TO-DAY the AMERICAN SENTINEL enters upon its twelfth year's work. Every one who has watched the course of events during these eleven years, knows that the call for this work is more urgent than ever before.

When the first number of the AMERICAN SENTINEL was issued in January, 1886, who, however well informed, would have supposed that in only eleven years the movement to make the United States Government "Christian," and the "Christian religion" a national thing, would have become so all-pervading and so popular as it is?

Then there was but one small sect that was working to this bad end. That movement was weak, and unpopular almost everywhere. All the principles and precepts of the Government were positively against it.

Now the movement is powerful and popular almost everywhere. And in spite of principle and precept, the Government of the United States has been turned bodily in its favor, with notice from the National Executive that "all will have to accept the situation," and "face the music." In more than one way that is a complete revolution.

WHAT IS THE SITUATION?

Let us glance at original principles, that we may the better understand what the situation is, that "all will have to accept."

Everybody knows that upon principle, and by express provision of the supreme law, the Government of the United States was established not only without any recognition of religion, but with the exclusion of religion, and specifically the Christian religion. This was done, too, because of respect to the Christian religion—"that the infinite Spirit of eternal truth might move in its freedom, and purity, and power," and that here there might be no encroachments upon the prerogatives of God.

Thus the Government of the United States was established in truth upon the Christian basis: in that its fundamental principles and supreme law were in exact harmony with the provisions announced by Jesus Christ with respect to the total separation that should be maintained between His religion and the jurisdiction of the State, between the kingdom of God and the governments of this world.

Thus America became to all the world "the classical land" of religious liberty. Therefore no step could ever be taken against this order of things in the Government, without attacking religious liberty: no thing could ever be done toward governmental recognition of the Christian religion, without being against the plain word of Christ, as well as against the fundamental principles and the supreme law of the Government itself.

This was all plain enough to all who cared to consider that the principles of Christ and the good of mankind were of more importance than their own opinions. And this is why the American people have been so slow to believe that there could be any danger to religious liberty, any danger of the establishment of a national religion, in this country: they would not believe that there could ever be enough people in this country who would become antichristian, to change the order of things in which the Government of the United States was founded, and which it represented to all the world.

By the year 1886, however, those who established the AMERICAN SENTINEL considered that there was sufficient indications of this approaching danger to justify the publishing of a paper which should be devoted to the maintenance of the principles of Christianity represented in the fundamental principles and the supreme law of the Government of the United States; while at the same time it should watch closely to detect and expose every motion that might be made toward securing the governmental recognition of religion.

In 1892, the Supreme Court of the nation committed the judicial department of the Government to the recoginition of the "Christian religion" as a governmental thing by declaring that "organic utterances" and the "meaning" of the Constitution prove that "this is a Christian nation," in accordance with original documents whose "purpose" was "the establishment of the Christian religion" in this country. And by another decision in 1895, the Court has shown that it adheres to this doctrine.

In 1892, also, Congress committed the legislative department of the Government not only to the recognition of the "Christian religion" as a governmental thing, but to the recognition of that particular phase of it that is represented in Sunday observance: and in 1893, by direct action, confirmed that which it had done in 1892.

In 1892, the President of the United States committed the executive department of the Government to the recognition of the "Christian religion" as a governmental thing by approving the action of Congress. In addition to this, in 1896, the President of the United States, in a Thanksgiving proclamation, again committed the executive department of the Government, specifically, to the "Christian religion" as a governmental thing; and shortly afterward followed it up with the ominous declaration that "this is a Christian nation, and it is only a question of time when all will have to come to accept the situation."

Now it is undeniable that these three departments—the legislative, the judicial, and the executive—are the Government of the United States. It is also undeniable that these three departments have, by repeated action, committed themselves to the recognition of the "Christian religion" as a governmental thing. It is therefore also undeniable that in spite of the plain words of Jesus Christ; and in spite of the fundamental principles and the supreme law of the nation; the Government of the United States has been dragged into the recognition of the "Christian religion," and in the antichristian sense in which such a term is always used, has been made a "Christian government."

What more could possibly be necessary to the accomplishment of such a thing? Was it essential that all three branches of the Government should take such step, in order that it might truly be said that the Government had done it? All three have definitely and intentionally taken such step. Was it essential that all three branches of the Government should by repeated action take such step, in order that it might truly be said that the Government had done it? All three, by repeated action, have done it. And, as though to put a climax to the whole scheme, the President gives notice not only that "this is a Christian nation," but that it is only a question of time when "all will have to accept the situation," and "face the music."

Yet this is not to say that all has been done that will be done. Not by any means; for such evil tide once a-flowing, will not cease until it shall have overflowed, reached even to the neck, and filled the breadth of the land. This is to say, however, what cannot be disproved, that the particular, the essential, thing of the recognition of a governmental national religion, has been accomplished by the Government of the United States. And when more shall have been done in this direction, it matters not what it may be, it is impossible for it to be the doing of any new thing. All that it can possibly be is but the enlarging and deepening of the thing that has already been done.

• PECULIARITIES OF THE SITUATION.

In view of all this that has certainly been done, it is remarkable how the great mass of the people of the United States do "accept the situation."

Practically, the whole religious element of the nation accepts the situation, because it is glad to have it so. This element not only accepts the situation, but will do all in its power to emphasize President Cleveland's pronouncement that all "will have to accept" it.

The vast majority of those who are not confessedly of the religious element, tamely accept the situation because they do not believe that the issue is of sufficient importance to justify them in taking a course that will subject them to the sneers, the scoffs, and the ostracism both business and social, that are so largely dealt out to all who choose to let it be known that they do not accept the situation.

