Do you remember reading about that in the Bible?"

"Yes; I remember," said Willie. "They built it up quite high, but they didn't finish it, and it never amounted to anything, I guess. I wonder how near they got to the sky before they stopped, mama."

"They got just as near as people do nowadays who don't try it in the right way," said Mrs. Moore. "There are other towers of Babel besides the one built in the plains of Shinar. People are building them to day."

"Where are they, mama? I never saw any."

"They are not made of brick and stone, but it doesn't matter what they are made of, so long as they represent some plan of men to get to the sky by their own works"

"But what makes them do it, mama? Don't they know that they can't get to the sky that way?"

"They ought to know; but they don't stop to seriously think of the matter and find out just what the Lord says about it."

"But who are some of these people, mama?"

"Some of them are people who are trying to get to the sky by means of politics," was the reply.

"Ho, ho, how funny!" laughed Willie.

"Yes, it is funny, only it's very serious, too," said Mrs. Moore, "for they are making a dreadful mistake; and there are a great many engaged in it, too; and if they don't find out their mistake, they'll come to ruin in the end."

"What are they doing now, mama?"

"Well, they hold a great many meetings and tell the people that if they will only vote in the right way and elect the right men to public office and make the right kind of laws, it will bring in the millennium and set up the kingdom of God. They are really building a political tower of Babel."

"Can people make themselves better, or make other folks better, by voting and passing laws, mama?" queried Willie.

"That's just the point, Willie," said Mrs. Moore; "it can't be done that way. People can't raise themselves one inch above the level of the earth in that way. The trouble is that people are fallen and have wicked hearts, and they can't vote or legislate themselves into a better condition. They can't lift themselves out of themselves."

"What do you mean by that, mama?"

"Did you ever try to lift yourself by the straps of your boots, Willie? That is just the way it is when people try to lift themselves up toward God by their own works. They never succeed, and yet they think they are going to succeed pretty soon. They can see success a little way in the future, just where the sky touches the earth, and they think it will not take them very long to get there, if they can only go ahead as they want to. And so they go on, and on, but they find they never get any nearer the sky than they were before. They don't make any real progress toward setting up the kingdom of God.

"Now, Willie," Mrs. Moore continued, "can you tell me what God's plan is for taking people to the sky?"

Willie wrinkled his brow, but made no answer.

"Think hard now," said Mrs. Moore, "and see if you can't tell me something about it. In the same book of the Bible that tells of the tower of Babel, it tells of something else that did really reach from the earth to the sky. Don't you remember I read to you about it the other evening?"

Willie's face brightened as Mrs. Moore finished speaking. "Jacob's ladder!" he exclaimed.

"Yes, that is it," said Mrs. Moore; and now can you tell me, Willie, what that ladder represents?"

"What does it represent, mama?" he queried, after a moment's pause.

"It represents our Saviour, Jesus Christ, Willie; and it's the only possible connection between the earth and heaven. Jacob's ladder and the tower of Babel represent the two ways,—one God's way and the other man's way—of getting to the sky. Some people are trying to climb up by their good works, and others by penance and suffering; and others are planning to vote and legislate themselves into the skies; but the only way that anybody will ever get there is by Jacob's ladder. But I must go now and look after the dinner. I'll tell you more about this another time."

The Value of Principle.

ONE of the very first and often the hardest lesson for young people just entering the busy scenes of active life to learn is that life is not what they had pictured it to be; they awake to find that the dream is only a dream; they discover that their pathway is beset with difficulties almost insurmountable, perplexities endless and disappointments without number; their brightest hopes are dashed to the ground; heartstrings are bleeding and torn, and tears unbidden flow freely. Their loftiest aspirations, holiest ambitions and purest desires meet with rebuff when an attempt is made to carry them out, and they are led to reflect, "What is there of life that is worth living?"

But after all, life is much as we make it. Every man and every woman has a mission to perform that no other individual can accomplish for them. It is to develop a character and in this work they are not left in the dark. There is a perfect Pattern for our example—a rule of action to govern all our conduct. All the tendency of life as we mingle with the world is to deviate from this standard, and right here comes in the value of principle—doing right because it is right, no matter what the consequences may be. So many nowadays are policy people,—let others be their conscience, and are thus led from the path of rectitude. Daniel was a man of principle. With him duty stood above position and even life itself.

In these days, as never before, our young just entering on the stage of action should study to know the right, and then fearlessly follow it, though the heavens fall. This cannot be done in the strength of man alone, but He who conquered all has said, "I will strengthen thee with all might." Will we let him? W. E. C.

John Bunyan and Religious Liberty.

THERE are few people who have not read "Pilgrim's Progress," by John Bunyan. He was a wonderful man in many respects, as those who have read the history of his life know. He was brought up to attend the National Church of England. When he grew to manhood he dissented and united with the Baptists, and became a popular lay preacher. During this time, a civil law was enacted demanding that all, without regard to distinction or religious conviction, should attend the National Church, and this he refused to do, but continued preaching, and for these two reasons was cast into Bedford jail, where he was kept for twelve years.

So good a man as he naturally had many friends who did all they could to liberate him, but as the law had to be obeyed(?), and as he would not comply with its conditions, nothing could be done for him. On one occasion, the justices sent their clerk to admonish him and demand his submission, when the following conversation took place:—

"Clerk.—I came to tell you that it is desired that you would submit yourself to the laws of the land, or during the next session it will go worse with you.

"Bunyan.—I desire to demean myself in the world both as becometh a man and a Christian.

"Clerk.—You must leave off those meetings you were wont to have, for the statute is directly against it.

"Bunyan.—The law by which I am in prison neither reaches me nor my meetings, being directed against those who meet for wicked and treasonable purposes.

"Clerk.—Are you willing to stand in the judgment of the church?

"Bunyan.—Yes, sir, to the approbation of the church of God; the church's judgment is best expressed in Scripture.

"Clerk.—You know that the Scripture saith, 'The powers that be are ordained of God.'

"Bunyan.—Yes; and that I am to submit to the king as supreme, and also to the governors as to them that are sent by him.

"Clerk.—Well, then, the king commands you that you have no private meetings, because it is against his law; and he is ordained of God, therefore you should not have any meetings.

"Bunyan.—Paul owned the powers that were in his day to be of God, and yet he was often in prison under them for all that. And also, though Jesus Christ told Pilate that he had no power against him but of God, yet he died under the same Pilate; and yet I hope you will not say that either Paul or Christ did deny magistracy,

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES . . .

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des. Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

Is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library;

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest.

Pocket Library is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words. Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But not all of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price. . . . $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

50 YEARS'
EXPERIENCE.

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS,
DESIGNS,
COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain, free, whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Oldest agency for securing patents in America. We have a Washington office. Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice in the

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,

beautifully illustrated, largest circulation of any scientific journal, weekly, terms $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Specimen copies and HAND-BOOK ON PATENTS sent free. Address

MUNN & CO.,
361 Broadway, New York.

and so sinned against God, in slighting the ordinance. Sir, the law provides two ways of obeying; the one to do that which in my conscience I do believe that I am to do actively; and where I cannot obey actively, then I am willing to lie down and suffer what they may do to me." —Life and Times of John Bunyan.

These answers challenge the admiration of every lover of principle. His last reply contains the whole secret of the course to be pursued by Christians in their relation to civil laws. He says, "The law provides two ways of obeying; the one to do that which in my conscience I do believe that I am to do actively; and where I cannot obey actively; then I am willing to lie down and suffer what they may do to me."

Don't Forget the Post Office Address.

WE have before called attention to the frequent failure of subscribers when requesting a change of address, to give their present post office address. Quite often, too, the parties forget to sign their names. This is called out by two communications, one from H. C. Jones, who requests the SENTINEL changed from his address to another party, in Oklahoma, but fails to tell where the paper is now going. Not knowing the present post office address, it is like "looking for a needle in a haystack" to find it. He should let us know where he now resides. Another from Hudson (State not given) writes: "Inclosed please find $1 for your valuable paper. I can't afford to be without it longer. John Brown." Now, there are twenty-six Hudsons in the United States, and we presume that in each place there is a John Brown, but which one of these paid his dollar it would be hard to determine at this end of the line. A word of caution is perhaps all that is necessary.

MR. SUMNER T. MERRILL, of Melrose, Minnesota. a warm friend of the SENTINEL, writes: "I like the Religious Liberty for Young People department in the SENTINEL very much. I am glad to learn that the SENTINEL list increased so materially. I am sorry, however, that it wasn't a hundred times as large. The person who does not read the AMERICAN SENTINEL suffers a loss which can not be filled with another paper that I know of."

AMONG the interesting publications that come to our desk, we may mention the Sunday School Times, published weekly at Philadelphia, Pa., price $1.50 per year. Each issue is filled with the brightest thoughts and most practical suggestions from the most successful Sunday-school workers in the land. No one interested directly or indirectly in Sabbath-school work, and especially officers of an organized school, can well afford to be without this journal. Many single issues are worth more than the price of the paper for a year. Write for sample copies, which will be sent free for examination, mentioning the SENTINEL.

The Nebraska Sanitarium.

ON another page will be found the displayed advertisement of the Nebraska Sanitarium, located at College View, a suburb of Lincoln, Nebraska. This institution is one of quite a number in the chain, all patterned after and substantially under the same management as the great Battle Creek (Mich.) Sanitarium, the largest and most successful of its kind in the United States, or indeed in the world. The Nebraska Sanitarium is thoroughly equipped with all modern conveniences for the care of the sick, is supplied with skilled physicians and trained nurses, and those suffering from chronic or other troubles are assured of relief if it can be secured anywhere. Prices are reasonable. Those interested are invited to send for catalogue and any further information desired, addressing Dr. A. N. Loper, Superintendent, College View, Nebraska.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE
International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

A MARVEL IN BIBLE MAKING.

Large Type S. S. Teachers' SELF-PRONOUNCING COMBINATION BIBLE.

Containing the King James and the Revised Versions on the Same Page. Showing in Simple Form all Changes, Additions and Omissions, and Enabling all Readers to See at a Glance wherein the Two Versions Differ.

Both Versions Combined Without Duplicating.

The King James Version, set in full and conforming exactly to the Oxford Teachers' Edition, and, wherever a change occurs, the letters r. v., referring to a foot-note at the bottom of the page, showing the reading as it appears in the Revised Version. Thus, in the same book, we have both the King James and the Revised Versions, complete and intact, without materially increasing the size of the volume or reducing the size of the type. Both printed together in the same column, showing the differences at a glance, and enabling the reader to practically read both at one and the same time; or, in other words, consuming in the comparative reading of the two texts not more than one-half the time required in the old way.

EITHER VERSION ALONE OR BOTH TOGETHER.

The great point of excellence in this arrangement is that while it enables one to read both Versions in almost exactly the same time, it does not mar, or in any way hinder, the reading of the King James Version alone and independently, where one does not care to refer to the revisions.

How to Read the Combination Bible.

Below is part of page 608 of our Combination Bible. The following Key shows how it is to be read:

KEY—The first RV on page 608 appears in verse 37 of the 9th chapter, before "dominion." In the King James Version the reading is "dominion over our bodies," etc. By referring to the foot-notes it will be seen that the word "dominion" is changed to "power." Hence the Revised Version reads "power over our bodies," etc.

In the 38th verse the King James reads, "because of all this;" by reference to foot of page it will be seen that the Revised Version reads, "yet for all this."

In verse 28 there is an RO, which denotes an omission. Refer to the foot-notes and "(having)" will be found. Every omission is placed in a parenthesis in the foot-notes, and the Revised Version in this instance reads, "every one that had knowledge and understanding."

Thus it is seen that the Revised Version is easily read in connection with the King James Version. The system is so simple and so easily understood that no reader finds any difficulty in comparing one version with the other.

Specimen of Type used in the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Size of Page 5 x 7 3/4 inches.

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.	B. C. 445.	all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{ro} having understanding;
38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant; and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.	Deut. 23. 48. 2 Kin. 23. 3. 2 Chr. 29. 10; 34. 31. Ezra 10. 3. ch. 10. 29. 2 Heb. are at the sealings, or, sealed, ch. 10. 1.	29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;
CHAPTER X.		30 And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:
1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 29 The points of the covenant.	3 Heb. at the sealings, ch. 9. 28. a ch. 8. 9. 4 Or, the governor. b ch. 1. 1. c See ch. 12. 1-21.	31 ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not
Now ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah, ² ^c Sēr-a-ī'ah, Āz-a-rī'ah, Jēr-e-mī'-ah, ³ Pāsh'ūr, Ām-a-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah, ⁴ Hāt'tūsh, Shēb-a-nī'ah, Māl'luch, ⁵ Hā'rim, Mēr'e-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah, ⁶ Dān'jēl, Gīn-nē-thon, Bā'ruch, ⁷ Mē-shūl'am, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'a-mīn,

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Jeshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nethinim.—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

The Bible Closed.

BINDING.

Imperial Seal, Tuck Edges, known as the "Divinity Circuit," Leather Lined, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges.

This is a regular

$8 Bible,

Something unique,
and a good one.

It will be mailed postpaid
on receipt of only

$4.00.

Agents Wanted.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 30, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 38.
Single Copy. 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

"HAST thou faith? have it to thyself before God."

Not right, but rights, are properly enforceable by legislation.

To invade the rights of a single individual, of whatever race or belief, is contrary to the interests of the whole community.

THE Sabbath was made for man, but not by man; and He who made the Sabbath, and not he for whom it was made, may rightfully legislate concerning it.

LEGISLATION which is simply for the majority, is often oppressive to the individual; but that which is for the individual can never be against the interests of the majority.

GRAMMARIANS teach that there is a decided difference between "a man" and "the man;" but theologians teach that there is no difference between "a seventh day" and "the seventh day." Which is right?

THE more of the spirit of brotherly love and helpfulness toward the unfortunate there is in the land, the more prosperity it will have; and without this it will not have prosperity though every ship which enters its harbors should come loaded down with gold.

THERE is a wide difference between stating facts, and condemning men. Facts in which are involved the conduct of men, may be plainly stated without at all judging or condemning the men who are connected with the facts. In other words, principles can be dealt with without reference to men.

THERE are two things which have been long and earnestly sought, the discovery of which may be expected to be announced on the same day; namely, a perpetual motion, and the Scripture which states that Sunday is the Sabbath.

To believe that the so-called wrist bone of St. Ann can work miracles is a great exhibition of credulity; but still greater credulity is required to believe that this bone could (and actually did) manufacture itself. If it could do the latter, there is no question but that it can do the former.

"Follow Thou Me."

THE work of Christians is not to set other people straight, but to keep themselves straight.

"My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation."

To assume mastership over others is only to incur condemnation, therefore the more masters, the more condemnation.

"One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth."

"So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God. Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way."

Thus the Lord intends every disciple to be "quiet and to do his own business," and not to be "a busybody in other men's matters." In other words, the Lord instructs and expects his people to mind their own business and to let other people's business alone.

This is the only true course of Christian conduct. Accordingly, he says, "Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." The Christian has nothing to do with making paths for the feet of other people: he is to make straight paths for his own feet. By going straight himself, any man can do far more to help the weak and those that are out of the way than he can by going out of the way to set the others straight.

This is well illustrated in the last instance recorded in the book of John: Jesus said to Peter, "Follow me." "Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following. . . . Peter, seeing him, saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me."

The Lord said to one man, "Follow me." Instead of doing so, he turned about to see what another man was doing. But when he had turned about, it was impossible to follow Jesus that way; for no man can follow Christ backward.

More than this, he would not have seen the other man if he had not taken his eyes off Jesus and turned about from following him. Thus every man has to take his eyes off Jesus and turn from following him, before he can raise questions about the conduct of other men.

And when this man had turned about from Jesus and so saw the other man, what was that other man doing?—Oh, he was following Jesus—he was doing the very thing that the Lord had told the first man to do. But the first man, instead of doing what he was told by his Master to do, turned away from that to question about the other man who was doing the very thing that he himself had been told by the Lord to do, but which he had turned away from doing. Thus it is always with those professed Christians who think it devolves upon them to set other people straight.

But this man, with all others, got the answer from the Lord: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me." In other words, what the other man shall do is none of your business; your business is to follow me.

Therefore, this principle is, Make straight paths, not for the other man's feet, but for your own feet. It is true that the lame need help and guidance in the straight and narrow way. But you can do infinitely more to help them thus, by making straight paths for your own feet, than by undertaking to make straight paths for their feet.

Again, it is written, "Take heed to thyself, and to the doctrine; continue in them, for in so doing thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." You can do infinitely more to save others, by taking heed to yourself, than you can by taking heed to the other man.

Note, too, that you are to take heed to yourself even before taking heed to doctrine. No man is qualified to take heed to doctrine till he has taken good heed to himself. Take heed to thyself, make straight paths for your feet, follow Christ yourself, first of all things, then the doctrine will be of benefit; but without this the doctrine will be of no benefit to you nor to anybody else so far as you are concerned.

Yet some man will say, "What! are we not our brother's keeper?"—Yes, we are; and this is the only right way to be that. Please remember that it was Cain to whom the inquiry came, "Where is thy brother?"

If Cain had himself followed the Lord; if Cain had kept his eyes on Christ and off his brother, instead of off Christ and on his brother; if Cain had made straight paths for his own feet, instead of trying to make a path for the other man's feet; if Cain had taken heed to himself, instead of taking heed to the other man, then this inquiry never would have come to him. He would then have proved such a faithful keeper of his brother that he would have been only a constant blessing to his brother, and approved and accepted of God as a true worshiper.

Remember, too, that, like so many of those others who are ever meddling with other people, and who think their place in the world is to set other people straight, Cain was a professor of religion. He considered himself the only true worshiper, and that whoever did not choose to conform to his views of conduct must be compelled to do so. And if they still chose to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, they were considered not fit to live. And as at that time there was no civil government which he might make the instrument of his wicked will, and behind which he might shield himself with the plea that he was "only enforcing the law," he was obliged to carry it through himself. And he did.

And though professed Christians to day do have civil government which they can make the instrument of their will in requiring others to conform to their views of conduct, and behind which they can shield themselves with the miserable excuse that they are "only enforcing the law," this does not in the least relieve them of the essential character and guilt of Cain. For thus it is written: "Woe unto them, for they have gone in the way of Cain."

A Man of Peace.

THE Christian is emphatically a man of peace. The whirl of political strife, the agitations which mark the contest of class with class, the rumbling of coming storms which distract statesmen and fill the hearts of men with fear, pass him by unscathed. In his heart there is peace. He stands upon a foundation that cannot be moved, which is the Word of God.

To every servant of the living God the divine word is given, "Fear not." The commotions that fill this world, or the worst that can come, are powerless to sever him from the steadfast purpose of God which embraces not only his existence here, but a future one that runs throughout eternity. All earthly agencies of evil are powerless to take him out of the hands of God. "There is no power but of God," and of that power he is not afraid, for to him it is the agency of salvation. The gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

The Christian will never think of stirring up strife and revolution. He has nothing to gain in that way. His work depends not upon the power of votes nor the force of arms, but upon the Spirit of his God. He will be accused of fermenting rebellion and treason, but there will be in the charge no more truth than was in the charge brought by the Jews against Christ before Pontius Pilate.

AND I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him. . . . These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh. Rev. 19:19-21.

The Power of the Church.

Power belongs, and rightly belongs, to the church of Jesus Christ.

But it is not the power of this world nor of anything that is connected with this world.

Before the Lord Jesus left his church to ascend to heaven, he said to them, "Tarry ye in Jerusalem till ye be endued with power from on high."

It is power from on high, and only from on high, that belongs to the church of Christ. If she has not this power, whatever else she may have, she is only weakness itself for any good in the world.

This power from on high is given directly from heaven to the church. It does not come through the number, wealth, nor influence of its adherents; it does not come by means of society, the State, nor any other mediumship whatever.

Before he went away from the earth Christ, the Head of the Church, said to his disciples, "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." This is the only power, and the only means of power, that belongs to the church of Christ.

And this power is open full and free to believers and the church to-day, as it was on the day of Pentecost so long ago. God poured out his Spirit then to believers and his church, without measure, and he has never taken it back. There is just as much of the Spirit of God in the world to-day as there was on the evening of the day of that wonderful Pentecost.

Why then does not the church have this power as abundantly as she did on that Pentecost?—The answer is easy: The world cannot receive the Spirit of God. He is not the spirit of the world, he is the Spirit of God. The God whose the Holy Spirit is, and who gives the Holy Spirit, is not "the god of this world." The Spirit of God cannot be received while retaining the spirit of the world. The church has too much of the spirit of the world to have the fullness of the Spirit of God.

The Lord started his church in the world with the full endowment of his Holy Spirit. His church was at that time entirely separated from the world: for Jesus said, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." Complete separation from the world was an essential condition—precedent to receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit; and complete separation from the world was essential to retain that precious gift.

But there came "a falling away." The influence, the numbers, and the power of the world were sought after. Men arose from among the believers who desired to multiply disciples for worldly honor. They perverted the right way, they spoke perverse things to draw away disciples after them. They succeeded in this bad ambition: disciples were drawn after themselves in such numbers that the leaders found it impossible to maintain discipline among them.

If the Holy Spirit had been retained and courted and honored, the genuine discipline of the Lord would have been maintained through the prevailing love of God, the unity of the Spirit, and the bond of peace. In order that this might be so, it was necessary to separate completely from the world. But the professed church of Christ had gone after the world, she had courted the world, and had won the world. And now she found herself unable to control the world which she had won.

To hold her own with the world which she had won, she must have power. She had separated from "the power from on high" when she went after the world and courted the world. If she would have this power again, she must separate from the very world which she had won, but which she found herself powerless to control.

Here was a dilemma. What should she do? Power she must have. The "power from on high" was as fully and freely open to her as it was at Pentecost and onward. This she could have in all its fullness as at the first. But alas! she could not have this and the world too. The world cannot receive the Spirit of God. Would she not separate from this world, even from the world which she had won, that she might drink to everlasting fullness of "the powers of the world to come"?

No, she would not. She would go still farther from the power from on high. She would go still farther toward the world. She had courted and won the world, she would now court and win the power of this world, that she might control the world which she had already won. She would go as far as it was possible to go from the power from on high: she herself would become a world power.

All this she did. She secured an illicit union with the State. She committed fornication with the kings of the earth. She ruled the world with the world's power in its fullness, unrestrained. And she ruled the world with the world's power, as this world's power, unrestrained, rules —wickedly, despotically, abominably. She herself became the very “mistress of witchcraft and the mother of abominations.”

The professed church of Christ is again, to-day, sorely in need of power. She knows it. Again she has so far won the world that she finds herself in need of power to control the world which she has won. What now will she do? Already, on every hand, there are too many tokens of the disposition to go the full length of the first apostasy—she is grasping for the power of the world, she is seeking illicit connection with the State, she desires to rule the world with the world's power, she is giving evidence that she herself desires to be a world power.

But the power from on high still, even to-day, awaits her demand and reception. There is as much of the Holy Spirit, as much of the power of the Holy Ghost, in the world to-day as there was at the close of the day of Pentecost long ago. And still the world cannot receive Him. Let the church to-day separate from the world and from all worldliness, and she can be endued with power from on high, she can be filled with the Holy Ghost.

He that believeth on me, saith the Lord, from his body “shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake he of the Spirit which they that believe on him should receive.” Do you believe on Him? Then, “Receive ye the Holy Ghost,” “whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.”

“Ye are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I have chosen you out of the world.” “Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God.” It is simply a choice that all people are free to make, whether they will have the spirit of the world or the Spirit of God. And all people are always making the choice.

But Christians, by that very name, profess to have made the choice of the Spirit of God and not of the spirit of the world. And yet so many of them incline to the spirit of the world, defer to the world, and desire the favor and approval of the world, that it is impossible for the Spirit to witness with their spirit that they are the children of God.

If the churches and religious organizations and combinations in the United States would seek for the power from on high as earnestly as they seek the power of the police, of the courts, and of the world generally; if they would petition God for the Holy Spirit as diligently as they petition Congress and the State legislatures for Sunday laws, there would be such a reformation in religion as the world has never seen since the days of the first apostles, and the world would know of a surety that God sent Christ to be the Saviour of the world. Why will they not do it?

To follow Christ and at the same time follow a political “boss,” is as impossible as it is to serve God and mammon. And to eliminate the “boss” from politics is equally impossible. But Christianity knows no “boss.”

A Call to Arms.

ONE of the resolutions passed at the recent labor convention in St. Louis, is the following:—

“Resolved, That no nation in which the people are totally disarmed can long remain a free nation, and therefore we urge upon all liberty-loving citizens to remember and obey Article II of the Constitution of the United States, which reads as follows: ‘The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.’”

The significance of this resolution, in a convention of the nature of that which assembled at St. Louis, cannot be misunderstood. In one of the speeches which preceded it, and which struck a responsive chord throughout the assembly, it was said that “civil liberty is dead in America,” that it was useless to appeal to the courts, and that the only appeal left was to the country; and that “we no longer have a republic; there is not a vestige of it left.”

Will the “return of prosperity” make the antagonistic forces of labor and capital feel any better disposed toward each other? If not, then it will do little to stay the progress of coming revolution.

Will It Steer Clear?

THE New York Voice, in speaking of the growth of “Christian Endeavor,” says:—

“So far the Christian Endeavor movement has escaped the reaction which generally has followed such a marvelous and rapid growth in other organizations. Numerically it continues to be the greatest thing in modern religious activity. Meeting a growing demand for less division and more union on the part of Christians, it has more than met the ardent expectations of its most ardent admirers. If it can steer clear of the rock on which moral organizations wreck their usefulness, and that pride in the mere power of numbers, its future days may be its best days in advancing the cause of Christ's kingdom in the world.”

In every work in which the Endeavor movement follows the example set by Him whom it recognizes as Lord and Master, we wish it the fullest success. And what care should be exercised by those entrusted with the leadership of this great host, to prevent any departure from the path marked out by Him! What care should be taken to safeguard it from the wiles of unscrupulous men who have some political or religious axe to grind, and see in this movement a splendid opportunity to get possession of the power required for their purposes.

Will the Christian Endeavor host avoid becoming intoxicated by a realization of their own power? Will they remember that power and numbers do not constitute proof that their cause is either strong or right? For they only are on the side of strength and right—they only are in the majority—who are on the side of God.

We hope so. But if they do—if they “steer clear of the rock on which moral organizations wreck their usefulness"—they must steer clear of the would-be leaders who are even now endeavoring with all their energies to draw the Endeavor host down from the heights of true Christian activity to the plane of politics.

Will they depend upon the promise of the power of Him who has said, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world"? or will they depend upon the power of votes? Politics recognizes no other power, and depends upon no other, than the latter.

ASK of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Ps. 2:8,9.

Governmental Recognition of God.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

BY A. G. DANIELLS.

THE proposal of the churches to secure the formal recognition of God in the Constitution . . . demands the most serious consideration; for it involves the gravest consequences.

We believe that God is, and that his existence and authority ought to be recognized by every intelligent being in the universe.

Nevertheless, we cannot approve of the proposal to make a formal recognition of God in the constitution of any civil government. The whole idea is wrong, and the consequences must be disastrous.

In proof of this we submit the following simple, undeniable facts:—

The recognition of God is an act of faith. Heb. 11:6.

A statement of that recognition is a declaration of faith. Matt. 16:15, 16.

To incorporate in the constitution of a civil government a recognition of God, or a declaration of faith, is to insert a religious clause.

To insert a religious clause in the constitution is to give the government a religious basis.

A religious basis confers power for religious legislation.

Power to legislate on matters of religion implies power to execute religious laws.

Power to execute religious laws means compulsion in matters of religion.

To compel the conscience in religious matters is to invade the rights of men.

To invade the rights of men is to subvert good government, whose primary object is to protect those rights.

Thus it is proved that—

To insert a religious clause or a declaration of religious belief in the constitution of a civil government lays the foundation for the subversion of that government.

It is difficult to see how any one can reasonably deny the correctness of these propositions. They are self-evident.

1. To recognize God is to believe in him. This is the foundation stone of the Christian religion. "Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is." Heb. 11:6.

2. And is it not true that a statement (whether oral or written) of our recognition of God is a declaration of our faith? The first article in the creeds of all churches is a declaration of faith in God.

3. Now to incorporate in the constitution of a civil government a statement of a recognition of God, or a declaration of faith in God, is to insert in that constitution a religious clause. It is practically to insert the first article of all church creeds. Why not insert the thirty-nine articles? It would be just as logically consistent.

4. To make a declaration of faith or insert a religious clause in the constitution is to give the government a religious basis. The constitution of a government is its basis; and if it contains religious elements, the basis of the government is religious.

5. A religious basis confers power for religious legislation. The legislative, judicial, and executive powers of the government are conferred by the constitution. If religion be made a part of the constitution or basis of the government, the foundation is laid for religious legislation.

6. That which gives the government permission to make religious laws, gives authority to enforce those laws; for legislative power implies executive power.

7. Power to execute religious laws means compulsion in matters of religion. The enforcement of law means either obedience or penalty.

8. To compel the conscience in matters of religion is to invade the rights of men. This is contrary to the gospel. Christ said, "If any man believe not, I judge him not." Paul inquires, "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth." God says, "Whosoever will, let him come and take the water of life freely." God has created the mind free to believe or not to believe as each may choose. This is an inherent right of every man. To compel his conscience is to invade his right.

9. To invade the rights of men is to subvert the government, whose chief object is to protect those rights.

Now if these propositions are true, and we do not see how any of them can be disproved, it is plain that to insert a religious clause in the constitution of a civil government will lay the foundation for the destruction of that government.

God has never asked for recognition in a State document.

The True Recognition of God.

"Southern Sentinel," Melbourne, Aus.

God is worthy of the grateful recognition of every intelligence in the universe. We believe, too, that there are proper lines on which we should seek to express and secure such recognition. But we do not believe that the formal recognition of God in civil and political compacts is the proper means for the expression of such recognition.

That is not the kind of recognition God asks. It is not the kind that will honor him. Nor is it the kind that will benefit the nation.

The recognition that God asks of men is personal faith in him and obedience to his just requirements. To recognize God truly means to recognize the sacred rights he has conferred upon men. The only true governmental recognition of God that can be made is for the government to recognize the teachings of Christ regarding the total separation of Church and State, and to frame such laws as will safeguard the rights and liberties of all its citizens.

Saturday vs. Monday in the Public Schools.

THE policy of the Public School Board of Litchfield, Minn., recently came in conflict with the religious views of some of the residents in that vicinity, in what appears to be a rather curious case. It seems that a portion of the community became of the opinion that it would be well to make Monday a holiday in the schools in the place of Saturday, and just before the opening of the schools the Board voted that this should be done. As a reason for this action it was said that the pupils rarely had good lessons on Monday, as Sunday was devoted to recreation and religion rather than to study; and that when pupils did study on Sunday, they were scolded for it by the teachers whenever the fact came to the latter's knowledge. Hence it was concluded to try the experiment of transferring the usual Saturday holiday to Monday.

This action by the Board called out the following petition, which was circulated and received numerous signatures in the vicinity:—

"To the Litchfield School Board of Education—

"WHEREAS, Your honorable body propose to change from the established custom of holding school on Monday, and holding it on Saturday instead, and—

"WHEREAS, We would prefer the old plan, believing it to be the better for various reasons, and—

"WHEREAS, It works injustice to some of our citizens who conscientiously observe Saturday as the Sabbath, thus depriving them of one day of school and also of the privilege of teaching in the public schools, and—

"WHEREAS, We believe that a law that works an injustice to even a few, depriving them of their rights and liberties, is wrong and should be abolished; we humbly petition your honorable body to discontinue the proposed plan and hold school as formerly."

The result was that at their next meeting the school board reconsidered their previous action in the matter, and the Monday holiday innovation was dropped.

Divine and Human.

BY E. J. WAGGONER.

THE demand for Sunday laws illustrates just the difference between the Sabbath and Sunday. Sunday was made a rest day by human authority, and human authority is resorted to in order to make men keep it. The Sabbath of the Lord is the Lord's day, made the day of Sabbath rest by divine authority.

The Word maintains the Sabbath, and all the powers of earth cannot overthrow it. Of Sunday it is freely said that it is endangered if not protected by human law.

Religious people testify in court that they are disturbed if they see some one working on Sunday, especially if he keeps the Sabbath; while one who keeps the Sabbath may enjoy perfect Sabbath rest in the Lord with all the world at work.

The difference is that between purely human religion and divine religion. One day is God's appointed rest, and the power of the gospel is sufficient to establish it in the hearts of all who desire it. The other day belongs to the papacy by best right, and has to be enforced by papal methods. One is the sign of God's power to save, the other of man's assumed power to save himself. The Sabbath stands for justification by faith, the Sunday for justification by works.

All Nations Idolatrous.

BY A. SMITH.

THE four great leading nations of the world that have come in touch with the interests of the people of God (Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome), in their unity and in their divisions, are represented in the Bible by a great image. See Daniel 2. This image symbolizes the idolatrous element that runs down through them all to the end of time, or until Christ will have destroyed them at his second coming.

It is usual to class those only as idolators who render formal worship to images or objects in nature. But, according to the tenor of Bible testimony, any interest in social or private life that is of greater importance to any one than God's will in the matter, thereby becomes an idol; and such interest expressed in deeds becomes idolatry.

Jesus said, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Matt. 6:24.

Paul says, "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry." Col. 3:5.

According to the Saviour's declaration and Paul's inspired exhortation, there is not a single nation of this world into whose constituents there enters an indulgence of any one of the sins enumerated but is thereby rendered an idolatrous nation in the sight of God; and no amount of legislative tinkering can transform such a government into a Christian nation.

Groping in the Dark.

BY L. W. FELTER.

A GREAT many, and perhaps we might say, the majority of the people, realize that this nation is rapidly approaching a crisis on the question of capital and labor; that this is becoming a leading issue is manifested by conversations, by speeches, and by writings, and by tragic events.

"The Most High" who "ruleth in the kingdoms of men," has not only told us beforehand that the present industrial situation would come; but when it would come, and what it would mean when it should come. Thus, we read in the fifth chapter of James, beginning with the first verse: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; . . . ye have heaped treasures together in the last days." R. V.

This scripture has been literally fulfilled in the last third of a century, during which time the wealth of the nations has been concentrating into the hands of a favored few who have "heaped" to themselves the most stupendous fortunes on record. Therefore in what days are we living?—They must be the last.

As the wealth is being "heaped together" by the "trusts" and other combines, what will be the financial condition of the masses?—They will be growing poorer. Then might they be expected to complain of the "hard times," and combine to resist the exactions of the money power as they are doing at the present time?—Yes. And that is just what the next verse says: "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth." Yes; and the cry is heard on every hand, and many are asking themselves the question, "What will the outcome of it all be?" See the prophecy of Habbakuk, chapter 2, verses 5-8.

The first part of these prophecies is seen by everybody, but instead of believing the word of the Lord in reference to the last part, men are groping around in the dark, seeking for a solution of the question through the wisdom of man.

There is a book going the rounds entitled, "President John Smith," in which an imaginary story of a "peaceful revolution" is told in glowing terms. But when puny man seeks to exalt his wisdom above the plain "Thus saith the Lord," the fallacy of his reasoning is apparent. Thus he says:—

"I have an abiding faith in government, in the will of the majority, in wise paternalism, in scientific nationalism. I believe in the people. I believe that the great heart of the people is kind, loving, and unselfish. . . . I distrust the individual. He is selfish. He is often dishonest and corruptible. He is easily misled and influenced."

But what is the "people" but an aggregation of individuals? Then if the individual is "selfish," often "dishonest" and "corruptible," "easily misled and influenced," what can a body politic be composed of such individuals? And is it not a fact that "selfishness" is the root of the whole evil?

Therefore the only peaceful and abiding solution of the problem is in the coming of Him the scepter of whose kingdom is a scepter of righteousness; from the hearts of whose subjects the principle of selfishness has been completely and forever eradicated.

Peter says, "We have the word of prophecy made more sure; whereunto ye do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." R. V. Then why not walk in light instead of groping about in the dark; in a vain endeavor to discover something that does not exist?

Government by Injunction.

THE danger to American liberty which lies in the evidently growing use of the court injunction—usually in cases of conflicts between capital and labor—is thus stated by that very conservative journal, the Springfield Republican:—

"Thus the judge of his own motion becomes prosecutor, jury, and judge, and all the usual machinery and safeguards of justice are swept away. What would be said of an equity judge who should enjoin all people from committing any unlawful acts? Then unlawful acts would first become contempts of court, and the victims would be subject to prosecution, trial, and punishment by the judge alone. The enormity of such a proceeding is palpable."

THERE is no relaxation of the persecution of dissenters from the State church in Russia. It is now reported that "a congress of high Russian ecclesiastics of the Greek Catholic denomination is considering measures to 'stop the spread of sectarianism,' by which is meant the teaching of any other than the orthodox religion. The ecclesiastics have decided to ask the government to restrain the adherents of Tolstoi as 'dangerous to the Church and State.' They also propose to take away the children of the unorthodox and educate them as Catholics. One bishop went so far as to suggest that the property of dissenters be confiscated."

NEWS, NOTES AND COMMENT

THE only fat villain in standard fiction is the "Count Fosco," whom Mr. Wilkie Collins introduced in his fine novel, "The Woman in White." Mr. Collins, it is said, was proud of this creation because all the imaginary villains of previous authors were of lean build. But the Count has another title to pre-eminence and immortality besides his physical stoutness. He was a chemist of thorough education, and a thinker of no slight ability. His philosophy, like the philosophy of other villains, was of the materialistic school—that being, indeed, the only school of philosophy in which your true and complete villain can find any solid comfort for his soul.

ON one occasion, expounding the tenets of his faith, the Count observed, "Mind, they say, rules the world; but what rules the mind?—The body." And he goes on to claim that if he could order the breakfast of Sir Isaac Newton, he would guarantee that, when, an hour or so after he had finished the meal, the great scientist went out into his orchard and saw the apple fall, instead of proceeding to formulate the law of gravitation, he would simply eat the fruit. Give him, he further asserted, a like jurisdiction in the case of Alexander the Great, and he would cause that monarch to run away at the first sight of the Persian enemy. This little speech of the Count's is about as good a summary of the theory of materialism as has ever been presented.

BUT the trouble about materialism is that it misses the point. The connection between the mind and the body is profoundly interesting, and is now, and must forever remain, apart from revelation, an unsolvable mystery. Nothing is more wonderful than the change which we may effect in the character of a human being, in his views of circumstances, in his desires, his impulses, aye, even his moral sense, merely by putting substances into his stomach. We may easily, by this means, not only render him unable to think or act at all, but, if we please, may cause him to think and act in a manner altogether different from that in which he normally thinks and acts. No man is precisely the same when he is starving as he is after a good meal. Ordinary foods, as well as potent drugs, have a wonderful deal to do with one's opinions and disposition.

BUT here materialistic forces reach the limit of their operation, and the spiritual advances to the fore. However, a man comes to evolve an idea, once that idea is communicated to others, its operation is not only independent of physical laws, but rises superior to them. The results of its promulgation and discussion are neither to be weighed, or measured, or estimated by any human means or instrumentality. Its power may be greater than that of any number of "stubborn facts." Ideas bend the external world to their will. Napoleon to the contrary notwithstanding, Providence is not always on the side of the heaviest artillery. Men full of patriotic enthusiasm, or religious fervor, or inspired by a dominating sense of duty in any cause, will carry by storm the most powerful batteries defended by soldiers whose hearts are not in the fight.

"MAN shall not live by bread alone, but by ideas." And by these shall he also perish. "The lethal side of mankind," as Mr. Stevenson calls it, is the side of evil ideas, or of wrong ideas; to submit one's life to the influence and guidance of such ideas is to invite destruction. Many ideas are to the mind what indigestible food is to the stomach. Right ideas are like good, strong, wholesome, nourishing food; their tendency is to preserve, to increase strength, and promote development.

HENCE the tremendous, the transcendent importance to the race of correct thinking. Hence the exalted and exacting mission of those who battle for this thing. As the mind is more important than the body, so is the function of him who undertakes to commend or discredit ideas among men far above the business of one who sells his fellows flour or meats or vegetables.

THE present young emperor of Germany appreciates very keenly this importance of ideas. On a recent occasion he quite outdid himself in his effort to emphasize and impress on the minds of his people his favorite idea of "divine right" as the source of his position and authority. In so many words, he announced that he had received his crown from Deity direct, and acknowledged no responsibility to any other quarter for the manner in which it might please him to administer the office which had thus been bestowed upon him. The people of Germany have heard their young master talk this way before, and no particular attention was attracted by this last manifesto, extreme as it was.

BUT one of the corner stones of our American polity is the fixed belief that the idea of having people to rule over us by divine right is a wrong idea, and ought to be rejected. We believe that the application of this idea tends to enslave the souls of men, to suppress humanity, to check its loftier aspirations, to block its progress toward a higher life. With us, there is no emperor to pose as its representative and exponent. Yet, before we pity or sneer at the Germans who listen in patience to such a claim as Emperor William boldly advances, it is worth while to consider whether this wrong idea of a "divine right" is not somewhat at work in the United States.

WHATEVER the people at large may think, there are among us plenty of clerical advocates of "divine right." Inasmuch as the purpose of these people is to have certain religious dogmas of theirs enacted into laws, and outward compliance with their injunctions enforced by the civil power on other people, who do not believe in them, and thus maintain, pro tanto, a union between their church and the State, they are really obliged to adopt this European notion in their discussions. They are themselves aware of the incongruity between things wholly secular, and a business which is of this world exclusively on the one hand, and a thing which is wholly religious, and a business that is concerned with the "hereafter" on the other. Hence, before they begin to plead for a union of Church and State—or a union of religion and State, according to the latest cant—they seek to throw some mantle of sanctity over the State, and to connect the civil authority with the sanction of divinity.

Thus, with men of this kind, we find that "the consent of the governed," supposedly the source of all American governments, disappears completely, and the European, instead of the American idea, is more or less openly insisted upon by them.

IDEAS are not only too strong for facts; they are also too strong for men. When two ideas are so intimately associated that the acceptance of one of them necessarily involves the acceptance of the other, men who adopt either will find themselves willy nilly advocates of the other. Ask the clerical advocate of a "Sunday law," for example, if he believes that "the consent of the governed is the foundation of all our systems of civil administration," and he will very likely say, "Yes." But set him down to write an article on his favorite theme, and, sooner or later, you will find him trying to locate our statutes and ordinances "in the bosom of God."

THERE is great responsibility resting on the educators of youth in this regard. Our young men ought to have enjoined upon them a respect for the State, and for the law, as institutions which the experience of mankind has demonstrated are necessary, in order to the gratification of the social instinct which the Creator has implanted in the human soul. But nothing is gained by appealing to the European superstition of divine right, even if we substitute the State or the law for the emperor. On the contrary, an essentially false view of the whole fabric of government and of society is in this manner presented—I mean, of course, false from the real American standpoint.

In the domain of the mind, the great struggle is still going on which began centuries ago, between the irreconcilable and antagonistic principles of divine right and consent of the governed. The great glory of our country is that she stands the leader of the fray on the right side. There is no possibility of mixing our polity with any portion of that system to which Europe clings. The slightest taint of connection between the two is evil, and "lethal" for us.

OUR "rulers" are of our own creation, and they are our servants or agents, who, for reasons of our own, we choose to temporarily employ about certain things. They are accountable to us, their masters, not only for what they do in their official positions, but for the way in which they do it. They may or may not possess some peculiar virtues in their personal capacities, but about their public labors we recognize no trace whatever of divine authority. By our sovereign will we call them to account for every delinquency. We reserve to ourselves the right and the power to undo any of their work which happens not to be done according to our liking.

THIS is the American idea. He who seeks to propagate any other is attempting to undermine American liberty, and to nullify the glorious mission of the United States as the apostle and upholder of freedom among men. Only a hopeless fanatic would regard the rigid enforcement of a Sunday law as sufficient gain to offset the formal establishment of "divine right" in the States. But this is just what all clamorers for "the American Sabbath" are doing their best to effectuate.

Ans. J. Ringgold

The Unalienable Right of Conscience.

IN Salt Lake county, Utah, a man named Monk was recently confined by the sheriff in a dungeon and fed on bread and water, for refusing to attend religious services. Mr. Monk had previously been lodged in the jail for a technical offense, and the religious services were those provided for the inmates by the State. When the facts in the case became public, the Board of County Commissioners took action which resulted in Mr. Monk's release from the dungeon and the revocation of the order enforcing attendance upon religious worship.

Even criminals possess unalienable rights; and while they may by their crime forfeit the rights of liberty and even of life, there are no circumstances under which a person may forfeit his right to worship according to the dictates of his conscience.

The Consistent Mohammedan and the Inconsistent "Christian."

A LONDON (Eng.) journal makes the following pertinent comment upon the treatment accorded the Sultan's recent official expression of thanks to God for victory in the war with Greece:—

"The Sultan's official letter, expressing in terms pious and devout his thanks to God and the Prophet Mohammed for his victory in Thessaly, was treated by the press as an amusing document. It seems strange to the West to hear a Mohammedan talking so piously about his success in war. But the letter, with Mohammed's name struck out, might very readily have come from any European ruler after a successful campaign. Do not professedly Christian governments thank God for success in killing their enemies? The Sultan does so at least consistently, as his prophet's religion is Islam and the Sword; but Christians acknowledge the Prophet who said, 'Put up thy sword,' and 'Resist not evil.' Yet in the name of the religion of Jesus guns are dedicated and victories over men wholly unprepared to die are celebrated with religious rejoicings."

The Pope's Army.

IT CONSISTS OF 600 SOLDIERS WHO GUARD THE VATICAN AND GROUNDS.

"Catholic Mirror," Sept. 11.

POPE LEO recently made a speech to a number of former officers of the papal army and it was misquoted all over the world. The Official Gazette of the Vatican promptly corrected the published statements and at the same time gave some interesting data of the papal army of to-day, which is not so insignificant by far as is generally believed.

As the prisoner in the Vatican, Leo XIII employs 600 men to guard the little strip of land and the buildings over which he is still the material as well as the spiritual lord. This army is divided into five corps, the Noble Guards taking the first place. They are recruited from Rome's "black aristocracy," that is, from those "high born" ancient families which remain true to the church despite political changes and ill luck. This troop is about fifty head strong and the Altieri is its commander.

The Swiss form the second corps, which is 100 men strong. They are all picked men, large of stature and heroic in appearance. The secretary of state himself engages them, taking his choice from thousands of candidates who send photographs and descriptions of themselves. Only citizens of the ancient "cantons" of Switzerland are admitted. These Swiss, finely uniformed and armed with Remington rifles, do service in front and about the Vatican as sentinels and guards.

The third troops are recruited from Roman citizens, and is called the Police Guard. On ordinary occasions only their officers do duty, but at State functions, such as visits of royalty and great church festivals, all are under arms. The Police Guard is officered by one general, Commander Crostarosa, two majors, four captains, and eight lieutenants. A corps of gendarmes, 100 in all, constitute the Vatican police. The members of this troop must all be horsemen, though at present they are unmounted.

All these troops are responsible to the papal ministry of arms, which is organized, though on a small scale, like the ministry of war in any of the continental monarchies, having even a special organ, a military weekly, called La Fedelta Cattolica.

Apostolic Succession.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

THE only apostolic succession that the Bible knows anything of is that of apostolic faithfulness in preaching the Word. "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." 2 Tim. 2:2. The important thing was the teaching, and the command of the Lord was that believers should teach all things that he had commanded, even unto the end of the world. "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, . . . preach the Word." He, then, is in the apostolic succession who preaches the Word. A writer has well said:—

"It certainly is very remarkable that the Anglican clergy should claim a special grace of the Holy Spirit coming to them through the worldly, tyrannous, persecuting bishops of the Romish Church in the Middle Ages, and not through the obscure holy martyrs whom they persecuted. Surely, if there was such a line of grace, it would be found in those who were faithful unto death for the truth as it is in Jesus, rather than with those who put to torture and cruel death the saints of God."

Those who suffered at the hands of a worldly church in possession of power were, in that respect at least, in the apostolic succession; for that was the experience of the apostles of the Lord. The tradition of the church puts in the line of apostolic succession the proud prelates of church history who lorded it over God's heritage, often men of the lowest stamp of vileness and criminality; but God places there the unnamed multitudes who overcame "by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death."

As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise. Luke 6:31.

Training for Liberty.

RELIGIOUS liberty is just as essential for young people as it is for the "old folks." Youth is the proper time in life to learn what religious liberty means. How many of the youthful members of families into which the SENTINEL comes, I wonder, can tell what religious liberty is and why it is valuable?

If people do not learn this in their youth, they are very apt not to know it when they grow up, or to lose it because they do not appreciate its value.

Youth is the time in which the real preparation is made for after life. What is thoroughly learned in youth, generally sticks to the individual as long as he lives.

All the life that we live in this world is but a preparation for liberty in the life to come. Why do we need this preparation?—It is because we could not be trusted with liberty without it.

Without liberty, life would not be worth living. And God, who has created us all, designs that we shall have a life that is worth living. So he intends that we shall have perfect liberty.

In youth, we must be trained so that we can be entrusted with liberty. A baby cannot be given its liberty. It must be watched almost constantly to prevent harm from coming to it. A little child must be watched almost as carefully.

But no individual can be watched in everything which concerns his welfare, all through life. The time comes when he must be left to decide things for himself; and even if this were not so, to be under the constant supervision of another in everything would make existence most unpleasant.

So as the child grows up, it should be taught how to enjoy liberty without receiving harm. And in this the chief harm to be guarded against is of course that which can reach it through the avenue of the mind.

The one and only safeguard against such harm is the love of right principles. No harm can be received while these control the mind. Right principles are God's principles, and he has set them forth for all the world in the precepts of his law. This law is called in the Bible the "law of liberty." Only in the pathway of this law can real and perfect liberty be enjoyed. The expression is, therefore, most appropriate.

The right training and education for the child is that which writes this law upon his heart.

In order to receive this training, the child must be taught to exercise his own judgment and conscience. He must be shown the right way, and then left free to choose to walk in it. If he does not, he must, of course, be corrected. But to take away his freedom of choice at the start, would be no benefit to him, but an injury.

Religious liberty means that an individual shall be left free to exercise his own will and conscience in all matters which concern his relation to God. He must have this freedom if his will and conscience are to be developed; and these must be developed, and the development must begin in childhood. It is these that give character to the individual; and childhood is the easiest time to form right character.

So don't think, dear young reader, that religious liberty is something that doesn't concern you, but is only for grown-up people who live where the law forbids them to work on Sunday. Whatever our circumstances in life, we are all forming character by the exercise of the same God-given rights. And at no time are we forming character faster than in youth.

The Protest of the Princes.

You ask in a recent issue who was the author of the words, "Let us reject this decree; in matters of conscience the majority has no power." The expression is what is known as the "Protest of the Princes," and was uttered by the German Christian princes in the year 1529, before the Diet or Council of Spire.

History says that when the Reformation under Martin Luther made headway, it excited the hatred of those against whom the effort was being waged, and at one of the councils Luther was branded as an "outlaw." Although many efforts were made to crush the movement, they were apparently stayed, until in 1526 the Diet of Spire gave each State full liberty in matters of religion until a general council should be called. This was done in 1529, when it was determined to crush out all heresy.

These princes it was hoped could be induced to side against the reformers, but if not, resort would be had to the sword. Reports were circulated that the religious liberty that had been granted was giving rise to numerous disorders, and must be suppressed.

Those who had tasted something of the sweets of religious liberty were not to yield it up without a vigorous protest. A compromise was proposed that permitted preaching to be done, and services to be conducted where the work was already established, but there was to be no aggressive work. This virtually stopped the advancement of the Reformation. To the Diet this compromise appeared as a legal measure, and was passed. To disobey it, meant a struggle, loss of property, title, and possibly death; to accept it meant peace, but with it was the acknowledgment that Rome could coerce conscience and forbid free inquiry.

These noble men cared not for their lives, but for the principle involved; and with a resoluteness born only of faith in a righteous cause, they with one accord exclaimed, "Let us reject this decree; in matters of conscience the majority has no power," and it is from this that we derive the term Protestants—applied to all professed Christians outside of the Catholic Church.

W. ELLSWORTH.

The "Powers That Be."

It is a self-evident truth that all men have been "endowed by the Creator with certain unalienable rights," and that "to protect these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

This self-evident truth is in harmony with the truth stated by the Apostle Paul, in Romans 13:1, that "the powers that be are ordained of God." Truth cannot conflict with itself. That which is ordained of God is the power for the protection of the unalienable rights with which he has endowed each member of the human family.

This is altogether different from ordaining any particular person to exercise power over his fellow creatures. The person in civil office is simply entrusted with the exercise of a portion of this power. This power entrusted to him is not arbitrary power, but only such power as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of his office.

It used to be a common idea that God had ordained certain persons, or a certain line of persons, to be rulers over the rest of the people in the State or nation, and that these persons were privileged to exercise their power in any way that they might choose. This idea gave rise to such expressions as "the divine right of kings," "The king can do no wrong," etc.

But God did not ordain any person to exercise arbitrary power. He himself does not exercise such power.

The power that is in the persons, and not the persons that are in power, is "ordained of God."

It is natural for an individual when in office to take to himself more power than belongs to him; and it is also very common for an individual to get into some seat of power who has no scruples about the manner in which he shall use it. In this way it frequently happens that injustice is done to men by those in positions of power, and their rights, instead of being preserved, are violated.

This is the way it has been in the cases of those who have suffered persecution for conscience' sake. Those in power have exercised the power entrusted to them, for an altogether different purpose than the protection of human rights. They have used it to invade the right of freedom of conscience.

The Bible tells us that we are to be in subjection to the "powers that be," and that whoever "resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God." Rom. 13:1, 2.

But, as we have seen, there is a vast difference between resisting the power which God has ordained, and resisting a decree which represents a perversion of that power.

Yet the Bible does not authorize us to resist even an unjust decree, in the sense of employing force against it. As John Bunyan stated in his reply to the clerk who had been sent to admonish him to submit himself to the king, "The law provides two ways of obeying: the one, to do that which in my conscience I do believe that I am to do, actively; and where I cannot obey actively, then I am willing to lie down and suffer what they may do to me." And Bunyan was even then giving an illustration, in Bedford jail, of this second way of being in submission to the powers that be.

The Lord permits men to exercise power here in this world, but he has not resigned his own power, as the Sovereign who is over and above all things. He intervenes in the affairs of men and overrules their counsels and thwarts their purposes, in whatever way his omniscient wisdom may dictate. The word of the Lord carries with it an authority superior to that of any man or set of men on earth.

The very fact that the power that men exercise is derived from God, is sufficient proof that it cannot be rightfully exercised to compel people to act contrary to God's will.

A good illustration of the truth on this point is furnished us in the case of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. God had himself set Nebuchadnezzar upon the throne of earthly dominion, and commanded all people to be in subjection to him, even the chosen people of Israel. The Lord had even declared that he would punish the nation that would not submit to Nebuchadnezzar. See Jer. 27:4-8.

Yet when Nebuchadnezzar made a decree that the people should bow down and worship the golden image which he had set up in the plains of Dura, the three Hebrew captives, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, flatly refused to obey Nebuchadnezzar's decree, and the Lord by a wonderful miracle upheld them in their refusal and justified their course; so that Nebuchadnezzar himself bowed before the Lord and acknowledged that his own word had been righteously changed in the matter concerning which he had made his decree.

God had raised up Nebuchadnezzar and entrusted him with power for a purpose; not such a purpose as the king might conceive in his own heart and wish to carry out, but for the purpose which God had in his own mind. God did not do this for the sake of exalting Nebuchadnezzar, but he did it in order that he might through Nebuchadnezzar proclaim the knowledge of himself.

The power that is ordained of God is not to be used to thwart the purposes of God. It was so in Nebuchadnezzar's time, and it is so to-day. When this power is exercised, as it should be, to preserve human rights, it cannot interfere with God's plans. But when this power is perverted, and used for a purpose for which it was not ordained, its decrees are not binding upon any person.

But the only way to know what is right, is to be instructed by the Lord, through his Word and Spirit, which are given to guide believers into all truth.

Good Words.

This department was begun in the earnest belief that it would be appreciated by the young friends of the SENTINEL family. We have not been disappointed, for hardly a day goes by that good words for it are not received.

One says: "I am very glad you have decided to place a department for the young people in the SENTINEL. I know it is appreciated by the young people in our church, for they have subscribed for a club of thirty to use in their meetings."

Another friend writes: "The addition of the department for young people will be appreciated by a large class, old as well as young, and this to my mind will make the SENTINEL even a more welcome visitor than ever."

A subscriber in Canada has this to say: "The new department for young people will be a great help. It is a move in the right direction."

Now, what we want, to make this department all that could be desired, is contributions from our young friends. Don't be afraid to express your thoughts on paper. Perhaps they may be crude at first—what matters that? Who ever heard of a finished picture from a single stroke of the brush? There is an immense amount of valuable latent literary talent going to waste all around us, and here is an opportunity to develop it. Who will embrace the opportunity?

An Illustration.

THE Religious Liberty Association recently received a kind letter from a valued friend accompanied by an offering for the work to which this Association is devoted. Speaking of his remittance he says, "As I see the account of the brethren who have been arrested lately, I am impressed that I should send it in."

This seems to us to be a practical manifestation of heart religion. We submit it to the reader's candid consideration as an effective method of fulfilling the Scripture injunction: "Remember them that are in bonds as bound with them." Who among the members of the International Religious Liberty Association will imitate this worthy example?

Some time ago through the columns of the SENTINEL we invited our friends to forward their annual dues. While a goodly number responded, many have thus far failed to do so. May we not hear from such at an early date? Religious liberty literature should be circulated freely in Manitoba where a keen interest has been awakened by the recent arrest of Sabbath-keepers. This unusual opportunity should be utilized.

Soon the legislatures will convene, and another open door will be set before us. We are just informed to-day of the prosecution of a brother in Alabama, and no one can tell how frequent such cases may be. All these things call for labor and the disbursement of funds. Who will coöperate with us in this work while the privilege is still ours to enjoy?

Address International Religious Liberty Association, 39 Bond St., New York.

Our Premium Bible.

WE just want to say that the stock of premium Bibles we are now offering in connection with the SENTINEL one year for $3, is growing less very fast; after they are gone, the offer will be withdrawn, so those who desire to secure a first class Bible cheap would do well to embrace this opportunity very shortly.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES...

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most, if not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

50 YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS,
DESIGNS,
COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain, free, whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Oldest agency for securing patents in America. We have a Washington office. Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice in the

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,
beautifully illustrated, largest circulation of any scientific journal, weekly, terms $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Specimen copies and HAND BOOK ON PATENTS sent free. Address
MUNN & CO.,
361 Broadway, New York.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.
Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

FIGHTING AGAINST

GOD

is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

CATHOLIC TESTIMONY.

THE following tracts and leaflets are direct quotations from those high in authority in the Church of Rome, and can be relied upon as representative testimony.

From Sabbath to Sunday.

Contains, among other important testimony, Father Enright's $1,000 challenge for Bible proof of Sunday sacredness. Price, ½ cent.

Who Changed the Sabbath?

This question is disposed of by adducing evidences from Catholic sources. Price, 1½ cents.

Christian Sabbath.

A reprinted article from the Catholic Mirror, which paper is the organ of the Catholic Church in the United States. It puts forth the question "Why Do Protestants Keep Sunday?" Price, 2 cents.

A Challenge to Protestants.

A pithy little leaflet quoting some strong words from a representative Catholic priest to the Protestant world. Price, 25 cents per 100.

Rome's Arraignment of Sabbath-Breakers.

This is a report of a sermon delivered by Father O'Keefe, a Baltimore Catholic priest, in which two facts are set forth and from a Scriptural standpoint. (1) That the only Bible Sabbath is the seventh day or Saturday. (2) That for first day observance or sacredness, there is no Bible warrant. Sixteen well filled pages, 1 cent.

The Law of God as Changed by the Papacy.

A chart 5½ x 11 inches, printed on thin paper, containing the Law of God as changed by the Catholic power. This is flanked by papal assumptions and admissions, giving the whole history of the change in a nutshell. A citation is made from each quotation to its original source, making it a document of especial importance. 50 cents per 100.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spake it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12x18 INCHES.

On thick paper, mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

Postpaid, 25 Cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS, slightly damaged, offered at half price.
Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

The Stomach:

... Its Disorders and
How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion. The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion, Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion, Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia, pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process, The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

The TWO REPUBLICS.

Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Thin paper edition, plain edges . . . $1.85
Cloth, marbled edges, . . . 2.50
" Gilt edges, . . . 3.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the
AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00, WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.00

REDUCTION IN PRICE

FROM $3.50 TO $3.00,

For a SHORT TIME ONLY.

The Sentinel one year and Bible, postpaid,	$3.00
The Sentinel six months and Bible, postpaid,	2.50
The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel,	2.00
The Bible given as a present for six NEW yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each
“ “ “ twelve 6 months “ at	.50 each

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence we urge our patrons to ORDER AT ONCE.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we print. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

What our Patrons Say of It.

I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted.

The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished.

The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it.

My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it.

I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted.

I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do, heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible.

It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price.

I received your premium Bible, and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it, and pronounce it excellent.

I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected.

I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had.

We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight.

I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap.

The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

They that sealed the covenant. NEHEMIAH. X. The points of the covenant.

revest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.
 36 Behold, we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gav- est unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:
 87 And it yieldeth much increase of Deut. 28.

25 Re/him, Hâ-ehab' nah, Mâ-g-sê-jab,
 26 And A-h'jah, Hâ'nan, A'nan,
 27 Mâ'lich, Hâ'rim, Bâ-g-nah,
 28 f' e And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lê-vites, the porters, the singers, the Nêth'i-nings, and all
 they that had separated themselves

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $6.00.

Address all orders to

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
 39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 7, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 39.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THE best way to restore Sabbath observance, is to observe it. A good example will accomplish more in this direction than law or precept.

THE Sabbath of the Lord is a gift; the man-made sabbath is an institution thrust upon the people by the force of civil pains and penalties.

THERE are always plenty of men in the world who are willing to become lawmakers for other people and by their zeal in this to atone for their own shortcomings.

THE "concert" of "Christian" Europe will evidently always remain a thing to be, judging from the length of time the would-be participants have been vainly trying to get in tune with each other.

THE rights of a Christian do not include the prohibiting of other people from going contrary to his own religious belief or practice. His rights are not concerned by his religious belief.

THERE are a great many more heathen in the United States than there are Christians, determined by the Bible rule that all persons are heathen who do not know the Lord.

THERE is a vast difference between being directed by the Lord, and being under the direction of some man who claims to speak for the Lord. We prefer to be guided by the Word of the Lord, interpreted by his Spirit.

A DISPATCH from Rome says that "the pope has instructed the papal nuncio at Madrid to insist upon the clergy opposing Carlism and to urge the clergy to earnestly support the Spanish ministry and present Spanish dynasty." And the pope and clergy of "the church" never have anything to do with politics, no never—well hardly ever, unless the interest of "the church" or something else demands it, and their own inclination justifies it.

IF it be true that the government has a right to enact laws for the preservation of morality, is it also true that morality can change with every change of the government and its regulations? Since every government on the earth does change (and none more frequently than a republican government), and since morality does not change, how can the latter be properly a subject of governmental regulation? When human laws are altered, is there ever, in any case, an alteration of right and wrong?—Certainly not; and this is conclusive evidence that human legislation is not adapted to deal with right and wrong; or, in other words, with morality.

Religious Right.

RELIGIOUS right is the greatest boon that ever was given, or that ever could be given, to men.

That is the truth: and, being the truth, in the nature of things such a boon could come from God only.

Religious right, as generally understood and as contemplated in these lines, is the right of every person to choose for himself in things religious without constraint of any kind from any person or source whatever.

This freedom God has given to men, as is declared in the motto of the AMERICAN SENTINEL, in the words of the Lord Jesus, "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not." The right is given by the Lord to men, and is thus recognized by the Lord in men.

This is illustrated in the transaction in the garden in Eden. The man was made in the image of God, to glorify God, yet left perfectly free not to do so if he should choose; and was left perfectly free to choose for himself whether he would or not. He was left as free to choose not to serve God as he was to serve him.

This freedom God gave to man, and recognizes in man; and it is this, more than anything else, that enables man to be really a man. Any person, who would in any degree infringe this right of man aims a destructive blow at the dignity and the manliness of man, and at the honor and glory of God.

Therefore it is to the honor and glory of God, and in the interest of the everlasting dignity and manliness of man, uncompromisingly to oppose every attempt in whatever degree to infringe or to disrespect the right of any person to choose for himself in all things religious—to choose for himself as to all religious beliefs, rites, customs, and practices.

No State can ever have any shadow of right, by legislation or in any other way, to circumscribe the perfect freedom of every man to choose for himself whether he will regard or disregard any religious belief, or rite, or custom, or practice. And every man's right utterly to disregard everything of the kind is as complete as it is to regard it.

No church has any shadow of ground for condemning any man or any number of men who disregard everything which that church holds sacred. Every person has perfect right to disregard all that any church or all churches together believe or practice. The professed Christian church or individual who condemns or criticises or sets at naught any person for disregarding any religious belief, or rite, or custom, denies the God of Christianity.

Loyalty to religious right does not consist in asserting our own right to be religious or not religious at our own unconstrained choice; but in the unswerving recognition of the right of the other man to be religious or not religious at his own personal and unconstrained choice. This is so plain that it must be recognized at once by every one. In the garden, God did not assert his own right to be religious for himself and other people too; that matter could take care of itself. But he did establish and recognize the right of the man to believe or not believe him, just as the man himself might freely choose. This he did again, when he stood on the earth as the Redeemer of man, in the divine motto of religious freedom, "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world; but to save the world."

This shows, too, that when one who is religious condemns one who is not religious for not being religious or for not believing what he preaches, he hinders the salvation of the one who does not believe. Then, religious friend, will you frustrate the salvation of men who do not believe, by bringing upon them your condemnation through denunciation from the pulpit, or the instrumentality of the police, the courts, and fines, and imprisonments? Will you not rather forever present to all people the winning blessing and grace of salvation, by recognizing his divine right not to believe and treating them all with the merciful and gracious consideration which the Lord has shown to the man whom he created?

Let every one who professes to believe in religious right show by his conduct that he really believes in it. Let the believing neighbor respect in Christian kindness the unbelieving neighbor. Let the unbelieving neighbor respect in manly dignity the right which his believing neighbor exercises in choosing to believe.

Let the believing wife respect her unbelieving husband, let her respect his exercise of the right to choose for himself whether he will believe or not. Let the unbelieving husband in true manliness regard his believing wife's exercise of the right to choose to believe.

Let the believing husband respect the exercise of the right of choice not to believe. And let the unbelieving wife show that she believes in religious right, by respecting the choice of her husband to be religious just as he chooses.

This will show that you do indeed believe in religious right, in religious freedom. But so long as you act any other way than this, your profession of believing religious freedom is a fraud.

Let the precious divine boon of religious freedom never be dimmed by the actions contradicting the words in those who profess to love it!

"Break Every Yoke."

BY GEO. B. STARR.

It is not the will of God that any of his creatures, men or angels, should wear any yoke save that of Jesus Christ.

All yoke making has been committed to the tender, loving hands of Jesus, the Creator, who, knowing just the ability, disposition, and strength of each one, is able to adjust a yoke to each, of which he can truthfully say, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light," and which every wearer of this yoke will find by experience is delightfully true.

God never designed that any of his creatures should be pressed under grievous yokes. But doubt of the goodness of God, and distrust of his love, have led men and angels to devise ways of their own, which have brought upon themselves and others heavy burdens, grievous to be borne.

Jealousy, envy, hatred, and malice, are the cruel attributes that enter into the making of heavy yokes. Has Satan ever deceived you into making yokes for others? Have you arranged good and proper confessions for others to make before you would take them into your fellowship? Have you worked out a course of humility needful for some one's discipline, and done all you could to lead them to see the wisdom of your plans? Has it ever worked? Have you not thus brought distress upon yourself, and only found relief by obeying the injunction of God, "that ye break every yoke," and that "thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke"? Isa. 58: 6-9.

Jesus came into the world to break yokes that were killing the wearers, to undo heavy burdens that were bending to the earth the bearers. And as his Spirit enters our hearts he will set us about his work of breaking yokes.

And, oh, how much more enjoyable is the experience of breaking yokes than that of making them! How our hearts rejoice as we see the oppressed go free, as we listen to their songs of rejoicing for deliverance, as we see in the tearful eye the opening of the tender heart to the love of God, and his peace and rest enter the heart!

"I WOULD not put a Seventh-day Adventist in jail for working inside his own house or plowing in a field; but if he made a public exhibition of it or tried to insult the moral sense of the community, I think he needs a lesson."—From Speech by W. J. Coleman, at Columbus (Ohio) National Reform Convention. See page 613.

Nationalism vs. Christianity.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

FOR a decade of years the island empire of Japan has been coming to the front in many things which make for material progress.

As a Japanese is reported to have told the story some forty years ago, Commodore Perry, with a fleet of vessels, entered the port of Yeddo, and said, "Wake up; wake up; it is past noon."

Japan was asleep, and had been for centuries. The day had passed its noon of time when she was so suddenly aroused. In fact, all the West was awake and full of activity, invention, and progress; but the East was lying in an intellectual stupor. The people of Japan were enabled to see their condition, and they went to work in a very intelligent way to improve their state. Those who were awake, awakened others, and a plan was laid for the awakening and rejuvenation of the nation.

Hundreds of the most intelligent of the Japanese young men were sent to foreign countries to take full courses of instruction in their schools. They learned everything they could in regard to the countries where they were sent,—their history, government, laws, arts, commerce, religion,—everything; and then upon their return home they imparted to the people of Japan what they had learned.

The result was a mighty but peaceful revolution. From all the things which they had studied they took what they thought was the best adapted for their country and made it their own. The deep sleep—the spell of years—was broken, and new Japan sprang into being a marvel unto herself and unto the world.

But it is of Japan from a religious point of view that we wish to speak. The evidences of a renewed life and enterprise in Japan greatly encouraged Christian people to believe that as Japan was grasping so eagerly for Western civilization she would also at the same time take with her new civilization the religion, which in the countries she was imitating, went with that civilization.

For a time it seemed as though this might be so. Christian missionaries were given full access to the country, schools and colleges were established under Christian influences and with Christian teachers; and this with such a degree of success that many were encouraged to hope that the time had come when a nation would be born in a day.

But the tide has suddenly turned. The Japanese have learned what many Christians have not, that civilization is one thing, and that Christianity is another and quite a different thing. In short, Japan proposes to take the civilization and let the Christianity go.

There appears to be a general turning back from Christianity all through Japan. Christian teachers are being removed from the schools, and highly civilized but heathen teachers are taking their places. Because of this and the fact that so few Japanese make a personal application of Christianity to themselves, even though they may assent to it as a theory, the Christian missionaries there are greatly discouraged.

One of the chief reasons adduced for this sudden change of sentiment in Japan is the very strong national spirit that has been engendered by the successful war with China. Japan has fallen in love with her own prowess and institutions, and so has no place for the love of anything else. It was thought by some that that war would open China to the gospel. We have not learned that this was done, but we do see that it has made Japan less accessible to it. She is dazzled with the idea of becoming a great military and naval power, and in her heathenish blindness is not yet able to see how Christianity and war can go hand in hand as other nations long called Christian, can!

The fact that the cultivation of a very strong national sentiment is deterrent to Christianity may now be seen in Japan; and is it not evident that such a sentiment has the same effect everywhere? When the nation is made equal with God, and loyalty to the nation is considered to be the same as loyalty to God and acceptable worship of him, what need of anything but love of country?

That is the way it is taught in this country, and Japan has caught the idea and proposes to worship the "Land of the Rising Sun"! She will deify the State. Will those who are trying to unite nationalism and Christianity in the United States see the folly of such a course?

The most important lesson which may be learned from this retrogression in Japan is that Christianity cannot be accepted by nations in the aggregate. It can be accepted only by persons in their individual capacity.

Should Japan vote itself Christian, appoint Christian chaplains to every regiment and every ship of war, make a profession of Christianity a test for an appointment to any position in the service of the government, command the observance of Sunday, or what would be a very similar action, compel the baptism of all Japanese, still the nation would be no nearer a Christian nation than it is now. These are man-made adjuncts to Christianity; they are useless and dangerous expedients at the best; they would be ugly excrescences on the tree whose leaves are for the healing of the nations.

The missionaries in Japan and those who support them there who have been looking for a national Christianity in Japan, will do well to consider this point. They will now see the necessity of falling back upon the New Testament method of Christian work. They will need to preach the word, sow the seeds of truth in individual hearts, water them with prayers and tears, and watch the slowly ripening harvest as the fruit of their work is seen—"first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

On the whole there is hope in the situation. There was great danger that Japan would accept Christianity in a national manner. Nothing could have been so disastrous to the religious interests of the country. If Japan must have a national religion she would far better have Buddhism. A few wide-awake, apostolic-spirited Christians working in Japan, with all the power of the government against them, would present a much more hopeful prospect for pure Christianity and the salvation of souls, which after all is the great object of the gospel, than to have the government patronage thrown over a religion of forms and ceremonies in which worldly policy, selfish interests, and pompous display would take the place of personal faith and holiness of heart and life.

A Source of Discord.

"Bible Echo," Melbourne, Aus.

THE Hobart (Tasmania) Mercury, of July 29, makes the following very sensible observations on the question of introducing religious matters into State affairs:—

"The introduction of the name of the Deity into the discussions on the Commonwealth Bill can only be regarded as most unfortunate. Parliament has always recognized that there are certain subjects which it is better to settle in private than to thrash out on the floor of the House, and amongst these might surely have been classed the one in which the feelings and prejudices of members as a body are most involved, the subject, too, which, despite its sacredness, is bound to give rise to most acrid and heated discussion, simply because those who have any interest at all in it are bound to feel very deeply about it, and to express those feelings, too, when they come into collision with those opposed to them. That this will be the case is shown by the counter petitions which those in favor of recognition of the divine name have called forth, the wording of which is at least as dignified and logical, if not as reverential, as those it replies to, and the indication, therefore, is that those who desire the constitution amended in the way the Adelaide Convention declined to do it should refrain from pressing their views, at any rate in public debate, which will be irritating inside the House, and certainly not altogether edifying to those who read the speeches. Members have quite enough ground for discord without adding the religious one, and a debate of the kind that might surround the attempt to change the preamble of the Federation Bill would probably create enmity that would last the rest of the session, if not a lifetime."

Education that was of Little Use.

BY T. R. WILLIAMSON.

"MOSES was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and deeds." Acts 7:22.

What small value attaches to worldly education when an individual is fitting for a place in the Lord's work. No doubt Moses thought himself fully competent to take command of the Israelitish forces, to organize them into an army, to march at their head, fighting their way successfully from Egypt and bondage to Canaan and freedom; and when they should have arrived at Canaan, no doubt he imagined that he would be thoroughly able to frame all such laws and regulations as would be best for the government of such a nation as Israel.

Moses had been a successful leader under the Egyptian government. Josephus says that Moses had conducted Egyptian armies through successful campaigns against the foes of Egypt.

He was a statesman too as well as a general; he had not lived till he was forty years old at the court of the Egyptian king without becoming skilled in statecraft, the managing of affairs. He was intended eventually to occupy the throne when the reigning Pharaoh should die, and Egypt was then the very greatest nation in the world.

Surely Moses had all in the way of education and scholarship that the wisdom of this world could give him. And how much of it all did he use? What was it all worth? When God selected Moses to lead, he sent him into the wilderness to keep sheep for forty years. Not so much as a spoonful of the Egyptian lore he had been forty years in acquiring was of any use to him. He must learn to take care of people, of children, of slaves, just freed from degrading bondage, and they needed simply a wise and patient shepherd.

Egyptian statesmanship was entirely at a discount; it was not considered of any value at all.

When laws were to be made for Israel, such laws were given them as were adapted to the use of people who served the one true God.

The customs of a nation of innumerable idols, the laws of a people who rolled and wallowed in disgusting and lascivious idol worship, could be of no service to Israel. God himself directed Moses in making the laws. None other than inspired law-making was of any use whatever, as none but God-given laws are fit to govern any nation, and no one but God understands politics, "the science of government."

And Moses' generalship? Well, when Israel first confronted foes in battle Joshua was sent out as general and Moses' business was simply to pray.

And so it was through all the wilderness journey; and that is about the way that God values purely worldly education now as a fitting out for his service.

Tallmadge, O.

It is remarkable how "the press" can see in the speeches of the rulers of Europe "flings," insinuations, "taunts," and all such disrespectful things toward each other, whereas in fact there is nothing of the kind. Remarks which are perfectly proper in themselves, from such sources, are instantly caught up and filled with sinister meanings, and in flaming headlines are so proclaimed to the world. It seems evident that the press is "spoiling for a fight"—provided always that other people will do the fighting.

State National Reform Convention at Columbus, Ohio.

This meeting was appointed for September 28, sessions being held in the morning, afternoon, and evening. Only about thirty-five persons were in attendance—a smaller number, it was said, than would have been present but for the fact that several other conventions were in session in the city.

Prof. Payton was elected chairman; and, as announced, Rev. J. Knox Montgomery, of Cincinnati, spoke first on the subject of "The Proper Relation of Civil Law to the Sabbath."

The speaker said that church people were largely responsible for the desecration of the Sabbath—that at one time a lady was worrying because her son only attended church once on Sunday and then enjoyed himself the rest of the day, and spoke of it to the minister, who replied that if he went to church in the morning she ought to congratulate herself and not worry. The speaker said that a man who would apply the same reasoning as used by this minister to the law in regard to stealing, killing, etc., would be regarded as a fool.

Those who are in authority, whose business it is to execute the laws, disregard the day. If these people—mayors, city officials, etc., who are now in the city and considering the best lighting of cities, telegraphic service, etc., would think more of the Sabbath than of electric lights there would be far less need of the best telegraphic system to get police service to all places and quarters of these cities day after day, and especially Sabbath afternoon.

Governments are to protect their citizens in their lives and rights and properties and to enact laws to this end; and if it be true that the Sabbath is a God-given heritage to man, and it be also true, as said, that one seventh of the laborers of this country are robbed of this right by toil and traffic, and 150,000 in the mail service, then we discover that the government itself is violating the law that has been enacted by God and reenacted by Congress and by the legislatures of the various States. Then, certainly, our government needs reformation along this line.

The national Constitution declares that Congress shall not enact any law regarding an establishment of religion or any law that will interfere with the rights of man in the worship of his God; and yet, said the speaker, "it seems to me that when the United States Government declares that the mails shall be carried all over this country on the Sabbath and that all the post-offices shall be open where the people demand it, this certainly interferes with the right of any Christian man, at least, who may be in the employ of the government, to worship God according to his own desire.

"Of course, it is maintained that if a man's conscientious convictions will not allow him to engage in this sort of occupation on the Sabbath, he is at liberty to resign; and yet it does not seem to me that that is right.

"Along with the Sunday mail traffic is the Sunday train and Sunday saloon and newspaper. The Sabbath is imperiled all along these lines; and if it be true that morality and religion lie at the basis of all good government, and if it be true that the Sabbath lies at the foundation of true morality and religion, then I declare it to be true that the Sabbath being imperiled, the government itself is imperiled. Certainly every government has a right to enact laws that look toward the morals of the people. Then the government should enact such laws.

"It seems to me that the proper relation of civil law to the Sabbath is that of protection—not as a religious institution, but as a civil institution. Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion—certainly not. None of us advocate anything of the sort; but if it is so that the profanation of the Sabbath is a demoralization of the people, then the government should have at heart the elevation of the morals of the people and should enact and enforce laws that look after the protection of this rest day and its preservation as a God-given right to every man.

"The idea, of course, is often set forth that we are endeavoring to make people go to church by law, and have no right to legislate regarding the Sabbath—because all Sabbath legislation is in the interest of Christianity. Well, certainly it is; and yet the fact is that all Sabbath legislation is in the interests of the State, because it is in the interests of the morals and intelligence of the citizen in the State. Civil law should protect this institution.

"We are told in the Word of God regarding other nations and the result of their profanation of the Sabbath. The overthrow of the Christian Sabbath or American Sabbath, with its sacred associations, would be more disastrous to our nation than the overthrow of all our public libraries and civic monuments; and I wish to say that the observance of the Sabbath lies deep in the everlasting necessities of human nature, and that as long as man is man, the blessedness of keeping it, not as a day of rest only, but as a day of spiritual rest, will never be annulled."

The next speaker was W. J. Coleman, of Allegheny, Pa., who said in substance: Mr. Chairman: The association that meets here to-day has for its fundamental principle the doctrine that the Lord Jesus Christ is ruler of nations. That is the foundation stone which this association seeks to lay at the very basis of all our political legislation.

We have the question, How far should civil laws go in protecting the Sabbath? Now, I believe they should go to the extent of forbidding all servile labor on that day. I would not put a Seventh-day Adventist in jail for working inside his own house or plowing in a field, but if he made a public exhibition of it or tried to insult the moral sense of the community, I think he needs a lesson: but if he works quietly, out of sight as far as possible, not interfering with anybody, provided he keeps another day of the week, I do not think I would interfere with him.

But I think we ought to stop all these things on the ground of servile labor. For instance, we have 10,000—some people say millions—of unemployed men in this country. Every man that works on Sunday keeps another man out of work just that much. Another thing: no man can stand alone and ask for the observance of the Sabbath on his own account. If he does stand for it, he is discharged.

Speeches of ten minutes' length were given by a number of persons along the same lines. After these talks a new organization was formed, known as the Ohio State Reform Association, with constitution modeled after that of the national organization.

The following resolutions were adopted:—

"Resolved, That there is much in our political life to arouse the deep concern of the Christian patriot. Evil influences are multiplying and growing more aggressive. Corruption abounds, good laws fail to be enforced; capital and labor are in conflict, and other evils threaten the very life of the nation."

"The remedy for these evils is found only in the laws of Jesus Christ. The principles that should guide man here, as everywhere else, are justice and love. The application of the principles will solve all the troublesome questions that are seeking settlement.

"To secure the desired end, there ought to be inscribed on the front of our fundamental law the aim and purpose of civil society to establish government on the foundation of Christian morality. A radical mistake was made in excluding from the national constitution all reference to God and his law. We must retrace our steps.

"The transfer of the legislation and administration of the government so largely into the hands of professional politicians, who pursue their selfish ends; the failure to make government a 'terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well,' are the result of excluding fear of God and loyalty to Christ from political life. Christian men must bring their influences to bear in the sphere of civil society. Education in the use of the Word of God in our schools must train Christian patriots for their solemn civil duties."

The officers elected were: For president, Rev. J. C. Smith, of Cincinnati; corresponding secretary, J. K. Montgomery, of Cincinnati; recording secretary, Rev. D. McKinney; treasurer, W. R. Sterrett. The office of vice-president was filled by nineteen names.

The convention adjourned to meet at the call of the president.

God's Spirit and Liberty.

BY MRS. M. L. BROCK.

"THE spirit of the Lord God is upon me." Why? "Because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me"—what for?—"to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." Isa. 61:1.

The Spirit of God never closes a prison door on any one. No; but it has opened the prison doors just as the prophet foretold.

"But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life." Acts 5:19, 20. "Behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison; and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands." Acts 12:7.

What spirit is it that is at work to-day to close the prison doors on God's people? Is it not the same that shut Peter in?

The prisons were never built for God's people, and no power on earth can with safety to itself put his people into them. No man can rightfully judge another man in regard to duty toward God.

Christ tells us in plain words what will judge us in the last day. He says, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him," and also, "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak."

This statement of Christ's is in perfect harmony with Moses' prophecy of Christ in Deuteronomy 18:18: "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him." Jesus declared that the words he spoke were not his.

So when he speaks of the Sabbath, it is the Father speaking through him. The Father, then, sent Christ to tell this world who is Lord of the Sabbath, who made it, for what purpose it was made, and what was lawful for man to do on it. He also sent Christ to leave an example of the right use of the Sabbath.

But there is a spirit in the land to-day, a spirit that will shut the prison doors on God's people who follow Christ's example in Sabbath-keeping, as it did in the days of Peter. This spirit enters the same class as it did in those days,—the professed people of God.

But how easy to detect what spirit it is at work! Just as soon as you see any one calling for the aid of the civil power to enforce what they think is the law of God, you may be sure that the spirit is not of God.

"Secularizing" Sunday.

W. N. Glenn, in "Signs of the Times."

THE great burden of Sunday observers, especially that increasing class who desire to compel its observance, is that the day is in danger of being "secularized." Now, if the first day of the week ever was made anything but a secular day (and no power but God could do so), no one but the authority which sanctified it could by any means secularize it, or take away its sanctity. But suppose the day had been sanctified by a competent authority, and suppose that unsanctified men could take away the sanctity thus bestowed, what could be more conducive to such a result than cumbering it with secular law, making it to rest upon secular law, and enforcing it by the power of secular law, under penalties inflicted by secular law?

At the recent Christian Endeavor Convention in San Francisco, Dr. Temple, in referring to the defense of the Sunday institution, said, "We have to stand guard over it with drawn swords, lest some new form of iniquity put its hoof upon this sacred institution, and defile it." The thought of defending a so-called sacred institution with the secular sword is at least a tacit admission that the assumed sacredness is a very thin varnish. When it comes to defending any doctrine of Christ's promulgation, he says emphatically, "Put up thy sword." Only secular institutions need secular defense, and when the human law and the human sword are called to defend the Sunday Sabbath, it is indubitable proof that the defenders have no practical faith in the sanctity of the day.

When Israel took the sacred ark of the covenant into battle, and attempted to defend it with carnal weapons, they were sorely defeated, and the ark was carried away by the Philistines. But when the holy law of God and its sanctified receptacle were out of the hands of those who would defend them with carnal weapons, they were successfully defended and rescued by an unseen hand. The fact that even a measure of temporary success has attended the enforced observance of Sunday by secular power, is evidence that the institution so defended is a secular one. And no class of people is doing so much to prove this fact as those who persist in such enforcement. They are doing more to "secularize" the day, or rather to demonstrate that it is nothing but a secular day, than all other forces combined.

A South American Republic.

BY L. BROOKING.

IN 1810 the Argentine Republic gained her independence, and believing that a religion ought not to be enforced by torture, they publicly burned in the principal plaza the king of Spain's decree authorizing the Inquisition and the burning of "heretics." They also burned the instruments of torture used by that tribunal.

Although nominally Roman Catholics, they saw in it a cruel device which they as republicans proclaiming "liberty and equality" could not consistently agree to; and we believe that their humanity also prompted them to a desire to let freedom rejoice the hearts of their fellow men.

They copied their constitution to a great extent from that of the United States, but did not put in practice the glorious principle stated in the Declaration of Independence, which leaves religion to be supported by those who wish and not a particular religion to be supported willingly or unwillingly by taxes gained by the toil of all religionists. Argentina pays annually a large sum for the support of the Roman Catholic Church.

There are no doubt conscientious men in her priesthood; but the corruptness of the lives of many of them causes many to mock at all religion and to be materialists; and also tends to encourage immorality and violence in all places. The man who has done most for Argentina is President Sarmiento, who having been consul to the United States, procured a staff of North American teachers, who introduced the normal school system there, thus conferring a great blessing on the rising generation, not the least of which was that they were enabled to read the Word of Life for themselves.

He also encouraged immigration and railroads, thus getting enlightenment from a land proclaiming separation of Church and State, which principle has been the foundation of its greatness. Argentina is a beautiful land, possessing all climes and a productive soil; but in comparison with the great North American Republic, what is it?

Americans, freemen, do you value the principle of separation of Church and State for which your fathers, the builders of this republic, died? Or do you want your nation to be like Argentina and the other so-called republics of Central and South America? "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

"WHATEVER is, is right" for the individual who stands in the right relation to God.

LAST week I was dealing with ideas and their transcendent importance. Ideas can be expressed only in words; and so words are things of great consequence, and ought to be picked and chosen with the utmost care in every discussion. Much idle and profitless debate would frequently be spared, and much time saved for matters of real moment, if people would always, before they begin a controversy, settle what it is that they mean to talk about.

For instance, here is the venerable David Agnew, ex-chief justice of Pennsylvania, delivering an address, in which he uses the following language: "I have shown (conclusively, I think) that this is a Christian nation; that this continent and the provinces were settled by a Christian people"—and more to the same effect.

WHAT distinction was in the mind of this distinguished octogenarian between "this continent" and "the provinces," it is not easy to divine. But it is clear that he regards the proposition that "this is a Christian nation" as synonymous with the statement that "this continent and the provinces were settled by a Christian people." But strict attention to definitions will show that there is no necessary connection between the two, and that, while the latter is a correct statement of a historical fact, the former is a fallacious abstraction.

WHAT is the meaning of the word "nation" when used in its present connection? It is simply another name for "the State." The latter is the preferable term, because "nation" is a word of several different significations or senses, and is often the equivalent of "country" or "people," whereas "State" has in jurisprudence a fixed, definite, and peculiar meaning of its own. It is true that the "country" known as the United States was largely colonized by "people" who professed—whatever their practice—a variety of religions which they called "Christian," and that the majority of those who at present inhabit that geographical area are considered to be Christians. But these facts afford no justification whatever of the position that ours is a Christian State.

In fact, it is manifestly impossible that a State should be Christian. What is a State? A State is simply a big corporation, like a railroad or a manufacturing company. As I have previously observed, those who administer the affairs of the big corporation make up the personnel of the government, and all citizens are stockholders. Now it would be clearly absurd to talk of a railroad company as being "Christian" because its individual officers and members, or most of them, were connected with Christian churches. But, with all due deference to high authority, it is no less absurd so to talk of a State or nation.

THE State is the work of men's hands. She is of the earth, earthy. She has no soul to be damned or to be saved. She knows neither Deity nor devil. She does not know her citizens as Christians, nor as Hebrews, nor as Mohammedans, nor as Mormons, nor pagans, nor Buddhists. She deals with them as men and women alone. She has no means of ascertaining their inward thoughts or beliefs, no power in any wise to affect them, no right whatever to meddle with them. It is only their outward conduct or behaviour that comes within her cognizance, and it is by temporal penalties alone that she can regulate this.

AND what is Christianity?—An inward life, based on the faith that there is another world than this, which individual men may reach, though no "State" can ever get there. Christian men and women we have, fortunately enough, all around us. They are those who submit their souls to the "imperious dominion" claimed by the Master whose kingdom is "within,"—that domain of the soul which is closed as absolutely against the State as heaven itself.

THE learned judge goes on to say that our States "set the legal evidence of their belief in their early constitutions." But how is it possible that a State should have a religious belief, and set it anywhere? The State never made a constitution any more than a railroad corporation makes a charter. And States had no existence till the instruments of their birth—their respective constitutions—were made by the people who inhabited the various tracts of land that had been colonies of England. It is perfectly true, and perfectly lamentable, that the conception of religious equality was unknown to these men, and that all their works were more or less tainted with the blasphemous union of Church and State. But the church is one thing and religion is another; and to embody religious dogmas, as they did, in constitutions and statutes, is not to accomplish the impossible feat of making a State religious. Though I admit none but Christians to employment on my railroad, I impart no religious element to the transportation of passengers and goods over the line.

WHAT our forefathers did, in erecting their States, was to unite their churches to the new corporations in certain matters of detail, by extending the protection of the civil arm to the requirements of dogmas that were particularly dear to them, and by attaching certain disabilities to the profession of other religions than the Christian, as they considered it to be. Thus far they were false to the true American theory of government and to the Master's teaching of religion. But, again, they did not, because they could not, thus make their States religious.

* * *

CHIEF-JUSTICE AGNEW's proposition, then, that "this is a Christian nation," may be translated in two ways. It may mean that "this is a Christian State." Thus rendered, it involves, as we have seen, a contradiction in terms. Or it may mean that the majority of the inhabitants of the United States are professedly Christians. In this sense, it is true enough, but it is merely a historical truth, a statistical truth, a social truth. It is not a truth of jurisprudence, it has not the slightest relevancy to any matter of legislative enactment or public administration. It is as much in place, and no more, where such things are concerned, as the statement that the Mississippi River is higher at its mouth than at its source, or that the force of gravitation varies inversely as the square of the distance between a body and the center of the earth, or that most people in New Orleans have dark hair.

* * *

LET us illustrate. Ex-Justice Agnew comes of a distinguished Pennsylvania family. He bears a name worthily immortalized by Dr. D. Hayes Agnew, through marvelous achievements in medicine and surgery. He was himself an honor to his name and his State while on the bench. Could he have been this, if he had been influenced in the slightest in the administration of that branch of Pennsylvania's government with which he was connected by this maxim of his that ours is a Christian nation? Because the first settlers of America were Christians, would he sentence a Christian to jail for a month, and a Hebrew to jail for a year when the two had committed precisely the same offense against the law of the land, which he swore to administer without partiality or favor? For a like reason would he break his official oath so far as to be biased between two litigants in a civil case brought before him, by reason of the fact that one of the parties thereto avowed his allegiance to Mahomet, while the other had been baptized a Presbyterian?—Of course not.