Looking at the situation as it really is to-day, in contrast with the situation that our fathers created when they established the National Government and fixed the supreme law, a person is driven to the supposition that the great mass of the people of the United States to-day must think that our fathers made a great mistake when they carried on such a long and earnest contest against any governmental recognition of the "Christian religion."

There is certainly a great mistake somewhere in the issue. If our fathers were right in establishing the Government and fixing the supreme law, with the express exclusion of any recognition of the Christian religion, then these men to-day cannot be right in dragging the whole Government into express recognition of the "Christian religion." And if these men are right to-day in giving express governmental recognition to the "Christian religion," then assuredly our fathers were wrong in expressly excluding the Christian religion from governmental recognition.

These two things cannot stand together. One of them must inevitably be wrong. And to "accept the situation" as it is to-day, and as the President of the United States says it "will have to" be accepted, is to say that our fathers were wrong in excluding the Christian religion from governmental recognition. But to say, or tacitly to admit, or "to accept the situation" which argues, that our fathers were wrong in this, is to go further back than that point. The leading writer of the history of the United States has well said that this exclusion of religion from governmental recognition was "the logical consequence of either of the two great distinguishing principles of the Reformation, as well of justification by faith alone as the equality of all believers."

To "accept the situation" then as it is to-day, is to allow that our fathers were wrong in creating the situation which they labored so hard to create. And to allow that they were wrong in this, is to argue that the Reformation, in its two great distinguishing principles, was wrong. And to do that is to occupy distinctly papal ground.

Nor yet is this all. We have shown that the situation which was created by our fathers in the total separation of the Christian religion from governmental recognition, is precisely the situation which the words of Christ declare that governments should occupy. And our fathers caused this Government to occupy that situation because of their respect for the words of Christ which demanded it; and because of deference to "the principles upon which the gospel was first propagated."

To "accept the situation" then as it is to-day in the Government of the United States respecting the "Christian religion," and which President Cleveland says "will have to" be accepted, is not only to allow that our fathers were wrong in excluding the Christian religion from governmental recognition, but it is also to argue that the principles upon which the gospel was first propagated, and even the very words of Christ, are wrong. And to do that, is to take the position of antichrist.

And that is the situation as it is to-day.

THE TWO SITUATIONS.

There are then, in fact, two situations before the people of America to-day: First, the situation which was created by our fathers, when, by the fundamental principles and the supreme law of the Government, and according to the words of Christ and the principles upon which the gospel was first propagated, they excluded the Christian religion from governmental recognition. Secondly, the situation which, in spite of the words of Christ and the principles upon which the gospel was first propagated; and in spite of the fundamental principles and the supreme law of the Government; has been created to-day by the repeated governmental recognition of the "Christian religion."

These are the two situations that are before the people of the United States to-day. The first is Christian; the second is antichristian. And "it is not a theory, but a condition, which confronts us." For the President has plainly said, and there are multitudes who are ready, by whatever means, to make the saying effective, that "all will have to accept the situation" as it has been created lately—the antichristian situation.

Calmly and deliberately, and in the fear of Christ, we say that we will not "have to" accept that situation. We will not "have to" do it, simply because we will not do it. Not only this, but we are going to oppose it with all our might—not on the field of carnage nor with weapons of carnal warfare; but as our fathers did, in the field of public opinion, with "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God," "with sufferings and the Cross." There are thousands of us now, and there are going to be thousands upon thousands of us before the contest is over, who will not "accept the situation," who will not "face the music."

Christ or antichrist—that is the question. Choose ye. As for us and our house, we choose Christ, the principles upon which the gospel was first propagated, the two great distinguishing principles of the Reformation, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. "Come with us and we will do thee good, for God has spoken good concerning Israel."

In the Christian Statesman, of December 19, 1896, Rev. J. N. Leiper, reporting the visit of the Anti-Saloon League to President Cleveland, a short time before, adds the following; and the italics are his own:—

"After this ceremony was over, the writer went back to the President, and, in the presence of a few others, said: 'Mr. President, I most earnestly thank you for the recognition of your Saviour and mine in your Thanksgiving proclamation.' I write this incident in order to give the President's reply, which deserves to be remembered by all citizens. After referring to the fact that he had been criticised for it by the Jews and some others, he remarked: 'We are a Christian nation, and we may as well face the music.'"

That statement of the President's does certainly "deserve to be remembered by all citizens," and by all others in the country. Indeed, there is not much likelihood that they will have much opportunity to forget it. The real question is, Will they "face the music"?

Christianity and the State.

"Of all the sages who have applied themselves to instruct men and to render them good and happy, Jesus Christ is the only one who has not considered them under any political relation, and who has, in no circumstance, mingled with his instructions principles relative to the legislation of empires. Whatever be the influence of the gospel on human morality, neither Jesus Christ nor his disciples ever caused it to be understood that the evangelical institution should enter into the constitutional laws of nations.

"The gospel is an entirely spiritual economy offered to mortals in so far as they have a destination ulterior to the ends of civil society, and above all, political relations: it is proposed to man as his second reason, as the supplement of his conscience, and not to society as a new subject of legislative measures. In short, the gospel has demanded, in appearing in the world, that men should receive it, and that governments should permit it.

"Such is the external character which distinguishes it in its origin from all the other religions, which had tyrannized over the earth; and it is this which ought to distinguish it, even to the end of time, from all those forms of worship which subsist only by their incorporation with the laws of empires."

So spoke Mirabeau, January 25, 1791: and though not a believer in Christianity, "if the great truths which he had caught sight of and proclaimed," when those who professed to believe them had disgraced them, "could not save France, they remained graven for posterity in his incomparable language. The day when we shall know how to comprehend and apply them, the faults of the first Revolution will be repaired."

"Napoleon said, in returning from Notre Dame after the ceremonies which had marked the conclusion of the Concordat: 'Now the French Revolution is finished.'

Not only was the French Revolution not finished, but it was even arrested in the track on which it had set out from its first day, and was in a manner fixed in its most fatal error. What was very decidedly finished was the regime of intolerance and persecution. Equality of worships, considered as a right, was gained forever; but with respect to true and sincere religious liberty, the Revolution was hardly commenced.

"Apart from a short and stormy period, in which the separation of Church and State had been proclaimed and realized with surprising success in the most difficult circumstances, the heavy hand of the civil power had not ceased for a single day to weigh on the religious conscience: and as it is there that we must seek the inmost spring of liberty, despotism had taken the surest guarantee against all moral independence. To persecution had succeeded imperious protection. The great corporations of the past had disappeared: there remained no longer any but individuals before the State; but individuals disarmed, to whom the right of association was strictly prohibited. Nothing was more easy for the civil power than to knead, at its pleasure, this fine dust; but this power was also soon to learn how frail are the edifices constructed with such materials. The true cement was wanting; for the cement is liberty, and before all, the first of liberties, that of souls.

"No, the Revolution was not finished in 1801. Nor is it finished at this day. Neither liberty in general, nor religious liberty in particular, has received a sufficient sanction. . . . Let it be thoroughly understood: we shall not have the free State except with the free Church—I mean fully free, without pay and without fetters, without emoluments and without organic laws, with the regime of the common right sincerely accepted. Thus will be secured against the invasions of monarchical or demagogical despotism, the inviolable asylum of religious liberty—mother of all others; and universal suffrage will be constrained to comprehend that for its tumultuous waves, as for the billows of the ocean, there is a voice to say: Thus far and no farther. The idol of false popular sovereignty will be broken.

"Such a reform will react on the whole political organization; it will reproduce itself in all its degrees, and will establish the true line of demarkation between the central civil power and individual liberty. Then the Church, under these normal conditions, living only by liberty, will find its first interest in serving and defending it. . . . The Divine idea can alone preserve liberty; but it is on the condition that liberty be not refused to the divine idea."

These weighty and eloquent lines by Dr. De Pressensé, though written twenty-eight years ago, and with special reference to France, are fully applicable to the condition of things in the United States to-day. Will the American people open their eyes to the evils that are being gradually fastened more and more upon them, and demand that the whole national system be set again upon the original basis where our fathers placed it in the final step which consummated the American Revolution?

Which Will It Be?

Is this a Protestant Christian nation, or a Roman Catholic Christian nation? An important question is this, one which contains the elements of terrific commotion for the religious forces of the country. And this question is now raised, and the issue joined, which must precipitate the contest for supremacy. President Cleveland's "innocent" little Thanksgiving utterance of recent date, bearing the stamp of a national document, seems to have been all that was lacking to start the avalanche rolling. Note the following from the Presbyterian Messenger, quoted in the Christian Statesman, of December 12:—

"The United States Supreme Court has recently declared judicially that this is a Christian nation; and now the executive falls in line. And let us hold up not only the Christian flag, but the Protestant flag. Every historical, constitutional and legal fact and principle that makes this a Christian nation, makes it a Protestant nation. If it be inconsistent with the rights of Romanists to make this assertion, it is inconsistent with the rights of Jews and even of all irreligious men to make the official declarations that the President and the Governor have made. One of our political judges had the temerity to declare in the late Saratoga General Assembly that it is not true historically, or in any other way, that this is a Protestant nation. Made in such a place it was a traitorous declaration. Politicians, who are looking for votes, may presume on the liberality of Protestants and cater for the papal ballots by such declaration; but all Protestants, informed as to the true history of the nation, should repudiate them with indignation."

So this is a Protestant Christian nation, is it? Hold on, now; let us see what our Roman Catholic citizens have to say on that point. In the Catholic Mirror, of December 12, is found this from the pen of Cardinal Gibbons:—

"The American nation is a Christian nation. This is manifest from its constitution, from its legislation, and from its observance of certain holidays, such as Thanksgiving and Christmas."

Cardinal Gibbons speaks with authority for the Roman Catholic Church. And when he says that the American nation is a Christian nation, he means that it is a Roman Catholic Christian nation, for the plain reason that the Catholic Church does not recognize anything as Christian outside of her own fold. She denies that there is any salvation outside her pale. She affirms expressly that she is the Christian church, and that all other churches are schismatic and heretical. Only recently the Anglican "High Church," which resembles the Roman Catholic Church so closely in doctrine and practice as to be almost indistinguishable from it, was refused recognition as a Christian church by the supreme head of the church of Rome.

With Church and State separated, as in the order established by our forefathers, the question as to whether or not this Government is Protestant, or even Christian, could never be raised. But now that every department of the Government has broken through this order, and declared this to be a Christian nation, the question has arisen, and already it has assumed that phase which must precipitate a conflict between Protestantism and Rome for political supremacy. Is the Government to be Roman Catholic or Protestant? As established by the framers of the Constitution, it is Protestant, in that its foundation principles are in antagonism to the papal principle of a union of religion with the State. And every move in the direction of giving it a religious character, has been a move to make it in reality, if not in name, a Roman Catholic Government. In every such move the nation has been playing into Rome's hands. Therefore let Protestants not imagine that victory will lightly turn upon their side when the battle is joined.