* * *

AND yet, it is equally a breach of duty in a judge who is called upon to decide the constitutionality of an American statute, to give any consideration to the statistical fact that a majority of the people who made the constitution were Christians as it is for him to mete out one

"justice" to the Christian and another to the pagan in a particular case. A Christian people, like other peoples, may totally separate Church and State, or may unite them to such extent as seems desirable. But if we declare that a total separation of Church and State is necessary, by our fundamental law, then any attempt of a legislature or a court to unite the two becomes a usurpation; and it is perfectly immaterial whether the church selected for the combination happens to be that of the majority or that of the minority, past or present.

* * *

JUDGE AGNEW further declares that other religions than the Christian have only been "tolerated" here. If this be true, the union of Church and State is complete in this "free" land of ours. No man is free who is "tolerated" by others. As well talk of "tolerating" a Jew or an agnostic in the liberty of labor and locomotion or the possession of property, as to talk of tolerating his belief or his lack thereof in the matter of religion. As well may a Republican talk of tolerating the dissemination of Democratic doctrines, or vice versa, as one religionist to talk of tolerating the faith of another. The absolute equality of all religions and of no religion before the law is the true American principle. Upon the good road to this glorious consummation the founders of this republic made some feeble, halting, tentative steps. They were checked by the zeitgeist, that perpetual impediment to truth and progress. They left to us, their children, the heritage of their well meaning, and ours is the brighter and better light that guides directly to the goal. If we are satisfied to leave their work where they stopped, we are false to them, and to the high and holy trust which they left us. It is ours to "reform it altogether;" ours to dig up the roots of the evil over which they strained with slipping fingers; ours to repudiate the slavery of words, and to deal with things as they are, and not as they are called; ours to strip off the last rags of mediævalism from the fair form of Republican America, and let her beauty shine undimmed before the world.

Geo. J. Ringgold.

Religious Scruples Respected.

THE following item appeared in the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times, of Sept. 9:—

"HUNTSVILLE, ALA., Sept. 6.—Charles Cross, a white mail carrier for the city, was suspended to-day for thirty days pending his trial for insubordination. Cross is a Seventh-day Adventist and observes Saturday for his Sabbath. It so happened that all the substitutes were either on duty or away on leave of absence last Saturday when Cross was ordered to report for duty, which he positively declined to do, hence his suspension."

In a letter to a friend Mr. Cross states that when his case came before the postmaster-general, the latter ordered him to be reinstated, which was accordingly done. The reply from the department at Washington to the Huntsville postmaster stated that the government respected the religious conscience of its employés.

For Eating Meat on Friday.

IN these days we are prepared for the announcement of almost anything in the line of a usurpation of religious authority by the civil power, but our expectations are quite exceeded by the following press dispatch, taken from the St. Louis (Mo.) Chronicle:—

"Troy, N. Y., Sept. 25.—Police Magistrate Donohue considerably surprised the loungers about the police court yesterday morning when he sent John Burns, a Catholic, to jail, for attempting to eat meat on Friday.

"Early that morning Burns went into a restaurant on Ferry Street and ordered beefsteak. Burns got into an altercation with a colored waiter, named Johnson, and both were arrested.

"‘Burns,’ said the magistrate sharply, ‘what church do you go to?’

"‘This ain’t the place to talk religion,’ replied Burns.

"‘Never mind about that. What church do you go to?’

"‘Well, I go to St. Francis.’

"‘Thought so, Burns; I’ll send you to jail for eating meat on Friday. Johnson, you are discharged.’

"Burns will have to stay in the county jail until next Tuesday, because he attempted to eat meat on Friday."

After all, a law to compel a person to abstain from meat on Friday would be no more religious than is a law to compel him to abstain from work on Sunday.

Sunday and the Trans-Mississippi Exposition.

THE Ministerial Union of Omaha, Neb., are determined if possible to prevent Sunday opening of the gates of the Trans-Mississippi exposition, soon to be held in that city. Immediately upon reassembling after their vacation, they met in Koutze church, Omaha, to the number of twenty-three, and took the following steps to prevent people who cannot take summer vacations from enjoying the exposition sights on the one day of the week when they can be away from their work:—

"First—That this union petitions the board of directors of the Trans-Mississippi exposition to close the gates of the exposition on the Lord's day, as was done at the recent exposition at Atlanta and at Nashville.

"Second—We recommend that the union take action calling the attention of the various ecclesiastical bodies and other religious conventions of the States and Territories interested in the Trans-Mississippi exposition, to the matter of closing the gates of the exposition, and requesting them to petition the board of directors of the exposition to close on that day.

"That the secretary of our union communicate this petition to the board of directors of the exposition."

Enforcing Sunday Laws.

"Sabbath Recorder," September 20.

ON the last Sunday in August the village of Quogue, L. I., was the scene of one of the many cases in which personal spite uses the Sunday laws in a way which disgraces both law and justice. A private citizen, Edwards, and a game constable, Jackson, arrested three men and a boy for shooting snipe, in the early morning, on a sand beach "across Shinnecock Bay." No magistrate could be found to try the case until a late hour. The outcome of the day's work is told by the Evening Sun (New York), in these words:—

"Hungry, tired, and angry, the party drove into Southampton at 5:30 o'clock in the evening. For nine long hours they had been carried about the country and represented to every passer-by as felons of the worst stamp. Squire Howell, of Southampton, before whom they were taken, was asked to entertain a charge of violating the game law against them.

"‘What were they shooting?’ he asked.

"‘Snipe,’ Edwards replied.

"‘There's no law now against shooting snipe,’ replied the court.

"Edwards received the news like a death blow. Had all his trouble, all his show, been for nothing? But he bethought himself of the law against shooting on Sunday, and lodged that complaint. The squire entertained it and held the prisoners in $25 bail each for examination on Saturday."

Such occurrences as this destroy respect for law, and prejudice the public mind against the church and Christianity as few other things could do. . . .

Similar follies frequently appear wherever efforts are made to "promote the moral and religious interests of the community" by enforcing Sunday laws. Under the new law in Connecticut, the Providence Bulletin reports the arrest of a man "for buying a pound of crackers on Sunday," though to the average mind this does not seem to have been a very grave offense. The idea of exempting "works of necessity and mercy" in the ordinary Sunday law is another point in which that which was at first a purely religious provision is made to serve all sorts of purposes, or none at all, according to the notions of magistrates. Of this provision in the Connecticut law the Bulletin referred to above says:—

"Who is to decide what constitutes a work of mercy? It would be a mercy for some men to let a skilful barber shave them on Sunday, but the Connecticut authorities are pretty generally agreed that the barber shops must be closed at twelve midnight on Saturday, and so the more hirsute citizen, for whom a Saturday-night shave is not sufficient, is compelled to hack himself in his crude endeavors to get the beard off his face on Sunday morning. Who can say how much more profanity there has been on the first day of the week in Connecticut since this law went into effect than there was before?"

Keeping the Sabbath.

"MAMA, why do people have to keep the Sabbath?"

There was a suspicion of vexation in the tone of the youthful author of this question, which did not escape the attention of the pleasant-faced woman at whom it was directed. The former was a lad of eight summers, in whose makeup it was easy to discover an activity of mind and body which would not easily be long repressed. It was Friday afternoon, and the playthings with which he had been amusing himself were being put away at his mother's direction in anticipation of the approaching day of rest.

"People don't have to keep the Sabbath, Willie," replied Mrs. Dean, with an emphasis on the word "have."

"Then what do they keep it for, mama?" asked Willie. "Doesn't the Bible say that people must keep the Sabbath?"

"The Bible tells us that we ought to keep the Sabbath, Willie," said Mrs. Dean, "but the Lord doesn't compel anybody to keep it. He lets every one choose for himself whether he will keep the Sabbath or not."

"Why doesn't he compel folks to keep the Sabbath, mama, if they ought to keep it?"

"Because that wouldn't do them any good, nor him either. The Lord is constantly seeking to do good to the people he has created, and that is why he gave them the Sabbath in the first place. But it doesn't do them any good unless they keep it of their own accord," said Mrs. Dean.

"You know, Willie," she continued, "that the Sabbath is a gift. Don't you remember I read last Sabbath in the Bible where it says, 'Moreover also I gave them my Sabbaths'? It is God's Sabbath, and he has given it to us. You don't force a gift on people, do you?"

"I don't see how that can be, mama," said Willie. "What good is it to people to have to sit still when they want to be doing something all the while?"

Mrs. Dean smiled at the idea of Sabbath-keeping which these words conveyed. "That isn't Sabbath-keeping, Willie," she said. "The Lord doesn't want folks to be miserable on the Sabbath. Do you remember learning in your Sabbath-school lesson about how the Saviour went through the corn fields one time on the Sabbath and how he told the Pharisees that the Sabbath was made for man? Now, this house that we live in was made for us, but it wasn't made to make us feel uncomfortable, was it?"

"No," replied Willie; "we wouldn't be very comfortable without it, I guess."

"No," repeated Mrs. Dean, "we wouldn't be as happy as we are; and that is the way it ought to be with the Sabbath. It was given to us to make us happier."

"But it's hard for me to keep still all day, mama," said Willie, "and I don't see how that's going to make me happy."

"But you kept still last evening," didn't you, when you went to the entertainment?" said Mrs. Dean, "and you didn't find it hard work, did you?"

"Why, no, mama, but I was looking at the pictures then," Willie answered.

"Yes," said Mrs. Dean; "you found something that pleased your eye and awakened your interest; and that is what you need on the Sabbath; and the Lord has provided all this for the Sabbath, so that you can really be better entertained on that day than on any other."

"What has he provided, mama?"

"Well, in the first place, there are all the beautiful things that we see in the gardens and the fields and the woods. These are things that God has created, and you know the Sabbath was made to commemorate creation. Then there is the Word of God—the Bible—which is filled with the greatest and most interesting truths that anybody can know."

"On the Sabbath day," Mrs. Dean continued, "the Lord comes to us, just as your best friend would come to visit you; and if we will listen to him, he will tell us more wonderful, beautiful, and interesting things than we could possibly learn anywhere else. That is why we stop our work on the Sabbath. It is to show our respect for the presence of the Lord, and our pleasure at receiving him, and to learn what he has to tell us. And it is in his works and his Word that he speaks to us.

"Of course, Willie," Mrs. Dean went on, "if people had to stop all work and all play on the Sabbath, and had nothing better than these to take up their attention, the Sabbath would be the most disagreeable day in all the week. And that's what it would mean to compel people to keep the Sabbath. If a person doesn't love to think of God and his works, and doesn't want to be taught by him, he can't keep the Sabbath, no matter if he doesn't do a stroke of work. He might better be at work than to be doing nothing."

"Then if I don't like the Sabbath, I don't keep it, do I, mama?" Willie answered.

"No, Willie, and that's why it does no good to force people to keep the Sabbath. That's why the Lord doesn't compel anybody to keep it. He couldn't accept any service that is not given to him freely. He gives everything to us freely, because he loves us, and he wants us to do the same toward him."

"How can I love the Sabbath, mama?"

"You will love the Sabbath if you love the Lord; and you can love the Lord just as easily as you love me or your papa, because he has done so many things to show that he loves you. The Bible says, 'We love him, because he first loved us.' Now, if you'll remember these things, Willie, and let the Lord teach you all the beautiful and wonderful truths that he gives us in his works and his Word, you will find the Sabbath the brightest and pleasantest day in all the week. Now think of this, and to-morrow evening you may tell me if you have found this Sabbath to be a better one than those before it."

The Two Principles.

THERE are two principles in the world by which human conduct is sought to be controlled,—love, and force.

Love is the principle by which God works. The Bible tells us that "God is love," and consequently, "love is of God." Love is the highest principle of conduct that can exist.

Force is a lower and altogether different principle. Force is employed by the enemies of God in seeking to make people act contrary to God's will.

Love acts upon the individual from within; force is applied to him from without. Love leads; force drives.

Everything that God does is prompted by love. He cannot act from any other motive, for he "is love." And God wants all his creatures to act from the same motive, and so to be like him.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16.

And Christ so loved the race that had fallen through Adam's sin, that he willingly left all that he had in heaven, to live a life of humility and suffering here, and finally to die upon the cross for man's redemption.

As love moved God and his Son to do such wonderful deeds in serving us, so the Lord wants love to move us in doing high and noble deeds to serve him.

God wants people to love him, and to love all that is pure and right and just. In this way, by planting this love in our hearts, he seeks to control our actions so that our lives will be upright.

This way of controlling people does not in the least interfere with their personal freedom.

But force, on the other hand, does interfere with personal freedom. It would not be effective if it did not. Force takes no account of the will or belief or the love of the person on whom it is brought to bear. It secures certain results touching the outward conduct of people, and this is all that it can do.

Force is necessary in this world; but for what and for whom is it necessary?

It cannot make any person do right, nor is it necessary for good people.

Love makes a person do right; and it is love in the heart that makes a person good. We know from the Bible that this must be so; and we can know it also from our own experience and the experience of others.

The Bible says, "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." 1 John 5:3. And also, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. 13:10. The one who keeps the commandments of God—who fulfils the law—does right. He is a good person. And also, since "God is love," he who has love ruling in his heart has God there, and therefore has the goodness of God.

Force is necessary to restrain evil-doers. A good person does not do the things that an evil-doer needs to be restrained from doing. He chooses to do right, not because there is a law against wrong doing, but because he loves what is right.

Is a good person then without any law? No, indeed; he has the perfect law of God written in his heart. This is what gives him a love for the right. The law of man cannot be written in the heart and cannot give any person a love for the right. So the law of God is very much more effective to prevent wrong doing by an individual, if he will only receive it, than the law of man possibly can be.

A person may keep the laws which are made by Congress and the legislatures, and yet not be a good person.

For instance, he may not do any work on Sunday, because he is afraid that if he does he will be arrested and sent to jail, or punished with a fine. Or he may consider that it is good policy not to work on Sunday, in order to stand well with the people in the community. Is such a person any better for not working on Sunday?—Certainly not.

And it would be the same if it were the seventh day—the Bible Sabbath—instead of Sunday. If he does not keep the Sabbath because he loves it,—because the love of God is in his heart,—it is of no benefit to him to go through the form of keeping it. He is not a good man, in the true sense of the word, and to refrain from work does not make him any better.

Even the one who truly keeps the Sabbath does not become good by doing it, but he keeps it because he has become good already, by opening his heart to the love of God.

Force cannot make any person do right, however fully he may yield to it; because it cannot touch the heart, which is the fountain head of all our actions. If the fountain head is not sweet, the stream will not be sweet.

It may be walled in or dammed up or restrained in any other way; but its condition of purity or impurity will not be changed by any such means.

Force is to preserve rights. In doing this, its use is in harmony with the ordinance of God. But all along through the history of the world, from the time of Abel down to the end of the nineteenth century, some men have been using force to try to make them do right; or, rather, to make them do what these men thought was right. They have been using force to try to make people better, and so to secure their salvation instead of their destruction by the final judgments of God against sin. It is this that has caused the religious persecutions that have stained with blood so many of the pages of history.

In securing the preservation of rights, force is entirely proper; but in securing moral or right action it has no proper place. God and his co-workers use love to secure such action; but the arch-enemy of God and man uses force—not to make men moral, for he hates morality; but to make them conform to some standard of morality which he himself has set up in opposition to God, and palmed off upon the world. And all who employ or advocate force to make people do right are really working in harmony with him.

Even if force were used to make people conform to the true standard of morality,—the law of God,—it would be contrary to God, for it is not God's way. And the person upon whom it was used, instead of becoming better, would learn to hate instead of to love that law,—because he would see in it only an instrument of slavery to himself.

A New Sabbath Tract.

THERE are many persons who have not time to read long discussions, elaborate essays, and voluminous histories on the growingly important Sabbath question. For the benefit of such, we are issuing a tract, containing over eighty facts, extracts, and references concerning both Sabbath and Sunday, which facts are generally arranged in their chronological order. An item of especial interest to lovers of old books will be the reproduction of the title page of one of the books from which quotations are made, published in 1635. These citations are perfectly reliable in every respect and this tract will be a boon to those desiring a compendium of Sabbath history. It is listed as No. 45 of the "Apples of Gold Library," contains thirty-two pages, price two cents. Address, Pacific Press Pub. Co., 39 Bond Street, New York City.

An Excellent Commercial College.

WE have for some time carried the announcement of the Capital City Commercial College, of Des Moines, Iowa, because from personal knowledge we knew it to be one of the best schools of the kind anywhere in the West; indeed, it has few equals and no superiors anywhere. Those who are desirous of taking a thorough business or shorthand course will find there every opportunity to secure the best possible training, under skilled teachers. They say the proof of a pudding is the eating of it. The proof of the value of this school is the excellent success that attends those who take a course there. Quite a goodly number of SENTINEL readers are among its graduates. One of these is Miss Ora M. Fraser, private stenographer to Dr. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium. She says: "I am confident if it were not that I had received the thorough training and drill which the 'Four C's' alone can give, I could not fill the position I now have here in connection with the Sanitarium, for many others from other schools have tried and failed. I shall always recommend the Capital City Commercial College to my friends who are thinking of taking a commercial or stenographic course." The SENTINEL takes pleasure in advising its young friends who contemplate taking such a training as a commercial college is designed to give, to write for catalogue and further particulars, addressing MEHAN & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

OCTOBER 22.

WE hereby give notice that the present offer of our premium Bible with the Sentinel for one year for $3 will close on above-named date. To give our friends at a distance from us an equal chance with those near by, we will honor all orders received which are accompanied by a money order or bank draft on New York dated on or before Oct. 22, 1897.

After that date the price will be as formerly—Bible and Sentinel, 1 year, $3.50.

WE are reminded of the familiar Biblical expression "of making books there is no end,"—only to paraphrase it, substituting newspapers in the place of "books," by the appearance of a new candidate for consideration entitled Christian Educator, edited by Prof. F. W. Howe, and published monthly at Battle Creek, Mich. It has for its motto, "The true object of education is to restore the image of God in the soul," and in this respect it takes advanced ground over many other so-called educational journals. Among its contributors are names familiar to many, such, for instance, as, Mrs. E. G. White, Prof. W. W. Prescott, Eld. A. T. Jones, J. H. Kellogg, M.D., Prof. E. A. Sutherland, G. H. Bell, and other leading educators in the denomination of Seventh-day Adventists, largely in whose interest it is issued. To say that it fills a "long-felt want" is but mildly expressing it. The August number is rich with timely suggestions and admonitions on educational subjects, and no one who is interested in education can invest forty cents more judiciously. Send for sample copies, and thus become a regular reader.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS. AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most of all, not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS,
DESIGNS,
COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain, free, whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Oldest agency for securing patents in America. We have a Washington office. Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice in the

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,

beautifully illustrated, largest circulation of any scientific journal, weekly, terms $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Specimen copies and HAND BOOK ON PATENTS sent free. Address

MUNN & CO.,
361 Broadway, New York.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des. Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELTON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5½ x 2½ in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD

is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the
AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,
 Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round
 Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality.

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00, WITH SENTINEL, ONE $3.00

REDUCTION IN PRICE

FROM $3.50 TO $3.00,

For a SHORT TIME ONLY.

The Sentinel one year and Bible, postpaid,	$3.00
The Sentinel six months and Bible, postpaid,	2.50
The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel,	2.00
The Bible given as a present for six NEW yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each
“ “ “ twelve 6 months “ at	.50 each

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence we urge our patrons to ORDER AT ONCE.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we print. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

What our Patrons Say of It.

I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted.

The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished.

The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it.

My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it.

I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted.

I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible.

It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price.

I received your premium Bible, and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent.

I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected.

I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had.

We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight.

I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap.

The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

They that sealed the covenant. NEHEMIAH. X. The points of the covenant.

revest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.
 36 Behold, ^d we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:
 37 And ^e it yieldeth much increase ^e Dent. 28. ^d Dent. 28. ^e Dent. 28.

25 Re'hēm, Hā-shib'nah, Mā-gāg-
 26 And A-hi'jah, Hā'nān, A'nān,
 27 Mā'ūch, Hā'rīm, Bā-gāh.
 28 ¶ And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lēvites, the porters, the singers, the Nēth'i-nim, and all they that had separated themselves

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $6.00.

Address all orders to

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
 39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS. AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 40.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 14, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

A DENIAL of the validity of Sunday laws is not at all a denial of the right of any person to a weekly day of rest.

THE reason why a good many "reforms" do not succeed is that it is impossible to reform an evil thing into a good thing.

HE who spends the Sabbath day with God will enjoy a quiet and restful Sabbath, whether any one else around him is at rest or not.

THE right to do that which God commands, can be safely claimed by any individual without reliance upon any other power than God.

THERE is no right more important to mankind, none left more unguarded at the present time, and none so seriously menaced to day, as that of individual freedom of conscience.

THE civil law cannot undertake to enforce morality, without being forced to turn aside from its legitimate work of preserving human rights, and becoming an instrument of their destruction.

IF the nation is a moral personality, as is claimed, it must have a conscience, and its conscience must take precedence of the individual conscience and must direct the latter in any matter with which it has to do. And this, being so, the nation becomes the individual's god, and nationalism the individual's religion.

It is a sure sign of a bad law that it is largely made use of by bad people, or with malicious motives.

THE effectual cure for evil is not repression, but eradication; and the work of eradication must always be done in the heart.

IF it is fitting that the mighty work of creation should be commemorated by the setting apart of a weekly day of rest, what is there fitting about the setting apart of such a day by the State, which never created anything, nor has any power to create even a grain of sand? Is not such an act highly presumptuous?

The Middle Ages in Wisconsin.

By a decision in one of its circuit courts, the State of Wisconsin stands committed to the maintenance of discipline in the Catholic Church, especially as between bishops and priests.

A change of priests in a certain parish was desired. The priest who had been officiating there was directed by the bishop to go to another parish, and another priest was called to officiate in that parish. He refused to go; and the other priest came.

It seems that there was no difficulty with respect to the new priest officiating in the regular parochial duties. But the outgoing priest held possession of the clergy house and refused to give it up, the incoming priest being obliged to find a home among the congregation. And it was with regard to the possession of the clergy house that the matter came to a crisis, and was brought into court.

A writ of ejectment was sustained in the justice's court. An appeal was taken to the circuit court. So far the procedure was properly legal and legally proper; because, as is well understood in the Catholic system, all church property is legally owned by the bishop. But in addition to the question of the ejection of an unsatisfactory tenant, there was brought into the case the utterly foreign, because exclusively disciplinary, question as to whether in the Catholic Church a bishop can remove a priest at will.

It is not strange that the Catholic Church authorities should try to bring into the State court, and have cognizance and jurisdiction taken of it there, the question of church discipline; because that church, just like some other churches, is always ready to seize every possible opportunity to get the power of the State to enforce the discipline of the church. This, therefore, was only to be expected on the part of the church authorities.

But it is passing strange that any court in any State in the American Union would allow for one moment any question of church discipline to be considered in its proceedings. Yet this Wisconsin court did admit this question of church discipline; did take cognizance of it, considering "much expert testimony on canonical law;" and did exercise jurisdiction therein, holding that the bishop "has the right to transfer a priest from one parish to another."

It is no wonder, then, that the sympathizing correspondent should say that "the case is one that has been watched with the liveliest interest by church people, as it involved the foundation principles of church discipline." And all this being true, it is perfectly plain that by the action of this court the power of the State of Wisconsin stands committed to the enforcement of discipline in the Catholic Church. In other words, by this action of that court there has been formed to that extent a union of the State of Wisconsin with the Catholic Church.

What a spectacle it is to see a court of an American State sworn to maintain a constitution that is distinctly committed to the complete separation of Church and State, yet gravely receiving and weighing expert or any other testimony on canon law, and deciding according to the weight of such testimony, which, of course, was all one way! Does the State of Wisconsin stand in the Middle Ages? Are the people of Wisconsin subjects of the Church of Rome, that they must be ruled by canon law? Does membership of the priesthood of the Catholic Church in Wisconsin make a man so completely a subject of Rome that the power of the State will be employed to compel him to obey the laws of the church?

It is stated that the case will be appealed to the Supreme Court of the State. We should think it would. And when it shall have been so appealed, we hope there may be found judges in that court who live and think in the nineteenth century instead of the twelfth; who will consider the constitution and laws of the State of Wisconsin instead of the laws of the Church of Rome; and who will have regard to the rights and liberties of the people of the United States and of the State of Wisconsin, rather than the discipline of the Church of Rome or of any other church.

As the clergy house, as well as other church property, is legally owned by the bishop, he has a perfect right, equally with any other landlord, to turn out at any time any disagreeable tenant: and the State should support him in it, just as it does any other landlord.

But whether bishops of the Catholic Church have the right to remove priests at will from their parochial offices is the business of nobody but the priests, bishops, and people of the Catholic Church: and this is their business solely in their churchly connection, and never as citizens of a State or of the United States. Therefore no court of any State, nor of the United States, can ever rightly take notice of any such question.

And if in settling this question among themselves in their churchly connection, and in their own disciplinary way, they resort to the use of "stones and clubs on the part of the assaulting party, and a revolver in the hands of the priest," as was done in this case, then the State should prosecute and fine the ring-leaders, and the whole gang of them if need be, for breach of the peace, precisely as it would any other rioters. And this the State would do, without any thought or inquiry as to canon law, but to preserve the peace according to the laws of the State; without any reference whatever to the question as to whether a bishop can remove a priest at will, or to any other matter of "the foundation principles" or any other principles "of church discipline," but with sole reference to the "foundation principles" of civil government that in enforcing church discipline, even according to canon law they must not disturb the peace, nor violate the law of the State by rioting and murdering one another.

Instead of sitting and receiving "expert testimony" on canon law, that court should have listened to plain, every-day testimony as to who led in the rioting, who threw stones, who used clubs, who used a revolver, and why. But as must always be the case, and this case is a good illustration of it, whenever church matters are taken cognizance of by the State, rioting and violence may be carried on unquestioned, while the court spends its time considering expert testimony, casuistical questions on canon law! Questions as to the faith of the church take precedence of questions as to the law of the State: the church takes precedence of the State: the ecclesiastical power dominates the civil.

Wanted—A "Reform" Bible.

To meet the demands of some of the prominent religious "reform" movements of the day, we need a new Bible, in which there shall be some very material alterations of important texts. For instance, the first verses of Isaiah 61 would need to read like this:—

The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach the gospel of Christian citizenship; he hath sent me to bind the transgressors of the law, to proclaim captivity to Sabbath desecrators, and the closing of the prison doors upon many that are at liberty; to proclaim the turning of all bad men out of political office, and the reformation of the world by the power of civil law.

Of course, those who are engaged in these "Christian" reform movements are moved by the Spirit of the Lord; hence the text must be altered which sets forth what the Spirit of the Lord moves a person to do!

O, how much better it would be if these reformers—who have not a doubt that they are doing Christian work—would alter their conduct to fit the text, instead of trying to find a text to fit their conduct!

THE worst thing that could happen to the churches would be a law compelling every one to go to church. The worst thing that could happen for the diffusion of the spirit of Christian sabbath-keeping would be the invasion of the realm of purely Christian privilege by the civil law.—Herald and Presbyterian, September 8.

Shall the Government Enforce Sunday?

IN one way and another, from time to time, pressure is being brought to bear upon the United States Government to force from it an indorsement of the Sunday sabbath. In the summer of 1892 Congress yielded to this pressure and passed a law for closing the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday. The Sunday-closing of post-offices has for years been authorized by the post-office department at Washington in deference to the demands of the Sunday-observing element; and now an effort is being made by the citizens of Pittsburg, Pa., to induce the government, through the War Department, to commit itself definitely to the enforcement of Sunday observance. The matter is set forth in the following from the Evening Star (Washington, D. C.), of September 23, last:—

"Acting Secretary Meiklejohn, of the War Department, has been called upon to decide a troublesome question in connection with the public observance of Sunday. A few months ago the government purchased the locks, dams, and other improvements of the Monongahela River at a cost of over $3,000,000, and opened the river to free navigation. This action was taken in pursuance of an act of Congress.

"Since then the river has been used to a considerable extent by vessels carrying excursion parties, who usually chose Sundays for their merrymaking for the reason that Sundays were the only days they were not at work. The practice was exceedingly objectionable to the church element of Pittsburg, and a strong movement was started to stop what was termed the 'desecration of the Sabbath.' All other efforts to stop the practice having failed, an appeal was made to the War Department, which has charge of the operation of the locks.

"The appeal came in the form of a petition signed by many thousand persons residing in Pittsburg and vicinity. It represented the demoralizing effects of these Sunday river excursions upon the community in general, and upon the young people in particular, and prayed the secretary of war to stop the practice so far as the Monongahela River is concerned, by refusing to open the locks to excursion boats on Sundays.

"The authorities of the War Department question their right to discriminate against any class of boats desiring to navigate the river on Sunday or any other day, but in order to get full, unprejudiced information on the subject, they have referred the petition to Major Powell, the engineer officer in special charge of the government river and harbor works in that vicinity.

"The religious people of the smoky city are thoroughly in earnest in the matter and are using their best endeavors to induce the War Department to aid them in enforcing a recognition of the Christian sabbath by making Sunday excursions on the Monongahela impossible. In view of the important and delicate character of the question, involving as it does questions of personal and religious rights, it is probable that the acting secretary of war will secure an opinion from the attorney-general before taking final action in the premises. Meanwhile, the department will not interfere with the privileges of excursion parties so long as the river is open to free navigation."

Of course, there is not a shadow of right by which "the religious people" of Pittsburg can call upon the government to "aid them in enforcing a recognition of the Christian sabbath." As surely as it is true that this is a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," and not government of the people by a class of the people and for that class, so surely is the government bound by every consideration of right and honor not to discriminate between any class of its citizens.

The national Constitution expressly forbids any religious legislation on the part of Congress, and thereby plainly enjoins the government from attempting to help "religious people" in "enforcing a recognition of the Christian sabbath."

But it remains to be seen whether the War Department will ignore these patent truths and defer to the demands of the class who are trying to get the government definitely committed to a policy of Sunday enforcement. But against it all the SENTINEL enters its most emphatic protest.

A Basis for Some Startling "Reforms."

THE Truth Seeker (infidel organ), of October 2, in noticing the late National Reform Convention at Columbus, Ohio, offers the following pertinent suggestions for "reforms" on the basis of that "reform" which is demanded to-day by a large element in the Protestant churches:—

"In its call for a national convention the Reform party flings its constitution to the breeze. The document opens with the substance of the proposed Amendment to the United States Constitution, and among the reasons for adopting that Amendment, recites the following:—

"Remembering that this country was settled by Christian men, with Christian ends in view, and that they gave a distinctly Christian character to the institutions which they established,' etc.

"Such an argument would afford excuse for some startling 'reforms.' For example, 'this country was settled by' Englishmen; why not, then, acknowledge Great Britain in our Constitution? It was discovered by a Catholic; why not acknowledge the pope? The first settlers brought liquor with them; why not acknowledge brandy to be the national drink? The case seems to be that the National Reformers imagine they are living in colonial days, and are in ignorance that many evils current in those days were guarded against by the Constitution adopted in 1789."

Civil Law and Morality.

CIVIL law is not fitted to deal with matters on the basis of their character as moral or immoral; its province is to consider them on the basis of their compatibility with human rights.

The Declaration of Independence sets forth that governments are instituted to preserve the natural rights of mankind; and the truth of the statement is declared to be self-evident. But it is a lie if the doctrine be true that civil law can properly concern itself with questions of morality.

The Christian Statesman, however, and the "reform" party which it represents, evidently do not believe in the Declaration of Independence. In a late issue of the Statesman the editor makes note of the objection to National Reform work, that moral reforms must be put into the hearts of the people before they will come out in the life, and says:—

"But if the civil law has properly nothing to do with Sabbath, temperance, or other reforms, as matters of public morals, why should it have anything more to do with the moral principle of ownership in property or the sacredness of human life? Are we content to have regard for human life or property or the marriage relation wrought into the hearts of the people and left there without any expression of civil law concerning impurity, stealing, and murder? No civilized commonwealth dreams of carrying into effect any such limping code of morals."

This may look and sound plausible, but it is mere sophistry. The answer is that civil law does not prohibit theft, murder, and adultery in order to prevent immorality, but in order to protect the rights of the individual. If its object were to prevent immorality, it would utterly fail of its purpose; for according to the testimony of Scripture—and of human experience as well—the man who covets, or hates his fellow men, or harbors impure thoughts, is as verily immoral as is the one who steals, murders, or commits adultery. Immorality is not an act, but a condition. It is impossible for an individual to commit an immoral act before he has become an immoral person.

He does not become immoral by committing the immoral act, but he commits the immoral act because he has become immoral. "Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh."

Therefore, as stated, the civil law would utterly fail of its purpose if it should undertake to prohibit immorality. If that has been its object, it has utterly failed from the first.

But civil law is not a failure. It is necessary to civil government, and civil government is necessary to the preservation and enjoyment of individual rights, without which this life would fail to realize the purpose which it is designed to serve.

And as no question of the violation of individual rights is concerned in the observance or non-observance of the Sabbath, but only a question of morality, the civil law can properly have no concern with it. The law is bound to protect every person in his right of exercising his own judgment and free will in such a matter.

In the Republic of Colombia, South America, where the Roman church influences legislation, it is a misdemeanor for any one in a newspaper, book, or tract to say anything to "annoy" any archbishop or bishops in that which relates to their duties.

A "Non-sectarian" Myth.

It is entirely proper that the Roman Catholic press should protest against governmental recognition of "non-sectarian" Protestantism. This is a myth which certain Protestant religious journals have persistently assumed to be a reality. They have assumed, in other words, that a union of Church and State could only be where the State was joined with some particular religious denomination, and that where State aid was given in behalf of principles and dogmas held by a number of denominations in common, no union of Church and State could be charged.

These Protestants have always maintained emphatically that State aid or patronage given to the Catholic Church constituted a union of Church and State, but they have denied that a similar relation of the State to the Protestant Church in general, as distinguished from the adherents of the papacy, constituted a similar union.

Now comes the Catholic Review (New York) with a strongly-worded demand that Protestants shall stand by their professions of regard for a secular government,—professions made when opposing the advances of Rome,—and that the government shall give no aid or recognition to Protestantism; just as she is asked to do toward the Church of Rome.

The program of reform which this Catholic journal demands is given as the following:—

"Put the Protestant version of the Bible out of the public courts and the public schools; do away with the religious oath at the taking of testimony; discharge the Protestant ministers who are chaplains of legislatures, prisons, and reformatories; dismiss preachers and priests who are drawing money from the public treasury in payment for their services in preaching their beliefs in the Christian religion to soldiers and sailors; forbid the election or appointment of a clergyman to any political office; and let the so-called American principle of the separation of Church and State drive God and his Christ and his Word and his rule and his kingdom and his clerical representatives out of the official life of this nation. Let it not be only Catholic Indian schools or Catholic charities that are 'sectarian.' Let Protestant schools, and Protestant teachers, and Protestant ministers, and Protestant institutions fall under the same ban. It is Protestants who are prescribing this treatment. Let them take their own medicine."

Rome frequently displays the virtue of being consistent, and does so in this instance. The Protestant prescribers should not refuse to take their own medicine, and cannot refuse without standing discredited in the public views. But Rome does not want the Protestant bodies to "take their medicine," and of course, knows full well that they will not do so. Her object is to force them to desist from their opposition to herself, by exposing their inconsistency in the matter.

Let it be noted that the Church of Rome stands fully abreast of any Protestant church in claiming that the American principle of separation of Church and State drives "God and his Christ and his Word and his rule and his kingdom . . . out of the official life of this nation." The Church of Rome does not admit that all this can be in the official life of the nation without having Protestantism first driven out; and on the other hand, the "national reform" Protestant bodies are equally positive that the rule of God and his Word in the seat of national government is entirely incompatible with any recognition of the Church of Rome. The principle which leads any religious body to seek for governmental support of its principles, dogmas, or institutions, is an intolerant principle, and always leads to bitter sectarian strife. It is not a Christian principle in any sense.

If the Roman Catholic Church be a sect, the Protestant Church is likewise a sect, for the two bodies stand over against each other. And when any Protestant body calls for a non-sectarian government, it calls for its own exclusion, and that of all other religious bodies, either singly or combined, from any position of government patronage or aid.

THE attempt to suppress immorality by civil law when logically and consistently carried out, leads directly to the establishment of the Inquisition.

Attention!

As noted in another column, the special offer on our premium Bible closes October 22. Before that date, the SENTINEL one year and this superb Bible can be secured for only $3. After that date the price will be $3.50. Remember the offer closes October 22. All orders dated on or before October 22 will be honored.

How United States Chaplains are Appointed.

THE following is taken from an article in the Independent (N. Y.), of September 23, by a writer who signs himself "One Who Knows:"—

"In the discussions, in the Independent, on the appointment of chaplains at West Point and in the army these statements have appeared:

"The present chaplain at West Point was nominated in the usual way, on the recommendation of the Academic Board and the Board of Visitors."

"The same rule applied in other cases results in the choice of a Catholic, or a Baptist, or a Methodist, a Presbyterian or other denominationalist. The general preference governs, we suppose."

"We had supposed, and we still suppose, that these selections are made in obedience to denominational preferences of officers and men."

"These statements indicate a lack of reliable information. 'The general preference,' 'the denominational preferences of officers and men,' at local army posts or commands, never govern these selections. In two cases, known to the writer of this, the dominant Protestant Episcopal official element at two army posts secured the appointment of two men of their own faith, and here there was no expression of the 'general preference,' and the 'denominational preferences' of the 'men' were not considered for a moment. In every other instance, for many years past, from personal knowledge, it is believed that army posts and army people have had scarce anything to do with these appointments. They are made just as other appointments to government offices are made—either as a matter of personal favoritism or through political influence.

"And this is one of the sorriest features of this whole business. Whenever a vacancy occurs there are a multitude of applicants for the position, say two or three hundred of them. I could give you the history of a number of these appointments, in which, in several instances, through personal favoritism, incompetent, and even unworthy men have been foisted into this office, who disgraced themselves and the service. In a recent instance a man, who had been an active and influential politician, was appointed chaplain to gratify a warm personal friend and former political associate, who was a member of the president's cabinet, though he was so old when he accepted the position that he had less than five years to serve before retirement on the score of age. Of course no man at that age should be appointed to this position. In another instance a man was appointed who was a local politician, and at the time of his appointment was running a paper in a small town, and who as a minister had no record of success or acceptability entitling him to be considered for such a place; and his appointment was made at the individual request of a relative, who at the time was the most influential member of the president's cabinet, and who desired to provide his sister an assured livelihood. Another was appointed, a worthy man with a good record, in part at least, because he happened to be the pastor of the family of the secretary of war. Another owed his appointment to the fact that he had a brother-in-law prominent in political life, a warm friend of the president's and from the same State. Another, when appointed, had the good fortune to be the son of a congressman, who stood very near the president in his personal and political affiliations. Another had his appointment brought about by the written request of the entire congressional delegation of his State. In another instance the president informed a minister whom he knew well, that he intended to appoint a man of his denomination, and requested him to recommend a man, which he did; and the man was appointed. Another was appointed because he had been chaplain of a regiment during the war, of which the president had been an officer.

"When another was appointed the papers stated that his appointment was due to the fact that he was a boyhood friend of the wife of the president. This man's career was a disgrace for years. He was repeatedly drunk, and was compelled finally to resign or be tried for drunkenness, gambling, and other misconduct. Still another, at the time of his appointment, was a pastor of one of the most aristocratic and fashionable churches. He was a man of polish and a good speaker; but, notwithstanding his church was not at all opposed to the drink customs of fashionable society, this man had become a drunkard of such a character that his church wanted to get rid of him. The president knew him well personally, and his habits and character, and to let him down easily and give his family a livelihood he appointed him a chaplain in the army! As a natural result his conduct was a constant disgrace to the position, and after a brief service he was retired wholly, i. e., dismissed from the service with one year's pay. And, strange as it may seem and hard to be believed, the final, controlling consideration that influenced this man's appointment was the fact that he was a drunkard! Another, whose fitness for the position seems by no means marked, owed his appointment, according to the statement of the papers at the time, to the fact that he was a boyhood friend of the president. The appointment of another was in part influenced by the fact that he gave an address of welcome to President Grant at one time when he visited the city where this man was pastor. Several of the chaplains owe their appointments largely to the fact that they rendered faithful, good service in various positions in the army during the war. Another was the brother of a man very prominent in Washington and who had large influence with the president.

"These instances sufficiently illustrate the manner in which these appointments are made. Others have been made on the recommendation if not the solicitation of prominent church dignitaries. In addition to cases mentioned above, within a few years past, one other army chaplain has been retired wholly, with drunkenness behind it, another has been compelled to resign because of drunkenness, and another was court-martialed and convicted for duplicating his pay accounts, with drunkenness behind it all—a sad comment on the manner in which some of these appointments are made. Names and details in all these cases could be given, but that is not necessary or best. Be it said, also, that in spite of this method of appointment, and the terrible records some of them have made, most of the chaplains have been men of ability and good character and life, and are such to-day; but the system of the past still rules in their appointment."

It will be said, of course, that what is needed is a reform in the manner of making these appointments, which will eliminate the baneful factor of personal influence.

But we may expect to see this realized when what is known as "pull" shall be divorced from politics. But when will that be?

The root of the whole evil is the principle of State supervision of religion; or in other words, the union of religion and the State. So long as this principle is followed, so long will the fruit of it appear in facts similar to those here set forth.

Church and State in Portugal.

THE Pittsburg Catholic, of September 2, says:—

"If there are circumstances in which the union of Church and State are to the advantage of religion, there are assuredly others in which it is detrimental to spiritual interests. In Portugal, ever since the days of Pombal, there has been a strong disposition in royal and governmental quarters to keep the church in fetters. The Holy See has struggled hard to secure the necessary independence for the church, but it has been only partially successful, and has had, no doubt, to tolerate many encroachments which it would fain have prevented. This is the secret of the state of servitude to which the ecclesiastical authorities have been reduced in Portugal. For instance, all the parishes are under the king's patronage and are given away by the government, the bishop merely assuring himself of the canonical fitness of the candidates. This, it may be imagined, leads at times to the pernicious exercise of political influence by deputies and others. Aspirants to the priesthood must also obtain the consent of the State, to which they are compelled on their ordination to pay a sum of two or three pounds. The system is responsible for numerous defects, if not scandals, and a Center Party has been started with the object of bringing about a reform."

When the Church is under the supervision of the State, as in this instance, "the church" has no difficulty in seeing the evils of Church-and-State union. In the Dark Ages the State was under the control of the Church, and a return to that régime is what the papacy earnestly desires to-day. Then she would have no complaints to make in behalf of "the church," but the result would be no less fatal to pure religion, and even more fatal to individual freedom and the sacred rights of conscience, than is that which follows from the domination of Church interests by the State.

Queries.

BY A. R. BELL.

"This is a Christian nation."—United States Supreme Court.

Three thousand churches in the United States reported not a single conversion during 1896.—New York Independent.

Does the latter statement indorse the first one as being true?

Do all the individuals who comprise this nation so "abide in Him" that they "walk even as He walked?" Is that the reason why the New York Independent makes the above report?

AGAIN: If this is a "Christian nation," then all its citizens must be Christians.

If all its citizens are Christians, then all the acts of its citizens are Christian acts.

This being true, we may expect that since 1892, the year that this nation was officially declared to be "Christian," its life has been patterned after Him who is the Author of Christianity. But what are the facts?

Before the Supreme Court fiat of 1892, the record for one year (1891) in murders was 5,906. Since then for the five years following to Dec. 31, 1896, the awful record shows a total of 44,361 murders. A very flattering record, truly!

AGAIN: If this is already a "Christian nation" (and the United States Supreme Court says it is), then Christ must now be enthroned as the nation's head. And this being true(?), was the Christian Endeavor convention at Boston, in 1895, consistent when it set forth as the purpose of that vast organization, "To enthrone Christ in every town and city; . . . to have every mayor and councilman a Christian, then Christ will rule"?

"What a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for"?

Blind Humanitarians.

"Present Truth" (London, Eng.), September 23.

No one can rightly question the sincerity of those seeking social reform who do not acknowledge God's authority as the first step toward true reform. They merely do not know. When Jesus was condemned, it was from this "general humanitarian" point of view. "It is expedient for us," said Caiaphas, "that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." But their rejection of Jesus and, in that, of God's law and rulership brought swift ruin upon people and nation. Paul was denounced as a "pestilent fellow," and Christians were a sect "everywhere spoken against" because they were preaching the gospel in a society that men were trying to bind together by universal ties of trade and common religion, enforced by civil law. But the gospel of liberty which they preached was the only hope of society. Just so papal Rome for many centuries tried to compel uniformity in error for the general good and peace of society. But Rome corrupted and ruined the world.

THE TWO GOSPELS.

In the beginning Satan persuaded Eve that he stood for the interests of humanity as against God's commands. All the trouble that floods the world and is hastening it to destruction was in that substitution of Satan's way for God's. The enemy has ever since posed as a humanitarian, working to persuade men that liberty and the general good are to be sought in rejecting God's authority. The result is the bondage of sin. God's gospel calls men to liberty in Christ, which is the freedom of the obedience of love. This Sabbath question is but the test as to whether God's way or Satan's shall stand. The Sunday-law advocate says that the general day of rest must not be God's Sabbath, but Sunday, and to secure it to those who wish to keep it, those who do not must be forced to observe it. God's Sabbath rest cannot be enforced by human law. Only faith establishes it. But it stands in the power of God as the sign of his power. And he will show that not only can men keep it and enjoy his rest when others do not, but that they can keep it when all the world seeks by force to compel them to reject it and accept the papal substitute.

Man Superior to Institutions.

BY GEO. W. COPLEY.

THERE is evidently a vast deal of misconception in the minds of many people in regard to the office and importance of the existing institutions of men.

Take, for example, the Sabbath, as instituted by the Lord in Eden. The royal seventh day, placed in the bosom of the royal law amid the thunders of Sinai, coming to man bearing the seal of divinity, is beneficent and glorious when legitimately employed in sweet communion with its Author. But note the general ruin that followed the institution of the papal Sunday that was foisted upon the world under the iron rule of Rome in A. D. 321.

It was never designed by God that any institution should cramp and dwarf and work hardship to mankind. When any institution does this we may be sure it is neither of God nor under the sanction of God. The Lord Jesus said, "The Sabbath was made for man," not man for the Sabbath. It was never the purpose of God to sacrifice any man to an institution; but on the contrary it was his purpose to make all institutions contribute to man's highest happiness and everlasting good.

This noble government of ours was established, evidently, under the guidance of God, that the victims of ecclesiastical tyranny might have the rest and peace which they could enjoy only where religious liberty has the safeguard of the supreme law of the nation. Institutions were made for man, and not man for institutions. This must be the correct interpretation of the Saviour's words as applied more broadly to all the institutions utilized by man.

There is another saying of the Saviour that will, no doubt, apply here, and that is, "By their fruits ye shall know them." The truth is, that the institutions of men are all of them more or less established in error; and when once established, there are thousands ready to sustain them as they are rather than with good and honest hearts to amend them the more completely to serve the public good.

Institutions should serve mankind, not enslave them.

AFTER more than a century of existence of a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," based upon the principle that all men are created equal in respect of certain unalienable rights, which it is the business of governments to preserve, the American people are to-day as anxiously engaged in the quest for "good government" as they were before any government had been instituted upon that principle.

PROBABLY there was never a time when so much was heard about "good government" as is heard to-day. It is the leading cry of each one of the political parties in its appeal for the support of the people. It is the subject of their loudest promises. When once it is in power, says each one, there will be no more of this, that, or the other obnoxious features which have prevailed under the preceding régime. Some force is generally lent to these assertions by the fact that the people are very generally suffering from bad government. In their ardent hope for something better, the people continue to put faith in these promises, as a drowning man clutches at a straw.

OCCASIONALLY the new party, or the old party, that has been for some time "out of a job," gets into power, and the people wait for it to put its promises into effect. And after they have waited awhile, and the promised reforms and other benefits do not materialize, they learn with indignation and grief that the party has "shamefully betrayed the people's trust" (or words to that effect) and there must be another "turning out" of the "rascals" before good government can be attained. This has been the record of every party that has been in power in American politics for many years.

THIS condition of things prevails in spite of the fact that it is very easy to discover a "sure remedy." For you can find such a remedy set forth in the columns of every newspaper. It is amusing to note the air of assurance with which our political journals set forth just what mistakes were made by the people in the last election, just where the successful party has been recreant to its duty, and just what is needed to realize that condition of things for which the country has long been looking. It is related of the Confederate General Lee that having his attention called at one time to the way in which the Southern journals criticised the campaigns of the armies and pointed out the mistakes of his generals and just what ought to be done to insure great victories in the immediate future, he remarked: "I had thought that we had the best men to command our armies that could be chosen for the place; but I now see that we have only second-rate men for the army, and that our ablest generals have been left at home to edit the newspapers." It is not recorded, however, that he found occasion to call for the services of any of these "ablest generals" in the field.

THE people are assured that the only thing necessary to the realization of "good government" is the election of the proper persons to office. But it seems very hard to discover the proper persons, or, when discovered, to get them installed into the coveted positions of public trust. It is no longer left to the old parties to select these individuals. "Faith" in the old parties is on the wane, but not faith in the magic power of the ballot. Still believing in the potency of the latter to evolve all the necessary conditions of the long-sought "good government," new parties are entering the arena of political contention, and even the forces of religion are joining in the struggle for the control of the ballot box. It would seem that the more failures are made to secure "reform" and good government by the ballot, the firmer does the "faith" of the people grow in the effectiveness of the ballot for that very end.

FOR instance, we now have the "National Christian Citizenship League" out with a "proclamation," that the league, "having declared a national crusade for the purification of public life, the dethronement of evil and the enthronement of the principles of Jesus Christ in these United States, . . . appeals to the pure-minded, true-hearted men and women of the Republic who believe with Charles Sumner that 'righteousness is preservation,' and calls for a million volunteers to enlist for the war and report at once to the national headquarters." The Christian Endeavor forces are marshaling for a like purpose. They expect to succeed where the old parties have failed, because of the fact that they will do their work on a "Christian" basis!

WHAT is the matter, anyway? Does the trouble lie in the principles upon which the government is established? Were the statesmen wrong in their political views who wrote the Declaration of Independence and drafted the Constitution?—No; these documents are just as good to-day, in themselves, as they ever were. The failure has not been in them, but in that very fallible thing through which they were to be applied; namely, human nature. And in this the failure has been very great.

It seems to take people a long time to learn—if indeed they ever will learn—that there cannot be good government in a republic without good people. The more good people there are, the better will be the government, because the less government will be needed, and the people can be left more free to be a government directly to themselves. The problem of good government would be very much simplified if we could dispense with our prisons, our liquor saloons, our reformatory institutions, and our courts of justice. And the only reason that this cannot be done is that human nature is so bad that these things are absolutely demanded.

* * *

THERE is less good government in the land now than in the days of Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson, simply because there are less good people in proportion to the population now than there were then. There are less people in proportion who are able to govern themselves, or who have, in other words, the virtue of self-control.

* * *

BUT what will supply the lack? Will the ballot? or legislation? Manifestly nothing but good religion can make good people out of bad ones; only that can substitute something better for the fallible human nature which is at the bottom of all the trouble. What then must we conclude with respect to the outlook for national prosperity when we see the forces of the church, which ought to be proclaiming good religion, turning aside from this to engage in politics, out of which no converting, sanctifying influence can ever come?

Law Against Sunday Cycling in New Jersey.

"New York Journal," October 5.

AN old New Jersey law was revived yesterday, and should a wheelman in that State ride on Sunday for any other purpose than that of seeking medical aid or going to church, he does so at his own risk, and is not under the protection of the law.

This was exemplified in the court of Justice William H. Harrison, of Hackensack, Bergen County.

The complainants in the case were the Garlick brothers, of Paterson. They were riding a tandem through Rochelle Park on Sunday, September 19, when they were run into by a wagon driven and belonging to Henry Leswing, of Rochelle Park. The result was a suit against Leswing, demanding $100 for the loss of the tandem.

Prosecutor Stagg startled the court by citing the old and almost forgotten law. The judge looked embarrassed, but finally rallied and said:—

"The law extends no protection to law-breakers, and riding a bicycle for pleasure on Sunday is against the law of this State."

Justice Harrison thereupon decided the case against the complainants.

Jailed for Hunting on "the Sabbath Day."

New York "Sun," October 5.

JOHN F. ENGLER, twenty-two years old, of 237 Barrow St., Jersey City, took his gun on Sunday afternoon and went down to the woods at the foot of Claremont avenue in the Greenville section of the city. Game Wardens John Kerr, of Harrison, and George Kelly, of Essex County, who happened to be in the woods looking for violators of the game law, met Engler and arrested him. They haled him before Justice Roe and charged him with violating section 15 of the game law, which provides, "That it shall be unlawful to hunt with a gun, or with a dog, or with any firearms or weapons, or to carry a gun in the fields or the woods on the sabbath day, commonly called Sunday." Justice Roe imposed a fine of $20. Engler refused to pay it and declared that he would take an appeal. The justice then committed him to the county jail for ninety days. Engler will probably make an application for a writ of habeas corpus.

◆◆◆◆◆

THE Sacramento (Cal.) Typographical Union has resolved that its members shall not buy any goods on Sunday nor patronize any store that keeps open on that day. In this matter the members of the union surrender their individuality to that of the organization, and in so doing, part with just that much of their God-given manhood. The San Francisco Star approves the resolution.

◆◆◆◆◆

THE newspapers report that in Pittsburg, Pa., a man who had been expelled from church membership, entered suit for, and actually obtained $100 damages for "loss of his spiritual life." It is silly enough in all conscience for a man to think that spiritual life consists of church-membership; but it is both silliness and perfect blundering blindness for any court in the United States to entertain any such complaint and to put through any such case. However, in these days of the confusion of civil and religious things, the point has been reached where we need not be surprised to see courts doing the most senseless things possible.

◆◆◆◆◆

MR. JOHN STOFFELA, a merchant of Yuma, Ariz., was recently arrested and fined $50 for violation of a Sunday-closing ordinance passed by the common council of Yuma not long since. This ordinance is said to be the first Sunday legislation ever enacted in Arizona. Mr. Stoffela suffers this penalty for choosing to exercise his own judgment in the matter of keeping his store open on Sunday. It is his own store, and he takes the risk of any harm that may come to his trade from so doing; and this is all the risk that any person could reasonably be asked to run under such circumstances.

◆◆◆◆◆

"THE Lord is our judge; the Lord is our lawgiver."

THERE is something much worse than to be a pessimist, and that is, to be a woefully mistaken optimist.

Needed: A Backward Movement.

"Christian Endeavorer" for September.

WE have come into peculiar times—the "last days" of this age—when the church has to a lamentable extent departed from its God-honored methods of working. Our religious life has degenerated into a life of "movements" and "conventions" and "organizations;" men's meetings and women's meetings; sunrise prayer-meetings, and Junior Endeavor prayer-meetings and old folks' prayer-meetings, and a list of other names that tax the capacity of our Sunday services. From morning to night we are in one ceaseless round of public meetings. We need to return to the days of personal private devotion.

This lack of home religion is to no small degree responsible for the lack of true religion in public. We may be behind the times, but we want to enter a protest against the spectacular performances and sacred(?) concerts that have taken the place of the regular Sunday evening services. We plead for holy living in the homes, and honest, fearless declaration of the will of God in the church. We are wearied with "boy preachers," "singing evangelists," "ex-priests," "converted nuns," "stereopticon lectures," etc., etc., and yearn for the plain preachers of righteousness.

The absence of that which made the early Christians strong has made room for the worldliness that is so predominant in so many churches. The church has entered the arena of attractions, and seeks to gather men together by very poor imitations of that which is not worth imitating, and the result will surely prove that the policy is shortsighted. In exact proportion as people look upon the church as an "amusement bureau," or as a theater from which evil has been expurgated, will they lose interest in the church as a revealer of the will of God. In its earnestness to make itself popular the church has lost sight of the fact that the only mission ever marked out for its ministers is to be found in the commission given to them: "Go ye therefore into all the world, and preach the gospel unto every creature."

We need a "backward movement." Selling strawberries and cream in hot weather and oyster stews in cold weather, and voting on the most popular minister in the town, or the prettiest young lady in the church, may be in harmony with the present order of things, but the question arises, "Is the present order of things in harmony with the will of God?" Let us return to the former order of things. "Ask now of the days that are past." When the church was poor, was it not then rich? Then every man gave as the Lord prospered him, and the whole responsibility of the church's finances was thus thrown up on God.

Why Did Elijah Kill Baal's Prophets?

"WHATEVER does this mean, mama?" asked Charlie, appearing in the sewing room with the Doré Bible; "it seems to me that it was very strange for Elijah to kill all the prophets of Baal. The other day when we were talking about Jezebel killing the prophets of the Lord, you told me that she did very wrong. Now, mama, how do you explain the action of Elijah?"

Mrs. Ross looked up at Charlie's eager countenance, and sighed; for had she not often questioned in vain for an answer to this same perplexity? She laid aside her work, however, and said, "Let us study the chapter in which this history is recorded, and see if we can find a satisfactory answer; for I do confess to you, Charlie, that you have asked me a hard question."

"Now I will turn questioner. What happened just before Elijah killed the prophets of Baal?"

"First, Elijah told the king to gather all the people, and send for all the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal. When they all came together unto Mount Carmel, Elijah stood up in their sight, and said, 'How long halt ye between two opinions?'"

"Then it seems that the people were in perplexity and did not know exactly what was right," said Mrs. Ross. "Well, go on, Charlie."

"Then Elijah said, 'If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.'"

"It seems to me that was a fair proposition. Does it not to you, Charlie?"

"O, of course. That is not what I am troubled about. The true God is the one they ought to have obeyed, because he made them, and all things, and gave them all they had. It would have been far better if they had worshiped God all the time; for God is love, and good, and never asked them to do one unreasonable thing. But what I am troubled about is, that Elijah, who knew God and loved him, and must have understood that he was love, kind, and merciful, should do the very thing to the prophets of Baal that he thought was so wrong for Jezebel to do to the prophets of God."

"Well, let us go on with our study. I begin to see why it was, and I think you will before we are done."

"Well, after he called their attention to the fact that he stood alone in their midst for God, he told the prophets to raise an altar to their gods, and put a sacrifice on the wood, but to place no fire under it. Then he would take another sacrifice, and build an altar to the Lord, and put no fire under it, and both in turn would call on the Lord, and the God who answered by fire would be acknowledged as the true God."

"Then, mama, there is a real funny part in the story, and I could not help laughing a little. You see the four hundred and fifty priests began to call for Baal to answer by fire, but no answer came. They called and called till noon. Then Elijah told them to cry louder, that maybe their god was out walking or taking a nap. Wasn't that funny? Of course that was all a joke. I could imagine I saw the silly priests shouting and leaping around like crazy men. At last they began to cut themselves, till they were covered with blood, as though they would even make a sacrifice of themselves, if only their god would answer by fire, and make the people honor him as God.

"Elijah let them carry on in this way until evening; but by and by he put a stop to it, for of course there was no answer to all their cries."

"How very solemn it must have been when Elijah hushed their wild, cruel worship!" said Mrs. Ross. "How the people must have looked up to the calm, old prophet with expectant faces! How sorry he must have felt for those poor, perplexed, superstitious people who could not tell who the true God was, or how to worship him! How indignant he must have felt to think of all the suffering they had been called upon to endure through this terrible worship of Baal!"

"But whatever made them so silly?" asked Charlie; "I am sure you would never catch me worshiping a god that would not answer."

"But you forget, Charlie, that the devil and self was behind it all, and that if he had been permitted to, he would have answered by fire for Baal, and that he worked actual miracles to deceive the poor, distressed people. But go on with the story."

"Well, at evening, Elijah built up the altar of the Lord, put on the sacrifice, and made the people pour twelve barrels of water over the altar, till the trench was all filled. Then Elijah prayed to God, and said, 'Let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word.' Then this is what it says: 'Then the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench. And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces: and they said, The Lord, he is the God.' O, mama, how glad they must have been to find out that God was God!"

"No doubt there were many who were glad to worship God. But there were many who still hated him and his servants. Can you tell who they were?"

"The prophets of Baal, I suppose," said Charlie, slowly. "It seems as if they ought to have been glad to give up the worship of a god who had made such fools out of them. But then as long as they were determined to be fools, why didn't Elijah let them go ahead?"

"Elijah was the prophet of the Lord,—God's ambassador to a usurper's kingdom. Elijah knew the mind of God, and did not act simply as a man and in human wisdom. Suppose that the people had been nourishing four hundred and fifty serpents, and that Elijah had just found out a way of making them drop them, and see their venomous character, and that, as they saw their danger and malignity, they were willing to have them destroyed, and that Elijah acted for God, and God said, 'Put them out of the way or they will destroy my people.' The prophets of Baal had had great light in regard to God and his power and character, and God saw that they were utterly and wilfully given over to evil, and were a menace to the people's liberty and life, and that no good could result by granting them a further probation. Surely God knew what was best to do, and his action toward them was only one of mercy."

"Yes," said Charlie, doubtfully; "but, mama, wouldn't we think it very wrong to put people to death who did not agree with us in matters of religion?"

"Certainly, and it would be wrong; for we cannot read the heart, and even if we could, we would have no right to kill those who were utterly bad. But God has the power and the right to destroy as he has created and preserved. When at last all rebels are exterminated, the whole universe will declare that God is just and righteous."

"In those days the government was a theocracy, or government of God, and men were dealt with just as if God were the governor on a throne. Of course, God could make no mistake when he pronounced sentence. But there is no theocracy on earth to-day. It is true that there is a counterfeit of it, where a man sits in the temple of God, showing himself to be God, and has presumed to legislate as if he could read the hearts of men."

"O, I know," said Charlie; "papa was telling me about the Inquisition only the other day, and he said that men were often put to the rack and into slow ovens to make them confess, so that the inquisitors might know their very hearts."

"Yes, very cruel measures have to be resorted to, when men undertake to read the hearts of men."

"Well, after all, mama, I am glad that we are living in the liberty that we are. I do not think I should have enjoyed living in Elijah's time, and I am sure I should have been in continual fear if I had lived under the shadow of the Inquisition."

"There would have been no more need of fear, then, than now. Some one has said that the history of the world is only the history of Church and State and the reaction against it. For some time we have been living in an age of reaction against the false theocracy, but the tide is beginning to set the other way, and some day a government is to bring down fire on the earth, not to prove the power of the true God, but to deceive the people, and to lead them to carry out the decrees of Baal.

Study the Word of God, my boy; for it may be that even you may yet be called upon to witness for the true God against the very sight of your eyes, trusting only to the infallible Word. We'll have another talk about it."

F. B.

The "Civil" Religious Sabbath.

JOHNNIE.—Mama, what is the civil sabbath that the preacher told us about this morning?

MAMA.—He meant, Johnnie, that everybody ought to rest one day in seven.

Johnnie.—Which day, mama?

Mama.—Why, Sunday, I suppose.

Johnnie.—But you and papa have been resting on Sunday all the time, and so have lots of other folks. Were you having a civil sabbath?

Mama.—Oh, no, Johnnie; we rest on Sunday because it is the day when Christ rose from the dead. We call it the Christian sabbath.

Johnnie.—But mama, if Sunday is the Christian sabbath, how can it be a civil sabbath?

Mama.—I suppose the State makes it a civil sabbath, by commanding people to rest on it.

Johnnie.—Then if the Lord made Sunday a religious sabbath, and the State makes it a civil sabbath, which is it?

Mama.—Why—I—I suppose it's a civil sabbath to people who rest because the State commands it, and a religious sabbath to people who rest because they are religious. What makes you ask such questions, anyway?

Johnnie.—Oh, nothing, mama; only I want to get this all straight in my mind, so I'll understand it. I don't see where the difference comes in if I rest one Sunday because the State commands it, and then do just the same thing next Sunday on account of my religion. It would be all the same thing; wouldn't it?

Mama.—Well, Johnnie, I don't know as I can explain it to you, but you know the Bible says that God made the Sabbath, so it's a religious day. But the State says people must have a civil sabbath, too, by resting on the first day of the week.

Johnnie.—Then if the State calls for a civil sabbath, mama, and my religion calls for a religious Sabbath, both on the same day, which call am I to obey?

Mama.—Oh, we don't keep the civil sabbath, Johnnie; our Sabbath is religious; and so it is with all people who are religious.

Johnnie.—But wouldn't the State arrest us, mama, if we should break the civil sabbath by working on Sunday?

Mama.—Why—yes; I suppose we might be arrested for that; some people have been, not very long ago.

Johnnie.—Then if we don't need a civil sabbath, but keep Sunday because we are religious, would the State punish us for not being religious, if we should work next Sunday?

Mama.—I declare, Johnnie, you're getting terribly inquisitive; who put all those questions into your head? You'll have to ask the minister about it the next time he comes here to tea. I can't stop to answer more such questions now.

Johnnie.—All right, mama; but I don't believe he can tell any more about it than you have. The fact is, I don't see any sense in a civil sabbath, and I believe it's all a humbug. If God made the Sabbath, and commands everybody to keep it, that settles it, and I don't see what more people can want. Anyway, that's good enough for me.

John Bunyan and His Persecutors.

WE recently published a conversation that Mr. Bunyan had with the clerk who was sent by the authorities to him demanding that he submit to the law as it existed. The real cause of his imprisonment was his refusal to attend the Established Church, and also conducting meetings himself independent of any church that was recognized as such by the government. When it was found that he was really violating the law of the land, an indictment was prepared against him, and at the time of trial, after his arrest, this was read to him, and the question was asked of him, "What say you to this?" Bunyan replied, and then the following conversation took place between him and the judge who was trying the case, which we know our young friends will read with interest, as it shows the noble, true, and yet firm stand this man of God took on the charge made against him. We sincerely trust that if any of the SENTINEL family are called upon to reply to a similar charge, their answers will be as true and bold as were this man's:—

Bunyan.—"I say as to the matter of attending church, I am a frequenter of the church of God."

Judge.—"But you know what we mean,—to the parish church to hear divine services?"

Bunyan.—"No, I do not."

Judge.—"Why not?"

Bunyan.—"Because I do not find it commanded in the Word of God."

Judge.—"We are commanded to pray."

Bunyan.—"Not by the Common Prayer Book, but with the spirit. As the apostle saith, 'I will pray with the spirit, and with the understanding.'"

Judge.—"What do you count prayer? Do you think it is to say a few words over before the people?"

Bunyan.—"No; for men might have many elegant and excellent words, and yet not pray at all; but when a man prayeth, he doth, through a sense of those things which he wants, which sense is begotten by the Spirit, pour out his heart before God through Christ, though his words be not so many and so excellent as others. But yet, notwithstanding, they that have a mind to use the Prayer Book, they have their liberty; I would not keep it from them, nor them from it; for my part I can pray to God without it. Blessed be his name!"

Judge.—"You have no right to preach."

Bunyan.—"I can prove by the First Epistle of Peter 4:10, 11: 'As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God."

Judge.—"If any man has received a gift of tinkering, as thou hast done, let him follow his tinkering; and so other men their trades, and the divine his calling. You may do it in your family, but not otherwise."

Bunyan.—"If it is a good thing to exhort our families, it is a good thing to exhort others; but if you hold it a sin to meet together to seek the face of God, and exhort one another to follow Christ, I will sin still, for this will I do."

Judge.—"Then you confess your indictment, do you?"

Bunyan.—"This I confess: We have had many meetings together, and that we had the sweet, comforting presence of the Lord among us for our encouragement, I confess myself guilty, not otherwise."

Judge.—"Then you must be had back to prison, and there lie for three months, and at the end of three months, if you do not submit to the church to hear divine service, and leave your preaching, you must be banished from the realm, or stretch by the neck, I tell you plainly."

Bunyan.—"As to that matter, if I was out of prison to-day, I would preach the gospel again to-morrow, by the help of God."

The Abomination of Hunting.

A TRAVELER in India made the acquaintance of a heathen monk. This man, however beclouded his mind may have been in matters of religion, had a tender heart and his words may well be weighed by those who are blessed with greater light.

The young traveler often conversed with the kind-hearted monk, who was ever ready to instruct him on many points in connection with his heathenish religion. With reference to hunting he gave his young friend sound advice. The monk was entirely opposed to the practice.

Here are the words of the traveler: "As often as I went to the forest, with my gun on the shoulder, he would look at me sorrowfully. One day he said to me earnestly, 'O, young man of good nature, whose parents are blessed, inasmuch as they take no pleasure in wickedness, and abhor cruelty, why do you persecute the poor animals with so much persistence? What harm have they done? Why should the earth, which Nature has given to them, be stained with their blood? How can you, unfeelingly, see these happy and beautifully plumed creatures, who fill the forest with their songs, tumble down at your feet? How can you, without emotion, behold their sufferings and death throes of which you are the cause? Is there any honor in this wanton destruction of life? Where is your manly feeling? Are you devoid of that feeling of pity that elevates a man? Has the Almighty not imparted a sense of feeling to the animals that he has placed under dominion, as well as to you? Would the amputation of a member not cause you intense feeling? Consider how much more must these little creatures, whose fine nerves are ever so much more sensitive, suffer through your murderous weapon. Be merciful! You rejoice when you cause the innocent turtle-dove to tumble precipitately from the tree, and it is sport in your eyes to behold the poor bird wallowing in its blood! And, think of it, even should the unfortunate songster escape your hands, the harmless creature will find its way into some brushwood, where it will miserably perish in agony!"

"His dignified countenance full of sympathy, his pleading, the tears that coursed over his cheeks, all these touched my heart! I felt ashamed that I had been so thoughtless, and that I had not realized how unworthy and contemptible it is to kill a poor harmless animal simply for amusement. I felt convinced that I had done what was unjust, and that I had practiced cruelty and tyranny toward the weak and innocent. What! I who abhor cruelty and tyranny!"

"I promised my friend eventually that I would hunt no more, and I kept my promise. From that time I once and for all gave up that inhuman amusement. It lost all its charms, and to this day I abhor it. Never since that time have I ever hurt an animal, not even the very least, far less have I killed any living thing for mere sport or pastime."—L. D. B., in South African Sentinel.

OCTOBER 22.

WE hereby give notice that the present offer of our premium Bible with the Sentinel for one year for $3 will close on above-named date. To give our friends at a distance from us an equal chance with those near by, we will honor all orders received which are accompanied by a money order or bank draft on New York dated on or before Oct. 22, 1897.

After that date the price will be as formerly—Bible and Sentinel, 1 year, $3.50.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy, Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
" " Six months,	-	-	-	-	.50
" " Three "	-	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most of all, not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

Price, $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

50 YEARS'
EXPERIENCE.

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS,
DESIGNS,
COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain, free, whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Oldest agency for securing patents in America. We have a Washington office. Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice in the

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,

beautifully illustrated, largest circulation of any scientific journal, weekly, terms $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Specimen copies and HAND BOOK ON PATENTS sent free. Address

MUNN & CO.,
361 Broadway, New York.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,600 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

FIGHTING AGAINST

GOD

is the Title of a sixteen-page tract just issued as No. 41 of the

Religious Liberty Library,

In which PICTURE, POETRY, and PROSE unite in teaching Christian principles of freedom of conscience.

7 Fine Half-Tone

Illustrations 7

Printed on highly-finished paper.

Its attractiveness will insure perusal by the most prejudiced or indifferent reader.

PRICE—3 Cents each.

Usual discounts in quantities.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

Sunbeams of Health and Temperance.

This is a unique work in which the author has undertaken to present a vast amount of interesting information in such a manner as to be not only instructive but entertaining.

The following are the titles of the principal sections of the work:

The House We Live In; The Habitations of Men; Some Strange People and Their Strange Manners; The Bills of Fare of all Nations; Dame Fashion and Her Slaves; Health and Temperance Miscellany; Hygiene for Young Folks.

Over 224 quarto pages.

Illustrated by hundreds of engravings.

One of the most interesting volumes ever published.

	Regular price.	We will send postpaid.
Cloth, plain edges,	$2.25.	$1.25.
Cloth, gilt edges,	2.50.	1.50.

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

“It is the Grandest Book I Ever Read,” Says a lady who has read the book entitled,

“Christ Our Saviour,”

By MRS. E. G. WHITE.

We have in this book the life of “Christ Our Saviour” from his birth to ascension, given in simple and direct language. It is printed in large, clear type, and is finely illustrated by engravings made especially for it. The simplicity with which this “Old, Old Story” is told, the aptness of the illustrations, and the general appearance of the better bound styles will attract and hold the reader’s attention to the very close. It makes an excellent birthday or holiday gift to a friend, either young or old. 160 large octavo pages, bound as follows, and will be sent postpaid at prices given.

Presentation edition, two colors, vellum cloth, embossed in jet, green and gold, beveled edges, gilt top.....	$1.25
Fine English cloth, embellished aluminum cover.....	.75
Cloth back, board covers, in colors.....	.50
Heavy tag-board covers. Bible Students’ Library, No. 141.....	.35

Also published in board and cloth at 50c and 75c in German, Swedish, Danish, and Spanish languages.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

OAKLAND, CAL. KANSAS CITY, MO.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dyspepsia,
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
	Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

AMERICAN STATE PAPERS

A Book
for the Times.

A most valuable work on the subject of religious legislation in the United States, from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

It includes the various prominent acts, both State and national, relating to subjects of religion, such as Bills of Rights, Amendments, Treaties, Sunday Observance, etc. In it are found various Memorials, Petitions, and Remonstrances; House and Senate Reports on Sunday Mails; documents on “The Sphere of Civil Government,” “The Rights of the Jew,” “Religion in the Public Schools,” “Civil Laws Against Blasphemy,” “Christianity and the Common Law,” “Sunday Legislation,” etc., etc.; Judicial Decisions on Sunday Laws and the Bible in the Public Schools. It also contains in an appendix the provisions in the Bills of Rights of all the States, relating to the rights of conscience, and

The Sunday Laws, Complete,

OF ALL THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

There are also running footnotes all through the book, containing the comments and statements of eminent men.

368 pages. Price, best binding, $2.00, Cheap edition, $1.25.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS, slightly damaged, offered at half price.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

... OUR . PREMIUM . BIBLE ...

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the
AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality,

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00, WITH SENTINEL, ONE YEAR $3.00

REDUCTION IN PRICE

FROM $3.50 TO $3.00,

For a SHORT TIME ONLY.

The Sentinel one year and Bible, postpaid,	$3.00
The Sentinel six months and Bible, postpaid,	2.50
The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel,	2.00
The Bible given as a present for six NEW yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each “ “ “ twelve 6 months “ at .50 each

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence we urge our patrons to ORDER AT ONCE.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we print. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

What our Patrons Say of It.

I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted.

The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished.

The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it.

My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it.

I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted.

I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible.

It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price.

I received your premium Bible, and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent.

I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected.

I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had.

We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight.

I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap.

The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

They that sealed the covenant. NEHEMIAH, X. The points of the covenant.

revest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.
 36 Behold, ^dwe are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:
 37 And ^eit yieldeth much increase ^eDeut. 28.
 25 Re'him, Hâ-shib'nah, Mâ-g-sô-
 26 And A-hi-jah, Hâ-man, A-man,
 27 Mâ-tuch, Hâ-rim, Bâ-g-nah.
 28 ¶ And the rest of the people, the priests, the Lê-vites, the porters, the singers, the Nêth-i-nim, and all they that had separated themselves

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED.

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular subscription price, $6.00.

Address all orders to

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
 39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 41.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 21, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no tears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THERE is no worse slavery than that of selfishness.

CREED has been well defined as the cloister of thought.

THE truly free man never desires to enslave any one else.

THE upas-tree of popery flourishes in the soil of human nature.

CHRISTIANITY knows no "league;" it knows only the "unity of the Spirit."

THE right to observe a weekly day of rest is the only one which is sought to be forced upon people by law.

IF you are a "doer of the law" yourself, you will find neither time nor occasion for judging your neighbor.

THE most distinguished monopolist in the world is the devil. He is trying the hardest to force everything to go his way.

THE largest society in the world, the easiest to get into and the best one to get out of and avoid is the Society for Setting Other People Straight.

EVERY person has a right to refrain from the exercise of any right that he may possess. Otherwise it would not be a right, but an obligation.

THE Christian goes to his warfare taking the "shield of faith." Eph. 6:16. That which is of faith, is a defense to its possessor. If the first-day Sabbath were of faith, it would not need so much defending.

THE accepted way of "defending" the Sabbath is to compel somebody else to keep it! If there were any defense in this method, the seventh-day Sabbath would long ago have perished for the lack of it.

Our Government and God's Sovereignty.

THE signers of the Declaration of Independence were men who believed in God and acknowledged his rightful sovereignty in earthly affairs.

This is set forth in the statement—which constitutes the very foundation on which the Declaration rests—that "all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Only upon the basis which these words set forth could the appeal have been made to mankind which was made by our forefathers in this immortal document. If there is no God, then it is not true that all men are created equal and endowed with certain unalienable rights which it is the business of civil government only to secure and never to molest. We appeal from the decisions of majorities to that Being who constitutes the true majority; to Him whose way is always just, and whose word true; but if there be no such Being, then we can only fall back upon the decisions of majorities, fallible as such decisions must be, and unjust and untrue as they are often found to be. The doctrine of unalienable rights is swept away altogether; for if the decision of the majority be our highest rule of guidance, then it rests with the majority to say what our rights are, or whether we have any at all. For if the individual is alone, he cannot properly set himself up above two or more others equal with himself.

The doctrine of unalienable rights, which underlies the American system of government, rests thus upon the acknowledgment of the sovereignty of God as the Creator of all men. But it is through the Constitution of the United States that this system of government was put into practical operation. And this being so, it is perfectly plain that the Constitution cannot rightfully be called a "Godless" document.

The doctrine of the unalienable right of mankind rests upon the acknowledgment of the sovereignty of God as the Creator. And it is the only doctrine in harmony with such an acknowledgment; all other doctrines virtually deny it.

The American system of government is based upon that doctrine; and,—

The United States Constitution is the instrument through which this system is put into operation.

Therefore, the United States Constitution is the right constitution, and the only one, consistent with the real acknowledgment of the sovereignty of God in human affairs. Let that acknowledgment, and this Constitution, forever remain.

Labor Unions and Religious Worship.

SHOULD "union" worshipers attend a church built by "non-union" workmen? This is the question recently addressed to Bishop Potter by the Hod-hoisting Engineers' Union, the question being called out by the fact that non-union men are employed in the building of the new Protestant Episcopal cathedral in New York City. We have not yet learned the nature of the bishop's reply.

Does this question imply that membership in the "union" has now attained a position of such overwhelming importance in the life of the workingman that it overshadows even the question of his relation to God? Is this more than can fairly be inferred from it?

Just why the Union should refer this matter to Bishop Potter, instead of settling the question by its own decision, is not clear. Probably it was hoped that it might influence him to secure the dismissal of the non-union men, or their allegiance to the union. It is not often that a labor union feels incompetent to decide upon the proper conduct of its members in any matter affecting its interests.

Is an attendant at church service from the workingmen's ranks to be known as a "union" worshiper or a "non-union" worshiper? and are the measures of the strike and lockout to be carried into the sphere of church relationship? Will the "union" members of the Rev. Mr. A's congregation go on a "strike" as regards church services because "non-union" men are employed on the church of Rev. Mr. B? or refuse to attend any church built by "non-union" men? Will the union undertake to say what its members shall do in the matter of church attendance, if it should regard such a measure as necessary to the protection of its interests?

And if Bishop Potter replies to the question, will the union abide by his decision? This, at the best, would be to make a pope of Bishop Potter.

To say the least, the question is plainly suggestive of a readiness on the part of labor unions to make themselves the instruments of religious tyranny.

Religious Monopoly.

NOT the least of the monopolies for the establishment of which determined efforts are being put forth at the present time, is one which is designed to cover the field of men's conduct in religion.

Religious monopoly is not a new thing—a creation of the nineteenth century. It is as old as the history of mankind. The first man to set one up was Cain, who killed his brother because he practiced a different religion from his own.

A religious monopoly is the worst of all forms of monopoly, both because religion is of all the things the most essential to human welfare, and because such a monopoly not only seeks to drive all other religions out of the field, but to force everybody to take religion from it as well.

It declares not only that nobody shall practice a religion contradictory to itself, but that everybody must have religion—of the kind which it supplies—whether the individual wants it or not.

The religion which is aiming at a monopoly to-day, in this and other "Christian" lands, has for its distinguishing feature the observance of the first day of the week.

It demands that all men, of whatever race or belief, shall incorporate this distinguishing feature into their conduct, thus becoming in a true sense its adherents.

This monopoly has behind it a gigantic force of church workers and religious societies. It has already received the support of Congress, the courts, and the State legislatures.

But there is one other religion in the field which will not yield to this monopoly; and that religion is Christianity. The distinguishing feature of Christianity is faith in the Word of God; hence, it is in contrast with the religion of the monopoly, since the Word of God does not command the observance of the first day of the week.

A clash between the two religions is inevitable, for Christianity will not yield her ground or turn aside from her appointed course. All false religions can compromise upon some essential feature common to all; but Christianity cannot compromise with anything.

A religious monopoly which was prophesied for the closing period of earthly history is described in the latter half of the thirteenth chapter of Revelation. There a power is spoken of which should perform miracles in the endeavor to cause the people to "worship the image of the beast," and it is said of it that "he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

The Sabbath is declared in the Scriptures to be the sign of the true God—he who has creative power. Its observance constitutes a mark upon those who are his people. See Eze. 20:12, 20. The Sabbath of the Lord is the seventh day of the week.

On the other hand is the Sunday, which is claimed by the papacy as the sign of her spiritual power, and the observance of which properly constitutes a mark of adherence to her. In proportion as the clash between Christianity and the would-be religious monopoly becomes more fierce, these opposing marks will acquire more prominence in the field of controversy. They will become the standards, as it were, at the head of the contending forces.

Every opposer of monopolies should understand that in opposing the worst of all monopolies he is called to take his stand on the side of Christianity. Christianity favors no monopoly. Its whole aim is to bestow freedom, —to exalt the race, as individuals, to the plane of that independence of thought and action which is consistent with the highest human welfare.

What is Righteousness?

THE "National Christian Citizenship League," in its "proclamation" and call for a million volunteers to forward the "Christian citizenship" cause, appeals to "the pure minded, true-hearted men and women of the Republic who believe with Charles Sumner that 'righteousness is preservation.'" As it is undoubtedly true that "righteousness is preservation," and as the class of individuals to whom the league appeals recognize this fact, it is assumed that they will join in the Christian citizenship movement, as the proper method of giving practical expression to this belief.

But to say simply that "righteousness is preservation" without any additional words of qualification, is but to give expression to a "glittering generality," and one which fails to furnish any indorsement or justification of the "Christian citizenship" campaign.

What is righteousness? The only authority to which we can turn for an answer to the question, is the Word of God. There we find it stated that "all unrighteousness is sin," and that "sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3:4; 5:17. From this it is clear that righteousness is the keeping of the law. But it is also written that "by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in His sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin." Rom. 3:

20. This is because all flesh is by nature "under the law" and "guilty before God," having fallen in the transgression of Adam. "But now," the apostle adds, "the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference; . . . being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Verses 21-24.

Therefore apart from faith in Jesus Christ, there is no righteousness for any being on the earth. Righteousness, as it must be known by every person who has it, means the result of faith in Jesus Christ, and the statement that "righteousness is preservation" means that there is preservation in the faith of Christ.

And this is very true. He who fights "the good fight of faith" lays "hold on eternal life." 1 Tim. 6:12. Jesus said that whosoever should lose his life for his sake should preserve it. He who gives away treasure through faith in Christ, preserves the same "where moth and rust do not corrupt," and where riches will never take to themselves wings and fly away.

But what has all this to do with "Christian citizenship"? What has it to do with the preservation of the government or institutions of the country in which "citizenship" is held? Of what significance to these is the statement that "righteousness is preservation"? For it is evident from the nature of righteousness, as set forth in the foregoing texts, that it is not a thing that can be applied to these at all. Whatever preservation they are to have, they must obtain in another way.

Faith is the one and only source of righteousness. And faith is not a profession, it is not anything that can be set forth in legal or political documents; it is an actuating, governing principle of life, sent to save the individual sinner, and applicable alone to him. "Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God."

The Only Remedy.

THERE is one sure remedy and only one, for the ever-present conflict of capital and labor: and that is stated in the following, taken from one of our religious exchanges:—

"And, behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, and said to the reapers, The Lord be with you. And they answered him, The Lord bless thee.' Ruth 2:4. There was no conflict there between capital and labor; nor will there ever be when such expressions can be used between employer and employes, not as a matter of form, but from the heart. When masters remember that they have a Master in heaven, who is no respecter of persons, and servants remember that they serve the Lord Christ, there can be no clashing. But only the Spirit of God in the heart can bring this about. Strikes, wars, and fightings will go on as long as evil desires reign in the human heart."

Duty not Based upon Rights.

"Laws forbidding labor on the Sabbath," we are told by those who advocate them, "are based upon the right of every man to enjoy a day of rest." This is strange "logic" to apply to the doctrine of human rights.

Every man has a right to get married; must we therefore have a law compelling all men to marry?

Every man has a right to acquire property; is it therefore necessary that the acquisition of property should be made compulsory?

Because some one else has a right to do a thing, must I be forced to do the same thing in order that he may enjoy his right?

If so, then individual rights are not equal; for my own choice in the matter is made to give place to that of another.

But individual rights are equal. What another person does in the exercise of a right, I have an equal right to refrain from doing.

An act done under compulsion is not the exercise of a right. The basis of compulsion is duty, and the power which compels also prescribes duty in respect to the thing compelled.

When the State, therefore, compels the observance of the Sabbath, it prescribes the duty of every citizen with respect to Sabbath observance. It removes Sabbath observance from the realm of privilege to that of duty.

The duty of Sabbath observance does not grow out of the right to observe the day, but out of the relation of man to the Author of the Sabbath. The question of the duty of Sabbath observance is first settled in the mind of the individual before he considers it as a matter of personal right.

It was in the sphere of man's duty, and not of his rights, that Sabbath observance originated.

This duty was set forth and commanded by the Creator, the Author of the Sabbath.

In prescribing Sabbath observance as a duty, the State sets itself in the place of God. It is not the business of the State to prescribe duty.

The duty does not grow out of the right, but the right out of the duty. The right of Sabbath observance affords no basis for compulsory legislation; it cannot be made the basis of any human law for Sabbath observance.

Any such law rests upon another basis, and that basis is nothing else than religious intolerance.

It is the prerogative of God alone to prescribe duty. His law prescribes duty for mankind, but he leaves men free to choose whether they will walk in that pathway or not. But what the State prescribes by law is taken out of the realm of man's free choice.

And when the Sabbath observance is removed from the realm of man's free choice, by that very act it is denied that Sabbath observance belongs within the sphere of individual rights. The law which claims to be "based upon the right of every man to enjoy a day of rest" each week, in reality denies that any such right exists.

Right Invulnerable.

BY FANNIE BOLTON.

'Tis wrong that raves with frantic cry
To hush right's voice so sweet and still.

'Tis falsehood that must terrify,
When truth goes calmly by at will.

'Tis error that must take the sword,
And seek to stop the Christ-like course.

'Tis love that wins men by a word,
And hate that fails through using force.

Right can be still and calm and strong,
Moving as stars do in their course,
Alone amid the hosts of wrong,

That run and shriek their voices hoarse.
Truth holds God's scepter for her own,
And wears a crown beneath men's thorn.
Falsehood upon a man-made throne
Feels all his weakness, devil-born.

Right has a strength invulnerable,
A union with Almighty power.

Wrong bolstered up by men and hell
Must fortify from hour to hour.
Truth leads a white-robed army out
From heaven's battlements of light;
But falsehood's hosts of weakling doubt
Hurl puny shafts of carnal might.

Falsehood shall wither and decay,
Wrong be as ashes and as dust.

Error as shadow slink away,
Force be corroded as with rust.

Right shall be victor crowned at last,
Truth shall be robed in stars of light;
Love shall hold all things safe and fast,
As happy planets in their flight.

So only let us stand with right,
So only let us walk with truth,
So only live with love and light,
And feel no fear of woe or ruth.

Calm, happy, strong, and undismayed,
Let evil rage, we'll keep our course,
And find our every pathway stayed
By love's Almighty, heavenly force.

Revising History.

It would be a congenial task for certain Roman Catholic authorities to revise the history of the Middle Ages, especially as regards certain important occurrences in which "the church" was a conspicuous actor.

For example, in the Catholic Mirror of October 9, the Rev. Jos. V. O'Connor comes forward with the statement that "the new spirit of historical research, which seeks the simple truth of facts irrespective of theories or consequences, has settled certain points in the controversy over the [St.] Bartholomew massacre;" and that "these, succinctly, are: religion had nothing whatever to do with the massacre; it was a measure of Machiavellian state policy. It was not long premeditated, but adopted on the impulse of fear, chiefly of Coligny, and the number of slain cannot be proved to have exceeded 2,000."

This writer then goes on to state that the Huguenots had plotted to kidnap King Charles IX, had "incited whole provinces to rebellion," and had "introduced foreign hostile troops into France;" that "the French court, in a lying report of the massacre, deceived Pope Gregory XIII, and he, good easy man, thinking that the king of France had been saved from assassination, publicly thanked God;" that Charles IX and his mother, Catherine de Medici, were "worthless Catholics" anyhow, and that the latter was not a Catholic, but a "free-thinker." And so it is evident(?) that "religion, either Catholic or Protestant, had nothing to do with the massacre"!

It is rather remarkable that "facts" can be brought to light at this late date which set aside the conclusions reached by the people who lived when this occurrence took place. That these conclusions, as set forth in history, were such as to-day reflect anything but credit upon "the church," is a fact for which "the church" is alone responsible. She had every opportunity at the time, and afterwards, to secure a correct version of the affair for transmission to posterity. "The church" ruled almost supremely in the nations of Europe at the time when such occurrences as this passed into history. Why did she allow history to be written and stand as authentic, which was not only false but unfavorable to herself?

The truth is that the history of those times, as it has come down to us, is essentially true. But in that day the papacy had no wish to change that history; it was not then regarded as of a nature to reflect odium upon her. It was not then deemed, as it is generally to-day, a wicked thing to persecute and put to death "heretics." The terrible event of St. Bartholomew's day was regarded as a justifiable and even laudable proceeding, and not calling for any apology. And hence Pope Gregory, "good, easy man," that he was, in giving public thanks and having a medal struck commemorative of the event, did not imagine he was doing anything which might make trouble for the apologists of "the church" in future times.

The Jews tell us that they did not crucify Jesus Christ, but that it was done by the Roman, Pontius Pilate. And it is true enough that in that and subsequent proceedings of a similar nature against the followers of Christ, the State has been the actor by whose authority and in whose name the persecution was done. And this is why it is so convenient to have a union of religion with the State, and why such a union is always sought by a church which wants power to enforce her religion, and has lost the power which comes from union with her divine Head.

It is altogether too late at this date to revise the history of the Middle Ages. The attempt to do so will only expose more clearly the weakness of the claim that "religion had nothing to do" with the tragedies of those times in which the actors were known as papists and Protestants. The would-be explanations by which it is sought to remove all stigma from "the church," are fitted only for an appeal to credulity and ignorance.

What Rome Would Do for the United States.

NOT very long ago a prominent prelate of Rome made the statement in public that what Rome had done for other nations where she had had control, she would do also for the United States. In view of this assertion, which is undoubtedly true, it becomes of interest to Americans to note what Rome has done for those other countries. In brief, this could not perhaps be better set forth than is done in the following words of the illustrious French author, Victor Hugo:—

"Ah, we know you! We know the clerical party; it is an old party. This it is which has found for the truth those two marvelous supporters—ignorance and error. This it is which forbids to science and genius the going beyond the Missal, and which wishes to cloister thought in dogmas. Every step which the intelligence of Europe has taken has been in spite of it. Its history is written in the history of human progress, but it is written on the back of the leaf. It is opposed to it all. . . . For a long time the human conscience has revolted against you, and now demands of you, 'What is it that you wish of me?' For a long time already you have tried to put a gag upon the human intellect; you wish to be the masters of education, and there is not a poet, not an author, not a thinker, not a philosopher that you accept. All that has been written, found, dreamed, deduced, inspired, imagined, invented by genius, the treasure of civilization, the venerable inheritance of generations, the common patrimony of knowledge, you reject. There is a book—a book that is from one end to the other an emanation from above; a book which is for the whole world what the Koran is for Islamism, what the Vedas are for India, a book which contains all human wisdom illuminated by all divine wisdom—a book which the veneration of the people calls The Book—The Bible! Well, your censure has reached even that—unheard-of thing! Popes have proscribed the Bible. How astonishing to wise spirits; how overpowering to simple hearts to see the finger of Rome placed upon the Book of God! And you claim the liberty of teaching. Stop; be sincere; let us understand the liberty which you claim.

"IT IS THE LIBERTY OF NOT TEACHING."