THE Paulist Fathers of New York City, whose specialty it is to Catholicize the Protestants of the United States, have extended to Canada their mission enterprise. "Rev." Walter Elliott, with whose work our readers are somewhat acquainted, has lately been on a tour up there. In his report, referring to his question-box, he says:—

"Among the questions was one affirming justification by faith alone, a novelty in our experience, and showing the primitive type of Protestantism in this part of Canada. . . . Another question was pertinent and impertinent: 'Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.' (St. John iii:3.) Are you born again?"

These are interesting statements. Mr. Elliott has been touring thus for several years. He has been west as far as Iowa, and has had good-sized audiences in all sections. And yet to find a person "affirming justification by faith alone" is "a novelty" in his experience. Now, justification by faith alone, is Christianity. This, then, is equivalent to saying that to find a person affirming Christianity is a novelty in his experience. This in turn shows one of two things—either there is a great dearth of Christianity among the people whom he meets, or else there is a greater dearth of those who are ready to affirm it.

Again: Mr. Elliott says that the question asked him, "Are you born again," was "impertinent." No one needs any better evidence than this, that the Rev. Walter Elliott is not born again. For the man who is really born again will never consider it impertinent to be asked such a question.

The Two New Englands.

A WRITER in the Catholic World for December, discussing the subject of "New England and the Formation of America," argues that important as may have been the influence of the New England of the past, in the history of the nation, it is to be surpassed by the New England of the future. This is to be, because, while the New England of the past was Puritan and had great influence, the New England of the future is to be Catholic, and therefore will have much greater influence. He argues that as "Puritan New England has made our country to be a Yankee nation," the soon-coming Catholic New England will make our country "to be a Catholic nation."

In the opinion of this writer the future New England from which such notable result is to be expected, has already made such progress that it is almost the present New England. He says:—

"Puritan New England has made our country a Yankee nation. But the New England of yesterday is fast giving place to the New England of the future. What was Puritan New England, has been called, even now, Catholic New England. Surely the Lord Christ has intended to work greater matters by the little handful of Puritans than either they or the world have been aware of. Important as has been the part played by the New England of yesterday, we may reasonably expect that even greater things will be done by her in the future. These greater things will be done through the transformation of the Puritan. We shall, in the future, esteem the works of the Puritan more for these later fruits of New England, which he did not dream of producing—to have dreamed of them would have been to him a nightmare—than for his share in making this a free nation. The Puritan has made this a religious nation, which is destined to be a Catholic nation."

There is more substance to this view than most of the people will readily believe. The result here so confidently expected, is also nearer than many are ready to believe. Indeed, the Puritan New England system, both theoretical and practical, was so essentially Catholic, that no other result could fairly be expected than that which this writer has defined. It is the logical result. This contemplated "future New England" will be only the legitimate and strictly logical descendant of the Puritan New England.

When this "future New England" shall find itself in power and in working order, it will find also, in large measure throughout the nation, the machinery of the Puritan system existing and in good working order. Many of the same old dreadful laws used by that system, which have never been repealed, will be found serviceable. These laws, having fallen into "innocuous desuetude," are supposed by many to be dead. But they were not dead under the regime of the former New England. And as certainly as "future New England" rises to power, all such laws found unrepealed will be found to be no more dead nor dormant than they were under the former.

Every legislature in the land, whether national or State, should make a specialty of hunting up all such old laws and repealing them at once. If the people of the nation were only half awake to the real situation, they would never rest, and would give the legislatures no rest, until this thing was thoroughly done.

A New Sunday Bill in Congress.

54th CONGRESS. H. R. 9679.
2D SESSION.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

December 16, 1896.

Mr. Washington (by request) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

A BILL

To further protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall not be lawful for any person to keep open any place of business or maintain a stand for the sale of any article or articles of profit during Sunday, excepting vendors of books or newspapers, and apothecaries for the dispensing of medicines, and undertakers for the purpose of providing for the dead, or others for the purposes of charity or necessity; nor shall any public playing of football or baseball or any other kind of playing, sports, pastimes, or diversions, disturbing the peace and quiet of the day, be practiced by any person or persons within the District of Columbia on Sunday; nor shall any building operations or work upon railroad construction be lawful upon said day; and for any violation of this Act the person offending shall, for each offense, be liable to a fine of not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars, and in the case of corporations there shall be a like fine for every person employed in violation of this Act laid upon the corporation offending.

SEC. 2. That it shall be a sufficient defense to a prosecution for labor on the first day of the week that the defendant uniformly keeps another day of the week as a day of rest, and that the labor complained of was done in such a manner as not to interrupt or disturb other persons in observing the first day of the week as a day of rest. This Act shall not be construed to prevent the sale of refreshments other than malt or spirituous liquors, or to prevent the sale of malt and spirituous liquors as now provided for by law, or tobacco, cigars, railroad and steamboat tickets, or the collection and delivery of baggage.

This bill was originated and framed by the National Sabbath Alliance of Washington, D. C.; and was presented in Congress at the request of this Alliance. After framing it themselves, and themselves having it presented, a convention was held by themselves, presided over by Bishop Satterlee, which gravely proceeded to endorse it. This convention also had a committee appointed to lobby the bill in the Houses of Congress.

Compared with former bills from the same source it will be seen that all use of openly religious words and phrases has been studiously avoided. In this respect it is probably about as taking a bill as it is possible to frame for the purpose for which it is intended: that is, to secure religious legislation under cover of something else. They may be able to make such a showing with this bill that the legislative mind shall be willing to pass it.