"You wish us to give you the people to instruct. Very well. Let us see your pupils. Let us see those you have produced. What have you done for Italy? What have you done for Spain? For centuries you have kept in your hands, at your discretion, at your school, these two great nations, illustrious among the illustrious. What have you done for them? I shall tell you. Thanks to you, Italy, whose name no man who thinks can any longer pronounce without inexpressible filial emotions—Italy, mother of genius and of nations, which has spread over all the universe all the most brilliant marvels of poetry and the arts—Italy, which has taught mankind to read—now knows not how to read! Yes, Italy is, of all the states of Europe, that where the smallest number know how to read. Spain, magnificently endowed Spain, which received from the Romans her first civilization; from Providence, and in spite of you, a world, America—Spain, thanks to you, wears a yoke of stupor, a yoke of degradation and decay; Spain has lost this secret power which it had from the Romans; this genius of Art which it had from the Arabs; this world which it had from God, and, in exchange for all that you have made it lose, it has received from you—

THE INQUISITION!

—the Inquisition, which certain men of the party try to-day to reestablish; which has burned on the funeral pile millions of men; the Inquisition which disinterred the dead to burn them as heretics; which declared the children of heretics infamous and incapable of any public honors, excepting only those who shall have denounced their fathers; the Inquisition, which, while I speak, still holds in the papal library the manuscripts of Galileo sealed under the papal signet. These are your masterpieces. This fire, which we call Italy, you have extinguished. This Colossus that we call Spain you have undermined—the one in ashes, the other in ruins. This is what you have done for two great nations. What do you wish to do for France? Stop! you have just come from Rome! I congratulate you; you have had fine success there. You come from gagging the Roman people, and now you wish to gag the French people. I understand. This attempt is still more fine, but take care, it is dangerous. France is a lion, and is still alive!”

But what Rome had already done for France was written in the blood of the French Revolution.

Protecting Divine Institutions.

BY W. N. GLENN.

THE Christian Statesman of October 15, contains some editorial comments on the views of a contributor concerning the new Connecticut Sunday law, in which occurs the following expression:—

“The people who desire a Sabbath at all, desire it for moral and religious ends. They believe it to be a God-given right.”

It would be folly to dispute the correctness of this statement; and if the National Reformers, of whose cause the Statesman is an ardent supporter, would only stand by it, they would soon find that their labor, in advocating Sunday laws, is altogether superfluous. The almighty Ruler of the universe, who ruleth “in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will” (Dan. 4: 17, 25, 32), has long ago given a Sabbath law for the very purpose expressed in the foregoing quotation. It is of universal application; for “the Sabbath was made for man” (Mark 2: 27) in the very beginning of the history of his race (Gen. 2: 1-3).

Not only is this Sabbath law universal in its application, but it is perpetual in its purpose. It is an essential section of that law of which Christ said not “one jot or one tittle” should fail while heaven and earth should stand. Matt. 5: 18; Luke 16: 17. It is not to pass away even when this sin-cursed earth shall have been “dissolved,” and the works that are therein “burned up;” but it will be in force in the “new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.” 2 Peter 3: 10-13; Isa. 66: 22, 23.

Then, for what purpose is any further law on the subject? “The law of the Lord is perfect” (Ps. 19: 7) and perpetual. What, then, can man add to it, either of righteousness or power? “Shall mortal man be more just than God? Shall a man be more pure than his Maker?” Job 4: 17.

But neither the Statesman, nor the National Reform combination which it represents, will stand by the utterance to which we have thus briefly alluded. It immediately adds:—

“An adequate law on the subject must therefore protect the Sabbath as a divine institution, and as a right bestowed by God. It must protect the Sabbath in the sense in which Christian people regard it.”

This is just the trouble with National Reformism; it wants to enforce Sabbath-keeping from the standpoint of human regard. It practically ignores the “sense” in which God regards it. The law of the Lord being “perfect,” as before noted, any change, or addition to it, must render it imperfect. Then a Sabbath law, in anywise different from the law of God, could not be an “adequate law.” Therefore man cannot enact an adequate Sabbath law.

If any legislative body were to enact the fourth commandment in the very words in which the Lord gave it to man, it would be an act of blasphemous assumption. It would be presuming to add to the wisdom and power of God in the matter of enforcing his law. It would be saying to the Almighty, We have devised a better way than yours to secure proper Sabbath observance. It would be degrading the universal, perpetual law of God to the level of a local, temporary ordinance of fallible man. It would be reducing the commandment from the high character of a law which can be obeyed only by the impulse of faith and love, to the low plane of a human statute whose ultimate power of execution is the sword.

Human legislation upon the Sabbath question, or upon any other religious doctrine, is virtually an attempt to withdraw moral judgment from the court of heaven and place it under the jurisdiction of the court below.

The idea of protecting divine institutions by human device is altogether presumptive. When Israel undertook, after placing it in an unwarranted position, to protect the ark of God by their own power, it fell into the hands of the Philistines. Then God showed his power to protect it in his own way, and it was soon restored without the aid of the professed people of God who had assumed to work upon the National Reform plan.

When Uzzah essayed to “protect” the ark and keep it from falling, when it was being carried by Israel on a cart—a means devised by the heathen—instead of on the shoulders of the priests, as commanded by the Lord, he was promptly stricken with death. But when the commandment of the Lord was obeyed (not enforced by some incompetent human authority), there was no more trouble about protecting the ark.

All that God requires of men is to obey his commandments (Eccl. 12: 13), not to enforce them upon one another. As the Lord himself did not compel men to obedience (John 12:47), any attempt of man, even of the most devoted apostle, to do so is contrary to Jehovah's plan. Such presumption is enmity against God; the power, so assuming, sets itself above God. Any attempt to enforce the Sabbath law by human power is a gross violation of the Sabbath—it is Sabbath-breaking in the highest degree.

If Sabbath-keeping is "a right bestowed by God," as the Statesman admits, it cannot be an obligation to the State which the civil power should enforce. For the State to attempt to compel an obedience to God which can come only from the heart in order to be acceptable to him, is in no sense a protection, either to the institution so sought to be honored or to the parties so compelled. Any so-called Sabbath-keeping enforced by human legislation, or observed in any way except by heartfelt desire, is sheer hypocrisy. All effort at public enforcement of Sabbath observance, no matter what day may be designated, can only result in a desecration of the Sabbath institution.

No better illustration of this latter proposition could be found than the Sabbath traditions of the Jews. When Christ came to visit his people and to fulfil the prophecies referring to himself, he found the Jews great sticklers for the Sabbath, or rather for their traditions concerning the Sabbath. These traditions were simply human ordinances, but they were begotten of great zeal for the protection of the "divine institution." They were compulsory in the extreme, and condemnatory of all who disregarded them, as far as the power of their supporters extended; and their expectation of the Messiah was that he would make them universal.

They verily thought that an "adequate law on the subject" "must protect the Sabbath in the sense in which" they regarded it. A prominent complaint against the Saviour was his alleged Sabbath-breaking, yet it was only their human traditions that he disregarded and rebuked. As a matter of course, their traditions extended to all of the law, insomuch that Jesus declared that they had "made the commandment of God of none effect" by their traditions. "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." Matt. 18:6-9.

Just so it is with people of to-day who enact or sustain the presumptive laws of men for the protection or the compulsory observance of divine institutions or ordinances. The only way in which men can honor God is to obey his law. To assume to alter, or amend, or add thereto, is highly dishonoring to his name and requirements.

THE Christian Citizen for October says that "Christian citizenship is in the air this fall as never before." Are the readers of the SENTINEL aware of this fact, and of its significance? They ought to be.

Signs of the Times in the Business World.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

It is an age of confederacies and "trusts." The rich form them to add to their riches, and the poorer are joining together for common action against those holding the means of production. In it all, the rights of the individual are not considered, and the tendency is toward the tyranny of the combination over the individual. The Scripture foretells the troubles that will come in the last days because of the rich heaping together their riches. In the end they will be for "booties" unto the oppressed, Habakkuk warns them, and the prophet James pronounces the woe upon them for their covetousness, at the same time showing that all the Lord's people will keep clear of both sides in the controversy, and wait patiently for the coming of the Lord.

The signs of the coming struggle are apparent everywhere, but in America they are most plainly to be seen. An American correspondent of the National Review says that the commercial world is—"full of rumors of the creation of new trusts so gigantic and so far-reaching in their scope that those trusts already in existence are mere pigmies compared to them."

One trust now controlling the oil, iron ore, and sugar industries of America, purposes adding several other businesses, having so great an income that it can easily buy the controlling interest in almost any industry. Thus business and wealth in the United States are coming more and more into the hands of a few. The National Review says of this:—

"It is difficult to see what the end will be and when this process of absorption will end. There are perhaps two solutions which may be looked forward to during the next quarter of a century. One is a universal trust with a few men controlling all the industrial activities of the United States, and with the bulk of the American people its employés. The other is a repetition of the French Revolution, but the revolution of 1925, if it comes, will be more terrible in its consequences and more destructive in its results than that of 1793, because to-day the people are more numerous, more determined and more intelligent, and their power to work good or evil has increased tenfold since the days of Robespierre and Danton.

The one thing that would hold in check these elements of violence, both as to the lawless greed of the capitalists and the lawless covetousness of the poor, is the gospel. But the world does not want this generally. And too often the churches,—and this is the general tendency in America,—distrusting the power of the gospel, are going in for political reform. But the more the churches enter the arena of political strife the less power of God for righteousness will they have to wield for peace. One of the signs of the Lord's coming was to be the "distress of nations, with perplexity." We see it in more directions than one, and men's hearts are alarmed as they look into the future. It is a good time to persuade men to put their trust in God. He has a care for the individual.

A WESTERN judge, sitting, as we say, in our jargon, at nisi prius, or as a court of "first resort," the other day, had a Sunday-law case to decide. The law with which he had to deal, like others of that ilk, contained a "saving clause." It forbade the people of the State to do any work on "the Sabbath day, commonly called Sunday," unless the same was a work of "necessity or charity." This "saving clause" exceedingly bothered the conscientious judge.

THE defense rested exclusively on this clause. The accused party, it appeared, had a contract to furnish another person with an article, which he was to manufacture by hand; and his contract provided that if the article were not furnished by a certain date, it need not be accepted, unless the person who had ordered it chose to take it when proffered.

THE prisoner was an expert handicraftsman, and the only one of his kind in the neighborhood. Shortly after he began on his job, he had an accident to one of his hands, which rendered him unable to use it for some time. In order that he might finish his undertaking within the time provided, he was compelled to labor on "the Sabbath day, commonly called Sunday." He proved this; also that there was no one else to whom the particular work could be delegated; and further, that he and his wife and three small children were dependent on the product of his handiwork for daily bread, lodging, and clothing. Then his attorneys "rested" and proceeded to argue that they had fully established a case of "necessity" within the statute's "saving clause."

AT my last advices, the worthy magistrate had adjourned court, and gone to the bosom of his family, with the intention, as he stated, of "thinking it over and talking to his wife about it." His dilemma is as good a text as any for a little sermon on this subject of "Sunday laws," so old, and yet so always new.

IT is to be noted that this exception of works of "charity or necessity" is an invention of Puritanism, in the course of a violent effort to wrench the fourth commandment away from Saturday to which it rightfully belongs, and connect it with Sunday to which it has no just application. There is no qualification of necessity and charity in the ancient commandment for Saturday observance. "In it thou shalt do no manner of work."

AND this invention has returned to plague the inventors—a matter over which I, for one, should not be disposed to worry much, if it only stopped there. But, unfortunately it does not and cannot stop there, so long as the atmosphere of Puritanism must be breathed by people who detest it. We are all plagued; judges and laity alike, by the absurd Sunday law, with its preposterous "saving clause."

IT is said that "misery loves company," and if this be true, the Western dispenser of law and equity will be somewhat comforted, should these lines ever reach his eye, by the information that he is not alone in his perplexity over this subject. On the contrary, he has not only a numerous company, but a company distinguished by the presence of very eminent and enlightened men to share his woes.

INDEED, there is no general consensus of opinion as to the character of the question, What is necessity or charity? Some learned jurists tell us that it is a question of law, others that it is a question of fact, others again, that it is a mixed question of law and fact; so that, in one State, it is for the court exclusively, in another it is altogether within the purview of the jury, and in a third, it is a question "to be decided by the jury under the instructions of the court." Taking this preliminary point in either one of these three ways,—or taking it in all three contradictory ways at once, an intellectual feat to which some courts have appeared equal,—we advance one step further.

FOR, admitting that we have settled whose business it is to decide the question of what is necessity or what is charity, as the case may be, we have now to determine how they are to go about it—since it is useless to assign the task of applying a law to any man or set of men, unless there be provided a system of rules and principles whereby the decision of the case is to be guided and controlled. What rules or principles have we to guide and control the judgment which must be rendered in a trial under a Sunday law where the defense is necessity or charity?

IT has several times been most ably and strenuously contended that a party's "honest belief" in the necessity or charity of his Sunday work is all-sufficient and conclusive. Certainly, there is plenty of authority for the position that, in order to constitute a violation of a penal statute, two elements must concur—the overt act, and the inner intent. But the judges very soon brushed this argument away, so far as Sunday laws are concerned. They pointed out that it amounted, practically, to claiming for every individual the right of determining the legal significance of the terms "necessity" and "charity," which would make the standard vary, as "many men of many minds" might chance to differ in their views, so that what would be a crime in one man would not be such in others. We may confidently claim, then, that at least one point is clearly established and irrevocably fixed in regard to Sunday charity and necessity—namely, that they are things which no fellow can find out for himself.

UPON a subject so inherently obscure, and so beclouded by conflicting rulings, and well-intended efforts at its elucidation, it is a comfort to have one point clear and strong, albeit it is merely a negative one. But our comfort is not enhanced when, thus assured that we are unable to help ourselves in the premises, we come to consider how those who are charged with the responsible duty of our enlightenment have performed their task.

It is allowed on all hands that necessity and charity are matters of circumstance, of time and place; or, in the language of evolution, "environment." The justifying circumstance may be the character of the work itself. Thus, work which is in its nature continuous, as the operation of a beer brewery, is appropriate to Sunday (per Allen G. Thurman, C. J.). This is because of the damage which would result from stopping the work and starting it all over again. Apparently, this illustration shows that the certainty of damage is an element of necessity. But many other cases hold that even a total loss cannot be considered herein—as, where a party had to gather seaweed for fuel on Sunday, or let it be washed away altogether by the tide. The degree of damage involved in abstinence from Sunday work is of recognized importance. But how this degree is fixed no living man has yet told us, and none is likely ever to tell us.

WE have seen that necessity is not to be determined by the individual. Has it any special relation to the individual? In other words, is necessity on Sunday one thing for A, and something entirely different for B? We know that, as a plain matter of fact, the necessities of no two persons are precisely the same. But we are now dealing with a matter of law. Is tobacco a necessity for its users? Is liquor a necessity for drinking men? Is meat a necessity for a flesh eater, while otherwise in the case of a vegetarian?

AND this brings us to another and most vital issue: Whose necessity is it that makes work or business on Sunday harmless in the eye of the law? If I need my coat badly on Sunday, will that justify my tailor in completing it during the "sacred" hours? Is the purchaser's necessity, if established, a defense for the seller? No mortal man can give an answer to this question that is worth a button.

BUT there is one case which affords the only instance wherein it has been formally declared that a poor man has a privilege at law which is not accorded to a rich one—that is, the only instance which has ever come under my observation. In this case, wrestling gallantly with the invincible problem of Sunday necessity, a learned judge declared, in effect, that a man who had only one house might be justified in saving it from destruction by fire on Sunday, when such labor would expose the owner of, say, a dozen houses, to condign punishment! How about him who had eleven of them? "Further this deponent saith not."

AND Sunday charity is no more comprehensible than Sunday necessity. Sunday charity is "active goodness," according to our authorities. Passive goodness, I suppose, must be treated as finable under the statute. Of course, putting money in the collection box is all right. So are contracts to pay for improvements to a church building, if made by a member of the congregation with an incorporated vestry; but it is clear that a contract by the vestry, on the strength of such pledges, to buy stone for the improvements from a quarryman would be void, as violating a prohibition of "worldly business." And so we go.

Now the moral of all this is simply that the Sunday law, with its savings, is a law such as no human intelligence can understand, or interpret, or apply, with any reason, consistency, or justice. Ordinarily, as soon as this characteristic is fastened on any legislative provision, the courts immediately set it aside, and refuse to give it the slightest consideration. There can be no manner of doubt that this fate, which has befallen scores of American statutes, would have long since overtaken every Sunday law in the land, were it not for the fact that the Sunday of compulsory idleness and gloom which has been dignified with the title of "Our American Sabbath" is an "institution" which the courts have somehow persuaded themselves that it is their duty to "maintain" even at the sacrifice of common sense; at the cost of self-stultification; and with the result of gross inequality and cruelty in the work of administrative jurisprudence.

Ans. J. Ringgold

GOVERNMENT, like charity, begins at home.

The State Their Saviour.

BY C. H. KESLAKE.

RECENTLY there assembled in State convention at Paterson, N. J., the Society of Christian Endeavor. This organization ought to be a mighty power for good in the world, if it is true, as they claim, through their State president, Dr. French, that their "strength is in the indwelling of Christ."

With Christ dwelling in them they have at their command a power greater than that of all the governments of earth combined, for the Bible says that "Christ is the power of God." 1 Cor. 1:24. And there is no power greater than God's power.

Christ being the power of God, he who has Christ dwelling within, will have sufficient power to enable him to comply with all the requirements of the gospel.

But from some of the utterances at this convention, and from certain actions on their part, it looks as though their strength, after all, is not through the "indwelling of Christ."

At this convention it was decided to add another department—that of "Sabbath observance"—to their work.

In a plea for the Sabbath (Sunday) Rev. Dr. Burrell gave expression to the following remarkable utterance: "My right to Sabbath observance depends upon a law for Sabbath observance for all." The readers of the SENTINEL will recognize this as genuine National Reform doctrine. But the good doctor continues, and logically too: "If others do not keep it, I can't."

That is to say that so long as there is no law compelling everybody to keep the Sabbath, it is impossible for him to keep it.

If this doctrine has been accepted and indorsed by the Christian Endeavorers, they will have to repudiate the statement made by Dr. French, that their "strength is in the indwelling of Christ." In fact, it will be a virtual admission, on their part, that not only is the "indwelling of Christ" not their strength, but that they are not even Christians, and consequently any endeavor that they may make on behalf of Christianity is not Christian.

That this is a just conclusion from their own premises will be evident.

The Sunday advocates claim that this day is the test of all religion. This was declared at the Elgin (Illinois) convention a few years ago. Now it must be true that if Sunday is the test of all religion, those who do not keep Sunday have no religion.

It is perfectly clear that all people do not keep Sunday.

That being so, Dr. Burrell and all who indorse him in the statement that he cannot keep the Sabbath because others do not keep it, do not keep Sunday. And as those who do not keep Sunday have no religion, it is also perfectly clear that Dr. Burrell and his endeavorers have no religion.

Furthermore it is claimed that "he who does not keep the Sabbath does not worship God; and he who does not worship God is lost."

If therefore Dr. Burrell and those who indorse him are right in saying that nobody can keep the Sabbath unless all do, it follows from the above quotation that nobody can worship God unless all worship him, and as those who do not worship God are lost, it follows that the poor doctor and his friends too are lost.

What then becomes of the boast that their strength lies in "the indwelling of Christ"? On their own showing, it is nothing of the kind.

Their only hope of salvation is in getting a law to compel everybody to keep Sunday. The State therefore and not Christ is their strength and their Saviour.

Thus the insidious work is going on, which is exalting man above God, and which is to plunge mankind into the final apostasy.

THE naval cadets at West Point are this year prohibited from attending church services at Annapolis except on communion days, when they must obtain a special permit from their superiors. This leaves them the alternative of attending service at the Episcopal chapel provided by the government, or at the Roman Catholic church at the Navy Yard. Yet the churches in Annapolis are within ten minutes' walk of the cadets' quarters.

RECENTLY some of the "orthodox" Hebrews in New York City, in the personal preparation which they deemed necessary for the proper celebration of the Jewish "new-year" holidays, which began at six o'clock on Sunday evening, September 25, required the services of a tonsorial "artist," and accordingly several Jews whose business was of that nature opened their shops and proceeded to shave customers as usual on other days. Six of them were arrested for doing business on Sunday; and although they pleaded that the work was necessary for the proper observance of the "new year," the city magistrate who heard the cases imposed a fine upon each for violation of the law. It appears, however, that the arrested barbers belonged to the Barbers' Union, which had petitioned for the very law under which these individuals were fined. Hence, the latter could not consistently complain.

It is said by the American Hebrew that Mayor Strong had recommended that the city authorities should allow the sale of food on Sunday afternoon to the Hebrews on the East Side, as the latter would not be at liberty to purchase food on the ensuing Monday and Tuesday; but that a Christian Endeavor committee, on learning of this, took the mayor to task for thus favoring the Hebrews at the expense of Sunday. Such "Christian endeavor" is of the nature of those endeavors in the business world which result in the formation of monopolies and "trusts." Every Sunday law is, in fact, a law designed to establish a religious monopoly.

Charlie's Question About the Beasts.

"WELL, here I am again, mama," said Charlie Ross. "I've brought the Bible, and am full of questions. I hunted up the word 'fire,' as you told me to, but could only find one place where it says anything that would make me think a government would bring down fire on the earth, and I hardly know whether it is a government or not, for it says it is a beast that doeth great wonders, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth."

"I know I am a great bother," continued Charlie, as Mrs. Ross laid down her work. "I suppose there are not many boys who have mothers who are willing to give up their work to help them understand these questions; no, nor many mothers who could help as you do."

"No, nor many sons who are interested in Bible questions, or who would think their mother so valuable an instructor. My dear boy, my first work is,—well, come, you may tell me yourself."

"Ah, mama, I know you think it is the making of me into a true, intelligent man," said Charlie, with a pleased look in his eyes.

"You are right. Many a time as you come to me with your questions, I think of David, who had it in his heart to build the temple of the Lord. He was not permitted to do it; but he was permitted to turn over what he had gathered to his son, and Solomon built the temple. Mama has never been permitted to do any great thing for the Lord, but may be you will have a chance to spread the principles of truth in wider circles."

"Now for some of your questions, Charlie."

"Well, mama, I never paid much attention to the strange beasts we read about in the Bible before; but since you gave me that hint the other day about the beasts representing governments, I have read of them with great interest. The first question is, How do you know that governments are so represented?"

"Governments or earthly kingdoms are represented under several different symbols. In the second chapter of Daniel they were represented to Nebuchadnezzar, who you know was a worshiper of images, under the form of an image whose head was of gold, whose breast was of silver, thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet part of iron and part of clay. However, we will not stop to study this symbol at present; for in the seventh chapter when the Lord presented the same line of prophecy to his own servant, he represented the different kingdoms under the symbols of beasts of prey. I do not want to go too fast, dear, over this point, for the choice of these symbols to represent the intrinsic nature of earthly kingdoms reveals an infinite understanding of the character and methods of the governments of men, and presents a vast contrast to the nature and methods of the government of God. Just to bring out the difference in the nature and methods of earthly kingdoms, I will ask you a few questions.

"How do beasts of prey obtain and preserve their dominion?"

"Why, by force," answered Charlie.

"Right. Now tell me how God's kingdom is gaining and controlling its subjects on earth?"

"By winning their hearts."

"Yes; it is the goodness of God that leads men to repentance. The heavenly government extends to the very thoughts and affections of the heart; but earthly governments have dominion only over the outward actions. You asked me how I knew that these beasts represented earthly governments. That's a very wise question. Many persons have said that you could make the Bible mean whatever you liked by interpreting it yourself to suit your own ideas. But God has not left us to the mercy of men's interpretations. He himself has told us what these symbols indicate. Turn to Daniel 7:17, and read what he says the four beasts represent."

"These great beasts which are four, are four kings which shall arise out of the earth," read Charlie.

"Now read the 24th verse and you will see clearly that the beasts are symbols of four great kingdoms."

"Thus he said: the fourth beast is the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces."

"The fourth kingdom upon earth is represented by 'a great and terrible beast,' and the third, second, and first, by beasts whose likeness we find in nature. But first, what seems to be the only object for which beasts of prey strive?"

"For their own gratification," suggested Charlie.

"Yes, to hold their own dominion, to obtain such things as will minister to their appetites. In fact, they live, as it would seem, simply for self. Anything that interferes must be put down and out. They live for time, for the present, for the fulfilling of the desires of the flesh, or of the animal nature only."

"Have you ever seen men and women who live in the same way?"

"O yes, mama. It seems as if they did at any rate; for there is the drunkard on Fleet Street, and—O, lots of people who never seem to care for anything but a comfortable time for themselves. In fact, mama, it seems to me that it is natural for most people, perhaps for everybody, to be very selfish, and to want to get rid of everything that interferes with them."

"You remember in our first talk on the difference between the government of God and the government that originates from selfishness, we spoke of the fall of the great angel Lucifer, who said he would exalt his throne above the stars of God, and be like the Most High in position. The principle that actuated him was that of self-exaltation, that would lead to the putting down of all others, or to the making of a final tyranny. His was a beast-like spirit, the spirit that has actuated every earthly government that has departed from the principles of liberty. It is his spirit that makes earthly governments develop the beast-like characteristics. Satan is called the dragon, the 'old serpent' that deceiveth the whole earth. But selfishness is beast-like and satanic; and when governments are permitted to work out what is in them, they work out the spirit of the dragon and of the beast. The history of the nations of the past, and even of the present, will furnish us with plenty of illustrations of this fact. But as nations are made up of individuals, and the State is only the sum total of its majorities, this question has a bearing on every individual, and each one has a part to act either in giving power to the beast, or in building up the kingdom of God which is in righteousness and peace and joy in the earth. In a short time we shall come to the beast who is to imitate the miracle of Elijah in bringing fire down on the earth; but our next talk will be on the first beast of this chapter, and I want you to look up all you can on the characteristics of the lion. Meanwhile, my dear boy, ask the God of love to continually fill us with the spirit of love, that has been symbolized by the dove that is so harmless and guileless; for if we possess not the spirit of the beast, but of the dove, we shall belong to the eternal kingdom.

God rules by love, and not by force;
His throne's upheld above,
Not by the might that would coerce,
But by the might of love.

F. B:

How Ed Spoiled the Meeting.

"HELLO, Jimmy, where are you going?"

"O, I am going over to uncle Will's. Father wants me to ask him whether he will be at home to-morrow."

"Why, what's up; is there going to be a meeting somewhere?"

"Oh no, but pa wants to see him about buying a horse."

"What! on Sunday? I thought your father and your uncle Will were church members."

"So they are, and ma, and aunt Lucy, too; but uncle Will goes down to his pinery most every Sunday, and looks over his timber; and, I suppose, calculates about the lumber it will make. He says his health is poor, and that a walk in the fragrant pinery does him lots of good. Pa was afraid he would have to walk out to his pinery again, to-morrow, for his health; but thought, may be, he would stay at home if he expected him there."

"Wouldn't a walk in some other pinery do your uncle Will as much good as a stroll in his own?"

"I have thought about that a good deal, and wondered whether God would be pleased with such Sabbath-keeping. I suppose they will talk horse trade just for health, and because pa wants the horse to drive to meeting on Sunday; but if the children should laugh, or talk too loud, tap, tap, tap, will go uncle Will's booted foot on the floor, and all will have to be as still as mice."

"It's just so at our house, too. Sometimes I look out through the open window and wish I was a free bird, or squirrel, or fish; and it makes me just hate Sunday, and almost makes me hate the Bible, too. O, say, Jimmy, did you ever hear about how Ed Day almost spoiled a meeting that was held at his father's house last spring?"

"No; tell me how he did it."

"Well, they didn't have meetings over in Maple Hollow very often, and when they did they were most always held at Mr. Day's house. He and his wife are both members of the church, you know. One Sunday, in sugar time, the people were gathered from all round, the minister was there, and all were waiting for Mr. Day to come in (from his sugar bush where he had gone for his health, I suppose). Presently he opened the door and walked in, when Ed (he was a little fellow) spoke right out loud so all could hear: 'Pa, did you leave the sap boiling?' You ought to have seen the people grinning, and Mr. Day looking as if he wanted to give Ed a shaking. I guess he got it after meeting."

"You know Lock's folks, don't you, Johnny? Well, I was over there one day, and Mrs. Lock was showing me a nice box that her husband had made for her, when her boy Johnnie spoke up and said: 'My pa made that box on Sunday.' 'Why, Johnnie Lock!' said his mother, 'he did not make the box on Sunday, you naughty boy.' 'Why, yes, ma, don't you remember; it was when you was tacking down the carpet in the hall.' Mrs. Lock admitted that she put down the carpet on Sunday, because she expected the minister to take dinner with them; and that Mr. Lock did do a little finishing work on the box at the same time.

"Well, these good Christian(?) church members held a meeting over at uncle Jake's, where they all talked in favor of having a Sunday law passed to make everybody keep the Sabbath. What do you think about that, Johnnie?"

"Well, it looks as though they thought God's Sabbath law was not strong enough, or perfect enough, or something; and that men knew better than God did how to make a law that would help everybody to keep the Sabbath. It doesn't look just right to me, though. If these church members want other folks to keep the Sabbath, why don't they keep it themselves as Christians ought to?"

"But, Johnnie, the commandment of God doesn't say anything about keeping Sunday, but the seventh day, which is Saturday."

"Al Wilson showed me how it reads in the Bible. You know his folks keep Saturday for Sunday."

"Well, if the Bible reads that way, I say we ought to do as God tells us to do; and I'm sure the Bible must tell us how to keep it, too; and I don't believe he wants us to be shut up, prison like, all day, while he lets the birds fly about and sing as if they were praising the Lord for joy.

"Al Wilson told me they were always glad at his house when Sabbath came. I don't believe Mr. Wilson sleeps and snores half the day on the lounge, and spends the rest of the time in eating and going to meeting; and then if the children make a little noise, speaks out, cross-like: 'Joseph!' 'Mary!' as my father does. Let's find out how the Wilsons keep the Sabbath."

"All right. Good bye!"

A. SMITH.

THE London (Eng.) Christian World mentions the following incident as showing "the notion some church people have of 'religious instruction.'" It illustrates the practical working of the principle of State teaching of religion in the public schools:—

"A diocesan inspector visited a certain school in one of the Eastern counties, a school in which there was a good number of children of Nonconformists, and in testing their religious knowledge he asked the question: 'By what was Noah saved?' Up went a forest of hands. 'Well?' said the inspector. 'The ark,' was the answer from the whole school. 'No,' said the inspector; 'you are all wrong; Noah was saved by the water; and so God taught us that we were to be saved by the waters of baptism. Never forget that.' Another question was asked, but not a hand was held up. Another was tried. The same result. The inspector expressed his surprise that the children could not answer his questions. Next day the mistress of the school scolded the children for not answering, when she was quite sure they could have answered correctly. One of them said: 'We wouldn't answer any more questions, because he didn't know anything about Noah. Why, the people were drowned by the water, and he said Noah was saved by it.'"

The American Medical Missionary College.

THE third session of the American Medical Missionary College will open November 3. New and enlarged quarters have been secured in Chicago, and a new surgical dispensary is being fitted up there, and several additional teachers have been added to the corps of instructors. Nearly fifty applications for entrance have already been received. There is still room for a few well qualified young ladies. The openings for young women with the right qualifications are exceptionally excellent at the present time. Those interested should correspond immediately with the undersigned.

J. H. KELLOGG,
28 College Place, Chicago, Ill.

MR. HANS PETERSON, of Iroquois, S. D., in remitting for his subscription, writes: "I can say that the SENTINEL is getting better all the time. I have been a reader of it during a good share of its existence, but now it seems to me to be far better than in its beginning. That is good—that is as it should be. Let the warning trumpet sound loud and clear."

A Good Book at Half Price.

Bible Readings for the Home Circle.—This book comprises 162 readings for public and private study, and answers nearly three thousand questions on religious topics, practical, historical, and prophetic. The work is profusely and beautifully illustrated, and contains 600 octavo pages, printed on a superior quality of tinted paper, embellished with 57 full-page engravings and 170 ornamental headings, together with 10 full-page scriptural and prophetic diagrams, 3 colored plates, and other attractive features. This book, when perfect, never sells for less than the regular price, which is $2. We have a number of these which are very slightly damaged, and we propose to give our patrons a benefit by our loss. These books are nice enough for any library, and just the thing to lend to friends for perusal. We will close them out, postpaid, at $1 each.

THE LAST CALL.

WE hereby give notice that the present offer of our premium Bible with the Sentinel for one year for $3 will CLOSE ON NEXT FRIDAY. To give our friends at a distance from us an equal chance with those near by, we will honor all orders received which are accompanied by a money order or bank draft on New York dated on or before Oct. 22, 1897.

After that date the price will be as formerly—Bible and Sentinel, 1 year, $3.50.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,				.50
"	"	Three "				.35

ADDRESS. AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS.

Do you have the New Webster Dictionary advertised in this paper? If not, send for one; it is the best thing of the kind on the market. The author recently received an order from one house for 100,000 copies of it. Address Pacific Press Publishing Co., 39 Bond St., New York.

THE "whirl of the Cyclone continues"—or, more strictly speaking, the Cyclone Washer continues its whirl among the people, as the reports of the agents show. Mr. C. B. Williams, of Dunbridge, Ohio, writes that he has made $44 in five days selling the machines; and during the past three months has cleared $290. Address Coon Bros., Battle Creek, Mich., for further particulars and terms to agents.

THE sick and afflicted in the vicinity of the Nebraska Sanitarium can do no better than investigate its merits as a medical institution. It is conducted on strictly rational methods, and every known appliance for the alleviation and cure of human ailments is employed. The institution is patterned after the great Battle Creek (Mich.) Sanitarium. Write for circulars, addressing as indicated in the advertisement in this issue.

SEND to this office for list of books slightly damaged, which are being offered at half price.

THIS is the last week of the special offer on the premium Bible.

WE place in this issue the advertisement of a simple device for the relief and cure of catarrh, headache, asthma, and other like difficulties called the Scientific Catarrh Inhaler, for sale by Dr. E. J. Worst, Ashland, Ohio. We have seen and used one of these inhalers, and believe they are all that is claimed for them. The generous offer made by Dr. Worst is certainly entitled to consideration, as it could be no fairer. Those troubled with difficulties such as this inhaler is designed to alleviate, would do well to consult the advertisement on this page.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

CATARRH INHALER FREE.

For Catarrh, Pains and Colds in Head, Roaring Deafness and Throat Trouble.

I will, for a short time, mail any reader of the AMERICAN SENTINEL one of my new Scientific Catarrh Inhalers and medicine for one year, with full directions, on three days' trial free. It cures by inhalation.

If it gives satisfaction send me $1, if not, kindly return it in the original package. Address, Dr. E. J. Worst, Ashland, Ohio.

Dr. Worst makes our readers a generous offer and all can avail themselves of it.—EDITOR.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y.: "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest.
Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

The Stomach:

Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids.
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dyspepsia,
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,

39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS,
slightly damaged, offered at half price.
Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

CATHOLIC TESTIMONY.

THE following tracts and leaflets are direct quotations from those high in authority in the Church of Rome, and can be relied upon as representative testimony.

From Sabbath to Sunday.

Contains, among other important testimony, Father Enright's $1,000 challenge for Bible proof of Sunday sacredness. Price, 1/2 cent.

Who Changed the Sabbath?

This question is disposed of by adducing evidences from Catholic sources. Price, 1 1/2 cents.

Christian Sabbath.

A reprinted article from the Catholic Mirror, which paper is the organ of the Catholic Church in the United States. It puts forth the question "Why Do Protestants Keep Sunday?" Price, 2 cents.

A Challenge to Protestants.

A pithy little leaflet quoting some strong words from a representative Catholic priest to the Protestant world. Price, 25 cents per 100.

Rome's Arraignment of Sabbath-Breakers.

This is a report of a sermon delivered by Father O'Keefe, a Baltimore Catholic priest, in which two facts are set forth and from a Scriptural standpoint. (1) That the only Bible Sabbath is the seventh day or Saturday. (2) That for first day observance or sacredness, there is no Bible warrant. Sixteen well filled pages, 1 cent.

The Law of God as Changed by the Papacy.

A chart 5 1/2 x 11 inches, printed on thin paper, containing the Law of God as changed by the Catholic power. This is flanked by papal assumptions and admissions, giving the whole history of the change in a nutshell. A citation is made from each quotation to its original source, making it a document of especial importance. 50 cents per 100.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

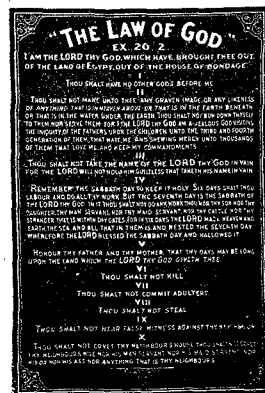

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spoke it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12x18 INCHES.

On thick paper, mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

Postpaid, 25 Cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

A NEW TRACT CATALOGUE.

"Descriptive Catalogue of the Bible Students', Apples of Gold, and Religious Liberty Libraries" is the title of this 36 page catalogue.

It gives a pithy description of each tract and pamphlet in the above Libraries, together with their size and price. It will greatly assist the reader to select such numbers as he may desire to read and circulate; and may be obtained FREE by addressing the Pacific Press Publishing Company, Oakland, Cal.; 39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.; 18 W. 5th St., Kansas City, Mo.; or Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich.; Atlanta, Ga.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE

$7.00 WORTH FOR $3.00.

The book we offer has large clear type (see specimen) and is what is known as the

AMERICAN OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING REFERENCE TEACHERS' BIBLE,

Bourgeois Type, Bound in Imperial Seal Leather, Divinity Circuit, Extra Linen Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red Under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker, Binding of the Best Quality,

REMEMBER, the price of this Bible is $6.00. Anyone, OLD OR NEW SUBSCRIBER, sending us $3.00 will receive this Bible postpaid, and the Sentinel one year.

REGULAR PRICE, $6.00, WITH SENTINEL, ONE $3.00

REDUCTION IN PRICE

FROM $3.50 TO $3.00,

For a SHORT TIME ONLY.

The Sentinel one year and Bible, postpaid,	$3.00
The Sentinel six months and Bible, postpaid,	2.50
The Bible alone to those who are now subscribers to the Sentinel,	2.00
The Bible given as a present for six NEW yearly subscriptions at $1.00 each “ “ “ twelve 6 months “ at .50 each

We cannot agree to continue this offer any great length of time as our stock is limited, hence we urge our patrons to ORDER AT ONCE.

As to the merits of the Bible we offer, it is enough to say that

NO ONE HAS CRITICISED IT.

On the other hand, we have received numerous unsolicited words of praise, a few of which we print. For brevity's sake, we omit the name and address of writers, but their letters are all on file in our office.

What our Patrons Say of It.

I received the Bible in good condition. I am very well pleased with it in every way. It is a first class Bible; just the kind I have wanted.

The Bible is a beauty. Everything that could be wished.

The Bible came safely, and is highly appreciated by the friends for whom I bought it.

My Bible received. I am very much pleased with it.

I have received my Bible, and to say I am well pleased would not convey my appreciation. I think it the best bargain ever offered. It is just what I have long wanted.

I have used my Bible nearly three months, have compared it with other higher priced Bibles, and can truthfully say that all that you claim for it is true, and do heartily recommend it to all who need a good Bible.

It is the best Bible I ever saw for the price.

I received your premium Bible, and we were surprised to get such a good grade of book. Many of my friends have examined it and pronounce it excellent.

I wish to thank you at once for the beautiful Bible which I received yesterday. It is far better than I expected.

I am very much pleased with it and like it better than any Bible I have ever had.

We are all more than pleased with the Bible. The type is a great delight.

I am delighted with the Bible. Don't know how you sell it so cheap.

The Bible was far beyond my expectation. It is a real beauty and I am more than pleased with it.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE.

They that sealed the covenant. NEHEMIAH, X. The points of the covenant.

They that sealed the covenant, neither turned they from their wicked works. 36 Behold, we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers to eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it: 47 And it yielded much increase as it.

25 Re-hu'm, Ha-shab'nah, Ma-g-e'-jah, 26 And A-hi'jah, Ha-nan, A-nan, 27 Ma'uch, Ha-rim, Ba-g-nah, 28 I And the rest of the people, the priests, the Levites, the porters, the singers, the Neth'i-ning, and all they that had separated themselves

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE CLOSED

We will GIVE one of these Superb Bibles for SIX new names at the regular-subscription price, $6.00.

Address all orders to

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 42.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 28, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

"JUDGE nothing before the time."

CIVIL government was never designed to be a rival to the gospel in saving men from immorality.

THE one necessary qualification for admission to the society for discovering what is proper for other people, is to have a good-sized beam in your eye.

RELIGIOUS intolerance is only one form of selfishness. "For the glory of God" is a phrase which very often, properly translated, would mean "for the gratification of self."

THE Almighty has undertaken to provide a country in which there shall be a righteous citizenship; and his plan alone, of all those that are being tried, will prove successful.

It is just as possible to realize national prosperity independently of individual prosperity, as to secure national righteousness independently of individual righteousness.

THE God of heaven and earth put the stamp of his own image upon man at his creation, and yet this has not saved man in many instances from sinking to the moral level of the brute. What salvation then can be expected for the nation from merely inserting the name of God in the Constitution.

ONE thing that is very much neglected in the attempted solution of the "labor problem," is the divine call and invitation, "Go, work to-day in my vineyard." Here is work for all who want work, and an Employer who is invariably kind and just to his help.

A BAD principle or a bad religion—as, for example, the papal religion—is as much the foe of the one who has espoused it, as of the one who opposes it. Bad principles underlie all bad religion; and in opposing them the SENTINEL is not opposing any man, but is seeking rather to rescue men from their most dangerous foes. What it says in the advocacy of its principles, it says in behalf of all men, regardless of their race or belief.

The Cross and the Flag.

THE symbol of the new crusade which calls itself "Christian citizenship," is a cross, twined about by the flag of the United States.

We do not question the fitness of this symbol to represent that proposed union of religion with the state for which "Christian citizenship" stands. It is very suggestive on this point. But considering the cross as the symbol of Christianity, the emblem becomes altogether incongruous.

The American flag stands for the nation, as distinct from all other nations; for the interests of the United States, as distinct from those of all other countries on the earth. It has no meaning or significance which is not distinctly sectional.

Christianity, on the other hand, is distinctly non-sectional. It is for all classes and races of people alike. There is an American flag, but there is no American Christianity; there is an English flag, but there is no English Christianity. Nor is there French Christianity, nor Scandinavian Christianity, nor any other national Christianity. There is Christianity,—simply that, and nothing more.

Christianity is not susceptible of subdivisions into species and varieties. It is one and the same thing for all individuals on the earth.

And this is why there can be no such thing as national Christianity. Such a thing would partake of the distinctive qualities of the nation to which it pertained; otherwise there would be no force in calling it national. So we would have as many different kinds of Christianity as there might be nations who should choose to join themselves with it.

Christianity says, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." It sees not the cross and the flag, but the cross only.

The American flag, or any other national flag, stands for war as much as it does for peace. It is borne at the head of the armies and navies of the nations in deadly combat with each other. Nor does it change one iota on such an occasion from that which it is when wrapped about the cross to form the symbol of "Christian citizenship." But Christianity stands for peace, and that always. Christianity is love, and not variance and bitterness.

The cross stands infinitely above the flag. The flag is of the earth; the cross is not of earth. No added meaning need or can be given, by anything on earth, to its wondrous significance as the token of salvation for a lost and dying race. Nor can the cross impart any significance to the flag. Taken together, the two can symbolize only something incongruous, unchristian, and un-American.

"Of course, the whole system is a farce, and meant to be so." This is what Gen. W. T. Sherman said of army chaplains. See article on page 661.

The "Question Before the House."

An individual may be pardoned for not keeping track of all that is going on in the world in this "fast" age, but there is a dangerous negligence in this particular revealed in the language of an esteemed correspondent who writes us that he does not see what use there is for the SENTINEL at the present time. "It seems to me," he says, "that there is no question before the house, and that the SENTINEL is firing at dead issues."

We had supposed everybody who read the SENTINEL was aware of the movement that has now for some years been on foot in the churches of this country to "enthroned Christ" in the politics of this nation. That movement was never so formidable as it is to-day. It is represented by the "Christian Citizenship," "Christian Endeavor," and other organizations of a religious nature, numbering millions of young, active, and zealous adherents. And these millions of young people are only the latest recruits to the army which is working to secure this "national reform."

Shall Christ be "enthroned" in our politics? is the question before the house. Or in other words, Shall the religious movement succeed which, its adherents claim, will "enthroned Christ on Capitol Hill," but which in reality will unite church and state? A very live issue is this, and one which concerns the welfare of every individual in the country. And—we repeat—this movement was never so formidable as it is to-day.

If to observe a weekly day of rest is a matter of personal right, it should be recognized as the privilege of the individual to so rest if he chooses to do so. But the Sunday law denies that any person shall exercise their own choice in the matter, and thereby denies that a weekly rest is a matter of individual right. Professing to uphold the right, it in reality denies it altogether.

A Threatened Union of Church and State.

To the Mormons in Utah President Woodruff of their hierarchy has proclaimed: "Unite in your temple work, and unite in your politics." And the newspapers are calling this a "threatened union of church and state" in Utah.

Yes, that is what it is. But that is nothing new, nor is it peculiar to Utah. For years the same thing has been threatened, and in the same way, by the professed Protestant churches of the whole country, and with respect to the politics of the nation.

In 1893 these churches throughout the whole country, united in their politics and showered Congress with their united pledge "never to vote for, nor support in any way, for any office or position of trust," any member of Congress who refused to vote at that particular time as they dictated.

We said all the time that this work of these churches threatened a union of church and state. This was so plain that all could see it; yet the press generally, for some reason, would not denounce it as such. But as soon as the Mormons propose the same thing, only in the little State of Utah, it is heralded over the country as a threatened union of church and state. This is right; but why be so partial? It is no worse in the Mormon Church than it is in the professed Protestant churches of the whole country.

The Christian Endeavorers, the Christian Citizenship Leagues, the Law and Order Leagues, and a number of other organizations, have for some time been making prominent this very matter of uniting in their politics. Why is not this noted as a threatened union of church and state? For that is exactly what it is.

The Mormon Church proposes to unite in their politics, in order that they can have the will of their church combination respected and carried into effect by the State of Utah. All these other church combinations did the same thing in 1892 and 1893, and they are doing it yet, in order to have the will of their church combination carried into effect by the national government.

The Mormon proposition is to make in Utah a State religion: the proposition of these other church combinations is to make a national religion. They are alike in principle, but the latter is as much worse in practice as the nation is greater than the State of Utah.

Yes, that Mormon proposition does threaten a union of church and state, and as such it should be opposed. But the propositions of these professed Protestant churches and other religious combinations threaten precisely the same thing. Let this be opposed also. And let this be watched the more closely and opposed the more strongly, as it means mischief on a larger scale than the other. Let there be no respect of persons nor churches in any "threatened union of church and state."

The Workingman's Palladium.

THE Independent (N. Y.), of October 14, makes this very truthful statement: "The fourth commandment is the workingman's palladium, his best defense against oppression, and was so intended from the first."

The fourth commandment was designed to keep man in constant touch with the Author of liberty. Whoever will keep the fourth commandment will know freedom in its highest sense.

The fourth commandment is not only a command to every individual to rest on the Sabbath day, but it is the guaranty of the highest power in the universe that every person shall enjoy the privilege who will take it. For does the God of heaven command any person to do that which he is not fully able to do?

All that is necessary is for the workingman to have confidence in God. God offers to all men absolute freedom and independence; in other words, a noble, upright manhood, which never need bow its head in servility and cringing fear. "God made man upright," is the declaration of the Scriptures of truth. God made man to be upright, and not the less so in this age of the world than in any other. All the bossism and the servility which characterize the relations of man to his fellow man in this day, are not of God's ordering, but are directly contrary to it.

God has not made the privilege of Sabbath rest contingent, for a single one of his creatures, upon the lofty condescension of some other man in giving him permission to enjoy that rest; or upon the happen-so of some other man's choosing to keep the Sabbath himself. It is the duty of employers to throw no obstacle in the way of their employes as regards the keeping of the Sabbath, as is said in Deuteronomy, "That thy man servant and thy maid servant may rest as well as thou." But this statement is not a declaration that men servants and maid servants cannot have a Sabbath rest if their employers do not see fit to rest themselves or to grant them the permission.

In Christ, there is no distinction of master and servant, but all are free and on a perfect equality; and the duty and privilege of one, in respect to Sabbath observance, do not vary one whit from those of another.

Let the workingman, and every other man who has them not, accept the freedom and manhood that are in Christ. They are worth more to him than anything else.

Religion Is for the Individual.

BY GEN. WM. BIRNEY.

RELIGION concerns the relations of the individual man to the Supreme Being. It is a personal matter between a soul and its Creator. It has nothing to do with bodies of men. A corporation, whether secular, or ecclesiastical, or civil, cannot be religious, although every one of its members may be; for it has no soul or conscience. The directors of the Standard Oil Company may all be pious men; but that does not make the oil religious or its sale a pious act. The president, his cabinet, and the justices of the Supreme Court might each and all be Mohammedans, but that fact would not make our republic Moslem. They might be Unitarians or Mormons, and our Constitution would undergo no change. A church corporation, as such, cannot believe in any doctrine or be held corporately responsible for sins; the individual members must answer, each for himself. So, religious belief cannot be predicated of any State or nation. Governments have neither feelings, nor sentiments, nor opinions; to them devils, angels, and ghosts are equally indifferent; the United States will have, as a corporation, no account to render at the judgment. It cannot, from its very nature, be either Christian or Mohammedan.

Religion not only concerns the individual, but deals with his spiritual nature. For this world, it seeks to purify and elevate his personal character; it appeals to his conscience, emotions, affections, and motives. Its methods are persuasive; it aims at moral and intellectual conviction, which cannot be accomplished by force. Violence does not command belief. A man may be constrained to say that the sun does not shine in the heavens, but he does not believe what he says. Galileo was compelled to recant his teaching that the earth moves; but he struck his staff on the earth and exclaimed, "It still moves." Religion has never gained anything by legislative penalties. Its natural weapon is love. Persecution in the name of religion may make hypocrites and martyrs; it cannot make converts.

The sanctions of religion are moral; its rewards and punishments germinate in this world and ripen beyond the grave. Its punishments are for wrong feelings of the heart, for sins; if a man lust after a woman, or covet his neighbor's property, or hate him, he is amenable to the divine law, though his sinful feeling may not find expression in acts. He may have violated no penal statute, and may have enjoyed the esteem of his fellow men during a long life of outward innocence; but in the eye of God he is a sinner.

As religion is a matter between the individual man and his Creator, there is no escape for man from his personal accountability. He cannot shift it to the shoulders of other persons, or to a church or nation. He cannot shelter himself under the provisions of a statute or the indulgences of an ecclesiastical superior. He must obey God rather than man. If Nebuchadnezzar, the king, orders him to fall down at the sound of the trumpet and worship the golden image, he should not obey, though he knows he shall be cast into the furnace seven times heated; or, if the order be not to pray to God, his duty is to disobey with the certainty before him of being thrown into a den of lions. While he should promptly obey all the laws of civil government, enacted within their proper sphere, he should refuse obedience when they clash with his religious obligations. Every religion teaches martyrdom in preference to sin.

The repentant sinner escapes the penalty of sin. No matter how black his sin, he needs nothing but repentance to wash him whiter than snow. If the heart is right, there is no punishment for past offences. "God is love" is the fundamental principle of religion.

Washington, D. C.

State Religion.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

It is quite commonly believed that the United States Constitution forbids the establishment of any church as a State church in any of the States of the United States; but it does not. It simply prohibits the United States from doing so, either for the States or for itself; and each State is left free to adopt a religion if it wants to. The fear that the State of Utah will establish a State religion and enforce it, is bringing this fact—that a State can establish a religion—very forcibly home to many who have heretofore been in darkness upon this subject.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is doing quite an extensive missionary work in Utah, but it is now confronted with the fact that there may soon be a State church established there which will effectually bar its progress.

Discussing the situation in Utah, the Christian Advocate of October 7, says:—

"Concerning Statehood and its relation to the strengthening of Mormonism, we remind our readers that the Christian Advocate for a number of years directed attention to the fact that the power of the States with regard to religion is not limited. There is nothing to prevent any State from setting up an established church, except its own constitutional provisions, which may be changed according to methods provided for by existing constitutions. The public seems to sleep under the idea that because the Constitution provides that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof,' the States have no power to do so, forgetting that the Constitution also provides that 'the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.' Consequently, should the Mormons possess a vote sufficiently large to alter the Constitution, they could make Mormonism the established religion of Utah, and crush out all efforts to promote Christianity; and even in the absence of that, in the counties where they are sufficiently strong they could nullify the laws against polygamy by intentionally delaying indefinitely the prosecution of offenders. We know of no power existing, under the Constitution, to maintain the rights of Christians in that State except the mighty force of public opinion throughout the land, and the propagation by slow degrees of the American idea."

The Advocate sees very clearly that there is a danger that the State of Utah, through and by the use of its regularly established and recognized powers, may make the State an engine of tyranny to oppose and oppress those who do not accept the doctrines of the dominant church. It also believes that this would be a great wrong, which nothing but the "mighty force of public opinion throughout the land, and the propagation by slow degrees of the American idea" could eradicate.

The Advocate is able to see this because of the danger that one church, the Mormon Church, will gain the power, and especially because the Mormon Church will be liable to use that power to prevent the extension of the Methodist Church in that State.

Right here some very important questions may be asked: Should two or three churches unite together upon something concerning religion, which they consider fundamental, and, by pressure on the legislators, cause it to be incorporated into the laws of a State,—forbidding or commanding a practice,—would it not be a step in the same direction as the establishment of a State church, and would it not be precisely the same to those who regard such law as an abuse of clerical influence and authority and an invasion of natural right? It surely would.

But to be more precise: should the Methodists and Mormons of Utah unite in securing a strong Sunday law in that State, would not those who believe they have a God-given right to labor on the first day of the week consider such a law an abridgment of their rights; that the power that caused the law—the Methodist and Mormon churches—was one, and that the yielding to their demands by the legislature was at least a quasi acknowledgment of a union of those two churches—one in purpose—with the State? They would; and they would have a perfect right to think so.

Now, it is this religious pressure by various churches joined together that has caused the enactment of every Sunday law in the different States of the Union. And a purely church practice forced upon all the people by several churches is just as bad as though it were so done by one church alone. Of course a church and state union may go farther than this; but the same principle as here outlined lies at the foundation of the religious laws of our States, whether of Sunday laws or laws against blasphemy or witchcraft.

It is to be hoped that this investigation, helped on by the discussion of Utah affairs, will enable the people to see that every State of the Union is menaced just as much as Utah is. A Catholic, Episcopalian, or Methodist union with a State would be just as bad as a Mormon union, and if all of them together should influence a State to enforce a religious tenet, the evil would be precisely the same. In either case the honest dissenter would feel the tyranny of a religion through the power of the State, and it would be of little moment to him what church or what churches were at the bottom of it.

Those churches which are frightened at the thought that the Mormon Church may yet control legislation in Utah so that the doctrines of that church may be favored there by law, should look very carefully over their own history and present tendencies before they lock horns with the Mormons upon this subject. It is a very old axiom that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones; and churches which are doing their best to influence legislation in the United States Congress and many of the State legislatures, should either cease their efforts in that direction or cheerfully yield to the Mormons the same privilege they claim for themselves.

The "American idea" is that no church either directly or indirectly should meddle with the State, or in any way attempt to gain State patronage for its dogmas. In other words, the American idea calls for a purely secular government. But alas! in many ways we are yet far from the ideal.

The Essential Thing.

Rev. J. A. Derome, Mapleton, Minn.

SOME are very anxious to have the name of God inserted in the Constitution. But this is not the all-important thing. You might have the word "God" inscribed upon the White House, carved upon the gilded dome of the Capitol, engrossed upon the desk of every representative and senator, and yet it would not make much difference.

We have on our silver dollar the motto: "In God We Trust," but this has not stopped greed, covetousness, the love of money, which are some of our national evils. Nations are made up of individuals. It is the individual who needs to have God's name treasured in his own heart, to be held by him in reverence and love. And when individuals, who make up the town, the county, the state, the nation, have such due regard for God and his law, then is fulfilled the divine promise: "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

The Fourth of July recalls the fact that we owe our present freedom—that is, what is left of it—and our privileges to men who were not afraid to trust in God, nor ashamed to say so. In that immortal Declaration of Independence, the signers appealed "to the Supreme Judge of the world" for the rectitude of their intentions, and they said they were ready to support that Declaration "with firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence." To-day, our law-makers have a chaplain to do their praying for them. It is a much better thing when legislators can pray for themselves, are willing to do it, and to keep God's law by serving him and their fellow men.

Our Government's Alliance with Religion.

SOME INTERESTING FACTS RELATIVE TO ARMY CHAPLAINCIES.

A WRITER who "has had exceptional opportunities to study federal chaplaincies, and is thoroughly well-informed as to the facts relating thereto," contributes an article on this subject to the Christian Register, of September 23, in which we note the following interesting statements:—

"A well-located chapel is in use at West Point by the government chaplain. Another is open for Catholic and other services. They are styled 'the cadet chapel' and 'a soldiers' chapel.' The 'soldiers' chapel' is 'inconspicuous and retired in location,' 'a mean and shabby building.' Thus the Catholics are compelled to hold their services in an inferior building and under very unfavorable conditions as compared with those of the government chaplain; and the Roman Catholic priests and all Protestant ministers are not put on a plane of equal privileges with the Protestant Episcopal priest, who officiates in the well-located and well-cared-for post chapel.

"There is now a Roman Catholic chapel on the Leavenworth Military Reservation, in a good location. It is the second here owned and occupied by this church. The first was sold to the government for $12,000, and the second was erected out of this money. At Leavenworth is the United States Infantry and Cavalry School, and it is thus a military post of special importance.

"A noted Catholic writer, Dr. Condé B. Pallen, asserts that 'at West Point itself the Episcopalians have a handsome stone church, whose support the government assumes and the salary of whose minister it pays.' This is true. The dominant official element at West Point is Episcopal. Any one but an Episcopalian as chaplain there would not be thought of. The present incumbent was selected for the place by Bishop Potter. No other church representatives were supposed to have any right to be consulted. And the chaplain is a Protestant Episcopal priest, wears the dress of one, conducts the services strictly according to the forms of his church, works for its interests, and is to all intents and purposes Protestant Episcopal rector at West Point, and is supported handsomely from the United States Treasury, his salary being several hundreds of dollars more than that of any other army chaplain. This money is used to promote sectarian ends,—i. e., the ends of a single church,—as definitely and purely as though the government should itself build a Roman Catholic chapel at West Point, and pay a Roman Catholic priest to conduct its services. In maintaining that chapel and Episcopal service, one religious body is distinctly favored; and all others—Roman Catholic and Protestant—are as distinctly subordinated. Should Dr. John Hall, Dr. H. M. Storrs, or Dr. R. S. McArthur find his way into that West Point Episcopal Church, called chapel, he would on no consideration be allowed to share in the service in a way to recognize him as a valid Christian minister by the Episcopal rector, styled chaplain. The canon of the Protestant Episcopal Church absolutely forbids such recognition. It represents the Roman Catholic as much as any Protestant church, and even more, because it recognizes the Catholic ministry as valid,—a recognition refused to the ministry of other Protestant churches. The service in the Episcopal Church at West Point, styled 'chapel,' and conducted by the Episcopal priest, styled 'chaplain,' is distinctly Episcopal, and only that.

"West Point regulations compel cadets to attend this service unless they sign a statement that they wish to 'attend some other place of worship', on the ground of 'their religious or conscientious objections.' Thus they are forced to listen to this Episcopal clergyman as, through strict adherence to his priestly dress and to his church forms and canons, he inculcates the constant lesson of the lofty claims of his church. This year the naval cadets have been prohibited, by order, from attending services in Annapolis except on communion days, when they must obtain a special permit to do so, although the churches of Annapolis are within ten minutes' walk, and although there is at the Navy Yard only a Roman Catholic church and a government chapel at which the Episcopal service is used.

"Is it any wonder that a very large part of the commissioned officers of the army, who are church members at all, are Roman Catholics and Protestant Episcopalians? They go to West Point, many of them, with no decided religious preferences, to be subjected by military regulation to the services of a single faith. Nothing is more natural, so far as they become church members at all, than that they should fall into the ways of either the Roman Catholic or the Protestant Episcopal Church. That few of them belong to any of the other churches, that a number of them are Roman Catholics, and a still larger number Episcopalians, is largely due to this fact.

"But many of them, thus compelled to attend this lengthy ritualistic service, leave the academy with a feeling of repulsion to all religious services. They suppose themselves to have been guaranteed freedom of worship by the Constitution of the United States, and they resent this compulsory church attendance as interference with their freedom; and they are often heard to date their indifference to all church going to this treatment at West Point.

"Are chaplains appointed to the army because it is in the government service? Then why keep up mere appearances by having so few chaplains that not more than one third of the army are within reach of them at any given time? General Sherman wrote a letter, in 1882, concerning army chaplains, in which he speaks of the nearly one hundred posts, with only thirty chaplains to occupy them, and says, 'Of course, the whole system is a farce, and meant to be so.' This is true; and the fewness of their number proves it to be true. It is a relic of a state-church system, and as such, with its paucity of numbers, is, indeed, 'a farce, and meant to be so.' But if the army is provided with chaplains because in government service, why not thus provide for the thousands in the departments in Washington and in the postal service?

"The army, as a whole, does not want chaplains. See 'Gospel Work Among United States Soldiers,' page 42 (the United States Army Aid Association, 82 Nassau St., New York), where the matter is fully stated by a chaplain, who says, 'The idea of having chaplains does not come from the army.' Why, then, violate the voluntary principle by forcing an institution of this sort on the army, leaving it no choice?"

Keeping the Sabbath.

BY C. H. KESLAKE.

CHRISTIAN experience is personal experience. The aim of the gospel is "Christ in you, the hope of glory." The great commission of Christ to his disciples was: "Preach the gospel to every creature." In this connection Christ said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and he encouraged his disciples with the blessed assurance, "Lo, I am with you alway." Wherever they should go and preach, there would be the "all power" to accompany the word spoken.

When Christ thus commissioned his disciples, there was the power of the whole Roman Empire to oppose their progress. There was no arm of the state upon which they could rely, had they been so disposed.

But before taking up the gospel work they must tarry at Jerusalem until they should be endued with power from on high—until they should receive the power of the Holy Ghost. If this power should not be sufficient for the work before them, then it must become a hopeless task; for there is none greater in the whole universe.

But the apostles found it abundantly sufficient. They were to fight "a good fight;" they were enabled to finish their course, to "keep the faith." What if the multitudes on every hand did not believe as they believed;—did not do as they did? What if the whole Roman Empire was against them? They were Christians; and that meant to each one individually just as though there was not another soul to keep him company, that there was abundant power in Jesus Christ to enable him to do as Christians ought to do.

According to the promise of our Saviour, what was possible for a Christian back there would be possible for Christians at this present time. The requirements and the conditions are precisely the same.

But there has come a change. At the State Convention of Christian Endeavorers recently held in Paterson, N. J., Rev. Dr. Burrell solemnly, seriously told his fellow Endeavorers that unless everybody was compelled to keep the Sabbath (by which he meant Sunday) he could not keep it. Why not? Has Christ changed? Has the gospel lost any of its power? Is the Holy Spirit less able to work upon human hearts and to strengthen them as in apostolic times? Blessed be God, there is no change in any of these. The change is in man.

What does this statement of Dr. Burrell mean when analyzed? He says, "My right to Sabbath-observance depends upon a law for Sabbath observance for all. If others do not keep it, I can't."

Sabbath-breaking is a sin. The remedy for sin is Jesus Christ. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. 1:21. The only way Jesus can save us from our sins is to save us from sinning. If he can save us from committing one sin, he can save us from committing some other sin. If he can save us from committing the sin of theft, or of taking the name of the Lord in vain, he is able to save us from the sin of Sabbath-breaking.

That Christ is qualified to save us from sinning he has abundantly proven. All the temptation to sin—Sabbath-breaking included—Christ has met and overcome, for "he was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin."

Nor is this all. He has measured the full strength of each temptation. Satan expended the full force of each one upon Christ.

Furthermore, Jesus met them in our flesh. What he did once he can do again. So we read that "what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the requirements (R. V. margin) of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

This is true. God did send his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh. And in that way he did condemn sin in the flesh. And as certainly as he did that, so certainly will the requirements of the law be fulfilled in those who walk after the Spirit.

But let it be remembered that when Christ did this, "he was in the likeness of sinful flesh." In other words, in order that the requirements of the law might be fulfilled in us, Christ must be in us. Back there he was in our flesh all the time. Down here he must be in our flesh all the time.

Let it be remembered, too, that when Christ did all this, he was met with the fiercest opposition. The same conditions that exist now existed then. And further, he did it all in our flesh with all the rest opposing him, and did it as effectually as though there were no opposition. That being so, he is just as able to live in me now and keep me from sin, as though there were not another soul in the whole wide world. He is therefore able to save a soul from breaking the Sabbath while all the rest are breaking it, as though there were nobody else on earth to break the Sabbath.

Why, then, is it that Dr. Burrell and those who believe with him are not able to keep the Sabbath while others are breaking it? The answer is plain. "Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils: they have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." Jer. 2:12, 13.

The power of God is infinite. He is so great, and his presence so all-pervading, that in his sight the nations of earth are but as drops in a bucket, and they are counted as the small dust of the balance. Isa. 40:15. It therefore cannot make much difference whether he deals with one individual or with the whole race of mankind together. If he cannot save a soul from sin, and thus from Sabbath-breaking, while all others are opposed, he cannot save anybody even though there be no opposition. If this be true, there is no salvation in Jesus Christ, and his name as a misnomer.

Now if I cannot keep the Sabbath without there being a law compelling everybody else to keep it, then in that thing the State is the saviour.

But why then not go the whole distance? If the State is capable of saving a soul from the sin of Sabbath-breaking, it is capable of saving him from all other sins. What need of Christ then? What need of the Holy Spirit?

But Christ is able to save, and to the uttermost, from the sin of Sabbath-breaking. The State is not. That being so, why look to the State for help? Why not to Christ?

The Law of Liberty.

BY A. T. ROBINSON.

So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. James 2:12.

JAMES here speaks of the law of the ten commandments, which he calls "the royal law," or the law of the great King. This is evident in that he quotes two of the precepts of that law. See verses 8-11. Why is this called the law of liberty? What is liberty? The child will answer, "The right to do as I please." It is evident, however, that to this there must be some limitations. I might please to do something which might justly displease many others. My liberty would then, in this sense, mean their slavery. It is evident that liberty, in its truest sense, must be a blessing which is possible to every one at the same time, and not to a few only, and that at the expense of the many. There must be recognized, therefore, some boundary lines of right between man and man, else liberty is impossible.

The Bible, in several places, represents the law of God as a hedge or fence. What is a hedge or fence?—What but a boundary line of right between two individuals? It says, "You must not come over this side to infringe my right, and I must not go over on that side to infringe yours." Just such a hedge, just such a boundary line of right, is each one of the ten precepts. This is not more true of the last six commandments than of the first four, but it is more apparent. "Thou shalt not steal." That means that you must not step over the line to take what is mine, and I must not take what is yours. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." "Thou shalt not kill." These two precepts fence in or guard the sacred rights to families and to life. "Thou shalt not bear false witness." This guards the right to reputation, and also to property. These are rights between man and man.

Even so between God and man there are rights. It is God's right to have the supreme love and worship of every human creature, for he made us "for his pleasure," and his pleasure is our love. It is man's right, also, to worship the true God. He must, from his nature, worship something; but who, knowing the true God, with his infinite tenderness and love, would worship idols? God is infinitely above every human conception of him, and he seeks ever to lift us into higher conceptions, and unite us more closely to one another, by uniting us all to himself. But an image is only a creed in marble, seeking to make permanent the present conception of him, and robbing men of the right to walk in the dawning light. Taking his name in vain, also can do naught but rob that name of its sacredness, and of its mighty power to uplift the soul and set it free.

But how shall I in few words speak of the fourth precept? God, who created all things, has a right to set apart and sanctify what he will unto himself. He has chosen to set apart and sanctify the seventh day of each week. He has made it a weekly memorial of the fact that the only God worthy of worship, the only being in the universe who has a right to command the consciences of men, is the Creator. All history proves that when men seek to command the consciences of other men, the result is always to enslave the soul, and to bind it in priestly fetters, and tether it to stationary and dying creeds. But God, the Creator, commands the soul but to uplift it and set it free. He who worships the Creator only finds an infinity of beauty, which he cannot fathom, in every flower at his feet. Flower, and tree, and earth, and star, and sun, each made by him, and each touched with his infinity, are so many stepping-stones by which the soul mounts to God, and learns never to confine itself by any creed from learning more of him. Who cannot see that here is the very guard and guide to liberty and freedom, and that all men, had they not been deceived, and robbed of their rights, would have rejoiced in his holy day? God's law, then, states the very principles of liberty. It marks out the boundary line of right between God and man and between man and man, a boundary line which must be recognized else liberty is impossible to intelligent beings, either in this world or in any other.

But while these boundary lines of right must be recognized, else liberty is impossible, there is still a kind of slavery in being compelled to recognize them against our wills. So God does not compel us. He made us, and he leaves us free—as free to do wrong as to do right, seeking all the while, however, by his infinite love, through the new covenant, to write these principles in our hearts. See Jer. 31:33; Heb. 8:10. When that law is written by the finger of divine love, not on tables of stone merely, but on the fleshy tables of the heart, then we with Jesus can say, "I delight to do thy will, O God; yea, thy law is within my heart."

When a man is free to do what he delights to do, and delights to do what will make him free, he has perfect liberty. This is the liberty of the angels, and of all the sons of God. It is the result of the "perfect law of liberty" being perfectly written in the heart. When this is accomplished, all the redeemed will throughout eternity enjoy perfect liberty to do what they please, because they please to do just what is in harmony with liberty and joy. Fruit is an easy growth, the result not of effort and struggle, but of indwelling life. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." Gal. 5:22,23. Such are free, and can do the things that they would. See verse 17, compared with verses 22 and 23. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness" to such as thus believe. Rom. 10:4. The law commands them no more, simply because it is no more an external law. It has become instead the inner, living, actuating principle of the whole being. Ah, then, there is joy and privilege in keeping God's commandments, not duty merely. The good stepmother does her "duty" by the wayward boy. She will not turn him out-of-doors, because she knows people will say, "That is what you might expect of a stepmother," and she has resolved to do her duty. This is obedience to law. Could she but wake some morning and know that she was indeed his mother, and feel her heart thrilling with the unspeakable tenderness of a mother's love, she would be free. Love and privilege would have taken the place of duty. Others might say, "She makes a slave of herself for the child," but she knows that she is enjoying the perfect liberty to do just that which gives her the most pleasure.

May it please God to write his perfect law of liberty in all our hearts, that we, too, may be free as he is free. This he will do if we submit to him, saying with Jesus, "Not my will, but thine be done."

Sunday Bicycling in New Jersey.

THE latest "turn of the wheel" in the effort to discover the meaning and application of the Sunday law in New Jersey, brings up the discovery that Sunday bicycling, so lately discouraged by several court decisions, is right in New Jersey after all. The law under which it is considered to be justified, is the following, passed in 1893:—

"It shall not be unlawful for any person or corporation, on the Christian Sabbath, the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, to print, publish, and sell newspapers, to sell and deliver milk, or to walk, ride or drive for recreation, and to hire horses and carriages or other conveyance for riding or driving."

It ought to be apparent to thinking people that the effort to secure Sunday observance by law only tends to obscurity and uncertainty so far as concerns its application, and confers no dignity, but rather the reverse, upon law in general.

AN authority on "Christian citizenship" says that "the Christian citizens of the United States can no more afford to be apathetic in the face of existing political corruption, than the health authorities of Southern cities dare tolerate filth in the streets and alleys while confronted by the yellow fever plague."

* * *

It is no new thing to say that Christians cannot afford to be apathetic. The Word of God—the Christian's guide-book—makes this fact plain upon every page. "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter 5:8)—this and many similar admonitions from the volume of inspiration are familiar to the Christian's ears. But "Christian citizenship" vigilance means something a little different from this; that is, something which has to do with political corruption,—a thing which has until recently, been supposed to be somewhat out of the line of the Christian's education and work.

* * *

THE Christian's warfare, as set forth in that Word upon which Christianity is based, is first a warfare against corruption lurking in his own heart, and then against the abounding corruption in the world without. And "corruption," to him, is anything that is a transgression of the divine law. Now suppose that Christians are busily waging this warfare against corruption, is there any necessity for calling their attention to "political corruption?"

* * *

WHAT does such a call mean, anyway? Does it mean that Christians have become apathetic as Christians? or does it mean that Christians are remiss in their duty if they do not engage in a crusade against political corruption, in addition to their regular warfare, as Christians, against sin?

* * *

REFERRING again to the inspired volume, we learn that to "fear God and keep his commandments" is the "whole duty of man" (Eccl. 12:13), and that "pure religion" is "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1:27. We learn also that the followers of Christ—Christians—are commissioned to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature (Mark 16:15), and that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned (verse 16). But in all this there is nothing that points out the supposed duty of purging the land from "political corruption."

* * *

WE learn further that the Christian goes forth to his warfare clad in a certain armor and equipped with certain weapons. It might be interesting to note what part of this is adapted to warfare against political corruption. In the sixth chapter of Ephesians we find this exhortation given: "Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Verses 14-17. Thus equipped, the Christian is clad in the "whole armor of God." Verse 11.

* * *

LET it be noticed that there is but one offensive weapon in this equipment, and that is "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Whatever attack therefore is to be made by the Christian upon corruption, must be made with this weapon. All the rest of his armament is adapted only for defense.

* * *

Is this weapon sufficient for all the requirements of the Christian warfare? Is it powerful enough to accomplish every work that can ever devolve upon the Christian to perform? For answer we may quote the words of the psalmist: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. . . . Let all the earth fear the Lord; let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him. For he spake, and it was; he commanded, and it stood fast." Ps. 33:6-9. As we know of no greater exhibition of might than that which brought into existence the heavens and the earth, we may safely conclude that the word of the Lord is powerful enough for any undertaking which can properly fall to the Christian's lot upon the earth.

* * *

WHAT, then, about the supposed Christian duty of driving out political corruption? Can this be done by the Word of God? If it can, well and good; but if not, it is certainly not because the undertaking requires more power than the Word of God contains.

* * *

No; it is not power that is lacking in this divine implement of warfare. Is it, then, a design of Providence that the Christian warfare shall include a fight against political corruption? If so, then the "sword of the Spirit" must be adapted to this task.

BUT it is evident that no such adaptation exists. Political people recognize this fact. It is not proposed to make any use of the "sword of the Spirit" in accomplishing the intended purification. And how is it proposed that this shall be done? Oh, it is to be done by turning all the "rascals" out of office. And this will be done—by the Word of God? Oh, no; but by the ballot. "Above all, taking the ballot, which is the instrument of political righteousness," is an alteration which the "Christian citizenship" theory requires to be made in the text quoted from St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians. But if such an alteration were in harmony with the mind of Omniscience, the text would have been so worded at the first.

* * *

As Christians, we prefer to take simply the "sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God," and fight our battles with that. That is so great and so mighty a weapon that we are not able to carry another weapon without letting that one drop. Moreover, we find plenty of scope for the utmost activity with this weapon alone. It was by this that Jesus Christ overcame the devil in his temptation in the wilderness; and we believe his example to be the best one for Christians of this day. The devil has not grown apathetic, and Christians who are resisting his temptations and assaults will have no chance to become so. Indeed, with the Word of God abiding in the heart, apathy is impossible. There will be, on the contrary, a manifestation of all that Christian zeal and activity which marks the life of Christ.

* * *

A SINGULAR humiliation has befallen Pope Leo; he has just figured as the losing party in a lawsuit in the Italian courts. The suit was to obtain control of a church that was being built to commemorate the pope's recent jubilee. The work of collecting funds and building the church was in the hands of a French abbe, and on account of alleged mismanagement by the latter the pope decided to take the business out of his hands and intrust it to a commission, headed by a cardinal. The abbe brought the matter into the courts, where it has been decided that Pope Leo must not only surrender the church to the abbe, but must pay the costs of the litigation, which are by no means light.

* * *

THE pope, it is understood, will even matters up by placing the church under interdict and excommunicating the abbe.

* * *

AT the opening of the public schools for the school year in New York City recently, it was found that the applicants for admission far exceeded the number which the capacity of the schools would accommodate. The papal church authorities saw in this situation an opportunity for missionary work, and, as usual, they rose to the emergency, with an offer to turn the parochial schools over to be used as public schools, provided an hour each day be devoted to religious instruction. The offer has not yet been accepted.

* * *

OF course it is very good of the Catholic authorities thus to come to the aid of the metropolis in the matter of providing for the education of its youth,—from a standpoint which does not take into account the evil principle of combining religious with secular instruction in the public schools. To secure the establishment of this principle in the United States, any church which would profit by it as would the papacy, could afford to be quite generous.

* * *

IT is to be hoped, however, that the city government, bearing in mind the axiom that two wrongs do not make right, will set about remedying the evil by providing such an extension of the public school system as will be adequate to the demands that are made upon it.

Enjoined from Preaching the Gospel.

"Union Signal," September 9.

THE latest encroachment of the "blanket injunction" covers the preaching of the gospel! The Rev. Mr. Wiley, of the Methodist Church, is enjoined from holding Sunday services and week-day religious meetings on or near the property of the Worthington Coal and Coke Company in West Virginia. Truly the judges could not emphasize more effectively than they are doing the dangers attending government by injunction, nor aid in a more practical manner in securing its abolishment.

Sunday Golf in Massachusetts.

"New York Journal," October 12.

BOSTON, Oct. 11.—Golf as a Sunday sport is tabooed at Watertown. For some weeks past the police have received complaints from residents that they object to the games being played on Sunday in the vicinity of their homes. Sunday morning the police proceeded to the fields. Just before noon nine golfers, said to be Harvard students, were placed under arrest.

Bail was furnished and the party left for home. It is expected that the case will come up in the Waltham Police Court some day this week.

* * *

LAST summer, the pope favored Queen Victoria with an autograph letter. Now, we are informed, the queen has returned the compliment, requesting the pontiff to kindly interfere in Irish politics, to secure the "pacification" of Ireland.

Why It Concerns the Youth.

THE principles of civil and religious liberty are principles which are concerned in the life of every individual, in youth as well as in later years.

These principles are violated by the children in their conduct toward one another quite as frequently as by older people. It is in the period of childhood and youth that people learn either to respect the rights of their fellow beings or to disregard them.

The despots who have cursed the earth with their injustice and oppression, from the king on his throne who ruled over an empire, down to the day laborer whose tyrannical sway extended over only his own unfortunate family, have only put in practice in their despotism that disregard of human rights which they learned when they were young.

The inborn selfishness of human nature shows itself at a very early age; and it is only this natural selfishness that has caused all the oppression and persecution that the world ever saw.

The boy who wants to "boss" the affairs in which his youthful associates take part on an equality with himself, will naturally, as a man, want to "boss" the affairs of his fellow men.

The boy who shows a disposition to regard himself as entitled to the "lion's share" of good things among his young associates, will as a man be ready to deny to his fellow men the privileges and rights which he claims for himself.

The boy who rules over his playmates because he is bigger and stronger than they are, individually, will as a man have very faint conceptions of right independent of might. He will believe in the rule of the majority in everything, as though the minority had no rights which the majority were bound to respect.

All this applies equally, of course, to young people who are not boys. The girl who grows up without having learned to respect the rights of other people, will, as a wife and especially as a mother in the training of her children, exert an influence more baneful to the cause of liberty than would be possible to one of the opposite sex.

There is nothing more beautiful in human conduct than the recognition, by those of tender years, of the God-given rights of their young associates, in the spirit of the Golden Rule.

This is true politeness—the politeness which is based on principle, rather than on policy. Principle is to the character what a fine grain is to wood. It renders it susceptible of a natural polish which otherwise it could not possibly have. The politeness of the policy man is like a veneer polish on the surface of soft wood. It is not a part of his natural self.

The Lion with Eagle's Wings.

"THIS seems to be a very strange chapter, mama. I've been studying the first few verses as you told me to. Now listen, this is what the prophet says, 'I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea. And four great beasts came up from the sea.'

"Now, mama, I know the Bible tells us that the four beasts represent four great kingdoms, but does it tell what the wind and these stand for?" asked Charlie Ross, as he came for his promised talk.

"Water, in prophecy, stands for multitudes of people. Rev. 17:15 says: 'The waters which thou sawest . . . are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.' There are other passages that lead us to the same conclusion. Daniel writes of an army as 'a flood that shall overflow and pass over,' and in another place a nation is spoken of as a sea,—'the waters of the Assyrian Sea.'

"There seems a peculiar fitness in this symbol. If you ever cross the ocean, you will see it more clearly. The whole world of men and nations is like a tossing sea. It is true that in the sea there are currents, tides, and streams that have a steady course, just as in the tossing sea of humanity there are servants of God who are guided into peaceful courses; but the mass of the world is like a tossing sea."

"I know one text that says, 'The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.' Well, what is the wind for?"

"Wind is an element of strife in nature, and the Bible interprets it as a symbol of war. Now, let us look at these symbols as they are interpreted, and we have war raging among the people, and resulting in the rise and fall of four great kingdoms. You have studied enough of history to know that is the way nations do rise and fall. As I think of the nations to-day, they seem to me like so many beasts waiting to spring upon each other."

"O, yes; I remember a picture where Russia was represented as a bear reaching out its paw over Turkey. And I remember seeing Great Britain represented by a lion. That reminds me," said Charlie, "of the next verse here."

"Read it."

"The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.' This, mama, was the first kingdom named in the prophecy."

"Yes; and it was lion-like. Tell me some of the characteristics of the lion."

"Well, the lion is the king of beasts. I read yesterday that a lion has both good and bad qualities. Of course, it is savage, and has a very frightful roar. It does most of its prowling by night; but the father lion takes care of his mate and cubs, and is often faithful and sociable. But all the other beasts have to give way before the lion. This lion here has eagle's wings. That is rather queer; what does it mean?"

"Well, before I answer, I will ask you to tell me about an eagle."

"The eagle is the king of birds. It is a bird of prey, and can even stare at the sun. The eagle is very strong, and is capable of enduring long flights."

"That's good, Charlie, and I hope the talks we are having will spur you up to study not only history and the Bible, but to find out all you can of the beasts and birds used as symbols."

"Now, what do the eagle's wings indicate? You may read what I have marked in Hab. 1:6-8. 'For, lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation. . . . They shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat.' Here is a nation described in the act of conquest, as an eagle flying for its prey. The wings indicate the swiftness of the conquests of this lion-like beast."

"Well, now, mama, what was the first kingdom that is represented by this first beast?"

"Can you tell what was the first city built after the flood?"

"Let me see if I can find about it. Here's the flood, —oh, here it is. Why it was in the plains of Shinar. They said, 'Go to, let us build a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven.' It was the city in which was the tower of Babel."

"Now, Charlie, turn to the map. Right along the Euphrates was the plain, and the first kingdom noticed by prophecy was called Babylon. From this grew the wonderful kingdom represented by the lion with eagle's wings. In many things it surpassed any other kingdom on earth. God has spoken of this kingdom as 'the golden kingdom,' and in the second chapter it was represented as 'the head of gold.' In another place in Isaiah it is called 'the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency,' 'the glory of kingdoms.' Please read the first verse of the first chapter of Daniel, and see who was king at the time it was represented under this symbol."

Charlie read, "In the first year of the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, came Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon."

"That will do, Charlie. Who was king of Babylon?"

"Nebuchadnezzar."

"Under this king it was represented as a lion with eagle's wings. In Nebuchadnezzar's day it reached the height of its power. The first chapter opens with an account of the conquest of the Jews, and their captivity in the land of Babylon. Among the captives were Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who afterward served to bring out still clearer the beast-like characteristics. But before we go into that part of the subject, I would like to tell you a little of the wonders of Babylon, to show you how apt was this figure of its majesty.

"The city of Babylon, or the capital of the kingdom, was a city that seems always like a dream of beauty and power to me. It was laid out in a perfect square, and was surrounded with walls three hundred and fifty feet high and eighty-seven feet thick. That would be as high again as our church steeples, and its depth was capable of giving space to four of our ordinary dwellings. Twenty-five gates of brass, with as many watch towers, adorned the wall, and four large chariots could ride abreast on its top. From the top of the walls one could look over onto a most beautiful city, whose streets were one hundred and fifty feet wide, paved with polished marble, from which was reflected its stately palaces. The king's palace was eight miles in circumference. In the city were large temples; one was the tower of Babel, known as the temple of Bel—another name for Baal; for the Babylonians were self-worshippers. The city was built on either side of the Euphrates, and its parts were connected by bridges that were closed away from travel at night by gates of brass. Every house formed an enclosed court in which was a beautiful garden, and beside this one of the seven wonders of the world was there."

"Oh, I know," said Charlie,—"the hanging gardens."

"Yes. They were built up until their tops reached the height of the wall."

"How I should have liked to have been on the top of the wall!" said Charlie. "But what about its being a beast, and how else did it show its lion-like character?"

"Well, it subjected the people by force, and then preyed upon its captives, and especially showed its beast-like character in the way it enforced Baal worship, or even in seeking to enforce the worship of the true God."

"The Lord had given Nebuchadnezzar a dream, which Daniel had been enabled to interpret to him. It was just as convincing as was the fire Elijah called down from heaven of the fact that there was a living God. Through the four young men in his courts, he had repeated evidence of the truth, and he knew they were ambassadors of the King of kings. You know it is an insult to a government to insult its ambassador; but Nebuchadnezzar set up a golden image—"

"Oh, I know, mama, and he was angry because these young men would not bow down and worship, and thus break God's law, and he had them cast into the fiery furnace."

"Yes, and when he saw the form of the Son of God in the furnace, and the young men walking in the flame, he was frightened, and had them delivered. But his heart was still unchanged. With a great show of righteousness, he then made a law that everybody in his kingdom should refrain from saying anything against the God of heaven, on penalty of death."

"But, mama, wasn't that right?"

"No, Charlie. In doing this, he put himself in the place of God. This law, in the sight of heaven, was worthless; for God is a spirit, and those who worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth. No worship compelled by law is acceptable to Him who sees the very heart."

"I see it," said Charlie. "What he ought to have done was to have given his subjects full liberty to worship according to the dictates of their own consciences, as the Constitution of our nation does. Our government is all right, isn't it?"

"Every government is all right as a civil affair, till it goes back on the principles of liberty, and forgets that it exists for the protection of our natural rights. Well, Charlie, here is Rollin's Ancient History. I want you to read up all you can about Babylon. In our next talk, we'll study the change that came over the lion that was lifted up as a man and had a man's heart given unto it."

F. B.

A "Christian" Government.

WILLIE.—Mama, is the United States a Christian nation?

MAMA.—Why—I suppose it is, Willie; but why do you want to know that?

Willie.—Well, our school-teacher said it was, but I've read the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution all through, and couldn't find anything about it in either one (Pause). Oh, I know,—I'll find out what church it goes to.

Mama.—It doesn't go to any church, Willie.

Willie.—How can it be Christian if it don't ever go to church? Don't it belong to any church?

Mama.—Not that I ever heard of, Willie.

Willie.—I guess that's what Bill Meeker meant the other day when I asked him what church he belonged to. He looked at me rather funny, and said he belonged to the United States church. That meant he didn't go to church at all.

Mama.—Very likely.

Willie.—Seems to me, mama, the United States sets a bad example by being Christian and not joining any church.

Mama.—If it should join a church, Willie, it would make a union of church and state, and we don't want that in this country.

Willie.—Then it can't be Christian at all without setting a bad example.

Mama.—It would be a very bad example indeed if it should join a church.

Willie.—But it's right to be a Christian, mama?

Mama.—Why, certainly, my boy; that is a very necessary thing for everybody.

Willie.—Well, this looks rather mixed up. It's right to be a Christian, and yet this government can't be Christian without setting a bad example. Fact of the matter is, I guess, that Christianity don't belong to governments, even if my teacher did say so.

Mama.—Well, Willie, I wouldn't wonder if you were right.

If the charge that Americans are a race of dyspeptics be well founded, it is also true that here have scientific research and business energy provided the best dietetic means for overcoming the evil. For that large class of people who suffer from weak digestion, acidity of the stomach, and constipation, the "Gluten Flour," prepared by Farwell & Rhines, of Watertown, N. Y., supplies in a form that is easy of assimilation food for the brain, nerve, bone, and muscle. The diet based on "Gluten Flour" is varied by the use of bread, biscuit, gems, rolls, and grid-dle cakes made from it, and in making which much less of this specially prepared flour is required than when ordinary flour is used. As a food for children and nursing mothers it has been found of the highest value by medical practitioners who have prescribed it. When simply prepared with milk in the form of porridge or pudding, it is delicate and strengthening nutriment in cases of severe stomach troubles. It is as nearly free from starch as it is possible to make a flour suitable for general use. The health preparations of Messrs. Farwell & Rhines have been on the market for nearly twenty years, are unlike all other products, and have been highly indorsed by physicians and the public at home and abroad. The same firm makes "Barley Crystals," a preparation of the heart of the barley grain, from which indigestible cellulose and fibrous matter have been eliminated so that "Barley Crystals" is 99.1 per cent. pure food. Another of their famous products is "Special Diabetic Flour." Pamphlets describing their cereal products, adapted for use in various special cases, and free samples, will be sent in response to inquiries.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy, Per Year, - - - - $1.00.

" " Six months, - - - - .50

" " Three " - - - - .25

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond Street, New York

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES...

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

(Trade Mark Registered.)

GLUTEN FLOUR

For Dyspepsia, Constipation, Diabetes and Obesity. Unlike all other Flours, because it contains no bran and little starch—wholesome, acid and flatulence. Nutritious and palatable in highest degree. Unrivalled in America or Europe.

PAMPHLET AND SAMPLE FREE.

Write to FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N.Y.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond st., New York City.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND Complete Vest-
Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,000 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

A Greek-English Lexicon TO The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELDON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., LITT. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of—Harvard University.—

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond Street, New York City.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 14 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required. BLUINE CO., Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

The Gospel Primer. A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE25

Address this Office.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"It is the Grandest Book
I Ever Read,"
"Christ Our Saviour,"

By MRS. E. G. WHITE.

WE have in this book the life of "Christ Our Saviour" from his birth to ascension, given in simple and direct language. It is printed in large, clear type, and is finely illustrated by engravings made especially for it. The simplicity with which this "Old, Old Story" is told, the aptness of the illustrations, and the general appearance of the better bound styles will attract and hold the reader's attention to the very close. It makes an excellent birthday or holiday gift to a friend, either young or old. 160 large octavo pages, bound as follows, and will be sent postpaid at prices given.

Presentation edition, two colors, vellum cloth, embossed in jet, green and gold, beveled edges, gilt top.....$1.25
Fine English cloth, embellished aluminum cover......75
Cloth back, board covers, in colors......50
Heavy tag-board covers. Bible Students' Library, No. 141......35

Also published in board and cloth at 50c and 75c in German, Swedish, Danish, and Spanish languages.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

OAKLAND, CAL. KANSAS CITY, MO.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion, The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion, Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion, Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia, pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process, The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

A Holiday Subscription Book, A POLITICAL HISTORY

Of the great questions culminating in the CIVIL WAR in the words of ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLASS.

555 Pages.

Cloth $1.75.

The work is entitled "Political Debates and Speeches of Lincoln and Douglas," and contains a complete report of their speeches and debates. The burning words of these great orators are of absorbing interest both to those who have lived through the exciting scenes pictured out, and those who know them merely as history. There can be nothing better placed in the hands of the rising generation than a book presenting, in an attractive way, the principles on which this government is founded. Efforts are now being made to overthrow those principles, hence it is important that we become intelligent regarding them. The work is a great assistance to that end.

Agents Wanted Everywhere. Liberal Terms.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

A NEW TRACT CATALOGUE.

"Descriptive Catalogue of the Bible Students', Apples of Gold, and Religious Liberty Libraries" is the title of this 36 page catalogue.

It gives a pithy description of each tract and pamphlet in the above Libraries, together with their size and price. It will greatly assist the reader to select such numbers as he may desire to read and circulate; and may be obtained FREE by addressing the Pacific Press Publishing Company, Oakland, Cal.; 39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.; 18 W. 5th St., Kansas City, Mo.; or Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich.; Atlanta, Ga.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS,
slightly damaged, offered at half price.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

A MARVEL IN BIBLE MAKING.

Large Type S. S. Teachers'

SELF-PRONOUNCING COMBINATION BIBLE.

Containing the King James and the Revised Versions on the Same Page. Showing in Simple Form all Changes, Additions and Omissions, and Enabling all Readers to See at a Glance wherein the Two Versions Differ.

Both Versions Combined Without Duplicating.