Yet, though all set religious terms and phrases are studiously avoided in this bill, its essential religious meaning and intent is not one whit less than that of any other bill that has been put before Congress by these same parties. In former bills they have so fully exposed their real purpose that there can be no mistaking it, under whatever guise it may now or in future be forced to assume in order to disarm opposition.

The Sunday institution is essentially and only religious, in itself. It never can be made anything else. It is impossible to have legislation of any kind or to any degree in favor of Sunday, without having religious legislation. It is impossible for government or individuals to recognize Sunday as anywise different from the other working days of the week, without recognizing a religious institution, and conforming just so far to a religious practice. The promoters of this bill know this. They are therefore perfectly willing to tone down their propositions to any extent that will assure their adoption by Congress, knowing that as certainly as the thing is recognized or adopted in any shape, the whole field is opened, and additional steps can be taken at their leisure. We know this because we have heard them say it more than once.

But see how far they have indeed gone to give this bill an acceptable cast: "This Act shall not be construed . . . to prevent the sale of malt and spirituous liquors as now provided by law," etc. That is to say, We would not have it understood that this bill shall repeal, supersede, or interfere in any way with, any law which sanctions the liquor traffic. In other words, Only give us by specific statute the national recognition of Sunday, and we will say nothing against any law providing for the liquor traffic.

How could there be made a more open bid than this is, for the support,—if not positive at least by consent—of the liquor element? How could there be a more cowardly, not to say a more tricky, compromise with the liquor traffic, than is offered in this bill? Indeed, the title Sunday Liquor Bill would be more accurately descriptive than simply Sunday bill. We are waiting to see whether the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Christian Endeavorers will support this bill as they have all the others.

The "exemption" which this bill proffers to observers of another day than Sunday, is the worst one that has yet been inserted in any bill presented in Congress. In former bills it was proposed that the provisions of the Act should not apply to those who conscientiously observe another day than Sunday. In this bill, its provisions apply to all alike, up to the point of defense in a prosecution: only then does the "exemption" clause avail. For "it shall be a sufficient defense to a prosecution for labor on the first day of the week that the defendant," etc. It is only when a man is prosecuted, and when he has thus become a "defendant" that this clause is of any avail. That is to say that under this Act every person who uniformly keeps another day of the week as a day of rest, and who labors on Sunday, shall be subject to arrest and prosecution. But when he shall have been arrested and is prosecuted, then being "the defendant" it shall be "a sufficient defense" to the "prosecution," that he shall prove not only that he "uniformly keeps another day of the week as a day of rest," but "that the labor complained of was done in such a manner as not to interrupt or disturb other persons in observing the first day of the week as a day of rest." And as it is the established rule of the courts that "the burden of proof rests upon him who claims the exemption;" and also that such disturbance may be mental, and may be caused merely by the knowledge that the person is laboring on Sunday; it is perfectly plain that under such an act as this, the observer of another day than Sunday would be placed in a position of such difficulty as ought to satisfy the greatest inquisitor-general that ever hunted a heretic.

See also where this bill places honest industry. By the plain words of the bill, "the sale of malt and spirituous liquors," and of course the drinking of them, may be publicly carried on on Sunday wherever "provided for by law," without any danger of interrupting or disturbing other persons, and without any danger of any person being arrested, or prosecuted, or made a defendant in court. Whereas any quiet, sober, inoffensive Christian who engages in honest labor on Sunday is instantly subject to arrest, and prosecution, and to be made defendant in such a network of difficult circumstances as to make it practically impossible to escape.

Thus by this bill drunkenness, carousal and general devilry are given specific sanction, hoodlumism is encouraged, and idleness is enforced, on Sunday; while honest industry is forbidden, condemned and persecuted. And they expect the national Government to put the seal of its approval upon the iniquitous proposal. It may be that they can persuade the Government to do so. But how long can a Government live that so reverses the true order of things? Honest industry is the life of the State. Idleness, even voluntary, is death to the State. And enforced idleness is the suicide of the State.

There is no room for doubt that the National Sabbath Alliance took a great deal of care in the framing of this bill. It bears the marks of this all over. Bishop Satterlee and his associates probably think that in framing and promoting the bill they are pleasing the Lord; but if they had formed a set purpose to please Satan himself, it is difficult to conceive how they could have taken a course better adapted to such purpose than they have taken in the matter of framing this bill and trying to get it enacted into law.

Probably there will be those who will say that the sponsors of this bill do not mean all that we have pointed out. We are not asking anybody to tell what they do or do not mean. We do not care to know what they mean or do not mean. We do know now what they have said, and assuredly that is enough.

Is It Christian?

Is the "Christian Citizenship" movement a Christian undertaking in truth, or is it such only in name? We ask this question with particular reference to some statements made by the president, Mr. Edwin D. Wheelock, in the Golden Rule, of December 10. That individual says:—

"It has taken three years to educate even a comparatively few people up to a clear understanding of the full and true meaning of the Christian Citizenship movement.

"Christian citizenship is more than reform; it is regeneration.

"It is more than the ethics of politics; it is the science of righteousness.

"It maintains that the State is as truly sacred as the Church, should be governed by as high principles, and should recognize God as the source of all authority.

"It believes that but two ways lie before our country; one leading to anarchy, the other to the application of gospel principles to public affairs.

"It is the voice of one crying in the wilderness of public sins, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord;' measure all things by the rule of absolute righteousness rather than that of 'policy'; cast out whatever is not in harmony with the teaching of Christ."

The first of these statements distinctly and emphatically affirms that "Christian citizenship" is regeneration. This is a scriptural term, and refers the mind to that deep and vital mystery of the gospel of God—the new birth. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" is a cardinal doctrine of the Christian religion. This new birth is "of water and of the spirit." John 3:5. In Titus 3:5 it is spoken of as "the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost."