The King James Version, set in full and conforming exactly to the Oxford Teachers' Edition, and, wherever a change occurs, the letters r. v., referring to a foot-note at the bottom of the page, showing the reading as it appears in the Revised Version. Thus, in the same book, we have both the King James and the Revised Versions, complete and intact, without materially increasing the size of the volume or reducing the size of the type. Both printed together in the same column, showing the differences at a glance, and enabling the reader to practically read both at one and the same time; or, in other words, consuming in the comparative reading of the two texts not more than one-half the time required in the old way.

EITHER VERSION ALONE OR BOTH TOGETHER.

The great point of excellence in this arrangement is that while it enables one to read both Versions in almost exactly the same time, it does not mar, or in any way hinder, the reading of the King James Version alone and independently, where one does not care to refer to the revisions.

How to Read the Combination Bible.

Below is part of page 608 of our Combination Bible. The following Key shows how it is to be read:

KEY—The first RV on page 608 appears in verse 37 of the 9th chapter, before "dominion." In the King James Version the reading is "dominion over our bodies," etc. By referring to the foot-notes it will be seen that the word "dominion" is changed to "power." Hence the Revised Version reads "power over our bodies," etc.

In the 38th verse the King James reads, "because of all this;" by reference to foot of page it will be seen that the Revised Version reads, "yet for all this."

In verse 28 there is an RO, which denotes an omission. Refer to the foot-notes and "(having)" will be found. Every omission is placed in a parenthesis in the foot-notes, and the Revised Version in this instance reads, "every one that had knowledge and understanding."

Thus it is seen that the Revised Version is easily read in connection with the King James Version. The system is so simple and so easily understood that no reader finds any difficulty in comparing one version with the other.

Specimen of Type used in the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Size of Page 5 x 7 3/4 inches.

They that sealed the covenant. NEHEMIAH, X. The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} L^evites, and ^{rv} priests, ² seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 29 The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr-shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-g-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,

2 ^c Sēr-g-lī'ah, Āz-g-rī'ah, Jēr-g-mī'ah,

3 Pāsh'ūr, Ām-g-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah,

4 Hāt'tīsh, Shēb-g-nī'ah, Māl'lūch,

5 Hā'rim, Mēr-g-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah,

6 Dān'jēl, Gīn'nē-thon, Bā'rūch,

7 Mē-shūl'lam, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'g-mīn,

B. C. 445.

1 Deut. 23.

2 2 Kin. 23. 3.

3 Chr. 29.

10; 34. 31.

Ezra 10. 3.

ch. 10. 29.

2 Heb. are at the sealing,

or, sealed.

h ch. 13. 1.

3 Heb. at the sealings,

ch. 9. 38.

4 ch. 8. 3.

5 Or, the governor.

6 ch. 1. 1.

7 See ch. 12.

1-21.

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{ro} having understanding;

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō-seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

30 And that we would not give ^t our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

31 ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Jeshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nethinim,—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—

The Bible Closed.

BINDING.

Imperial Seal, Tuck Edges, known as the "Divinity Circuit," Leather Lined, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges.

This is a regular

$8 Bible,

Something unique.

and a good one.

It will be mailed postpaid

on receipt of only

$4.00.

Agents Wanted.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 43.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 4, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THE principles of right government are based upon unselfishness.

THE goodness of God cannot be framed in a creed or a law of man.

NOR all is the gold of true principle that manifests itself in "glittering generalities."

HE only is not an anarchist who is loyal to the eternal law which governs the universe.

IT is a mistake to think that a man has to go into politics in order to serve the state.

THERE is nothing that human nature blossoms out into more readily than Phariseeism.

SHOW me a man who is trying to force other people to keep the Sabbath, and I will show you a man who can't keep the Sabbath himself.

THE man who wants to force people to do right by law has forgotten—if he ever knew it—that the "weightier matters of the law" are justice, mercy, and truth.

CONSIDERING the absolute confidence which the political factions display in the coming success of their opposing candidates at the polls,—which is of course an absolute impossibility,—one is led to reflect that it would be sad indeed if Christianity offered no surer ground of hope and belief than does politics, or so often lured its adherents into "knowing things that are not so."

IT is a mistake for the state to act as though it were the creator of the people, and held their rights at its disposal. The people are the creators of the state.

IF I am not permitted to choose whether I will keep the Sabbath or not, Sabbath-keeping cannot become a part of my nature; for only that can be wrought into my nature which comes through my own consent.

The Test of Loyalty.

THE test of loyalty is one that no person in this world who arrives at the age of accountability can escape. And the test is one of loyalty to law.

But what law? Is it that law which is continually changing with the rise and fall of political parties, or the variations in legislative assemblies? Is there a varying standard of loyalty? It is manifest that such a standard could not serve as a universal test for mankind.

No; the standard is unchanging—the same for all men in all ages—because it is based upon an unchanging and unchangeable law. The only law which changes not is the law of Him who is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever."

The principles of this law come in contact with the daily life of every individual. No one can escape them. And they are the principles of religious liberty. No one, therefore, can stand in the position of a looker-on while the struggle for the preservation of that liberty is in progress. Unconsciously to himself, it may be, but none the less certainly, he is standing under one or the other of the opposing standards; and if not an active participant in the contest now, he is receiving a training which will make him such in days to come.

Jesus Christ, the divine expounder of the law of God, said that "the weightier matters" of that law are justice, mercy, and truth. There can be no loyalty to that law, therefore, without an adherence to the principles of justice and mercy. The Pharisees, to whom Christ addressed these words, held the opposite idea, or at least put the opposite of it into practice. They were the greatest sticklers for "the law," and made a most elaborate formal compliance with it; but at the same time they laid grievous burdens upon other people's shoulders, and cared naught for the welfare and the rights of their fellow men.

It was by displaying the opposite spirit that Jesus Christ manifested his loyalty to the law of God. He came to undo the heavy burdens, to break the yokes under which men were held in bondage, to open the prison doors, to relieve in every way the distress which had become the common lot of humanity. And it is in the same way that loyalty to the divine law will manifest itself to-day.

The movements for "setting other people straight,"—for laying obligations upon their shoulders out of professed regard for "the law," for putting upon them the yoke of Puritan theology and inflicting the penalty of fine or imprisonment upon all who refuse conformity with their ideas, partake of the Pharisaical spirit and not of the spirit of genuine loyalty to law.

It is upon the law of the Sabbath that the Pharisaical spirit fastens itself most readily. For no part of the law were the Pharisees more zealous than for that which commanded Sabbath observance. How frequently they accused Christ of Sabbath-breaking, because he had broken—not the Sabbath, but—their ideas of Sabbath observance. The record of their mistaken zeal in this respect should furnish a warning to others of a later day to beware of any movement which would force people into uniformity in the matter of observing the Sabbath.

Loyalty to the law of God will be manifested in opposition to the spirit of all such movements. Such movements are in the earth to-day, and are rapidly swelling in volume and intensity; and it is in this way that the test will be brought to the people of this day. Let those who would stand for law, stand for the law for which Christ stood, and stand for it as he did. That means that they will manifest the spirit of Christ and not that of the Pharisees. The "weightier matters of the law" are justice, mercy, and truth. Without these, a zeal for the law becomes only a cloak for anarchy.

It was wisely said by Melancthon that God has not made "our knowledge all of a size any more than our bodies," and that therefore people should "be afraid of making the articles of their faith too numerous lest they shortly become heretics themselves by disagreeing with themselves; and should be afraid of making too strict laws for those who differ in judgment on controvertible points, lest they should shortly change their own judgments, and so make a rod for their own backs." The wisdom of that observation has been demonstrated in every case of legislation in behalf of religious customs, rites, or institutions, that there has been in the history of the world.

THE Christian Citizen says, "Except the state believe on Christ and accept and apply his law of righteousness and love as the fundamental law of the land, it cannot be saved."

And the Lord Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved."

Now will the Christian Citizen tell the people how the state can be baptized when it does "believe on Christ?"

Will the Christian Citizen tell the people, in a plain deliberate, and thoughtful way, just what the state is?

Tobacco and Christianity.

MR. E. A. KING, author of "The Cigarette and the Youth," has gathered many facts relative to the use and effects of this most deadly instrument of modern civilization, among which we mention the following:—

"During the fiscal year 1895, the total output of the cigarette companies was 4,042,391,640. During one month nearly 358,000,000 were produced. During the fiscal year 1896, 4,043,798,737 were produced, making an increase of over one million for the year. During the month of October, 458,929,090 were produced. . . . It is stated on good authority that there are nearly 5,000 cigarette smokers in Chicago public schools."

"This is a Christian nation," declares the Supreme Court, and the statement is echoed in many places by pulpit and press. Yes; we are a smoking Christian nation,—four billions and over of cigarettes consumed in a single year by the youth, besides all the tobacco that is manufactured into cigars and smoked in pipes. Very suggestive is smoke of Christianity and all that pertains to it! Is this "Christian nation" to find at last in a realm of smoke its congenial home? An observer might well be pardoned for coming to this conclusion.

"Swearing like pirates, smoking like chimneys, and headed straight for the saloon, go young America by the thousands," says an authority upon the subject of the tobacco habit in this country. And the cigarette habit is the first step in this downward career. And yet our Sunday laws allow the sale of tobacco on Sunday as a necessity, and prohibit the sale of bread! There is nothing to equal the sagacity and fine discernment of a Sunday law.

If steps are to be taken to save this nation and make it Christian, let them be first and foremost in the line of checking this terrible tide of evil that catches its human prey in the very outset of their lives. But what can be done to rescue the children from the tobacco demon while fathers and older brothers and even mothers voluntarily take him into their homes; yes, while these and even ministers of the gospel set the example in the use of the deadly weed?

The trouble with the youth of the country is first of all with those to whom the youth must look for guidance. The trouble with the whole country is not primarily with the bad men, but with the "good" men who, in their ambition to reform others, have become insensible to any needed reformation in themselves.

THE present day theocrats continually ring the changes on the statement that "Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the state and the nation, as well as of the individual." But not one of them spends any time in telling the people just what and where the state and nation would be, if there were no individuals. Yet this is just the point upon which turns their whole contention. Without a plain and distinct exposition of this point, all their words are simply a darkening of counsel without knowledge.

Activity in Time of Peace.

NOT long since we received a communication from a personal friend, who in a kind manner took occasion to suggest that we were setting up men of straw—that as there was no actual persecution going on, why discuss the principles of religious liberty so earnestly as we do?

Many years ago one with keen foresight declared that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." This is just what the SENTINEL believes. When this paper first made its appearance, a short life was predicted for it, because, it was said, the evils it contends against do not exist. True, they were not full grown, but they were in embryo; and almost before the people were aware of it, they had developed into full-grown giants, stalking through the land, showing themselves as living realities. And while there is just for the time being a lull in the direction of active persecution, yet there is no real diminution in the activity of the forces that are behind the movement. Indeed, they are continually gathering strength, and no intelligent, observant individual can affirm that the SENTINEL made its appearance any too soon.

When it is known that a midnight smoldering fire threatens the inmates of a home, shall the alarm not be given for fear of disturbing their peaceful dreams? Indeed it should be given, and in no uncertain tones.

True, there is a little lull just now, but pernicious influences are at work blinding minds as to the true issues at stake; and the SENTINEL wants all the people to know it. It is for this reason that "in times of peace we prepare for war"—not with carnal weapons, but with the dissemination of the principles of civil and religious liberty before the world. It is for this reason, too, that now we are preparing for more aggressive action than ever before; and whenever the opportunity presents, we shall expect our friends everywhere to help along the good work by putting their shoulders to the wheel. We shall be heard from further along this line.

Jeffersonian Principles of Government.

ONE of the four leading candidates for election to the office of mayor of "Greater New York" is conducting his campaign upon the platform of the principles of Jeffersonian democracy. In a recent newspaper interview he gave to a reporter the following forcible statement, contrasting the government of Jefferson's time with that of to-day, as regards its relation to the needs and rights of the people:—

"They [Jeffersonian principles] can be summed up in the statement that a man has the right to do everything he pleases excepting to injure others; that the right use of government is to insure him this liberty, to defend him from injustice, and protect him in enjoying and using all advantages and opportunities which nature has provided.

"The government we have now is a long way from being a government of that kind.

"Jefferson believed that all just government rests on the consent of the governed—that the freest government is the best and most stable.

"We are going astray after the insane and criminal delusion that the best government is a government by force—the greater the force the better.

"If Jefferson were to come to New York to-day, the first thing which would strike him would be the presence here of a class of people who are doing their best to make our armories more impressive and more costly than our public schools.

"Jefferson taught that it is not necessary to kill people in order to govern them. He denied that any government had any right whatsoever to commit such wholesale, systematic, and persistent homicide as had been made the basis of all government up to his day. He asserted that the money which was being put into standing armies, navies, armories, and cannon, should be taken out and put into schools, churches, and colleges.

"When the Tories of his day cried out that this would result in anarchy and denounced him as a Jacobin and a dangerous character, he replied: 'Trust the people!'

"His whole system rests on those four immortal syllables, 'Trust the people.'

"A government which trusts the people will not take it for granted in advance that it will be necessary to shoot large numbers of them in order to maintain property rights. It will reason rather that property rights—the right to earn, to use all natural opportunities to the best advantage, and to enjoy each man the fruits of his own labor and skill—are the most sacred rights of the people, and that only the people themselves are the fit guardians of rights so inestimable.

"A Hazleton massacre would be impossible under a Jeffersonian government. In the first place, the monopolistic and fraudulent abuse of capital responsible for it would be impossible. In the second, honest capital, honestly employed, would no longer have that fear of the people and of the reality of popular government which now inspires such occasional manifestations of monopolistic ferocity as that at Hazleton.

"Jefferson believed, and I believe with him, that the people have the right to bear arms and to organize themselves into militia for their own defense and the defense of their government, but he did not believe in any military organization in the form of militia or otherwise to be used as the basis for a government conducted on the idea that it is necessary to coerce the people and hold them down with the bayonet in order to have good government.

"That is the most insane and wicked delusion the devil ever disseminated on earth. Jefferson thought so, and I am glad to have learned to think with him.

"It was from Jefferson, too, that I learned to believe in the right of the people to the fullest enjoyment of every opportunity nature gives them. His principles force every man who really holds them into active opposition to monopoly wherever it is found; whether it is in the streets of New York, in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, in the prairies of the West, or in the cotton-fields of the South.

"To be a Jeffersonian Democrat is to be ready to give every man his due—first his life in not shooting him in order to govern him; second, his liberty in not locking him up in order to correct his theological or ethical views; third, his right to all the happiness he is capable of enjoying by a full use of every advantage nature has provided for the human race.

"Jefferson thought it preposterous for a few men to claim a right to the ownership of the world, including land and everything else in it they thought worth having, so that they could say to the rest: 'Do as we tell you or get off the earth.'

"He was right. It was preposterous. Nothing could be more so. What the Jeffersonian Democrats propose to do now is to demonstrate it."

But the trouble is that real believers in Jeffersonian principles of government are in a hopeless minority today. And they are about as scarce among the workingmen as among any other class of the people. Jefferson was as far from being a socialist as he was from being a plutocrat.

Demanding and Securing.

FAILING to secure by argument and persuasion what they deem necessary to the future well-being of the country, the clerical advocates of Sunday-rest now declare that they will "demand" what they want. A Methodist minister, in a Sunday-rest convention in a neighboring State, said:—

"We want to touch legislation. We want to go over yonder into the capitol building and sit there among the law-makers with as much serenity and with as much right as do the lobbyists of the great corporations. We want to put our finger on the moral pulse of the legislature until they feel the power of our influence to the extent that they dare not refuse our demands."

This is how many of the advocates of reform (?) legislation hope to secure what they want. And to the shame of many politicians they have no more moral backbone than to yield to such "demands;" indeed the average professional politician is "all things to all men" with a vengeance, when he can reasonably count on their support to further his cause.

A good illustration of this we find in an old copy of the Chicago Daily Post of April 9, 1892, being an interview with a member of the House Committee on the World's Fair,—the particular subject up for discussion being the closing of the gates of the exposition on Sunday:—

"The reason we shall vote for it is, I will confess to you, a fear that, unless we do so, the church folks will get together and knife us at the polls; and—well you know we all want to come back, and we can't afford to take any risks."

"Do you think it will pass the House?"

"Yes; and the Senate, too. We are all in the same boat. I am sorry for those in charge of the Fair; but self-preservation is the first law of nature, and that is all there is about it."

A Striking Admission.

BY W. C. G.

AT the World's W. C. T. U. convention, just closed at Toronto, a letter was received from Lady Henry Somerset, of England, widely known both in Europe and America as an active worker, and vice-president of the union. The following extract from the letter would seem to indicate that this distinguished lady has a clear perception of the animating spirit that has so largely taken possession of her fellow workers in this great organization. After expressing her regret at being unable to be present, she says:—

"Looking back from the vantage ground of the nineteenth century we condemn unhesitatingly the spirit of the inquisitions; and yet if we dissect the motives which prompted those appalling evils, we find that the root principle was not one wholly of evil, but wholly mistaken, namely, that all who differed had to be brought into line for the welfare of the race, and that any means to this end was justifiable; that to hate the individual meant to be loyal to principles that were believed to come from God; and I think that if we examine our motives, we shall find that something of this spirit governs us, and that we, too, feel that where we differ, we may almost claim the spirit of avenging angels. And so I know that in your great gatherings you will sometimes pause to think that 'love suffers long and is kind; love thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth,' and that it may be possible sometimes that those who do not see eye to eye with us are yet acting from motives which are absolutely sincere, motives perhaps, purer, even purer than ours. This is the message that I should like to send across the waters which separate me from my comrades as they meet."

Will this message be heeded? Will the W. C. T. U. continue to forget that it is not only a temperance union but a Christian Temperance Union, in name at least, and that its methods and spirit should be Christlike?

This warning has been repeated from without, many times; now that it comes from within, at the hands of one whose devotion to Christian work cannot be disputed, its effect upon the minds of the more careful and conservative in the organization ought to be apparent in checking the growing tendency on the part of so many of its members toward religious legislation and the spirit of the Inquisition.

Persecution—Past and Prospective.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE persecutions of past ages were the result of the desire of the priests of the dominant church, as they conceived it, to improve the condition of the people. The system of reasoning by which they justified such a course was very simple. The church had come, or thought it had, to the perfection of light and knowledge both as regards this world and the world to come. The church conceived itself to be the divinely appointed teacher of the world. Whatever it thought was best to be done, should be done; and objectors, for the good of the state and community, and for their own good, too, should be compelled, if need be, to do what the church held to be right.

To those resting upon this self-satisfactory basis, all arguments in regard to personal accountability to God and of individual rights in religious matters had no effect. They appealed to infallible authority,—to the Scriptures, which speak of evil doers being rooted out from the earth, and they regarded themselves as the appointed agents of the Most High to carry out the decrees of the divine will. Thus religious zeal became synonymous with human cruelty. The cruellest deeds and the most pious phrases went hand in hand; prayer and murder became boon companions.

Persecuting heathenism was barely a thing of the past, when its place was taken by what passed for the church of Jesus Christ; all freedom of thought was repressed; and if a Savonarola saw a purer faith, or a Galileo discovered a new scientific truth, the advocating of it could only be done at the price of life.

This was in the days when one church—one vast system of religion—held all states and almost all people in bondage, making the acceptance of its dogmas, either willingly or by constraint, the price of every earthly blessing, and even of life itself. The physical agonies endured by the martyrs to civil and religious liberty in those dark centuries have occupied the thoughts, engaged the pen, and aroused the sympathies of the philosophers and philanthropists of modern times; but who can picture the mental agony, the conflict of mind, when abject submission and credulous faith, with safety, were opposed by some illuminations of the Holy Spirit, or flashes of reason, leading into paths dangerous to tread! How many human souls went through life groping in thick darkness, trembling before creed and dogma, until the man created in the image of God, was made, by what claimed to be the church of God, but a lump of clay, without thought, inert, doubting the sincerity of his own faith, fearing the results of his own unbelief, trembling between hope and fear,—how many such lives those ages afforded, nothing but the recording angel's pen can reveal.

That deadly spell was partially broken in the sixteenth century. Men were no longer content to doubt and suffer in silence; they arose and in a new-born strength begotten of God, who in his time bursts the captive's yoke, proclaimed soul liberty. The spirit of liberty pervaded all nations. It crossed the ocean, and in the wilds of the American wilderness built a state, whose national motto, "A new order of things," suggested freedom from both civil and ecclesiastical tyranny. For a time liberty became the watchword of the world; kings pretended to embrace it or fell before it; popes were taken prisoner or fled from their capital as fugitives,—and liberty everywhere seemed like a triumphant conqueror.

But again a change has come. Liberty is like the sea, which has its ebbing and its flowing time; its spring floods and neap tides. Men still rave of liberty, philosophers describe her flowing robes, poets sing her praises, the statesman descants upon her in the legislative halls, and the church holds her as an ideal; but her face is turned from us. She is a beautiful, but a fading dream. How else can we account for the fact that in Europe kings are becoming more supreme and constitutions are little regarded; that the war lord has become greater than the statesman; that the papacy is tightening her grip on Spain and Austria; that she is slowly but steadily regaining her lost ground in Germany, France, Italy, and England; that the cries of suffering peoples in two hemispheres, who are struggling for liberty, are smothered by moneyed interests; and that in our own favored land, where liberty once fled to find the refuge denied to her in the Old World, the churches, which form the greatest motive power in all affairs, are deliberately planning to enact laws directly aimed at personal liberty in those things which relate to man in his individual relations to God?

The churches declare their intention of uniting so that they can be one church under one head, and so gain the control of the nation and dictate its laws. The Christian Statesman, in a recent issue, compares the leading Protestant churches to the fingers of a man's hand, but as the open hand does not bring the churches' desire, it says, "What is needed is the compacting of fingers and thumb into a solid fist wielded by the controlling purpose of a single brain, and then something will drop, and drop hard."

What does this plan outline but a new papacy? Surely something will then drop, and that something will be religious liberty. It may be said by some one in extenuation of this utterance, that this proposed union, by which everything opposing is to be crushed, is only for the promotion of morality in civil things; but the pages of history are eloquent of the fact that when a great religious organization sets itself to work to carry certain ends, it has a very poor sense of discrimination in regard to what are religious and what are civil things; or, in other words, from its standpoint there is no dividing line. By a subtle alchemy of church policy, religious things are transformed into civil. It was so when Rome persecuted. All her cruel, religious exactions were transformed into civil requirements. She shook her "fist of righteousness" through the civil power at those who refused her dogmas.

Protestants, departing from the simplicity of their earlier days, are following her example. They are becoming "compacted" for that purpose. The open palm of friendship and invitation is tightening into the grip of despotic hate and fancied divine retribution. Tired of presenting the love of God, the church would appropriate his prerogative of punishment. This is the attitude of a large number of the professed Christian ministers of America. In blind zeal they are crowding the nation nearer and nearer to the brink of a frightful precipice. Already we have seen some of the results of this misguided zeal; the future bids fair to reveal it in greater measure.

Christianity and Sabbath-Keeping.

BY C. H. KESLAKE.

God's power is eternal and unchanging. It is one and the same whether a world—a universe—is to be created, or a soul redeemed.

If any one has a doubt concerning God's ability to redeem, all he has to do is to look upon the material universe, and realize that the power that made it is the power that redeems.

This is one of the lessons to be learned from the language of inspiration found in Rom. 1:16-20. It reads: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. . . . For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith. For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness; because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse."

In this Scripture the apostle shows a direct connection between the power of God in the gospel and the power of God in creation—between redemption and creation.

More than once the apostle, in speaking of redemption, refers to the fact of creation. Col. 1:12-17. This is because creation is an aid to faith in the gospel.

Creation teaches (1) that God can redeem; and (2) that he will redeem.

As to the first there can be no controversy. If God by the simple utterance of a word could make a universe; and if, by that same word, he can uphold it and keep it in its place, surely he can take a sinner, steeped in sin, and so change him that he will be a new creation (2 Cor. 5:17, R. V., mar.) and give him power sufficient to enable him to comply with all the requirements of God.

But did God create the world in this way? Yes, verily. "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. . . . For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." Ps. 33:6, 9. Moreover, by that same word, he upholds all thing; for thus it reads: "Who being . . . the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power." Heb. 1:3.

No one, then, believing the Bible account of creation, can possibly doubt God's ability to save "to the uttermost." But does creation teach that he will redeem?

In bringing this world into existence, God had a settled, fixed purpose. This is revealed in Isa. 45:18: "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I am the Lord; and there is none else."

To defeat this purpose of God, Satan has used all the power of his giant intellect. By seducing man into sin, he hoped to bring about his destruction, and thus defeat God's plans. That he succeeded so far as getting man to sin is all too true. And had God not contemplated the possibility of sin entering, and thus his purpose being defeated, Satan would have succeeded in all that he designed so far as this earth is concerned.

But God did not create this earth in vain, he formed it to be inhabited, and therefore, even though sin, and consequently death, should enter, he had a plan, fully prepared from eternity, by which his purpose could be wrought out. That plan was the plan of redemption. It cannot be doubted, therefore, that creation teaches that God can and will redeem.

In creation, as we have already seen, his eternal power and divinity (R. V.) are revealed.

After God had fully completed his work, he instituted the Sabbath, and gave it to man to keep ever as a memorial of his creative power—as the sign of his eternal power and divinity. That sign will last as long as God's power and divinity can be seen in creation, and that of course will be to all eternity.

Now, as creation reveals that God can and will redeem, and is thus an aid to faith; and as the Sabbath is a sign of God's eternal power and divinity by which he will redeem, it inevitably follows that the Sabbath itself is an aid to faith.

Furthermore, this earth is a part of the universe that God created. When man sinned and fell, the earth itself became involved in the fall; and it must, with man, either be destroyed or redeemed. The latter, we have seen, is the truth, and thus it becomes evident that creation itself has a part in the redemptive scheme. It will therefore be still further evident that the Sabbath is not only a sign of God's eternal power in creation, but it is also a sign of his power in redemption.

What then follows? Simply this: He who knows the power of God in his creation and redemption can keep the Sabbath; and he who says he cannot keep it unless all others keep it, thereby acknowledges he does not know God's power. He cannot say truthfully that the gospel of Christ "is the power of God unto salvation." Let it be understood, however, that in all that has been said in this article relative to the Sabbath, in no instance is Sunday referred to.

The seventh day is the Sabbath set apart by Jehovah, and that day only is the sign of God's power in creation and redemption.

Having its origin in the work of creation, and being the memorial of the power that wrought in creation, it is entirely independent of any human aid, nor could it possibly receive it. This would be destructive of God's sovereignty.

In the very nature of things, then, anybody who knows the power of God in the gospel of Jesus Christ will have no difficulty in keeping the Sabbath—the seventh day.

But he who knows the power of God thus is a Christian, and if he does not know this power, he is not a Christian.

Then, beyond all doubt, anybody who is a Christian can keep the Sabbath; and, further, anybody who is a Christian and understands its nature and object will never say he cannot keep the Sabbath.

Circumstances of whatever kind will be no deterrent to a Christian. Environment will be no obstacle to him. He might be thrust into prison. But what of that? Many there are to-day who can testify that it is as easy to keep the Sabbath in a narrow cell as in a palace with none to molest.

Why is this? Because the Sabbath—the seventh day—is an inseparable part of that law that finds its source in Jesus Christ. No lock and key can keep out Jesus from a narrow prison cell where one of his saints is incarcerated, or anywhere else; and where Jesus is, there will Sabbath-keeping always be.

There is, then, something radically wrong with anybody, even though he happens to be a doctor of divinity, when he says, "My right to Sabbath observance depends upon a law for Sabbath observance for all. If others do not keep it, I can't."

The "Sabbath" in behalf of which this utterance was made is not, nor can it be, the Sabbath of the Bible; and consequently the religion that is represented by this kind of a "Sabbath" is not, nor can it be, the religion of Jesus Christ.

The Preacher in Politics.

WHEN the Author of the Christian religion came into the world, he made a very sharp distinction between his government and that of the world. One pertained to man's spiritual nature, the other to his physical well-being. As the people clamored to make him king, their disappointment knew no bounds when he refused. When his friends would resent the insults heaped upon him, he rebuked them with these words, "My kingdom is not of this world." His commission to his followers was, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel,"—just one thing, and so we hear Paul declaring, "I am determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified." This is the oneness of purpose that backed the efforts of the early Christians. The result was that in the face of a universal law prohibiting under penalty of death, the introduction of any other than the established religion, which was paganism, the gospel of the lowly Nazarene prospered and grew to mighty proportions.

Later the "mystery of iniquity" began its corrupting work, and it is not many pages that the historian wrote of those times till the sickening story of the Dark Ages begins—a story so full of awful deeds, all committed in the name of religion, that our cheeks blanch and the blood runs cold, and we shudder at the recital of the simple facts. This was all the result of a coalition of the civil with the ecclesiastical power.

Then came the Reformation—Luther with the primitive gospel of Jesus Christ—a gospel of love, a gospel of peace, a gospel of persuasion. In the face of apparently insurmountable obstacles, this gospel revolutionized all Europe, not by force of arms, but by its own inherent power—"the power of God unto salvation."

To-day we see and hear much of another gospel that the professed representatives of this same Jesus are teaching—a gospel of force, as embodied in the principles governing the Christian citizenship movement. So intoxicated are they with the idea that the nation can be made "Christian" in fact through legislation, that it is declared that "Christ is to become the Ruler of this nation," and that it will come "through the gateway of politics." Would that these same people could learn a lesson from the history of the fourth century! Would that they could realize that "all power is from above"—not from beneath; that to make men really good, their hearts must be changed, and only the power of God can do this—not the power of the state. Make a man first a good Christian and he will be a good citizen; so the work of the preachers, therefore, is to follow directly in the footsteps of the apostle Paul and preach nothing else "save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Why don't they do it?

W. E. C.

THERE is a prospect that war may be declared by Spain against the United States; not a very vivid prospect as yet, it is true, because in this age of enlightenment, when men have learned how to fight with weapons so much more deadly, and especially so much costlier, than they used to fight with, and when "concerts" of Europe and "triple alliances" are important factors to be reckoned with, the civilized nations do not rush into war with each other in that off-hand style which was in vogue centuries ago, but take more time to sit down and count the cost.

STILL, there is a prospect that war may be the outcome of the present controversy between the two nations most directly concerned in the war in Cuba. There are financial reasons—the weightiest of all reasons, nowadays, with most parties—why our nation does not want the war in Cuba to continue. It is ruinous to her business interests in the island, and it costs her no light sum to patrol the Atlantic Coast of her wide domain to oblige Spain in the matter of heading off filibustering expeditions carrying aid to the Cubans. And there is little doubt but that Spain, on the other hand, would prefer a war with even this doughty giant of the Western World, to the loss of Cuba under circumstances which would wound her national pride.

BUT now the question arises, In case Spain should declare war, what should be the attitude assumed by the United States? For be it remembered that the United States is a "Christian nation." The Supreme Court has distinctly affirmed this to be a fact; and an abundance of further "proof" upon this point is supplied by the repeated declarations of eminent theologians affirming the same thing. All these affirmations have, save by the AMERICAN SENTINEL and a few other journals, gone unchallenged. From the popular point of view, therefore, it may be said that there can be no doubt as to the proper attitude of the United States toward her belligerent neighbor, so far as the question of her being a Christian nation is concerned.

THIS being so, it is only to be expected that the nation's attitude toward Spain will be a Christian one. It will be marked by the spirit of Christian charity. Our nation will "suffer long" and still be "kind." She will not seek her own exaltation; she will not resent an insult or an injury. Should Spain smite her on the one cheek by sending a fleet over and bombarding New York City, she will turn the other cheek also, and allow the Spanish fleet to bombard San Francisco. And all this while she will love Spain and pray for her and seek to do her good. For all this is plainly included in Christian conduct.

WILL our nation do this? Does the Supreme Court or any of the theologians who have so positively affirmed that "this is a Christian nation" believe that she will conduct herself thus in the event of a declaration of war from Spain? Not one of them believe so, it is safe to say; and yet—such is the inconsistency of human nature—they will no doubt hold to the idea of the Christian character of this nation even while with her army and navy she is taking eye for eye and tooth for tooth from her antagonist, and otherwise violating the cardinal principles of Christian conduct.

AND it is also safe to say that Spain is not counting on anything else than this in the event of a declaration of war. The declaration that "this is a Christian nation" was not intended to serve as a governing principle of national conduct in case of war; but it certainly applies here, if it has any force whatever. The state is not Christian unless it follows the example of Christ.

THE Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, of Brooklyn, is quoted as saying that a man who stays out of politics "because it is a dirty pool," is like John the Baptist, who "was afraid of temptation and ran away and hid in the wilderness." This comparison of Dr. Abbott's is not as bad as it might seem; for although there is not a shadow of Bible proof for the idea that John the Baptist "ran away and hid" in the wilderness, or that he "was afraid of temptation," there can be no doubt but that he did abstain completely from politics; so that the comparison has one point of truth upon which to rest. And there can be no doubt also but that the nature of politics was the same in the time of John the Baptist as it is now, and that he kept out of politics for a reason quite similar to that which prompts many people to do the same to-day.

AND in this connection it is worth while to note the fact that keeping out of politics did not relegate John the Baptist to obscurity, or at all impair his power for usefulness. It is recorded of him that "Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan," "went out to him," "and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." He was not only out of politics, but he was away in the wilderness; yet he was probably the least hidden at the time of all the men in Judea. Yet while he was out of politics, and away from every seat of party strife, he was able to exert a direct influence upon those interests of the state with which politicians are supposed to deal. This fact in itself is good evidence that a man does not have to be a politician in order to serve the state.

* * *

If we read the account of John's work given in the third chapter of Luke, we shall discover in it several illustrations of this truth. Thus, in verse twelve and onward: "Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do? And he said unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you. And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? And he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages." Here are disclosed the extortion and injustice of those in positions of power and the discontent of those receiving "wages," which are familiar features of the situation in our own country to-day, and which are made the basis of much of the oratory of a modern political campaign.

* * *

TIMES have not changed very much in our world since the days of John, so far as concerns the problems growing out of the relation between employer and employes, between the governed and their governors. Human nature was the same then that it is now, and expressed itself through substantially the same channels of conduct. And there is nothing in any of the circumstances of that time as compared with our own, which would warrant the conclusion that what was possible to one out of politics then, is not equally possible to one in the same position now.

* * *

THE publicans and the soldiers—and we know not what other classes of the people—came out to John and asked of him in all sincerity what they should do in order to lead a better life. This is more than they asked of the politicians,—the party leaders,—and from John they learned more than the politicians would have been able to tell them. So that upon the inference that many of them acted in harmony with his counsel—a very fair inference, certainly—we may conclude that John the Baptist did more in his day to remove the discontent of the people and the causes therefor, and thus to aid in the maintenance of good government, than was done by all the politicians put together.

* * *

"Oh, but"—some of my readers will exclaim—"John the Baptist cannot serve as an example for our time, for his work was peculiar and extraordinary. He had a special message for the people from the Lord." Well, haven't preachers to-day a special message from the Lord? If not, they would better stop preaching. Haven't they the special message of the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth? Haven't they the message of repentance that John preached, and also the message which Jesus Christ himself proclaimed, of reconciliation with God through his death and resurrection? Haven't they, in short, all the message that John had and a good deal more,—as much more as Inspiration has added upon the pages of the New Testament?

* * *

CERTAINLY they have. The only difference is that John stuck to his message, while the preachers of to-day don't stick to theirs, but seem to think they have found in politics something of more importance. If John the Baptist had gone into politics, he would have done as little for the real benefit of mankind as is being accomplished by the preacher politicians in our own midst. And if the latter would but proclaim the message of salvation in all the graciousness and power of the Spirit, as is their privilege, they might accomplish undreamed-of things in the line of relieving the painful and alarming symptoms which are apparent in the body politic at the present time. Let them try it and see.

* * *

At a recent meeting of pastors representing all leading denominations in "Greater New York," resolutions were passed setting apart November 10 as "a day of prayer and exposition of Scripture concerning prayer," and calling upon pastors and churches in all the States to assemble at some hour on that day "for the purpose of praying God to revive his people."

This is right; it is what the times demand. God has power to revive his people, and he would have his people pray for a revival. He would have them pray to him instead of to Congress and State legislatures. He would have them seek for that righteousness which exalteth a nation, through him, rather than through politics.

Papal Liberality.

RECENTLY at Kingston, Ont., there was a marriage in a Congregational church, at which a number of Catholics were witnesses. Upon learning of this, Archbishop Cleary, of that place, took occasion to set forth the liberality of papal principles in a public proclamation, as follows:—

"We hereby declare with all the authority of the church vested in us as Archbishop of Kingston and your chief pastor, that any Catholic in our metropolitan city or diocese who shall hereafter presume to enter any non-Catholic edifice to assist at what is termed a marriage ceremony or service for the dead, even though he should not take any active part in the performance, renders himself guilty of mortal sin by dishonoring the religion of his baptism and defying the laws of the holy church and giving public scandal before society. We furthermore reserve to ourself alone the power to absolve from this heinous sin."

BEFORE this paper reaches our readers one of the most exciting political contests in the history of the country will have been settled—the election of mayor of Greater New York—with the details of which all who read the newspapers are more or less familiar. We have no disposition to enter into the merits of the political situation. The SENTINEL does not deal with the questions it discusses from that standpoint, but as a matter of fact, we may say that no one who is not on the ground and actually sees for himself can appreciate the situation. No stone is left unturned to accomplish what is desired. Four candidates are in the field—two Republican and two Democratic—two for what is called "Boss Rule," and two who pose as the champions of the rights of the people. The two latter candidates are Hon. Seth Low, President of Columbian College, and Hon. Henry George, so well known throughout the country. Right in the very heat of the controversy Mr. George was stricken with apoplexy, and died. Whatever may be said of Mr. George's political opinions, all unite in attributing to him sincerity of motive and a genuine friendship for the people. The demonstration at his funeral on Sunday last was one of the largest ever known in the city. The following he had among the laboring classes seemed wonderful, and spoke in tones louder than any words the deep-seated feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction that is felt over the unequal distribution of wealth. They looked to Mr. George as a leader to right many of the wrongs that exist. In a speech just before he died, he said, "If I am elected mayor of Greater New York, I will endeavor to the very best of my ability to give to every man his right—whether he be a hod carrier or a millionaire." This is the true principle on which government should be conducted—equal rights to all and privileges to none. We are far from that now.

"Religious" Legislation.

NOT long since, an advocate of Sunday laws said:—

"The seventh-day people have much to say about Sunday-enforcement laws infringing on personal rights. They are wrong, for such laws do not require that Sunday shall be kept religiously."

When the advocates of these laws first began to agitate for the enactment and enforcement of them, it was because "the day is not religiously kept." As soon as this sophistical bubble was punctured, they fell back and said that the law does "not require that Sunday shall be kept religiously."

But what is the "religious" observance of a day? A weekly rest-day is purely a religious institution—instituted by the Creator, and rest from labor is an essential part of its observance. In this act, an individual certainly appears to the world to be religious, and to comply with the requirements of the law from religious convictions.

So it is seen that any law requiring the cessation of labor on a day observed as the Sabbath, on the face of it, compels an outward recognition of what constitutes at least an essential part of its religious observance. But Sabbath-keeping is purely a duty to God, and to be acceptable must come from the heart. Any unwilling, outward regard for it, in compliance with statutory demands, makes the individual who does so a hypocrite. Religious laws are always enacted in behalf of some religion, to secure an unwilling recognition of it, else they never would be enacted. That is not the province of civil law; for a man with no religious convictions may be just as good a citizen as the most devout church member. Civil law recognizes only incivilities. It is not incivil to fail to observe any religious custom, so long as in this failure the right to observe it unmolested is granted to others.

W. E. C.

The Catholic Position on the School Question.

"Bible Echo," Melbourne, Aus.

ARCHBISHOP CARR and the bishops of the Roman Catholic Province of Melbourne, including Bendigo, Ballarat, and Sale, in a meeting held September 3, set forth the Catholic position on the school question. They say that although the present Education Act of Victoria was passed to give "free, secular, and compulsory education to the children of the colony,"—

"Catholics protested from the beginning against the principle of divorcing religious from secular instruction in the schools."

But of the National Scripture Education League's proposition to introduce religious instruction in the state schools, these bishops further say:—

"Such unauthorized doctrinal teaching is radically opposed to the fundamental principle of authority on which Catholic faith is based," and that "the only safeguard for Catholic children under such circumstances would be a conscience clause totally forbidding their presence while such doctrinal instruction was being given." —Melbourne Age, Sept. 4, 1897.

Putting these two statements together, we have this plainly deducible conclusion: The prelates of the Roman Catholic Church are not, on principle, opposed to the union of religion and the state; on the contrary, they are in favor of such union, provided the religion thus united to, and enforced by, the state is that which is "authorized" by the Roman Catholic Church. And such in truth, is the fact.

"A PRINCIPLE which commands our reason is no less sacred and imperative than a statute."

Why Are Rights Unalienable?

NATURAL rights are unalienable because they are bestowed upon mankind by the Creator.

If some earthly power had created us,—if we had made ourselves, or been made by others like us, or by the state, we would have no unalienable rights at all; for the same earthly power that created us would have the right to dispose of us as it saw fit.

The state sometimes acts as though it were the creator of its people, and could dispose of their rights as it saw fit; but the state was itself created by the people, and it rests with the people to make such changes in the government as they see fit.

The state is created to serve the rights of the people; these rights do not lie at the disposal of the state.

Our rights are unalienable because they are necessary to serve the purpose God had in creating us. That purpose is—in this life—the formation of right character.

A right character can be developed only by the exercise of free choice.

The basis of right character is love—the love of good, true, and just principles. And all these find their embodiment and personification in God.

In the administration of God's government these principles find their highest exemplification.

God does not compel us to love him or any principle of his government. We cannot be compelled to love anything. We love whatever we do love from the exercise of our free choice.

Your parents do not punish you to force you to love what is good. And the state does not send men to prison to force them to love what is right and just. But the things that are good, and right, and pure, and just must be set before us, and exemplified over and over in words and acts; and by seeing their beauty and excellence, we learn to desire and love them. We choose to do this; and in this choosing we exercise an unalienable right.

If we were not allowed to choose whether we would serve God or not, the love of right principles could never become a part of our nature. Nothing can become a part of our natures which we do not put into them voluntarily. We must consent to let it into our hearts, before it can ever get there.

And if right principles were not a part of our very natures, we would not be fitted for an existence that would continue through eternity,—which is what the Creator designed for us.

If we are not permitted to choose whether we will keep the Sabbath or not, Sabbath-keeping cannot become a part of our natures; and without it we would never be admitted into the kingdom of God. And so with everything which pertains to the service of God.

Why They Didn't Like Him.

"WELL, my little boy, did you have a nice time this afternoon?"

"No, mother," answered Mrs. Price's little boy, "not very."

"Why not," she asked in surprise.

"Why, mother, the boys won't play with me; they don't treat me right."

"Do you treat them right, Harry?"

"I—I don't treat them at all," he said, hesitatingly.

The mother didn't say any more about the matter then, but she felt troubled at Harry's account of his place among his playmates. The next time he took his ball and went to the park, she put on her bonnet and followed.

There were a good many people in the park, and Mrs. Price stood back. Presently she saw her little boy go off alone.

"Who is that little boy?" she asked some children near her.

"That? Oh, that is Harry Price," they answered, but they had no idea they were talking to his mother.

"Why doesn't he play with the rest of you, instead of going off by himself?" asked the lady.

"Oh, I don't know; he doesn't play nice, somehow."

"What's the matter?"

"Why, he always wants to have his own way."

"Don't you all want to have your own way?"

"Yes'm," answered the little girl, buttoning up her coat and getting ready to start off; "yes'm, but you see we all give up sometimes; one day I give up to Susie, and the next day Susie gives up to me, and so we get along; but Harry never wants to give up at all—never; and that won't do."

"No," said Harry's mother, "I see that would n't do at all."

That evening Mrs. Price told her little boy about her visit to the park.

"I wanted to let you look at yourself with their eyes, Harry," she said; "and now that you know what is the matter with Harry Price, and why the boys and girls don't like him, I am sure you can mend matters."

Harry looked very solemn and downcast, and the mother said gently:—

"When my little boy remembers that that must have been the way it looked to the heavenly Father, too, I am sure he will try to do differently."

And he did, with successful and happy results.—Great Thoughts.

"A Man's Heart Given Unto It."

"WELL, where did we leave off, Charlie?"

"In our last talk, mama, we had come to the place where the three Hebrews were delivered out of the furnace, because God wanted to show Nebuchadnezzar that he had no business to interfere with men's religious rights."

"What symbols had we explained?"

"The lion and the eagle's wings."

"Yes, I remember now what I was going to say to you about the deliverance. David says, 'Thou hast delivered me out of the mouth of the lion.' In another place in the Bible, it says that Satan is going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. You can easily see, then, who it is that influences men to turn the powers ordained of God for the protection of men in their rights, into that beast-like power that denies and then defrauds men of their rights. Behind this lion-like kingdom was the spirit of the lion who has ever shown a beast-like enmity against those who would keep the commandments of God."

"I see," said Charlie; "now the next thing is that the lion was lifted up like a man, and a man's heart was given unto it."

"Before we go into that part of the prophecy, let us see what God had foretold in regard to this kingdom. Turn to Isaiah 13 and read from the 17th verse."

Charlie read: "'Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it. . . . And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited; . . . and the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses.'"

"You see it was to be entirely overthrown, to be the haunt of wild beasts, and never to be rebuilt."

"What, that great and beautiful city?"

"Yes; its destruction was foretold nearly two hundred years before it was taken by the Medes and Persians. Moreover, the very name of the general who was to take it, was written by the hand of the prophet long before his birth."

"O mama, tell me quick where I can find that; for I have been reading about that general. Just to think of his name being in the Bible before he was born."

"Forty-fifth of Isaiah, begin at the first verse."

Charlie read: "'Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut.'"

"Why, mama, it is really wonderful the way God has foretold everything, and yet God is God, of course, and knows the end from the beginning. It was just that way, mama."

"Now, knowing these prophecies as to its overthrow, let us study some of the causes that made such a result unavoidable. Babylon was represented as a lion with eagle's wings in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, and the history of its conquests that brought many nations into captivity shows that the symbol is fitting. But in Belshazzar's reign (and his name means Bel's or Baal's prince), the kingdom underwent a change that might well be represented by the man and the man's heart. You notice first that the wings were plucked. Its power of conquest was gone. Rich and increased with goods, Belshazzar gave himself up to luxury, feasting, and pleasure-seeking. The god he worshiped demanded all this, for it was Baal; and Baal, after all, is only a god made like corruptible man. This god was self, as we have before explained, so the king and his lords of whom he had ten thousand, with their wives and concubines, reveled in pleasure. You know any individual that takes this course becomes weak, and so with a state; and so Babylon that had been the fear and majesty of kingdoms, now shows only the weakness and heart of a man. And now, Charlie, what have you found out in regard to its overthrow?"

"Why, mama, war began in the last year of Nebuchadnezzar's life, and continued till the overthrow in 338. The Medes began the war, then they called to their aid the Persians, under Cyrus. He was a wonderful man, and a great general. The Babylonians were driven from one stronghold to another, till finally they were shut up in the great city. Belshazzar and his people felt secure within their great walls and gates. They laughed and mocked at Cyrus as he dug trenches about the city. I believe it says he encamped a whole year without any show of success. The people in the city had food laid up for twenty years, and plenty of ground to cultivate, and they became very careless and reckless. Some one says that Belshazzar called the great feast we read about in the fifth of Daniel, to praise his gods because Isaiah's prophecy had not been fulfilled. You know that while they were feasting, the fingers of a man's hand wrote that he was found wanting, and that his kingdom was given to the Medes and Persians."

"While all this was going on, Cyrus had turned the Euphrates from its course into a lake; and as the water ran down, his armies marched under the walls up the bed of the river, and there they found the river gates open, just as the prophet had said. I suppose while the hand was writing, the soldiers were marching up the streets unhindered, and the trembling king and his lords became an easy prey; for it says in that night was Belshazzar slain, and Darius the Mede took the kingdom."

"You have told it very well, Charlie. The fulfilment of the prophecy in regard to its utter destruction, runs through some hundreds of years, but we know to-day that it is an utter ruin. Men have unearthed the ruins, and have in this century found some valuable tablets confirming the Bible history of Belshazzar's feast. Babylon reaped its own sowing. It failed to protect men in the exercise of their rights, failed to protect itself against the forces of evil within itself, and so was its own destroyer. Like Pharaoh, Belshazzar had asked, 'Who is the Lord that I should obey his voice?' Doubtless as has been suggested, he knew of the prophecy, and yet defied God. It is certain that he had had the light of Daniel's consistent life; for he knew he was a servant of God when he called for him to read the writing on the wall. His course reminds me of a text that we see illustrated all around us. 'Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the sons of men are fully set in them to do evil.'"

"The student of history has one of the best fields in which to study the law of cause and effect; and indeed, no nation would be in peril if its people would study the past, and take heed to its lessons."

"You will notice, Charlie, that no nation is destroyed till the cup of its iniquity is full, or the causes for its overthrow fully ripe. It is the same in individual life, Charlie. And that is why I want you to cut off every evil habit in its beginning. Be careful not to indulge the natural wish to domineer, to boss, to bring others to your way of thinking. It is selfish indulgence, the lack of self-control that leads to the destruction of the life powers, and to the final loss of the soul. All this I know you in yourself are powerless to do, but you know there is the God of the Hebrews to whom you can appeal."

"O mama, I am so glad we began these studies. I feel more than ever that I want to grow up loyal to God and truth and to the principles of true liberty. I wish I could meet such men as were Daniel and the Hebrew children. I hope that I shall meet them in the new Jerusalem."

"O Charlie, what a happy city that will be! We shall see God's plan of government fully brought out. His government is based on love. To understand the principles that will rule in that city, and to be in harmony with them, will fit us to be its inhabitants. Do not forget to study the life of Christ, to seek for his grace day by day, that we may be heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ."

"Now I must leave you to study the second beast, and to prepare for our next talk."

"All right, mama, I am so much obliged for your help. I never thought before there was so much to these beasts with wings and horns."

F. B.

Power From On High.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

THE engineer has turned on the power in the engine rooms, and all through the factory the shafting is turning. Not a machine moves. But let the operatives push the levers that make the connection, and the whole factory is quivering with activity.

God's promise is of power from on high for the daily life of overcoming. The power is at work all about us and in us. From out the throne of his power goes the influence that holds all the universe, and the life that flows through every living thing. What we want is to have that power turned into our spiritual lives, so that it may order our ways after the working of almighty power.

The lever is the Word. He is "upholding all things by the word of his power," or "his powerful word." Faith receives the Word into the life and makes the life a part of the living machinery of God's universe. Only think of it; all this power that can control the universe, turned to the ordering of our little lives! Is it not a glorious promise, and one to give us confidence and make glad our hearts?

MR. J. E. COLLINS, of Noblesville, Ind., writes as follows of his estimate of the SENTINEL: "I am more than pleased with the paper itself. Its defense of personal liberty is certainly with unanswerable arguments and undeniable facts."

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Single Copy, Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
" " Six months,	-	-	-	-	.50
" " Three "	-	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES...

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

Steps to Christ.

In twelve chapters are presented in a simple and beautiful manner the steps by which a sinner may be made complete in Christ. It contains a wealth of counsel and encouragement for those who are laboring with the difficulties that beset a growing experience.

Price (Fleming Revell edition) 75

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond st., New York City.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-Pocket
Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5½ x 2½ in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELDON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., Litt. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of Harvard University.

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.

39 Bond Street, New York City.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 1½ doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required.

BLAINE CO., Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

The Gospel Primer.

A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE 25

Address this Office.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"It is the Grandest Book
I Ever Read,"
"Christ Our Saviour,"

By MRS. E. G. WHITE.

WE have in this book the life of "Christ Our Saviour" from his birth to ascension, given in simple and direct language. It is printed in large, clear type, and is finely illustrated by engravings made especially for it. The simplicity with which this "Old, Old Story" is told, the aptness of the illustrations, and the general appearance of the better bound styles will attract and hold the reader's attention to the very close. It makes an excellent birthday or holiday gift to a friend, either young or old. 160 large octavo pages, bound as follows, and will be sent postpaid at prices given.

Presentation edition, two colors, vellum cloth, embossed in jet, green and gold, beveled edges, gilt top.....$1.25
Fine English cloth, embellished aluminum cover......75
Cloth back, board covers, in colors......50
Heavy tag-board covers. Bible Students' Library, No. 141......35

Also published in board and cloth at 50c and 75c in German, Swedish, Danish, and Spanish languages.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

OAKLAND, CAL. KANSAS CITY, MO.

The Stomach:

... Its Disorders and
How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion, Foods,	The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia.
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

Sunbeams of Health and Temperance.

This is a unique work in which the author has undertaken to present a vast amount of interesting information in such a manner as to be not only instructive but entertaining.

The following are the titles of the principal sections of the work:

The House We Live In; The Habitations of Men; Some Strange People and Their Strange Manners; The Bills of Fare of all Nations; Dame Fashion and Her Slaves; Health and Temperance Miscellany; Hygiene for Young Folks.

Over 224 quarto pages.
Illustrated by hundreds of engravings.

One of the most interesting volumes ever published.

	Regular price.	We will send postpaid.
Cloth, plain edges,	$2.25.	$1.25.
Cloth, gilt edges,	2.50.	1.50.

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

A NEW TRACT CATALOGUE.

"Descriptive Catalogue of the Bible Students', Apples of Gold, and Religious Liberty Libraries" is the title of this 36 page catalogue.

It gives a pithy description of each tract and pamphlet in the above Libraries, together with their size and price. It will greatly assist the reader to select such numbers as he may desire to read and circulate; and may be obtained FREE by addressing the Pacific Press Publishing Company, Oakland, Cal.; 39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.; 18 W. 5th St., Kansas City, Mo.; or Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich.; Atlanta, Ga.

A MARVEL IN BIBLE MAKING.

Large Type S. S. Teachers' SELF-PRONOUNCING COMBINATION BIBLE.

Containing the King James and the Revised Versions on the Same Page. Showing in Simple Form all Changes, Additions and Omissions, and Enabling all Readers to See at a Glance wherein the Two Versions Differ.

Both Versions Combined Without Duplicating.

The King James Version, set in full and conforming exactly to the Oxford Teachers' Edition, and, wherever a change occurs, the letters r. v., referring to a foot-note at the bottom of the page, showing the reading as it appears in the Revised Version. Thus, in the same book, we have both the King James and the Revised Versions, complete and intact, without materially increasing the size of the volume or reducing the size of the type. Both printed together in the same column, showing the differences at a glance, and enabling the reader to practically read both at one and the same time; or, in other words, consuming in the comparative reading of the two texts not more than one-half the time required in the old way.

EITHER VERSION ALONE OR BOTH TOGETHER.

The great point of excellence in this arrangement is that while it enables one to read both Versions in almost exactly the same time, it does not mar, or in any way hinder, the reading of the King James Version alone and independently, where one does not care to refer to the revisions.

How to Read the Combination Bible.

Below is part of page 608 of our Combination Bible. The following Key shows how it is to be read:

KEY—The first RV on page 608 appears in verse 37 of the 9th chapter, before "dominion." In the King James Version the reading is "dominion over our bodies," etc. By referring to the foot-notes it will be seen that the word "dominion" is changed to "power." Hence the Revised Version reads "power over our bodies," etc.

In the 38th verse the King James reads, "because of all this," by reference to foot of page it will be seen that the Revised Version reads, "yet for all this."

In verse 23 there is an RO, which denotes an omission. Refer to the foot-notes and "(having)" will be found. Every omission is placed in a parenthesis in the foot-notes, and the Revised Version in this instance reads, "every one that had knowledge and understanding."

Thus it is seen that the Revised Version is easily read in connection with the King James Version. The system is so simple and so easily understood that no reader finds any difficulty in comparing one version with the other.

Specimen of Type used in the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.
Size of Page 5 x 7 3/4 inches.

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.	B. C. 445.	all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;
38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ⁹ make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.	^f Dent. 23. 48. ^g 2 Kin. 23. 3. ² Chr. 29. ¹⁰ ; 34. 31. ^{Ezra} 10. 3. ^{ch. 10. 29.} ² Heb. are at the sealing, or, sealed. ^h ch. 10. 1.	29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ⁹ and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;
CHAPTER X.	³ Heb. at the sealings, ch. 9. 38. ^a ch. 8. 9. ⁴ Or, the governor. ^b ch. 1. 1. ^c See ch. 12. 1-21.	30 And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:
1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 23 The points of the covenant.		31 ^h And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not
NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,
2 ^c Sēr-a-ī'ah, Āz-a-rī'ah, Jēr-e-mī'-ah,
3 Pāsh'ūr, Ām-a-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah,
4 Hāt'ūsh, Shēb-a-nī'ah, Māl'luch,
5 Hā'rim, Mēr'e-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah,
6 Dān'iel, Gīn'nē-thon, Bā'ruch,
7 Mē-shūl'am, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'a-mīn,

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Joshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nethinim,—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

The Bible Closed.

BINDING.

Imperial Seal, Tuck Edges, known as the "Divinity Circuit," Leather Lined, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges.

This is a regular

$8 Bible,

Something unique,

and a good one.

It will be mailed postpaid

on receipt of only

$4.00.

Agents Wanted.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 44.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 11, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THERE is no worse form of depotism than anarchy.

TRUE liberty is inseparable from the principle of the Golden Rule.

LAW, in its true sense, is but the defining of the pathway of peace and prosperity.

THE man who cannot govern himself is of no real use to any system of popular government.

THE best patriotism is that which champions the rights of all individuals, regardless of nationality, color, or belief.

THE liberality of the present age is mostly of the kind that has its origin in the commercial instinct. It is manifested only in return for value received.

WILL America return the same answer to the question whether democratic government can be permanently successful, that has been given by Greece and Rome?

WHEN the people vote to be governed by a dictator, as in the late election in "Greater New York," "popular government" means government by a dictator and nothing more.

"WHILE they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption," is a scripture which applies well to the promises of liberty made in this day by most of the political leaders.

As well might one think to build a fine edifice without paying any particular attention to the laying of the individual brick, as to think that there can be good government through any scheme based upon the idea of converting people by wholesale.

IT is useless to think of raising the standard of allegiance to God's Sabbath law by devising means for an improved observance of Sunday. When you miss the mark altogether, it doesn't matter whether your bullet would or would not have been more effective on the target than one you had been using before.

What Army Chaplains Are For.

RECENTLY, at a "Grand Army" banquet in Buffalo, N. Y., tendered to the President of the United States, Archbishop Ireland spoke in response to the toast, "The Chaplain." As a statement of what are deemed the proper functions of the chaplain's office, the words of this eminent churchman are worthy of consideration. The quotations following give that part of his speech most directly pertinent to the subject:—

"But why in an encampment of veterans mention the army chaplain? Has he had a part even most slight in their achievements? Apparently the part of the chaplain was small, if a part is at all to be credited to him. The chaplain bore no gun upon his shoulder. The chaplain was a non-combatant, a man of peace, whether in camp or on the battle-field. In fact, however, the part of the chaplain was most important. I am making a plea of my own patriotism. I was a chaplain.

"The chaplain invested the soldier's fighting, the soldier's whole round of labor and suffering, with the halo of moral duty."

We have never believed in the utility of the office, but this statement makes it worse even than we had thought. We had never before conceived of the chaplain's duty as being that of casting a halo about the business of killing people.

Unquestionably the soldier's business is one that will admit of a service of this kind. There is no natural halo about it, certainly. To deliberately shoot down men, made in the image of the Creator, to smash their skulls with clubbed muskets in fierce hand-to-hand conflict, to cut and stab them to death with sword and bayonet, to pour their life blood out upon the earth, to make widows and orphans of those they have left at home,—these are actions which, unsurrounded by any halo, would strike the minds of ordinary people with horror. Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman, who certainly knew what the soldier's business is, said, "War is hell." Putting this statement of this eminent military authority with that of Archbishop Ireland concerning the chaplain's office, we are brought to the conclusion that the legitimate business of the army chaplain is to cast a halo about hell!

But casting a halo about hell does not at all change the character of that place. And that which needs to be invested with a "halo of moral duty" in order that people may be led to espouse and support it, would far better be left to appear in its true light, and be accepted or rejected upon its merits.

Proceeding with his line of thought, the archbishop went on to say that,—

"The appeal of the chaplain to the living God, as approving war and consecrating battle-fields, is in the fullest harmony with the teachings of religion. God is, indeed, the God of love and peace while love means no violation of justice and peace implies no surrender of supreme rights."

As soon, therefore, as a person feels that he is treated unjustly, or that his rights have been invaded, he may properly go to war with his enemies, relying upon the protection and aid of Heaven! This view will scarcely harmonize with the divinely given exhortation, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

The archbishop was not, in this, stating something peculiar to his own views, or to those of his church; otherwise it would not be so worthy of notice. The conception of God as "approving war," whenever people are suffering injustice, is a very general one, and is the idea by which the horrors of war are theoretically justified. But it has no foundation in truth.

The archbishop continued:—

"The servants of God must ever seek peace so long as it is possible to obtain peace. They must never proclaim war so long as war is not absolutely necessary. But times come when war is absolutely necessary, when naught but war can avert great wrongs and save the life and the honor of the nation. Then the God of peace becomes the God of armies; he who unsheathes the sword in response to country's call finds favor before God, and the soldier who is a coward on the battle-field is a culprit before heaven's tribunal."

Yes; "the servants of God must ever seek peace so long as it is possible to obtain peace," and "must never proclaim war so long as war is not absolutely necessary." But when is the point reached where peace becomes impossible and war "absolutely necessary"? Oh, it is when somebody is not treating us right and will not stop misusing us as soon as we think they ought to; or it is when we have been insulted by somebody and the offender will not apologize to save our "honor" from being stained. It is, in short, whenever we think that war is necessary. And what we think on such occasions is inspired by the aroused passions and pride of fallen human nature. But God has not left the matter of living peaceably or otherwise to be determined in this way.

People generally, and nations, usually find it quite "possible to obtain peace" when they do not feel strong enough to whip their opponents in the event of hostilities. And when people—and nations—are naturally belligerent, or have something to gain by fighting, and feel confident as to the result, it is very easy for them to reach the point where war is "absolutely necessary."

In the late war between Germany and France, the contestants on each side "unsheathed the sword in response to country's call," and in so doing, both sides of the controversy found "favor before God," no doubt!

One more quotation from the archbishop's speech will be in place. It is this:—

"The chaplain—let him remain to America—to America's army and navy. It is sometimes said that the chaplain is an anomaly in a country which has decreed the separation of state and church. America has decreed the separation of state from church; America has not decreed and America never will decree the separation of state from morals and religion. To soldiers upon land and sea, as well as to other citizens, morals and religion are necessary. The dependence of soldiers upon the government of the country is complete. The government of the country must provide for soldiers teachers of morals and religion. In providing for them such teachers the country performs a duty which she owes to the soldiers and she serves her own high interests. For the best and bravest soldiers are men that are not estranged from morals and religion."

Yes, it is true that "the dependence of soldiers upon the government is complete," under such a system as that for which the archbishop was speaking. But "pity 'tis 'tis true." There never ought to be such dependence in the case of any individual. The archbishop frankly admits that, to the soldier, the government stands in the place of God. "The government of the country must provide for soldiers teachers of morals and religion." But the government has no higher wisdom or power than that which is human, and human wisdom is altogether inadequate to provide for the needs of the soul.

In providing teachers of morals and religion, the government will select such persons as it fancies, and these will be persons who will teach in harmony with the government's ideas. They will teach the morals and religion of the state, and nothing else. But what every individual needs and must have in order to obtain salvation, is the teaching of the morals and religion of the divine Word. And the teacher of these is the Holy Spirit, provided by God himself.

It is also true enough that "the best and bravest soldiers are men that are not estranged from morals and religion," and by no people is its truth better illustrated than by the Mohammedans. With sword or lance in one hand, and the Koran in the other, one of these fanatics will rush on to what he knows is certain death, without the least hesitation. It is only a perverted religion that will harmonize with the spirit of war.

Let not this perverted religion be palmed off as Christianity. Let not the government usurp the place of Deity as the teacher of morals and religion. Let not the terrible business of killing people be invested with a halo of moral duty; let it stand upon its own merits—if such it has. Let the government keep separate from religion. Let army chaplaincies be abolished.

The Philosophy of Jefferson.

From a Speech by the late Henry George.

THE philosophy of Jefferson says that every man has the right to eat and drink and speak as he wishes, and this right goes as far as he does not step over upon the same rights of others.

Much harm and wrong have been done by good people who, not understanding the philosophy of Jefferson, have sought to enforce the laws of God by the laws of man. These misguided efforts have always failed. I believe that God, our Father, will take care of his laws, and all who seek to perform what he will himself take care of will get themselves and others into trouble.

The great Declaration says that all men are possessed of certain inalienable rights—the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That is the democracy of Jefferson; and if the government of the people is administered under it, the wrongs and oppressions of which the people complain will flee away. My friends, the democracy of Jefferson is simply the Golden Rule—Do unto others as you would yourself be done by.

The Bigot's Rule.

THE only excuse any one can offer for employing force in religious matters is that he has a right to do to others that which he would not admit they had a right, under like circumstances, to do to him. But this is bigotry pure and simple. It is the very opposite of the Golden Rule laid down by Christ. Macaulay, in his essay on Sir James Mackintosh, has well stated the case in the following words:—

"The doctrine which, from the very first origin of religious dissensions, has been held by all bigots of all sects, when condensed into few words, and stripped of rhetorical disguise is simply this: I am right, and you are wrong. When you are the stronger, you ought to tolerate me; for it is your duty to tolerate truth. But when I am the stronger, I will persecute you; for it is my duty to persecute error."

This, we are sorry to say, is a doctrine which is quite too commonly held among both Protestants and Catholics.

True and False Democracy.

THE philosophy of Jefferson, to which allusion is made in another column, must not be understood as being synonymous with the socialism, communism, etc., which have clothed themselves in the mantle of democracy at the present time. The principle of true democracy is the principle of the Golden Rule. It is the principle of seeking the welfare of others equally with that of ourselves. It is the principle of unselfishness.

There is a sense in which Christianity itself, as embodying the principles of God's government, is synonymous with democracy—with "government of the people, by the people, and for the people." For in God's government, nothing is done without the approval of the people, though God is himself the supreme ruler. All is done for the people and by the people, to the extent at least of their voluntary consent and approval. It is to secure this voluntary consent and approval of his created intelligences upon that which he has done hitherto, and will do to the end of the world, that the Almighty will conduct a final judgment. In that great investigation he himself will be on trial equally with the humblest of his subjects who has lived on earth. And then, when all facts are brought forth to the view of all, and the light of truth is turned full upon all his dealings with mankind, mankind and angels will with one accord signify their approval.

The judgment will afford the strongest possible proof that it is a fixed principle of God's government to do nothing without the voluntary approval of his subjects.

The real character of that which claims to be democracy may be tested by the principle of unselfishness. Socialism says, What's yours is mine. Christianity, on the other hand, says, What's mine is yours. There is a world of difference between these two sentiments. They represent principles that are as unlike as light and darkness.

The best and highest form of democracy is found in Christianity alone. It is Christianity that the world needs,—Christianity for the working men, to bring them into an unselfish attitude toward their employers and toward each other, and Christianity for the men of wealth, to bring a similar change in their attitude toward their fellows. The application of the principle of unselfishness to the dealings of men with each other, would solve every problem of labor and capital in a single day.

But so long as the principle of selfishness is embodied in these dealings, these problems will remain unsolved, in spite of all the measures that can be devised by all the labor combines, the trusts, and similar organizations on the earth.

Christianity—the application of the principle of unselfishness to the individual life, is no Utopian dream. It is a divine reality, set up by its Author right amidst all the unfeeling selfishness of earth, and one which all may know. Let us work to spread it among men, and to usher in the day when it will be universal over all the world.

THE problem of securing an improvement in “public morality” by means which will not make the people any better individually, is one upon which any amount of energy can be expended without effecting the slightest results.

A Stumbling Block to the Jews.

BY F. C. GILBERT.

ABOUT two years ago the writer was engaged in the city of Boston, doing evangelistic work among the Jews. At this time there was a hearing before the railroad commissioners by the Massachusetts “Sabbath Protective League,” to see if they would not decrease the traffic on the railroads of New England on Sunday. While waiting in the ante-room, several of the Sunday-law workers came in, and we soon entered into a conversation. Quite a prominent one among them remarked that he thought it was very necessary that we have good operative Sunday laws. The following conversation then took place (W. means the writer; S. L. W. Sunday-law worker):—

W.—“There is one feature about this Sunday-law movement that you people ought to take into consideration; and whether you are aware of it or no, this law is working a great deal of evil, and is a great hindrance to converting the Jew.”

S. L. W.—“Why so? All we want is they should keep one day. I suppose they do observe their Sabbath, but then they ought to respect our Christian institutions.”

W.—“But is it not unjust to compel them to observe a day in which they have no faith, especially since they have kept a day they believe they ought to worship God upon?”

S. L. W.—“Well, I suppose if they keep that day conscientiously, some allowance should be made for such; but those who do not observe the day should be obliged to abstain from labor.”

W.—“But will not such a course be unjust? How can you tell whether they keep the day conscientiously or no? Some of them might close their stores and lower their blinds on Saturday, yet sell goods with the blinds drawn; then on Sunday open their stores wide, claiming they have a right so to do, as they kept the Sabbath. Do you not see then that it would revive the days of New England inquisition, as you will not only have to watch them as to how they observe the day, but also have to resort to measures to learn whether they kept the day conscientiously?”

S. L. W.—“I know it is a hard question to settle, but then we cannot let our Sunday laws be dead letters and inoperative to accommodate them.”

W.—“But, beyond all this, it is a very unchristian thing, and causes them to look with displeasure upon Christianity. You admit they are a very respectable class, law-abiding citizens. They believe they have a God-given right, according to the Constitution, to work any day or all days as they see fit. They endeavor to live up to their citizen rights; and in addition to that we try to lead them to Christ, by telling them that the gospel of Christianity is God’s love-power to save them from sin, and to help them lead better lives. And to this end Christian people are working, that the Jew might realize that Christ is his friend, and Christianity is the truth. But the Jew says, ‘You believe in Christ, and those people also who are making Sunday laws. Do you tell me that that kind of religion is better than the Jewish, and a religion of love that would compel us to do what is contrary to the teachings of your own Bible and your own Christ? Here you people are seeking to compel us to desist from a day’s labor each week,—you who profess to be Christians, who come to us with the gospel,—which the Constitution of this country gives us right to perform, and which the founders of this country—Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and others—never thought would happen in this land? It is unjust; it is depriving us of our rights to “life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.” Do you think that, if that is the way you treat us, we want anything to do with Christianity?’”

S. L. W.—“Well, it does not look just right, and I can see there is a just excuse there; and it might have a tendency to make evangelization quite difficult among them. Something ought to be done for them, if that is the case. What would you suggest for a remedy, if you have thought of anything?”

W.—“To my mind there is only one thing that suggests itself, and this would remedy the evil not only with the Jews, but with all people who recognize the unjustice of this thing. For it certainly is a violation of natural right, as every man has a right to do as he pleases, with regard to his working on any day, or upon all days. My suggestion is that the entire system of Sunday laws be abolished.”

S. L. W.—“What! Abolish all our Sabbath laws!! I do not care for the Jew; I do not care for Washington, Jefferson, Madison, or any one else! This is a Christian nation, and we intend to maintain all our Sabbath laws.”

Is such a course Christian? Does it have a tendency to lead souls to the meek and lowly Jesus? Is the fruit that of the Spirit? It needs no reply. If this is a sample of the Christianity of this “Christian nation,” and it is, then is such a religion the religion of Christ? “By their fruits ye shall know them.”

It is reported from Russia that the Czar has granted full pardon to 200 Lutheran pastors of the Baltic provinces, who, on a variety of charges, have been deprived of their churches and deported to other parts of the empire.

Right All Round.

BY FANNIE BOLTON.

Now here is a saying I wish to propound,
That is worthy of study, and pleasant of sound,
A gem of a saying that somebody found,
Worth all you will pay for it, pennies or pound,—
A right is a right all around.

Right fits on a king that sits high on a throne,
Right fits on a peasant who lives all alone,
Right fits on the earth, nor will make a soul groan,
Right fits in high heaven's ethereal zone;
A right is a right all around.

When things go to punching the weak or the strong,
There's something got in there that doesn't belong,
And it doesn't fit art, and it doesn't fit song,
And it galls every sorrow, and aggravates wrong;
But right is a right all around.

Things get into discords, and peace goes away.
The work done by Labor has too little pay,
And Capital gloats and takes too large a sway,
Yet there's only one pattern to follow, men say,
And it's right that is right all around.

Grim Might takes full presidency over the weak,
Forbids them to act, then forbids them to speak,
Then thought is encumbered, and men may not seek,
Then Might chains itself, when it follows its freak,
But a right is a right all around.

There is law, falsely called so, to imprison the just,
There's a stench from the past with its mold and its must,
There's the shades of the martyrs from graves of their dust,
And the shriek of the lost for betrayal of trust;
But a right is a right all around.

Right gives every soul the full right of the soul,
Its own marvelous destiny still to control,
To follow all holiness on to its goal,—
The right for the one that is right for the whole,
The right that is right all around.

Right places her feet on the solid old ground,
For right is one word, one sweet word I have found
That measures up men, earth, and heaven profound,
And it's "LOVE," and you know it is pleasant of sound,
And it's right that is right all around.

The Place of Liberty.*

BY JOHN D. BRADLEY.

"YET know withal
Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost."
—Michael to Adam, "Paradise Lost."

To me the word "liberty" has always been precious.

It seems to possess a sweetness, a nobility, and an inspiration, that is found in no other. I think there is no heart in which it fails to awaken a response. This sentiment is confined to no country and to no age. It has been felt by men everywhere, even when they were tyrants themselves. Cicero, the orator of an arrogant and imperious class, exclaims, "O Liberty! O sound once delightful to every Roman ear!"

Men have thus shown their desire for that to which they are entitled by divine and inalienable right. Liberty—freedom from unjust restraint—is the right of every individual. No one is so unworthy that he has no claim to it, and no one is so well situated that he can afford to dispense with it.

Law, enforced by civil government, has been the means universally employed by men for the protection of their liberties. They have realized to some extent the truth that liberty is not found in lawlessness, but is the result of conformity to just laws.

Many and various have been the forms of government, and but few have appeared to give satisfaction. After long and bitter experience the world has decided that the rule of one, or of a privileged few, is incompatible with public liberty. Monarchies and aristocracies are generally regarded as synonyms of oppression. It is now the prevailing opinion of mankind that the representative system of government furnishes the true remedy. A democracy, administered by popular suffrage, combined with a reasonable degree of intelligence on the part of the people, is thought to be the conservator of liberty. No inhabitant of this country, even if he does not entertain such an opinion, has had an opportunity to remain ignorant of its existence. We have heard of the triumphs of democracy and the glories of free institutions upon every occasion. It is thought that this system annihilates despotism and strikes terror into the hearts of tyrants.

I wish first to inquire if this position is well taken. Are democracies the guardians of liberty? Do they accomplish that, in the accomplishment of which all other systems have failed? If such is the case, then we need look no further for the abode of liberty.

This system is not an untried one, nor is it one with which history is entirely unacquainted. In order to reach an intelligent conclusion, I shall make a brief examination of the four great democracies of which it speaks,—Greece and Rome, the greatest of antiquity, and France and the United States, the two most prominent of modern times.

Of the states of Greece, Sparta and Athens are most noted for their free institutions. But we find that their liberty was, for the most part, at the mercy of artful and unprincipled demagogues of the Alcibiadean type, who cared for nothing but their own elevation. To accomplish this they produced dissensions among the people, or by their eloquent appeals, persuaded them to subjugate and tyrannize over neighboring peoples. For the same purpose they stirred up a jealousy between these two states, and

* The writer of this article, or address (as it was originally presented), was asked to take part upon the program of a literary society and was left to choose his own subject. He naturally chose that in which he was most interested, and has made a feeble effort to set forth a principle which he feels confident is supported both by the divine word and the record of all human experience. The subject embraces so much that an attempt to cover the ground must necessarily be but an attempt, and the reader will have to be content here with a very brief sketch—a mere synopsis. But if he desires to read in full, let him turn to history and to the Word.

civil war ensued, finally resulting in the destruction of all the Grecian republics. Weakened by their own jealousies and strifes, they became an easy prey to the ambition of Philip, and soon groveled at the feet of Alexander. The Achaean League was the last struggle of freedom, and then Rome declared their independence—the independence of slaves. Thus they were brought to a condition of servitude by their own selfishness and strife, and became a prey to others.

It has been said that the Romans possessed the faculty of self-government beyond any people of whom we have historical knowledge. Certain it is, that the Roman republic, covering a period of nearly five hundred years, affords lessons on the workings of popular governments to be found nowhere else. Never has the power and administration of the government resided more fully in the hands of the people. The unwritten constitution of Rome allowed the people every opportunity for asserting and maintaining their authority. They were the legislators themselves, and in their assembled capacity constituted the court of final resort. If there was ever a time when men might have demonstrated their ability to govern themselves and to establish liberty and equality upon lasting foundations, it was here. But what was the case? As long as freedom meant to them, "not freedom to do what they pleased, but what was right" in their treatment of each other, all went well. But a change came. Equality ceased to give satisfaction. Men desired more; they wished to dominate. When distinctions of birth ceased to secure the desired end, distinctions of wealth were created. "To obtain money and office became the universal passion." "The free forms of the constitution became themselves the instruments of corruption." The elections, the laws, and all the machinery of government were made to minister to the greed and ambition of individuals. Liberty and justice became mockeries. I need not here recount the internal dissensions and strife, the oppression and robbery of provinces, and the final destruction of the republic. It is sufficient to say in the language of Froude, that "a constitutional government the most enduring and the most powerful that ever existed, was put on trial and found wanting." Wanting, because men refused to grant to others what they desired for themselves, and they found the law exactly fulfilled, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Upon the ruins of the republic arose one of the strongest and most tyrannical despotisms that ever existed. It is said that the citizens of Rome always detested the name king. But men sometimes detest themselves in others. At any rate the republic appeared to develop no end of Tarquins, who came little behind him in cruelty.

Nowhere has the doctrine of equality and the rights of the people been asserted with greater vehemence and carried to greater lengths in theory than in the French Republic which arose from the ruins of the Bourbon monarchy. Yet, at the same time, in no democracy has there been less freedom for the individual. Under the rule of the sovereign mob "came those days when the most barbarous of all codes was administered by the most barbarous of all tribunals; when no man could greet his neighbor or say his prayers without danger of committing a capital offense." Liberty and license became synonymous, and the most sanguinary of all despotisms reigned under the mild and innocent quaternion, "virtue, fraternity, liberty, and equality." Madame Roland, on ascending the scaffold, exclaimed, "O liberty! what crimes are committed in thy name!"

It did not take long to reach the same result there that came to the states of Greece and the republic of Rome. The golden age of Pericles was succeeded by the absolute sway of Alexander; the free institutions of Rome made way for the oppression of the Cæsars; and now the "rights of man" were centered in one man, and Napoleon became dictator of France.

The history of France from the overthrow of the monarchy to the establishment of the first empire, though short, contains the story of every democracy. In the short space of a few years are crowded the lessons of centuries. It affords a complete example of the working of human nature and its inevitable result, which is bound to appear sooner or later in any government, however free be its institutions.

(To be continued.)

Home Religion vs. State Religion.

"Bible Echo," Melbourne, Aus.

THAT there is great moral declension at the present time few will deny. Lying, theft, murder, and adultery are rampant everywhere. But the true cause of this state of things few understand, and the remedy for it is not discerned by many.

Some, as the National Scripture Education League, of Victoria, attribute the growing immorality to the fact that religion is not taught in the state schools. But this is plainly not the cause, for where it is taught in the state schools precisely as they demand it, as in New South Wales, crime is on the increase as well as where it is not so taught.

The real trouble is, religion does not dwell in the hearts of the people, and therefore it is not taught by the parents to their children in their homes. The parents themselves are lawless, and have not the fear of God in their hearts, and their sins and sinful neglect are appearing in their children.

If there was home religion, no one would have any occasion to talk about state religion. Home religion means something. State religion is a sham. Home religion means personal religion. State religion is an attempt to make men religious by wholesale and without any conviction or conversion on the part of the people individually.

Two Ways of Reform.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

EVERY one who has read Longfellow's poem, "The Saga of King Olaf," has doubtless been amused, to say the least, at the descriptions of the missionary operations of Olaf the king. These efforts were warlike, and they were entirely in accord with the spirit of the church of Rome in that day.

Two quotations, one from each of two poems, which are parts of the "Saga," show how missionary enterprises were carried on at that time. After having described the killing of Iron Beard, the leader of the heathen, the poem continues:—

"King Olaf from the doorway spoke;
Choose ye between two things, my folk,
To be baptized or given up to slaughter.

"And seeing their leader stark and dead,
The people with a murmur said,
O king, baptize us with thy holy water.

"So all the Drontheim land became A Christian land in name and fame."

Again, urged on by a bishop, King Olaf went on another "missionary" trip against a heathen pirate, whom he took prisoner.

"Then said Olaf, O thou sea-king.
Little time have we for speaking;
Choose between the good and evil;
Be baptized or thou shalt die."

But this kind of preaching had little effect upon the heathen. Hence we read:—

"But in scorn the heathen scoffer
Answered, I disdain thine offer,
Neither fear I God nor devil,
Thee and thy gospel I defy."

The "heathen scoffer" was then compelled to swallow a venomous adder; and, as might be expected,—

"Then baptized they all that region,
Swarthy Lapp and fair Norwegian,—
Far as swims the salmon, leaping
Up the streams of Salten's Fiord.

"In their temples Thor and Odin
Lay in dust and ashes trodden,
As King Olaf onward sweeping,
Preached the gospel with his sword."

Preached with the sword! We accuse Mohammed and Mohammedans of preaching that way, but a great deal that has passed for Christianity has been proclaimed in the same way. Many of Rome's victories were achieved in this manner. In this way greater apparent results could be achieved than in the slow, laborious, and difficult work of teaching the people and inculcating the principles of faith, sobriety, and honesty.

Of Bonnivard, the great patriot of Switzerland, whom Byron has immortalized in his poem, "The Prisoner of Chillon," an historian has said: "He mistrusted the plan Rome had hit on of regenerating men in tribes and clans, and preferred to have it done individually."* And that is to say that he preferred to have it done after the true Christian and apostolic manner.

At the present time there is a most persistent attempt being made to make this nation Christian by some change in our organic law. But who first devised the plan of making nations Christians in whole masses? Why, it was Rome who first conceived the idea of "regenerating men in tribes and clans;" and hence we are suffering just now from a revival of the spirit of Romanism, which, under a Protestant guise, is following in Rome's footsteps.

Unquestionably Christ was the greatest reformer that was ever upon this earth; and his apostles, following his methods, and imbued with his Spirit, carried the work forward. They labored to regenerate individuals, and they were eminently successful in their work. Was not their way of reform a better way than the way introduced by Rome, which is now being advocated by certain would-be Protestant reformers?

Sunday Closing and Temperance in England.

BY E. J. WAGGONER.

SPEAKING recently of the Sunday-closing bill, which is now the chief object of "temperance" zeal, the Bishop of Norwich, while favoring it, did not think that at present it is practicable, in that it is "one-sided and partial legislation," applying only to the poor, and leaving the rich free to drink as much as they please. He said, moreover, that his personal experience taught him that "no person would more heartily welcome a very great restriction on Sunday opening—say to quite a short period in the middle of the day—than the great bulk of honest and right-thinking publicans themselves."

But nobody ever yet heard of a publican of any kind who was in favor of a diminution in the drink traffic, any more than of a clothing merchant who was in favor of people wearing less clothing and a less expensive sort. So the very fact that publicans can be cited as favoring the Sunday closing of public houses, shows that it is in no sense whatever a temperance measure.

Instead of being a temperance measure, the Sunday-closing effort is in reality an attempt to build up Sunday observance at the expense of temperance reform. The whole tendency of the agitation is to teach people that there is nothing inherently wrong in the liquor traffic, but that the evil consists in carrying it on on Sundays. To illustrate: A mother sees her little boy playing ball on Sunday, and being a devout Sunday observer, says, "John, you must not play ball to-day; it is Sunday." John understands perfectly well that his mother has no objection to ball-playing in itself, but only to Sunday play. But suppose John were worrying a kitten, and his mother should say, "You ought not to worry that kitten to-day, my boy, it is Sunday;" could he think anything else than that it was perfectly allowable to worry kittens on other days than Sunday?

It may be urged that if the public can be educated up to the point of accepting the restriction of the liquor traffic to the last six days of the week, it will be a long step toward getting them to see that it should be suppressed altogether. If this were true, then it would apply to all other business. No; all that can be won by the Sunday-closing agitation is more homage to the Sunday. If there were in it any real recognition of the evil of the liquor traffic, then the man who saw the point would be opposed to the traffic every day. Sin is sin, no matter on what day of the week it is committed. If a man commits a murder, the sin is not enhanced by the fact that the deed was done on the Sabbath. It is a fact that many things are lawful on the six working days of the week which are not lawful on the Sabbath day, and many of those who believe that Sunday is the Sabbath are laboring hard to put liquor-selling in that list. If they wish to teach the stricter observance of Sunday, they have that right, but let them not delude themselves with the idea that they are furthering the cause of temperance.

* "History of Protestantism," Vol II, p. 241.

London, Eng.

“Let.”

BY J. E. EVANS.

WEBSTER defines the word “let” to mean, “To give leave or power by a positive act; . . . to withhold restraint; not to prevent; to permit, allow, suffer.” The word is found in Isa. 55:7, where the Lord says, “Let the wicked forsake his way.”

The thought thus expressed is the correct basis for all missionary work. There are many other scriptural terms which have the same import, such as “come,” “accept,” “choose.” All of God’s requirements are of the nature of an invitation, not in the least arbitrary, but admonitions to seek that which infinite wisdom sees is the best thing for us. Every requirement is a privilege, and every privilege, when accepted, is a blessing.

These blessings are personal in their application, and their enjoyment does not depend upon the will of majorities. Their reception and enjoyment in no way interferes with the rights of the receiver or any one else. Thus it is not necessary for the Christian to surrender any of his rights to secure to any other Christian, or society of Christians, certain rights. Therefore the idea that we must legislate for the good of the majority, even if such legislation does prescribe the religious conduct of the minority, is false. No rights are taken from any one upon becoming a Christian, and in the full enjoyment of all his rights he does not interfere with the rights of any other man. In this lies the difference between the kingdom of Christ and the kingdoms of earth—between religious and civil governments.

In a civil government the lawless and the disobedient must be kept within the bounds of civility by the power of law; but in the kingdom of Christ, which he declared “is not of this world,” law is only the rule of obedience, not the power. Love is the power which constrains the subject of this kingdom to obey. Therefore, any society that uses law to compel obedience, though it be a church society, is of the human order; and in thus working reveals to the world that it is without the drawing power of the love of Christ.

He is undertaking a useless task who seeks to enforce a law, unless he is qualified to interpret that law and possesses the power to decide upon the nature and extent of the crime; and has also the right to decide the full penalty for each violation. This would be to make man supreme in all matters religious as well as civil. Such was the work undertaken by the church and state combined in the fourth century, the evil results of which may be seen by all who will carefully consider the record of its doings.

Compulsion is foreign to the nature and precepts of Christ; nor is it natural to those who are partakers of the divine nature.

To all, then, who desire to work for Christ, we would suggest this scripture as a motto, “Let the wicked forsake his way.” Do not seek to compel him, for it is possible that that is wrong which we seek to enforce. This is certainly the case in the enforcement of the first day of the week as the Sabbath. God’s word nowhere enjoins it; and even if it did, it would not be according to the gospel to compel any one to obey.

The wrong becomes twofold when those professing to work for Christ employ false methods to support that which in itself is wrong. O how much better it would be to work upon the principle of the following scriptural injunctions: “Choose ye this day whom ye will serve.” “Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.” “And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely.” “He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith.” “Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church.”

The gospel is an invitation, and “by many infallible proofs” has God given us evidence of his love. From the foregoing considerations it will be seen that if man has the right, and it is incumbent upon him, to enforce one’s religious duty, then he has the same right, and it is equally binding upon him, to compel obedience to all other requirements of the same nature. But this would be to make man supreme—to put him in the place of God. It would be infinitely better, and more successful for us, if, with hearts quickened by the presence of the love of God, we would say to the wrong-doer, “Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.”

New Orleans, La.

No more beautiful tribute could be paid to the memory of a man than this one which, among others, was fittingly sent to the relatives of the late Hon. Neal Dow, on the occasion of his decease,—“He left the land he loved more safe for every little child.”

"GREATER NEW YORK" has held its first municipal election, and the result is the return of "Tammany" to the seat of power. There are several features of the campaign which are worthy of note.

IN the first place, it may be observed that the chief issue of the campaign was that of popular government against government by a dictator. It seems that quite a large portion of the citizens, knowing this to be a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," became possessed of the idea that the government of "Greater New York" ought to be run by the people of the city, instead of by a "boss," who might not even reside in the city at all. They believed, in other words, that under this government it was their natural prerogative to manage their own affairs; and they accordingly set out to do so. By way of gaining the benefits of organization, they formed a "Citizens' Union."

BUT this independent politics found itself opposed by party politics. The people were told that not their own interests, but the interests of the "party," was the first thing to be considered in their election. In other words, the election must be managed primarily for the benefit of the "party," and whether the people were to reap the benefits from it which they desired, was wholly a secondary consideration.

CONNECTED with the machinery of the "party"—in this State—was a leading representative of that class, who, under the old Roman government, were known as dictators. These dictators—for whom the nomenclature of the times has supplied the term "boss"—differ from the dictators of ancient Rome in being self-appointed and irresponsible, but not greatly in the extent of their power. Not to dictate the prominent candidates to be voted for by those of his own political "faith," was of course very distasteful to the "boss." He determined that it should be made apparent that the principle of "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" does not apply to local elections. The precedent must be firmly established that no politics will be allowed to be successful which disconnects from the "party" and the party "boss."

ACCORDINGLY, the dictator put a ticket of his own in the field; not in the hope that any of his candidates would be elected, but solely for the purpose of defeating the audacious effort of the "citizens' union" to institute local self-government; and, incidentally, of letting the people understand that the science of politics, in this part of the country at least, has progressed beyond the point where such an effort can be successful.

THE result was the triumphant success of the dictator form of government, under the aegis of an opposing political party. It was better that government by dictatorship should triumph, even at the sacrifice of party success, than that there should be a triumph of popular government. Such is the view of the political "boss." The man in possession of autocratic power holds that possession above every other consideration. It is not human nature to do otherwise.

THE dictator who achieved success in the electoral contest, is a man who but recently returned to this country from a sojourn abroad, which is said to have been largely spent at the English race tracks. It seems to be getting quite the fashion for men who acquire wealth and political distinction here to make the Old World—and especially England—their recreation ground, and to spend only so much of their time in this country as is necessary for a proper attention to "business." Considering the facts which confront us, we may without any great stretch of imagination, contemplate the time when our "rulers" will return from across the water only for the purpose of dictating our politics and setting up their men in office, and having thus attended to "business," will hie them back again to the shores and society which they find more congenial to their tastes.

THIS triumph of dictatorial government was "by the people." By their votes the people deliberately sanctioned and put it into effect. And thus they have themselves proclaimed, in effect, that in this leading city of the Union, we have come in the evolution of politics to the place where "government of the people, by the people," and government by dictatorship mean one and the same thing.

To him who can read the signs of the times, there is in all this a plain omen of a transition through which government is rapidly passing in this country, and one which is eliminating the features of republican government and substituting in their place the features of a despotism. It is not difficult to conjecture that when the evils under which the people are suffering, and which the prevailing system of government seems rather to foster than relieve, shall have progressed beyond a certain point, the people will welcome a monarchy in some form which shall promise the needed relief. History testifies that it must be so. *

THE campaign of Henry George, as the representative of Jeffersonian democracy, was by no means the least striking feature of the contest. His scathing denunciation of the party "bosses" and specific charges of base veniality against well-known judges of the State courts, were in themselves extraordinary incidents. But when we consider them in connection with the extraordinary homage paid him, after his sudden death, by all classes of the people, they become still more significant. Do the people believe these charges to be true? If so, do they care anything about them? or have they ceased to feel any concern over visible corruption in the offices of public trust? If they do not believe them, why do they hold the man who so emphatically uttered them entitled to the homage of a hero-martyr? *

It may not be out of place in this connection to notice some of the statements which the heat of a campaign generally brings out, relative to the duty of voting. For instance, it was urged upon the readers of one of the leading city dailies that, "If you fail to vote, you betray your trust as a citizen." What one's "trust as a citizen" is, was not specified, though it may be presumed it was considered to be too well understood to need specifying. It will be generally admitted, no doubt, that the man who lives a life which contributes to the welfare of his fellow men, contributes his just proportion to the support of the State, and by word and example contributes to the general peace and safety, and to the stability of good government, performs the part of a good citizen. But all this will be done by every true Christian, because he is such, irrespective of the question whether he is a voter or not. *

BUT the argument put forth by this newspaper, taken in connection with certain facts, suggests one or two queries which might properly be made in reply. In almost immediate connection with it the statement was made that "the only issue [in the campaign] is between government by the people and government by dictators." This was said in view of the certainty that a great many votes would be cast for that which represented government by dictators. Now all those casting such votes were, by the argument in question, true to their trust as citizens. In other words, the fulfilment of their trust as citizens required that they should seek the overthrow of "government by the people," and the setting up of government by a dictator! It is only necessary to add that an argument which proves too much proves nothing at all. *

THE argument will have to be qualified so as to say not only that "if you fail to vote," but if you fail to vote the right ticket, "you betray your trust as a citizen." This is really what the statement means. But this only brings us to the question, Which one is the right ticket? Where is the infallible gospel of political salvation, the ten-commandment code of political ethics? There are a great many tickets in the field, and each one claims to represent the cause of right and justice. And as only a small proportion of citizens support any one of them, it may be said upon the authority of this argument that the great majority of citizens are unfaithful to their trust as such. But this, again, proves more than the political arguer is willing to admit. *

THERE is only one sure way of being always true to one's trust in every sphere of life, whether that of citizenship or any other; and that is to be always a genuine Christian. Being guided by a wisdom and a Spirit infinitely higher than those of fallen humanity, the Christian makes no mistake in the side which he espouses. He is found ever on the side which tends to the elevation of his fellow men,—the side of peace, of justice, and of truth,—whether these be represented by any ticket in the political field or not.

The Wickedness of Sunday Joy.

"New York Sun."

THE law under which a number of Harvard students were arrested for playing golf on Sunday reads as follows: "Whoever is present at a game, sport, play, or public diversion, except a concert of sacred music or an entertainment given by a religious or charitable society, the proceeds of which, if any, are to be devoted exclusively to a religious or charitable purpose, upon the Lord's day, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5." It is clear from this that the supreme test of the impropriety lies in this—if the culprit is enjoying himself, he is doing wrong; if he isn't, it is all right.

An Inconsistent Lament.

"Sabbath Recorder," November 1.

THE Christian Endeavor societies of Illinois lately held a convention in Chicago. It represented thirty-four denominations, the "Disciples" leading, as to the number of societies represented. In the matter of resolutions the convention "lamented the vast amount of Sabbath desecration" in Illinois and elsewhere, and yet these same "Disciples" who formed so prominent a factor in the convention are untiring in teaching no-Sabbathism. It is their ever ready weapon against God's law and his Sabbath. Having thus done what they can to ignore God in the matter, they "resolve" to "lament" the desecration of Sunday!! How wise and consistent!

Humbug!

"The Truth Seeker," New York.

"WHENEVER Sabbath-breaking is punished, it is on the ground that Sunday is a day of rest established by the state—not by the church—and that its violation interferes with their day of rest by other citizens."—News and Courier, Charleston, S. C.

The statement is absurd. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred where arrests are made for violation of the Sunday law there has been no disturbance of any citizen's rest. The rest theory is a pretext for enforcing a law of the church by the machinery of the state. It disturbs no person's rest when a man plows in his field, or sells goods in his store, or goes hunting in the woods, or offers fruit or gimcracks for sale upon the street. . . . A law designed to promote rest would prohibit work and the running of machinery at night, not on Sundays.

In a circular which Archbishop Corrigan, the leading Catholic prelate in New York, caused to be read in all the Catholic churches on October 17, he says:—

"The signs of the times show danger signals in the fast rising flood of socialism and anarchy, and thinking men the world over find the greatest bulwark against these dangers in the conservative principles and doctrines of the Catholic Church."

Was it a mere coincidence that this circular was read a few days previous to election, one of the tickets in the field being in support of what are considered as socialist ideas? Hardly, we think, notwithstanding the oft-given assurance from the spokesmen of Rome that "the church" never has anything to do with politics. Perhaps the archbishop thought that this reading of his circular would have a suspicious appearance of being a political "deal," for it was put forth ostensibly as a reply to documents which it avers have been lately circulated teaching opposition to "politico-ecclesiasticism," but which it has been ascertained were never heard of by the people before.

THE REV. THOMAS A. HOYT, a Philadelphia pastor, on a recent Sunday preached to his congregation on the subject of Sunday desecration, and among other things (as reported in the Philadelphia Times) said:—

"If we ask ourselves if we regard this day with true reverence, will we find ourselves guiltless? Will we not find, perhaps, that we have fallen into a loose way of considering it, when Holy Scripture tells us that we should consecrate the entire day to God? Let us consider this carefully, remembering the promise of the Redeemer: 'If you keep this day holy, I will cause you to ride on the high places of the earth.'"

But what use would there be in making amends as regards the loose way of observing the day, while being so loose as regards the day itself? When one is so "loose" in observing the Sabbath commandment as not even to get hold of the right day to be observed, he is only wasting time and effort in considering remedies to be applied to the manner of its observance.

DR. P. S. HENSON, of Chicago, a prominent clergyman and zealous advocate of Sunday laws, is quoted as having recently said, in justification of a series of sermons he was to preach on the ten commandments:—

"It is time that Sinai be heard from again. We have urgent need to-day to consider the foundation of law, or religion, if you please. There is contempt of law all over the land. The records show an alarming and unprecedented increase of crime all over the land."

Yes; it is indeed time that the world hear again from Mt. Sinai, and nothing shows the necessity for this more than the fact that men like Dr. Henson, who stand as the instructors of the people in religious truth, teach and practice squarely contrary to the law spoken from Sinai in the vitally important matter of observing the Sabbath. For that law says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." But the first day, and not the seventh, is the one which receives almost universal homage as the day of rest.

When lawlessness is taught from the pulpit, it is small wonder that it is practiced in the streets.

It has been painfully amusing to witness the tenacity with which the various candidates in the city election just held here grasped at "straws" in the hope of strengthening their chances of election. One of these was the official announcement by one of the leading "reformer" candidates that the people of the city, in case of his election, would be treated to a "liberal Sunday." This was a bid for the foreign element who have in some instances rather lax ideas in regard to Sunday observance.

In the due course of events we seem to have reached the time when it is again in order to announce the discovery of an "authentic" document of supreme historic interest; and accordingly we are informed that there has just been found, in the famous library of the Vatican, the "long-lost report" of Pontius Pilate covering the events relating to the crucifixion, and from which it appears that if Pilate had only secured some much-needed reinforcements one day sooner than he did, the crucifixion would not have happened. It is a very interesting document, beyond a doubt; but perhaps the Vatican would be willing to part with it for a sufficient cash consideration.

TOMMY.—Papa, what is England and France and those nations goin' to do with all the armies and guns and ships they are gettin', that you read about in the paper this morning?

PAPA.—Why, my boy, they are getting ready to give the great Christian "concert of Europe."

God the Author of Liberty.

IN our national hymn we sing,—

"Our father's God, to thee Author of liberty," etc.

The truth which these words affirm—that God is the author of liberty—rests upon the fact that God is the father of the human race.

Liberty means nothing to the individual deprived of all resources. God has all resources at his command, and is therefore the real author and custodian of all liberty.

The strongest and wisest of men are not able to supply themselves with the resources necessary to a single hour of life; and without life, liberty is nothing.

Men are neither omnipotent nor omniscient. They do not provide the air they breathe, nor the water they drink. Yet it is very common for people to imagine that they can get along entirely independent of that Intelligence and Power by which these things were provided; that, indeed, they will not enjoy full liberty in any other way.

We very often see the expression "free thought," which is meant to convey the idea by those using it that no thought is free except that which springs wholly from the exercise of their own human minds.

What is there free about such thought? Thought, like an individual, is free in proportion to the extent of the range through which its powers can carry it. Is the range of "free thought" any greater than that of other thought?

Can the ignorant savage do more to extend his range of thought than the educated white man can do for him? Can finite man do more for himself in the same line than can be done for him by the infinite God?

We are the children of God. In proportion to his knowledge and power, our own abilities are far less than are the wisdom and power of an infant as compared with its parents. If we can enjoy liberty without God, the infant can do the same independently of parental care.

But the infant left to its own resources very quickly comes to grief. It is natural for it to prefer its own way to that of its parents, but its own way would lead only to disaster. Left to itself, it would soon be deprived of all liberty in any form.

But by wise parental care and instruction, the child is brought day by day into a more perfect knowledge and enjoyment of liberty. And when it has received all in this direction that its parents can give it, it can still go on indefinitely under the care of its Father in heaven. And God has fixed no limit to this process.

God would not have his children always bound by the limited powers and faculties which they possess here in this life. He designs that they shall have bodies and minds filled with an imperishable vigor. He purposes for them a continual growth in knowledge that will never end.

And with this continual expansion of the faculties, this continual enlargement of the range of their power, and therefore of their freedom, there will ever be written more clearly upon all minds the mighty truth—God the Author of liberty.

Politics and Citizenship.

"HELLO, Will," exclaimed Fred Hammond one morning, upon suddenly meeting his young friend, Willie Dean. "Say," he continued, "who are you goin' to vote for? I mean," he added, recollecting that neither of them were yet of voting age, "who would you vote for if you were old enough?"

"Oh, I don't know," answered Willie, with some hesitation; "I never thought very much about politics."

It was the day before election, and political excitement was running high in the city where they lived.

"I know who I'd vote for," said Fred; "I'm a Republican," he added, with the air of one making a very important statement.

"What makes you a Republican?" Willie asked.

"Why," exclaimed Fred, "because that's the right party; my pa's a Republican, and he knows all about what to vote for."

"What does the Republican party believe?" queried Willie.

"Oh, I don't know exactly; something about the tariff, though, I guess," was Fred's answer.

"But how do you know you're a Republican, if you don't know what the party believes?"

"Well, I'm a Republican, anyway; my pa's a Republican, and that's reason enough for me."

"I don't see very much reason in that," observed Willie. "My pa's a Democrat, and he says everybody ought to vote that ticket. For my part," he added, "I never could see much use in going into politics anyway."

"Why," exclaimed Fred, in a tone of surprise, "you're not a good citizen if you don't vote. My school-teacher told us that when we had our brigade drill, the other day. He said that people who did n't vote were no better than traitors."

"Well, I don't see as voting makes much difference with that. I heard two men talking politics on the corner yesterday, and they got to disputing about it, and one of them said everybody who did n't vote the straight party ticket, as I believe he called it, was a traitor. So I guess politics doesn't save anybody from being called a traitor.

"And I should think," added Willie, after a moment's pause, "that if I voted wrong, it would be worse than if I didn't vote at all. Lots of people vote for saloons, and gambling houses, and such things. Wouldn't it be better if such people didn't vote?"

"Oh, I don't know about that," said Fred, rather dubiously. "But anyway," he added, more confidently, "that's just why good people ought to go into politics, so as to prevent the bad people from running things. I heard the minister say that in his sermon last Sunday."

"Well," observed Willie, "my mother says there are a great many more bad people in the country than good people; and I think she's right about it, too. She most always knows about anything that she talks about."

"Of course," he continued, "she didn't mean bad people such as those that murder and steal and have to be sent to jail, but people who are bad enough to vote for things that are bad,—like the saloon, you know. I guess there must be more people who want saloons than there are who don't want them, because they can't shut them up by vote, and even where they do vote to do so, they go on running just about the same."

"My pa don't believe in prohibition," observed Fred. "He says it's nobody's business what people drink."

"Neither does mine," said Willie; "but my mother does; she belongs to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She says everybody ought to vote for prohibition."

"I heard pa say yesterday that the prohibition vote wouldn't amount to much. Hardly anybody votes for that now," was Fred's comment.

"That's what I was saying," said Willie; "if people who don't want saloons and such things are so much fewer than the people who do want them, or who are willing to have them, I don't see how they're going to keep the bad people from running things by voting. There's got to be something to make the people better, I guess, before the government can get any better. That's what my uncle said to me the other day, and he said people couldn't be made any better by voting. He said the only way to make people better was to get them converted, and that the preachers ought to be preaching to convert people, instead of preaching to tell people how they ought to vote."

"Maybe that's so," said Fred. "I guess the preachers don't know so much about politics as they think they do; anyway, they can't preach politics out of the Bible, and I agree that they ought to stick to the Bible and let other things alone. But I'm on an errand now, and I guess I'll have to be going. Good-bye."

"Good-bye," answered Willie; "I'll see you again pretty soon," he called after Fred's retreating figure, "and I'm going to find out all I can about what are the duties of citizens. But I believe," he added to himself, "that my uncle was right when he said that people who live good lives and are kind and helpful to everybody around them, are a great deal better citizens than the people who are always talking about saving the country by their votes."

A Good Book at Half Price.

Bible Readings for the Home Circle.—This book comprises 162 readings for public and private study, and answers nearly three thousand questions on religious topics, practical, historical, and prophetic. The work is profusely and beautifully illustrated, and contains 600 octavo pages, printed on a superior quality of tinted paper, embellished with 57 full-page engravings and 170 ornamental headings, together with 10 full-page scriptural and prophetic diagrams, 3 colored plates, and other attractive features. This book, when perfect, never sells for less than the regular price, which is $2. We have a number of these which are very slightly damaged, and we propose to give our patrons a benefit by our loss. These books are nice enough for any library, and just the thing to lend to friends for perusal. We will close them out at $1 and postage 25 cents.

Card.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

Sunbeams of Health and Temperance.

This is a unique work in which the author has undertaken to present a vast amount of interesting information in such a manner as to be not only instructive but entertaining.

The following are the titles of the principal sections of the work:

The House We Live In; The Habitations of Men; Some Strange People and Their Strange Manners; The Bills of Fare of all Nations; Dame Fashion and Her Slaves; Health and Temperance Miscellany; Hygiene for Young Folks.

Over 224 quarto pages.

Illustrated by hundreds of engravings.

One of the most interesting volumes ever published.

	Regular price.	We will send postpaid.
Cloth, plain edges,	$2.25.	$1.25.
Cloth, gilt edges,	2.50.	1.50.

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,

39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

A NEW TRACT CATALOGUE.

"Descriptive Catalogue of the Bible Students', Apples of Gold, and Religious Liberty Libraries" is the title of this 36 page catalogue.

It gives a pithy description of each tract and pamphlet in the above Libraries, together with their size and price. It will greatly assist the reader to select such numbers as he may desire to read and circulate; and may be obtained FREE by addressing the Pacific Press Publishing Company, Oakland, Cal.; 39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.; 18 W. 5th St., Kansas City, Mo.; or Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich.; Atlanta, Ga.

A Holiday Subscription Book, A POLITICAL HISTORY

Of the great questions culminating in the CIVIL WAR in the words of ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLASS.

555 Pages.

Cloth $1.75.

The work is entitled "Political Debates and Speeches of Lincoln and Douglas," and contains a complete report of their speeches and debates. The burning words of these great orators are of absorbing interest both to those who have lived through the exciting scenes pictured out, and those who know them merely as history. There can be nothing better placed in the hands of the rising generation than a book presenting, in an attractive way, the principles on which this government is founded. Efforts are now being made to overthrow those principles, hence it is important that we become intelligent regarding them. The work is a great assistance to that end.

Agents Wanted Everywhere. Liberal Terms.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,

39 Bond Street, New York City.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

The Stomach:

Its Disorders and
How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50.

Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES . . .

CATARRH INHALER FREE.

For Catarrh, Pains and Colds in Head, Roaring Deafness and Throat Trouble.

I will, for a short time, mail any reader of the AMERICAN SENTINEL one of my new Scientific Cattarrh Inhalers and medicine for one year, with full directions, on three days' trial free. It cures by inhalation.

If it gives satisfaction send me $1, if not, kindly return it in the original package. Address, Dr. E. J. Worst,
Ashland, Ohio.

Dr. Worst makes our readers a generous offer and all can avail themselves of it.—EDITOR.

NUT BUTTER MILLS.

Something new. Designed especially for converting nuts into butter for table and culinary purposes. Valuable recipes for the use of nuts.
Shelled and unshelled nuts of all kinds at reasonable prices. Send for descriptive circular and price list.

JOSEPH LAMBERT,
Battle Creek, Mich.

BARLEY CRYSTALS

New Diuretic, Revigorating Tonic Cereal. Endorsed by physicians in cases of weak and irritable Digestive Organs, and Kidney trouble. Emollient, attractive, palatable. Unsurpassed in the whole range of cereals.

PAMPHLET AND COOKING SAMPLE FREE.

Unrivalled in America or Europe. Ask Dealers, or Write to Farwell & Rhodes, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A.
SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y.
"that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-
Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. Its successful combination of a Dictionary of 45,000 words;
a complete Parliamentary Manual;
Literary Guide, etc.
Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place that no other book thus far has had."—C. C.

Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business
Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual
Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp
Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

A Greek-English Lexicon

TO

The New Testament.

Revised and Enlarged by

THOMAS SHELDON GREEN, M. A.

WITH A PREFACE BY

H. L. HASTINGS,

Editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass.

AND A SUPPLEMENT BY

J. H. THAYER, D. D., Litt. D.

Professor of New-Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of
—Harvard University.—

Containing additional Words and Forms to be found in one or another of the Greek Texts in current use, especially those of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort, and the Revisers of 1881.

"The best thing of the kind for the money."

PAPER BINDING, Postpaid, 35c.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,
39 Bond Street, New York City.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated
Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling
1 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each.
Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required.

BLUINE CO., Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

A MARVEL IN BIBLE MAKING.

Large Type S. S. Teachers' SELF-PRONOUNCING COMBINATION BIBLE.

Containing the King James and the Revised Versions on the Same Page. Showing in Simple Form all Changes, Additions and Omissions, and Enabling all Readers to See at a Glance wherein the Two Versions Differ.

Both Versions Combined Without Duplicating.

The King James Version, set in full and conforming exactly to the Oxford Teachers' Edition, and, wherever a change occurs, the letters r. v., referring to a foot-note at the bottom of the page, showing the reading as it appears in the Revised Version. Thus, in the same book, we have both the King James and the Revised Versions, complete and intact, without materially increasing the size of the volume or reducing the size of the type. Both printed together in the same column, showing the differences at a glance, and enabling the reader to practically read both at one and the same time; or, in other words, consuming in the comparative reading of the two texts not more than one-half the time required in the old way.

EITHER VERSION ALONE OR BOTH TOGETHER.

The great point of excellence in this arrangement is that while it enables one to read both Versions in almost exactly the same time, it does not mar, or in any way hinder, the reading of the King James Version alone and independently, where one does not care to refer to the revisions.

How to Read the Combination Bible.

Below is part of page 608 of our Combination Bible. The following Key shows how it is to be read:

KEY—The first RV on page 608 appears in verse 37 of the 9th chapter, before "dominion." In the King James Version the reading is "dominion over our bodies," etc. By referring to the foot-notes it will be seen that the word "dominion" is changed to "power." Hence the Revised Version reads "power over our bodies," etc.

In the 38th verse the King James reads, "because of all this;" by reference to foot of page it will be seen that the Revised Version reads, "yet for all this."

In verse 28 there is an RO, which denotes an omission. Refer to the foot-notes and "(having)" will be found. Every omission is placed in a parenthesis in the foot-notes, and the Revised Version in this instance reads, "every one that had knowledge and understanding."

Thus it is seen that the Revised Version is easily read in connection with the King James Version. The system is so simple and so easily understood that no reader finds any difficulty in comparing one version with the other.

Specimen of Type used in the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Size of Page 5 x 7 3/4 inches.

They that sealed the covenant.	NEHEMIAH, X.	The points of the covenant.
they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.	B. C. 443.	all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;
38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^h seal unto it.	^f Dent. 28. ^g 2 Kin. 23. 3. ^h Chr. 29. ⁱ 10; 34. 31. ^j Ezra 10. 3. ^k ch. 10. 29. ^l Heb. are at the sealing, or, sealed. ^m ch. 13. 1.	29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ^h by Mō'ges the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;
CHAPTER X. 1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 23 The points of the covenant.	³ Heb. at the sealings, ⁴ ch. 9. 38. ⁵ ch. 8. 9. ⁶ Or, the governor. ⁷ ch. 1. 1. ⁸ See ch. 12. 1-21.	30 And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:
N OW ^h those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr-shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah, ² ^c Sēr-a-ī'ah, ³ Āz-a-rī'ah, ⁴ Jēr-g-mī'ah, ⁵ Pāsh-ūr, ⁶ Ām-a-rī'ah, ⁷ Māl-chī'jah, ⁸ Hāt-tūsh, ⁹ Shēb-a-nī'ah, ¹⁰ Māl-luch, ¹¹ Hā-rim, ¹² Mēr-g-mōth, ¹³ Ō-bā-dī'ah, ¹⁴ Dān-jel, ¹⁵ Gīn-nē-thon, ¹⁶ Bā'rych, ¹⁷ Mē-shūl-lam, ¹⁸ Ā-bī'jah, ¹⁹ Mīj-a-mīn,		31 ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Jeshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nethinim.—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

The Bible Closed.

BINDING.

Imperial Seal, Tuck Edges, known as the "Divinity Circuit," Leather Lined, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges.

This is a regular

$8 Bible,

Something unique,
and a good one.

It will be mailed postpaid

on receipt of only

$4.00.

Agents Wanted.

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 45.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 18, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

If a state religion is bad, a United States religion is forty-four times worse.

WHEN Christianity is mixed with politics, the mixture is good for political uses only.

IT is time for some successor of Madame Roland to exclaim, O patriotism, what follies are uttered in thy name!

EVERY law in "support" or for the "protection" of religious dogmas or institutions, is an effort to induce people to have faith in the state, instead of faith in God.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN is credited with saying, "Where liberty is, there is my country." And such is the sentiment of the Christian's heart, as he looks by faith to that country where alone is true liberty.

To his followers Jesus said (and still says): "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." John 15: 19. Christianity means separation from the world; and Christian citizenship cannot possibly mean anything less.

AN example in theological mathematics: Given, 1 rest day following 6 days of work, 1 commandment to keep holy "the seventh day," and 0 Scripture statements commanding the observance of any other day, to find 1 or more proofs that Sunday is the true Sabbath and ought to be made obligatory upon all persons by law. To solve this problem so as to obtain this result is the test of your orthodoxy.

"RATIONAL patriotism is neither personal selfishness multiplied by 70,000,000, nor is it a blind, unreasoning devotion to a state which promotes no ends of justice, simply because under its flag one encountered the accident of birth."

THE harvest that is being sown by the preaching of the principles of "Christian citizenship"—the union of religion with the state—will certainly be reaped. We are on the eve of mightier and more startling developments betokening a union of church and state in this country, than have ever appeared in the past.

It Needs Explanation.

ONE of the speakers at a Christian Endeavor convention held recently in Lynn, Mass., was the Rev. C. P. Mills, who, in defining the relation of Christian Endeavor to citizenship, said this:—

"Christianity is essentially political. The church as such does not go into politics, but it makes politics go."

It is such doctrine as this that the Christian Endeavor youth of the country are imbibing from their clerical instructors. Both by precept and example on the part of the latter these youth are being taught that Christianity is essentially political, and that the chief mission of the church is to make politics "go." The only result of such training that can possibly follow, will be the setting up in the great Christian Endeavor society of a union of religion with politics, which can mean nothing else than a union of church and state.

It would certainly be very much in order if the Rev.

Mr. Mills would explain how it is that the church is to make politics "go" without going into politics. Politicians find it necessary to go into politics to the fullest extent of their powers, if they succeed in making politics "go" in a manner to suit them; and even then they do not always succeed in their efforts. To think of making politics "go" without going into politics at all, would be scouted by any politician as the most visionary idea that could be mentioned. And yet we are gravely assured that the church is going to accomplish this very thing. It is strange that those giving such an assurance can successfully appeal to such an extent to the credulity of intelligent people.

No; the church will certainly go into politics when she makes politics "go." And why should she not, if Christianity itself is "essentially political"? History tells us over and over again just how the church will proceed in such a matter. She will proceed as she has done in historical instances of gaining control of the civil power, and the result will be just what it was on those occasions.

PERSONAL-LIBERTY [for the saloon] advocates never think of the right of the innocent victims of grog to enjoy freedom from the torture to which drunken husbands and fathers subject them.—New York Voice.

Sunday Quiet and Church Bells.

IN connection with the agitation now in progress in Washington, D. C., for the suppression of the crying of Sunday newspapers, the Washington Post offers the suggestion that the proposed prohibition of Sunday noise might quite consistently be extended so as to include Sunday ringing of church bells. The Post lays down the proposition that church bells are not at all essential to public worship, and had their origin not in public necessity but in the practices of barbarism. We know of no facts which contradict this statement. The Post says:—

"If the newsboys can ply their trade without crying their wares, surely the church can go upon its excellent and useful way without all this deafening and discordant clamor. The bell is of even less necessity in religion than public outcry is in newspaper vending. It is, in fact, a relic of antiquity, not to say semi-barbarism. It was first used by the Romans to summon the people to the public baths. Two centuries passed before bells were applied to church purposes. They were used in many ways, and were never, until very recently, regarded as an appliance of the church exclusively. They summoned the soldiers to arms, the tribunes to the Senate, the rabble to the circus. They sounded the alarm of conflagrations and of tumults."

It is not absolute quiet that the church wants on Sunday, but only such a degree of quiet as will exist when the church bells are given a monopoly in the production of sounds to attract the attention of the people. And for a like reason Sunday business is condemned and Sunday sports—they take the attention of the people away from the church and religious services.

On the ground that Sunday ought to be made a day of quiet by the suppression of all unnecessary noise, we do not see that any good reason can be given for drawing the line so as to exempt the noise of the ringing of the church bells.

The Evolution of Politics.

It would appear that in the evolution of American politics a point has been reached where the personality of a candidate for a position of public trust is altogether a secondary consideration, the thing of primary importance being allegiance to party organization. This much was plainly stated by one of the foremost politicians of the country in a speech made just previous to the late election. He said:—

"Every Republican should remember his duty. It doesn't make any difference about persons or if the candidate don't suit you exactly. The Republican organization must have the same discipline as we had in the regular army, when the boys in blue marched with their gallant leaders. As chairman of the Republican National Committee, I have the right to command, and you must stand by me in the dual position I now occupy.

"It doesn't matter whether you like my personality or not. I have no patience with the man who bolts his party because he is not satisfied with the candidate. If you expect business men to take part in politics and come among you, it is your duty to submit with the discipline of the party."

The loyal voters of to-day, therefore, will not "bolt" their party because it happens to nominate Benedict Arnold instead of George Washington for the highest position, in the gift of the people, or Boss Tweed instead of Abraham Lincoln. Like the men of the famous "Light Horse Brigade," it will be—

"Theirs not to make reply Theirs not to reason why,"

but simply to do the bidding of their party commander—to act their part as cogs connecting the wheels of the political "machine." This will require servility, but no brains.

Party "machine" politics fosters neither intelligence nor patriotism. And such politics represents the "survival of the fittest"—in this case the unfittest—in the evolution of politics to-day.

THE terrible results of religious persecution appear not only directly in the temporary tortures of the oppressed, but often indirectly, and for a long after period, in the reactions and excesses which those persecutions provoke in the survivors or descendants of the unfortunates originally persecuted. Thus in Russia the fierce fanaticism of the Raskolniki sect, who have been practising self-immolation to such a horrible extent, believing as they do in the doctrine of salvation by martyrdom, is ascribed, probably with truth, to the cruel treatment the ancestors of these dissenters have undergone for generations, thousands of them having under the Empress Sophia been knouted by the state. So rigorously exclusive are the members of one branch of the Raskolniki sect, called the Beguni, says the Sun, that they will not eat or drink from the same utensils used by relatives who have married ordinary members of the Raskolniki. They will not worship in churches or buildings used by others, but only in caves and cellars, which are usually filthy beyond description. Their services are conducted in closely guarded secrecy.—N. Y. Observer.

The Place of Liberty.

BY JOHN D. BRADLEY.

(Continued.)

WE come now to the United States, a country in which, we have been told, "the principle of free government adheres to the very soil; that it is bedded in it, immovable as its mountains." We would be glad to accept this and go no further, but unfortunately there are other things that cannot escape notice.

The principle of liberty and equality has never found a more pure, more reasonable, or more noble expression in any political document than in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. The great principles of civil and religious liberty were made the corner stones of the republic. But have they been adhered to?

The first thing that demonstrated the failure of our profession was the system of African slavery. It has been said that "it took the American people one hundred years to find out that the phrase, 'all men,' includes Ethiopians."

But it will be said that this foul blot has been long since removed from our nation, and that during the period of its existence it covered less than half our territory. All I have to say is that the spirit of dominance, which is the essential principle of slavery, is confined to no territory, and cannot be abolished by any number of constitutional amendments. All men are by nature fitted to be slave-holders, and if they do not possess the actual slaves, it is because they have had no opportunity or power to acquire them. The animating principle of slavery finds an outlet by other means than the lash or the baying of blood-hounds. If not so harsh in appearance, it is none the less cruel. While the fundamental law guarantees equality, I need not point you to a thousand evidences that it is denied in practice. Fortunate are we, indeed, if we are obliged to go farther than ourselves to find that evidence. To my mind, there is much truth in the statement by the historian Ridpath that "the old slaveholders of the South were provoked and tantalized by those who were not slaveholders themselves only because they were born and bred in a happier latitude."

To-day, under the domination of trusts and combines, of labor as well as of capital, religious as well as political, the rights of the individual are just as flagrantly violated as could be possible under any system of slavery. All the necessities of life are controlled for the benefit of a few, and the people are compelled to contribute to the growth of colossal fortunes in which they have no share. As in Rome, there has arisen a party of wealth and a party minus wealth, each clamoring loudly for its own rights, while caring nothing for the rights of others. "The elections are managed by clubs and coteries," and it is an established fact that when wealth and party combine, the people can have no influence whatever. I find this editorial statement in a late number of the Arena: "It is said that in England the queen reigns and Parliament rules, but in America the 'machine' both rules and reigns."

The grandest principle of the Constitution is that which guarantees liberty to the individual in matters of religion. It is the grandest because upon it depends all other liberty. When that principle is denied, political liberty is also doomed. Yet there has not been a day in the history of our country when the principle was not denied by the existence of a union of church and state. As long as the principle was held in the hearts of the people, there was no evil effect. But now we have seen persecution arise, and the principle is denied upon every hand. The idea now obtains that the proper object of government is to establish law, not justice; to protect institutions, not the people. Property is regarded as of more importance than human life, and the preservation of a so-called sacred institution than the maintenance of freedom. It is stated by a prominent political thinker that he who makes a search for genuine democracy will find "a residue only on the remote outskirts of society, in far places by woods and streams, on the prairies wild, and in the filthy purlieus and cellars of towns and cities."

In short, the noblest political document that man has yet framed for the preservation of his liberties, like the ten words spoken from Sinai, has proved "weak through the flesh." And, as Mr. Webster has long since said, "If, in our case, the representative system ultimately fails, popular governments must be pronounced impossible. No combination of circumstances more favorable to the experiment can ever be expected to occur. The last hopes of mankind, therefore, rest with us; and if it should be proclaimed that our example had become an argument against the experiment, the knell of popular liberty would be sounded throughout the earth." The failure of this government means the failure of all.

So we see that liberty and democracy are not synonymous. The history of popular governments has been, like all others, oppression, revolution, and counter-revolution. It has been war between classes, sometimes defined by birth, sometimes by position, sometimes by property,—in all instances the actuating motive of oppression has been selfishness; retaliation and vengeance have ensued, and the whole power has usually fallen into the hands of one man. It was in a democracy that Sulla executed his sanguinary proscription, and that Robespierre startled the world with the reign of the guillotine. To the claim of democracy that it is the guardian of liberty, the verdict of history is emphatically “Mene, Tekel, Upharsin;” and the failure of democracy demonstrates the failure of all systems.

Why have they failed? Why is it that the story has ever been,— “Truth forever on the scaffold,

Wrong forever on the throne?”

Is it because the lovers of liberty have always been upon the scaffold, and the friends of oppression always upon the throne?—No. It is because of an almost unalterable law of human nature that selfishness asserts itself when men are in a position to command and obtain, and liberty and truth which are usually prized by the poor and powerless, are forgotten. The common people hear the words of truth and justice gladly, but power waits for a more convenient season. So it has ever been. While the “antiquity of freedom” cannot be questioned, the birthright has been siezed by tyranny, the “later born,” and since the original lapse of man from the path of rectitude, he has enjoyed few visits from the first born.

I need not stop to enlarge upon the cause of this failure. You see what it has been. It is summed up in one word—selfishness. Freedom has meant only—

“to break
Fetters for our own dear sake,
And with leathern hearts forget
That we owe mankind a debt.”

The practice of that principle which alone insures true liberty,—“Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them,”—is not natural to men as they are in the world. They act naturally in the administration of government, therefore it is not in monarchies, aristocracies, democracies, or any other system of human government, that liberty is found.

(To be continued.)

The Tail Wagging the Body.

“Four hundred and fifty barbers wanted Sabbath, fifty refused; fifty made four hundred and fifty work. Think that out.” So says a writer in The Defender, the organ of the “New England Sabbath Protective League.”

If this were true,—that “fifty made four hundred and fifty work,”—it would be an instance of the tail being successful in an effort to wag the body. But no such thing as this ever happened. It is contrary to nature and to reason. The alleged fact is not true.

The four hundred barbers who worked because the fifty others would not rest, did not want to lose their Sunday trade unless the other fifty also lost theirs.

Their own covetousness made them work. They worked because they thought more of their gains than of the weekly rest. The love of money, and not the fifty barbers, was their master.

Take the love of money away, and there is no foundation left for the oft-made assertion that “the right of rest for one is the law of rest for all.” “The love of money is the root of all evil.”

The Latest Judicial Decision on the Validity of Sunday Laws.

A FRIEND has kindly favored us with a copy of the Alamosa (Col.) Independent-Journal, of October 14, which contains a decision given by Judge Holbrook in the District Court of Costilla County, Col., on October 12, which is worthy of note as an addition to the list of judicial decisions touching upon the question of the validity of Sunday legislation. While this question was only incidentally involved in the present case, the language of the judge in considering it amounts to a virtual decision upon the validity of Sunday laws.

The case was that of the people of the State of Colorado against J. W. Palmer, for keeping open a saloon on the first day of the week. The decision says:—

“The information in this case charges the defendant with a violation of the statute which forbids the keeping open of saloons on the first day of the week.

“The defendant moves to quash the information, and by the motion the Sabbath question is involved.

“The Bible most positively declares that the seventh day is the Sabbath: the law books declare ‘the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday,’ to be the Sabbath.

“This conflict of authority between God and man, one phase of the motion to quash the information virtually calls on the court to decide. But, fortunately for the court, God has never required nor authorized man to punish his fellow man for a failure to observe the Sabbath, nor for neglect of any other religious duty; while men, jealous of their own works, have made laws to enforce the observance of the man-made Sabbath.

“The oath of a judge can go only to the extent of requiring the court to enforce the laws which men have made; leaving each individual, who wishes to do so, to worship God according to the requirements of the Bible, so far as the laws of man will permit.

“The defendant contends that the statute in question is obnoxious to Art. 2, Sec. 4, of the Constitution, which provides, ‘That the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination, shall forever hereafter be guaranteed.’ . . . ‘Nor shall any preference be given by law to any religious denomination or mode of worship;’ and also to the constitutional prohibition against special and class legislation.

“Generally, such a statute should be construed as obnoxious to both these constitutional provisions. Ordinarily a law which for religious reasons closes the doors of one business house on certain days, while another is permitted to run, is class legislation; and a law which requires the Jew, the Seventh-day Baptist, and the Seventh-day Adventist to cease their daily avocations on the first day of the week, is certainly a discrimination against religious worship, and is showing a preference to the religious denominations that keep the Sabbath which had its origin in the compromise between Christianity and paganism in the fourth century. Yet, it must be admitted that the sentiment of the people in favor of stringent Sunday laws has greatly increased within the last fifty years, and it must be further admitted that within the last twenty-five years courts of last resort have found reasons for sustaining Sunday laws, unknown to earlier decisions; however, the license laws of Colorado are such as to make further discussion of these constitutional provisions unnecessary in this case. The saloon business is a prohibited business, permitted only upon the obtaining of a license therefor, granted upon the filing of a bond conditioned for a strict observance of the statutes.

"It must be conceded that the state has a right to limit the license which it grants in such cases, and to punish for a violation of the law under which such license is granted.

"These objections as well also as the objections to the form of the information are found not well taken, wherefore it is ordered that said motion be and it hereby is overruled.

"CHAS. C. HOLBROOK,
"Judge."

Sunday Anti-Christian.

BY C. H. KESLAKE.

NOTWITHSTANDING the many attempts to bolster up the Sunday by arguments from Scripture that could be true only when they are advanced in favor of the seventh day, it is a fact that that day is a spurious institution.

No stronger argument to prove this is needed than the statement recently made by Rev. Dr. Burrell at the State Convention of Christian Endeavor held in Paterson, N. J. The "reverend doctor" said, "My right to Sabbath observance depends upon a law for Sabbath observance for all. If others don't keep it, I can't."

In making this statement, he was making a plea in behalf of Sunday, looking to a state law enforcing its observance.

Had Sunday been a day of divine origin, Dr. Burrell would never have been under the necessity of making such a confession.

In an article last week, with reference to the seventh day, the writer showed that it is the sign of God's power in creation and redemption, and that in the very nature of things that day—the true Sabbath—is an aid to faith. It points one to the eternal power and divinity of Christ, and he who knows that power can keep the Sabbath.

But however closely we may examine Dr. Burrell's statement quoted above, we shall find an utter absence of anything like faith; and for the simple reason that there is nothing in the day to inspire faith. The truth is, not having any strength of its own, it is responsible for the weakness and spiritual poverty that is so prevalent in the Christian church of to-day.

For centuries it has been, as it were, a cancerous growth, a deadly gangrene, slowly but surely eating its way into the very life of Christendom, until now the church finds itself utterly helpless, and, having no "thus saith the Lord" for its support, turns abjectly to the state for aid. It is a viper that in an evil hour was clasped to the bosom of the church, and there being nourished and given warmth, it now darts its poisonous fangs into its benefactor, its virus spreading throughout the body; but instead of throwing the deadly thing off and fleeing to the Great Physician for healing, she deliriously hugs it more closely to her breast and, through state law, seeks to give it the fullest opportunity to sting her to death.

Nor could we expect it to be anything else, when we come to study the origin of Sunday. Its very name indicates its origin—the day of the sun.

Of all the religions that have been the rivals of the religion of Jesus Christ, that of sun-worship has been the most widespread and influential. And of all systems of worship that have been debasing and obscene, that have served to stamp out of the human heart all traces of Him who created man, sun worship has been the worst.

No one can read the history of sun-worship without a feeling of abhorrence for the vile rites that were practiced in connection with it.

One does not always have at his command the various books that treat on this subject, but he does have the Bible for reference. And any one who will read the 8th chapter of Ezekiel will see how the Lord regards sun-worship. Over and over again the Lord tells Ezekiel to look in a certain direction, and, as he does so, each time the command is, "Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations." The climax of all the abominations referred to in the chapter is reached in the 16th verse: "And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they worshiped the sun toward the east."

Nor is it in the Scripture alone that God shows his abhorrence of sun-worship. When ancient Israel were encamped in the wilderness, the tabernacle was always pitched with the entrance toward the east, so that the people would face the west in their worship of God; and thus their backs be turned to the east. This was done with direct reference to sun-worship. He who worshiped the sun must first have turned his back upon God.

Sun-worship was the prevailing worship even in the apostles' days, and the student of the Bible and history will readily see that it was to this evil and its attendant horrors that Paul referred in Eph. 5:11,12: "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret."

In the time of the apostles, Satan saw that nothing could openly withstand the onward march of Christianity. He therefore plotted to overthrow it in a different way, and the worst enemy that he purposed using in accomplishing this task were the so-called friends of Christianity.

The spirit-filled apostle could easily see the workings of Satan, and faithfully warned the believers of them. Thus he says to the elders at Ephesus, "Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." Acts 20:30.

Again, in his letter to the Thessalonians (2 Thess. 2:3,4) Paul, correcting a wrong idea that had crept into the church relative to the second coming of Christ, says: "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." He then adds, "The mystery of lawlessness (R.V.) doth already work."

No one can doubt that this "man of sin," "the son of perdition," is any other than the power known as the papacy. The papacy is indeed the mystery of iniquity, the very incarnation of lawlessness. And the crowning work of this apostate power was the attempt to change God's holy law with reference to the Sabbath. It "has substituted the observance of Sunday, the first day of the week, for the observance of the seventh day—a change for which there is no scriptural authority." The papacy openly boasts of this, and points to it as the badge or mark of its authority, thereby confessing itself capable of doing no greater work.

In this act, and this only, has it exalted itself above all that is called God, for it claims to have done that which God could not possibly do—that is, to have made the first day of the week the Sabbath.

Sabbath means rest. Sabbath day means the day of God's rest. It is true that God worked six days and rested upon the seventh, but he could just as easily have worked five days and rested upon the sixth, or he could have done it all in one day and rested the second; but God could not possibly work upon the first day and call it his rest day.

Certainly, then, if the papacy could really do that which God could not possibly do, it would be greater than God, hence Sunday, as a Sabbath day, would stand for a power greater than God's power.

The power of the papacy has always been arrayed against the gospel of Jesus Christ. It confesses to knowing nothing of the faith of Jesus Christ for justification. From first to last, always and only, it is antichristian; therefore the day—Sunday—which is the badge, the mark of her authority, is itself antichristian. Sunday being antichristian, there is nothing in it that could possibly inspire faith. It is no better than the power that made it. It could be upheld by no other power than that which made it; and the power which the papacy ever used was the power of the state.

Therefore, while it is a sad confession on the part of the Rev. Dr. Burrell, it is perfectly logical that he and those who stand with him should appeal now to the state for help.

Australian Catholics Become Protesters.

BY W. A. COLCORD.

RECENTLY Mr. Peacock, Minister of Education for Victoria, has had introduced into the state schools of the colony a "School Paper," in which appear religious lessons on various subjects, the scripture quotations in which are taken from the Protestant version of the Bible. Being under the impression that these "papers" were intended only for home reading, Archbishop Carr, of this city, made no objection; but upon learning that they were used in the schools, he at once sent in a protest to Mr. Peacock. In this he says:—

"It has been stated that no protest against such use has come from any source. For my part I should have at once protested had I known that the 'School Paper,' with its scripture lessons, was explained or interpreted for Catholic children by non-Catholic teachers."—Melbourne Age, September 13.

Of course Archbishop Carr and all Catholics have a perfect right thus to protest. No one has a right to use the state to teach any one any kind of religion.

But it is interesting to note how quickly even our Roman Catholic friends, when in the minority, become protesters, and protest against others, though in the majority and in power, using the power and institutions of the state to enforce upon them or their children anything in religion of which they do not approve. In this they acknowledge that the Protestant principle is right. By this single protest Archbishop Carr (and all who join him in it) yields to the principle laid down by the Protestant princes at the Diet of Spires, in 1529, that "in matters of conscience the majority has no power." It would have been well if both Catholics and Protestants had always acted upon this principle when they were in the majority. It is strange that men can see the justness of the principle only when they are in the minority.

THE PRINCIPLE APPLIED.

Roman Catholics protest against Protestants teaching religion in the state schools as Protestants understand and believe it, when Protestants are in the majority. This they have a perfect right to do. But if they believe that their protest in this respect should be heard (and it should), then they must admit that the majority have no right to use the state to force upon the minority their religion and religious opinions, at least when the majority are Protestants. But if Protestants have no right to use the state to teach their religious ideas and opinions when they are in the majority, neither have Catholics when they are in the majority. And if neither Protestants nor Catholics have the right, no one has, and this means that church and state should be totally separate, which is our position precisely. Any legal connection between the two is wrong in principle and injurious to both.

THE growth of ritualism in the Church of England is illustrated in a very curious way by the story of the luncheon given at the opening of the new schoolroom at St. Oswald's College, Elsmere. This is under the control of the Anglican Bishop of Lichfield, and the day for opening was fixed for October 22. It appears to have been forgotten that that would be Friday; but it would not do to have a mere fish luncheon, and accordingly, with the invitation to his Grace the Duke of Westminster and other distinguished visitors and donors to the college, there was induced a slip on which it was stated that "the Bishop of Lichfield, who was consulted by the Provost, has given his dispensation from the obligations of the day to those who may desire it." That is, the Bishop tells his Grace and other visitors that if they will go to the opening of the schoolroom they will have an indulgence to eat freely of ham sandwiches and chicken salad. And this is modern Protestantism!—The Independent.

A Sign of the Times.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

"ONE of the most notable signs of the times," says the current Review of Reviews, was the action of the Zurich Socialist Labor Congress in favor of making Sunday the universal compulsory day of rest.

"There were two propositions before the Congress, both insisting on one day's rest in seven, but the English Socialists objected to stipulating that this day must be Sunday. Their Continental brethren—owing largely to the influence and numbers of the Catholic Socialists—would have no other day but Sunday, and after an animated debate voted down the English opposition by a large majority."

The Catholics were only standing by the papal principle of enforced religious observances, and by the institution which Rome in all her teaching claims as the mark of her authority. She boasts of having substituted Sunday for the Sabbath without Bible authority, and whatever builds up her substitute adds to her prestige.

Mr. Stead thus commends these Catholics for outvoting the English delegates, who seem to have stood for that freedom of choice which even God will not take from men:—

"This was well done! If the rest day is to be generally observed, there must be a general agreement as to what day it shall be. That is why, from the general humanitarian point of view, the Seventh-day Adventists, etc., have always seemed to me to be among the most pernicious of Protestant sects."

If so, it is because they are the most Protestant, and the more scripturally Protestant and Christian a movement is the more pernicious will it be considered by any who stand for the papal principle of state-enforced religion of human invention. This issue is of tremendous importance to humanity.

What is humanity's need?—It is salvation from sin. God only has power to save men from the greed and selfishness and oppression eating into the vitals of society. He only can save men from lawlessness by writing his law in their hearts. But when would-be social reformers shut away his power from men, and teach the world to reject his word and commands, they are shutting away the only hope and Saviour of humanity. And God declares that his Sabbath is the sign of his power to save and sanctify. It is a question of loyalty to God, in which way alone is there hope for men.

WHEN God instituted the Sabbath day, he set it apart from the other days of the week. But if seventh-day observers can, as is often suggested to them by their would-be friends, begin with Monday in their numeration of the days of the week, so as to bring the seventh day on Sunday, there would be no force in the fact that the Sabbath day was set apart from the other days. For if it is proper to begin with Monday in counting the days of the week, it is equally proper to begin with Tuesday, and so bring the seventh, or Sabbath, day upon Monday; or begin with Wednesday, and bring the Sabbath day upon Tuesday; and so on through all the days of the week, making any one of them the Sabbath. But if each of them can be made the Sabbath, it certainly cannot be that any one of them is set apart from all the others.

The only safe and sensible way is to take God's numeration of the days, which begins the week with the day that we call Sunday. And that fixes a definite seventh day for the Sabbath.

METHODIST clergymen of Bangor, Me., have begun a movement for improving the morals of the people in that city. In pursuance of this object a union service will be held in the City Hall on Thanksgiving Day, at which four of the clergy will deliver addresses on lawlessness, its effect, the responsibility, and the remedy. It is expected that the movement will lead to a more active participation by the clergy in local politics, in connection with the "State Civic League," which has branches in the leading cities.

But where were morals ever known to be elevated by means of politics?

"Thou hypocrite; first cast out the beam that is in thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote that is in thy brother's eye."

IN his proclamation setting apart a day of national prayer and thanksgiving, President McKinley does not follow the precedent set up in the proclamation of last year. It will be remembered that in the latter the people were directed to offer the sacrifices of prayer and thanksgiving "in the name of Him who has taught us to pray," thus giving to the Christian religion alone the official recognition of the government. The proclamation for this year makes mention of "God," the "Most High," and the "Giver of every good and perfect gift;" but makes no direct allusion to the recognized Author of Christianity.

HOWEVER, the proclamation does contain an implied recognition of Christianity, in that it quotes from the Scriptures which are recognized by Christians alone as a divine revelation. It begins by saying, "In remembrance of God's goodness to us during the last year, which has been so abundant, 'Let us offer unto Him our Thanksgiving, and pay our vows unto the Most High.'" This quotation is from the Psalms, and as such would not be objectionable to some who are not Christians, as, for example, the Jews. But as much could hardly be said for the following, which occurs in a subsequent paragraph: "On this day of rejoicing and domestic reunion, let our prayers ascend to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, for the continuance of his love and favor to us," etc. The expression "every good and perfect gift," is borrowed from the epistle of James.

OF course, in view of the fact that the president and a large proportion of the people whom he addresses, are in profession Christians, it could not be expected that in issuing a proclamation based upon religion, any other than the Christian religion would be recognized in it. If it be proper to make an official religious proclamation at all, it is proper also to issue it in the name of one particular religion.

INDEED, reason would dictate it as the more consistent course for the president, if he is to direct the people to worship God with prayer and thanksgiving, to indicate in his proclamation who is the God to be so honored. For he must be surely aware that "there be gods many and lords many," and the people are not in unison in belief and practice as regards their religious worship. And it would but poorly commend the intelligence and sincerity of its author should the proclamation recognize all worship, in whatever manner conducted or to whatever object directed, as being praiseworthy and essential to the general welfare of the people.

As it stands now, the people are directed simply to observe the day "with appropriate religious services in their respective places of worship." This is something which all classes can readily comprehend, but which, as exemplified in practice, would present somewhat strange and contradictory features were all classes of people to do as the proclamation invites them. There would be, for example, a material difference between the manner in which this instruction would be carried out by Wong Fo, the disciple of Confucius, and by John Smith, the disciple of Christ. The president did not, of course, intend to invite the former to pay his respects to Joss; nor did he design to invite the disciples of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young to assemble in their temples and read from the Book of Mormon. He did not mean to invite the Spiritualists to hold a seance and engage in the ceremonies peculiar to their worship; nor that the follower of Mohammed should give praise and thanksgiving to Allah. Probably he did not intend that any praise should be ascribed to the Virgin Mary, or to others of the "saints," as is done in the worship of the Catholic.

WHAT the proclamation does intend, as all will admit, is that there shall, on the 25th day of this month, be an assembling of professedly Christian people in their respective places of worship, for the purpose of prayer and thanksgiving to God for his goodness, in a manner not repugnant to Protestant Christianity. And since this is what the proclamation means, the question naturally arises, why this should not be what it plainly says.

THE answer is, of course, that the government would be out of place in showing preference for any particular sect or mode of worship. And this is true. But having invited the people to engage, upon a specified day, in religious worship, the government cannot consistently stop short of designating the religion which is to determine the character of that worship. It cannot consistently endorse all religions as good and worthy of practice, even in a highly civilized country. Must the government, therefore, be inconsistent, in order to keep in its proper place? Must it endorse all religions that may be professed by its citizens, in order that it may not commit the wrong of showing favor to one above the others?

MANIFESTLY, this cannot be. And thus we are brought to the conclusion that the only proper course for a civil government is to refrain from any recognition of religion, leaving that matter to the individual choice of its citizens, under the guidance of the spiritual agencies by which each one finds himself surrounded. Such a course on the part of the government is both consistent and proper.

* * *

Oh, well, what is the use of making so much out of a matter that doesn't amount to anything anyway, since it is only a matter of form and custom? But let it also be asked, Why affix the signature of the president and the seal of the United States to a document that amounts to nothing? Why make the government ridiculous by making it party to a farce? What a government like the United States does ought to amount to something, and, as a matter of fact, it does amount to a good deal in the matter under consideration. The truth of this may become more apparent later on.

* * *

ARCHBISHOP HENNESSY, of Dubuque, Ia., in a recent interview accorded an observer of the seventh day, gave this reason for the apparent lack of interest on the part of the papacy in the much-talked-of project of uniting the Protestant churches:—

"The Catholics are apparently doing nothing to hasten this union, for this reason: If you had several chairs in a row, it would be much easier to pull them around if they were all fastened together than if you had a cord to each chair and had to pull each separately; so when the Protestants all become united, it will be easier to unite them to the mother church than to bring them one at a time."

Resolutions Condemning State Religion.

At a meeting of the Secular League of Washington, D. C., held in that city November 7, the following resolutions were adopted, which, as a whole, are worthy of approving note:—

"Resolved—That the Secular League of Washington has for its chief purposes the promotion of right living and high thinking, the protection of the rights of conscience and the maintenance of a total separation between religion and the government.

"That we welcome to our weekly meetings all persons of all creeds whatsoever, and that we invite to membership, without regard to sectarian affiliations, all persons who believe in the absolute separation of church and state.

"That we sympathize with the Methodists in their present efforts to prevent the establishment of a church State in Utah—a measure which would result in religious persecution.

"That we assure the newsboys of Washington of our cordial sympathy in their struggle for the maintenance of their rights; that we extend our sincere condolence to the Adventists, Seventh-day Baptists, Hebrews, and others, who, in many States of this union, are subjected to fines and imprisonment, and otherwise persecuted, under penal laws, for not upholding the first day of the week as essentially and intrinsically holier and more sacred than other days, and we denounce such laws as blots on American civilization.

"That we pledge ourselves to the support of an amendment to the National Constitution prohibiting the States from presenting or requiring religious tests for office; from creating State churches; from supporting religious institutions by direct tax or by exempting church property, and from appropriating money for sectarian schools or charities."

At a mass meeting, held last month in Berlin, Mass., to promote the cause of compulsory Sunday observance in that State, it was resolved that,—

"Forasmuch as Sunday work is opposed to the laws of God and this commonwealth, as well as injurious to the health and morals of the workingmen, we, the citizens of Berlin, assembled in the Clement Opera House on Oct. 20, 1897, do hereby protest against the same as practiced in certain mills in this city.

"We respectfully request the owners and superintendents of said mills to discontinue unnecessary work in their mills.

"In case of refusal to do so, we ask the city officials to see that the Sunday laws of this commonwealth are enforced.

"We appoint the clergy of the city to act as a committee to carry out the suggestions of these resolutions, to issue calls for future public meetings, and to organize a local Sunday protective league if it seems advisable."

The only trouble with this resolution is that it makes a wrong start. The assumption that Sunday work is opposed to the laws of God, is wide of the truth, and hence is altogether devoid of force. And even if it were true, it would furnish no warrant for compulsory interference with any person's practice in that respect. Any sin is contrary to the law of God, but it is vain to prohibit sin by human enactments.

But if there were any force in the alleged fact, as a proper basis for Sunday legislation, it would be altogether superfluous to add that Sunday work is opposed to the laws of the commonwealth. The laws of the commonwealth can add nothing to the sinfulness of a practice which is contrary to the law of God.

And as regards the health and morals of the workingmen, there is nothing to show that Sunday work injures them more than does Monday work, or work on any other day. If it be injurious to health to work seven days in the week, this is no reason for putting the blame of it all upon the work done on Sunday. From a health standpoint, a rest on any one day of the week is just as valuable as a rest on any other day.

Nor is there any proof that Sunday work is necessarily injurious to morals. A man's practice is determined by the state of his morals and not the state of his morals by his practice. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." And any person who does not believe in Sunday as a day of obligatory rest, cannot become one whit less moral by regularly working upon that day.

Elsie's Sacrifice: A Thanksgiving Story.

"With blue, cold hands and stockingless feet,
Wandered a child in a cheerless street;
Children were many, who—"

"Do tell me, mama, what made any one ever write such a sad story as that. I never saw any little child without shoes and stockings in the winter time," said Elsie stopping in the middle of her song, and fixing two brown, questioning eyes upon her mother.

Elsie Brown had lived on a farm all her life, among the flowers and trees, chickens and turkeys, and she had no idea of life in any other conditions than those found at the large, quaint farmhouse, with its clambering vines and clustering roses in summer, and its spacious cellar, stored with bushels and bushels of luscious, red-cheeked apples in winter. She thought it strange that children should wander around in the street when they were cold and hungry.

"Why didn't the children in the song go home, mama? That's what I can't see," said Elsie, with a decisive nod.

"I don't suppose you can quite understand it, dear," said Mrs. Brown, "for God has kindly given you a good home and plenty to eat and wear. Indeed, the 'lines have fallen unto you in pleasant places,' as the psalmist says."

Elsie had one very grave fault: she was extremely selfish. It was hard to induce her to part with any of her toys or books to those less favored of her mates, and her mother feared that this trait was growing stronger and stronger every day.

"Yes, Elsie," continued her mother, taking the child upon her lap, "you have no idea of the suffering of thousands of poor, homeless children, without food enough or clothes enough for their poor little starved bodies. And, my child, many of these little waifs work hard all day long for only a few pennies; and sometimes even this little is taken by cruel parents to buy drink."

"I should think some one would help them, mama, and get food for them."

"There are missions, my child; but they all cost a great deal, and people are apt to be very selfish, you know."

"I suppose so," said Elsie, blushing. She could not help thinking of the big, round dollar, which to her was a great deal of money, and which she had carefully saved to buy the beautiful dolly which was in Mr. Smith's window, over at the village.

"Then you know, dear," continued Mrs. Brown, "there are poor people right around here. There is Mrs. Simons, who has been very ill, and who is so old and poor, and you know there is no one to care for her but little Mabel, her grandchild."

"Oh, yes; Mabel comes to school sometimes; but she has shoes and stockings, mama," said Elsie, trying hard to quiet the voice of conscience.

"I guess if my little daughter will think carefully, she will remember that the poor little toes were peeping through the shoes, and that the dress was threadbare and thin."

"Well, I don't suppose it's expected that we help people unless they are awful poor, and don't have any shoes and stockings at all," protested Elsie, in whose mind visions of the beautiful doll with the big blue eyes that would shut, and the real hair, would intrude.

Mrs. Brown saw that the child had something very serious on her mind, and she hoped that selfishness would not win the battle, which she felt sure was on this point.

"Do you suppose, mama, that just a little bit of money, just what a little girl like me has, would help any one so very much?" she questioned, cautiously, earnestly hoping that her mother would agree with her that a little girl's money would be of no use. But much to Elsie's dismay, her mother replied that a "little girl's money might save a little girl's life."

This was decisive. The battle was fought and won. If it was possible that she might save little Mabel Lee's life, or her poor grandmother's either, she certainly did not have the heart to refuse even her cherished dollar.

"Well, mama, my old dolly is real nice yet; of course one eye is out and one leg off, and her hair is thin; but then,—I can make lovely dollies out of corn-cobs; Jennie Tray taught me how; and—yes, mama, I'll do it! I'm going to give my money to buy food and shoes and things for poor Mabel Lee and her grandma. Now don't let me back out, mama!"

"I'm so glad that the right has conquered this time, Elsie. I thought you would yield. You shall go over to the village this afternoon with papa and me, and we will buy some necessary comforts for the poor, whom Christ says we have always with us, that they may have a thanksgiving as well as we."

Elsie resolutely closed her eyes that afternoon when she passed the beautiful doll in the window, and thought of her little song about the stockingless feet.

Thanksgiving morning Elsie and her mother stopped at the door of the poor old lady, with their store of good things. There were apples and potatoes and a dozen big squashes and other treasures from Mr. Brown's large farm, and O how happy Elsie felt, as she unwrapped a big, brown bundle and handed little Mabel a nice pair of warm shoes and stockings!

O what a thanksgiving was kept in the poor little house! but it seemed to Elsie that she was happier than she had ever been in her life, and she could perfectly understand that which had always been so hard before for her to comprehend; the words of the merciful Saviour: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

MRS. L. D. AVERY-STUTTLE.

The Bear With the Three Ribs Between His Teeth.

"WHAT about the second beast, Charlie? I see you are all ready to begin."

"And, behold, another beast, a second, like unto a bear," read Charlie.

"That will do for the present. What have you found out about bears?"

"The bear is inferior to the lion. There is a kind of nobility about a lion that is not found in the bear. When a lion has satisfied his hunger, he will leave his food for another time without mauling it over; but a bear is a spoiler and will muss over what is left. The bear hugs or tears his victim to death. There seems to be some redeeming quality in bears though, as the cubs can be tamed and trained."

"You have told enough to illustrate the value of the symbol of the second kingdom that was to be like a bear. History brings out the fact that the second kingdom was inferior to the first. The Medes and Persians had a great deal of trouble with Babylon, and had to reconquer it. When it was captured the second time, they proposed to tear down its beautiful walls, and to carry its treasures away to Susa where they thought to build a finer city than Babylon; but they proved themselves to be only spoilers; for while they dismantled Babylon, they never succeeded in making a city to be compared with it."

"What is the next characteristic mentioned?"

"It raised itself up on one side," read Charlie.

"I think, perhaps, you can explain that yourself," said Mrs. Ross.

"Was it because the Persians grew to have more power in the kingdom than the Medes who first held the throne?"

"Yes; that explains the rising up on one side. This point is brought out still more fully in the eighth chapter, where the kingdom is represented under the symbol of a ram with two horns, the higher of which came up last. An angel was to explain the symbol to Daniel. You may read the 20th verse, and see what this ram represented."

"The ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia," read Charlie.

"No mistake can be made in interpreting these beasts when we let the Lord interpret them. History fills out the specifications of God's Word. What is the next thing about this beast?"

"And he had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it.' Now what does that mean, mama?"

"Think, Charlie, and see if you yourself cannot tell me. It was something in its power, under its absolute control."

"Very likely it was some country or people who were conquered and oppressed, as it is countries and peoples that governments control."

"You are right. But you notice that three ribs are in this beast's mouth. History tells us that three provinces were especially oppressed by the Medo-Persian power, because they especially opposed its advance. These provinces were Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt."

"After the ribs are between the teeth of this power, what are they represented as saying?"

"And they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh."

"When these provinces were convinced that it was no use to struggle against their conquerors, they willingly gave their strength to their former enemies, and by their warlike attitude to unconquered dominions, said, 'Go on and we will help you to subdue the world.' The history of these times abounds in incidents that illustrate the cruel character of the government."

"Yes, mama, I know that this kingdom was cruel; but as far as I have seen, all kingdoms have manifested the same characteristic. Did this kingdom ever seek to persecute men for their faith in God, and for doing his will?"

"Yes. Do you remember the story of Esther?"

"O yes, mama. I have always thought that was as interesting as a fairy story."

"You remember that the Jews had been taken to Babylon in the time of Nebuchadnezzar. During the life-time of Cyrus, who was one of the most noble of earthly sovereigns, the Jews were permitted to return to Palestine if they wished to do so. It seems that many chose to remain in the Medo-Persian kingdom, and among them was Esther and her uncle and Daniel. At a later date many of these Jews returned to Jerusalem and rebuilt their city and temple just as the Lord had foretold that they would. Now can you tell me what officer in the government of Persia was filled with hatred for the Jews, and what he desired the king to do against them?"

"The officer was one next to the king whose name was Haman. He complained to the king that the Jews observed laws that were contrary to the kingdom, and that they ought to be killed. His hatred was aroused by Mordecai, Esther's uncle, because he would not bow down to him. Why was it, mama, that Mordecai would not bow to Haman?"

"It may have been for the same reason that the Quakers would not remove their hats in the presence of royalty. It involved a religious principle in their minds and gave an homage to man that they believed belonged alone to God. It was a very terrible thing for so great an officer to do for so trivial an offense. Because he was 'one bow short,' as some one says, he therefore must put to death a nation."

"O, but he didn't do it, mama. Esther risked her life to save her people, and the very gallows he had built to hang Mordecai on, was used to hang him on. The king then made void the decree he had sent over the realm, and instead of having a day of death, the Jews had a day of rejoicing."

"So far we have seen God interfering in behalf of his people when they were in trouble and persecution. You remember Mordecai said to Esther that if she would not intercede for the people, that deliverance would arise from another place. There is another incident that more fully brings out the malignity that may be brought upon the just and righteous through the unjust, unrighteous laws of ignorant or mistaken monarchs. There was one of the best statesmen in this kingdom who was very highly esteemed by the king, and was made one of the presidents of the rulers of the kingdom. Do you know who it was?"

"Daniel," said Charlie.

"Do you remember the jealousy of the rulers, and how they plotted his destruction?"

"O yes, mama. They said, We shall find no occasion against this Daniel, save concerning the law of his God."

"With murder in their hearts, they went in and flattered the king. Pretending to be a great friend of his, they persuaded him to sign a decree that no one should ask a petition of either God or man for thirty days, save of the king. They knew that Daniel would not obey such an unjust, blasphemous law, and waited to see him break the law, so that they might cast him into the den of lions. Daniel was careful for nothing. He knew that his God was the living God, and he would not place a man in God's stead. If all the world should ignore God's love, cease to acknowledge their dependence, defy his commands, he would be true. It was a time for God to work because men had made void his law. Daniel entered his chamber and prayed with his window open toward Jerusalem. He went about his duties as faithfully as ever. He would render unto Cæsar the things that were Cæsar's, and unto God the things that were God's. What a grand example the Christian has in Daniel!"

"But, mama, the king felt dreadfully when he saw through the schemes of these wicked men. He mourned all night that he could not save Daniel, and I believe he prayed that Daniel's God would deliver him. God did close the lions' mouths, and the next day Daniel was brought up out of the den, and the wicked men were thrown to the hungry lions, and no one sought to save them."

"How glad the king must have been to find out that Daniel's God was the God of deliverance. I think he must have been very much ashamed of his weakness in yielding to the flattery of these schemers. He could see that his legislation that struck at one of God's commandments worked disaster to his very best statesman and most loyal citizen. And it is always so. No king or government has ever legislated in such a way as to deprive men of their right to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences but that it has resulted in disaster to their best citizens."

"After Daniel's rescue Darius made a mistake in making a decree, ordering all his people to fear and tremble before the God of Daniel. That is, it was a mistake if it took the form of law. If it was simply a proclamation of his faith, it was all right; for we are bidden to be witnesses to the ends of the earth. But Christ's religion has nothing to do with compulsion. His worship must be in spirit and in truth."

"But, mama, I can see just why it was that the king made the decree. He was in the habit of legislating on matters of religion, and probably didn't know any better."

"And yet, Charlie, ignorance does not become a king, nor save his subjects from the consequences of bad legislation. We'll talk of this another time." F. B.

Sentinel Clubbing List.

SENTINEL and Chicago Inter Ocean.....	$1.50
SENTINEL and New York Tribune.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Cosmopolitan.....	1.85
SENTINEL and Iowa Homestead.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Rural New Yorker.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Signs of the Times (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Review and Herald (new subs.)	2.00
SENTINEL and Youth's Instructor (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Good Health (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Missionary Magazine.....	1.25
SENTINEL and Dumb Animals	1.25

Our Clubbing List.

THIS is about the time when the majority of people arrange for their periodical reading-matter for the year. No intelligent man for a moment thinks of doing without the means of keeping informed on the leading issues of the day. No man can afford to do it.

This is best secured through newspapers, magazines, etc. In the aggregate, the cost is quite a little sum, and no one appreciates this more than ourselves.

In order to make this burden as light as possible for our readers, we have made special arrangements with the publications named in our clubbing list, whereby, with the SENTINEL, they can be secured at considerably reduced rates.

We want this arrangement to be just and equitable to all, so, as a matter of accommodation, we will furnish any of the publications named to those whose subscriptions to the SENTINEL are already paid in advance at the price named in the clubbing list, less $1, the cost of the SENTINEL.

We are also in a position where we can secure at the lowest agents' prices any other of the leading publications of the country; and will be glad to give our subscribers the benefit of this reduction on any paper or magazine they may wish to secure. Write us for what you want, and we will be glad to quote you lowest rates. Don't be afraid of "bothering" us. True we are busy—always busy, but never so busy that it is not a pleasure for us to accommodate our friends.

All the publications named in our clubbing list are first-class, and can be relied upon as being as good as any of their kind. Let us save you some money when you are ready to order your papers and magazines for the year to come.

The Difference.

In conversation with an admirer of the SENTINEL a few days ago, we were shown a periodical that had in its prospectus the following:—

"Any one sending us the price of this paper will receive in addition to the year's subscription, four beautiful pictures (fully described in another column) worthy to adorn the walls of any home."

The suggestion was offered that this might be a pointer to us of a plan we could adopt as an inducement to secure and retain subscriptions for the SENTINEL. The incident gives us an opportunity to express ourselves on the subject.

Let us look at this particular case a moment. The paper in question was only fifty cents a year, and the pictures were such as would ordinarily retail in a book store at from fifteen to twenty-five cents, but which really did not cost over two cents each. This latter fact is, however, not generally known, and a large class of people jump at the chance to get, as they suppose, something for nothing. It was the pictures not the paper that secured the subscription.

This is emphatically an age of book-and-paper making. The words of the wise man were never so true as now,—“of making books there is no end.” Indeed, there is to-day more reading-matter thrust upon the public than it can judiciously utilize; and, in order to dispose of it to advantage, it seems almost a necessity for the proprietors to resort to sensationalism and a pretense of giving something for nothing.

Now in regard to the AMERICAN SENTINEL. The only excuse we plead for its existence is that we believe it bears to the people from week to week a message of momentous importance—of vital interest to every man, woman, and child in all the civilized world. We therefore want the paper's mission to stand clearly in the forefront, hid by no subterfuge. We want subscribers for the AMERICAN SENTINEL because of the intrinsic value of the matter it contains. We do not want them on any other basis. The constituency of this paper support it because of the principles in defense of which it stands. With all their heart they believe these principles are true; and as an evidence of what they will do to give them to others, we have only to refer to what was done in the way of increasing the SENTINEL's circulation during our late special offer, which is familiar to all our readers.

When our friends work for the SENTINEL, we want them to do so from a sense that they are engaging in real genuine missionary work. We want them to tell their friends and neighbors with an earnestness and tenderness that carries conviction, that there is in the SENTINEL something from week to week that vitally interests them; for it gives with a certain sound the signal of danger, and points out the way of escape from the perils with which this world stands face to face.

"Just Lovely,

"It is lots better than I thought it would be," says one of our patrons who purchased one of our Combination Bibles. Another, a minister, writes: "I have been using the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible nearly two years; am more pleased with it daily. The Revised Version feature of it is 'just the thing,' and if I were going to purchase a Bible to-morrow, you may depend upon it, I would get the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible."

See advertisement on last page of this paper. We want agents to help us sell this excellent Bible, to whom most liberal discounts are offered. Send to us for information as to how to become an agent, terms, etc. Time is short. The holiday trade is now on, and this Bible makes a splendid present to a husband, a wife, a parent, a child, a more distant relative, to anybody. Write to us.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

NEBRASKA SANITARIUM

COLLEGE VIEW
NEB.

A WELL REGULATED
AND SCIENTIFICALLY
EQUIPPED INSTITUTION
FOR THE TREATMENT
OF ALL CHRONIC
DISEASES.

"I am surprised,"

SAYS PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual

Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp

Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

NUT BUTTER MILLS.

Something new. Designed especially for converting nuts into butter for table and culinary purposes. Valuable recipes for the use of nuts. Shelled and unshelled nuts of all kinds at reasonable prices. Send for descriptive circular and price list.

JOSEPH LAMBERT,
Battle Creek, Mich.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR

Copy-righted 1895.

Prevents and relieves Constipation and Liver troubles. An appetizing, nutritious Family Flour, for Bread, Gems, Griddle Cakes, etc. Unrivalled in America or Europe. Pamphlet and Sample Free. Ask Dealers or write to Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N.Y.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 1/4 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required. BLUINE CO., Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

Webster's International Dictionary

Successor of the "Unabridged."
The One Great Standard Authority,
So writes Hon. D. J. Brewer,
Justice U. S. Supreme Court.

Standard
of the U. S. Gov't Printing Office, the U. S. Supreme Court, all the State Supreme Courts, and of nearly all the Schoolbooks.

Warmly Commended
by State Superintendents of Schools, College Presidents, and other Educators almost without number.

Invaluable
in the household, and to the teacher, scholar, professional man, and self-educator.

THE BEST FOR PRACTICAL USE.

It is easy to find the word wanted.
It is easy to ascertain the pronunciation.
It is easy to trace the growth of a word.
It is easy to learn what a word means.

The New York Tribune Says:—
The latest edition comes from the press with a completeness that implies the most thorough editorial and typographical supervision. * * * The wide public, too, finds this a work to which it is constantly useful to refer.—April 8, 1896.

GET THE BEST.

Specimen pages sent on application to
G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew, 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond st., New York City.

Sunbeams of Health and Temperance.

This is a unique work in which the author has undertaken to present a vast amount of interesting information in such a manner as to be not only instructive but entertaining.

The following are the titles of the principal sections of the work:

The House We Live In; The Habitations of Men; Some Strange People and Their Strange Manners; The Bills of Fare of all Nations; Dame Fashion and Her Slaves; Health and Temperance Miscellany; Hygiene for Young Folks.

Over 224 quarto pages.

Illustrated by hundreds of engravings.

One of the most interesting volumes ever published.

Cloth, plain edges,	Regular price.	We will send postpaid.
Cloth, gilt edges,	$2.25.	$1.25.
	2.50.	1.50.

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,

39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

A NEW TRACT CATALOGUE.

"Descriptive Catalogue of the Bible Students', Apples of Gold, and Religious Liberty Libraries" is the title of this 36 page catalogue.

It gives a pithy description of each tract and pamphlet in the above Libraries, together with their size and price. It will greatly assist the reader to select such numbers as he may desire to read and circulate; and may be obtained FREE by addressing the Pacific Press Publishing Company, Oakland, Cal.; 39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.; 18 W. 5th St., Kansas City, Mo.; or Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich.; Atlanta, Ga.

A Holiday Subscription Book, A POLITICAL HISTORY

Of the great questions culminating in the CIVIL WAR in the words of ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLASS.

555 Pages.

Cloth $1.75.

The work is entitled "Political Debates and Speeches of Lincoln and Douglas," and contains a complete report of their speeches and debates. The burning words of these great orators are of absorbing interest both to those who have lived through the exciting scenes pictured out, and those who know them merely as history. There can be nothing better placed in the hands of the rising generation than a book presenting, in an attractive way, the principles on which this government is founded. Efforts are now being made to overthrow those principles, hence it is important that we become intelligent regarding them. The work is a great assistance to that end.

Agents Wanted Everywhere. Liberal Terms.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,

39 Bond Street, New York City.

Oakland, Cal.

Kansas City, Mo.

The Stomach:

Its Disorders and
How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dyspepsia,
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	Quacks and Nostrums.
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia,

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts, including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50.

Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

A MARVEL IN BIBLE MAKING.

Large Type S. S. Teachers'

SELF-PRONOUNCING COMBINATION BIBLE.

Containing the King James and the Revised Versions on the Same Page. Showing in Simple Form all Changes, Additions and Omissions, and Enabling all Readers to See at a Glance wherein the Two Versions Differ.

Both Versions Combined Without Duplicating.

The King James Version, set in full and conforming exactly to the Oxford Teachers' Edition, and, wherever a change occurs, the letters r. v., referring to a foot-note at the bottom of the page, showing the reading as it appears in the Revised Version. Thus, in the same book, we have both the King James and the Revised Versions, complete and intact, without materially increasing the size of the volume or reducing the size of the type. Both printed together in the same column, showing the differences at a glance, and enabling the reader to practically read both at one and the same time; or, in other words, consuming in the comparative reading of the two texts not more than one-half the time required in the old way.

EITHER VERSION ALONE OR BOTH TOGETHER.

The great point of excellence in this arrangement is that while it enables one to read both Versions in almost exactly the same time, it does not mar, or in any way hinder, the reading of the King James Version alone and independently, where one does not care to refer to the revisions.

How to Read the Combination Bible.

Below is part of page 608 of our Combination Bible. The following Key shows how it is to be read:

KEY—The first RV on page 608 appears in verse 37 of the 9th chapter, before "dominion." In the King James Version the reading is "dominion over our bodies," etc. By referring to the foot-notes it will be seen that the word "dominion" is changed to "power." Hence the Revised Version reads "power over our bodies," etc.

In the 38th verse the King James reads, "because of all this;" by reference to foot of page it will be seen that the Revised Version reads, "yet for all this."

In verse 28 there is an RO, which denotes an omission. Refer to the foot-notes and "(having)" will be found. Every omission is placed in a parenthesis in the foot-notes, and the Revised Version in this instance reads, "every one that had knowledge and understanding."

Thus it is seen that the Revised Version is easily read in connection with the King James Version. The system is so simple and so easily understood that no reader finds any difficulty in comparing one version with the other.

Specimen of Type used in the S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Size of Page 5 x 7 3/4 inches.

They that sealed the covenant. . NEHEMIAH, X. The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

¹ The names of them that sealed the covenant. ²⁰ The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-he-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'sha-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,

2 ^c Sēr-a-lī'ah, Āz-a-rī'ah, Jēr-e-mī'ah,

3 Pāsh'ūr, Ām-a-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah,

4 Hāt'tūsh, Shēb-a-nī'ah, Māl'luch,

5 Hā'rim, Mēr'e-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah,

6 Dān'jēl, Gīn'nē-thon, Bā'rūch,

7 Mē-shūl'lam, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'a-mīn,

B. C. 445.

f Deut. 23.

48.

g 2 Kin. 23. 2.

2 Chr. 29.

10; 34. 31.

Ezra 10. 3.

ch. 10. 29.

2 Heb. are at the sealing,

or, sealed,

h ch. 10. 1.

3 Heb. at the sealings,

ch. 9. 38.

a ch. 8. 9.

4 Or, the governor.

b ch. 1. 1.

c See ch. 12.

1-21.

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

30 And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

31 ^k And ^l if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

The Bible Closed.

BINDING.

Imperial Seal, Tuck Edges, known as the "Divinity Circuit," Leather Lined, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges.

This is a regular

$8 Bible,

Something unique, and a good one.

It will be mailed postpaid

on receipt of only

$4.00.

Agents Wanted.

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Jeshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nehthinim,—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—

Address,

Pacific Press Publishing Co.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 46.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 25, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

LET us have less state religion, and more home religion.

WHATEVER invades the rights of one man, denies the rights of all.

To be patriotic does not mean that an individual shall make the state his god.

TRUE reverence cannot exist in the mind that has not learned respect for individual rights.

THE secular system of education is the only system that is incompatible with free public schools.

It is useless to try to remedy an evil in society by any measure which invades individual rights.

It is a sad feature of our modern civilization that it tends more and more to circumscribe the sphere of the parent's influence upon the child.

ANY man who essays to force people in a matter of religious belief and practice, sets himself in the place of the Holy Spirit, to which alone men can safely look for guidance in the religious life.

ANY public measure that tends to stifle the free sway of the individual conscience, tends to degrade the individual to the level of a machine, and to make him fit only to serve the purposes of despotism.

No person can be a traitor to his country who has not first been a traitor to his conscience.

"To thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

WHAT is the patriotism of the Christian? Is it love of country? If so, then of what country? Is it of that country which Abraham and the faithful worthies of old sought, as mentioned in Hebrews 11? That, and that alone, is the Christian's country.

Some Absolute Certainties.

It is certain that the great majority of people in this world, even in enlightened and civilized lands, are not moving in the pathway of righteousness.

Jesus Christ said that the pathway to life would be followed by but few, but that the way to destruction would be filled with many. If his words are true, it is certain that the many to-day are traveling in the broad way, which leads downward and away from goodness and from God.

And that these words of the Saviour of men are true, is a fact abundantly confirmed by observation. The only ones who can think differently are those who mistake the polish and veneer of civilization for genuine goodness of heart.

It needs only an average election to demonstrate the fact that the majority of the people do not really want good government. If they did, they would eliminate the saloon, which is universally recognized as a curse to society, and with which good government is wholly incompatible. But the people who vote for government without the saloon are usually a small minority.

It is certain that the minority cannot eliminate the majority from the government. They must, on the contrary, acquiesce with the majority's decisions.

It is certain that the minority cannot convert the majority by their votes. There is no power in the ballot to reform the heart.

It is a fact nevertheless that the minority,—the good people (assuming all the church people to be of this character)—have undertaken to reform the government, to put righteous government in the place of unrighteous government, by the ballot. And this minority is strong enough to be able to secure a compromise from the worldly majority.

It is certain that such a compromise will be the result of the reform efforts of the minority who represent the church in politics to-day.

This compromise will set up the forms of righteousness without the spirit; for the world has never objected to the mere forms of righteousness. These in fact are useful to world lovers as a means of respectability.

It is certain that a government in which the forms of righteousness are administered by a majority who have not the spirit of righteousness, will not be a righteous government. It is certain that it will be altogether unrighteous.

And it is certain that nothing else than this can be the ultimate outcome of the church in politics, as concerns the government of the United States.

Teaching the Pagan Conception of the State.

In Carnegie Hall, New York City, on the morning of Sunday, the 14th inst., an assembled congregation listened to a seriously uttered plea by the president of the Society of Ethical Culture, Felix Adler, to put the state in the place of God. The subject of Mr. Adler's discourse was, "What has religion done for civilization?" and in concluding his remarks he said:—

"Religion has aided civilization, then, by raising the standard of morality, and it has done this by personifying its ideas. But now the personification is going. Men are gradually passing from the belief in a personal God. What shall take its place? In the passing of the belief in this personification, men's lives have become flexible and dry, because they have no longer a personal God. Their ideals are gone. What course remains open to them? They may go back to the fountain head of these ideals. They may remember for what those ideals stood. They may try to lead the good life. They may have the reality back of the ideality. They may have the knowledge of the reality first hand, instead of a second-hand knowledge of the personification.

"This course presupposes a perfect race. Ah, friends, we've got to advance or sink to the level of the beasts. In most things we have advanced. In morality the most of us remain dunces."

At this point the speaker made an impressive pause of several minutes' length, and then continued:—

"I could well stop here, my friends, as my main argument is closed, but I have something else to say, and it may as well be said now as at any time. Religion has done another service for civilization in influencing politics. The first civic state was a religious state. In the old city states the words 'fellow citizens' had a different meaning from what they have now. 'Fellow citizens' then meant those who worshiped the same God, for each city had a god. Later, we remember that the idea of the king was that he was sacred; that he ruled by divine right.

"To-day we care nothing for kings. I fear we are losing our care for the state. In the old days the state was for the common weal. Each sacrificed something for the other. In the moral night that fell upon the city after the late election, we may think that men care nothing for the state. The morning after election I met persons who said they were going to move away from New York. They were the hasty, peevish ones. What we should do is to stay here and learn a holier feeling for the state. Let politics take the place of religion. If we care nothing for kings, let us devote ourselves to the state. In the state let us find the personal deity which is passing out of men's lives. Let the state be the object of our worship. Let us make it sacred, and when we have done so, the state will have taken the place of the personification. Let the state be that personification."

This proposal to deify the state is of course nothing less than pure paganism, out and out. In itself, as the outspoken plea of a teacher of modern ethical culture, it is significant enough. But it is vastly more so in view of the circumstances and conditions in which it finds support. "Men are gradually passing from the belief in a personal God." Candid observation confirms the truth of this statement; and for those of whom it is true the deification of the state cannot be an altogether strange and illogical measure. For it is human nature to deify something; and the state, more readily perhaps than anything else in the present age, furnishes the ideals which human nature is prone to worship.

"Let politics," said the speaker, "take the place of religion." Here again, the proposal to deify the state finds support in the tendency of the times. For it is a well-observed fact that politics is taking the place of religion, not only in the home, but in the pulpit. It is being taught that "Christianity is essentially political"—as was said by Rev. C. P. Mills at a recent Christian Endeavor convention in Massachusetts—and that it is the proper business of the church to "make politics go." Religious legislation, another marked tendency of the times, constitutes another force working directly to put the state in the place of God. With all these evident facts and tendencies, the idea of deifying the state is in perfect accord. They could have no other logical result.

Do the American people want this kind of a deity? The state as a deity becomes no merciful, loving, and forgiving Father, but an exacting despot. Do the American people prize their liberties enough to repudiate this pagan conception, with the despotism that is inseparable from it?

"ETERNAL vigilance is the price of liberty."

Religion in the Public Schools in Colorado.

THERE has been introduced into the school exercises of the public schools of Boulder, Col., by the school board, a feature which is very significant when considered in its relation to the fundamental principles of American government. It is called the "American Patriotic Salute."

The words of this salute are, "We give our heads, and our hearts, to God, and our country! One country! one language! one flag!"

This salute is given by the pupils in a body, standing, and with appropriate gestures. It is delivered facing an American flag, which is held before the school during the giving of the salute by some one chosen as standard bearer. At given signals the pupils rise in their seats, extend the right arm toward the flag, then bend it back so as to touch the forehead with the tips of the fingers, and at this point exclaim, "We give our heads;" then as the hand is carried to the breast and laid over the heart, come the words, "and our hearts." Next the head is thrown slightly back and the arm outstretched, pointing upward; and with the countenance assuming an expression of reverence, the words are uttered slowly and in reverential tones, "to God and our country!" The arm is then dropped to the side, and after a brief pause the pupil exclaims, with emphasis, "One country! one language! one flag!" at the last word extending the arm so as to point directly at the flag; after which the pupil resumes his seat.

This salute is made obligatory upon all the pupils. Those who refuse to give it are suspended from the school; and this action has already been taken in a number of instances.

Let us consider, therefore, for what cause, in reality, pupils are now suspended from the public schools in the city of Boulder, Col.

In this salute the pupil says that he gives his heart to God. Now, no one knowing anything of the requirements of Christianity will deny that giving the heart to God is anything less than conversion. "Son, give me thine heart," is the invitation of the divine Word by which God would draw the soul of the sinner to himself. He who gives his heart to the Lord, gives himself. The heart controls the life.

It is, therefore, beyond any contradiction, now required by the school authorities of the city of Boulder, that a pupil in the public schools must either profess conversion or be suspended from school!

And this, too, in the face of a provision of the fundamental law of the State, which declares the following (Art. 9, Sec. 8, of the General Statutes of Colorado):—

"No religious test or qualifications shall ever be required of any person as a condition of admission into any public educational institution of the State, either as teacher or student; and no teacher or student of such institution shall ever be required to attend or participate in any religious services whatever."

Beyond all controversy, the act or profession of giving the heart to God is a religious exercise. It is the very essence of religious devotion. It is a matter between the individual and his Creator. Into the sphere of this sacred relationship, comes the State, and with forceful hand assumes to dictate to the individual an act of devotion to God, taking the matter out of the hands of both the individual and God. And into the sphere of the sacred individual rights guaranteed by the law of the State, steps the school board of the city of Boulder, and in plain contravention of that law, compels public school pupils to engage in a religious exercise, under penalty of suspension if they refuse!

Do the pupils in the public schools of Boulder indeed give their hearts to God? They are required to say that they do. If they do not, they are required to utter a falsehood; and that, too, of the most damaging nature. But whether the pupil is sincere or not in his statement,

SALUTING THE FLAG.

"We give our heads, and our hearts, to God and our country! One country! one language! one flag!"

or comprehends the meaning of what he says, is a question of which the mandate of the school board takes no account whatever. The salute is obligatory upon all, and like any compulsory school regulation, can make no allowance for the beliefs or preferences of the pupils whom it affects.

Will those in favor of this religious requirement seriously claim that all the pupils who are thus made to say each day that they give their hearts to the Lord, do in reality make that consecration of themselves to him which the words imply? Is there any probability whatever, even the remotest, that the pupils of the public schools of Boulder, Col., are all consecrated in heart to the Lord? If they are, they were so of their own free will, and not because they have been made to say that they are; for a form of words has no power to convert the heart. But it is needless to propound the question, for it is perfectly evident that it must be answered in the negative. No; the children who thus say that they give their hearts to the Lord, are, many of them, not converted to God at all. This is absolutely certain. And therefore it is absolutely certain that in the public schools of the city of Boulder, Col., many of the pupils are compelled week after week to utter a falsehood, under penalty of suspension if they refuse!

Do the school board of the city of Boulder believe in God? Evidently they do. What, then, they may well inquire, does God himself think of this "patriotic salute?" Does he take account of such things? Does he take notice when an individual gives his heart to him,—when he does that in truth to secure which God sacrificed his only begotten Son, and poured out all heaven to mankind? Verily, he is well pleased with the gift of the heart of even the poorest and humblest individual on the earth. He is well pleased with the gift of the heart of "one of these little ones." But how does he regard a profession of dedication to him which is not made in truth? What does he think of a lie spoken upon that point in which centers all his interest in humanity? And what does he think of a school regulation which compels children to utter such a lie before him?

There is a text of scripture which says that it is better for a man that he should be cast into the sea with a millstone around his neck than that he should cause one of "these little ones" to offend. There is opportunity for an application of this text in the city of Boulder.

But this is not all there is in this "salute." It is a "patriotic salute." There is the American flag held before them, as an emblem of patriotism, and the school children are required to say that they give their hearts also to "our country." The gift creates a partnership, in which the parties are God and the United States Government! Can such a partnership be? Would the Almighty for a moment recognize it? Does the Creator claim anything less than the absolute right to the whole heart of every one of the human race? Who will seriously answer these questions in the negative?

If these words mean anything, they mean that the individual gives his life to his country, as he does to God. They mean that he will do as his country desires him to do. But when country calls, it is the government that speaks. The voice of government is taken for the call of country by the vast proportion of citizens. There is, indeed, a vital distinction between them; but it is not recognized by the many. And when the individual says that he gives his heart to "our country," it may safely be taken as meaning that he stands ready to do the bidding of the government, whatever that may be. Of the bidding of God no account is taken; for the government speaks with an audible command which no citizen can possibly mistake; and having given his heart to the government, he can but feel bound to act as the government directs; and the government is not the mouthpiece of God. So that in the partnership which this gift assumes to set up, it is the government, and not God, that receives what is given.

God and civil government are parties that cannot always proceed in unison. This is because civil government is the creation of finite, sinful men; while God is infinite and altogether righteous. God's ways are always just. Civil government often does that which is unjust.

God has said, "Thou shalt not kill." But at the command of the government, the individual who has given his heart to the government, ignoring the command of God, takes his rifle and goes forth to kill as many of his fellow beings as he can. He seems to suppose that in some way the two commands can be harmonized; and feeling bound to obey the command of the government, he leaves it with the government to answer for the rightfulness of his course. He does not stop to ask himself where earthly governments will be in that day when every one shall give account of himself before God for the deeds that he has done in the body.

God has said, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." But at the command of the government, men go forth to spend the Sabbath day in shooting down one another in battle.

God has said, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." But in the very act of giving the heart to another power than God, the individual chooses another god; for there is no point in worship if it be not supported by obedience. We cannot worship one power and obey another.

And therefore, since it is certain that in some things at least this government will proceed contrary to the laws of God, as all civil governments have since the world began, it is certain that in being required to say that they give their hearts to "our country," the pupils of the public schools of Boulder, Col., are required to pledge themselves to act, at some time, contrary to the will of God!

Let it not be thought strange that the government should not act in all things in harmony with the will of God. The very nature of civil governments is unchristian. They are selfish, each seeking only its own interests, and that, too, very often, at the expense of the others. They cast covetous eyes upon possessions that are not theirs. They never forgive an insult, but demand an apology and satisfaction; and if these are not forthcoming, there is war. Or if war does not follow, it is only because the aggrieved party feels too weak to risk the venture. These are facts which no one can dispute. In the very nature of things, therefore, it is not to be expected that civil governments will long act in harmony with the will of God.

And thus, in the light of truths that are self-evident, it is plain to the astonished gaze of every lover of liberty that in the city of Boulder, Col., in this latest year of American progress and enlightenment, the pupils of the public schools are compelled, by the constituted school authorities, to profess religion; to utter, in many cases at least, a direct falsehood; and to pledge themselves to the service of a power that is by nature contrary to God; they are forced to do all this under penalty of expulsion from the schools; and this is done in direct contravention of the provisions of the fundamental law of the State, forbidding any religious test, or forced participation in "any religious services whatever"!

What do the board of public schools of the city of Boulder, Col., propose to do about it? What will the people of Boulder do about it? What will the people of the State do about it? And what will the people of the United States, and of the civilized world think about it? These are things that remain to be seen.

Reverence and Patriotism.

WE wish it to be understood that we are in entire sympathy with the desire which many excellent people feel, in this country, for the inculcating of a greater degree of reverence in the minds of the young.

If there is one feature more conspicuous than another in the lives of the youth in this land, it is their fast-growing irreverence for any power and authority higher than themselves.

It is perfectly proper that the situation should be viewed by good people with genuine alarm. The spirit of irreverence is essentially the spirit of lawlessness. It is certain that it bodes no good, but great evil, to the future welfare of society and the prosperity of the nation.

Something ought to be done, and that as speedily as possible, to check the growth of this baneful feature of our modern civilization; which is, indeed, becoming so widespread a feature of that civilization as to constitute a sign of the times. Everything should be done to this end that can be done by all lovers of good government. And unquestionably there is much that might be done by judicious planning and effort.

Our only want of sympathy in all that relates to this matter is with the misconceived—though doubtless well-meant—efforts that are being made to remedy the situation by people whose views are not broad enough to take in the full scope of what it demands. Such efforts do not get down to the root of the difficulty, and by their superficial work only aggravate the evil which they are meant to cure.