But "Christian Citizenship" is confessedly not "of water and of the Spirit." It does not seek to attain the end it has in view by any such means. Its means are, the ballot and legislation. Through these it seeks "the application of gospel principles to public affairs." As therefore its means are earthly and not spiritual; as regeneration is wholly a spiritual process, wrought only by spiritual agencies; and as "Christian Citizenship" claims to be regeneration and not mere reform; it follows that it is a fraud, and therefore not Christian at all. But not only is it a fraud in not being what it claims to be; it is a substitute for that which has been instituted by God for human salvation. It is a man-made system of regeneration—a substitute for the real generation which is of God by the Holy Spirit. In claiming to be regeneration, it stamps itself as not only a fraudulent, but an anti-Christian, thing.

The acceptance of Christian Citizenship as the means of regeneration, means its acceptance as the Christian religion. The Christian Citizenship worker will engage in politics—for "the application of gospel principles to public affairs" by means of the ballot and legislation can be nothing more than a form of politics—believing that he is thereby showing forth "the science of righteousness." It is the same old error which has done such evil work all through the ages—the confounding of politics with Christianity. And this latest phase of it is no better than any of the others, and no less fraught with evil to mankind.

Christian Citizenship and the Coming of the Lord.

If elected by the majority will He serve? If the Lord Jesus Christ, "the Lord of Glory," should be elected by the majority of the people of the United States as ruler of the nation, will He accept the office?

There is a confederation of ecclesiastical forces engaged in a religio-political campaign with a view to electing the Saviour as Supreme Ruler of this nation. When this shall be accomplished it is proposed to carry the campaign to other nations until He shall be made undisputed Ruler of the world.

At this point some will deny that there is any such campaign in progress. Others will pass the matter by with the remark that if true it is the work of a few irresponsible fanatics. Others still, who favor the campaign, will readily admit the existence and strength of the movement, and will be ready for a discussion of the main question. These last ones are asked to wait until the existence and magnitude of the campaign are shown to those readers who are disposed to doubt or deny it.

The largest campaign procession yet organized to impress the public with the magnitude of the movement was the one which marched from the steps of the national capitol down Pennsylvania Avenue to the treasury building. This procession numbered fifty-thousand, and was composed of representatives of twenty-five Protestant churches federated under the name of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor, an organization numbering three millions. This magnificent parade was headed by a body of clergymen, one of whom carried a banner, an illustration of which is here reproduced from a photograph. This great demonstration was made in the interests of what is called Christian Citizenship. "Christian Endeavor Stands for Christian Citizenship," were the words used by the President of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor, Mr. Clark, when publicly presenting the banner to the clergyman who carried it at the head of the mammoth procession. The official report of this demonstration says of its ultimate aim:—

"That grand exhibition of young manhood and womanhood is the clearest omen yet seen of the coming time when Christ, whose right it is to reign, shall be supreme on Capitol Hill."—Official Report, Fifteenth International Christian Endeavor Convention, Washington, D. C., July 8-13, 1896.

A later and if possible more striking statement of the ultimate object of the Christian Citizen crusade is the following:—

"Not until the kingship of Jesus is established over our land and the world, and his teachings made the rule in all public affairs will the Christian Citizenship League have achieved its purpose to prepare the way of the Lord. And then it shall be found that not only has the way for his coming been prepared, but that He has indeed and in truth come."—The Christian Citizen (December, 1896), the official organ of the Christian Citizenship League.

Having shown that the object of the Christian Citizenship campaign is to make Christ the Ruler of the United States and then of the world, the next question that suggests itself is, What are the methods by which this is to be accomplished?

As its name signifies, this is not an organization of Christians designed to advance the kingdom of God (which is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost") in the hearts of men by the only methods known to that kingdom (by the Spirit and "the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God"); but is an organization of professed Christians formed to establish the kingdom of God by the exercise of the functions of earthly citizenship—political methods—through political parties, primaries, political conventions, platforms, candidates, campaigns, ballots, voters, challenges, contested elections, caucuses, filibustering, laws, detectives, sheriffs, hangmen, etc. These are the methods by which the Christian Citizenship crusade purposes to make Christ the Ruler of the United States!

If thus nominated and elected will the Lord qualify? Will he accept the office, and reward the political Jameses and Johns, his most enthusiastic campaign workers, with the best offices on the right hand and the left in his newly established kingdom? Will he? "What think ye of Christ?"

Before this question is answered, the reader is asked to consider another phase of the subject. It is proposed by this movement to make "His teachings" "the rule in all public affairs." It is asserted that when this is accomplished Christ will come. By this it is seen that the doctrines of the Christian religion will become political issues, to be argued on the street corner and in the bar-room, and to be voted on by the believer and the unbeliever, the Catholic and the Protestant, the high and the low; and passed upon by judges and juries of varying creeds and characters.

Thus the kingdom of God which is declared to be a kingdom of righteousness and truth, and its law a spiritual law, and its sphere the hearts of men; is to be dragged into the sphere of politics, made subject to majorities, and handled with unconsecrated hands. Are these methods of advancing the kingdom of God in the hearts of men, Christian methods? Are they the methods Christ used? Would he accept the rulership in such a kingdom established by such methods? To ask the question is to answer it. But there is divine precedent and precept with which to answer the question.

About A. D. 32 there appeared in Judea the first Christian Citizenship League. Its object was the same as that of the modern league, to enthrone Christ. Of the Lord's attitude toward that league it is written, "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would take him by force to make him King, he departed again into a mountain himself alone." He fled from that "Christian citizenship" crowd, "a great multitude" too, preferring rather to be alone than be with those who so utterly misinterpreted the nature of his kingdom, and misread his character. And just as certain as Christ left those who would make him King of carnal men by carnal methods in A. D. 32, just so sure will he leave those in 1897 who seek thus to make him King. And just in proportion as these Christian Citizenship methods have been adopted, in that proportion has Christ already left the churches of to-day.

On a later occasion, when an apprehensive politician who had been informed by the Jewish Citizenship League that Christ wanted the politician's place, asked the Lord if the charge was true, He replied: "My kingdom is not of this world, if my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight that I should not be delivered to the Jews."

No, Christ's kingdom among men to-day is a spiritual kingdom, and its subjects are spiritual subjects who serve him in spirit and in truth. He seeketh such to serve him. But now in A. D. 1897, he will not, as in A. D. 33 he would not, be forced to take the position, secured by political methods, as King over carnal men.

Nevertheless, he will be this world's King. He will come in all His glory and establish His kingdom among men. For to this end was He born. But this will not be accomplished by any Christian Citizenship League, nor by any other political movement. When His kingdom of righteousness and truth has been established by the Holy Spirit in the hearts of all who will receive it, then He will come and destroy out of His kingdom all things that offend and them which do iniquity, purify the earth with fervent heat, "make all things new," and "reign for ever and ever."

A. F. B.

"By general agreement of scholars the beginning of our Christian era has been set four years wrong. By general agreement the Christmas day, December 25th, has also been set wrong. . . . So little have feast days and celebrations to do with religion that it never occurred to one of the four evangelists to tell us the day and the month. . . . All this teaches us the old lesson, that the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, nor birthdays or birthyears, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit."

Such is a very truthful observation made by the New York Independent, of December 17; and another equally truthful which it suggests is that no surer evidence of the decadence of Christianity in the life of the people could exist than the general and ever-increasing deference paid to such celebrations by the Christian churches. The Independent will bear correction on one point: "feast days and celebrations" do have a great deal to do with religion; but nothing to do with Christianity. They simply put the stamp of paganism upon the religion of which they are made a part.

It was on this very point that the Apostle Paul wrote with the deepest concern to the church he had established in Galatia. "How turn ye again," said he, "to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire to be in bondage? Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Gal. 4: 9-11. What would the apostle say to-day were he to write to the churches, in view of their ostentatious observance of Christmas, Easter, and other festivals which God never instituted, while totally disregarding the one day which he has solemnly ordained as his everlasting memorial—the seventh day of the week?

AS orders have been received for several thousand copies of our issue of November 26, which cannot be supplied—though sixty-five thousand were printed; and as this present number will go to many thousands of new names, we reprint, with necessary revision in this number, the leading article of that number.

The Source of National Atheism.

THE one leading characteristic of the French Revolution was atheism. Not the atheism of men as individuals, but the atheism of men in organized, representative, governmental, capacity. It was strictly national atheism: being the action of the national assembly in its official character as such.

This national atheism was not a sudden wild break of men, in an effort to present to the world a novel spectacle: it was the direct, logical, result of a system that had formerly dominated the country.

There had been fastened upon France, through the governmental authority, a religion professedly Christian. It was not Christian; yet it was adopted and ever held by the national authority, as Christian. All national favors were for this religion; the national authority forced it upon all; the national power rigidly excluded all other forms of worship.

When the Reformation of the sixteenth century came, and therein Christianity was offered to the people of France, it was tabooed, denounced, warred upon, and at last, by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, was excluded. Then the nation was left under the crushing weight of the old false religion; and it was not very long before the people of France found themselves under the necessity of relieving themselves of the incubus that was upon them.

This religion had been adopted and maintained for the supposed good of the State. It was proposed always to the State by "the Church" under the pretense that it was essential to the welfare of the State. It was found at last to be the greatest evil that afflicted the State. Instead of being for the good of the State, it was found to be only a continued and increasing curse. And in order for the State to find relief, it was essential to repudiate this national religion.

Now note: this religion, though not Christianity, was held by the people of France to be Christianity. The nation had been trained for ages in the opinion that it only was Christianity. They knew nothing else as Christianity. And to them, in repudiating it they were repudiating Christianity. In repudiating it, they did not pretend to be doing anything else than repudiating Christianity; for it was all that they knew as Christianity, and it must be repudiated. And when men intentionally repudiate Christianity, even though it be in something that is mistaken for Christianity, they commit themselves only to atheism. Thus it was that France attained to national atheism.

This, too, was nothing else than carrying to their legitimately logical conclusion the proposition and arguments, by which the country had been held under the power of that national religion. In arriving at national atheism, every step that was taken in the National Assembly was logically derived from propositions that had been laid down by the Church. Every argument offered was but the legitimate extension of the arguments already in print on behalf of the national religion.

For instance, it had always been argued, and was then argued, by the Church, that the exclusive establishment and maintenance of that particular religion as the only Christianity, was essential to the welfare of the State: and that it was the province of the State, of its own motion by an official act, to establish this religion for its own good. The Church has long declared in behalf of the exclusive establishment of that religion, that "it cannot be doubted that it belongs to the prince to require of full right that which is necessary to the State."

Upon this it was argued in the Revolution that, As this religion had been established and maintained for the good of the State, and the event had demonstrated that it was the greatest evil of the State; as it undoubtedly belonged to the State itself to require of full right that which is necessary to the State; as it was now undoubtedly necessary to the State that it be relieved of this great evil; it followed conclusively that the State had full right to repudiate the whole religious establishment. The full right to establish religion, or to do any other thing, for the welfare of the State, remains the full right to repudiate that religion, or to undo whatever may have been done, when it is found to be working evil instead of good to the State. There was no escape from this conclusion.