Such, for instance, is the effort which finds expression in the "patriotic salute" innovation in some of the public schools, which is noticed at length on another page. For it is not difficult to believe that a desire to inculcate reverence in the minds of the youthful pupils of the public schools is the real motive from which this innovation has sprung. We are heartily in sympathy with the motive; but as we have pointed out elsewhere, we are most heartily opposed to the means through which it is sought to be carried into effect.

The trouble is not one which lies with the public school system of education. It is not one which any change in that system can eradicate. It is an evil which lies primarily at the doors of parents. Parents have not taught their children to be reverent toward the things which can of right command their reverence. They have not conducted themselves in a manner to command the reverence of their children; and the latter have grown up to acquire and use such expressions as "the governor" and "the old man," in the place of "father." There can be no real and permanent remedy for the evil until parents take up this long-neglected duty. The influence of the parent upon the child is one which cannot be ignored, and which will produce its effect for good or ill upon the character in spite of any system of public education that can be devised.

The spirit of reverence is essentially the spirit of religion. As this spirit has become lost out of the hearts of the people, in the great spiritual declension of these times, the natural result has been the loss of the reverential spirit by those who should be teachers of reverence to the rising generation.

We are in the great spiritual declension of "the last days,"—of the time when, because of abounding iniquity, the love of many should wax cold. See Matt. 24:12, 13; 2 Tim. 3:1-4. Without religion, there cannot be reverence; and without Christianity, there cannot be reverence for that to which reverence rightfully belongs.

Christianity, and that alone, will reach the root of the difficulty. The wider diffusion of Christianity is the pressing need of the hour. And there is but one way for this diffusion to be accomplished, and that is by faith in the Word of God.

We are also heartily in sympathy with the desire to foster the sentiment of true patriotism in the minds and hearts of the people. But what is patriotism? Is it something which makes people belligerent,—which fills them with the idea that their country can whip any other country on the earth, and with a desire to demonstrate their ability in this line at the earliest opportunity? Is it an altogether selfish sentiment, which ignores right and justice in the endeavor to gain some advantage for the object on which it is bestowed? If it is, then we have no wish to see it fostered; for there is selfishness enough, and much more than enough, in the world at the present time.

But this is not patriotism in its true sense. There is a sentiment which leads men to seek the welfare of their fellows, regardless of condition, belief, or color, and even of nationality. The Declaration of Independence sounded forth the words of freedom for all the world. And under the system of government for which it stood, the oppressed of all nations found a haven of refuge. Under the operation of the principles of liberty which it enunciates, there arose in a single century one of the greatest nations upon the globe. Cannot the nation continue to prosper under the inculcation of these same principles? Is it not in them that the truest patriotism is to be found?

Let us have a patriotism which reaches out beyond the boundaries of the American continent, even to the afflicted people of other lands; not to seek to kill as many of them as our armaments will enable us to do, nor to cripple the interests of other countries that those of our own may be enhanced; but one which seeks to further the welfare of a sorrow-laden humanity in all lands; and which stands in defense of the God-given rights and liberties of the people, whether at home or abroad.

The Place of Liberty.

BY JOHN D. BRADLEY.

(Concluded.)

LIBERTY is divine, and it is found in Christianity alone. Christ is the great Emancipator, for he was "sent to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." "I am the way, the truth, and the life." "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." In the language of Bancroft, "The voice in Judea was the first to vindicate religion for the conscience of the individual," and in vindicating individual liberty on that point, he vindicated it upon every point. He was the living expression of the one law in the universe, the observance of which insures liberty. This one law is the "royal law," "the perfect law of liberty," the only charter of equality. "I will walk at liberty, for I seek thy precepts."

Through Christ alone can the life be brought into conformity with that law, for "without me ye can do nothing." Therefore, Christianity is the place of liberty; the conservator of liberty; the only source of liberty; "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." Here no less than elsewhere "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

When I say that Christianity is the place of liberty, I do not mean that it is the place of a certain kind of liberty, or of a certain phase of liberty. It is the place of liberty in every respect, both spiritual and social. It is the place of all liberty, except the liberty of despotism.

Politics do not enter into it, yet it is a fact that without the principles of the Christian religion there can be no political liberty. The measure of freedom that has been enjoyed under any system of government has been exactly in proportion to the influence that these principles have had upon the lives of the individual citizens. Acting upon other principles, their imagined freedom has been made to minister to tyranny, their liberty serving the flesh only as a cloak of maliciousness. It does not alter the truth a particle to make the words of the Master read: Despotism is from beneath; liberty is from above; despotism is of this world; liberty is not of this world.

Nor do I mean that the spirit of democracy is foreign to Christianity. It is not, when it proclaims the equality of man and the principle of government by consent. In this sense Christ has been properly called the first true democrat. The Christian church, in which each member is obedient to the command of the Master, in humbleness of mind esteeming others better than himself, is the only true democracy that can exist. In it there is neither Greek nor Jew, Barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free, for "all are brethren." The first is last, and the greatest is servant. Vox populi, vox Dei,—the voice of the people is the voice of God,—was a favorite maxim in the republic of Rome. It is safe to say that there was never uttered a greater falsehood. In the Christian church, conducted upon its original principles, the voice of the people is the voice of God, for "whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

A community such as would be produced if conducted upon these principles, is described by Longfellow in that beautiful picture of life in the village of Grand Pré:—

"Thus dwelt together in love these simple Acadian farmers,— Dwelt in the love of God and of man. Alike were they free from Fear, that reigns with the tyrant, and envy, the vice of republics.
Neither locks had they to their doors, nor bars to their windows;
But their dwellings were open as day and the hearts of the owners;
There the richest was poor, and the poorest lived in abundance."

It has always appeared to me that Longfellow was here describing the ideal rather than the actual; the ideal becomes the actual only in Christianity.

In conclusion, remember that love is the law of liberty. "Perfect love casteth out fear," "that reigns with the tyrant;" and "envy, the vice of republics," has no place, for "love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not." This liberty is conferred not by might nor by power; not by the proclamation of consuls and the elevation of the eagle; but by the proclamation of the gospel and the quiet and peaceful influence of the Spirit. It is not found in the storm nor in the whirlwind; but is revealed by the still, small voice. It is my sincere desire that we shall so heed that voice that it may lead us into that soon coming kingdom, where the marks of despotism shall have no place,—where there shall be no more death, nor sorrow, nor pain, for "sorrow and sighing shall flee away, and everlasting joy shall be the portion of the redeemed."

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, THERE is liberty."

Questions and Answers.

BY FANNIE BOLTON.

When was the Sabbath made for man?

Answer the question ye who can.

Hear the universe all around

Answering now with terrific sound,

"When the heavens and the earth were finished, then
The Sabbath was made for the sons of men."

Why was the Sabbath made for man?

Had it a purpose? Was there a plan?

Hear the angels ten thousand sing,

"For a token that Christ is the Lord and King.

It was set apart as an outward sign

Of the rest of the soul in His love divine."

How was the Sabbath made for man?

Was it by blessing? Was it by ban?

"It was set apart by the blessing of Him

Who commands the worship of seraphim.

'Twas the day of His rest in the love divine,

That all through creation's works doth shine."

Who was He who this rest began?

That made a Sabbath of peace for man?

"It was God the Father and God the Son

Who rested in joy when the work was done,

And set the day of their rest apart

As a sign of the joy of God in the heart."

Who should keep holy the holy day?

"Those who rejoice in their God alway.

Those who believe in a God above

Who looks on his children in tender love;

Those who can keep it as day divine,

Of invisible grace an outward sign."

What would its keeping be to God,

If men enforced it beneath a rod?

And what to him if devoid of awe,

Men kept it because compelled by law?

Answer that question ye who can?

"An insult to heaven, a curse to man."

Then shall the rest be the rest God saith—

An outward sign of an inward faith?

A jewel that's chosen to deck the soul,

And not the chain of a forced control?

Master or workman, ye are free

To do the thing that God saith to thee.

Compelling the Youthful Conscience.

A NOTICEABLE feature of the situation which has arisen in the public schools of Boulder, Col., in connection with the enforcement of the "patriotic salute," is the refusal of some of the school children to participate in the exercise because contrary to the dictates of conscience. At least five children have been suspended from the Boulder schools as the result of this effort to inculcate "patriotism."

In two instances, we are informed, conscience asserted itself in the tender minds of the children in opposition to the commands of both teachers and parents. The innate iniquity of the thing is apparent even to the conscience of childhood.

In one case, upon refusal to participate in the salute, the teacher exclaimed, sharply, "Why do you not salute the flag? are you a traitor?" To which the youth replied: "No; I am not a traitor, but I understand that the flag is an emblem of liberty. Now, if you use it to compel a person to do a thing he does not consider to be right, it is no longer an emblem of liberty." Another, in reply to a like question from his teacher, said: "I am willing to salute the flag twenty times a day; but as to repeating the words of that salute, there is no power on earth that has any right to compel me to take that oath." These were good answers, and their force could not but be felt.

A clipping from the Daily Camera (Boulder), of November 9, which a friend has sent us, gives the views of one apologist for this new feature of the school exercises, and among them we note the following:—

"No; a pagan or an infidel in this enlightened age, and in this country, should not and does not get the same consideration as a Christian."

This is certainly a frank expression, but it is not the sentiment which has been supposed to pervade the American system of government. Such expressions may be only straws, but they show which way the wind is beginning to blow.

As we have said elsewhere, we are not at all disposed to criticise the motives which lie back of the introduction of this "patriotic" feature of the school exercises. Let us have patriotism, and let us have reverence; but let it not be sought to inculcate these by measures which disregard sacred rights, and force children to leave the public schools in order to be true to the dictates of conscience. Such a system has its condemnation written upon its face.

CAPTAIN BARKER, of the U. S. battleship "Oregon," has communicated to the secretary of the navy a general denial of the story published a few months since by the Herald and Presbyter, and which was widely copied by other journals, in the form of a letter written by a minor officer on the "Oregon" to a "minister of unquestioned standing," giving an account of certain Romish practices observed on board the "Oregon" on Good Friday, and which, the letter states, were made obligatory upon the crew. The genuineness and truth of the letter seemed at the time of its publication to rest upon the best of authority; but the explicit denial of Captain Barker seems at least equally entitled to credence. We certainly hope the facts are just as the "Oregon's" captain states.

But the very fact that the letter was so widely credited and copied by other journals affords unmistakable evidence of the extent of Rome's actual encroachments into the sphere of civil authority. Had there been nothing in the nature of an alliance with the government heretofore, such a letter as the one in question would have been wholly discredited from the start.

DURING the past fortnight a number of that class of American citizens who are bent on demonstrating the failure of popular government have given an exhibition of their work in the State of North Dakota. On Sunday, the 14th inst., three men were taken by a mob from the custody of the authorities of Williamsport, in that State, and treated to the customary form of mob justice. There is good reason for believing that one of these men was innocent of the crime charged against him.

* * *

THE men had been accused of being the principals in a murder perpetrated at Winona, in the same State, a short time previous, by which an entire family had been put out of existence. Two of them had confessed their guilt, but the third had strenuously asserted his innocence, and had been held to be guilty only upon the testimony of the two desperate criminals in whose crime he was charged with participating. But what lends a tragic interest to the affair is the fact that the Supreme Court of the State had at the time of the lynching, reversed the judgment rendered against this man in the lower court, and ordered a new trial. In this judgment the Supreme Court laid down what it held to be good reasons for believing that the accused was not guilty.

* * *

BUT mob justice takes no account of the verdicts of the courts. Two of the three men who suffered its vengeance were certain to have met the death penalty in the regular process of the execution of the law; but for this the mob could not wait. The third individual was, by the weight of carefully considered evidence, not guilty at all; but this the mob were not willing to admit.

* * *

IF we are to judge of the real motive which actuates the mob on such occasions, from the facts which have appeared in this and other instances of mob violence, we can hardly escape the conclusion that such motives as have been usually assigned fall short of the real evil of the actuating principle. It has been said that lynchings were due to a popular distrust of the efficiency of the machinery of the law for securing justice, and that the delays of which legal procedure will admit are more than the patience of the public can reasonably be expected to endure. But we must look farther for the actuating principle of the mob's procedure in cases where there is a certainty of the speedy execution of the law, or where there is a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the party accused. We can only conclude in such cases that the mob are moved by a base desire to participate in the execution of the death penalty upon their fellow beings accused of crime; that there is, deep down in the average heart, an instinct which takes delight in such scenes of lawless violence; that lynchings, viewed in their true light, reveal, not the desire of the participants for justice, but the innate savagery of human nature.

* * *

WHATEVER we may think upon this point, it is certain that every lynching is an argument against the success of popular government. Mob justice ignores every established means of securing justice which popular government has set up. It declares, in effect, that every such means is a failure; and if this be true, popular government itself is only a colossal failure, and the sooner some other form of government takes its place, the better. The more lynchings we have in the country, the nearer will we be brought to the setting up of some form of monarchy upon the ruins of the republic.

* * *

ONE of the most prominent signs of the times that is visible throughout the civilized world, consists in the rise and progress of socialism. This development is more marked in some of the countries of Europe than in the United States; but it is by no means unnoticed here, nor is the promise of a harvest from the seed which it is sowing less evident than in other lands.

* * *

FROM Belgium, better perhaps than from any other country, we may learn the lesson of the tendency and ultimate effect of this movement. The most significant fact about it is that in time it reacts most disastrously upon the system of popular education. Its whole influence will be cast, in a reactive manner, against the system of free secular public schools upon which the country now prides itself, and in favor of a system of religious schools in which instruction will be virtually in the hands of the clergy.

* * *

THUS, in Belgium, where socialism has attained its most extreme development, there has been in less than twenty years a complete change from the first-named system of public education to the latter. The law of 1879 made the public schools in that country neutral, and denied the clergy the privilege of giving religious instruction in them. The year 1895 brought forth a law making religious instruction compulsory in the schools, and confiding instruction in the same to the clergy. This marked the completion of a backward movement that had been for several years in progress. In speaking of this reactionary movement in the educational system, which is described as a general one, "profoundly affecting Western Europe," Mr. A. Tolman Smith says in a late issue of the New York Independent: "It is not so much a reaction against secular schools as against the extreme and alarming demands of socialists."

* * *

THE socialist propaganda is a movement that has long claimed the attention of the papacy. The papacy claims to stand as the bulwark against the evils which threaten society and good government from the spread of socialistic doctrines. She alone, of all powers upon earth, is able to hold the turbulent masses of the people within the limits of wholesome restraint. This is her claim, and there is much in the facts of the situation to afford it justification. The papacy does have a hold upon the masses, in European lands especially, which is recognized by the governments of those countries; and in this fact lies a source of tremendous power for the advancement of papal interests throughout the realm of European civilization and control. Those governments are often forced to appeal to the papacy for the assistance of her powerful influence in securing support for measures which the state deems of much importance to its welfare. Of such an occasion the papacy never fails to take advantage. She gives her support to state measures only in exchange for such a concession from the state as will afford a rich harvest for herself.

* * *

THE papacy stands as the ancient and never-changing representative of the doctrine of compulsory religious education. In every civilized land on the globe she is working assiduously to secure for this doctrine the recognition and support of the government. In some of the countries of Europe there is a clerical party which bids for the direct support of the people at the polls. In others, and in the United States, she forms an alliance with one of the leading political parties; and either through her manipulations of politics, or by direct concession from the government in return for her support of some pet measure of the state, she works steadily to attain her ends. This, in brief, is the inside history of the change which has recently swept over the educational system of Belgium, and which is sweeping over the like systems in other lands. It is the history in advance of the change which will overtake the educational system in the United States, as certainly as the operation of existing causes is allowed to continue.

* * *

IN time, the demands of socialism here, as in European lands, will become "extreme and alarming;" if, indeed, they have not already reached that point. In the popular unrest which this, in conjunction with other causes, must produce, society will turn, in alarm, to the one power which gives promise of being able to control the tumult—the church. There is one point about human nature which affords the church a powerful hold upon mankind, and that point is superstition. The masses who never hear the thunders of Sinai denouncing their individual sins, are powerfully moved by the thunders of the church against some "godless" feature of secular government. The church will prescribe the remedy for the evils which threaten society and the government, and the superstitious masses will vote that they be carried into effect. Of this result there are numerous indications in the record of current events.

* * *

THE church says that our secular system of education is "godless." She says that this system of education is producing godless men and women—the class of people who feed the ranks of socialism and are responsible for the spreading spirit of hostility to law and order. She says that the remedy lies in the introduction of religious teaching into the public schools. She says that in the prevalence of disasters which bring widespread ruin and distress upon the country, are to be seen the judgments of God signifying his displeasure against a godless government.

* * *

IN all this, the Protestant church voices the sentiment of Rome. In calling for the establishment of compulsory religious instruction in the public schools, she is calling for Rome's own system. She is calling for that which Rome is putting forth her most aggressive efforts to secure. A recognition of that system as proper and desirable is a recognition of Rome. And by Rome will a harvest of gain be reaped when that system shall have been set up.

* * *

WE may expect, from this time forward, to see a rapid metamorphosis taking place in the public school system of education, which will eventually leave it with every secular feature effaced, and stamped with the features of a union of church and state. For such a union there must be when the state becomes a teacher of religion. We will then no longer have occasion to speak with pride of "our free system" of public education. It is to this result that the forces of disintegration in society and popular government are surely working.

* * *

It seems to have been a very convenient thing for the German government that recently two German missionaries, while engaged in their calling in one of the provinces of China, were murdered by the subjects of that government. At any rate, Germany has proceeded to take "satisfaction" for the deed in a manner which strongly suggests this thought. She has sent a naval force to the coast province of Shantung and taken possession of the very important harbor in Kiaochow Bay, driving out the Chinese garrisons from the forts and hoisting over them the German flag. The harbor is said to be as desirable a one as could have been selected on the Chinese coast for permanent occupation.

* * *

OF course this act, which in itself amounts to a virtual declaration of war, is all right in this case; for is it not a maxim of the "Christian" nations of Europe that "might makes right"? Had it been a powerful government with which Germany had thus been brought to deal, it is entirely safe to say that her "satisfaction" would not have been taken in this peculiar way. As governments view things, the exchange of the lives of two missionaries for a valuable harbor on an important part of the Pacific coast of Asia, is a very profitable bargain indeed.

Thomas Jefferson on the Liquor Traffic.

As is pointed out by the New York Voice, the platform of the party which in the late campaign in this city called itself the champion of the principles of Jeffersonian democracy, differed in one important feature at least from the platform of principles upon which Jefferson stood. It advocated the repeal of laws restricting the traffic in strong drink, in the name of personal liberty.

Jefferson's views upon the point of the necessity of steps to suppress this terrible blight upon society and the image of God in humanity, are expressed in a letter written in 1823 to his friend Gen. Samuel Smith. In this, after speaking of the tax on whisky, and saying that if it were to be viewed simply as a fiscal measure, he would be glad to see it fail, Jefferson proceeds to show that considerations of another and more important nature must be taken into account. He says:—

"But the prostration of body and mind, which the cheapness of this liquor is spreading through the mass of our citizens, now calls the attention of the legislator on a very different principle. One of his important duties is as guardian of those who from causes susceptible of precise definition cannot take care of themselves. Such are infants, maniacs, gamblers, drunkards. The last, as much as the maniac, requires restrictive measures to save him from the fatal infatuation under which he is destroying his health, his morals, his family, and his usefulness to society. One powerful obstacle to his ruinous self-indulgence would be a price beyond his competence. As a sanitary measure, therefore, it becomes one of duty in the public guardians."

THE accuracy of the modern newspaper report is pretty well illustrated by the remarkable (newspaper) career of that well-known leader of Islam, Osman Digna. The New York Tribune has reckoned up the incidents of this career, as told by the newspapers, and finds that he was killed in battle ninety-seven times and murdered forty-eight times, that he committed suicide eleven times, and has been otherwise put off the earth twenty-three times; making a total of 179 fatalities for this one individual. This is probably a few more than have befallen any other individual who has had the misfortune to become a central figure in modern newspaper journalism.

IT is reported that the Christian Endeavor society will next month send in a monster petition of a million and a half of names to Congress, calling for the recognition of God in the Constitution. Have our Christian Endeavor friends taken pains thoughtfully to consider the real nature of the thing which they will thus so forcibly ask the government to do?

A Conversation on Mormonism.

THE Morristown (Tenn.) Gazette, of October 6, prints the following report of an interview between two Mormon elders who were visiting that place on a missionary tour, and a lady at whose house they had applied for entertainment. The conversation naturally touched upon some of the fallacies underlying the Mormon system:—

"Two Mormon elders were visitors in Morristown for several days last week, and harangued small crowds at night upon the streets. During their sojourn, among other families, they called upon a most estimable and Christian lady and asked to be entertained for the night. The entertainment they received is made public by the lady hostess in this report of—

A CONVERSATION BETWEEN TWO MORMON ELDERS AND A SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST.

"MORMON ELDERS.—'Good afternoon, madam.'

"SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST.—'Good afternoon. Will you walk in? Take seats.'

"(We will call the taller No. 1, and the shorter one No. 2.)

"M. E., No. 1.—'We are ministers of the gospel—Mormon elders. I presume you have heard something of the Mormon Church?'

"S. D. A.—'Indeed I have. I have lived in this world over half a century, and it seems to me that I have heard of them all my life. I know much of them from reading; and I had a brother-in-law who went "sight-seeing" and took in Salt Lake City. I learned much from him. That was about twenty years ago, when Brigham Young, your prophet, flourished with twenty wives. I have the picture of the twentieth one on the wall of my chamber now, who went lecturing the world over against the horrors of the life she had been induced to lead.'

"M. E., No. 1.—'That was Ann Eliza. We do not practice polygamy now.'

"S. D. A.—'No, for the United States has enacted laws forbidding it. It is not a reformation of the church.'

"M. E., No. 2.—'I have been raised in Salt Lake City and I never knew but eight men to have a multiplicity of wives.'

"S. D. A.—'And that was eight too many. Quite enough to show that the church recognizes it as lawful in the sight of God, for which you certainly have no scripture.'

"M. E., No. 2.—'What does the Scripture say about seven women taking hold of one man, saying: "We will eat our own bread and wear our own apparel, only let us be called by thy name to take away our reproach."

"S. D. A.—'And Isa. 4:1 is your foundation for polygamy? Read the connection and you will find that the Lord tells us through his servant there will come a great slaughter of men by war. There would be such a great devastation that there would scarcely be one man in seven left, where, as an average, God has created the sexes about equal. And for that cause the women would change the usual method in their depraved vanity and make their court to the men and propose to support themselves. Modesty, their greatest virtue, was forgotten, and with them the reproach of vice was nothing to the reproach of virginity. When a person's heart is in rebellion against the law of God, it is wonderful what a poor, weak foundation he can stand upon to justify himself in the indulgence of sin. I now understand why Mormon women are required to support themselves.

"We cannot take one verse of the Scripture and say this is the truth, the way, and the life, but must compare scripture with scripture. Had God created man with a nature requiring more than one wife, he would have created a multiplicity of them to begin with. The divine nature is contented and satisfied with one wife, but the carnal human nature is not satisfied with one wife or one husband nor anything else. It is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. You are Mormons because you have been raised Mormons; but if you are true servants of the Lord, you will, like Luther and the other reformers, break off from your church when you see she does not adhere to the Word of God, and denounce her errors and cling to the truth, no matter where it leads you. What day do you teach is the Sabbath?"

"M. E., No. 2.—'We teach the seventh day is the Sabbath.'

"S. D. A.—'I was not aware your church had made that reformation.'

"M. E., No. 2.—'We teach Sunday is the seventh day.'

"S. D. A.—'Well, dear me! So you break up the chronology of time to suit your teaching! Look at that calendar hanging on the wall before you. Does it not show that Sunday is the first day of the week? Don't all the world claim that it is the first day, and that they keep it for the Sabbath because Christ rose from the grave on that day? but without any command or authority for doing so, however. The seventh day is the Sabbath; and God has made it as emphatic as was possible to do in the fourth commandment. If I were you, I would cut loose from error; I would preach truth, which is easy to do when you have the power of the Holy Spirit to lead you by the Word of God, which is the sword of the Spirit which cuts away darkness and error. It is an uphill business to strive against God.'

"M. E., No. 1.—'Well, madam, we are traveling without scrip or purse, depending wholly upon the charity of the people for our support. We would be pleased to get entertainment overnight.'

"S. D. A.—'Were you teachers of truth I would gladly entertain you; but I cannot think of supporting you in leading the people in rebellion against God's law.'

"M. E., No. 1.—'Well, then, as it is getting late, we must be seeking entertainment elsewhere. We will bid you good-bye.'

"S. D. A.—'Good-bye.'

Natural Rights.

DEAR youthful readers of the SENTINEL: Do you not know that God, the Creator, has given to each living thing that he has made, from man down to the lowest form of nature, certain rights of which they cannot lightly or cruelly be deprived without doing them an injustice that would displease the Lord?

God made the beasts, the birds, the fishes, and the insects, and designed that they all should be just as happy and contented as it was possible for them to be. Their lives are generally short, and every noble-hearted boy, or man, and the girls, too, will try to make them happy.

When I visit a family and see the domestic fowls gather round father, mother, or children when they go into the yard, I think that surely the family are kind-hearted toward each other; but when the fowls hasten away, or the cat and the dog act afraid at the approach of any one, my thought is, This is a disagreeable family and one which does not respect the natural rights of man or beast.

Do not disturb the nests of birds. God was not displeased when they built their nests even in his temple. See Ps. 74:3. Do not rob the little squirrel of his store of nuts, for God gave them to him for food, and he has laid them up for his winter supply. Surprise him by adding corn to his store. Be kind to the horse, the cow, and all animals. They may not understand your words, but your voice and manner will please them. When among domestic animals, let the girls especially sing if they can. Some animals are delighted with instrumental music.

You may speak of the dog, the cat, the pony, or the canary as your own, and they may be yours rather than the property of somebody else; but remember that they all belong to God first of all and all the time, and he only lends them to you as his servants. God says, "Every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains: and the wild beasts of the field are mine." Ps. 50:10,11.

See that the domestic fowls and animals under your care have comfortable houses and stalls, and that they are well fed. It is their God-given right, and it will make you more tender-hearted to respect it.

When you can do so, put out some grain for the wild fowls, too. Do not hunt the birds or animals, and kill them with gunshots. It is cruel, and never would have been had not sin²entered our world, and never will be in the new earth.

O girls, do not sanction the killing of the beautiful birds by wearing their feathers—for which they were cruelly shot to death—in your hats. Please read Matt. 10:29, and shed a tear over the death of the little songster whom your vanity has caused to be slain.

The seeds of religious liberty, or of bigotry and oppression, are sown in the domestic circle and in the surroundings of home, to ripen into an abundant harvest in after years.

The details of life in the parlor, in the kitchen, in the yard, and in the barn, as well as in social neighborhood and school life, are all contributing to your education, and will make you noble men and women, respecting the rights of all in after years; or will make you the very opposite, a discouragement to yourselves, and disagreeable companions, neighbors, and citizens. Which condition will you choose for your destiny? A. SMITH.

Following the Majority.

"HELLO, Tom!"

"Hello!"

"Haven't you made up your mind yet to go to the circus along with the rest of us?"

"No, Will, I haven't"

"Pshaw, Tom. I would n't be so foolish. Everybody is going, and for you, Harry, and Joe to hang back after we have planned to all go together seems shallow."

"I had nothing to do with any such plan, Will."

"Well, you might be a little more courteous and obliging than to spoil it all if you did n't."

"I dislike to be disobliging, Will; but to my mind circus-going is not the very best recreation, and I do not feel that I can afford to spend time and means upon that which will be to no profit. You remember our golden text last Sabbath was 'Why spend ye money for that which is not bread'? and I feel that this is just what I should be doing, were I to go the circus."

"It doesn't seem to me, Tom, that there is need of being quite so particular. I shouldn't wonder a bit if Harry and Joe would both go when they see that you three are the only ones standing out about it. Then you will be the only boy of the whole school refusing to go."

"I cannot help it, Will, if I am. If a thing is right, it is right, no matter how few there are who believe it; and with God's help I intend to stand for right even though I have to stand alone. The Bible means just such things as this when it says, 'Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil.'"

"Are you sure the Bible says that, Tom? You are always telling what the Bible says. Jim Drake said the other evening that he didn't believe half the texts you quoted were in the Bible at all."

"Look here, Will. I have a little pocket Bible right here with me. There now, you take it and turn to Exodus, twenty-third chapter, and the first clause of the second verse."

"I guess you had better find it, Tom. I don't study it enough to be able to find anything I want very readily."

"Well, here it is. Now read it for yourself, Will."

"Well, Jim says he thinks the majority ought to rule, and there is no use of two or three setting themselves up as patterns of principle."

"Never mind, Will, Jim Drake cannot be conscience for you and me. Read the text, please."

"There; that will do. You now know, Will, what God thinks of doing things because others, even the majority, do them. The majority has no weight with God, Will. Just let me find the eleventh chapter of Proverbs for you. Now read the twenty-first verse."

"'Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished.'"

"That is sufficient."

"But, Tom, Why do men dare to sin so many times when the Bible speaks so plainly about it?"

"Turn to Ecclesiastes (or I will do it for you), eighth chapter, and eleventh verse. Read please."

"'Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.'"

"Do you see the reason, Will?"

"Well, I should think it is plain enough."

"Now read the next two verses."

"'Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him: But it shall not be well with the wicked.'"

"Now we will turn to Ephesians the sixth chapter and seventh verse."

"'Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.'"

"Well, Mr. Drake told Jim the Bible wasn't intended for children, because they couldn't understand it; but from what we've read I should think it plain enough for anybody, and I can see now that you are in the right, and that right will finally win. I didn't know, Tom, that you carried a Bible right with you. I believe it's because you study that so much that it is easier for you to do right than the rest of us boys. I believe I'll use my circus money to get me a small one like that, and run over and tell Jim that I too am going to spend my time more profitably."

"May be you could persuade Jim to study along with you, Will."

"Perhaps I can, and who knows but ere long he will astonish his father with what a boy can understand of the Bible?"

ELSIE A. BROWN."

WE call attention to our Premium Bible "ad" on last page. Read it and take advantage of the offer. It holds good only through December, 1897.

Sentinel Clubbing List.

SENTINEL and Chicago Inter Ocean.....	$1.50
SENTINEL and New York Tribune.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Cosmopolitan.....	1.85
SENTINEL and Iowa Homestead.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Rural New Yorker.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Signs of the Times (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Review and Herald (new subs.).....	2.00
SENTINEL and Youth's Instructor (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Good Health (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Missionary Magazine.....	1.25
SENTINEL and Dumb Animals.....	1.25

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS.

ENTERPRISING boys and girls of the SENTINEL family can, with a little effort, earn a watch that is an accurate time-keeper. Consult the advertisement of the Blaine Co. in this paper. They will do just as they say.

ANY reader of the SENTINEL having in mind the taking of a short-hand or commercial course, cannot do better than to send for a catalogue of the Capital City Commercial College, Des Moines, Ia. We are personally acquainted with a number of SENTINEL readers who are graduates of this school, and without exception they have had no difficulty in securing and holding responsible positions. We regard the school as one of the very best in the country.

WE have for the first time inserted in this issue the advertisement of the College View, Nebraska, Sanitarium Bakery. The foods prepared by this establishment are in every way first-class, and cover quite a large range. They are such as are used at the Nebraska Sanitarium, the advertisement of which has appeared in our columns for some time since. The prices are low for the quality, and the quality is no better in any goods of the kind manufactured anywhere. Write for circulars giving prices and full particulars to address found in the advertisement.

IN A NUTSHELL.

"Did you ever try nut-butter,
'Stead of that made from a cow?
If you haven't, we advise you
To begin the business now."

This is part of one stanza of a facetiously written poem in a very neatly gotten-up circular sent out by Mr. Joseph Lambert, Battle Creek, Mich., manufacturer of Nut Butter Mills. These mills are something new, and turn out a grade of nut butter that astonishes all who eat it. If the idea is a new one to any of our readers, just send to Mr. Lambert for a circular, giving full description, prices, etc. He is perfectly reliable, and implicit confidence can be put in all he says.

In this issue we have inserted the advertisement of the Webster's International Dictionary. We need not state its value as standard authority wherever the English language is spoken. It is warmly commended by leading educators the world over. No home should be without a good dictionary, and this is the cheapest unabridged one published. A warm friend of the SENTINEL not long ago said to us, "There are two books that with me go hand in hand; they are inseparable—they are the Bible and Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. No Bible student can afford to be without this master of the English language." The new Webster's International Dictionary is up to date in every respect, and in this office is standard authority. For sale at all leading book stores.

DIABETIC sufferers, who are restricted in diet, find a change, grateful to the palate and immediately beneficial to the complaint, in the use of the "Special Diabetic Flour," made by Farwell & Rhines, of Watertown, N. Y. This flour has been tested by chemical analysis and found to be free from deleterious, indigestible matter, and as nearly free from starch as it is possible to make a practical bread-stuff. High medical indorsements have attested the value of the "Special Diabetic Flour," in practice, its use resulting in a marked diminution in the amount of sugar. Bread made from this flour is digestible in the highest degree; and the patient does not easily tire of it. "Health," the London weekly publication, in a lengthy article praising the "Special Diabetic Flour," said: "Chemical examination of this food shows that it is very rich in gluten, and that its proportion of saccharine matter is extremely limited. These are precisely the characters to be looked for in a typical diabetic food." That the makers have perfect faith in their goods is evident from their offer of free baking samples. These samples are sent on request, together with particulars concerning their other health flours for dyspepsia, constipation, and obesity, and the new diuretic "Barley Crystals." Farwell & Rhine's goods are unlike all other products.

To all interested in carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of other lands and who desire to assist in supporting missionaries already placed and others who may engage in the work, the opportunity is given to make an offering to the Foreign Mission Board of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination.

Such donations should be sent to W. H. Edwards, the Treasurer of the Board, 1730 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS, AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

College View Sanitarium Bakery,

College View, Neb.

The prepared foods from this establishment have from the first taken rank with the

VERY BEST MADE ANYWHERE,

And any one who uses them once is ever afterward a patron. They are all prepared from the choicest selected grains, and the greatest care is exercised in securing the proper scientific combination of all the ingredients entering into their composition. Among the leading foods are the following:—

Granola. Made from the best portions of wheat, oats, and corn, cooked ready for use—excellent for infants, invalids, and travelers.

Crackers. Graham, Oatmeal, and Fruit. Delicious, toothsome, easily digested. None better.

Wafers. Whole wheat, gluten, rye, oatmeal, and carbon. Just what dyspeptics and those with weak digestive organs are looking for.

Pure Wheat Gluten. The nitrogenous part of wheat, especially recommended for those in a debilitated condition.

Zweibach (or toast). Specially prepared and will keep like crackers.

Cereal Coffee. A charming substitute for tea and coffee. Delicious and strictly healthful.

Agents for the Sanitarium Health Food Co., and the Sanitas Food Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Sample package of foods 25 cents.

Send for catalogue.

"I am surprised,"

Says Prof. E. A. SNEEDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

NUT BUTTER MILLS.

Something new. Designed especially for converting nuts into butter for table and culinary purposes. Valuable recipes for the use of nuts. Shelled and unshelled nuts of all kinds at reasonable prices. Send for descriptive circular and price list.

JOSEPH LAMBERT,
Battle Creek, Mich.

DIABETES FLOUR

The result of years of endeavor to produce a palatable Bread Flour which can be safely offered to the Diabetic. The testimony to its value both from this country and abroad is remarkable and convincing.

Unrivalled in America or Europe.
PAMPHLET AND SAMPLE FREE.
Write to Farwell & Binney, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 1¢ doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required.

BLUINE CO., Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

Webster's International Dictionary

Successor of the "Unabridged."
The One Great Standard Authority,
So writes Hon. D. J. Brewer, Justice U. S. Supreme Court.

Standard

of the U. S. Gov't Printing Office, the U. S. Supreme Court, all the State Supreme Courts, and of nearly all the Schoolbooks.

Warmly Commended

by State Superintendents of Schools, College Presidents, and other Educators almost without number.

Invaluable

in the household, and to the teacher, scholar, professional man, and self-educator.

THE BEST FOR PRACTICAL USE.

It is easy to find the word wanted.
It is easy to ascertain the pronunciation.
It is easy to trace the growth of a word.
It is easy to learn what a word means.

The New York Tribune Says:—

The latest edition comes from the press with a completeness that implies the most thorough editorial and typographical supervision. * * * The wide public, too, finds this a work to which it is constantly useful to refer.—April 8, 1896.

GET THE BEST.

Specimen pages sent on application to
G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

TO SELL OUR

Our price on the Bible to agents is so very low that we must have cash with the order, but perfect satisfaction is absolutely guaranteed. Send at once for terms, etc.

Pacific Press Publishing Company, 39 Bond Street, New York City.

—An Ideal Book of Travel.—

BY LAND AND SEA

A JOURNEY THROUGH FIVE CONTINENTS.

STARTING from the interior of the United States, the reader quickly finds himself transported, as it were, to the scenes of the journey, the several stopping places being California, Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, England, and Holland. The aim of the narrative, which has been written almost wholly from original notes and observations, has been especially directed to the object of presenting the life and nature of those regions, apart from the mental instruction, and its inherent features of intellectual entertainment. The author has happily found, in the object lessons of life under its various phases and conditions, illustrations of moral truths, which are portrayed in a manner at once instructive and attractive. The book contains 392 pages, embellished with over 100 original, full-page engravings designed especially for this work, and numerous part-page illustrations, and is furnished in the following bindings:—

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

Fine silk-finished cloth, embossed in gold and colored ink, marbled edges	$2.25
“ “ “ “ “ gilt titles	2.75
Fine Russia Leather, gold side and back titles, gilt edges, extra finish	3.90

Fine Russia Leather, gold side and back titles, gilt edges, extra finish	3.90
--	------

Oakland, Cal.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

SOMETHING
NEW, NEAT, NICE.

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spake it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12x18 INCHES.

On thick paper, mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

Postpaid, 25 Cents.

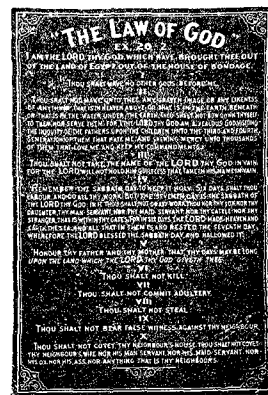

Postage stamps acceptable.

Presentation edition, two colors, vellum cloth, embossed in jet, green and gold, beveled edges, gilt top.....	$1.25
Fine English cloth, embellished aluminum cover.....	.75
Cloth back, board covers, in colors.....	.50
Heavy tag-board covers. Bible Students' Library, No. 14135

Also published in board and cloth at 50c and 75c in German, Swedish, Danish, and Spanish languages.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

OAKLAND, CAL. KANSAS CITY, MO.

A NEW TRACT CATALOGUE.

"Descriptive Catalogue of the Bible Students', Apples of Gold, and Religious Liberty Libraries" is the title of this 36 page catalogue.

It gives a pithy description of each tract and pamphlet in the above Libraries, together with their size and price. It will greatly assist the reader to select such numbers as he may desire to read and circulate; and may be obtained FREE by addressing the Pacific Press Publishing Company, Oakland, Cal.; 39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.; 18 W. 5th St., Kansas City, Mo.; or Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich.; Atlanta, Ga.

: $9.00 PREMIUM BIBLE $3.50 :

By special arrangement with the manufacturers of our

SELF-PRONOUNCING S. S. TEACHERS' COMBINATION BIBLE

We are able to give our patrons a benefit.

Premium Bible Open.

Regular price of
Bible $8.00,
with Sentinel,
1 Year, $3.50.

Premium Bible Closed.

This Bible is bound in Tampico Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Leather Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker. It has large, clear type (see specimen), sixty-four illustrations, fifteen splendid Clear Maps, Concordance, Subject Index, Vocabulary of proper names and foreign words with their meaning, etc.

But the most unique and important feature of this Bible is the "Combination." This consists in the blending of both old and new versions in one volume without increasing the size. The "Combination" is prized highly by those using it. The book is $1\frac{1}{2} \times 6 \times 8\frac{1}{4}$ inches, and weighs 2 pounds, 14 ounces, and is listed at \$8.00. Our offer, which we consider UNPRECEDENTED, is this:—

This FINE BIBLE, postpaid, and the "AMERICAN SENTINEL," one year, only $3.50!

The Bible may be sent to one address, the "SENTINEL" to another. This offer is extended to all, old as well as new subscribers. To any one sending eight new subscriptions, with $8.00, we will present a copy of this Bible as a gift.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE USED.

They that sealed the covenant.

NEHEMIAH, X.

The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

¹ The names of them that sealed the covenant. ²³ The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-g-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,

² ^c Sēr-g-ī'ah, ⁴ ^a-z-a-rī'ah, ⁵ Jēr-g-mī'ah,

³ Pāsh'ūr, ⁶ ^a-m-a-rī'ah, ⁷ Māl-chī'jah,

⁴ Hāt'tūsh, ⁸ Shēb-g-nī'ah, ⁹ Māl'luch,

⁵ Hā'rim, ¹⁰ Mēr'e-mōth, ¹¹ Ō-bā-dī'ah,

⁶ Dān'jel, ¹² Gīn'nē-thon, ¹³ Bā'ruch,

⁷ Mē-shūl'am, ¹⁴ ^a-bī'jah, ¹⁵ Mīj'a-mīn,

B. C. 443.

¹ Deut. 23.

² 2 Kin. 23. 3.

³ 2 Chr. 29.

⁴ 10; 34. 31.

⁵ Ezra 10. 3.

⁶ ch. 10. 29.

⁷ Heb. are at the sealing, or, sealed.

⁸ ch. 13. 1.

⁹ Heb. at the sealings,

ch. 9. 33.

¹⁰ ch. 3. 2.

¹¹ Or, the governor.

¹² ch. 1. 1.

¹³ See ch. 12.

¹⁴ 1-21.

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;

²⁹ They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'ses the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

³⁰ And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons;

³¹ ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not forgo ³³ meal—(an) ³⁴ (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, ³⁵ manner of trees,

This Bible makes a most

ACCEPTABLE HOLIDAY . . .

—OR—

. . . BIRTHDAY GIFT to a husband, to a wife, to a child, to a parent, to a more distant relative, to anyone. It is a thing of beauty, a joy forever.

This Remarkable Offer holds good only during December, 1897. After Jan. 1, 1898, the price will be advanced.

DON'T MISS IT.

Send money by Postal Order, Express Order, or Bank Draft on New York, drawn payable to the undersigned.

³⁷ power ³⁸ yet for all this—our—our ⁹ namely, Jeshua etc. ¹⁴ chiefs ²⁸ Nethinim,—peoples—that had—(having) ³⁰ peoples ³¹ peoples—(it)—a—

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 47.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 2, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

 Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.*

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THE seat of conscience is the heart of the individual; and it has no other.

THE heart that is truly given to God, is given to the best service of home and country.

THE sacredness of a right does not depend in any degree upon the number of people who possess it.

THE Sabbath is the Lord's day, but this does not mean that the day should be monopolized by the church.

IT is easy enough to do right when you are allied with God, whether there is any law of the state backing you up or not.

EVERY step in the direction of forcing people to keep the Sabbath proclaims to the world that the gospel of God is a failure.

WHAT I ask of you, and you ask of me, is not that you shall decide for me in matters of conscience, but that you shall respect my rights.

THERE is not a Sunday law upon the statute books of any State in the Union which is strong enough to meet the wishes of the people who want the State to be religious.

A UNION of religion with the state means a religious state; and a religious state means a state religion. And where was there ever a state religion without a union of church and state?

"GET a Sunday law enacted, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and ye shall find the needed rest." Is this the language of the divine Counselor?—No; but "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Is the Saviour right in this statement? Try it and see.

IF the Lord had not wished Peter to forgive his trespassing brother seventy times seven times, he would not have labored to convert him to the true religion. In other words, the true religion is only for those who can forgive trespasses against them seventy times seven times. Can the state do this? and if not, can it profess the true religion?

No Reform Possible by Law.

THERE can be no such thing as reform by civil law. This is a fact that should be evident to every Christian, and to every thoughtful student of history.

There never was any such thing as reform by civil law since human history began.

There never was a law enacted by any power whatever that could make a good man out of a bad man, or bring a good life out of an evil heart.

Even the law of God is powerless to produce good in the life of an individual fallen, as all upon earth are, under the power of sin. This is a fact plainly set forth in the scriptures of truth.

Yet the law of God is a perfect law; every other law that was ever passed, or that ever can be, is inferior to it. How, then, can it be expected that a law of man can produce results which are beyond the power of that law?

Yet reforms are necessary. Without them the world would have gone to destruction long ago. And there have been great reforms accomplished, which have brought benefits that have reached down through the ages. There is nothing to which history testifies more plainly than to this.

What, then, is the true agency in real reform? Both history and inspiration answer, The Word of God.

In the first place, the Word of God formed all things, and made them perfect. This being so, it is evident that the same Word has power to re-form all things and restore them to their original state.

When God would destroy the world by a flood because of its wickedness, he sent Noah, "a preacher of righteousness" unto the people, for a hundred and twenty years. The world would not be reformed, it is true; but no Christian will question that God employed a means which would have wrought a reform, if the people had received the message which Noah preached.

When God's ancient people, Israel, fell into sin, he sent to them, from time to time, the prophets, who proclaimed the word that the Lord had given them. And when the people heeded that word, it brought them again into the ways of righteousness.

Coming down to modern times, we note the great Reformation which swept over Europe in the sixteenth century. What was the power of the Reformation? Was it any other than the power of the divine Word, proclaimed by Luther and his associates?

After them, Wesley, Whitefield, Bunyan, and others, by the same preaching of the Word, wrought reforms which swept over wide communities, and contributed powerfully to the realization of the peace and prosperity which English-speaking nations enjoy to-day.

And now come the great organizations which number in their ranks nearly every person who professes religion, and essay to inaugurate another great reform—to turn the people again into the way of righteousness and peace—by an agency of which the great reforms of the past know nothing. They propose to inaugurate their great reform through politics.

They propose to mass all their forces at the polls. They propose to have politics preached from the pulpit. They propose to desert the prayer-meeting for the primary when the two assemblies are held on the same evening. They propose to lay siege to every legislature until they shall have such laws enacted in every State, and by Congress, as they deem necessary for the regeneration of society and the preservation of good government.

In the face of the fact that no reform was ever in the history of the world accomplished by such means, and of the equally plain fact that the Word of God is the one divinely appointed agency of true reform, they propose to reform society and the nation by civil law. This very next month, one great division of these church forces will send in a petition of a million and a half names to Congress, calling for a recognition of God in the national Constitution.

What will be the result of this work? It will have some result, that is certain. It will have a tremendous result; the magnitude of the forces employed, and of the interests affected, afford sufficient evidence upon this point. But as it cannot produce a genuine reform, the result will be of that nature which every counterfeit must produce,—that of damage to the people. It will bring ruin upon their interests, both material and spiritual.

"By the law is the knowledge of sin;" and by the law is condemnation. But the trouble with the world is not that it has no knowledge of sin, or is not condemned. The world does not need more law; but more of the preaching of the power of love, and of the righteousness of God, which is not by the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ.

THE important question is not that of whether we are citizens of this or that country on earth, but whether we are "fellow citizens with the saints," or belong to the "strangers and foreigners." Eph. 2:19. No foreigner can set foot on the shores of the land of promise.

State Recognition of God and the French Revolution.

THE oft-asserted idea that social disorder and revolution are the outcome of non-recognition of God by the state, receives a rude shock from the facts of history. It is not generally known that the worst scenes of the French Revolution, which is so much pointed to as illustrating the results of national repudiation of God, followed hard on a formal recognition of God in the constitution adopted by the revolutionists; but such is the fact. The first two articles of that constitution read thus:—

"ARTICLE I.—The French people acknowledge the existence of the Supreme Being, and the immortality of the soul.

"ARTICLE II.—It acknowledges that the worship most worthy of the Supreme Being is the practice of the duties of man." (See Theirs's "French Revolution," Vol. III, p. 354.)

Just two days after the adoption of the constitution, June 10, rivers of blood began to flow from the deadly guillotine; and between June 10 and July 17, twelve hundred and eighty-five persons put their necks under its descending knife.

But did not a national convention at Paris repudiate belief in the Deity, and institute in its place the worship of reason? it may be asked. Yes, that is true; but that was before the adoption of the revolutionary constitution. When this document was drawn up, there was put into it a formal recognition of God; and under this constitution the terrible work of the Revolution went on to its greatest climax of horror. The streets of Paris ran red with blood, and this was after God had been put into the constitution!

Of course, there was no real putting of God into the constitution; but the very thing had been done which it is proposed to do with the United States Constitution, in order to avert national demoralization and disaster.

But in the light of the French Revolution, what good may be expected to result from a formal recognition of God by the state?

THAT government is the best government which leaves most freedom for the development of individuality, by the exercise of every useful faculty of the individual organism. And not the least among these is conscience.

The State Bows to the Christian Endeavorers.

RECENTLY the state officials who are in charge of the work of constructing the capitol building at Albany, which work has been in progress seven days in the week, were visited by representatives of the Christian Endeavor Society and told that Sunday work on the building must stop; and—the work stopped.

There is a law in New York against Sunday work, and of this law these State officials were certainly aware; but to the law they paid no attention. But when the Christian Endeavor Society—a religious organization powerful in numbers and influence—told them that Sunday work under their charge must stop, they at once became obedient to the law.

Will some one tell us what there is in this other than an act of homage by the State to this religious society? What is there in it but an acknowledgment by the State that its own laws are less to be honored than the mandate of this church organization?

What, then, in the logical order of things, is there to hinder the society of Christian Endeavor from governing the State, and through that the people of the state? Where now is the real seat of civil authority in the State of New York?

The Religious Boycott.

BY W. A. COLCORD.

AT the Christian Endeavor convention held in Perth, West Australia, September 8, a resolution was passed by which the members present pledged themselves to refrain from doing business with men who do not observe Sunday. Thus in Australia, as in America and other professedly Christian countries, the religious boycott is being advocated by professed Christians as a means of inducing men to observe the Sunday institution. And ere long we may expect the long-foretold decree to go forth, that "no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." Rev. 13:16, 17.

Evidently the Sunday institution is the mark here referred to. It is the mark of the beast, the spurious Sabbath which the papacy has put in the place of the Sabbath of the Lord; and professed Protestants are seeking to enforce it by the boycott, which in plain language means, Come to our terms or we will starve you out. In what contrast is such a course to the command, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." Rom. 12:20.

Melbourne, Aus.

The Sunday Movement in Alabama.

BY E. D. HASKELL.

ABOUT a year and a half ago, the "Coöperative Sunday Association of Alabama" was organized at Montgomery, the capital city, as an auxiliary to the American Sabbath Union. (See AMERICAN SENTINEL, March 5, 1896.)

Since then active work has been put forth to create public sentiment in its favor throughout the State. Yet no decisive step was taken until recently in Birmingham, the second city in the State, or including its many suburbs, even the first in population.

A mass meeting was called to consider the "better preservation and rightful observance of the Sabbath." This was held on the night of November 8, at the First Presbyterian church. About twenty people were present, and at least six of these were pastors, but the "Jefferson County Sabbath Association" was started on its career, as a branch of the State association.

Several speeches were made in which were many significant statements. The prominent thought was that the religious forces must combine, and make an irresistible attack upon the legislature for more stringent laws in behalf of Sunday observance. One speaker had learned only recently, by examining the civil code, that Alabama had practically no Sunday law, as the provisions touched only a few of the many ways in which Sunday was being desecrated. One church could not engage successfully in this work. It would require the union of all interested forces. This is a work which Catholics will join with the various Protestant bodies. They did not expect any assistance from the Jews, nor from the seventh-day Christians, neither did they ask it; but the latter especially were too insignificant in numbers to amount to anything.

The Sunday law was upheld from a civil standpoint, but many statements revealed its religious foundation. The Sunday newspapers should be abolished, because of keeping people from church and filling their minds with secular thoughts. The fruit-stands and confectioneries should close because they tempt children to spend their pennies and nickels on the way to Sunday-school. The furnaces, railroads, etc., should stop work, because they keep many from serving God and attending church who would like to do so.

They seem to have lost sight of the power of the gospel, which is able to reform men and cause them to obey God despite all obstacles, though it involve the loss of position or all worldly possessions, even the sacrifice of life itself. But their purpose is to get laws passed to make it easy for people to serve God, or at least to appear to do so.

The majority of the officers chosen were men who were not present, but whose influence was desired to give strength to the movement. In selecting vice-presidents, there was some question whether a certain minister named was in sympathy with the movement. It was stated that his influence was second to no minister in Alabama when it came to politics. He had recently taken the lead in a strong and successful move upon the legislature against horse-racing and pools. They ran the risk, and accepted his name. If the doubts mentioned are correct, it is to be hoped that this minister will have the courage of his convictions, and sever his connection with this religio-political organization. At the organization of the State Association, some of the Montgomery pastors took a firm, decided stand against the effort to secure Sunday observance by law.

The new organization expects to enter upon an active campaign, and, as one of the daily papers recently stated, the Sunday question is rapidly becoming the "issue of the hour:"—

"A fortnight ago it was a nebulous fleck on the horizon.—To-day it is a portentous cloud; with enough electricity within its folds to blast many a promising political career. It is going to figure in the county campaign, principally in the election of members of the legislature. The municipal election is a long ways off, but if this Sunday question is not settled between now and then, it will be the pivotal point of the campaign."

Then, after speaking of the movements of the contending forces, the same article concludes:—

"These preliminary skirmishes are full of significance to the keen observer. They forecast a pitched battle, that is only a question of time."

Two weeks ago, some eight or nine saloon men were arrested in this city for cleaning up their bars and premises in the early hours of Sunday morning. They were all dismissed, but, as indicated, this is only a skirmish preceding the conflict that is inevitable.

This is the golden opportunity to place the true principles of religious liberty and the evils of religious legislation before the people of this community, and the time will be improved by those who are awake to the situation. O that the people everywhere would sense the danger that is threatening the whole land from the spirit of religious intolerance that is gathering like a tempest, soon to burst upon the heads of those who cannot yield their consciences to the dictation of men. "We ought to obey God rather than men."

Birmingham, Ala.

Our final account must be to God, not to man.

Sir George Turner on the School Question.

On the question of teaching religion in the state schools, and in reference to some features of the agitation for it, Sir George Turner, Premier of Victoria, Australia, in a recent speech, made the following pertinent remarks:—

"If religious teaching is to be any good, it must be doctrinal teaching, and it must be given by somebody who has studied and who understands the work."

"If all the leaders of denominations would meet and agree among themselves as to the lessons they desire to have taught, that would clear the ground of much of the difficulty; but I think if we got them together they would be something like the Kilkenny cats."

"If you had read some of the letters I have had to read about the matter, and had heard some of the sermons I have heard about it, you would see that it is not mere religious instruction in state schools of the kind asked for which is wanted. That would be the introduction merely of the thin end of the wedge."

"I regret very much the proceedings which have been taken by those who are leading this movement. You are asked to pledge yourselves to vote against me at the next elections if I have conscientious scruples against this platform. You are asked to pledge yourselves against every man who will not vote for the introduction of these books. Is that fair? Is it a fair way of obtaining a test vote on the question? I am surprised that those who attempt to lead Christian society are capable of adopting such tactics."

All of which applies forcibly to the situation which exists to-day in the United States.

The Sabbath the Sign of the Cross.

BY E. J. WAGGONER.

JESUS says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28. He gives rest because in him the works of God are perfect. "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." In him "we have our redemption, the forgiveness of sins, . . . for in him were all things created." Redemption through Christ is nothing else than creation—a new creation. Just before his crucifixion, Christ said to the Father, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." John 17:4. And when he hung on the cross he cried, "It is finished; and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost." John 19:30. Thus he indicated that in the cross are to be found all the perfect, finished works of the new creation.

Now the Sabbath was given as the sign of a perfect creation completed; therefore it is the sign of those perfect works restored by the cross of Christ. That is to say, since the Sabbath is the sign of a perfect creation completed, and by the cross of Christ a new creation is accomplished, the Sabbath must be the sign of the cross. Try it and see if it is not.

A GIFT, NOT A TASK EXACTED.

Here is where so many people mistake: they think that the Sabbath is a hard requirement that God lays on men, and then they soon get in the way of thinking that God cannot require it of us, since he does not desire his people to be burdened. But salvation is not a thing required of us, but a gift to us; and the Sabbath is the sign of Christ's saving power: he saves by the power by which he creates. Rest is not a burden, it is a pleasure. Nothing more absolutely delightful can be imagined than rest in the consciousness of work all done and well done, and this is the privilege of the people of God: "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power; to make known to the sons of men thy mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of thy kingdom." Ps. 145:10-12. "One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts." Verse 4.

The Sabbath is the pledge and assurance to us that the power by which the worlds were made has wrought good works for us in Christ, and that these works are all ours if we believe. This is the rest prepared for us from the foundation of the world.

The Rights of Man.

WIDELY differing views are held upon the question of man's rights, nearly all of which seem conclusive, considering the premises from which the argument is drawn. But as these conflicting deductions cannot possibly all be correct, it follows that some radical defect is present, somewhere, either in antecedent propositions or in methods of drawing conclusions. In dealing with this issue, therefore, the foundation for conclusions should be established in truth, rather than upon some selfish ground.

A "right," as defined by Webster, is that which is "conformed to the constitution of man and the will of God, or to justice and equity; not deviating from the true and just; according with truth and duty." Man was created in the "image of God," and was therefore constituted by the will of God to render service and honor to his Creator. Rev. 4:11. He was required as his personal duty, to obey God, and follow his ways in all things, that continuing like his Maker, he might retain the image in which he was made, and so ever be true and just. This was the original, and eternal "right" conferred upon man in the beginning, as a personal gift, and is still his if he will but use it. But beyond this personal duty, no right was bestowed giving one creature authority to command another in the way.

More than this, no man or set of men were given authority to pronounce upon another's moral standing, or to define his rights. Being made like his Creator, man was a son of God, and like the divine Son, was to delight in doing the divine will, because the law of Jehovah had been seated in his heart to prompt his ways. Ps. 40:6-8. Thus man was made capable of self-control under the guidance of divine suggestion. Like the angels of heaven, he was to be entirely led by this inner consciousness without the restraining influence of outward legality. Homage to God was not to be that of a servant, but of a son. Obedience was in no sense to be a forced service, but one of love. No higher motive was to be known than a spontaneous desire to do right and be right, which is the highest point of happiness it is possible to reach.

Such was and is the undoubted right of every man to-day who chooses to assert that right; even though it has been forfeited through evil association. How strange that so few seem to recognize the fact that the sum of human rights is contained in securing the highest joy, and that such joy is to be had only in God, through Jesus Christ. Separating human rights from heavenly joys, many seem to think that while one is from above, the other can be secured only through human legislatures and earthly courts of law. But civil courts can never restore these lost rights, simply because such gifts are above and beyond human jurisdiction. Its authority falls short in this work for the reason that it has no higher power, morally, than those whose rights it seeks to return. Being destitute of these rights themselves, earthly courts are absolutely without power to confer them on men, however much they might desire to do so. Even though a judge on the bench may have been fortunate enough to have acquired such endowment for himself, he could not possibly share it with another, for the reason that this heavenly gift is a personal allowance sent direct from heaven to the receiver. Whoever, therefore, undertakes to legislate, or pronounce sentence from an earthly bench, with the view to conferring a religious benefit, so that men may advantageously carry out the will of heaven, puts himself (unwittingly though it be) in the place of God, and assumes the prerogative of divinity.

The gifted Macaulay saw much truth along this line. When a candidate for parliamentary honors in 1832, he delivered a speech at Leeds, in which he is reported to have said:—

"I am for personal freedom in every part of the globe,—freedom to the white, and freedom to the negro. . . . I am for religious liberty in the fullest sense of the word. I detest all disabilities,—everything which is galling to the conscience, or which can shock the sincere scruples of any individual. . . . We act most in support of religion, and act in a manner most calculated to strengthen the interest of that religion, when we give universal freedom to religious belief. We hear it said that a policy which does not give a decided advantage to one sect over another is infidel policy. These words have been echoed and re-echoed in the country. According to this authority, justice is infidelity, and mercy is infidelity, and toleration is liberalism, and liberalism is only another name for infidelity. It is infidelity, it seems, to think worthily of God and justly of his law, and not to encircle with worldly defences that religion of which the weapons are not carnal, and whose kingdom is not of this world."—Arnold's "Life of Macaulay," pp. 123, 124.

This is not only good logic, but heavenly truth as well. For a state or civil power of any rank to dictate how one may exercise his divine right of worship, is an unwarrantable infringement of that which is wholly another's. By doing so it assumes that the permission to worship God is dependent on a grant from the civil government. But if the civil power can confer such a right as a mark of favor, it can withhold that right without injustice. In that case no one could claim it as his right, but must receive it, if at all, as an absolute gift from the government.

There is much involved here. In the first place such an assumption puts the government in the place of God to every citizen, and leads all who obey its dictates into idolatry. It also destroys the right of private judgment and makes every one subject to the religious caprices of those who, for the time, happen to hold the reins of civil power; for it follows that if at any time one set of legislators frame regulations for forms of religious worship, their successors may modify or change those regulations for others better suited to their ideas of fitness. Thus all would become subject to a change of religious practice with every change of government.

This may be thought an extreme view of the case, but as ultra as it may seem, this was exactly what was done in the reigns succeeding that of Henry VIII of England. Under the governments of Edward, Mary, and Elizabeth, Protestant and Catholic religions alternated as the spiritual law of the realm, and all subjects were required to change their form of worship to meet the demand of the reigning sovereign, or suffer punishment by the civil authorities.

No sane person would think of attempting so much in other matters than of religion. A man is little concerned about his neighbor's management of his estate. He does not legally interfere because his neighbor's methods of tilling land differ from his own. He would not think of applying to the courts for power to control the size and shape of a house being erected by another. In all secular things man enjoys the fullest liberty of private judgment, but when he attempts to exercise this right in matters pertaining to his highest joy here, and the fullness of bliss hereafter, some would seek to restrain and control his operations by legal process, because, forsooth, they are not just in harmony with his idea of doing such things. He himself has exercised his own judgment in deciding his religious practice, but is not willing to accord the same privilege to others. When unregenerated human nature controls the individual, how prone is he to lose sight of the Golden Rule: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Luke 6:31.

There can be no logical reason given why men should not exercise the same right of judgment in religious, as in secular affairs. Was not man endowed of God with power of mind to observe, weigh, and make comparisons from which to draw conclusions? Is it possible for the mind to be enlightened without the exercise of these faculties? Can the average mind restrain such operation if it would?—Certainly not. Then what folly to think that one with strong convictions of religious preference could tamely yield that consciousness to an arbitrary statute, the product of minds with no higher endowment of discernment than his own. Such an one could well say with John Boyle O'Reilly:—

"I care not for the outer voice
That deals out praise or blame;
I could not with the world rejoice,
Nor bear its doom of shame;
But when the voice within me speaks,
The truth to me is known;
He sees himself who inward seeks—
The riches are his own."

J. O. C.

Church-and-State Agitation in Australia.

PROPOSED GOVERNMENTAL RECOGNITION OF THE DEITY.

BY G. T. WILSON.

The Australian Christian World, of July 2, 1897, under the title, "Recognition of God," says:—

"The framers of the Constitution need not be irreverent, and the formal acknowledgment we ask for is simple and pious, and it may be simply and piously made."

This paper voices the sentiments of the Council of Churches in New South Wales, and it thus reveals the real wishes of many persons in the churches who are no doubt sincere in their desire to see God's name piously recognized in the Constitution and laws of the proposed Commonwealth.

But it is more than a mere "formal acknowledgment" that is asked for, as is evident from the expression, "It may be simply and piously made." The word "pious" has two definitions:—

First, "Godly; reverencing and honoring the Supreme Being in heart and in the practice of the duties he has enjoined;" second, "Practiced under the pretense of religion; as, pious frauds."

The recognition of God in the preamble of the Federal Constitution will give a religious coloring to the whole Constitution, and will make it possible to introduce religious legislation into the Federal Parliament a little later on after the Constitution has been adopted. The thing that is really desired by the class who appear so anxious for the acknowledgment of the Supreme Being in the Commonwealth Bill, is to enforce upon the citizens of federated Australia what they hold to be his law, or their interpretation of that law.

That this statement is true, one needs but to recall what the Council of Churches did recently in Sydney, when it sent a deputation to visit the acting premier, to get all the shops closed on Sunday by governmental authority. This very act on the part of the Council of Churches shows that the leaders in this movement would not stop with a mere "formal recognition of God" in the Constitution. It is a "reverent" and "pious" acknowledgment of God, according to their idea of what that means, that is desired. The enforcement of Sunday observance by law especially would be demanded.

Infatuated with the idea that the kingdom of Christ must "enter the realm of law through the gateway of politics," the religio-political reformers of to-day are turning from the heaven-appointed means for reforming men to the satanic agencies of force in religious matters. It has been the use of force which has brought persecution to dissenters in all ages. But force in matters of religion never made one true Christian. It has filled millions with a fear of ecclesiastical and civil penalties, and made many hypocrites, but it never made a Christian. The gospel draws the sinner by its own inherent power of love. It compels no one's will, but wins its way to the heart by its mercy and compassion.

God's way of reforming men is indicated in the following scriptures:—

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God." "I, Paul, myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ." "Exhort one another daily, while it is called to-day." "As though God did beseech you by us, we pray you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

Such is the tenor of the Scriptures all the way through. We are to beseech, entreat, exhort, persuade, and constrain men by the love of God, but not to force any one. It is all to be done in the manner set forth in the Golden Rule: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Luke 6:31. Love is that secret cord by which the Infinite One draws the souls of men to Christ for salvation. This is evident from many passages. The Lord says to the sinner, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee. Jer. 31:3. "I healed them; I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love." Hosea 11:3, 4.

The Lord does not put upon us any grievous yoke. He does not force us into his service. He invites us to come. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He takes off the grievous yoke that the compulsory service of sin has imposed, and sets us free that we may render to him voluntary service. He says: "And I was to them as they that take off the yoke on their jaws, and I laid meat unto them." Hosea 11:4. And he tells his people that they too should "break every yoke" and "let the oppressed go free." Isaiah 58. This is the gospel way. This is God's way, the way of mercy and love.

Christ said to Peter, "Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Matt. 26:52. Our Saviour used no outward force to gain followers, and he asked no armies to help his disciples to carry on the gospel after his ascension. He told them that they should be witnesses for him after they should receive power from on high; but Jesus plainly taught that his kingdom is not of this world, and that therefore his servants do not fight. John 18:36.

Why, then, do many of Christ's professed followers seek to use the very means which he condemned? Let him answer it. He says, "If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; . . . but all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me. . . . They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service. And these things will they do unto you because they have not known the Father, nor me." John 15:20, 21; 16:2, 3. This is the reason why professed Christians persecute the true children of God; they are not acquainted with either Christ or his Father. Persecutors know only Satan's gospel of force, and that is why they want the aid of the civil law to back up their church practices and religious forms, and it does not require any change of heart to do this. A formal recognition of God in a civil constitution comports very well with a mere outward profession of religion.

True religion is a matter of heart service to God, be gotten of love, not fear, for fear has only torment. Such a recognition enters into all the social and business relations of life. He who makes it ever remembers that his Maker sees him; and that he must render account to God for all his acts. It is a matter of personal faith toward God. The Scriptures declare that "without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. 11:6. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Rom. 14:23. Then if any recognition of God is not a matter of personal faith in God on the part of the individual who makes it, it is sin.

The church has never yet joined hands with the civil power to enforce religious practices without soiling its garments, corrupting the state, and bringing disgrace upon the church and opprobrium upon the very name of religion through the persecution of godly men and women, under the garb of piety. Let all consider what such a union means.

Be Tolerant.

WHAT is known is sure; therefore be tolerant. There is much to be discovered; be therefore twice tolerant. For want of this diffidence and modesty certain great persons in the past—such as Reformers and Puritans—were not by any means tolerant, were indeed filled at times with the spirit of persecution. They were very much convinced of truth, and were also certain they had all truth, and so fell into an arrogant and insolent temper, whose influence has not quite departed from their children.—Rev. John Watson.

No believers in the Koran are wanted in this country. Such was the decision arrived at recently by the Federal Board of Immigration in this city.

THE case was that of six Mohammedan immigrants, who had arrived from the Orient on the steamer "California." At the Barge Office, upon being questioned, it was learned that they all believed in the Koran. The Koran sanctions polygamy. And from this the decision was arrived at that they must not be allowed to land.

As a matter of fact, not one of the six Mohammedans had more than one wife. That they were polygamists in practice, or contemplated becoming such in this country, no one claimed. They simply believed in the Koran, like all good Mohammedans; and this was the whole case against them.

THERE was an act of Congress passed in 1891 which enumerates polygamists among the classes which it is thought proper to exclude from this country. Among others named in this class are idiots and insane persons, criminals, those suffering from loathsome or contagious diseases, etc. To classify among such persons simple believers in the Koran is a proceeding in which there is neither reason nor justice. And when it is done, as in this instance, the conclusion at once suggests itself that the real opposition in the matter is directed against the religion for which the Koran stands.

This conclusion would not so readily come into view but for the fact that the United States has within recent years been posing as a Christian nation. Not yet have the last echoes died away of that decision by the Supreme Court, in February, 1892, that "this is a Christian nation." And with the opening of Congress next month, a million and a half of names will come before the national legislature calling for a recognition of God in the Constitution. These names represent the great society of Christian Endeavor and other great religious organizations are helping to permeate the country with the same idea of a national Christianity: Such being the circumstances of the situation, it cannot be regarded as impossible or even improbable that this sentiment may have had something to do with this decision against the adherents of the Koran.

IF it is to be established as a rule of national procedure that such a theoretical violation of the law as exists in the adherence of these six Mohammedans to the religious guide-book of their race, which sanctions polygamy, without the slightest allusion, actual or contemplated, to any violation of the law in practice, is sufficient ground for excluding an individual from residence in this country, then it is evident that justice is here about to take on an inquisitorial character which will be fatal to the survival of liberty. And of this there are, indeed, many existing indications.

A QUESTION which has arisen in connection with the flag salute which has become a feature of the exercises in some of the public schools, as noticed last week, is that of what constitutes loyalty to country. It appears that a refusal to salute the flag in the manner prescribed, is quite apt to be taken as justifying a charge of treason against the objector.

THERE is a legal definition of treason, but this can hardly be applied to the circumstances under consideration. In a general sense, it will no doubt be acknowledged that treason can only be that which tends to the destruction of one's country, and that nothing which tends to its prosperity can rightfully be called by that name. But, determined from this standpoint, many individuals appear as traitors who by reason of prevailing sentiments and conditions, have been able to pose before the people as patriots, and who were even persuaded that they were such in their own minds. History is acquainted with many individuals of this class.

WE might go back to ancient times to find an illustration upon this point. In the reign of Ahab, king of Israel, there was great distress upon the land by reason of a three years' drought, sent by the Lord upon the people because of their apostasy from him. For this apostasy King Ahab was himself responsible, having set the example in it and promoted it by the decrees of the kingdom. But when at last Ahab met Elijah, the prophet of the Lord, he exclaimed, "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" He accused Elijah of being a traitor to the realm; when the truth was that he himself was a traitor, because by his course he had brought the country to the brink of ruin.

NAPOLEON is not generally regarded as a traitor to France. On the contrary, he is honored by the French nation as one of their greatest heroes. But what did he do for France? He sacrificed her treasure and the lives of many thousands of her people upon the altar of his ambition. He brought the armed hosts of the enemy to the gates of Paris, and the country itself to the brink of ruin. No traitor ever did more than this, in his efforts to serve himself at his country's expense.

* * *

It is not always the man who is most ready to go to war that has the best interests of his country at heart. It is not always the person that calls most loudly for the government to resent by force of arms some real or fancied insult, who is doing most for his country's real good. It is easy to be filled with enthusiasm over the prospect of demonstrating our national prowess upon the traditional field of glory, with very little thought of the ruin and misery that must inevitably come upon the country as the result. This country has not yet recovered from the ruinous effects of its great Civil War. Remembering the terse definition of Gen. W. T. Sherman, that "war is hell," it must be admitted that there is a belligerent sort of "patriotism" which is itself of the nature of treason, seeking as it does to plunge the country into needless war.

* * *

THERE can be no question but that whatever tends to promote peace, and respect for right and justice, tends to promote the highest welfare of the country; and the life that is devoted to this end, cannot by any shadow of right bear the stigma of treason. And therefore the Christian cannot justly be regarded as a traitor to the land of his birth or residence, since the Christian life tends only to promote peace on earth and good-will among men. It tends only to promote those conditions under which the highest national prosperity is attainable.

* * *

YET the Christian may refuse to do that of which popular sentiment approves; and because of this he may be stigmatized as a traitor. But he does this knowing that allegiance to God means always allegiance to the best interests of the community and the country in which he lives. He refuses to make the state his god by giving to it instead of to God his supreme allegiance; but he knows that he can best serve the state not by turning away from God, but by remaining a worshiper of him. The three Hebrew worthies of old refused to worship the state of Babylon in the form of Nebuchadnezzar's great image; yet the state had no more faithful servants than they, and the king afterward recognized this fact by promoting them to a higher station in the province of Babylon.

* * *

No persons honor more than do Christians the just principles of government for which the flag of stars and stripes is supposed to stand. As the ensign of freedom it is worthy of all honor. But the flag itself has been prostituted to the uses of despotism. For as a keen observer of events has said:—

"Knaves have stolen thee, Old Glory,
For their Babylonian bowers;
O'er their festal halls and towers
Floats the flag that once was ours;
O'er their crimes thy beauty trails,
And the old-time answer fails
When from chain-gangs, courts, and jails,
Men appeal to thee, Old Glory!"

In the "flag salute" of which we have spoken, "Old Glory" is made a party to a proceeding which invades the rights of conscience; and Christians must therefore refuse to become participants in it. And they do this in the name of conscience, of honesty, and of the rights of man and of God. And in so doing they manifest, not treason, but allegiance to the foundation principles upon which this great Republic was established.

—♦♦♦—

Emperor William as a Sabbath Desecrator.

RECENTLY Emperor William gave a big hunting party at Romitan, in East Prussia, on a Sunday, whereupon the Consistory of the Lutheran (state) Church of that province passed a unanimous vote of censure upon the Kaiser for having "desecrated the Sabbath." Under Emperor William's sanction, stringent Sunday laws have been enacted in Germany, to which the state church now has the audacity to hold the Kaiser amenable. But the latter probably reflects that, as representing the state, he is at least on an equal footing with the church in their alliance; and that if Sabbath observance is merely a matter of state regulation, it is no great sin for a kaiser to observe it about as he pleases. That is the natural result of regulating Sabbath observance by state law.

—♦♦♦—

A Rebuke to Immoral "Reform."

IN the days of Parkhurst and his wicked reform in this city there was established the practice of inducing people to commit crime, and partaking with them in the crime, in order to have a chance to prosecute them. Col. Fred Grant, to his lasting honor, resigned the office of police commissioner rather than remain a member of a board that sanctioned such conduct. And now Judge McMahon, the other day in general sessions, administered a sound and deserved rebuke to the same thing. In charging a jury in such a case, the judge said:—

"Now, as to the testimony of these two officers. The offense against morality, against good conscience, and against public order is the same, whether the officer does it under the orders of a superior and it is paid for by public money or paid for out of his own pocket. This is not the first time I have called attention to this, and I hope this will be the last time, because I hope this system will be abandoned once and forever.

"Now, then, you have to pass upon the credibility of these witnesses. The statements of the officers are that under the orders of their superiors they have been engaged in this nefarious business for a considerable period of time, inducing persons to commit crime in order to convict them of it. You have the testimony of the first officer that when he entered these premises he deliberately said what was not true, that he came there from some person named Jack, a friend of his, and that is a circumstance that you have a right to consider in determining the credibility of a witness. I believe most firmly that a man who lies in the ordinary course of his duties will lie with his hand on the Bible."

THE propriety of the agitation made by the SENTINEL for the separation of religion and the state is shown by many incidents in the volume of current events. One of these is mentioned by the Washington (D. C.) Post of the 18th inst., thus:—

"Joseph Bradfield filed a petition in the District Supreme Court yesterday praying for an order to restrain Ellis H. Roberts, treasurer of the United States, from paying to the directors of Providence Hospital [a sectarian institution] any money out of the treasury belonging to the United States or to the District of Columbia, upon and by virtue of an agreement or contract entered into between the surgeon general of the United States army and the directors of Providence Hospital, or on account of an agreement made with the directors by the District of Columbia."

The impropriety of appropriating public funds for sectarian uses generally has to be argued in the courts before it is admitted by the parties seeking the appropriation.

Sunday-Law Agitation in Connecticut.

It appears that the church people of Connecticut, and the Congregationalists in particular, are not satisfied with the present Sunday law of that State, and want a new and more stringent one enacted. This became one of the chief topics of discussion at the late Congregationalist Conference at Bridgeport, and steps were taken to secure a concession to this end from the legislature. The Danbury News, of November 24, gives the following report of the procedure of the conference upon this point:—

"The legislative committee threw aside the draft of a law submitted by Rev. Mr. Hall, Lawyer G. H. Newton, of New Haven, and other gentlemen of a committee appointed by the Congregational Conference at Winsted in the fall of 1896, and substituted a law which only slightly amended the old Sunday law, making it less restrictive in its prohibition, but increasing the penalties.

"During the conference proceedings, Tuesday afternoon, Lawyer Newton, a delegate from New Haven, secured the floor, and spoke on the subject of Sunday laws in general. He advocated the cessation of all work on the Sabbath which was not absolutely necessary for the health, comfort, and reasonable enjoyment of the day. The day ought not to be so observed that it would keep people from the churches. The law had been so changed by the influence of the church that the saloons in nearly if not all towns were practically closed on the Sabbath, and he thought the church had done a good work to bring this about. He held that if it is necessary to keep the markets open for the Sunday meals because the people cannot afford to maintain refrigerators, then let these be open at a time that will not in any manner interfere with the church. He could not see why certain work had to be done on Sunday, or, at least, was done, that could be done on any other day.

"He advocated the appointment of a committee of five to frame a Sunday law to present to the next general assembly that would be so clear and concise and so satisfactory to the masses of church-going people and law-abiding citizens, that it will be readily passed and rigidly enforced. He believed in calling to their assistance in this respect the Catholics and Hebrews, and, in fact, all organizations outside of the church, as he believed the honorable people outside the church desired a practical Sunday law that would be observed and one that would be a credit to this commonwealth.

"Some discussion followed in which several speakers were in favor of leaving the Sunday law as it is at present. A vote was taken and the resolution for the appointment of a committee to frame a new Sunday law was adopted."

Enforcing God's Laws.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE late Henry George, who died in the midst of his campaign for the mayoralty of Greater New York, was a philanthropist and a philosopher, and now that he is dead a most generous meed of praise is being bestowed upon him both by those who were with him in the political contest and those who were against him. In one of his speeches, delivered the last day of his life, he made the following statement which deserves to be perpetuated among the recorded sayings of the wisest men of the world:—

"I believe that God, the Father, can take care of his own laws; there is no need for us to gain trouble trying to meddle with God's laws—to enforce them."

If this suggestion were carried out, the Sunday laws which now disgrace the statute books of nearly all the States of the United States would be eliminated, and the persecution which they are sometimes made to authorize would be unknown. The whole conception of all Sunday laws starts in the thought that God requires Sunday rest in honor of himself. He requires nothing of the kind; and if he did, he would not have his laws which relate to his worship enforced by corrupt governments of earth.

Can earthly governments say to any man "Thou shalt have no other god but God?" Can they search the hearts of men for hatred, lust, envy, and pride and prescribe the penalty?

How, then, can they tell whether a man keeps the Sabbath or not? Idleness is not Sabbath-keeping; but to command idleness is all that the law can do toward commanding Sabbath-keeping! How can such laws be pleasing to God or beneficial to men?

Harold's Dream.

"I'll tell you what it is, Ray Roberts; I'm captain, and you and the other boys are common soldiers, and you'll have to obey my orders, I tell you!" said Harold Willis. "Napoleon Bonaparte made his soldiers obey him, and I'm going to see that my army is well disciplined. We'll march over to Mr. Brown's orchard to-morrow night, and help ourselves to the big, red apples that I saw on the tree by the barn to-day. You see," continued Harold, as Ray Roberts rose to object, "you see there's lots of them, and Mr. Brown never'll miss them,—besides, we're only foraging, like all other soldiers."

"Well," objected Harry Dane, "I'm never going to go prowling around after apples in that way even if I am a soldier."

"Then I shall put you in the guard-house, and hang you up by the thumbs, and keep you on bread and water!" thundered the pompous young captain, "until you obey orders, sir."

"I shall never obey you, Harold Willis; for I'm sure it's wrong, and my mother would not allow it if she knew, and I'll not do anything to make me feel mean when I look into her eyes."

"Very well," said Harold, "come on, boys,—I mean soldiers; we'll have nothing to do with him. We won't let him march with us nor hold the flag nor beat the drum nor anything. I'll show you, Harry Dane, that I shall be obeyed;" and the silly boy, with as many of his "soldiers" as he could coax or threaten into submission, started down the street.

Harold was naturally a kind-hearted boy, but his desire to make every one come to his exact terms was fast making him a disagreeable, domineering lad. A selfish desire to rule or ruin was growing stronger and stronger.

That night, when he went to bed, his last thoughts were about Harry Dane, and how he could arrange to "bring him to time," as he expressed it. He had not told his mother anything about this grand expedition which he had planned, for he knew very well that she would never allow him to do so disgraceful a deed as to rob Mr. Brown's orchard, even under the pretext that they were only "soldiers, foraging."

"I'll bring that boy to terms, or we'll boycott him—that's it! we'll refuse to play with him or have him in our company," he whispered to himself, as he turned over in bed, and gave his pillow a pat, by way of stronger emphasis.

"Boycott him, will you?" exclaimed a coarse, rough voice in his ear. Harold turned and saw a giant form, more like a demon than a man, with great, dreadful, black wings, and eyes like fiery torches. Harold tried to run away, but the frightened feet refused to move, and the stammering tongue could only falter:—

"Who are you?"

"So you believe in making people come to terms, do you? you believe in boycotting?" was the answer. "Well, I am a great prince, and my name is 'King Might,' and my motto is 'Might makes Right.' You shall be my subject, and I'll show you just how I and my slaves manage that kind of business. Come with me." Then the great arms took Harold up, and the black wings flew away over land and sea.

"I don't want to go!" protested Harold. "I want you to take me back home; I don't want to see the way you do bad, wicked things."

"O yes, you do," replied the sneering voice; "if you don't, it doesn't make a bit of difference. That's my business—to make people do as I want them to, whether they think it's right or not. Here's some of my work; what do you think of it, my boy?" Then the frightened lad heard the hum of machinery, and saw long rows of pale, weary looking women, with their lunch baskets in their hands, enter through the gloomy door of the great factory, and he saw them no more. But just as the door closed upon them, one of their number, a pale little woman, with great black eyes, whispered in his ear: "I must work hard, my lad, day after day, for wages which will hardly give my hungry children a morsel of bread daily. I do this that my employer may lay up heaps of shining gold. But God will hear my prayers, and he will avenge me."

"King Might is lord here, you see," croaked the ugly presence, and again the scene changed. Harold stood before the grated cell of a man who looked so kind and benevolent, and withal so pale and worn, that the lad asked him why he was there among such wicked men.

"I have done no crime," was the quiet answer. "I am here because I do not agree with the people in my religious belief. I would not care for myself, but my little children need me very sadly."

"Well, how do you like the way our principles work?—our principles—yours and mine?" demanded the fierce voice. "If people don't agree with me, I make them, that's all," chuckled the burly fellow. Now I'd like to take you up to Siberia, and let you see a little of my work there among the wretched fellows." And great King Might spread his big, black wings, and bending over, was going to take Harold in his arms again, but he cried and kicked and struggled so desperately that he awoke.

He did not sleep again till morning, so fearful was he of seeing the big King Might again; and when, the next day, he met with his playmates, they were astonished and pleased to see how generous he had grown.

"I don't believe it's a good plan to go after those apples, boys, soldiers, I mean. I think Harry Dane's right, and even if he wasn't, I guess it wouldn't be my business to force him to believe just as I do."

And then Harold told them his dream about OLD KING MIGHT. MRS. L. D. AVERY-STUTTLE.

Battle Creek, Mich.

Keeping Saturday for Sunday.

"Good evening. Please come in and accept a seat near the fire, as it's a little chilly to-night," said Mr. Wilson, as he opened his door in response to the knock of our friends James and Johnny. "What can I do for you, my boys?"

"We have called," said Johnny, "to buy a few peaches. We heard that you have them for sale."

"I am sure, boys, that you intended no wrong in asking to buy some at this time. As it is the Sabbath, I cannot sell you any, but you are welcome to what you wish to eat."

"Excuse us, please, Mr. Wilson, for calling. We thought you kept Saturday for Sunday, but this is Friday night."

"We do not, my boys. Saturday is made of a part each of the seventh and first days of the week. Saturday will commence to night at midnight, but the seventh day of the week, which is the Sabbath, commenced an hour ago at sunset, and will end to-morrow at sunset, about six hours before Saturday ends."

"Well, we never understood that before; but what makes you keep the seventh day, Mr. Wilson?"

"Here is my Bible; read the commandment for yourself in the twentieth chapter of Exodus."

"O, you do just as the Lord tells you to, then, don't you? It's queer how our folks can read that commandment and say it means Sunday, when they own that Sunday is the first day of the week. Well, good evening, Mr. Wilson, we must be going. We will call some other day."

"Wasn't it too bad, Jim, about their sending Mr. Wilson to work in the chain-gang with a lot of bad men, and all because he dug a few potatoes in his own field on Sunday? It was Ed Day's father, that boiled maple sap on Sunday, who swore out a complaint against Mr. Wilson. He said his minister wanted him to."

"I say 'Sunday law' to you! I don't believe it's right anyway. As Mr. Wilson says, Sunday isn't the first day of the week any more than Saturday is the seventh. Most all those church members, and ministers too, will work from Saturday at sunset, sometimes till midnight, and then fine folks for working on the rest of the day which they call Sunday. I met a man the other day who was selling books, and he told me that Sunday used to be the heathen Sabbath when folks worshiped the sun, and that was why it was called sun day. If I keep any day as the Sabbath, I'd rather keep the one God tells me to."

"And so would I. Good-bye."

A. SMITH.

The Right of Freedom of Conscience.

FREEDOM of conscience is something that hardly needs to be defined to any person of intelligence, old or young. All persons have a conscience, and each conscience should be left free to dictate the conduct of its possessor.

Conscience is our natural monitor. Its office is given it by the Creator. The person who is not guided in his conduct by conscience, is not a safe person to be at liberty.

This does not mean that conscience may not become perverted, so as to become an unsafe guide. The Creator himself is the ultimate Guide of mankind, and conscience is designed to act always in harmony with him.

He has given to mankind his revealed will—the Bible—and his Spirit is continually striving with men, to lead them in the pathway of right and truth.

This is included in the provisions of God's government. There is a government of God on earth, as well as a government of man.

"The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens, and his kingdom ruleth over all." This statement of Scripture includes the earth as well as all other portions of the universe.

God's government on the earth is not a visible government like those of the nations; but it is none the less a reality. And it is the highest government upon the earth. It is universal, and to it every person owes allegiance.

The governments of men are instituted to protect rights. The object of God's government includes this, but it aims at that which is vastly higher—the development of a perfect character.

The free exercise of conscience is absolutely essential to the government of God. Without this the purpose of his government cannot be realized. When it is taken away from a person, the government of God comes to an end with that individual, until it is restored.

Hence when an earthly government sets up a state conscience, as we may call it; that is, when the state dictates to an individual in regard to his religious conduct, the state sets itself squarely against the government of God.

Earthly governments are a necessity; and we should give to those in authority the most willing honor and obedience. But as Christians, we must remember that God has also a government in the earth to which we owe supreme allegiance. We cannot maintain this allegiance to God's government when we go contrary to the dictates of conscience. No person can discard his conscience without at the same time discarding his allegiance to God.

God's government on the earth is not now what it was in the beginning, when the earth and man were created. It is the same in principle, but it is different in form. This change in form was made necessary by the fall.

When sin came into the world, man became in his very nature contrary to God and prone to violate the laws upon which God's government is established. God then withdrew his visible presence from men, because, having become sinners, they could not dwell with him and live. No sin can abide in God's presence.

Instead, then, of having God as a visible ruler and source of authority, men had only themselves for visible rulers, and were obliged to set up some government of their own. Yet for a long time they acknowledged that God was the real ruler, and that their earthly rulers were but acting in the capacity of God's agents.

Finally, however, in the days of the mighty hunter, Nimrod, they disclaimed God as their ruler, and set up independent governments of their own. Acknowledging no higher ruler than the state, they virtually put the state in the place of God; and in process of time earthly rulers came to be deified and worshiped as gods.

This would not have happened if men had maintained their allegiance to God's government, as still set up on the earth in the realm of conscience. The governments of the earth have no rightful concern with conscience. They cannot have, because they are administered by finite, sinful men, and are in no way fitted to direct conscience.

They are fitted, however, to maintain the rights of individuals, so that people can live in the enjoyment of peace and civil liberty; and in so doing these governments are in perfect harmony with the government of God.

But when they try to dictate to the consciences of men, they usurp the place of God's government, and set up finite, sinful man as a being to be worshiped.

To allow freedom of conscience is to recognize that there is a higher government on the earth than the civil governments,—the government of God. To interfere with this right is to interfere with God's government, and also to turn civil government out of its proper channel, and bring it to a disastrous end.

HAVE you noticed the splendid offer made on last page for the SENTINEL one year, and the new Premium Bible? Read it and take advantage of it before too late.

MRS. A. M. MANTZ, of Keota, Ia, a warm friend of the SENTINEL almost since its first issue, writes: "Please change our address from Des Moines to this place where we have lately moved. God bless the SENTINEL as a beacon light to liberty and a defense against the mistakes of the mistaken."

Books Slightly Damaged at Greatly Reduced Prices.

OUR damaged Bible Readings of the $2 style are all gone, but we have some of the following named books in the same condition which we will sell at price given:—

	Regular Price.	Postpaid.
Bible Readings, gilt,	$2.50	$1.50
Great Controversy, gilt,	2.75	1.75
Patriarchs and Prophets, gilt,	2.75	1.75

A full list of slightly damaged books, together with complete catalogue of publications, will be sent free on application. Send for them.

Sentinel Clubbing List.

SENTINEL and Chicago Inter Ocean.....	$1.50
SENTINEL and New York Tribune.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Cosmopolitan.....	1.85
SENTINEL and Iowa Homestead.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Rural New Yorker.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Signs of the Times (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Review and Herald (new subs.).....	2.00
SENTINEL and Youth's Instructor (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Good Health (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Missionary Magazine.....	1.25
SENTINEL and Dumb Animals.....	1.25

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy, Per Year,	- - - -	$1.00.
" " Six months,	- - - -	.50
" " Three "	- - - -	.25

ADDRESS. AMERICAN SENTINEL,
39 Bond Street, New York.

College View Sanitarium Bakery,

College View, Neb.

The prepared foods from this establishment have from the first taken rank with the

VERY BEST MADE ANYWHERE,

And any one who uses them once is ever afterward a patron. They are all prepared from the choicest selected grains, and the greatest care is exercised in securing the proper scientific combination of all the ingredients entering into their composition. Among the leading foods are the following:—

Granola. Made from the best portions of wheat, oats, and corn, cooked ready for use—excellent for infants, invalids, and travelers.

Crackers. Graham, Oatmeal, and Fruit. Delicious, toothsome easily digested. None better.

Wafers. Whole wheat, gluten, rye, oatmeal, and carbon. Just what dyspeptics and those with weak digestive organs are looking for.

Pure Wheat Gluten. The nitrogenous part of wheat, especially recommended for those in a debilitated condition.

Zweibach (or toast). Specially prepared and will keep like crackers.

Cereal Coffee. A charming substitute for tea and coffee. Delicious and strictly healthful.

Agents for the Sanitarium Health Food Co., and the Sanitas Food Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Sample package of foods 25 cents.

Send for catalogue.

Webster's International Dictionary

Successor of the "Unabridged."
The One Great Standard Authority,
So writes Hon. D. J. Brewer,
Justice U. S. Supreme Court.

Standard
of the U. S. Gov't Printing Office, the U. S. Supreme Court, all the State Supreme Courts, and of nearly all the Schoolbooks.

Warmly Commended
by State Superintendents of Schools, College Presidents, and other Educators almost without number.

Invulnerable
in the household, and to the teacher, scholar, professional man, and self-educator.

THE BEST FOR PRACTICAL USE.

It is easy to find the word wanted.
It is easy to ascertain the pronunciation.
It is easy to trace the growth of a word.
It is easy to learn what a word means.

The New York Tribune Says:—
The latest edition comes from the press with a completeness that implies the most thorough editorial and typographical supervision. * * * The wide public, too, finds this a work to which it is constantly useful to refer.—April 8, 1890.

GET THE BEST.

Specimen pages sent on application to
G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

NUT BUTTER MILLS.

Something new. Designed especially for converting nuts into butter for table and culinary purposes. Valuable recipes for the use of nuts. Shelled and unshelled nuts of all kinds at reasonable prices. Send for descriptive circular and price list.

JOSEPH LAMBERT,
Battle Creek, Mich.

(Trade Mark Registered.)

GLUTEN FLOUR

For Dyspepsia, Constipation, Diabetes and Obesity. Unlike all other flours, because it contains no bran and little starch—which cause acidity and flatulence. Nutritious and palatable in the highest degree. Unrivalled in America or Europe.

PAMPHLET AND SAMPLE FREE.
Write to FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 1/4 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required.

BLAINE CO., Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW Webster Dictionary AND Complete Vest-Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5 1/2 x 2 1/2 in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE

TO SELL OUR

Splendid Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Our price on the Bible to agents is so very low that we must have cash with the order, but perfect satisfaction is absolutely guaranteed. Send at once for terms, etc.

Pacific Press Publishing Company, 39 Bond Street, New York City.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia
	Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50.

Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Battle Creek, Mich.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

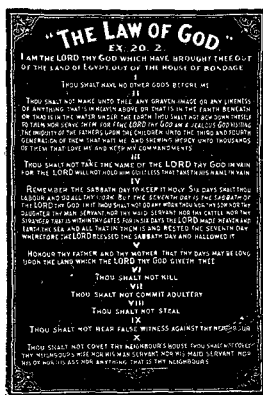

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spake it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12x18 INCHES.

On thick paper, mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

Postpaid, 25 Cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

"It is the Grandest Book I Ever Read," Says a lady who has read the book entitled,

"Christ Our Saviour,"

By MRS. E. G. WHITE.

WE have in this book the life of "Christ Our Saviour" from his birth to ascension, given in simple and direct language. It is printed in large, clear type, and is finely illustrated by engravings made especially for it. The simplicity with which this "Old, Old Story" is told, the aptness of the illustrations, and the general appearance of the better bound styles will attract and hold the reader's attention to the very close. It makes an excellent birthday or holiday gift to a friend, either young or old. 160 large octavo pages, bound as follows, and will be sent postpaid at prices given.

Presentation edition, two colors, vellum cloth, embossed in jet, green and gold, beveled edges, gilt top.....	$1.25
Fine English cloth, embellished aluminum cover.....	.75
Cloth back, board covers, in colors.....	.50
Heavy tag-board covers. Bible Students' Library, No. 141.....	.35

Also published in board and cloth at 50c and 75c in German, Swedish, Danish, and Spanish languages.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

OAKLAND, CAL.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

: OUR NEW PREMIUM BIBLE :

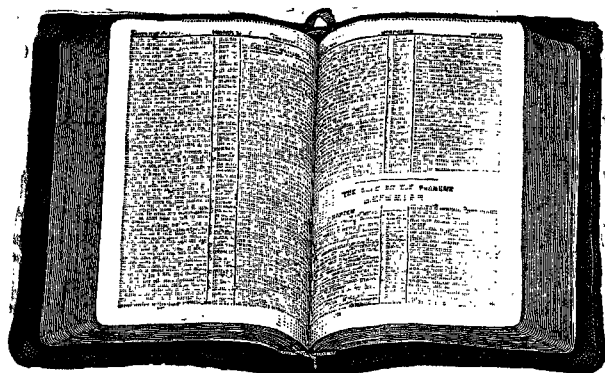

By special arrangement with the manufacturers of our

SELF-PRONOUNCING S. S. TEACHERS' COMBINATION BIBLE

We are able to give our patrons a benefit.

Premium Bible Open.

Regular price of
Bible $8.00,
with Sentinel,
1 Year, $3.50.

Premium Bible Closed.

This Bible is bound in Tampico Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Leather Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker. It has large, clear type (see specimen), sixty-four illustrations, fifteen splendid Clear Maps, Concordance, Subject Index, Vocabulary of proper names and foreign words with their meaning, etc.

But the most unique and important feature of this Bible is the "Combination." This consists in the blending of both old and new versions in one volume without increasing the size. The "Combination" is prized highly by those using it. The book is $1\frac{1}{4} \times 6 \times 8\frac{1}{4}$ inches, and weighs 2 pounds, 14 ounces, and is listed at \$8.00. Our offer, which we consider UNPRECEDENTED, is this:—

THIS FINE BIBLE, POSTPAID, AND THE "AMERICAN SENTINEL," ONE YEAR, ONLY $3.50!

The Bible may be sent to one address, the "SENTINEL" to another. This offer is extended to all, old as well as new subscribers. To any one sending eight new subscriptions, with $8.00, we will present a copy of this Bible as a gift.

 For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE USED.

They that sealed the covenant.

NEHEMIAH, X.

The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 23 The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-he-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'sha-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,

2 ^c Sēr-a-lī'ah, Āz-a-rī'ah, Jēr-e-mī'ah,

3 Pāsh'ūr, Ām-a-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah,

4 Hāt'tūsh, Shēb-a-nī'ah, Māl'luch,

5 Hā'rim, Mēr'e-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah,

6 Dān'jēl, Gīn'nē-thon, Bā'ruch,

7 Mē-shūl'am, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'a-mīn,

B. C. 443.

^f Deut. 28.

48.

^g 2 Kin. 23. 3.

² Chr. 29.

10; 34. 51.

Extra 10. 3.

ch. 10. 23.

2 Heb. are at the sealing,

or, sealed.

ch. 13. 1.

3 Heb. at the sealings,

ch. 9. 38.

^a ch. 8. 9.

4 Or, the governor.

b ch. 1. 1.

c See ch. 12.

1-21.

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

30 And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

31 ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not

This Bible makes a most ACCEPTABLE HOLIDAY . . .

—OR—

. . . BIRTHDAY GIFT
to a husband, to a wife, to a child, to a parent, to a more distant relative, to anyone. It is a thing of beauty, a joy forever.

This Remarkable Offer holds good only during December, 1897. After Jan. 1, 1898, the price will be advanced.

DON'T MISS IT.

Send money by Postal Order, Express Order, or Bank Draft on New York, drawn payable to the undersigned.

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Joshua etc. 14 chiefs 23 Nethinim,—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 48.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 9, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

CONSCIENCE is made to direct man, and not man to direct conscience.

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." You will be free seven days in the week.

WHEN the church allies herself with an earthly power, she demonstrates that as a church she is fatally weak.

HUMAN law cannot be "based upon" God's law, unless it can be that human law rises higher than the divine law.

THE principal thing that is learned by the children from the religion that is taught in the public schools, is irreverence.

WHEN the church sets out to reform the world, the usual result is that the world reforms the church. Not the world, but individuals, are to be reformed.

If this be a Christian nation, why is not citizenship in this country synonymous with Christianity? and why may one not depend upon such citizenship for salvation?

To say that a thing which is proper and right on one day of the week can be a crime because done on some other day, is to say that there is no distinction between crime and sin.

HUMAN government and divine government are two vastly different things, both in nature and purpose; and it is a great mistake to look upon the former as supplying the place, in this world, of the latter.

HUMAN government demands the prompt execution of legal penalties upon the transgressor of the law. God's government names death as the penalty for every violation of law. God's government provides mercy for every offender; human government demands only justice without mercy. Without mercy for all transgressors, God's government would fail; and with mercy for all transgressors, human government would not survive a day.

The Letter Killeth.

"THE letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." 2 Cor. 3:6.

This is a plain statement of the inspired Word, and ought to be believed by every Christian, at least.

And that it is a fact, and one which is capable of practical illustration in human affairs, can, we think, be demonstrated to all candid people, whether Christians or not.

It is just the danger that we shall have a practical illustration of it in this government, that now demands the attention of every American citizen.

What letter is it that killeth? The verse in which the words occur says that it is the letter of the New Testament, and there is also a Spirit; and it is said that the "Spirit giveth life."

The apostle in this chapter of his epistle to the Corinthians speaks of the ministration of the letter, and the ministration of the Spirit, and says (verse 6) that Christians had not been made ministers of the letter, but of the Spirit.

In the following verse he speaks of the "ministration of death"—the ministration of the letter, which "killeth"—as being that which was "written and engraven in stones" in the days of the children of Israel. That was the law of God—the ten commandments.

In that law there is death, but no life, for the sinner; and this truth embraces every individual on the earth.

Yet that law is an essential part of God's government. It is the standard of righteousness, and could not be altered, even to save the life of the Son of God. For it was the penalty of the violation of that law which the Son of God paid in man's behalf, upon the cross.

The ten commandments are the letter of righteousness; but they only condemn the sinner to death. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth," or giveth life.

Now it is proposed by a very large part of the religious population of this country, to "put God into the Constitution," by inserting in that document—which is the fundamental law of the land—a clause recognizing God as the ruler of the nations, and making his Word the basis of national and State legislation. This change in the basis of our government has been attempted several times already, and is about to be attempted again.

This, then, if it succeeds, will be to put into the fundamental law of the land the letter of righteousness. But inseparable from this will be the terribly significant fact,—"the letter killeth."

Let us see. The letter of righteousness—the decalogue—demands the death penalty for every violation of it. This is the penalty which God himself has fixed, and it can no more be separated from his law than God himself can be.

But this law, with its death penalty, all people, even the best, are prone to violate. Since this is so, therefore, how long will it be after the letter of righteousness has been put into the fundamental law of the land, before every man, woman, and child in the land will be under sentence of death?

God's government provides a means by which this death sentence is suspended, and an opportunity given the transgressor to escape it altogether; but human governments cannot proceed upon this basis. Their laws must be executed; and the only delay that can intervene is that necessary to establish the guilt of the violator. Everybody knows that this is the plan upon which all human governments are, and must be, conducted.

What, then, do these religious people want by their scheme to "put God in the Constitution"? Do they want to kill off all the people of the country, themselves included? This is the only logical result which the success of their scheme could have.

No; it cannot be that they want to put themselves under sentence of death; for no "reformer," even of the most fanatical sort, ever wanted to reform himself in this way. It will be necessary to exempt themselves, and all who are willing to be reformed to their standard and scheme of righteousness. But they will have enough appreciation of the logic of the situation to bring the penalty upon such as stand out against it; and persecution, imprisonment,—yes, and even death, will assuredly be the lot of some. In this, the promoters of the like scheme have never failed in the past.

Civil governments can appropriate the forms of righteousness, and the forms only. And whenever this is done, it becomes literally and visibly true that "the letter killeth." But life, not death, is the object of government; and only the government of God can provide the Spirit which "is life, because of righteousness."

The Sunday Law on Trial in Ohio.

For the first time within recent years, if not in our national history, a judge on the bench has declared that a Sunday law is unconstitutional on the ground that it is contrary to the principle of American government which demands the complete separation of church and state.

The case was that of a man who was a proprietor of a bowling alley in Columbus, O., and had been arrested for having violated a city ordinance against giving public exhibitions on Sunday. This step was taken at the instance of the Sunday-law element in the city, who decided to make a test case for the purpose of establishing a precedent. The case was tried in the police court, the presiding judge being Samuel J. Swartz. The latter dismissed the case on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the ordinance.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, of November 28, from which these facts are gathered, says of Judge Swartz's ruling in this case:—

"He based his decision upon the sweeping ground that the measure was contrary to the constitutional principle of a complete severance of church and state, and reasoned that anything which is not a crime on a week day is not a crime on Sunday."

Yes; this is "sweeping ground," for it logically sweeps every Sunday law in the land out of existence; but it is solid ground, for it is the ground of a broad constitutional principle of American government. It is the best ground upon which any decision against Sunday legislation can be based.

The Enquirer adds that,— "The decision really depends for a precedent upon the holding of Judge Ong, of the Cuyahoga courts, who recently took the ground in a prosecution against Sunday baseball that all laws prohibiting amusements of a moral character upon the first day of the week were unconstitutional. Judge Ong's decision has been taken to the Supreme Court, where it is now pending. In the event of its being affirmed by the highest tribunal, it is difficult to see how the Sunday saloon laws, or almost any other Sunday prohibitory measures, such as are now on the statutes of this State, can be longer effective."

This decision certainly marks a most interesting and critical stage of the Sunday-law movement in Ohio.

THE time to strike for liberty, is now.

The Congressional Sunday Bill Again.

THE promoters of the scheme to secure from Congress the enactment of a Sunday law for the District of Columbia, by which they hope to insert into the government an entering wedge of Sunday legislation, are on hand to introduce their project in the present session of Congress, at the first favorable opportunity. The bill which they hope to have enacted into law was introduced in the House last March, but was laid over as unfinished business. It is this:—

"A BILL

"To further protect the first day of the week as a day of "rest in the District of Columbia.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall not be lawful for any person to keep open any place of business or maintain a stand for the sale of any article or articles of profit during Sunday, excepting vendors of books or newspapers, and apothecaries for the dispensing of medicines, and undertakers for the purpose of providing for the dead, or others for the purposes of charity or necessity; nor shall any public playing of football or baseball or any other kind of playing, sports, pastimes, or diversions, disturbing the peace and quiet of the day, be practiced by any person or persons within the District of Columbia on Sunday; nor shall any building operations or work upon railroad construction be lawful upon said day; and for any violation of this Act the person offending shall, for each offense, be liable to a fine of not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars, and in the case of corporations there shall be a like fine for every person employed in violation of this Act laid upon the corporation offending.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be a sufficient defense to a prosecution for labor on the first day of the week that the defendant uniformly keeps another day of the week as a day of rest, and that the labor complained of was done in such a manner as not to interrupt or disturb other persons in observing the first day of the week as a day of rest. This Act shall not be construed to prevent the sale of refreshments other than malt or spirituous liquors, or to prevent the sale of malt and spirituous liquors as now provided for by law, or tobacco, cigars, railroad and steamboat tickets, or the collection and delivery of baggage."

The promoters of this bill are willing that, for the present, people who observe another day than Sunday as the Sabbath shall be allowed to work on Sunday, provided they can do so without disturbing people who keep Sunday. Now it is a matter of common observation that Sunday work can be performed without disturbing anybody, by people who do not keep the seventh day. But it has also been frequently demonstrated that any kind of Sunday work by people who do not keep the seventh day is extremely liable to disturb some person who keeps Sunday. In fact, it is practically certain that in the average community such disturbances would be inevitable, and if the disturber escaped prosecution, it would be only because the disturbed parties failed for some reason to bring the charge against him.

From the standpoint of morality, also, it may well be queried why a bill which allows the sale of whisky and tobacco on Sunday should prohibit the sale of clothing. The latter is certainly more essential to warmth and comfort in the winter months, in this latitude, than are the former.

Of course, the object in the preparation of this bill has been to eliminate as far as possible everything which would bring opposition to it. But will not those whose opposition is thus supposed to have been eliminated, look deep enough into the matter to see that if this bill is passed, the principle of Sunday prohibition of business is established, and no logical barrier will remain to the extension of the law till it shall include all classes of people and every kind of business whatever? If they do not see this in it, they will be strangely blind to very obvious truths which concern their interests.

The Way They Argue.

THE December issue of The Defender, the organ of the "New England Sabbath Protective League," published, some "arguments" in favor of Sunday laws, from two well-known advocates of the same,—the Hon. John Charlton, M. P., and Rev. S. M. Dick, of Lowell, Mass. A comparison of some of the statements made by these two authorities on the subject, reveals the real force of the "arguments" upon which the cause of the Sunday law depends.

For instance, Mr. Charlton, among other statements, says this:—

"I might be asked to point out, as a justification for the enactment of this law, some beneficial fruits or results of rest from labor on the seventh day of the week, and I shall very briefly refer to a few facts, which, I think, warrant me in asserting that beneficial results do follow from Sunday rest. One of the great economic evils of the day is OVER PRODUCTION.

We have too much food produced, too many textile fabrics, too much of everything. Our markets are glutted, prices are cheapened, the whole course of business is deranged from over-production, and the employment of labor during seven days in the week is calculated to make this evil greater. The employment of labor seven days in the week is calculated to enlarge the volume of over-production, which in six days in the week is already too great. And for that reason, on economic grounds, the adoption of this system of securing a rest day for labor would produce important and beneficial results."

And almost side by side with this the Defender prints the following from Rev. Mr. Dick:—

"The second source of authority is found in the physical laws of the universe. It is a scientific fact,—time forbids giving the proof,—that if two men, equal in every sense, begin the same kind of work, one working six days in the week and resting one, the other working seven days in the week, that the one resting one day in each week, at the end of six months, will produce twice as much of the product that they are making, in one week's time, as the one who works seven days in the week. The law is rest one day in seven, and he who violates that law pays for it in the value of his products."

And thus it appears that the result of allowing Sunday work will be a disastrous over-production, while at the same time the result of Sunday rest will be, in the course of six months, the production of twice as much as would be possible with Sunday work. You can argue with an individual for a Sunday law on the ground of the evil of over-production, and if this does not convert him, you can tell him that with Sunday rest a factory can produce twice as much inside of a year as would be possible without it; and both arguments will be equally good!

If we enforce the Sunday laws, we will have over-production, according to Rev. Mr. Dick; and if we fail to enforce such laws, we will have the same result, according to Mr. Charlton. Hence it appears that we are bound to have over-production anyway!

The advocates of Sunday laws sometimes lose much by failing to compare notes before giving their "arguments" to the public.

The Church and Politics.

CONSIDERABLE controversy has arisen in some quarters over the relation the late Henry George sustained to the churches of New York City. Everybody knew Mr. George as a politician of the most pronounced type. But now it is being made to appear that he was also a devout Christian. On this ground a minister in Omaha, it seems, took occasion publicly to upbraid the churches of Mr. George's city for not better sustaining him politically in his fatal canvass for the mayoralty, alleging that plutocratic influences were behind their actions.

Whether such charges could be fully sustained or not, is neither here nor there. It is well known that Mr. George held peculiar views regarding rich men and their estates, and these probably influenced the actions of these men, more or less, in their attitude toward Mr. George. But church members, whether rich or poor, are not bound to sustain a man politically because he is friendly to the Christian religion. The mission of the church is one thing, that of political organizations entirely another. The church is a divine institution, political systems are entirely earthly. The work of one is to preach the gospel of peace, the other to maintain party preëminence. The church has nothing in common with the various opinions relating to civil polity, but is, or should be wholly engaged in matters pertaining to the kingdom of God, which Christ has assured us is not of this world.

The more church organizations affiliate with politics, the less zealous they become in the work laid out for them by the divine Master. Before his return from earth to heaven, the Lord prayed earnestly that his followers might be one in their work, even as he and the Father are one. But when politics are permitted to become an essential feature in the welfare of the church, confusion and disunion quickly follow. The reason for this is plain. No affinity whatever exists between the two concerns. The work of the church is a spiritual one, set in order and conducted by divine instruction, which all are supposed faithfully to adhere to, while political affairs are planned and maneuvered by human minds, not infrequently for sordid purposes.

The members of the church were to be united through a divine fellowship. This breaks down every barrier of political distinction, or class preference; the high and low, the rich and poor, are expected to stand together in Christian companionship, bound by the sacred ties of holy love. In their common warfare against the wiles of sin, this complete union is necessary to prosperity. By this complete unison of sentiment and action the world also will be apprised that the purpose of the church is a true and noble one, and that its mission is a success.

In politics the tendency is to class distinction. Men of wealth usually enjoy the highest civil discrimination, by being placed in position and authority, who in turn reward with place and power those who have contributed to their elevation. Worldly policy and worldly schemes obtain in this work, and quite often any device that may tend to defeat an opponent is justified as expedient.

With such work the church can rightly have nothing to do. Its members are registered as citizens of the kingdom of God, in which Machiavelian tactics are unknown. Its adherents have been by the gospel called "out of the world," hence are "no longer in the world," so far as its strife for honor and power is concerned. While rendering to Cæsar the things that are his, as sojourners in an earthly government, members of Christ's kingdom should never betray their Master by giving the strength of the church to political intrigues, thus uniting the church and the state only to corrupt the former, and make the latter an engine of intolerant bigotry.

J. O. C.

A Significant Incident.

THE following incident, the account of which comes to us from a correspondent in a Western town, is significant of the spirit of the times.

In this town, which is in the State of Washington, a number of people have recently been converted to the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath. Among these were two—father and son—whose business was that of box-nailing. They were employed in a box factory with seven other men, the latter being Methodists, Presbyterians, and Episcopalians. Our correspondent says:—

"Preceding the third Sabbath they kept, the manager of the box factory received an order for 5,000 boxes, which was to be filled by sunset Sunday evening. He told the two they would have to work Saturday. They told him they could not do that, but they would come back and work for him after sunset Saturday, and nail as many boxes as they would nail if they should work on the Sabbath; and they would work again for him on Sunday with the rest of the men. The manager said that would be all right.

"So they did as they had agreed. But on Sunday morning, when they went to work, the rest of the men said, 'We won't let those Adventists work here any more.' So they went to the manager and said: 'If you don't discharge those Adventists we will quit.' That meant he would not be able to fill his contract. So the Adventists were discharged. This comes pretty near being a boycott."

Note the point in this proceeding. These other men—Methodists, Presbyterians, and Episcopalians—were perfectly willing the two Adventists should work on Sunday, as they did themselves, provided they would also work on Saturday. But because the latter would not do this, the others said, 'If they won't work on their Sabbath they shall not work on ours. Out of their antagonism to the Adventist belief they suddenly developed a great regard for Sunday.'

This spirit is plainly not the Christian spirit; yet it associates itself with regard for Sunday. But where was it ever known to be associated with regard for the seventh-day Sabbath?

Clerical Intermeddling in Civil Government.

From "The Legal Sunday," by Jas. T. Ringgold.

IN his profound and suggestive work on "The Study of Sociology," Mr. Herbert Spencer shows how necessary it is for any right and profitable thinking on public topics that the thinker should be altogether free from bias or prejudice of any kind. He develops here and elsewhere the correct conception of human government or civil administration as a machine. Properly to determine the purposes to which the proposed machinery of government ought to be adapted, and then properly to construct and manage the machinery, requires the scientific cast of mind, that is to say, a mind which approaches the conditions to be dealt with, free from preconceptions, recalling impartially the experiences of the past, ready at any moment to receive suggestions from the phenomena of the present. One of the most valuable chapters on "The Study of Sociology" is one dealing with "The Theological Bias," under the influence whereof the clerical intermeddler always approaches a question of civil administration, and which as Mr. Spencer shows, is utterly incompatible with the scientific state of mind, and therefore renders it unthinkable that his intermeddling should be otherwise than hurtful.

This theological bias causes the clerical intermeddler to take false and unscientific views of the purposes for which the governmental machinery should be designed, and also of the principles on which it should be constructed and managed. Of the purposes for which it should be designed, because he would have it regulate human conduct with the view to men's happiness in the next world, whereas its sole proper concern is to regulate that conduct in the way which will the least interfere with the attainment of the greatest possible happiness by the greatest possible number of people in this world. Because he would have it applied to the greatest good of his own particular religious denomination, and its members, and its application to the greatest good of any one portion of the community is inconsistent with that purpose of the greatest good to the greatest number which is the true purpose of governmental machinery. Because he would have it "run" upon the assumption that the religion of his denomination is superior as a religion to all others, and to adopt such an assumption as this is to recognize and prefer one religion to another, to establish a union of church and state, all of which is inconsistent with the right purpose of civil government.

But the theological bias is no less fatal to right and serviceable thinking about the principles upon which the machinery of government is based, than it is to right and profitable thinking about the purposes for which it should be designed, and with a view to which it should be managed. The government is a machine. Like all other machines, to be a good machine, it must be constructed on scientific principles. These principles require a reference to facts, not theories. One of the most important things to be considered in the construction of any machine, is the materials of which it must be made, and the materials upon which it is to operate. Now scientific principles require that in the construction of our governmental machinery, we shall have regard to the facts of the materials of both kinds, and not to any theories concerning them.

The scientific builder or alterer of a machine, studies these materials as they are, and gives no thought to the question of what they ought to be. He does not say to himself: "Here is material out of which I am to make a saw; the metal is very soft; but it ought to be hard, and so I will make the saw in such a manner that it will be a very good saw indeed, if the metal ever becomes hard." He does not say: "Here are certain logs which I am to make a saw cut; the wood is very hard; but it ought to be soft; so I will make such a saw as will cut it easily enough if the wood should ever become soft." But the effect of the theological bias is to produce just this unscientific attitude of mind toward the construction and alteration of the machinery of government. The material out of which the machinery must be constructed, and that on which it must operate, is human nature. It is true that the business of the clergyman is with human nature. But the business of the geologist and the analytical chemist may be alike with strata and ores and yet the training and profession of one would not qualify him to deal scientifically with the problems that lie within the domain of the other.

It is easy enough to see how the training and profession of a clergyman not only do not tend to qualify him, but, inevitably incapacitate him from taking a right view of the principles upon which the governmental machinery should be constructed. That training and profession necessarily and rightly commit him to a view of human nature framed with reference to what it ought to be, rather than to what it is. Necessarily and rightly, because his business is to teach men what they ought to do, and to induce them by sweet and soft persuasion to do it. But the business of the government is not to teach men what they ought to do, but what they must do, or be punished for not doing.

Here we have another illustration of the principle that law or the government has nothing to do with immorality, but deals with incivility alone. What men ought to do, is the same on a small island where there is no government at all, as it is in a great republic with the most complex system of several governments,—federal, state, municipal, what not—that can be imagined. The work of the clergyman, then, is, in a sense, above that of the government; it would exist, though no government existed; it would remain, though all government should perish.

But the clergyman's work is done when persuasion and exhortation have failed. The clergyman cannot judge, because the Master has declared that though a man shall refuse to receive his word, yet he judges not that man. The clergyman cannot punish because the Master has said, "Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." And here the government steps in. It has nothing to do with persuasion or exhortation. It wastes no time in trying to convince the citizen that he ought to do this, or ought not to do that. It is perfectly indifferent to his views upon the subject. It simply commands him to do or refrain, as the case may be, and judges and punishes him in its own way for disobedience. The spheres of clerical and governmental action being thus entirely distinct, the relation of the two to the material of human nature is also distinct, and the clergyman is not merely non-qualified, but disqualified, so far as government is concerned, by reason of his calling and profession, from taking a scientific view of the material out of which government must be constructed, and on which it must operate.

Dr. Talmage as a Sunday Desecrator.

DR. TALMAGE and Sam Jones are now to be counted as contributors to the growing disregard of Sunday, if we may believe what is said by the advocates of strict Sunday observance concerning their influence. For instance, a writer in The Advance, of November 18, says this:—

"Now we do feel that no agency is more effectively breaking down the Christian Sabbath than the practice of noted ministers like Dr. Talmage and Sam Jones, of joining with the railroad companies in encouraging Sunday excursions."

But in condemning Dr. Talmage and his brother "evangelist" for their course in this respect, it should be remembered that there is no divine command at all for Sunday observance, and that in the absence of this, the doctor and Mr. Jones may well be pardoned for holding that it is no sin for excursion trains to bring people on Sunday to their meetings to hear them preach.

Thanksgiving Plagiarism.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE folly of Thanksgiving proclamations by civil rulers, and the perfunctory way in which they are issued, has been illustrated very clearly this year. Two proclamations, one by Governor Stephens, of Missouri, and one by Governor Pingree, of Michigan, are so nearly alike that the question is raised, Which one of these governors plagiarized? That one of them has done so is evident, as portions of the two proclamations, placed side by side, as below, will fully prove:—

FROM GOV. STEPHENS'S THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

"Our great commonwealth, filled with a greater population than belonged to the whole country when our fathers fought for national independence, can look back over the seventy-six years of Statehood and see the simple industries of the pioneers grown to the many diversified industries which have made us the eighth State in wealth, and we are the fifth in numbers and political power in this great Union.

"The spirit of philanthropy among our citizens has been active in providing for the needs of suffering and unfortunate.

"Christian workers have brought many to acknowledge their obligations to lead better lives, and countless homes have been made happier for their efforts during the year."

FROM GOV. PINGREE'S THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

"Our great commonwealth, filled with a larger population than belonged to our whole country when our fathers fought for national independence, can look back over the sixty years of Statehood and see the simple industries of the pioneers grown to the diversified interests which have made us a great State in wealth and in a great many other ways.

"The spirit of philanthropy among our citizens has been active in providing for the needs of suffering and unfortunate.

"Christian workers have brought many to acknowledge their obligations to lead better lives and countless numbers have been made happier for their efforts during the year."

When the similarity of the two proclamations was first discovered, the investigation of the matter afforded a rich field for the inquisitive newspaper reporters, and they at once started out to find the plagiarist—for to hunt down a governor is no common sport. The telegraph was freely used, and the following facts have been ascertained: Governor Stephens declares that his proclamation was issued four days previous to that of Mr. Pingree. This would throw the plagiarism on the governor of Michigan, but he has a loophole by which he, at least, almost escapes. He says he was very busy at that time, and so he asked the secretary of state, Washington Gardner, to write it. Mr. Gardner, apparently not having the spirit of thanksgiving burning within him as it is popularly supposed to be burning in all State officials during the latter part of November, turned back to an old proclamation of a former governor of Michigan and copied it! In that case, both proclamations are borrowed from the same source, illustrating in a rather curious way that old principle that two things which are equal to a third thing are equal to each other.

But what shall be said of the virtue or utility of such proclamations? That a governor of a State cannot find time nor thought to write the annual Thanksgiving proclamation, and that a secretary of state, when called upon to do so, though a scholar and an orator, should borrow an old one from any source, instead of writing one himself, is a striking commentary upon the hollowness of the whole thanksgiving business as far as the authority of the state, manifested by executive proclamation, is concerned.

It is probably also safe to say that the real spirit of thanksgiving in these perfunctory thanksgiving proclamations is a very fair specimen of the amount of thanksgiving felt by those who give heed to them. The most important part of the American thanksgiving is the turkey, and no proclamation of president or governor, whether original or a plagiarism, can affect its gluttonous consumption.

The moral that may be drawn from all this is, that religion and religious exercises prescribed by a state, whether suggested or commanded, are always utterly devoid of that life and soul which makes their performance of any value.

A Test of State Religious Schools.

IN New South Wales, Australia, a practical test is being made of the utility of giving religious instruction in the state schools. With a view of ascertaining the desirability of such a system for the state schools of Victoria, the inspector-general of schools in the latter colony, Mr. Stewart, made a two months' investigation of the results obtained in the New South Wales schools, and made a report, which was printed in the Melbourne Age, of September 20. Of the religious lessons given in these schools the report says:—

“They are not religious in the true sense of the term. They were not taken at any particular hour of the day, and might be placed between vulgar fractions and vocal exercise, according to the whim of the teacher.” He was much shocked to hear such expressions as ‘our Saviour’ used glibly, and without any apparent reverence; in fact, the lessons did not appear to be of any more importance to the children or teachers than any other lessons, seeing that there was no test applied to teachers as to special fitness to give this instruction. It was given, not only by Protestants and Roman Catholics, but also by teachers who might have no religious sympathy or belief. It was said that all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness. If that was the end of religious instruction, Mr. Stewart did not think that any attempt was made to reach it in New South Wales.”

Experience is much more valuable than theory; and it is to be hoped that the States of the American Republic will profit from the experience of New South Wales in this respect. There could not be a much better plan devised for making the children irreverent than to teach them religion by such a system as that which Inspector-general Stewart described.

An Example of “Christian Unity.”

RECENTLY, says the Living Church (Chicago) 400,000 “Assyrian Christians” have become adherents of the Russian state church. This adherence was secured through the influence of Russian emissaries, who promised the Assyrians the protection of their government if they would purge their religious formulas of Nestorianism and introduce a prayer for the czar.

The Assyrians have been for centuries believers in the doctrines of Nestorianism; but upon the promise of Russia to maintain their schools and give the country protection from the Turks, Kurds, and Persians, the great majority laid these doctrines aside and became orthodox Russians. And this is pointed to by the religious press as “one of the most remarkable examples in history of a restoration of long-broken Christian unity.”

Yes; this is one way to secure “Christian unity;” it is a way with which history is quite well acquainted, but not to the credit of the church. The only true Christian unity is that which comes through adherence to divine truth. Not by giving up truth, not by compromising with error, not by bargaining in doctrines for the protection of earthly princes, but by counting the truth of God as more precious than all else, can the true unity of the faith be realized in Christendom.

Christian unity is a unity in love of the truth.

Our Clubbing Rates.

IN another column will be found a list of excellent publications which we have arranged to furnish at reduced prices. There is nothing in this to us, but we are glad to receive orders for any of them in connection with the SENTINEL at reduced prices as a matter of accommodation to our friends. The offer is being responded to to quite an extent. We desire to say that we shall discontinue this clubbing arrangement after the first of the year, and therefore those of our friends who wish to take advantage of it will please arrange to do so between this and January 1.

A GREAT deal of news that is worth considering comes to us these days from across the water. In Austria, the body politic is convulsed by a bitter race war between the Germans and the Czechs, the immediate cause of the outbreak being a government decree authorizing the use of the Czech as well as the German language in the courts and in all official business. This the Germans bitterly resented, and the result was that the members of the Austrian national body—the Reichsrath—engaged in several pitched battles, the like of which has probably not been witnessed in the legislative halls of the nations in recent years. When human nature breaks away from the bonds of reason and self-restraint, the most august assemblies of earth speedily descend to the level of a mob.

THE premier and his ministry were forced to resign but even this move seems to have contributed but little to the stability of the empire. The great bugbear of government in Austria is the violent race hatreds of her heterogeneous people, which prevent any cohesion between the different portions of the empire. It might be well for the United States to learn from the experience of Austria a lesson of caution in adding to the heterogeneous elements under her sway, as for instance, in the proposed annexation of Hawaii. It is worthy of note in this connection that the people of Austria are almost wholly Roman Catholic. The Catholic religion claims to be the religion of Christ; but the religion of Christ does not go with race hatred, or with hatred of anything except sin.

BUT much more important than this is the news of a shifting of forces on the chess board of European diplomacy, by which old and long-established coalitions are broken up and new ones formed in which the Vatican holds the place of a member of the alliance. Thus, it is stated upon good authority, that Germany and the Vatican have come to an understanding by which the pope and the Kaiser are now virtual allies. In an interview with the pope on November 18, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs, it is stated, assured the Roman pontiff that hereafter regularly accredited ambassadors would be sent from Berlin to the Vatican, as well as to the Quirinal.

BUT this is not all. "Besides the German ambassador to the Vatican," it is stated, "there are now in Rome, of recent appointment, M. Paubelle, of France, and M. Tcharykow, the ambassador of the czar. This fact lends color to well-grounded rumors that France, Russia, and Germany have arrived at a complete understanding with the Vatican as to action to be pursued in certain African and Asiatic contingencies." "Rapprochement between the Vatican and these three powers is becoming every day more pronounced."

THE explanation is that the Powers have recognized that the Vatican is a more powerful ally than some of the weaker nations which have hitherto been included in the coalitions of Europe; and have decided accordingly to dissolve the old alliances and form new ones in which the Vatican shall be included. Italy is a weak kingdom, and demonstrated the fact in her late war with Abyssinia. In a great defeat which the Italian army suffered in this campaign, a large number of Italians were taken prisoners, and in the endeavors made to effect their release, it was demonstrated that the pope possessed more "moral" and diplomatic power than the Italian government. The great Powers of Europe have no use for a weak ally when they can get a strong one; and accordingly they have set out to form a new alignment of their forces, in which the Vatican shall be included, and Italy and Austria left out. This is the program which is said to be foreshadowed by the appointment of regular ambassadors from the Powers to the court of the "Holy See."

WHILE the Powers may reap some temporary advantage from this new arrangement, the great and permanent advantage will be that reaped by the papacy. This latest step is one of the greatest which the papacy by her astute diplomacy has been able to take in a long and steady rise toward her old-time position of prestige among the nations. Upon that proud eminence her eye is fixed; and, as she nears the goal, the thought of her heart is that which the language of Scripture ascribes to her (Rev. 18:7), "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." But a change—sudden and unlooked for—is imminent, in which will be fulfilled the words, "Strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

MANY readers of the SENTINEL will remember the agitation which was raised a few years ago by certain Protestant clergymen over the disabilities imposed upon Protestants in some of the Catholic countries of South America. The pope was asked to intervene and secure for these Protestants that civil and religious liberty of which the papacy has so often declared itself the champion. He replied that he could not be expected to interfere in the governmental affairs of another power; that to do what was asked of him would be a meddling act which those countries would resent, and which would be altogether contrary to the papal code of procedure.

* * *

Now, however, comes the news from Rome, upon the authority of the Italian journal Roma, that "the pope has demanded that Don Carlos [of Spain] should postpone the issue of his manifesto to his adherents, at any rate for the present, under pain of his displeasure. This, it is thought, will avert the danger of a possible overthrow of the present Spanish dynasty by the adherents of Don Carlos. But why should the pope make use of the "pain of his displeasure" to secure certain political results in Spain, and refuse to make use of the same to ameliorate the lot of Protestants in Peru? The reason is evident, but it is one which fails to accord with papal claims.

* * *

SOCIAL circles in Kentucky are in a state of violent agitation over the settlement of one of the greatest questions which it could fall to the lot of real "society" to consider. It seems that two Kentucky belles have been designated in a more or less official manner to perform the important act of "christening" the new battleship "Kentucky," whose launching is a prospective event in naval affairs. As it requires only one person to attend to this ceremony, the question arises as to which one of these two shall be accorded the honor.

* * *

It is required by a time-honored custom that on the occasion of the launching of a battleship, the vessel shall be "christened" by breaking over her bow a bottle full of a well-known kind of liquid,—but not water; and this must be done by a young lady, the selection of whom falls to the secretary of the navy, or to some other official whom he may designate. One of the two young ladies in question claims the honor by virtue of the appointment of ex-Secretary of the Navy Herbert, and though the christening is to take place under a new administration,—Mr. Herbert having served under ex-President Cleveland,—she is not disposed to let the honor slip easily out of her hands. It is reported that she had counted on performing an unusually effective piece of christening, as regards the style, having confided to her friends that she meant to break over the "Kentucky's" bow nothing less than a bottle of real Kentucky whiskey, forty years old! Generally, the christening of a battleship is accomplished with the sacrifice of only a bottle of ordinary wine or champagne.

* * *

ALTHOUGH it properly belongs to the present administration to select a christener for the new battleship, there seems room for regret, upon grounds of propriety, that the honor should (as it now appears) have fallen to the lot of one who will, perchance, fail to appreciate the value of Kentucky whiskey for christening purposes. For there can be no doubt that, for putting an individual in good fighting trim, a bottle of real Kentucky bourbon that is forty years old is far superior to a bottle of ordinary wine. And as it is the business of battleships to fight, the propriety of using whiskey for the christening will at once be apparent. However, it is announced that Secretary Long has officially settled the matter in favor of the daughter of Kentucky's governor, and with his decision the warring social factions will, we suppose, have to be content.

—♦♦♦—

The Church Controls Elections in Utah.

"The Outlook," November 27.

THE elections in Utah demonstrated that a large element among the Mormons still retains an intense respect for the revelations of the church leaders. That President Wilford Woodruff's demand at the October conference that Mormons should unite in politics was taken as more weighty than the light talk of an old man was shown in the results in Salt Lake City. John Clark, the candidate for mayor of the citizens, but a very devout Mormon and the undisputed church candidate, was elected by a small majority. The Gentile vote and the Independent vote were divided among three candidates—all Gentiles. Mr. Clark was supported by the politicians whose names are always associated with church politics, and the conclusion that the church elected him is well supported. Every Gentile who was on the ticket with him was defeated. Every Gentile who was on the other tickets was seriously "scratched," and every Mormon running received a comparatively large vote.

The same result was seen all over Utah. Ogden's administration, as well as Salt Lake's, will be in the hands of Mormons, though in each case the Gentiles form the bulk of the population. The City Council in each case, by a majority of Mormons, shows a result of religious voting. The tendency of Mormons to vote for men of their own faith has an important bearing on national affairs. It is not improbable that next year a legislature may be elected in Utah which will be so overwhelmingly Mormon that a United States senator will be chosen who will give his chief allegiance to the church leaders.

—♦♦♦—

It may well be that a merciful Providence allowed the development of Mormonism in this country to the church-and-state system which we now see virtually established in Utah, in order that the people in this country might, by having this object lesson before their eyes, be saved from the fatal folly of setting up a like system which would embrace not one single State merely, but the whole nation. Certain it is that it is high time the people of this country should take warning from the situation in Utah, and repel the efforts of the religious organizations who are working with might and main to compel this government to profess religion.

THE Christian Citizen (Chicago), for November, remarks concerning the late political contest in New York City, that "the Citizens' Union has fought a good fight and kept the faith, but has by no means finished its course."

Perhaps not; but it has been defeated, and thereby conclusively demonstrated that it was not fighting the battle of Christianity; for "the good fight of faith" is always victorious. The defeat of faith would mean the defeat of God himself.

The World's Hope of Peace.

In a recent speech, the English premier, Lord Salisbury, touched upon the world's outlook for peace, in the following words:—

"You notice that on all sides the instruments of destruction are piling up—armies become larger, the Powers who concentrate them become greater, the instruments of death become more effective and more numerous, and are improved with every year, and each nation is bound for its own safety to take part in this competition. Those are the things that are done, so to speak, on the side of war. The one hope that we have to prevent this competition from ending in a terrible effort of mutual destruction which will be fatal to Christian civilization—the one hope we have is that the Powers may gradually be brought together, to act together in a friendly spirit on all subjects of difference that may arise until at last they shall be welded together in some international constitution which shall give at last to the world as the result of their great strength a long spell of unfettered commerce, prosperous trade, and continued peace!"

Such is the statement of the world's hope of peace, as made by one whose position eminently qualifies him to speak understandingly upon the subject. It is not a bright outlook; in these days the world's outlook is not bright, in any direction. "The one hope," says this eminent statesman, "is that the Powers may gradually be brought together in a friendly spirit," "until at last they shall be welded together in some international constitution," etc.,—a consummation which evidently lies at the extreme limit of vagueness, uncertainty, and improbability.

Yet now, as ever, it is true that "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee." That is the Christian's hope of peace,—a sure hope, which no commotion of earthly forces can overthrow. And this is the hope which remains for the individual.

Mrs. H. H. GEORGE, wife of the well-known advocate of "National Reform," reports in the December issue of the Christian Statesman her success in enlisting the State W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania in the National Reform cause. She says:—

"The National Reform movement has many warm friends among the ranks of the W. C. T. U. Many of the delegates expressed their sympathy and interest in this

The "critic" is abroad in the land!
Have you not often heard him say something that grates upon your ear and misrepresents this paper and the cause it has espoused? If so, why not send in his name and invest twenty-five cents in bringing before him the work of the AMERICAN SENTINEL as it is and as it is not? It will be missionary effort that cannot fail to yield excellent results. What do YOU say to this?

cause. The convention itself gave support to the work by making the National Reform a separate department and appointing a superintendent. Heretofore, the departments of Sabbath Observance and National Reform were united under one superintendent, Mrs. R. J. George, who sent in a request asking that National Reform be made a separate department. Already a letter has been sent to each county president asking that a superintendent be appointed in each county of our state.

"The convention also passed a resolution that five delegates be appointed to represent that body at the coming National Reform convention to be held in Philadelphia."

WHEN it comes to the question, "Is ours a Christian nation?" we are compelled to pause. The Thanksgiving proclamations of governor and president do not stamp us as such; they merely show the spirit of the people in its annual recognition of the sovereign Ruler of the skies. They do not lift the veil of positive crime or of neglect of God, contempt of church privileges, and a life of more or less unblushing infidelity as led by some. They do not tell of the oceans of insidious literature with which too many presses groan in our land, in which the character and mission of Jesus Christ on earth are minimized and his sacred claims upon us reduced to the mere question of our acceptance of him as an historic model of a romantic legend. Indeed, the alleged Christian pulpit itself has contributed to this pernicious stream which is helping to make us a nation of practical skeptics.—New York Observer.

In Newbern, N. C., an ordinance is now enforced which prohibits both employes and employers from going in or out of a place of business during the twenty-four hours from midnight of Saturday to midnight of Sunday.

THE Board of Directors of the chief public library in Chicago have voted that the library shall hereafter be open on Sundays. The Methodist Ministers' Association has decided that this action is wrong.

The Four-Headed Leopard.

"This is the queerest beast we have struck yet, mama. Let me read you about it."

"After this I beheld, and lo another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads, and dominion was given to it."

"Yes; this is a strange beast. What was he like?" asked Mrs. Ross.

"Like a leopard."

"Now tell me what a leopard is like."

"Something like a cat," said Charlie. "More like a wildcat. I would not like to meet one at night in the woods. I saw one at the menagerie. He ran up and down in his cage, and O how his hungry, yellow eyes did glare! Leopards are very cunning and crafty. They creep along slyly, and then suddenly pounce upon their prey. They are very ravenous and cruel, and do not know the meaning of mercy."

Charlie grew quite animated in speaking of the leopard, and made some gestures that made his mother laugh.

"Dear me, Charlie; you almost frighten me. You can look a great deal like a leopard yourself, and sometimes I have seen you act like this very beast of prey. O Charlie, let us ever remember as we read these prophecies that unless God's love continually controls us and subdues our fierce passions, we shall show the very characteristics we abhor. The kingdoms represented by the beasts were made up of human beings like ourselves when the grace of God is left apart from our lives."

"I see," said Charlie, soberly. "But God made leopards."

"Yes; but at first you remember they were harmless, subject to man's dominion, even as our passions serve us well when they are under the rule of love. But now to the kingdom. What was the third universal kingdom?"

"Greece," said Charlie.

"Yes. Greece grew in power during the latter part of the Medo-Persian reign, and an occasion for war was sought by the Persians, but they went home completely discomfited. The Grecians displayed great bravery, and some of the most thrilling incidents of history cluster about their struggle to evade the Medo-Persian yoke."

"Yes, mama. Of all the people I have read about in history I like the Greeks best."

"There were many attractive features in the Greeks. But with all their grace, we can see the leopard characteristic. Do you remember how the Greeks looked upon the feeble and deformed?"

"They despised them, and left the feeble infants and the aged, and infirm, and deformed to die on the mountains."

"How did they treat their children?"

"They made them suffer hardships. They trained them to run races, and set before them the Olympian games as the most desirable goal. They taught them to suffer pain, and if they winced under it, they ridiculed and punished them."

"This kind of an education made them very agile, graceful, and unfeeling. We have the best examples of physical grace from Grecian sculpture. If they had also given their children the proper mental and spiritual training, what a race they would have been! Even as it was, Greece developed some of the greatest poets, artists, philosophers, and teachers of the world. The grace of God did work among the Greeks, and here and there we see a flower in the midst of the poisonous herbs. But we are not here to look up the exception, but the rule. What man among the Greeks is known as 'The Great'?"

"Alexander," said Charlie. "My Reader says—"

"How tall was Alexander, pa,
That people call him great?
Was he like old Goliath, tall,
His spear a hundred weight?
O no, my child, about as tall
As I or Uncle James,
'Twas not his stature made him great,
But the greatness of his fame."

Then the little boy goes on asking questions till he finds out that Alexander was not very great in God's sight."

"Well, tell me, Charlie, what you have found out in regard to Alexander's fame."

"He was a wonderful general. He marched the Grecian armies against Medo-Persia as soon as he thought them strong enough to overthrow this kingdom. He traveled over 51,000 miles in seven years, or a distance more than twice around the earth. He fought three battles that were disastrous to the Medo-Persians, and every battle was a surprise. He would march up, and fall upon the Medo-Persian armies very much after the manner of a leopard; and the cruelty practiced by the Greeks was certainly as bloodthirsty as the action of the leopard on its prey. There were three great battles at Granicus, Issus, and Arbela, and Alexander was acknowledged the conqueror of the world in 321 B. C., and Greece put in power as the third universal kingdom."

"Well, Charlie, you have brought out the characteristics of the leopard-like kingdom in the swiftness, the strategem, and cruelty of their warfare. There is one point we have not yet touched."

"I know," said Charlie; "and it is the very point in which I am most interested,—the four heads. What does that mean?"

"We shall soon see. What happened to Alexander after his conquest of the world?"

"I know. He laid a wager that he could outdo his generals in drinking, and he drank the Herculean cup twice full. It was said to hold eleven quarts. The feast must have lasted some time. But as a result of this terrible wager, Alexander died in the very prime of his life and power."

"Right here, Charlie, you may read the 21st verse of the eighth chapter."

Charlie read, "And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power."

"What position did Alexander hold in the newly-conquered world?"

"He was the first king."

"When the horn representing the first king was broken off, how many horns rose in its place?"

"Four," said Charlie.

"And what did this indicate?"

"That four kingdoms should rise."

"That's right. The Grecian kingdom was divided into four parts, and this explains the beast with four heads."

"Yes, I remember now," said Charlie, "that there were four of Alexander's generals that divided the kingdom among them. Wait; here is my history. I'll find out who they were. Lysimachus, Cassander, Seleucus, and Ptolemy."

"After we are through, take your map and trace out the territory each one occupied."

"You remember that Babylon was to be entirely overthrown. In Alexander's march he came to the ruins of the great city, and determined to rebuild it. His horses were stabled in some of the palaces of the city. As he tried to investigate the palaces he found them full of venomous creatures, and though the work was begun by Alexander and his workers, his death put a stop to the rebuilding of a city that God had said should never again be inhabited."

"We have spoken in regard to the intolerant character of other governments, but Greece was not at all behind them in trying to order the religious thought of the world. The Greeks were a very religious people. You remember what Paul says in Acts about their altars and their gods. Long before his time Socrates lived among the Greeks. He was very liberal in his thought, and did away with their gods, and died a martyr for his faith, or rather, for his lack of faith in their prescribed religion. All through the history of Greece, both before and after the coming of Jesus, are evidences that it was no friend to civil and religious liberty. Exceptions were found among her statesmen and thinkers, but the whole government carried out the leopard-like spirit. I would like you to read from the 17th to the 20th of Acts, and you will find incidents that will help you to understand the spirit of the Greeks, both when they would and when they would not see Jesus."

"And now, dear, our next talk will bring us to the great and terrible beast that represents the fourth kingdom."

F. B.

Uncle Will's Story.

THERE was a great uproar in the nursery. The day was so stormy and disagreeable that Mrs. Blanchard had decided that the children should play in doors, after their lessons had been recited. This happened quite often, and they had played so quietly and agreeably before, that Uncle Will was surprised to hear the commotion this morning.

"I tell you, Jennie Blanchard," yelled Charlie, "you've got to do as we say. Jack and me are older'n you an' lots bigger, an' there's as many again of us; so it's no more'n right; is it Jack?"

"Course not," agreed Jack. "See here now, Jennie, you be the horse, and we'll show you how Joe Simpkins drives his bus. This is the bus; get on, Charlie; I'll catch the horse. Whoa!" yelled the determined young driver.

But unfortunately this scheme did not seem to meet the mind of the "horse," who protested loudly:—

"I tell you the bits hurt, and I won't wear that harness; it makes my neck ache. It isn't any fun to be a horse, anyway. I'd good deal rather be a little girl," screamed Jennie.

"But you shall! Jennie Blanchard, you shall!"

Uncle Will thought it was high time that this kind of fun was stopped; so he stepped to the nursery door and called out: "Don't you want to hear a story, children? if you do, just step into my room here."

In a moment Uncle Will had Jennie in his arms, and two very eager little boys on his knees. They looked a trifle ashamed for fear their uncle had heard the row, but as he did not mention it, they soon began to breathe easier.

"O, Uncle Will! tell a giant story."

"A fairy story," suggested Jennie. But Uncle Will was not in a mood for either. "I'll tell you a true story, and you may see if you can guess whom it is about."

"Once, a great many years ago, there was a man who had twelve boys."

"Didn't he have any girls?" asked Jennie.

"Yes; but it's the boys I'm going to tell you about. These boys were not always good and kind. Sometimes they quarreled among themselves; but it was with one of their littlest brothers that they had the most trouble. They were afraid that their father thought more of him than he did of them. One day the boys' father gave him a real pretty present, and that only made his brothers all the more wicked and cruel toward him. So they tried to get rid of him in every way.

"At last, when the big brothers were a long way from home, taking care of their father's sheep, the father sent this boy to see how they were getting along. The poor boy became bewildered on the road, and got in the wrong path, and spent quite a while wandering round and round in a field. Finally, a man found the lad and directed him on his journey. At last he found his brothers, but instead of going to meet him, and being glad to see him, they began to wonder how they could get him out of their way. I should have thought they would have been glad to see their brother; for they had n't seen him in some time."

"So should I," said Charlie, "when Jack was gone only a week, last summer, I was so lonesome that I was glad enough to get him back again."

"Well, they were not; and they made up their minds to put him in a deep hole in the ground, and leave him there."

"Why, Uncle Will! till he died?"

"Yes, of course; you see he didn't act to suit them, and there were ten times as many of them as there were of him, so of course they decided that they had a perfect right to make him come to their terms."

"The mean fellows!" said Charlie.

"They ought to be hung!" exclaimed Jack excitedly.

"But, my boys, don't be too sure. Don't you see? they were older and larger than he was, and there were so many more of them, of course"

Charlie glanced uneasily at Jack, and said nothing.

"Come, Uncle Will, go on," said Jennie.

"Well, they didn't put him in the hole, but they sold him to some merchants who came along, and then they thought sure they would have no more trouble. But really, their trouble was just beginning. When Satan leads any one to do a wrong act, he doesn't care how much trouble they have on account of it. These brothers told a wicked lie to their poor old father when he asked them where the boy was."

"O, I guess I know who that boy was," said Jack; "it was Joseph."

"Well, can you think now why I have told you this true story?"

"O, I 'spose you heard us boys try to make Jennie play what we wanted her to," said Charlie.

"But we didn't put her in a hole, nor we didn't sell her to wicked men, nor tell a lie to papa," said Jack, looking very self-righteous and virtuous.

"No," said Uncle Will, seriously; "but, my children, the very same spirit which prompts you to use force in any way to bring those who are weaker than yourselves under your power, is the same as that which caused these wicked brothers to do so bad a deed. Never forget, my dear children, that this is the spirit of murder, although it does not always lead directly to it."

"Was that what made Cain kill Abel, Uncle Will?"

"Yes; it was the same wicked spirit. He was older than Abel, and I presume he reasoned that he ought to know best; and so when he talked with his brother 'in the field,' and couldn't make him believe as he did, nor see things as he did, he became so angry that he killed him.

"Here is a little prayer that I want you to learn and repeat every day:—

"O Saviour, make me more like thee.
Peaceful and good and mild,
And may I daily grow to be
A harmless, gentle child.
Lord, may my deeds be kind and true,
And though I may be strong,
O may I never seek to do
My weaker brother wrong."

MRS. L. D. AVERY-STUTTLE.

Sentinel Clubbing List.

SENTINEL and Chicago Inter Ocean.....	$1.50
SENTINEL and New York Tribune.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Cosmopolitan.....	1.85
SENTINEL and Iowa Homestead.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Rural New Yorker.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Signs of the Times (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Youth's Instructor (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Good Health (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Missionary Magazine.....	1.25
SENTINEL and Dumb Animals	1.25

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy, Per Year, - - - - $1.00.

" " Six months, .50
" " Three " .25

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond Street, New York.

College View Sanitarium Bakery,

College View, Neb.

The prepared foods from this establishment have from the first taken rank with the

VERY BEST MADE ANYWHERE,

And any one who uses them once is ever afterward a patron. They are all prepared from the choicest selected grains, and the greatest care is exercised in securing the proper scientific combination of all the ingredients entering into their composition. Among the leading foods are the following:—

Granola. Made from the best portions of wheat, oats, and corn, cooked ready for use—excellent for infants, invalids, and travelers.

Crackers. Graham, Oatmeal, and Fruit. Delicious, toothsome easily digested. None better.

Wafers. Whole wheat, gluten, rye, oatmeal, and carbon. Just what dyspeptics and those with weak digestive organs are looking for.

Pure Wheat Gluten. The nitrogenous part of wheat, especially recommended for those in a debilitated condition.

Zweibach (or toast). Specially prepared and will keep like crackers.

Cereal Coffee. A charming substitute for tea and coffee. Delicious and strictly healthful.

Agents for the Sanitarium Health Food Co., and the Sanitas Food Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Sample package of foods 25 cents.

Send for catalogue.

Webster's International Dictionary

Successor of the "Unabridged,"
The One Great Standard Authority,
So writes Hon. D. J. Brewer,
Justice U. S. Supreme Court.

Standard
of the U. S. Gov't Printing Office, the U. S. Supreme Court, all the State Supreme Courts, and of nearly all the Schoolbooks.

Warmly Commended
by State Superintendents of Schools, College Presidents, and other Educators almost without number.

Invaluable
in the household, and to the teacher, scholar, professional man, and self-educator.

THE BEST FOR PRACTICAL USE.

It is easy to find the word wanted.
It is easy to ascertain the pronunciation.
It is easy to trace the growth of a word.
It is easy to learn what a word means.

The New York Tribune Says:—

The latest edition comes from the press with a completeness that implies the most thorough editorial and typographical supervision. * * * The wide public, too, finds this a work to which it is constantly useful to refer.—April 8, 1896.

GET THE BEST.

Specimen pages sent on application to
G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

BARLEY CRYSTALS

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
New Diuretic, Restoring Tonic Cereal. Endorsed by physicians in cases of weak and irritable Digestive Organs, and Kidney troubles. Emollient, attractive, palatable. Unsurpassed in the whole range of cereals.

PAMPHLET AND COOKING SAMPLE FREE.
Unrivalled in America or Europe. Ask Dealers, or Write to Farwell & Rhodes, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

NUT BUTTER MILLS.

Something new. Designed especially for converting nuts into butter for table and culinary purposes. Valuable recipes for the use of nuts. Shelled and unshelled nuts of all kinds at reasonable prices. Send for descriptive circular and price list.

JOSEPH LAMBERT,
Battle Creek, Mich.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

Steps to Christ.

In twelve chapters are presented in a simple and beautiful manner the steps by which a sinner may be made complete in Christ. It contains a wealth of counsel and encouragement for those who are laboring with the difficulties, that beset a growing experience.

Price (Fleming Revell edition) .75

You want to succeed in life; you should be trained for success.

The CAPITAL CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE and the CAPITAL CITY SCHOOL OF SHORTHAND, Y.M.C.A. Building, Des Moines, Iowa, are among the leading business training schools of this country.

Board from $1.75 to $2.00 per week. All expenses reasonable. Competent graduates are assisted in securing positions. The best of everything. Send for catalogue to Mehan & McCauley, Des Moines, Iowa.

"I am surprised,"

Says Prof. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N. Y.: "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest.

Pocket Library
is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,800 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York City.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE

TO SELL OUR

Splendid Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Our price on the Bible to agents is so very low that we must have cash with the order, but perfect satisfaction is absolutely guaranteed. Send at once for terms, etc.

Pacific Press Publishing Company, 39 Bond Street, New York City.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dyspepsia,
Bemidies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. - - Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY.
Battle Creek, Mich.

SOMETHING NEW, NEAT, NICE,

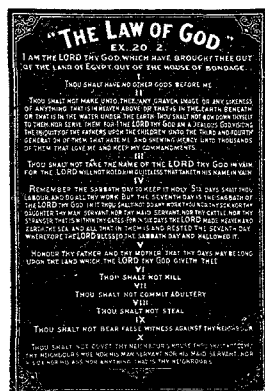

And necessary, if you would know, and have others know the COMPLETE DECALOGUE as God spoke it from Sinai's flaming summit.

A CHART 12x18 INCHES.

On thick paper, mounted at top and bottom with metal and ready to hang on the wall.

Postpaid, 25 Cents.

Postage stamps acceptable.

Invaluable to Bible and History Students.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

410 Pages. Cloth, Post-paid, $1.50.

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
39 Bond Street, New York City, N. Y.

Kansas City, Mo.

Oakland, Cal.

"It is the Grandest Book I Ever Read," Says a lady who has read the book entitled,

"Christ Our Saviour,"

By MRS. E. G. WHITE.

We have in this book the life of "Christ Our Saviour" from his birth to ascension, given in simple and direct language. It is printed in large, clear type, and is finely illustrated by engravings made especially for it. The simplicity with which this "Old, Old Story" is told, the aptness of the illustrations, and the general appearance of the better bound styles will attract and hold the reader's attention to the very close. It makes an excellent birthday or holiday gift to a friend, either young or old. 160 large octavo pages, bound as follows, and will be sent postpaid at prices given.

Presentation edition, two colors, vellum cloth, embossed in jet, green and gold, beveled edges, gilt top.....	$1.25
Fine English cloth, embellished aluminum cover.....	.75
Cloth back, board covers, in colors.....	.50
Heavy tag-board covers. Bible Students' Library, No. 141.....	.35

Also published in board and cloth at 50c and 75c in German, Swedish, Danish, and Spanish languages.

Address, PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,
39 Bond Street, New York.

OAKLAND, CAL. KANSAS CITY, MO.

OUR NEW PREMIUM BIBLE

By special arrangement with the manufacturers of our

SELF-PRONOUNCING S. S. TEACHERS' COMBINATION BIBLE

We are able to give our patrons a benefit.

Premium Bible Open.

Regular price of

Bible $8.00,

with Sentinel,

1 Year, $3.50.

Premium Bible Closed.

This Bible is bound in Tampico Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Leather Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker. It has large, clear type (see specimen), sixty-four illustrations, fifteen splendid Clear Maps, Concordance, Subject Index, Vocabulary of proper names and foreign words with their meaning, etc.

But the most unique and important feature of this Bible is the "Combination." This consists in the blending of both old and new versions in one volume without increasing the size. The "Combination" is prized highly by those using it. The book is $1\frac{1}{4} \times 6 \times 8\frac{1}{4}$ inches, and weighs 2 pounds, 14 ounces, and is listed at \$8.00. Our offer, which we consider UNPRECEDENTED, is this:—

THIS FINE BIBLE, POSTPAID, AND THE "AMERICAN SENTINEL," ONE YEAR, ONLY $3.50!

The Bible may be sent to one address, the "SENTINEL" to another. This offer is extended to all, old as well as new subscribers. To any one sending eight new subscriptions, with $8.00, we will present a copy of this Bible as a gift.

 For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE USED.

They that sealed the covenant.

NEHEMIAH, X.

The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 20 The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah, ² ^c Sēr-a-ī'ah, Āz-a-rī'ah, Jēr-e-mī'ah, ³ Pāsh'ūr, Ām-a-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah, ⁴ Hāt'tish, Shēb-a-nī'ah, Māl'luch, ⁵ Hā'rim, Mēr'e-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah, ⁶ Dān'jēl, Gīn'nē-thon, Bā'ruch, ⁷ Mē-shūl'am, Ā-bī'jah, Mij'a-mīn,

B. C. 445.

^f Deut. 23.

^g 2 Kin. 23. 3.

^h 2 Chr. 23.

ⁱ 10; 24. 31.

^j Ezra 10. 3.

^k ch. 10. 23.

^l 2 Heb. are at

^m the sealing,

ⁿ or, sealed,

^o ch. 13. 1.

^p 3 Heb. at the

^q sealings,

^r ch. 9. 38.

^s ch. 8. 9.

^t 4 Or, the ^u governor.

^v ch. 1. 1.

^w See ch. 12.

^x 1-21.

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{ro} having understanding;

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

30 And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

31 ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not

This Bible makes a most

ACCEPTABLE HOLIDAY . . .

—OR—

. . . BIRTHDAY GIFT

to a husband, to a wife, to a child, to a parent, to a more distant relative, to anyone. It is a thing of beauty, a joy forever.

This Remarkable Offer holds good only during December, 1897. After Jan. 1, 1898, the price will be advanced.

DON'T MISS IT.

Send money by Postal Order, Express Order, or Bank Draft on New York, drawn payable to the undersigned.

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Jeshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nethinim.—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 49.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 16, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THE application of force in religious matters always drives the soul upon which it is directed farther from God.

CHRISTIANITY can no more be advanced by the ballot than by the bullet, since both alike are the emblems of force.

THE "sword of the Spirit" is effective enough to accomplish all the work that is committed to the church to do.

A "CRIME" that cannot be recognized as such by reason and common sense, deserves no recognition from the law.

CONSIDERING how much trouble the state has to enforce its own laws, would it be wise for it to undertake to enforce the laws of God?

"PUT up thy sword into the sheath," is the word of Jesus Christ to such of his professed followers as desire to propagate Christianity by force.

RELIGIOUS legislation tends always to break down conscience, make hypocrites, and obliterate the distinction in men's minds between right and wrong.

To force a man to do right, is to put force in the place of conscience. Men must be forced to respect rights, but beyond this force cannot rightfully go.

"EXCEPTIONS prove the rule," but they do not always prove the rule to be a good one. The exemptions of a Sunday law do not prove the law to be just and right.

THE hardest work of all work is to be obliged to do nothing,—to maintain one's mental, physical, and moral equilibrium under a condition of enforced idleness. And this is the work which is thrust upon multitudes by the enforcement of a Sunday law.

THE people who are calling for Sunday rest by law need to learn that there is an essential difference between rest and idleness. The law can force an individual to be idle, but it cannot force him to rest.

The Rest Question.

JESUS CHRIST said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." This is not one of the "recently discovered sayings" of Christ, but has been in the Bible all along, and we may suppose, therefore, that it is familiar to, and firmly believed by, every member of the Christian church.

And to all such, this saying ought to come with peculiar force at the present time; for it is a fact, as everybody knows, that the "rest" question is agitating and troubling the industrial world more than anything else at the present time.

Yet it is also a fact, too plain to be denied, that the church forces are advocating a method of settling this question which is wholly different from that set forth in the Scriptures. Their method is not by invitation, but compulsion. They would compel every person in the land to refrain from work upon each first day of the week.

For years the working men have been agitating for an eight-hour day. That is their method of gaining the rest which they desire. Nor is it a surprising one to be advocated by associations of a worldly character. But it is surprising that an association which claims to be altogether unworldly in character, should, in the very face of the words of Christ, propose to give men rest by civil enactment.

From the Christian standpoint, these words of divine invitation constitute the true basis upon which this rest question must be settled for all men. For it is actual rest which this invitation holds out to all. It is no figure of speech, but a literal statement. And everybody who has accepted it, and tried it, knows that it is literally true. No one who has found the rest that is in Christ, is complaining to-day that he does not have rest enough to satisfy every physical need.

And it is easy enough to see why this is so. For when an individual comes to Christ, he brings himself into harmony with the purpose of God for humanity in this fallen world, and that purpose embraces everything that is for man's benefit. And God, who created man, knows better than any one else just how much rest man needs. It was God who, in the beginning, ordained that man should live by the sweat of his brow, and who provided for him the weekly day of rest.

The Being who made man has himself provided a rest for man; and he has set forth that rest in the words of the fourth commandment. It is recorded that God himself set the example in this respect, and that "on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed." In the rest which God has provided, there is refreshment; but in the rest which the state provides, there is only turmoil and trouble. For it will not be denied that the police have harder work in taking care of a city full of people when they are idle, than when they are at work.

It is to this rest, with its refreshment, that the individual comes when he accepts the invitation, "Come unto Me." There is rest in Christ at all times,—rest for the heart, rest for the mind, rest for the whole being; but there is the special rest of the Sabbath,—the seventh day, which God blessed for the benefit of mankind. Let an individual come to Christ, accept the seventh day of rest from work as God has commanded, and see if he does not find all the rest that he needs. We have never heard of a case in which it was not so.

The working men are, many of them, under a heavy yoke. But the Saviour says, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me;" "for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light;" and he gives the assurance, "Ye shall find rest unto your souls." It is not surprising that the world should not believe these words; but it is certainly to be expected that the church will believe them, and will make them the basis of her work for the betterment of mankind. It is certainly to be expected that, as the church views the prevalent conditions which emphasize the world's unrest, she will throw all her energies into the proclamation of the divine message which alone can provide the remedy.

Does not the rest ordained and provided for man by the Creator, exactly meet the requirements of man's nature to-day? Is it not the only rest that will supply man's need? and is not this rest to be secured alone by acceptance of the gospel invitation? Does not the church, at least, believe this? and is it not her mission to proclaim this to all the world, and that to the full extent of her ability? Is it not, then, "another gospel" to which the church is turning, in proclaiming rest for mankind by the force of civil law?

SOME people seem to labor under the lingering impression that when Christ said, "Go, disciple all nations," he gave them a roving commission to discipline anybody upon whom they could lay their hands.—N. Y. Observer.

"Higher Criticism" of the Calendar.

THERE have been several changes made in the calendar since it was first known to man, but it appears that there is yet need of another "reform," more radical than those made by Julius Cæsar and Pope Gregory. What this is, is indicated by the following words from the annual address of Miss Frances Willard, at the late W. C. T. U. Convention:—

"We must be careful always to let it be understood that those who observe some other day than the seventh, are to be respected in their belief by any law that we are working to help obtain."

By "some other day than the seventh," was meant some other day than Sunday; which is to say that Sunday is the seventh day, instead of Saturday. But as everybody knows, the calendar makes Saturday the seventh day of the week and Sunday the first day.

Now, when persons of the intelligence of the World's W. C. T. U. president hold and proclaim that Sunday is the seventh day of the week, why do the makers of the almanac persist in holding to the old style of calling Sunday the first day instead of the seventh? Why can we not have a calendar that will be abreast of the "advanced thought" of the times, especially in so fundamental a matter as the numbering of the days of the week?

This is evidently what many of our Sunday-observing friends who still believe in the fourth commandment would like. But alas! even if the calendar could be so "reformed" as to make Sunday the seventh day of the week, and so harmonize its observance with the fourth commandment, it would only throw them hopelessly out of gear with other Scripture texts upon which they depend for justification of their practice. For they hold that the New Testament Scriptures plainly teach that Christ rose from the dead on the first day of the week, and as their Sabbath observance is based upon the resurrection of Christ, it can never be any other than the first day of the week upon which that observance must fall. Hence, to make Sunday the seventh day of the week would only be to throw the "Sabbath" over to Monday, which would be the first day of the week according to this new reckoning.

And as this is so, and as the calendar cannot be "reformed" so as to make Sunday anything else than the first day of the week, we can only wonder why intelligent people will persist in calling it the seventh.

NOTHING that is good in this world can be forced upon people against their will, without entirely losing its power to benefit them.

The Spirit of the Constitution.

THE local union of Christian Endeavorers of Hackensack Valley, N. J., have sent in a petition against Sunday mail service to the postmaster of Hackensack, on the decidedly novel ground that such service is "in violation of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States." The petition will, it is said, be sent to Washington to be passed upon by the post-office authorities."

Inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States forbids, to the extent of its jurisdiction, any law "respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," it would be in order for these Christian Endeavorers to explain how a regulation which does not deny to any the free exercise of religion, can be "in violation of the spirit" of that document; and how, also, a regulation which linked this department of the government with a religious dogma, can be in keeping with the spirit of the Constitution.

In other words, since the Constitution discounts any union of the government with religion, by forbidding Congress to make any law on the subject, ought a department of the government to keep Sunday? We think not.

Fined for Not Keeping Thanksgiving.

NOT recently, indeed, has any person been fined for a reason of this nature, but such a thing is not unknown in the history of the United States; and the fact that it has occurred in the past suggests the thought that a recurrence of the same is entirely possible, if not probable. For history repeats itself, and as this incident shows, a regard for feast and fast days of governmental appointment tends naturally to find expression, when fully developed, in an enforced observance of such days by legal prescription. The following is from the Waterbury American, and gives the record of the prosecution as it was set down at the time, ninety years ago:—

"WATERBURY, NOV. 26th, A. D., 1807, at evening, personally appeared. David Beecher, Seymour Tyler, Freeman B. Hine, and Harvey Payne, and acknowledged before me, the subscribing authority, that they were guilty of a breach of a certain statute law, entitled an act to enforce the observance of days of public fasting and thanksgiving, by attending to servile labor and recreation, by chopping, shooting, hunting, etc., on the 26th day of November, it being a day appointed by the governor of this State to be observed as a day of public thanksgiving throughout this State.

"Wherefore, it is considered and adjudged by this court that the said David Beecher, Seymour Tyler, Freeman B. Hine, and Harvey Payne, each of them, pay a fine of $1.25 to Ashley Scott, town treasurer, for the benefit of the town of Waterbury, where said offense was committed.

"FREDERICK HOTCHKISS,

Justice of Peace.

"On the same Thanksgiving night David Beecher and Seymour Tyler paid the prescribed fines of '$1.25' each.

"Harvey Payne paid four days later, but no record appears that Freeman B. Hine met the demands of justice."—Waterbury American.

What Is Christianity?

RELIGION is defined to be a system of faith and worship, which gives expression in outward conduct of one's conscious relation to God. While this may be mainly true, it must be conceded that religion does not express itself through all men alike; for while some in their devotion to it are led to coerce others to adopt the precise forms of worship with themselves, others, none the less zealous in their profession, and equally trustworthy as citizens, seem perfectly satisfied to have every one about them enjoy the rights of private conscience the same as themselves. Which is the proper course? In theory few would hesitate to pronounce in favor of the latter, yet, in practice, there has been for ages a tendency among religionists of nearly every sort to adopt the former course.

But the strange feature of this fact, and one worth considering, is that, in most cases of coercion, the oppressor and the oppressed have called upon the same God, and borne the same religious name. Why did expression of outward conduct differ so widely in these? Were both genuine promptings from the one eternal Father? If not, which acted the wrong part; those who suffered hardship, or those who inflicted it?

These questions are as practical now as ever, because the principles of pure religion are abiding. The precepts and life of Christ were not only the foundation of the Christian religion, but they still remain the guide and test of personal conduct in its profession. Christianity is, therefore, the "practical conformity of one's inward and outward life to the spirit of the Christian religion."

This spirit is plainly set forth by the Saviour himself in the parable of the wheat and tares. A certain farmer sowed wheat in his field, but as it appeared above ground found tares mixed with it. Members of his family asked if they might not root up the tares, so that the wheat might more easily develop, but were answered emphatically, "Let both grow together until the harvest." The Saviour explained the harvest to be the end of the world, when he himself would attend to severing the tares from the wheat. Matt. 13:30-39.

It was not then, nor is it now, the prerogative of any man, or government of men to root up error by coercion. Men are authorized to teach the principles of truth, but never to compel others to receive them. Kept free from civil force, as first established, Christianity retains the gentle, persuasive influence with which it was first endowed, and which is now its only mainspring of power in the conversion of men to Christ. But when a state attempts to enforce religious forms by civil enactment, it does itself an injury, as well as those whom it seeks to control in religious matters; for inasmuch as men are made to violate conscience for fear of the law, they yield the principles of integrity, which are the best security of good citizenship.

But when men's consciences are thus outraged by civil law, so that they constantly live a lie before God, what is to save them from doing the same before the civil courts? Why should such men be dealt with summarily, if they dissemble, or defraud in business, or appropriate public funds to private use? Force one's conscience by law, to the destruction of his integrity before God, and the legitimate result will be waywardness in society and a menace to civil government.

This is not an overdrawn estimate. History abounds with illustrations of the baneful effects of the interference of civil power in behalf of religion. One historian says "that in proportion as the church became established, by means of power and riches, religion declined, insomuch that it could scarcely be descried, except in the earthquake of dissension, in the fire of malice, or in the still small voice of some obnoxious sect."—"History of Intolerance," Vol. 1, p. 324. As early as the fourth century, it is said that the bishop of Rome had so much patronage of civil power to bestow, that men of the most corrupt lives fawned upon him, with his seeming approval, hoping for place and power, until the pagan præfect of the city said, in tones of bitter irony, "Make me bishop of Rome, and I, too, will be a Christian."

There is no question as to the effect all this had upon the people at large. Religious devotions were prescribed by law, and proclaimed by those who had little regard for even common decency. The same authorities which prescribed forms of worship for the common people, winked at the irregularities of those at the head of the church. The case of the bishop accused of adultery, which was brought to the notice of Constantine, is an illustration to the point. The emperor quietly passed the matter by saying that if he chanced to surprise a bishop in such an act, he would cover him with his imperial mantle. —Ibid., p. 274.

This was but the legitimate result of a state-directed church. As long as the church stood aloof from the world, it was directed and upheld by the arm of Omnipotence; but when it sought alliance with earthly power, which is always opposed to God's rule, it virtually abandoned the infinite power of heaven, for one which, though in appearance more tangible, yet is entirely destitute of that which can direct the church in spiritual lines. In its original organization, the church was guided in policy by the will of God; after the exchange, it was controlled by the will of a majority of human minds, many of them destitute of even the form of spiritual service.

And to this day such expression of conduct is called Christianity. Many now are anxiously hoping for the day when the name of God shall be placed in the Constitution of our civil government, and the religion of Christ, as interpreted by men, be made the basis of legislation for all. But the dawning of that day will surely bring to this country the same system of religious oppression that prevailed in Europe during the Dark Ages. It cannot be otherwise, since the laws regulating the customs of Christianity were established once for all, by the Founder of the system, and therefore do not admit of change, or reënactment by civil power. The laws of civil government are only temporal, and subject to change with each incoming administration. Inasmuch as men do not see alike in moral matters any more than in secular, it follows that radical changes of religious forms are sure to take place, according as the religious sentiments of legislators vary. To enforce these changes by law upon those who are conscientiously following the bent of duty leading in another direction, deprives them of the free use of that which God has bestowed, namely, the rights of conscience. This point is well illustrated by the history of attempts in England to regulate the observance of Sunday, which will be cited in another paper.

J. O. C.

Proposed Union of Code and Creed.

"The Truth Seeker," December 11.

IF we understand the following language, the Unitarians propose to give us a complete union of church and state. Says the New Unity, of Chicago:—

"As every one is born a member of the state, he is by right, also, born a member of the church. Every one is a citizen; but every one is also a religionist. . . . This grand relation ought to and must be recognized. It is the evolution of the original human family on the religious side. In this internationalism, creed and law become one. Thou shalt love God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself, we believe will be not only the creed but the code of the coming society—both state and church. It follows once more that no man can, with righteousness, any more vacate his church obligations than his obligations of citizenship. It does not follow that he must acknowledge fealty to a sect or a narrowness; but he must cultivate his relation to God and humanity, and this must be an active love, involving organic work. To shirk religious obligation is precisely the same as to shirk civic duties. No honest man does the latter, no right-thinking man will do the former."

The doctrine is not new. It belonged to a system formulated by Jean Jacques Rousseau more than one hundred years ago. Rousseau, of course, was not orthodox. Like the editors of the New Unity, he did not accept any particular creed, but he thought there should be only one organization, the state-church, hyphenated. The sovereign people would settle the articles of a state religion, of which Rousseau said:—

“Without being able to oblige any one to believe them, he may banish from the state whoever does not believe them; he may banish them, not for impiety, but for unsociability—as persons incapable of sincerely loving the laws or justice, and of sacrificing themselves to duty if needful. . . . If any one, after having acknowledged these same dogmas, conducts himself as if he did not believe them, let him be punished with death.”

Rousseau saw plainly enough that in order to establish and maintain his state-church everybody would have to belong to it, and that the nonconformity of even one citizen would be fatal to the wholescheme. You might as well permit desertion from an army.

If, as the editors of the New Unity say, every one is born a member of the church as well as of the state, we would like to know what church. The name of the state is found on the map, while that of the church is omitted. The law is in the statute books, but where is the creed? The penalty for disobedience of the statute is prescribed; will it be visited also upon those who disregard the church canons? If the creed and the code are to be the same thing, they will of necessity be equally binding, and church and state will have equal authority. But the editors of the New Unity may be sure of one thing, namely, that the creed would not be that of the Unitarian Church nor anything like it; and unless they are prepared to assume the obligations of a Roman Catholic, they have no business to be advocating an amalgamation of the ecclesiastical and the secular.

Catholic Propagation Among Protestants.

BY C. H. KESLAKE.

“LET us all realize that the providence of God has made our country an arena for the champions of the truth. In no section of the world has the truth of God so fair a field as in America.” Thus writes “Rev.” Walter Elliott, C. P., in the Catholic Mirror.

Whatever view Protestants may have with reference to the progress of Catholicism in this country, it is certain that the Catholics themselves are highly pleased with the advancement they have made. They rejoice over the fact that this country presents the fairest field for the propagation of Catholic doctrine that can be found anywhere.

It is not without good grounds for it that the Catholic Church takes such a hopeful view of the situation. The soil of the world in this nineteenth century of enlightenment and progression is just as good for the Catholic seed as was that of the fourth and fifth centuries.

It is altogether true that no other country has been so fair a field for the truth of God as this country, which, in reality, is to say that never was a field, apparently, so uninviting to the Catholic religion. When this government was started, its founders bounded it in such a way that they hoped Roman Catholic principles would never obtain a foothold here. So far as it could be done in a governmental way, everything was done to shut them out.

This is not saying that the Catholics have no right to propagate their religious views in this country. They have just as much right to do this as any other church or denomination. The danger that our fathers foresaw was that the Catholic Church would get hold of the civil power and use it for the furtherance of her own ends. So long as she is deprived of that means she is no more dangerous here than any other sect. The steps then taken against the Catholic Church were not against the Catholic Church, as such, but against the principle represented by that body; for the principle is just as dangerous when it is fostered under another name.

That being so, it was the design to prevent all religious sects from acquiring control, in any way, of the civil power.

Only apparently, however, was this country an uninviting field for Roman Catholicism; for American history is furnishing abundant proofs for the statement made above, that the soil of the world in this nineteenth century is just as good for the Catholic seed as was that of the fourth and fifth centuries.

Years ago a writer who is thoroughly acquainted with this subject, said: “A day of great intellectual darkness has been shown to be favorable to the success of popery. It will yet be demonstrated that a day of great intellectual light is equally favorable for its success.”

This is the truth; and so-called Protestantism is doing much to demonstrate it. “Christian citizenship” leagues, “higher criticism,” and “science, falsely so-called,” are doing their work, and the Word of God, the only safeguard against Catholicism, is being undermined, and Protestants are being left without chart and compass. For what matters it though there be a thousand Bibles in the home, if the Bible is not studied, and studied too as the Word of God, as indeed it is.

With the pretensions that the Catholic Church makes it would not be strange if she should come with some specious arguments supposed to be based upon the Word. And the average Protestant finds himself no match for his wily foe.

In the early days of the Reformation it was Protestantism that was aggressive. But now the papacy feels that she can be on the aggressive. In the article referred to above it is said: “Always, . . . does the Catholic layman find an audience for the truth among his non-Catholic neighbors. Everywhere does the Catholic priest find it easy to secure a public hearing. ‘I never yet have failed,’ says Cardinal Gibbons, ‘to find our separated brethren not only ready, but anxious to listen to the claims of the church.’”

They see their chance, and they are making the most of it.

Only within the past three years diocesan missionary organizations have been introduced, and now there are over a score of priests who have been wholly set apart by their bishops for the conversion of Protestants.

Think of it! Here are priests being sent out for the sole purpose of capturing "non-Catholics," devoting their whole time to propagating their doctrines among Protestants.

And what have been the results?—Simply that large numbers from the ranks of the Protestants have been brought into the fold of the Catholic Church. Not long ago in this city—New York—there were received into the Catholic Church over two hundred candidates, of whom more than a hundred were formerly Protestants; and this was the result of only a few months' effort.

But why is Protestantism so impotent, so weak? The answer is not difficult. It is because of forsaking the Bible, and standing upon genuine Catholic ground. With the Protestants generally, it is not, as in former times, "the Bible and the Bible only," but it is now really "the Bible and Tradition." That being so, it can mean nothing else than Catholic success.

Even where there is opposition to Catholicism, it is chiefly not because people are intelligent upon the subject, but because of bigotry and prejudice. But this is not argument—it is not reason. It will generally be found that but very few Protestants are acquainted with the first principle of popery. It is true they know there is such a power as the papacy, but what makes the papacy they cannot tell. And that being so, it is not to be wondered at, that, when they themselves, stand squarely upon Catholic ground, they do not know it.

Fettered as the Protestants are with the Sunday institution, purely a creation of the Catholic Church, with not a single scripture authorizing its observance, the Catholics certainly have no reason to be discouraged. With that one weapon they can silence all opposers, save the few who stand squarely on the Word of God.

Following Turkey.

BY WILLIS M. ADAMS.

THE Farm, Field, and Fireside, November 13, gives the following:—

"General Miles recommends that the new Chicago post-office be fortified. . . . The sight of the muzzles of rapid-firing and gatling guns sticking out of the windows of the post-office building is necessary."

Why is it necessary thus to fortify a post-office in this "Christian nation"?

A nation is made up of people; so in order to have a "Christian nation," it must be made up of Christian people. Do the people who make up this so-called "Christian nation" need "rapid-firing and gatling guns" to check the sins they are likely to commit?

Christianity means "Christ in you, the hope of glory."

The fruit of Christ's Spirit is "love, joy, peace, . . . gentleness." "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable." So if Christ is in a man, he will be a gentle and peaceable man. Of what use, then, are the gatling guns that will shoot six hundred times a minute?

The Fireside continues:—

"The general confesses he got this inspiration from Constantinople, where, as everybody knows, the political, economic, and moral conditions are practically the same as those in the United States."

This is a sad commentary upon the condition of this "Christian nation." If our nation continues to follow the heathen nations, it will not be long until "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin" will be written upon the banquet hall of the once grand Republic, and the so-called Christianity of this "Christian nation" will ripen into open anarchy.

Lacey, Iowa.

The Weapons of the Church's Warfare.

From "The Watchword."

OFTEN, in controversy, persons think that by saying sharp, smart, and insulting things they have gained their point. No mistake can be greater. Christ's victories are not won by witticisms and taunts, but by solid truths and living testimonies. Dr. Scudder, the East Indian missionary, relates the following:—

"A Hindoo, on one occasion, said to a missionary, 'Reviling our gods, criticising our Shastras, and ridiculing our ritual will accomplish nothing; but the story which you tell of Him who lived and died and rose again—that story, Sir, will overthrow our temples, destroy our ritual, abolish our Shastras, and extinguish our gods.'

"In this sign conquer. Overcome by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of your testimony. Leave Satan his weapons,—take unto yourselves the whole armor of God. And remember that 'the sword of the Spirit' is the only offensive weapon found in the gospel armory. But 'there is no sword like that.' It has hewn the path of victory before the war-worn church,—and as yet has lost none of its edge or power. Let us use that weapon. Let us tell to the dying that message of eternal life. Let us proclaim the gospel, assured that our labor will not be in vain."

THE Catholic Mirror, of November 6 denies the report that has been in circulation of late, that the bureau of Catholic Indian missions was to be abolished. "Upon the authority of the prelates having charge of Catholic Indian school and mission affairs," says the Mirror, "we are enabled to state that there has been no thought of discontinuing the services of the Catholic Bureau, but that, on the contrary, it will continue, as heretofore, to act as the representative of the Catholic Hierarchy before the government in matters pertaining to Indian affairs."

The Ohio Sunday Law Decision.

WE made mention last week of the decision rendered by Judge Swartz in the police court at Columbus, Ohio, concerning the validity of a Sunday ordinance under which certain religious people of that city sought to punish the proprietor of a bowling alley for keeping his place open on Sunday. Doubtless it will be of interest and value to our readers to have the views of Judge Swartz on the subject presented in the language of this decision; and having the same before us in full, as printed in the Columbus Sunday Morning Press of November 28, we quote from the decision as follows:—

"The question is to be decided by the tests of the constitutional authority of the council to regulate or prohibit occupations on the first day of the week.

"The power of the legislature, and consequently of the council, does not extend to any measure looking to the observance of that day as a religious duty. Under our constitution, all men are permitted to observe any religious rights or beliefs that they may wish, so long as they do not infringe upon the legal rights of others; or, they may observe none. In other words, there is an entire and absolute severance of church and state under our constitution, and any encroachment upon the clear line of severance between them is viewed with a jealous eye by the law, and by courts in construing and interpreting the law.

"Since the first construction of the constitution of 1851 on this point, by the late Judge Allen G. Thurman, in the Second Ohio State, 387 et seq., the line of authorities upholding this view has been unbroken. We therefore dismiss from consideration any claim that might be made for the ordinance as valid on the ground of enforcing an observance of the day as a religious duty. That has been eliminated. Would the alleged offense be a crime per se, an offense wicked and injurious, an infringement on the rights of others, if indulged in on any other day of the week? Or is there something in it, in its necessary results and associations, that make it, when indulged in on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, an offense in itself and of itself, an infringement on the rights and privileges of others, or an abuse of the legal and proper demand that there shall be one day of rest in seven? If it is not immoral or wicked on any other day, then, on this reasoning, it becomes immoral and wrong to Christians on Sunday, and to Hebrews on Saturday. Conversely it is not immoral and is proper to Christians on Saturday and to Hebrews on Sunday. Other sects of religionists may adhere to views constituting another day of the week a holy day, and their judgment as to the morals of the inhibited game would be determined by their religious views.

"But this ordinance does not make it a crime to play at ten pins on any other day in the week than on the first day, commonly called Sunday. It, therefore, does not inhibit it as a crime in itself, but as a crime when played on one particular day of the week. Without now going into the question as to whether its indulgence on a day consecrated to rest by law and to religious observances and usages by a majority of our citizens, organically changes the moral conditions of the indulgence in this game when played on the first day of the week instead of some other, it is enough to observe that the ordinance, in meeting this requirement to bring it within the police power, seems fatally defective. It makes no exception in behalf of that class of our people who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as their Sunday or Sabbath. In the City of Canton vs. Martin Nish, Ninth Ohio State reports, page 439, the Supreme Court says:—

"An ordinance of a municipal corporation, prohibiting under a penalty the opening of shops, etc., for the purpose of business on Sunday, without excepting cases of necessity and charity, and without exempting from its operation persons who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, is inconsistent with the laws of the State, and therefore void."

"That is the law laid down by our Supreme Court in determining the validity of this class of ordinances, and has ever since been followed so far as courts have passed upon the question.

"Further, this consideration of the case brings it within the conditions of the case of State vs. Powell, 38 Law Bulletin 302, recently in the Court of Common Pleas in Cuyahoga County, in which Judge Ong, on demurrer, decided that the statute on which this ordinance is based, is unconstitutional as to this class of cases. This court will not attempt to overrule either the Supreme Court, or the Court of Common Pleas. The demurrer is sustained, and the defendant is dismissed so far as the affidavit under consideration is concerned."

It will be observed that while this decision claims to rest upon the ground of the separation of church and state under the constitution of Ohio, it falls short of the real reasons upon which the unconstitutionality of a Sunday ordinance properly rests. For if the ordinance in question did exempt observers of another day than Sunday from its provisions, it would be really no more in harmony with the principles of separation of church and state than it is now. The virtue of an ordinance cannot be properly determined by its exceptions; it must be judged by its foundation principles. And the foundation-principle of every Sunday ordinance is that the state has a right to direct religious observances. And this principle is false, and full of harm.

The Crime of Fruit Selling.

New York "World," December 6.

LENA DWARTSKY, of 47 Ludlow Street, was sobbing when she was placed at the bar at the Essex Market Court to-day.

She was arrested yesterday by Patrolman Barnitz, of the Eldridge Street station, for violating the Sabbath law. The patrolman testified that he caught her red-handed in the commission of the crime of selling apples.

The woman admitted her guilt, but claimed that she was compelled to do so to feed her children at home. She said that she was a widow, and begged to be allowed to go home.

The justice learned that fruit can be legally sold on Sunday, and discharged her. The policeman was very angry.

THE most noteworthy thing about the President's message to Congress, if we may judge from press comments, is the virtual repudiation by the chief executive of one of the most important promises contained in the political platform of the party in which the people voted their confidence a year ago last November. It is that promise of the platform which relates to the war in Cuba.

UPON that point the platform says: "The government of Spain having lost control of Cuba, and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens, or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace, and give independence to the island." The significant part of this utterance, and that upon which the party most relied to secure the support of the people, is the last clause.

OF the platform which includes this declaration, the President, in his speech of acceptance, made in June, 1896, said: "The platform adopted by the Republican National Convention has received my careful consideration, and has my unqualified approval."

AND now, in his message to Congress, the President says this: "It is honestly due to Spain and to our friendly relations with Spain that she should be given a reasonable chance to realize her expectations and to prove the efficacy of the new order of things to which she stands irrevocably committed." It is needless to add that Spain's "expectations" and her "new order of things" do not in the least degree look to the "independence of the island." They look in exactly the opposite direction.

THE incident only illustrates the fact that political promises are made more for the purpose of trading upon the support of the people, than for the upholding of what the people conceive to be right and justice. In the political code of ethics, expediency is a word which ranks above all others. And he who can so feel the pulse of the people as most accurately to determine what promises it is most expedient to make to secure the people's support, and how the people can be humbugged in such a way that they will not find it out, is fitted to shine as a star of the first magnitude in the political firmament of this day.

THE other day—it was on Sunday—a woman was arrested in the streets of this city for selling apples. When she was brought before the justice the next day, it seemed as though a case would be made out against her, notwithstanding her plea that her utmost efforts were required to keep herself and her children from starving. But the justice, having proceeded to look up the "law" on the subject, finally discovered that selling apples on Sunday was not a crime, as had been supposed, and the woman was accordingly set at liberty.

COULD such a thing as this ever take place in any other way than through the operation of a Sunday law? Has any other law such anomalous features as has this law? Think of a city magistrate having to look through the code in order to determine whether selling apples on Sunday was or was not a crime! He was an intelligent man; he was well educated; he had good reasoning powers; he had the natural ability of any upright character to distinguish between right and wrong. But none of these things could give him any clue by which to determine whether this woman had committed a crime. So all these faculties had to be laid aside, and the case decided by a simple reference to what was said in the code.

If the judge had been looking for the penalty which had been prescribed for a transgression of some sort, there would have been nothing surprising in this; for it is frequently necessary for judges to refresh their memories as regards various specifications which the law lays down. But here the judge and all parties concerned were in absolute ignorance as to whether the act done constituted a crime or was entirely innocent. Who ever heard of a proceeding like this, disconnected from the operation of a Sunday law? And what clearer proof could be wanted that the provisions of such a law have their origin neither in justice nor common sense?

AND now will somebody please tell us—some advocate of the Sunday laws, we would prefer—what is the use of cumbering the machinery of government with a law that declares something to be a crime which nobody, from consulting his reason or his sense of right and wrong, would ever imagine to be a crime at all? Are there not crimes enough to occupy the attention and absorb the energies of our departments of justice, without making crimes out of innocent acts? What time have policemen to spend, properly, in arresting such "criminals," or judges in passing upon their cases, or other officials in taking care of them after conviction? Is the country so free from murder, burglary, arson, robbery, assault, etc., that the force of the machinery of justice can be profitably expended in dealing with acts which reason and common sense cannot recognize as criminal at all? And have the people such a surplus of money that they can afford to expend it to no purpose? These are questions for the people to consider.

WE spoke of the anomalies of the Sunday law. It might be well to mention some of them, as exemplified in this city. The case we have referred to illustrates some of them. It is all right to sell tobacco on Sunday, but a crime to sell clothing. Up to 10 o'clock, A. M., it is all right to sell groceries; but by virtue of the clock's striking that hour, it immediately and without further ceremony becomes a crime! It is all right to shave people up to the hour of 1 o'clock, P. M., but by reason of the sun's position in the heavens being such as to indicate that this hour has passed, the barber's profession becomes a crime dangerous to civilization! It is a crime to sell ice on a hot Sunday in summer, but all right to sell cigars, the latter being recognized by the law as one of the necessities of life! What else can be expected, under such a code, than that policemen, judges, and people in general, will get into confusion not only as regards the requirements of the law itself but as regards the essentials of justice and good government as well? A law must embody reason and justice; otherwise it can work only harm to every interest of the people.

Compelled to Attend Religious Services.

THE Kansas City World reports that Marshal Chiles, who is in charge of the jail of Jackson County, Mo., has made an order compelling all the inmates of the jail to attend religious services on Sunday. And this, it appears, is part of an arrangement made with a religious league for giving the prisoners religious instruction; it being the part of the league to provide the instruction, and of the marshal to provide the audience. As might have been anticipated, the plan does not work perfectly. One of the prisoners is quoted as saying to a World reporter:—

"These people don't understand us. They come and talk right at us and only harden us. Some of the prisoners are Catholics and some of the workers are strong A. P. A.'s, who never lose an opportunity to insult the Catholic belief."

Those who refuse to attend religious services, the report says, are deprived of food until they change their minds; which means, of course, until they so far lose what little regard for truth and honesty they have left that they will say they have changed their minds, when in reality there has been no change of mind at all. For any person knows that an individual cannot be made any more desirous of attending religious services by being starved.

The prisoner is right. It is a case of misunderstanding, on the part of both the marshal and the teachers of religion,—a misunderstanding of human nature and of the nature of Christianity. Christianity is free; and freedom being the very essence of its nature, it is evident that it must lose its force entirely when it is brought to people under compulsion. The prisoners can be touched by its freedom; but force can only repel them farther from it.

Plans for a Great Catholic Crusade.

As outlined in the Freeman's Journal, of November 27, a project is beginning to take shape in the minds of papal leaders for a great Catholic crusade which shall mark the close of the nineteenth century in a manner calculated to turn all eyes upon that church. Of this purpose the Freeman's Journal says:—

"The Right Rev. Charles E. McDonnell, D. D., Bishop of Brooklyn, has directed his clergy to abstain from the giving of missions in their several churches during the whole course of the year 1898. With the close of the coming December, therefore, these occasional periods of special interest in religious affairs, analogous in many ways to the so-called revival services in Protestant churches, in the administration of Catholic parishes, will be abandoned for a twelvemonth in the diocese of Brooklyn.

"So far as is known, no similar action has ever been taken by any Catholic bishop in this country, but Bishop McDonnell and his board of consulters determined upon this course at a recent meeting, in order that they might better prepare for a great spiritual awakening among their people in the year 1899, the last of the century, when the cause of religion will be presented from their pulpits, from January to December, by the most powerful and eloquent mission preachers in the land.

"In reaching the conclusion to make the year 1899 memorable in the history of the Catholic Church in America by this long series of missions, Bishop McDonnell becomes the first American bishop to take definite action with relation to the desire of the pope on the question, as is evinced in the following letter from Cardinal Jacobini, secretary of the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith, which was addressed to the bishops throughout the world a short time ago:—

"You have doubtless become aware of the project, advanced by a number of men of great piety, to get the faithful throughout the universe at the close of the present century to affirm in a solemn manifestation, by a series of religious exercises, their love and gratitude to the all-powerful Redeemer of the human race.

"The design of these men in this initiative was to respond to the desire of our Holy Father, Pope Leo XIII, who wished to consecrate the epoch of transition from one century to another by an extraordinary invocation of the divine assistance of Jesus Christ as a happy preface of peace and control.

"Here, assuredly, is a noble task, and I own that I am proud and happy to undertake it. For what could be more agreeable to my feelings than the occasion so favorably presented to me at the end of my days to employ all the strength that is still left me in promoting the glory of our Saviour—all the more, too, in these last days of a departing century. And what a century has been this of ours, in which proud men, relying on a science unworthy of the name, and displaying an activity which might be called feverish, have carried their audacious temerity to the extent of calling in question the origin of Christianity, or even presenting as a fiction, as a lying legend, faith in the divine person of the Saviour.

"Wherefore we shall fervently strive to make reparation for the great injuries done to our Master, to appease God's anger by our prayers, to exalt in paens of praise the holy name of Jesus Christ, who is the splendor of the glory and the perfect image of the substance of God. Such shall be the task in which we shall set forth all our zeal at the dawn of the new century."

There is plenty of evidence that the close of the century will be a stirring time in every quarter of the civilized world. The forces of evil, of error, intolerance, and despotism are everywhere on the aggressive; and the cause of liberty needs the active, earnest endeavors of every one of its friends.

"Is the state fitted to teach morality? If not, why? Since it is proper that people should rest on the Sabbath day, why should not the state oblige them to do so? What is the state, and how did it originate?"

MR. D. S. JAMES, of North Loup, Neb., who has sent us a goodly number of new subscribers, writes in a late note: "The SENTINEL has done more for me than any other paper I ever saw."

We publish this week the first of a series of "Lessons in French History," written especially for this department of the SENTINEL, and which will continue through the greater part of the coming volume. We believe parents and others will see in them just the thing to interest the youth in those principles and events a knowledge of which will be invaluable to them at this time. Read the first one and see if you do not agree with us on this point.—EDITOR.

Lessons in French History.—I.

CHARLIE WHITE came in from school one day in high spirits.

"O mother! Professor Carman is going to do the jolliest thing! He is going to begin to-morrow to give the girls and boys in our grade short talks on French history. We are to have note books and take down the most important thoughts at the close of the study, or while it is going on. He says we can learn history this way, and he hopes it will be a pleasure to us instead of a drudgery. 'Course I'm only fourteen, but it's time I knew more about the nations of our world than I do; don't you think so, mother?" and Charlie stopped—his enthusiasm had not allowed him to do so sooner—to take a long breath and await his mother's answer.

"Well, my boy, I'm sure I am much pleased with the idea, for I think French history is especially important for all to be well versed in just now; I hope you will be as well pleased all the time the study lasts."

"O, I know I will, mother. But what makes you think the history of France so important just now?"

"Because the indications are quite plain that our own government is fast following in her track, and to be 'forewarned is to be forearmed,' you know."

"But mother," said Charlie, who had always had a great longing to be a soldier, "I thought you did not believe in Christians arming themselves to fight."

"O no, Charlie, I don't mean that; but if we know what is coming, in advance, it will help us to be prepared. That is why our Saviour taught us to watch the signs of the times; it is why he told his disciples about the destruction of Jerusalem, so that those who believed in him might hurry to a safe place outside the walls."

"Well, I'm glad he's going to do it—professor, I mean—'cause, you see, Rob Billings and I are pretty stupid in history, anyway, and we're so anxious to pass well, so we don't miss our trip."

Robert and Charlie had been promised a trip to Paris another year, with their fathers, who were partners in business, if they passed well in their studies. Of course this naturally added not a little to their ambition.

The boys and girls were to meet at three o'clock in the class-room, and Professor Carman promised them a half hour's study.

"Don't you think it's a nice plan, Charlie?" said Rob, the next day. "We get that extra, you see, and we'll enjoy our trip as well again if we understand lots about the country."

Three o'clock came at last, and Professor Carman was pleased to see so many bright-eyed lads and lassies before him, for he had told them that they might act their pleasure about attending.

"I did not think," said the professor, smiling genially at the group before him, "to meet with so many boys and girls this afternoon. I had feared that but few would care to stay for further study after the regular study hours were over, but I hope you will learn to look forward to this hour as one of the most pleasant and profitable of your school life. You will please feel perfectly free at any time to ask a question, indicating your wish to do so by raising the hand. After a time, perhaps we will ask those who feel so disposed, to write short essays on the subject in hand.

"How many of my boys and girls can tell me the name of ancient France?"

"Gaul," was the quick response of half a dozen eager voices at once.

"Right. A great many years before Christ that was the name of the country. The inhabitants at that early date were very wild and uncultivated; and clothed as they were in the skins of wild animals, they might almost be mistaken for them. They were a warlike race, and they used the skulls of their enemies for drinking cups. The country was also filled with many wild animals. The people were thought to have sprung from the fierce Celtic race, which lived in Central Asia.

"To-day France is such a pretty country, with its orchards and beautiful vineyards, that it does not seem as if it ever could have been the home of wild, uncultured people, who cared so little about their personal appearance that they did not even comb their hair, which must have given them a very wild look.

"Now, children," said the teacher, pointing to the map on the wall, "I have brought a fine, large map of Europe, and hung it here, where you can all see it; because one ought never to study history without a map at hand. The city of Marseilles was first called Massilia, and was settled by Greeks from an Asiatic town, Phoecea, about 600 years B. C. These barbarians, I mean the early inhabitants of Gaul, were wonderfully warlike, and used often to trouble their more civilized neighbors. Especially were they a great menace to Italy, and upon more than one occasion these lawless people set fire to the city of Rome.

"You will remember that the Apostle Paul wrote one of his epistles to Galatia, a country in Asia Minor, which was settled by these people. The Romans pronounced a curse upon any one who should undertake to cross the Alps, which, they declared, was a natural dividing line between Gaul and Italy. Yet after a while, they did this very thing themselves. They were anxious to add to their territory the pleasant region of France which has Marseilles, or Massilia, for its center. This they succeeded in doing about one hundred and fifty years before Christ. Meanwhile the Gauls quarreled so among themselves, that some of them called for aid from among the Germans. This caused immense numbers of people from beyond the Rhine to flock down into Gaul, so that the inhabitants were really between two fires,—the Romans on one hand, and the Germans on the other. It is at about this time that Julius Cæsar appears in connection with the people of Gaul. He succeeds in putting the fierce German chieftain to flight, and possessing himself of the land under dispute. The inhabitants, after some desperate struggles, submitted to the Roman yoke. But the Romans had not learned the first blessed lesson of kindness to those who were weaker than themselves, and I fear they never learned it,—or certainly did not practice it. They were very cruel to those whom they had reduced to slavery, and they would often put to death the entire inhabitants of a conquered city,—men, women, and even helpless children.

"I see Jennie Jacobs has her hand raised."

"Yes, sir; I notice then that in these real early times the disposition of the strong to torment the weaker and make it hard for them, was just the same as it is to-day."

"Yes, Jennie, I am glad you mentioned this point, but now as our time is up, I will close by quoting a little verse to the point, which I wish you would all learn:—

" 'Tis thus that man to man behaves
Witness the planter and his slaves,
'Tis thus that state oppresses state.
And civil freedom meets its fate.' "

MRS. L. D. AVERY-STUTTLE.

To one who would trust to the "enlightened spirit of the nineteenth century" to preserve the interests of mankind from the disasters which overtook them in the Middle Ages, there is food for thought in the following words of Bishop Doane, of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Albany, N. Y.:—

"Ill suited as the creation of a papacy seems to be to the temper and spirit of this age, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that the most violent papal claim ever made was made, not in the days of feudalism and paternalism, but in our own days, at the Vatican Council, by a body of bishops, many of whom live in free countries and under constitutional government in various forms. The papacy has developed its intensest papalism in the latter half of our own century."

The Great and Terrible Beast.

"Now, mama, we have come to the most interesting of all the beasts in this chapter," said Charlie, as he rustled the leaves of his Bible.

"Read the description the prophet gives of it, Charlie," said Mrs. Ross.

"After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it, and it had ten horns."

"Whew!" exclaimed Charlie. "I never heard of any beast in nature like that, did you, mama?"

"No, dear, no beast God has made has ever been so perverted from its original nature. But this beast is a symbol of the fourth kingdom."

"O yes. I had almost forgotten that, and was thinking of it as a part of some terrible menagerie."

"Then it would be a good thing for you to refresh your memory, and read the explanation of this strange symbol in the 23d verse of the 7th of Daniel."

Charlie read: "'The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down and break it in pieces.'"

"You spoke of the beast as being worse in character than any beast in nature; but you see, dear, that the beast is used as a symbol of a government unlike anything that God ordained. One could see that by the results of its sway, because, instead of building up, of protecting, or nourishing its subjects, it broke the earth in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it. O Charlie, in this government we find something that is utterly foreign to the nature and object of the government ordained of God; for it is a representation of the selfish and satanic."

"Well, mama, it 'pears to me that we've been seeing that in every government we have studied," said Charlie roguishly.

"Yes, that's so. But while others were like a growing tree, this is the tree matured and in full fruitage. In this government Satan seemed to have been permitted to a greater extent than in any other, to exemplify his methods and character."

"Mama, it seems strange to me that God permitted him to work out such dreadful results."

"It used to seem strange to me, Charlie; but now I see the reason of it, and it seems a wise and wonderful thing."

"Why, mama?"

"Because this world is a stage upon which the drama of good and evil is being played by heavenly and hellish actors in the sight of an investigating universe, and the principles of God's method of government are on trial, and placed in contrast with those of Satan. Satan claimed in heaven that God was wrong, that the law of love was bondage, that each soul by right should be as God in position and power, that self-life, self-government, was better than love's life and love's government."

"Well, mama, I should think by this time the angels would be anxious to have the play come to an end."

"They are, dearie, and it soon will end."

"O mama, do you really think so?"

"Yes; but we will talk of that another time. We are forgetting about the beast. Now, Charlie, tell me what was the fourth kingdom upon the earth."

"Rome," said Charlie, striking an attitude and branching off into "Spartacus to the Gladiators," and gesturing wildly.

"Yes, the gladiatorial shows were a part of the fearful atrocities of Rome. Here is one of Doré's famous pictures, representing the amphitheater after a day of blood and death. You may see the bodies of the martyrs strewn on the stones."

"How calm it looks!" said Charlie. "See those lions prowling round, ready to eat up the corpses."

"Yes, but look at the holy stars and the angels that watch the scene."

"O mama, do you suppose that these poor men knew that God loved them, and that they did not die in vain?"

"It may be, dearie. Here is another picture of the amphitheater when all the aristocracy of Rome watched the conflict of the gladiators."

"O mama, did women go there?"

"Yes."

"What are they holding their thumbs down for?"

"It was a sign that no mercy was to be exercised by the victorious gladiator. You see he has his opponent down, and is looking up, hoping that they will let him spare his life, but you see every thumb is down."

"O, how horrible!" said Charlie.

"Yes, but this was only a small part of Rome's cruelties. Gibbon calls it 'The Iron Monarchy,' and says, 'It was impossible to fly, and fatal to resist.' 'All roads lead to Rome,' was a saying that arose because Rome had subdued the earth. You have read of Cæsar's wars in your Latin lessons, and know how he brought specimens of the nations he conquered to Rome, chained to his chariot wheels."

"Yes, mama, I was thinking the other day of an ovation they gave Cæsar, when they honored him as a god, and I wondered if in the shouts of praise he remembered the groans of the slaughtered, the cries of widow and fatherless, or thought of the horrible battlefields where lay the dying and the dead. O, I am so glad I wasn't Cæsar."

"So am I, Charlie; for then I should not have had you."

"Cæsar's insatiable ambition tells the whole story of Rome. It was first power, then pride, prejudice, and perdition. There are some 'p's' for you to remember and profit by. There is another name in Roman history that stands for cruelty even more than Cæsar's: do you know who I mean?"

"Nero?" said Charlie.

"Yes. What did he do?"

"O, mama, he was a perfect monster. He set Rome on fire, and while homes were burning to ashes, he bade his musicians play to him, and when the people turned on him for this terrible deed, he laid the blame on the Christians, and had them sewed up in the skins of animals and tossed to dogs, and set them on fire to light his pleasure gardens by night, ugh!" exclaimed Charlie, with a look of disgust.

"The world hates Nero," said Mrs. Ross, "yet Nero was only the outworking of self."

"Well, we might name many Roman emperors who were equally wicked and cruel according to their ability. Wild persecution raged against those who were true to Christ during those old pagan days. Do you know what kind of government Rome was?"

"Why, it went under seven forms of government. It started out all right, or at least it was all right when it was a republic; for the United States is a republic and it is all right. I don't know as I know just what you mean."

"Did it legislate in matters of religion?"

"I should say so. The emperor was pontifex maximus, and that means chief priest, and the forum was crowded with the images of gods."

"Here is a quotation from Cicero that tells the spirit that actuated Rome. You can see that there was no religious liberty permitted. Cicero says, 'Let no one have separate gods, or new gods, and let no one privately worship even foreign gods, unless they have been received by public authority.' Death or banishment was the penalty for bringing in any new ideas about religion. You see the devil was behind that decree; for he knew that the religion of Jesus was to be preached in all the world, and he wanted to provide for the death of its advocates. Some one says that the utterance of Rome to Christianity was, 'You have no right to be.' Do you wonder that Rome was likened to a great and terrible beast with iron teeth, who stamped the residue with its feet, when she stamped out all individuality? When new ideas about God and religion are prohibited, thought is fettered in everything. Invention ceases, literature languishes, and the world comes to a standstill."

"And now, Charlie, under what power was Christ put to death?"

"Didn't the Jews put him to death?"

"Did they? Think. Who was Pontius Pilate and Herod?"

"O, I remember; they were Roman rulers."

"The Jews had no power to crucify Christ. You remember just before Jesus was born on earth, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be taxed."

"I remember, mama."

"It was Roman authority that condemned Jesus, Roman soldiers who nailed him to the cross. There is meaning in this fact, dear, that may be you will not comprehend; but in Roman rule, Satan had his way, and his way from the beginning was to put to death the Son of God; and to try to hurl God from his throne."

"Rome was the instrument that Satan used to put out the light of life, and that government took the form of church and state, a form that Christ condemned when he said, 'My kingdom is not of this world,' and, 'Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's.'"

"Well, dear, we'll stop right here, and next time talk of the horns and the horn with the eyes of a man."

"I wish we could go right on."

"No, Charlie, here are some pages in history I wish you to read that will make you glad you waited."

F. B.

December 31, 1897.

WE wish to call attention to our offer of a fine Combination Teacher's Bible, postpaid, and the AMERICAN SENTINEL, one year, for $3.50, that it closes on the above-named date. All orders dated not later than December 31, 1897, will be honored. After that time the price will be higher. We can make this offer only by reason of a special arrangement with our manufacturers. All who have the Bible are loud in its praise. Order now. See advertisement on last page.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy, Per Year,						$1.00.
"	"	Six months,				.50
"	"	Three "				.25

ADDRESS.

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond Street, New York.

College View Sanitarium Bakery,

College View, Neb.

The prepared foods from this establishment have from the first taken rank with the

VERY BEST MADE ANYWHERE,

And any one who uses them once is ever afterward a patron. They are all prepared from the choicest selected grains, and the greatest care is exercised in securing the proper scientific combination of all the ingredients entering into their composition. Among the leading foods are the following:—

Granola. Made from the best portions of wheat, oats, and corn, cooked ready for use—excellent for infants, invalids, and travelers.

Crackers. Graham, Oatmeal, and Fruit. Delicious, toothsome easily digested. None better.

Wafers. Whole wheat, gluten, rye, oatmeal, and carbon. Just what dyspeptics and those with weak digestive organs are looking for.

Pure Wheat Gluten. The nitrogenous part of wheat, especially recommended for those in a debilitated condition.

Zweibach (or toast). Specially prepared and will keep like crackers.

Cereal Coffee. A charming substitute for tea and coffee. Delicious and strictly healthful.

Agents for the Sanitarium Health Food Co., and the Sanitas Food Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Sample package of foods 25 cents.

Send for catalogue.

CATARRH INHALER FREE!

Only one person in fifty cured by the old method of treating Catarrh, now everywhere condemned.

The New Scientific Catarrh Inhaler of Dr. Worst's mailed free to all Readers of the AMERICAN SENTINEL.

CURES BY INHALATION

And is the latest, up-to-date method for curing Catarrh, Colds in Head, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Headache, and is indorsed by all leading physicians.

Air is the only agent fine enough to reach the air cells of the head and respiratory organs. It was the agent that carried the disease there, and must be the one to successfully remove it. Vapors, Sprays, and atomizers are all dangerous, and nature never intended them for the windpipe and instantly repels them.

NATURE'S OWN REMEDY.

It is the one remedy successfully treating these diseases with the air we breathe, and the only one that has sufficient merit that any manufacturer ever had enough confidence in, to send to the public on trial, to be paid for if satisfactory.

THIS IS WHAT THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE SAY WHO USE IT.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 30, 1897.
Dr. Worst:—"I find the Inhaler the greatest thing I ever used. I have had Hay-Fever for 10 yrs. and never had anything to give me such relief."
MISS ERVIN, 1714 Cambridge St.

Crown Point, N. Y., Nov. 16, 1897.
Dr. E. J. Worst, Ashland, O.

Dear Sir:—Have given the Inhaler 3 days trial for a stubborn cough that has resisted all medical treatment heretofore. The beneficial effects of the Inhaler was almost instantaneous, relieving cough at once. I believe this little invention is a God-send to the afflicted. I will see what I can do, and write you a little later in regard to an agency. Please find enclosed $1.00. Very respectfully,
B. F. BEVINS.

Odesa, Mo., Oct. 18, 1897.
Dr. Worst, Dear Sir:—"I will say that I have cured one case of Catarrh with your Inhaler that was under the doctor's hands for four months. I have cured my own Catarrh in my head, and Rheumatism, and have not a pain or an ache in my body at this time. All who have used the Inhaler say it is the best medicine in the world for Catarrh. You will find an order for another dozen which please forward and oblige.
W. C. DANNALSON.

I have thousands of similar greetings on file in my office. Every one is delighted who receives the Inhaler, and can't say too much in its favor. Its immediate magical effects upon the mucous membrane and air passages of the head in allaying pain and all abnormal conditions, captivates every one, and all are loud in saying that its real value is far above its price.

SPECIAL OFFER. I will for a short time mail to any reader of THIS PAPER my days' trial, free. If it gives satisfaction send me $1.00, if not, return it. Send for it now, as this notice will not appear again. Address,

DR. E. J. WORST, Dept. 47,

Ashland, O.

A. H. Dooly, White Water, Kans., says: "I consider its value far above its cost."

J. N. Burdette, Willard, W. Va., says: "I can bear my watch tick for the first time in 12 months."

Isaac Miller, Clay City, Ind., writes: "Your Catarrh Inhaler has cured me sound and well."

Chinkiang, China, July 17, 1897.
Dr. Worst:—"I have received the Inhaler and have used it for a month and is doing me good. My case is Catarrh of long standing. I will remit in American postage stamps through a friend in America."
Rev. A. LYDENSTRIKER, Missionary.

Sharpsburg, Md.
"I have used one of Dr. Worst's Catarrh Inhalers and received more good than from anything I ever used."
JOHN E. OTTO.

Harrisburg, Pa.
The Inhaler received all O. K. I have found nothing yet to equal your Inhaler. Enclosed find one dollar."
WM. B. ORR.

Robert Halford, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., says: "Can recommend it as the best I ever used."

Mrs. Kate A. Wert, Winnebago, Minn., says: "Never had anything to do me so much good."

BARLEY CRYSTALS

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
New Diuretic, Renovating Tonic Cereal. Endorsed by physicians in cases of weak and irritable Digestive Organs, and Kidney trouble. Emollient, attractive, palatable. Unsurpassed in the whole range of cereals.

PAMPHLET AND COOKING SAMPLE FREE.
Unrivalled in America or Europe. Ask Dealers, or Write to Farwell & Rhodes, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

NUT BUTTER MILLS.

Something new. Designed especially for converting nuts into butter for table and culinary purposes. Valuable recipes for the use of nuts. Shelled and unshelled nuts of all kinds at reasonable prices. Send for descriptive circular and price list.

JOSEPH LAMBERT,
Battle Creek, Mich.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond st., New York City.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE

TO SELL OUR

Splendid Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Combination Bible.

Our price on the Bible to agents is so very low that we must have cash with the order, but perfect satisfaction is absolutely guaranteed. Send at once for terms, etc.

Pacific Press Publishing Company, 39 Bond Street, New York City.

The Stomach: ... Its Disorders and How to Cure Them.

By J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.,

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BATTLE CREEK (MICH.) SANITARIUM.

This book presents in a nutshell what every person ought to know about the stomach, its functions in health, the symptoms produced by disease, and the best methods of cure. The long experience of the already well-known author in the treatment of stomach disorders, in his supervision of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, makes this a work of inestimable value, not only for the sick but those who desire to keep well.

THE FOLLOWING ARE LEADING CHAPTER HEADINGS:

The Organs of Digestion.	The Maladies of the Modern Stomach,
The Systematic Treatment of Indigestion,	Foods, The Digestive Fluids
Important and New Discoveries Relating to Digestion,	Treatment of Dis-
Remedies for the Home Treatment of Dyspepsia,	pepsia,
General View of the Digestive Process,	The Symptoms Dyspepsia.
Quacks and Nostrums.

The work is illustrated with more than one hundred and thirty cuts including eleven full-page plates, three colored plates, etc.

This work ought to be in the hands of every dyspeptic.

PRICE, Cloth, $1.50. Half Binding, $2.00.

MODERN MEDICINE PUBLISHING COMPANY.
Battle Creek, Mich.

Sentinel Clubbing List.

SENTINEL and Chicago Inter Ocean.....	$1.70
SENTINEL and New York Tribune.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Cosmopolitan.....	1.85
SENTINEL and Iowa Homestead.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Rural New Yorker.....	1.75
SENTINEL and Signs of the Times (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Youth's Instructor (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Good Health (new subs.).....	1.50
SENTINEL and Missionary Magazine.....	1.25
SENTINEL and Dumb Animals.....	1.25

CATHOLIC TESTIMONY.

The following tracts and leaflets are direct quotations from those high in authority in the Church of Rome, and can be relied upon as representative testimony.

From Sabbath to Sunday.

Contains, among other important testimony, Father Enright's $1,000 challenge for Bible proof of Sunday sacredness. Price, ½ cent.

Who Changed the Sabbath?

This question is disposed of by adducing evidences from Catholic sources. Price, 1½ cents.

Christian Sabbath.

A reprinted article from the Catholic Mirror, which paper is the organ of the Catholic Church in the United States. It puts forth the question "Why Do Protestants Keep Sunday?" Price, 2 cents.

A Challenge to Protestants.

A pithy little leaflet quoting some strong words from a representative Catholic priest to the Protestant world. Price, 25 cents per 100.

Rome's Arraignment of Sabbath-Breakers.

This is a report of a sermon delivered by Father O'Keefe, a Baltimore Catholic priest, in which two facts are set forth and from a Scriptural standpoint. (1) That the only Bible Sabbath is the seventh day or Saturday. (2) That for first day observance or sacredness, there is no Bible warrant. Sixteen well filled pages, 1 cent.

The Law of God as Changed by the Papacy.

A chart 5½ x 11 inches, printed on thin paper, containing the Law of God as changed by the Catholic power. This is flanked by papal assumptions and admissions, giving the whole history of the change in a nutshell. A citation is made from each quotation to its original source, making it a document of especial importance. 50 cents per 100.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUB. CO.,

39 Bond Street, New York.

SEND FOR LIST OF EXCELLENT BOOKS, slightly damaged, offered at half price.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York.

OUR NEW PREMIUM BIBLE

By special arrangement with the manufacturers of our

SELF-PRONOUNCING S. S. TEACHERS' COMBINATION BIBLE

We are able to give our patrons a benefit.

Premium Bible Open.

Regular price of
Bible $8.00,
with Sentinel,
1 Year, $3.50.

Premium Bible Closed.

This Bible is bound in Tampico Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Leather Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker. It has large, clear type (see specimen), sixty-four illustrations, fifteen splendid Clear Maps, Concordance, Subject Index, Vocabulary of proper names and foreign words with their meaning, etc.

But the most unique and important feature of this Bible is the "Combination." This consists in the blending of both old and new versions in one volume without increasing the size. The "Combination" is prized highly by those using it. The book is $1\frac{1}{4} \times 6 \times 8\frac{1}{4}$ inches, and weighs 2 pounds, 14 ounces, and is listed at \$8.00. Our offer, which we consider UNPRECEDENTED, is this:—

THIS FINE BIBLE, POSTPAID, AND THE "AMERICAN SENTINEL," ONE YEAR, ONLY $3.50!

The Bible may be sent to one address, the "SENTINEL" to another. This offer is extended to all, old as well as new subscribers. To any one sending eight new subscriptions, with $8.00, we will present a copy of this Bible as a gift.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE USED.

They that sealed the covenant.

NEHEMIAH, X.

The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

1 The names of them that sealed the covenant. 29 The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-q-lī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,

2 ^c Sēr-q-ī'ah, Āz-q-rī'ah, Jēr-q-mī'ah,

3 Pāsh'ūr, Ām-q-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah,

4 Hāt'tūsh, Shēb-q-nī'ah, Māl'luch,

5 Hā'rim, Mēr'q-mōth, Ō-bā-dī'ah,

6 Dān'jēl, Gīn'nē-thon, Bā'ruch,

7 Mē-shūl'lām, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'a-mīn,

B. C. 445.

7 Deut. 23.

48.

2 Kin. 23. 3.

2 Chr. 29.

10; 34. 31.

Ezra 10. 3.

ch. 10. 29.

2 Heb. are at the sealing,

or, sealed.

h ch. 13. 1.

3 Heb. at the sealings,

ch. 9. 33.

a ch. 8. 9.

4 Or, the governor.

b ch. 1. 1.

c See ch. 12.

1-21.

...

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

30 And that we would not give ⁶ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

31 ^k And if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not

37 power 38 yet for all this—our—our 9 namely, Jeshua etc. 14 chiefs 28 Nethinim.—peoples—that had—(having) 30 peoples 31 peoples—(it)—a—forgo 33 meal—(an) 34 (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, 35 manner of trees,

This Bible makes a most

ACCEPTABLE HOLIDAY . . .

—OR—

. . . BIRTHDAY GIFT

to a husband, to a wife, to a child, to a parent, to a more distant relative, to anyone. It is a thing of beauty, a joy forever.

This Remarkable Offer holds good only during December, 1897. After Jan. 1, 1898, the price will be advanced.

DON'T MISS IT.

Send money by Postal Order, Express Order, or Bank Draft on New York, drawn payable to the undersigned.

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

VOL. 12, No. 50.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 23, 1897.

Single copy 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

(Entered at the New York Post-office.)

THIS issue of the SENTINEL is the last one of the present volume. The next issue will be dated January 6, 1898.

THE mission of the church is not to decide what is right. God has already decided that by his Word.

THERE are quite a number of people in the world besides Leo XIII who believe that they can, upon demand, speak with infallibility.

THOSE people who think the government would be made better by professing Christianity, should remember that the very worst hypocrites do that.

IF only the grace of God can enable even a good man to do right, what is there short of the grace of God that can make a bad man do right?

THE name of God put in the Constitution can no more make that a Christian document than can a crucifix make a Christian of him who wears it.

THE devil doesn't care how religious a thing is, so long as it embodies what is wrong and unjust. The most wicked of all evil deeds have been done under a form of piety.

IF all the ministers in the land should take hold of politics, to "elevate them," this would not at all change the nature of politics. Politics are what they are to-day because it is the nature of politics to become corrupt.

IF the clergy were all in agreement upon the subject of religion, to which they have so long devoted their attention, we could with more assurance accept their dictum on the subject of politics, to which they are comparative strangers.

THE idea that the state can properly teach morals is the idea that a man can teach himself morals; since the voice of the state is only the voice of the men composing it; and this is only the old pagan idea that a man can be his own saviour.

The New Leaders in "National Reform."

THE Christian Endeavorers, who are now the leading National Reformers, have announced that they intend to present to the Congress now in session, one and a half million petitions for the passage of a resolution to amend the national Constitution so that it shall recognize God and the Christian religion.

As these folks are following the lead of the original National Reformers, it is proper to raise an inquiry as to the character of those positions. Those who have gone this way before, have pretended to present the names of more than twenty times as many petitioners as they really had. A few were multiplied into thousands; one was multiplied into millions. As the Christian Endeavorers think they must now take up this matter, it is seriously to be hoped, even though their enterprise in this direction is decidedly bad, that they will at least conduct it honestly.

Of all the people in the United States who desire legislation on the subject of religion, it is but just to say that those who propose to bring it about by constitutional amendment are the only ones who are entitled to any respect in this connection. Of these it must be said that however wrong and ungodly may be the thing which they attempt to do, the means by which they propose to accomplish it is strictly legal.

Amendment of the Constitution is a perfectly legal thing. The Constitution itself makes provision for its own amendment. Of the legality of such a procedure, therefore, there can never be any question. The Constitution is the voice and will of the people. Whatever the will of the people may be which they choose thus to express, whether civically it be good or bad, conservative or ruinous, yet legally it is strictly valid.

Now no worse thing could possibly be done by amendment to the Constitution than to establish "the Christian religion." No more ruinous step could be taken through amendment to the Constitution than this proposed recognition of God and establishment of religion. Yet if such thing were done by amendment to the Constitution it would be perfectly legal, and nothing could properly be said against it on that score. So likewise these people who want a religious despotism established in this nation; so long as they hold to amendment of the Constitution as the means of accomplishing it, it must be said that legally their course is beyond question.

But when this is said, every concession, every allowance, has been made that can possibly be made in any way whatever in reference to that thing. The thing itself is evil and only evil, and that continually and continually increasing. So far also the methods of endeavoring to accomplish this thing, even legally, have been dishonest, hypocritical, and fraudulent. Therefore it is a thing sincerely to be wished that with the accession of this new element of Endeavor, square and honest methods may characterize their attempts to accomplish a purpose which, though legal in form, is evil in itself and ruinous to the nation.

While the worst thing that could possibly be done by amendment to the Constitution, is the establishment of religion; still a worse thing than that is the establishment of religion without an amendment to the Constitution. To do it by amendment to the Constitution would be legal, though exceedingly bad. To do it without an amendment would add to its inherent badness the further elements of illegality and usurpation. Yet this latter thing has been diligently striven for by the predecessors of the Christian Endeavorers; and has actually been accomplished by the government, in principle and in fact.

It is a curious thing, too, that the predecessors of the Christian Endeavorers in this matter actually endeavored to accomplish their purpose by both these methods at once. They tried to get passed a resolution to amend the Constitution so as to legalize legislation and governmental action on questions of religion; while at the same time by threats of political perdition backed by fraudulent petitions they were doing their utmost to force legislation and governmental action on questions of religion. The curious feature in all this lies not in the fact, nor in the methods employed,—all that seems natural enough to these folks,—but in that they should be so blind as not to be able to see that what they were doing was self-contradictory.

Their call for a religious amendment to the Constitution was, and is in itself a positive argument that without it any governmental recognition of religion would be unconstitutional, and therefore illegal and void—a usurpation. Yet in the face of this positive argument of their own devising, they did their utmost to get the government to commit this very usurpation; applauded every item of such usurpation when it was committed; and even while applauding it, openly declared it unconstitutional.

No greater effort to undermine constitutional government has ever been made in the United States than has thus been made by the people who have urged upon Congress and the government the enactment of Sunday laws and other acts of a religious character, without an amendment to the Constitution.

And now that the Christian Endeavorers have taken the lead in this campaign and are calling for a constitutional amendment establishing religion, it is but proper to call their attention to the crooked and self-stultifying course of those who have led in this thing before, and ask that they shall not disgrace themselves by following the same course.

To ask for an establishment of religion in the United States by the strictly legal course of an amendment to the Constitution is enough disgrace for any body. We really desire that the Christian Endeavorers may spare themselves the greater disgrace of demanding the governmental recognition of religion without such an amendment.

A. T. J.

The Sunday Saloon.

BY WM. C. GAGE.

THE opponents of Sunday laws are often classed with the friends of the saloon. A plausible excuse for this unfairness is found in the declaration that the abolition of Sunday laws would necessarily pave the way for the wide open Sunday saloon. While this is measurably true, it would inevitably have one good result. The iniquity of the liquor traffic could no longer be disguised under the flimsy veil of an outward respect for Sunday. The criminality of saloon-keeping lies not in the day when the traffic is carried on, but in the traffic itself; and the sooner the public conscience is educated on that point, the better it will be for the welfare of the people.

The absurdity of the legislation which is supposed to "regulate" the liquor traffic, is seen in the fact that it throws around it the sanction of the law six days in the week, and makes it a crime on the other day. While the closing of the saloon on the day when its patrons are more than usually idle may have some advantages, they are more than offset by the fact that it is a compromise with the crime itself, and a sedative to the public conscience, which ought to be kept constantly awake to the evils of the saloon business every day and all the time.

To those who charge us with friendliness to the saloon in opposing Sunday laws we have this reply: You are specially hostile to the saloon one seventh of the time, while we oppose it all the time.

The Effect of Sunday Laws.

THE underlying sentiment and germ of Sunday laws, is a settled wish to prevent irreligious people from desecrating what is supposed to be holy time, and so help them to be, at least, outwardly religious through the observance of a religious rest. It seems singular, however, that those engaging in this sort of thing do not, or say they do not, see in it what so many who are watching the movement say is in it,—the union of the church with the state. But from what standpoint does the state undertake to make and enforce Sunday laws? If it does so because Sunday observance is a church ordinance, is that not a union of the two forces? Again, if Sunday-keeping is regarded as a divine ordinance, and on this ground the state thinks to punish offenders, does it not in this step into the place of, and assume the prerogative of, Him who spoke the divine law, and who also said: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord"? Rom. 12:19.

But why should any government undertake to do this, when it would not think of punishing a subject who, while living within its boundaries, refused to bow to the mandates of another civil power, even though it be a contiguous one? Should the United States attempt to administer the penalty of a Canadian law upon an American citizen, or even upon a Canadian subject resident upon American soil, such a howl of indignation would be heard throughout the country as would call a halt upon such work. Such a protest would be entirely proper, too, on the ground that the nation had used unwarranted authority in coercing its citizens to obey the dictates of a foreign power, with which they were not in sympathy, and consequently did not care to follow.

The Sabbath is a divine institution, the requirement of a divine law, which emanated from, and is therefore the requirement of, an entirely distinct government from all earthly ones—even a heavenly. Whoever sympathizes with that government, and reveres its laws, will not need to be coerced into obedience of them, but will follow their directions from his love of them, and will be the better for such adherence. But if one does not wish to walk in the ways they point out, yet fully lives out the laws of civil citizenship, why should the civil government, under which he lives so justly, punish him for not also carrying out the laws of a moral government, which is entirely outside of civil jurisdiction?

To avoid the logical conclusions of these premises, the plea is usually entered that in attempting to enforce

Sunday laws no thought is entertained of assuming God's prerogatives, but that the state simply borrows a precept from God's law, and incorporates it, as a civil enactment, into its own code. Those who oppose this course reply that such a thing is impossible, because the moral law, as handed down from God, has in it that element of its Author's life which forbids its becoming a part of any civil code. The transgression of a moral precept is sin, because it is opposition to the righteousness of that which represents the life and will of its infinite and eternal Author. The violation of civil law is termed crime, simply because it is contrary to the expressed will of men, framed into law to meet exigencies of a temporal nature. In other words, God's law points out what sin always was, and always must be, without the least variation, because of its very nature of contrariness to God, while civil law defines crime to be that which is contrary to man's rights in society, as determined by the demands of the time and of human wisdom. The two may be identical, but not necessarily so, from the fact that crime is a purely outward act, while sin is of the heart, and may not appear to men. In other words, crime is an outward expression of sin which lurks in the mind. So, then, while crime, the outward act, may be detected and checked by civil law, the seat of crime—the heart itself—cannot be reached by civil jurisdiction.

The refusal of a person to rest from physical labor on a stated day cannot, however, properly come within the precincts of civil legislation, because while the act is an outward one, it does no visible injury to another, nor deprives him of any right he may have to honor the day. But in case God requires such rest, it would be sin to disobey on the ground alone that to do so would dishonor Him who asks it.

But when the civil power attempts to regulate the observance of a weekly rest-day, it becomes guilty of inconsistency, because that which it counts wrong in one person regarding the use to be made of the day, it upholds in another. For instance: one person will be permitted regularly to sell drugs, tobacco, and the like for profit, on the ground of their being necessary to daily use, while the sale of other things just as essential to comfort and happiness is strictly forbidden. Now, if it is no civil offense for one to sell certain things for profit on Sunday, how can the law, if it be alike just to all, punish others for selling other things on that day for the same purpose? Then, too, if morals are involved, what right has a civil law to make such discriminations?

If it be denied that morals are involved, but that these laws are simple police regulations, then on what basis is one prohibited from doing on one day that which he is freely permitted to do on all other days? If the law counts certain acts misdemeanors when done on one certain day of the week, why does it not count them the same when done on other days? The fact that this discrimination is made is evidence that the promoters of Sunday laws seek to punish for the desecration or non-observance of the day's rest, rather than for the infraction of any civil obligation.

Then, again, inconsistency is seen in such laws from the fact that they do not remain steadfast, like the Sabbath law of Jehovah, but vary in their requirements and penalties according to the times. This is well illustrated by the various revisions of the English law on this point.

In 1675, during the reign of Charles II, Parliament passed a law "for the better observation and keeping holy the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday." Section 2 of that law provided that "no drover, horse-courser, wagoner, butcher, or any of their servants shall travel, or come into his or their inn or lodging upon the Lord's day, or any part thereof, upon pain that each and every offender shall forfeit twenty shillings for every such offense, and that no person or persons shall use, employ, or travel upon the Lord's day with any boat, wherry, lighter, or barge, except it be upon extraordinary occasions, to be allowed by some of the peace of the city, borough, or town corporate, where the act shall be committed, upon pain that every person so offending, shall forfeit and lose the sum of five shillings for every such offense."

This was indeed a strange law,—just such, however, as might be expected from human legislators who attempt to transform a moral precept into a civil one. It will be noticed that those who traveled by land, such as drovers, etc., if applying for lodging at any public house on Sunday, were to be heavily fined, since that was evidence that they had been traveling on that day. But those who might travel all day by boat were let off with only a nominal fine. But further, if one of these tourists by water, in some way, could wheedle the magistrate into granting him a permit for the journey, then no offense was committed, and, in the eyes of the law, the sanctity of the day was preserved. Evidently, Sunday-breaking in those days was considered a sort of venial sin, the absolution of which might be purchased beforehand by magisterial indulgence.

Later Parliaments, however, modified this law by repealing that part which made it a misdemeanor to travel by boat on Sunday, without relieving the drover and others who must journey by land. This was presumably because the members of the Parliament, some of whom lived along the banks of the Thames, desired to use that day in visiting their families. At any rate, the law was changed to suit the demand of the times and the men who composed the law-making power of the nation.

In 1871, another Parliament enacted that "no prosecution, or other proceeding shall be instituted against any person or the property of any person for any offense committed by him under the Act of the 29th year of the reign of King Charles II, chapter seven, entitled an Act for the better observation of the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday," etc. This was just what ought to have been done by any such religious law, and would have been right, had the legislators stopped with its repeal. But Section 4 of the act itself said: "This Act shall continue in force until the first day of September, one thousand, eight hundred and seventy-two, and no longer."

This limitation of the act was proof of the folly of human legislation concerning religious duties. The suspended law stood on the premise of making men more careful in religious duties. Had it this power, by what right did the Parliament of 1871 annul it for a year? It may be said that the people did not then need the law to help them observe the sacredness of the day. Surely, then, why have it come in force again at the expiration of a year? Certain circumstances conspired to make it suitable to suspend the operation of the law for a year, showing that the law was never necessary to make men better, because that was not in the power of law, and is not now, nor ever can be. The only thing that Sunday laws can do, outside of harrassing those who do not care to observe them, is to show to what lengths the intolerance of men will lead them, in dealing with the consciences of others.

J. O. C.

NOT to agree with my opinion, is counted by Bigotry as the most heinous crime of which any person can be guilty.

Two "Rusty" Weapons.

"Present Truth" (London, Eng.), November 18.

HERE are two bits from the Methodist Times which suggest a lesson that may be read over and over again in the story of the struggle of religious factions for worldly power. The mayor of Lancaster was recently threatened with the penalties of an ancient religious law. Mr. Hugh Price Hughes thus commented on the affair:—

"Some Anglican bigot unearthed an ancient Act of Parliament by which any municipal officer was liable to a fine of £100 if he appeared in the robes and regalia of his office in any place of worship except the Established Church. . . . Mr. Kelly and Mr. Bunting have shown that the intolerant act has been repealed during the Queen's reign. Thus one more rusty weapon is taken out of the hands of intolerant schismatics."

Surely the writer of this vigorous comment is ready to cry "hands off!" whenever any one resorts to old religious laws as a means of promoting religious observances. But no; there are other old religious statutes still unrepealed, and Mr. Hughes sees in them a weapon which he thinks should not be allowed to get rusty. Of course people who want to keep Sunday keep it; but those who do not, Mr. Hughes would force to act as though they did. He says:—

"We do not suggest anything unreasonable. All we suggest is that the law should sternly prohibit anything and everything of the nature of trade or money-making on Sunday."

That is all. To such rusty old weapons men resort when they forsake the "sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

Persecutions the Work of a Few.

BY WILLIAM BIRNEY.

PERSECUTIONS for religion's sake are usually conducted by a small number of persons, while the masses of the people sympathize with the victims. The seeming exceptions are when, superadded to religious differences, there are hatreds, either racial or caused by war; or tyrannical feelings generated under despotic governments.

In England, for the two centuries before the death of Elizabeth, there were only 400 heretics burned at the stake; and 300 of these perished in the last three years of the reign of "bloody Mary" Tudor. During the same period the number of those burned in the Netherlands was about 75,000, and in Spain nearly as many. The greater slaughter under Spanish rule was due principally to the passions fomented by the long wars in Spain against the Moors, Moriscos, and Jews, and fostered by the despotic character of the royal government.

In Scotland, about 1684, James II began to persecute Protestants. He used "thumbkins" and "boots" for the torture of his victims. These instruments crushed the bones and marrow. James took delight in personally witnessing their operation and hearing the screams and entreaties of the sufferers. He was supported and lauded by a few clergymen, but he was abhorred by the people. They called him "monster." When he fled the country, he left few friends in the Scottish lowlands.

In New England, in the 17th century, the persecutions of the Baptists and Quakers, the scourgings, solitary confinements, ear clippings, tongue borings, and hangings, were favored by zealous preachers and by leading church members high in office; but public opinion was outraged and the rescues of victims became so numerous and popular opposition so pronounced that the persecutions were gradually abandoned.

What is true of religious persecutions in other times and lands is true of those now waged in the States of this Union under "Sunday laws." The people generally do not favor them. These laws, obtained mostly by the lobbying importunities of paid agents of clergy-led societies, cannot be enforced as other laws are. Nobody is injured by the violation of them and nobody will appear as prosecuting witness. If enforced at all, it must be by paid spies and informers, wretches who, in the large cities, earn a scant livelihood by making trouble for honest men, their neighbors. No decent citizen will engage in such work. If a church member should do it once through zeal in excess, the contempt of the community prevents him from repeating it. In rural districts, such laws are not often enforced; though they exist in all the States, it is believed that they have never been enforced in one third of the counties in any State. In some of the largest States they have not been enforced in more than from three to six counties. In some cases the sentences have not been executed; and in others the fines have been paid by sympathetic bystanders. In others again the oppression and distress have been fearful.

In the District of Columbia it is probable that nine tenths of the adult population are opposed to the pending Sunday bill. It will be advocated, however, by two or three clergymen and a paid agent of the Reform society. These gentlemen are anxious to get power to add to the chain-gang all persons who do not observe Sunday after the Puritan fashion.

Washington, D. C.

What Part Should a Minister of Christ Take in Politics?

BY LEWIS C. SHEAFE.

THE above was the subject before the city ministers' meeting at Lexington, Ky., a short time ago. The writer was present and noted a few of the many statements, which are very significant as straws that tell the way the wind is blowing. One speaker said, The White House needs in it a man who can and will supply all the needs of the people of this country; who will be interested in all their affairs, both temporal and spiritual; and, said he, who could do this better than a minister of the gospel? Another said that he that rules the church ought to govern the country; that the minister should go into politics to purify them, and give them dignity; that the trouble with the country to-day is that the ministers have had too little to do with politics, and that they should "come to the rescue at once."

Another said, If the ministers would take hold of the politics of this country more firmly, putting a stop to lawlessness, close all saloons and such places, stop the Sunday desecration, this would make the people attend church. "It is our duty," he said "to make people stop doing wrong, and teach them what is right in politics as well as in religion." "The minister that does not lead his people to the polls, and see that they vote right is not fit to lead them to the kingdom of God."

There were ten ministers present, representing several branches of Methodism, Disciple, and Baptist churches; only one Methodist protested against the general sentiment. Finally, the writer was asked to speak on the subject. He said in part: We are in a critical period of our country's history. Its friends will prove its foes; for they are getting control of the ship of state, and are heading her for the sand-bar of church and state. At the present rate we will strike before long. Brethren, you have ignored the fact that each of the many denominations would want to run the government on its own church plan, and there would be a worse muddle than we now have.

The writer spoke of the past history of church and state, its evils and cruelties, and of the present attitude of the papal power toward this government, and then called attention to the fact that the minister of Christ had a high calling, second to none, not even to that of president of these United States, for the minister is called and commissioned of God. His citizenship is in heaven, and his business is to preach the Word, nothing more, nothing less. He is called and separated unto the gospel of God. He must come out, be separate, touch not the unclean thing. You have all acknowledged that politics are very unclean; so, brethren, take your hands off.

Shall the ambassador of Christ leave his God-given work, step down from the highway of holiness, to dabble in the mud-hole of politics? Surely not, for he can find enough of the world, the flesh, and the devil in the ordinary walks of life, without going into politics.

Then, brethren, this making people Christian by the arm of the civil law is foreign to the gospel. God leaves every man free to choose. The essence of the gospel is freedom, which voluntarily submits to absolute truth,—freedom of affection, and freedom of the will. To each of us each day, the Lord says, "Choose ye this day, whom ye will serve." His service is perfect freedom, for "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty,"—that is, liberty for you and every other man.

Notes from the Philadelphia National Reform Convention.

[This convention met in Philadelphia, December 7-9, to discuss the so-called "Christian principles of civil government."

Among those prominent at the convention were Rev. Dr. John McNaugher, Rev. W. T. Chase, Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, of New York City, and Dr. David McAllister, editor of the Christian Statesman. There was much said that was full of interest and significance. This will be evident from a perusal of the following notes of the convention, taken for the SENTINEL by Mr. W. L. Winner:—]

Dr. McNaugher, who presided, in his opening address, began with defining the object of the National Reform Association as "standing for a governmental recognition of God as the source of all government, and Jesus Christ, God's Son, as the nation's Lord and King; the Bible as the ultimate rule of civil life and the supreme test of loyal citizenship."

He said, "As a nation we present the anomaly of standing before the world a Christian people, but with an unchristian Constitution. We seek to remove the anomalous position that has been fastened upon us, and proudly present to the world a constitution and government that is consistent in character with our people."

CLEVELAND'S THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION CITED.

"Our national life as a Christian people found its inception in the sturdy manhood and religious simplicity of the New England Puritans. It is made more impressive and sure by virtue of our organic usages and customs, which culminated a few years ago in that grand monument of national Christianity, the last Thanksgiving proclamation of President Cleveland."

He made reference to the charge of their opponents that this movement is but "a parchment reform," and declared that it was "infinitely more;" that it contemplated a "radical, tangible reform that has already entered, and will be fought out, upon the arena of free thought."

As to the charge that National Reform means union of church and state, he cited that the movement "is not championed by any one distinct denomination or religious class. There is, in our land, no dominant sect, and there can be no more systematic concert. This is a sufficient answer; union of church and state in this country is impossible."

He showed the need of reform—citing the social, industrial, and political conditions, and declaring that the existence of all these things gave "a sufficient reason for the most earnest efforts toward the enthronement of Christianity in civil life." "To this end we seek alliance with all organizations seeking the same end." "This is radical reform." "What must be done is an awakening of public sentiment far and wide."

HOW THEY WILL USE THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AND KINDRED SOCIETIES.

He referred to the Christian Endeavor and allied organizations as being "the hope and the instrument of this work." "Their numbers, enthusiasm, and influence, indicate a condition of manhood disciplined for its speedy advancement." The point that is rapidly assuming the first importance in their activity is "the assertion of Christianity in the political sphere."

This point was taken up by the Rev. Dr. Strong, who in his speech said:—

"We propose to use these societies to distribute reform literature to every one that can be reached and influenced. The leaders of these societies are in full sympathy with this plan, and I feel sure that the rank and file are just waiting to be set at this great work."

"The young people had been drilled and now appreciate the fact that they must go into the field and fight. General McClellan was fond of drilling his troops, but didn't want to fight them; he was too careful of them. He was very fond of them, and was spoken of as being like a father to his troops. This fatherly interest, together with the seeming disinclination to fight, caused some one to remark that McClellan was so good a father to his men that they were not likely to ever get a step father. But Father Endeavor Clark is not that way. He has his men well drilled and is ready and willing to fight them."

WHAT IT MEANS.

He stated that "if one in ten Endeavorers would distribute twelve leaflets once a month, it would mean six million in a year."

He referred to the coming of the kingdom of God by means of this reform effort, in a manner that was dramatic in the extreme, ending with the declaration, "I believe the new Jerusalem is now coming down from God out of heaven."

RADICAL REMARKS BY DR. MCALLISTER.

Dr. McAllister, in his address, made some radical remarks.

He said: "Romanism is expecting that this country will, in the great crisis that seems to be impending, break away from the secular idea in government and turn to them as the restorer of peace and tranquillity."

THE "INFALLIBLE" STATE.

"There are three faces to the subject of civil government; one is the secular idea, the other is the church idea, which is the Romanist idea of church infallibility applied to government; the third is the movement to embody Christian principles of righteousness in the organic law so that the state shall be the infallible interpreter of and the active agent in applying moral law."

THE GOSPEL IGNORED.

In all the speeches, not a single reference was made to the reformation of the individual or to the application of the gospel as the source and power of true reform. However, there was one feature that was most gratifying. A part of the evening was set apart for an "open parliament on Christian citizenship," in which it was expected that the presidents of each of the several young people's societies would indorse the proposed plan, etc., and thus officially commit their organizations to the ideas and principles advocated.

THE SCHEME REBUKED.

This was a most dampening failure, as but one of the four responded and his remarks could be construed only as a dignified rebuke to the purpose and spirit of the occasion.

Mr. Stoever, also president of the Luther League and an officer of the national organization, presented the purpose and scope of work espoused by the league in such a manner that it was an emphatic condemnation of the proposal to abandon the power of the Word for the power of the ballot.

Spain's Decay.

THE history of all the countries that shut out the light of the Reformation conveys a lesson that ought to be thought of more than it is in these days. The idea of enforced uniformity, and of the mingling of religion and politics is taking possession of professed Protestantism, and the spirit of the papacy is being drunk in by all nations, just as the Revelation predicted of the last times. A writer in the Evening Echo (London) the other day told the cause of Spain's decay in these words:—

"When Ferdinand and Isabella had made Spain politically one, put down the infamous power of the nobles, and, in a measure, enfranchised the burghers, they, under the inspiration of papal priests, determined to have equal unity in faith and worship. Then emerged that monster of all time, Torquemada, the chief of the Inquisition. And years afterward, arose the Jesuits, more subtle, more refined, and, possibly, more devout than Torquemada, but not one whit less cruel. Unity in faith came by the suppression of thought, and with unity not only intellectual degradation, but moral atrophy. The unity was almost perfect. Spain has had no Protestantism, no Nonconformity worthy of the name. The priests have both reigned and ruled. Spain is of their making, or rather unmaking, and standing amidst the mental decadence, the moral decay, the religious degradation of Spain, the priests might say, when asked to show the world the monument of their genius and skill, 'Look Around.'"

THE German emperor is quoted as having said recently that "only worthy Christians can fulfil the duty of Prussian soldiers." What a painful surprise the emperor would receive if his magnificent army should all at once become worthy Christians in truth, and instead of training themselves longer to slaughter their fellow men, train themselves in the "meekness and gentleness of Christ"! It is not probable that the emperor wants his soldiers to lay aside their carnal weapons for spiritual ones.

The remark, however, illustrates the governmental idea as regards who are worthy Christians; that is, they are those who can be depended on to fight the hardest to enforce the government's will.

A "Liberal" Church Dilemma.

THE Christian Register (Unitarian) makes the following comment upon the awkward position in which many church members of this day find themselves, through the endeavors of the churches to be "liberal," and still retain their creeds:—

"The difficulty with the position of liberal members of creed-bound churches is revealed in the statement that they may be received into fellowship, 'provided they have no pronounced or active dissent from certain doctrines regarded as important, although they doubt or even disbelieve them.' This amounts to saying that they may have doubts or denials, but that they must not express them. But, if the doctrines are really important, as the church asserts, the denial of them must be important, too. If, for example, one dissents from the doctrine of an endless hell, because, to his mind, it discredits faith in the eternal goodness of God, his dissent ought to take some pronounced and active form. The position of those who formally acquiesce in a creed which antagonizes their personal convictions reminds us of a little girl who showed a friend a work of art recently acquired and much admired by the family. After standing before it for a moment, in an attitude of rapt admiration, she said, 'This is very beautiful; but I don't think so!'"

The only way out of the dilemma is to do away with the creed. All that ought to be required of any body as a condition of church membership is that he believes the truth. And the truth is the Word of God.

As one reads the newspapers and magazines these days, there are two general impressions which make themselves felt upon his mind. One is, that the condition of affairs in this world, as regards government and the relations of the people with each other, is very unsatisfactory. It has been very bad for a long time, and seems to be getting worse rather than better.

* * *

PEOPLE find a great deal of fault with the government. It fails to promote those ends of human welfare which it is supposed that governments are intended to serve, and people are beginning to distrust it and to look to other means for reaching what they conceive to be the demands of justice. It is quite fashionable now to lynch some kinds of real or supposed criminals instead of seeking to have them dealt with by the law. This is only one symptom of the general state of things. There are many others which find expression in different ways, but all indicative of the same general feeling that the affairs of government have been mostly turned out of the course of justice, and into the channel of subserviency to narrow and selfish ends.

* * *

AT the bottom of this is a general feeling of natural distrust on the part of the people. As was said recently by a speaker who has carefully noted the situation, "The Republican party has no confidence in the Democratic, nor the Democratic in the Republican; the East distrusts the West and the West the East; the employer has no faith in the conscience of the employé, nor does the employé trust the employer. We find these various lines of cleavage running all through society—everywhere this lack of confidence." This being so, it is not strange that newspaper and magazine literature should be largely devoted to showing how things are not as they ought to be, and how one class of individuals are knaves and another class fools for allowing them to be as they are.

* * *

AT the same time—and this is the other impression that one gets—there are an abundance of infallible remedies for all these evils. Almost every writer has one for the evils of which he speaks, and its virtue is so plain that, in his opinion, only bigotry or prejudice can prevent any individual from seeing it. So almost everybody is hopeful that, while things are in a very bad state just now, they will be all right very shortly, as soon as the people can get to work and supply the remedy. It is human nature to be hopeful, and it is well that is so; yet it is not well to build hopes upon a false foundation. Almost everybody hopes and intends to do better and be better in the near future than he has done and been in the past, basing this hope and intention on the feeling that he could do better if he only would; and so of the people in general; they likewise—so it is felt—could do better if they only would; and the would-be reformer has hopeful visions of a day just at hand when the people will rise up and do these better things, and relegate the evils which prevail in society and government into an eternal oblivion. And in some such way as this—so some of them think—will be ushered in the millennium.

* * *

BUT the truth is that the situation demands a remedy which is really beyond the power of the people themselves to supply. Just as with the individual who is always "going" to do better, so with the nation, which is made up of individuals, there is necessary a higher power and wisdom than resides in humanity to produce the better reality which is in prospect. And the trouble is that instead of looking to this higher source, men are looking only to themselves, trying to get out of themselves something which will lift them above themselves, up to the plane of moral perfection. But the plane of self, and of all that is in self, is right where they are now; and to try to get any power out of self to elevate themselves above this, is but to try to lift one's self by one's self. Everybody learns in childhood that this cannot be done, as regards the body. But very many seem never able to learn the parallel truth as regards the soul.

* * *

WHOEVER would lift himself higher than he is, must take hold of something above him, and not hold of the straps of his boots. And as it must be with one individual, so must it be with the whole people.

* * *

THE great "Christian" Powers of Europe who have for years been in the partitioning business with respect to such territory as they did not already possess, and independently of the consent of the inhabitants, have now come in sight of a very fat prize of this nature, and their hands are fairly itching to get hold of it. And this prize is nothing else than the great empire of China. All signs point to the conclusion that this venerable empire, which can claim a greater antiquity than any other empire on the globe, will in the natural course of events soon become a thing of history only; that it is about to fall a victim to the insatiable lust for wealth which is the characteristic spirit of the age.

* * *

THE justification for this proceeding on the part of the Powers—as they view it—has been involuntarily furnished by China herself. This is to say, she has demonstrated her weakness. This she did in the late war with Japan. In this war, some of her territory, part of her fleet, and some thousands of her soldiers, fell before the arms of the Japanese; but all this was as nothing in comparison with the real loss resulting from hostilities with Japan, which was that of her protection against the encroachments of the Powers of Europe. It had been supposed that China, with her immense population, needed only to be once thoroughly roused into action under the leadership of men of military skill, to become one of the most formidable military powers in the world. It is now demonstrated that this supposition was entirely incorrect: that China's swarming myriads are not a source of real strength to the empire; that the latter is wanting in cohesion; and that, in fact, there is little or nothing more to hinder the carving up of the empire by enterprising outside parties than there was to restrain the like enterprise in the territory of Africa.

* * *

THAT the thing is easy to be done, is, as we have stated, full justification for the act of doing it, in the view of the "Christian" Powers. We know this is so because their actions have conclusively shown it. In the ethics of European statesmanship, might and right are synonymous terms. When the partitioning of Africa was in full progress, a few years ago, the mere exploration of any territory, no matter how thickly populated with human beings possessing all the natural rights of mankind, was deemed to confer a perfectly valid title of ownership upon the explorers, and the government of which they were subjects; so that, as one facetious writer expressed it, the would-be "discoverer" of any new region had first to promise that he would give it back, before the Powers would allow him to do so. Africa is already partitioned among these Powers, and now it is China's turn, unless all signs are misleading. The only thing that hinders is the well-understood fact that each of the "Christian" Powers who have become the self-appointed administrators of the Celestial estate, wants the biggest and best slice of the same for itself.

* * *

"An ordinance in Cleveland," says the Jewish Messenger, "permits a Hebrew who observes the Sabbath to keep his billiard saloon open on Sunday, but fines non-Hebrews who may play billiards therein."

The law allows the Hebrew this liberty because he religiously observes the seventh day of the week. It exempts him upon religious grounds; and any one, by becoming religious in this way, can secure the exemption. Therefore it is on religious grounds that its exemption is secured and its penalty inflicted; for the exemption is denied to people because they are not observers of the seventh day. And yet it is claimed that the law is not religious, but purely secular!

The Ten Horns, and the Horn with the Eyes of a Man.

"WELL, Charlie, I see you are getting in a hurry to begin. What did the fourth beast represent?"

"The worst government that ever was—Rome."

"What decree went forth from Caesar Augustus at the birth of Christ?"

"That all the world should be taxed."

"Then it is clear that all the world was under Roman rule,—that there was but one kingdom on the face of the earth."

"Yes, mama."

"Now turn to Matthew 24, and tell me what question the disciples asked about the end of the world?"

"When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

"Jesus gave them a sketch of what would happen to the end of the world. But in the seventh verse he tells of a time when Rome would no longer be the only kingdom. Please read it."

"For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes."

"You can see from this that Jesus knew Rome would not always stand as the ruler of the world; but would be divided into many kingdoms. How many horns were there on the head of the terrible beast that symbolized Rome?"

"Ten," said Charlie.

"Now you may read what the prophet said about these horns in the 24th verse of the seventh chapter of Daniel."

"And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise."

"That will do for the present. Can you tell when Rome was broken up into various kingdoms?"

"It was between the years 356 and 483 after Christ. At least that is what the history you gave me to read, said."

"Into how many kingdoms was it divided?"

"Ten exactly."

"Now, Charlie, I am almost overwhelmed sometimes in reading these wonderful prophecies. The book of Daniel fills me with awe and reverence. I feel something as I felt once when looking through a telescope at the stars. We, Charlie, are thinking God's thoughts after him, and it is clear that God knows the end from the beginning. Let us see how many hundreds of years have been spanned by these wonderful statements."

"Why, it is more than a thousand years," said Charlie, as he figured it up.

"Now, Charlie, suppose that some man had undertaken to predict for a thousand years, unaided by divine wisdom, do you think he would have been able to foretell how many kingdoms would rise and fall, and that the first would be lion-like, the second bear-like, consisting of two nations, the higher to come up last, that the third would be like a leopard, and be divided into four kingdoms, and that the last would be great and terrible, and would be divided into ten kingdoms?"

"No," said Charlie. "God must have inspired Daniel to write these things. If a man alone had written it, it would have petered out long ago; but instead of that it keeps getting deeper and better all the time."

"Did you learn the names of the ten kingdoms, and can you tell me how they came into existence?"

"Why, mama, the wild tribes from the North swept down upon Rome, and as Rome was weak with luxury and corruption, she could not stand. The names of the ten kingdoms were the Huns, the Ostrogoths, Suevi, Heruli, Anglo-Saxons, Lombards, Burgundians, Vandals, Franks, and Visigoths."

"Do you recognize among these names any that sound like some of the names of the nations of to-day?"

"Yes, mama. The Franks and the Anglo-Saxons, or France and England. I cannot trace out the rest; but the kingdoms of Europe occupy the territory of these ancient nations."

"Now, Charlie, when did the last division appear?"

"In 483 A. D."

"Please read now what the prophet saw coming up among the ten horns."

Charlie read the 8th verse: "I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things."

"Now, just when was this horn with eyes to come up? Let us get him located."

"Why, after the ten horns came up."

"To prove that, we'll read the 24th verse."

"And the ten horns . . . are ten kings that shall arise, and another shall arise after them, and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings."

"Then you see clearly that we must look for this power or horn on this side of 483 A. D."

"Yes, mama."

"There was a power arose that was different from the others, and in token of the subjugation of three kings he wears the tiara, which means three crowns. He has a very far seeing, shrewd outlook over the world, and a mouth that speaks great things."

"O, mama, I know who it is. It is the pope. Just wait a moment till I show you a picture I have in my Reader. I cut it out of a colored print. See, there's the tiara on the pope's head. It has a crown round the bottom, and a crown round the center, and one on the top. But say, mama, how does the pope feel to see himself pictured in the Bible?"

"I do not know, dear, that he knows he is pictured there."

"Well, I should think he might find it out. If I was a Catholic, I think I would know what that meant."

"Maybe not; for Catholics are not taught to read the Bible for themselves. However, dear, I feel that we Protestants have very little to pride ourselves on in the matter of Bible knowledge. For a long time we have been ignorant of truths that are even more apparent than that this applies to the pope."

"Well, mama, do tell me how the pope arose. Pat Flannagan says that Christ made Peter the first pope, and gave him the keys to the kingdom of heaven; and that he handed the keys to the next pope, and so on down; and that they are now in the Vatican at Rome, and that no one but Catholics will be saved."

"Well, Charlie, let us see just how the pope came to exist. The Apostle Paul said that after his death grievous wolves would enter in, not sparing the flock; and that men would 'arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after themselves.' The first intimation of a pope is found in these words that show his origin to be in self. Men would rise who would draw away disciples from Christ to themselves. Paul knew that the pope was to rise before Christ should come, and told the people that 'the man of sin' would appear and 'sit in the temple of God, showing himself to be God.' This was Paul's prophecy. In looking all over the world we find no one but the pope who claims to be God on earth."

"Going back to history we find that the early disciples in the second century lost their first love, and when the love of Christ goes out, the love of self comes in, and self-love leads to self-exaltation. When you read church history you will find that Christianity began to be popular in Constantine's time. It had the aid of the state; for church and state were united. The bishops of the church were put into high positions, were wealthy and great, and very unlike the meek and lowly Saviour. But although they called their religion Christianity, it was indeed only paganism under a new cloak. They brought into the church pagan ideas and institutions, and among the rest the day of the sun. Constantine made the first Sunday law in 321 A. D. We will speak of this again. The bishops and dignitaries of the church grew very proud, and in the time of Justinian a quarrel arose among the bishops as to which should be the greatest. This quarrel was taken to Justinian, who decreed that the bishop of the church of Rome should be supreme. Three of the ten kingdoms rebelled against the decree, and they had a civil war. These kings were subdued by the army, just as we read in the prophecy that they would be, and the bishop of the church of Rome took the tiara in 538 A. D. That is the history in brief of the rise of the papacy.

"Pat Flannagan has doubtless been taught to believe that Peter was the first pope; but this is wrong. Nothing is said in the Word of God about his wearing the tiara or sitting in splendor. Even tradition says that in shame of his denial of Christ, when he was doomed to die on the cross, he requested that it should be head downward, as he thought it too great an honor to die as did his Lord.

"But, dear, in bringing out these truths of history, let us remember that we are only dealing with principles and not with people. The pope and the Catholic people are doubtless sincere, and God only, whose mercy is deeper than the measure of man's mind, must deal with both of us. If we fail to live up to our light, we shall be more guilty."

F. B.

Studies in French History.—2.

"WELL, Charlie, my boy, how did you like your lesson in French history, yesterday? Did you learn anything, or get any facts you could bring home with you?"

"Learn anything! I guess I did; I just knew these lectures would pay a fellow to listen to, and I can tell you they do."

"Did you make any notes? I hope you did; for they may be of great value to you sometime."

"O yes; I made a few, but I got so interested that I didn't get as many as I wish I had. The thing that impressed me most was the awful cruelty of the ancient Romans to their captives. Professor said it was the same in all ages of the world; the stronger are apt to oppress the weaker."

"True; but that is not Christ's way," said Mrs. White.

The next Wednesday afternoon found a goodly representation of sunny-faced girls and boys gathered in the classroom promptly at the hour.

"Can you tell me where the previous lesson ended? Hands up. Edna Phillips may answer."

"At the conquering of Gaul by Julius Cæsar," said Edna, whose memory was her strong point.

"Right. This was hundreds of years from the time described in the beginning of the lesson. And so we find that the more modern inhabitants of Gaul do not at all resemble the more ancient ones. They had learned to dress themselves in bright and gay colors, and to wear very much jewelry. But there is as much difference between the Frenchman of to day and the Gaul as he looked in the time of Julius Cæsar, as there was between the ancient and the more modern Gaul. These latter were tall and had broad shoulders, blue eyes, and fair, long, flowing beards, which sometimes were considerably in the way of the vain owners, especially in times of battle. The Gauls had a pretty correct idea of the best way of keeping in fighting order; for when any soldier became very fat, some form of punishment was given him.

"The wives of these people were very warlike, like their husbands, and it is said of them that they 'gnashed their teeth and brandished their arms like a windmill, when opposed to the enemy.' I see some of the girls smile at this description of the ladies of Gaul, as it is so far different from the Christian idea of what constitutes a true woman. But these Gauls, after being conquered by the Romans, adopted the more civilized mode of life of their conquerors. But this did not prevent them from sometimes burying or burning their horses, dogs, or even slaves, with their dead owners.

"But they had one redeeming feature at least; for they were really far in advance of most barbarians in the respect which they gave to their wives, and history tells us that these women repaid them in love and devotion.

"Rome was mistress now for the next 500 years, and as she was ever given to luxury and riotous living, so the inhabitants of her conquered territory soon learned to follow her example. The wealthier Gauls became more extravagant in their mode of living than even the Romans. They did not know the meaning of the word 'prudent.' The costly palaces and magnificent dwellings all bore witness to this fact. But where, alas! did the money for all these extravagances come from? I think you can all guess."

"I presume it came from the working classes," said Jack Smith, raising his hand.

"Yes; and they protested and cried and groaned, but it did no good. No one could get from under the cruel power of Rome."

"Couldn't they run away to some other country?" asked Charlie White, excitedly.

"Indeed they could not, or if they did, Rome, the proud mistress of land and sea, would run after them and bring them back to their cruel labor. An old Latin writer," continued Professor Carman, "in speaking of Roman taxation, says:—

"The lands were measured out, to the last clod; trees and vines were counted; every head of cattle was entered on the tax list; every human being was registered; nothing was heard but whips and cries of torment. . . . No excuse was admitted on the score of age or sickness; meanwhile the animals were diminished, the men were dying off, and still the tax was exacted for the dead."

"Gaul plays a very important part in Roman history during the first century after Christ. Augustus and Claudius lived in Lyons, or Lugdunum, and Caligula, one of the most cruel of Rome's tyrants, made Gaul the theater of many of his fiendish and 'mad freaks.' Claudius was the mildest emperor of his age, but was very harsh and severe with the Druids, whom he drove out of the country. Until this time, the religion of Gaul, or Druidism (some of the rites of which required human sacrifices), and the religion of Rome—paganism—lived and grew side by side. But after the Druid priests had been driven away by the emperor, this religion gradually gave place to the gods of Rome, till Christianity found a foothold.

"During the reign of Vespasian, there was a man named Civilis, who determined that Gaul should be free; so he raised an army and proclaimed a man named Sabinus, emperor. But the rebellion was quelled, and though Sabinus and his faithful wife concealed themselves for nine years in a cave, they were found and beheaded by the cruel emperor. Although he was pronounced the most merciful of any who had preceded him, he did not heed the first principle of love laid down by Him who had said: 'Love your enemies, do good to them which persecute you, and pray for them which despitefully use you?'"

"How long was it before the religion of Christ was taught in Gaul? I would like to make a note of it," asked Rob Billings, who seemed to be making good use of his pencil and note-book.

"It was about 160 years after Christ. Some Christians from Asia Minor, heeding their Master's command to go into all the world, settled in the place which is now called Lyons. But a bitter persecution was soon started, —you see that the spirit of religious persecution is as old as Satan himself. The more the emperor wanted to please his gods, the more he felt it to be his duty to punish those who differed from him in their religious convictions. So they were tortured in every way that cruel men could invent; and all this under the foolish notion that they were pleasing the gods."

"How long did this persecution last?" asked Edna Phillips, with a little quaver in her voice, for she was a tender-hearted girl and could never endure to see any of God's creatures suffer.

"For about 150 years, off and on," answered Professor Carman, "and then, about the beginning of the fourth century, Constantine declared himself a Christian."

"When you and Robert go to Paris, Charlie," said the professor, who knew of their promised visit, you will see a hill just outside the city, called 'Montmartre,' or 'Mountain of Martyrs.'"

"We will look for it," said Charlie, writing busily in his note-book.

"We will soon begin to introduce dates, which will help us better to keep in mind the events. But we have taken such rapid strides in these first lessons that we have not found it practicable. But you can remember that we have taken you now, from the first settlement of Marseilles about 600 years before Christ, to the professed conversion of Constantine, about the beginning of the fourth century."

"Now I will ask, How many wish to continue these studies?"

"All of us!" shouted a dozen voices at once.

"Well, then, I shall expect you all to be present next Wednesday afternoon, when we will hear something about the Franks."

Then the children hurried home to display their note-books to their parents, and to declare that they thought Professor Carman's talks were going to be a great help to them.

MRS. L. D. AVERY-STUTTLE.

A Sermon for Children.

"Good morning, children. I am glad to see so many happy faces before me. This is your meeting, and I will therefore expect you to do a good deal of the talking. Now, in the first place, I ask you what it is to be a Christian?"

"It is to be like Jesus."

"It is to keep the commandments."

"It is to be good."

"It is to be like Christ."

"Very well. Now what do you think would be a good text of the Bible to start with?"

"We shall be like him." 1 John 3:2.

"As he is, so are we in this world." 1 John 4:17.

"He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked." 1 John 2:6.

"Very good. You must have studied your Bibles a good deal to have such ready answers."

"We attend Sabbath-school, sir."

"That's right. Now tell me, if a boy is greedy, and selfish, what do you say of him?"

"He is piggish."

"He is hoggish."

"Can a pig or hog be a Christian?"

"No, sir."

"If any person acts like a pig or hog, is he a Christian?"

"No, sir."

"I should say not."

"Suppose I write on a slip of paper, 'This is a Christian,' and tie it on the pig, would that make a Christian of him?"

"No, sir."

"Suppose I paste the paper on a piggish boy, would it make a Christian of him?"

"No, sir. He would be just as piggish as he was before."

"Very well. Now, if most of the people who live in this city or country, were greedy, and selfish, and filthy in their habits, what animal would you draw on your slates to show what kind of people they were?"

"A pig."

"A hog."

"That's right. Now, God represents nations by beasts. Do you know of any such spoken of in the Bible?"

"Yes, sir. In the book of Daniel Babylon is called 'like a lion,' and Medo-Persia 'like a bear.'"

"What is the difference between a lion and a bear?"

"One thing is, a lion holds his head up, and looks bold; but a bear holds his head down, and looks sneaky and savage."

"That will do. Now, can either a lion, or a bear, be a Christian?"

"No, sir. No more'n the pig could."

"If the nation represented by the lion, or the bear, had declared by law or decree, that it was a Christian nation, would it have made itself a Christian nation?"

"No, sir; it would have told a lie."

"Now can you think of another nation that is represented in the Bible by a beast?"

"Yes, sir. The two-horned beast is like the United States."

"Well, here is a picture of a two-horned beast. How do you like his looks?"

"He looks cross."

"He looks some like a tiger."

"He has got a mane like a lion."

"He's got two little horns; I should n't think he could hook very well with them."

"Can such a beast be a Christian?"

"No, sir!"

"Can the people who make up this nation, and are as bad tempered as such a beast, be a Christian nation?"

"No, sir; but there are some good Christians among them."

"Yes; but they belong to the kingdom of heaven. There are, also, a good many others not claiming to be Christians, who are excellent people, and who would like to better the management of the government, but cannot. God represents the nation by the spirit that actually rules it. Now, if I should write on a slip of paper, as I did for the pig, 'This is a Christian,' would that make him a Christian any more than it did the pig?"

"No, sir."

"Well, on the 29th of February, 1892, the Supreme Court of the United States declared this to be 'a Christian nation.' Did that decision make it a Christian nation?"

"No, sir. It was like the two-horned beast just the same as before."

"True. In the Bible God does not change the symbol or beast representing this nation to the end of time; only he is once or twice called the 'false prophet,' because he said he was a Christian when he wasn't one at all."

A. SMITH.

Mrs. V. F. Cox, in the December issue of The Defender, makes the truthful observation that the training of children to proper Sabbath observance cannot be accomplished "by the methods employed by the stern old man who tied his boy to the bedpost on the Sabbath so he should n't play marbles, and made him learn the hymn, Thine earthly Sabbaths, Lord, we love."

Give Full Directions.

In making remittances, please be sure to give post-office and State where the paper is to be sent.

D. S. Abbott, without address, sends us the subscription price of one year. We cannot give credit until we know where he is receiving the paper.

The Last Call.

PLEASE notice that our present offer to send our Premium Bible, advertised on last page, and the AMERICAN SENTINEL, one year, for $3.50, expires with the present month. All orders dated not later than Friday, December 31, 1897, will be filled at that price, but after that date the price will be $3.75. The Bible is a good one, as all who have seen it can testify, and is really worth alone all that is asked for it and the SENTINEL. Send money by postal order or express money order or by bank draft on New York, made payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., 39 Bond St., New York.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamps in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

Set for the defense of liberty of conscience, and therefore uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of Church and State, either in name or in principle.

ORGAN OF THE

International Religious Liberty Association.

Published Weekly by Pacific Press Publishing Co.

Single Copy,	Per Year,	-	-	-	-	$1.00.
"	"	Six months,	-	-	-	.50
"	"	Three "	-	-	-	.25

ADDRESS,

AMERICAN SENTINEL,

39 Bond Street, New York.

College View Sanitarium Bakery,

College View, Neb.

The prepared foods from this establishment have from the first taken rank with the

VERY BEST MADE ANYWHERE,

And any one who uses them once is ever afterward a patron. They are all prepared from the choicest selected grains, and the greatest care is exercised in securing the proper scientific combination of all the ingredients entering into their composition. Among the leading foods are the following:—

Granola. Made from the best portions of wheat, oats, and corn, cooked ready for use—excellent for infants, invalids, and travelers.

Crackers. Graham, Oatmeal, and Fruit. Delicious, toothsome easily digested. None better.

Wafers. Whole wheat, gluten, rye, oatmeal, and carbon. Just what dyspeptics and those with weak digestive organs are looking for.

Pure Wheat Gluten. The nitrogenous part of wheat, especially recommended for those in a debilitated condition.

Zweibach (or toast). Specially prepared and will keep like crackers.

Cereal Coffee. A charming substitute for tea and coffee. Delicious and strictly healthful.

Agents for the Sanitarium Health Food Co., and the Sanitas Food Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Sample package of foods 25 cents.

Send for catalogue.

NUT BUTTER MILLS.

Something new. Designed especially for converting nuts into butter for table and culinary purposes. Valuable recipes for the use of nuts. Shelled and unshelled nuts of all kinds at reasonable prices. Send for descriptive circular and price list.

JOSEPH LAMBERT,
Battle Creek, Mich.

THE WHIRL of the CYCLONE CONTINUES.

The people are looking for a perfect washing machine. It is found only in the Cyclone, and it is so easy to demonstrate the fact to intending purchasers that agents for it are reaping a rich harvest. Write for terms and territory to Coon Bros., 18-20 Hanover St., Battle Creek, Mich.

His Glorious Appearing.

An Exposition of Matthew 24.

REVISED, ENLARGED, AND ILLUSTRATED.

Contains ninety-six pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. The work takes up Christ's great prophecy of his own second coming, and the signs of the times are clearly pointed out in relation to that greatest of all events.

JUST THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES.

Interesting, Timely, and Instructive.

Price, attractive board cover, .25

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

The Gospel Primer.

A Book for the Children.

Contains 160 pages of matter, which will interest the old as well as the young. There are thirty-three full-page illustrations, which, in themselves, teach many gospel truths.

PRICE - - - .25

Address this Office.

MY LITTLE GIRL wants pictures to look at and stories to read, and she will be happy and contented. Children are very impressionable, and therefore it is vastly important their reading should be carefully selected. Our Little Ones and the Nursery, now in its 33d year, is

THE BEST people of 5 to 10 years old. Every story and poem is written to suit the intelligence of the youngest readers (though the older children enjoy it, too), and everything objectionable, either in matter or expression, is carefully excluded. Tales of wonderful 15 STORIES animals and plants, stories AND JINGLES, teaching TRUTH, HONESTY, 30 PICTURES GRATITUDE, OBEDIENCE, EVERY MONTH CHARITY, KINDNESS, make this delightful little magazine almost AN EDUCATION IN ITSELF. The pictures are by best living artists, and thoroughly American in dress and action, inculcating a taste for all that is best in art.

ONE DOLLAR for YOUR child for TEACH a whole year, if you A CHILD BUYS send it TO-DAY TO OBSERVE HAPPINESS to the publisher FOR ITSELF, with his or her name and address. Nothing delights a child more than to receive a magazine regularly, just like the grown folks. Surely a dollar could not be spent more to your satisfaction than in bringing happiness for a year to your little one. THE BEST CHRISTMAS OR NEW YEAR'S GIFT. Subscribe NOW, mentioning the AMERICAN SENTINEL and receive FREE the December number and 8 beautiful French dolls (paper) superbly dressed in the latest wardrobes. A dollar enclosed in a letter almost always reaches the publisher safely, if plainly addressed.

LAWRENCE ELKUS,
196 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

Steps to Christ.

In twelve chapters are presented in a simple and beautiful manner the steps by which a sinner may be made complete in Christ. It contains a wealth of counsel and encouragement for those who are laboring with the difficulties that beset a growing experience.

Price (Fleming Revell edition) - - - .75

"I am surprised,"

Says PROF. E. A. SHELDON, President of the State Normal School, Oswego, N.Y. "that so much that is valuable for one to know is brought into so small a compass and sold at so small a price."

THE NEW
Webster Dictionary
AND
Complete Vest-Pocket
Pocket Library

is full of happy surprises. It successfully combines a Dictionary of 45,000 words; a complete Parliamentary Manual; Literary Guide, etc. Positively the only pocket dictionary giving the full pronunciation of words.

Over 300,000 copies sold.

"I shall give this book a place in my vest pocket, a place

that no other book thus far has had."—C. C. Gaines, Pres. of Eastman Business College.

192 Pages, 5% x 2% in., Weight, 2 ounces.

Should be owned by every Student, Business Man, and Person of Intelligence.

Cloth, 25 cents; Morocco, 50 cents; Extra Quality with Three Years' Calendar, Perpetual Memorandum, and Safety Postage-Stamp Holder, 60 cents.

Address all orders to

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

(SECOND EDITION.)

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Price, - - - $1.00

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,
39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.
Kansas City, Mo. Oakland, Cal.

The American Sentinel for 1898.

THE AMERICAN SENTINEL is in the field to be that which its name implies,—a sentinel, to give warning against the foes which threaten the sacred rights and liberties of the people.

As such, there is every evidence that it has a most important field of usefulness before it in the year 1898. The dangers against which it would warn the people are not imaginary, but are dangers which have already appeared in tangible form; dangers which have been met and fought in the halls of Congress, in the courts, and before the legislatures of the States.

A zealous but misguided element of the people are bent upon substituting false and despotic principles of government for those upon which this government was established by the wise and liberty-loving statesmen who gave it birth. Within recent years there have been some sharp conflicts fought for the preservation of these principles in American government, and success has, in a measure, attended the efforts of the SENTINEL and the men who have stood as champions of the liberties of the people.

But the crisis is yet to come. And now, the forces whose aim has been the subversion of the principles of free government, have returned to the attack, reinforced by associations which have suddenly sprung up within the church, numbering millions of members. This very month petitions are pouring in upon Congress, calling for a recognition of God in the national Constitution and for a Sunday law for the District of Columbia.

Stirring times are before us; and now, as never before, it is necessary that the AMERICAN SENTINEL should lift up its voice like a trumpet and sound an alarm throughout the length and breadth of the land. The enemy have inaugurated a campaign of education by means of National Reform literature, which they purpose to have scattered everywhere by the Christian Endeavor and kindred societies, calling for the enforcement of Sunday laws and other religious legislation by Congress and by the States. Upon this line the battle for civil and religious liberty must now be fought. Now, as never before, literature bearing the truth upon this great subject must be set before the people.

It is our aim to make the SENTINEL for 1898 a most effective agent for this work. A varied corps of contributors has been secured, which includes those of long experience as writers and speakers upon these themes. No pains will be spared to fill the paper with live matter, and keep it in touch with the latest developments of the times.

The SENTINEL will be illustrated with original drawings, made expressly for its use. We feel sure this will be a feature that will be appreciated by all.

A new head will appear on the first issue for the new year, which we think will be pleasing to our readers generally.

Altogether, the aim of the publishers will be to make the SENTINEL for 1898 just what it ought to be to meet the emergency that has come upon the country. The SENTINEL offers every person a chance to work, and now is the time to do it.

OUR NEW PREMIUM BIBLE

By special arrangement with the manufacturers of our

SELF-PRONOUNCING S. S. TEACHERS' COMBINATION BIBLE

We are able to give our patrons a benefit.

Premium Bible Open.

Regular price of
Bible $8.00,
with Sentinel,
1 Year, $3.50.

Premium Bible Closed.

This Bible is bound in Tampico Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Leather Lined to Edge, Round Corners, Red under Gold Edges, Silk Headband, Silk Marker. It has large, clear type (see specimen), sixty-four illustrations, fifteen splendid Clear Maps, Concordance, Subject Index, Vocabulary of proper names and foreign words with their meaning, etc.

But the most unique and important feature of this Bible is the "Combination." This consists in the blending of both old and new versions in one volume without increasing the size. The "Combination" is prized highly by those using it. The book is 1½x6x8¼ inches, and weighs 2 pounds, 14 ounces, and is listed at $8.00. Our offer, which we consider UNPRECEDENTED, is this:—

THIS FINE BIBLE, POSTPAID, AND THE "AMERICAN SENTINEL," ONE YEAR, ONLY $3.50!

The Bible may be sent to one address, the "SENTINEL" to another. This offer is extended to all, old as well as new subscribers. To any one sending eight new subscriptions, with $8.00, we will present a copy of this Bible as a gift.

For 25 cents extra we will mark on the Bible in gold letters any name desired.

SPECIMEN OF TYPE USED.

They that sealed the covenant.

NEHEMIAH, X.

The points of the covenant.

they have ^{rv} dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And ^{rv} because of all this we ^g make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, ^{rv} Lē'vites, and ^{rv} priests, ^{2h} seal unto it.

CHAPTER X.

¹ The names of them that sealed the covenant. ²⁹ The points of the covenant.

NOW ³ those that sealed were, ^a Nē-hē-mī'ah, ⁴ the Tīr'shā-thā, ^b the son of Hāch-a-hī'ah, and Zīd-kī'jah,

² ^c Sēr-a-ī'ah, Āz-a-rī'ah, Jēr-e-mī'ah,

³ Pāsh'ūr, Ām-a-rī'ah, Māl-chī'jah,

⁴ Hāt'tūsh, Shēb-a-nī'ah, Māl'luch,

⁵ Hā'rim, Mēr'e-mōth, O-bā-dī'ah,

⁶ Dān'jēl, Gīn'nē-thon, Bā'ruch,

⁷ Mē-shūl'lām, Ā-bī'jah, Mīj'a-mīn,

B. C. 445.

^f Deut. 23.

^{48.}

^g 2 Kin. 23. 3.

² Chr. 29.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

^{10;} 34. 31.

all they that had separated themselves from the ^{rv} people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one ^{rv} having knowledge, and ^{rv} having understanding;

²⁹ They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^g and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^h to walk in God's law, which was given ⁵ by Mō'seg the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our LORD, and his judgments and his statutes;

³⁰ And that we would not give ⁱ our daughters unto the ^{rv} people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

³¹ ^k And ^l if the ^{rv} people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, ^m that we would not

This Bible makes a most

ACCEPTABLE HOLIDAY . . .

—OR—

. . . BIRTHDAY GIFT

to a husband, to a wife, to a child, to a parent, to a more distant relative, to anyone. It is a thing of beauty, a joy forever.

This Remarkable Offer holds good only during December, 1897. After Jan. 1, 1898, the price will be advanced.

DON'T MISS IT.

Send money by Postal Order, Express Order, or Bank Draft on New York, drawn payable to the undersigned.

³⁷ power ³⁸ yet for all this—our—our ⁹ namely, Joshua etc. ¹⁴ chiefs ²⁸ Nethinim,—peoples—that had—(having) ³⁰ peoples ³¹ peoples—(it)—a—forgo ³³ meal—(an) ³⁴ (the)—(among)—according to our fathers' houses, ³⁵ manner of trees,

Address,

PACIFIC PRESS PUBLISHING CO.,

39 Bond St., New York.