Holding what had been taught to them by the Church, that "The Church is in the State, the State is not in the Church," they declared, "We are a National Convention: we have assuredly the right to change religion"—meaning the religion of the State. "The State used its right to suppress a corporation which had no longer a place in the new society."

Bear in mind that this national religion was held by all there to be Christianity, and when this was repudiated, it was intended to be the repudiation of Christianity; and when that was repudiated there was nothing left to them but national atheism. The only religion they had then to guide them was the religion of reason; the only god the god of reason.

Thus, "The boldest measures of the French Revolution in regard to the Church, were justified beforehand from the point of view of the purest monarchical tradition." It "was only a rigorous application of the maxims of the ancient monarchy. It was simply Gallicanism to the utmost."

"It is well to remind the detractors of the French Revolution, that the National Assembly in this radical measure only imbibed the principles of the ancient French Monarchy." (De Pressensé, "The Church and the French Revolution.") And these principles of the ancient French Monarchy were derived altogether from the national religion. "The representatives of the ancient society . . . imagined that the very foundations had been removed, whereas the maxims of their fathers were being turned against them."

And now, just now, there are national combinations of religionists, determined to fasten upon the United States their religion as the national religion. As we have shown, they have already made much progress. It is proposed by them that the State needs this, and must do it by national acts for its own good. With what they have already gained, they are certain to succeed in their designs. And as certainly as this shall come to pass, so certainly it will soon be found that instead of being for the good of the nation, it is the greatest evil that ever befell the nation, and inevitably threatens only the ruin of the nation. Then a demand will be made that for the good of the nation this religion shall be officially repudiated by the nation as such.

Bear in mind also that this religion is now proposed to the nation for adoption as Christianity. It is not Christianity, but it is proposed as essentially and only Christianity. It has been adopted, and it will be further favored, as Christianity; and when found necessary to be repudiated it will be treated still as Christianity. And intentionally to repudiate Christianity, even though this be brought about through apostate and false Christianity, is to land in atheism. And for the national authority to do this, is to land in national atheism. This is as certain now as it was before. And thus this nation, by encouraging this proposed national religion, will throw itself, as did France, into the terrible strait between the curse of a religious despotism working only certain ruin, and the curse of a national atheism which can work nothing less. Will the people, will Congress, will the nation, take warning in time? And by keeping themselves clear of all semblance of recognition of a national religion, will they do all in their power to enable this nation to escape the ruin which is but the logical result of the establishment of an exclusive national religion?

THE French Revolution and the United States Government began in the same year.

In the year 1789, and because of genuine respect to Christianity, the United States rejected all semblance of national religion, holding that no national religion is Christianity. Thus in the Constitution of the United States was embodied the very principle announced by Jesus Christ for earthly government, when he said, "My kingdom is not of this world;" "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's;" "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not."

In the year 1789, began the French Revolution—the inevitable logic of an exclusive national religion—an attempt of the French nation to relieve itself of the unbearable curse which had been put upon it in the exclusive establishment of a national religion. This religion was held to be Christianity, and because of its abominable practices and unbearable oppression, was hated and repudiated, and the nation was plunged into national atheism as the only escape.

Thus in these two nations in the same year God set before the world those two all-important lessons as to the right way and the wrong way. These lessons have been before the nations ever since for their instruction. By the example of the United States the other nations were led gradually but constantly in the right way. But now, against Scripture, against the Constitution and every fundamental principle of the United States, against blessed experience, and in the very face of the terrible warning of the French Revolution, the allied religious forces of the United States are determined to accomplish here the establishment of an exclusive national religion.

Is it possible that the American people will allow themselves and the national power thus to be carried captive to error that cannot possibly mean anything but ruin!

"To this day the problem entered upon in 1789 is still before us."—De Pressensé.

Saul of Tarsus, Not Paul the Apostle.

BY O. F. CAMPBELL.

"AND Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem." Acts 9:1-2.

This is Saul of Tarsus.

But Paul the Apostle had another spirit. As he himself was persecuted and stood before King Agrippa for his faith, we hear him give expression, through the Spirit of God, to these words: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them. And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities." Acts 26:9-11.

What a wonderful confession is here made! that in doing all this evil work he was exceedingly mad. And all his efforts were seconded by the recognized heads of religion—the ministry. But after Jesus the Man of Calvary, spoke to him and he inquired, "Who art thou, Lord?" he is made acquainted with One he has never known before, although making high profession of religion. Now he is ready to repudiate the whole business and say it was "contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth."

The great lesson we can learn from this record is that those who engage in this kind of business, though they live in 1897, do not know Jesus, and therefore need to form his acquaintance at once that they may cease "being exceedingly mad." They need to get rid of that spirit, have their names changed, and have the Spirit of Jesus—the spirit of love. O that every professed follower of Jesus Christ would learn this important lesson and not count an unhallowed zeal as evidence of true Christianity.

Sunday Rally in Jersey City.

BY A. R. BELL.

A RALLY under the auspices of the American Sabbath Union was held Tuesday evening, December 15, at the Summit Avenue Baptist Church, Jersey City, N. J. The subject discussed was "The American Sabbath; its relation to good citizenship and Christian progress;" ten minute addresses being delivered by the several speakers representing the Christian Endeavor Society, the Epworth League, the Baptist Young People's Union, and the Society of Andrew and Philip.

The meeting was presided over by Rev. Dr. Brett, of the Dutch Reformed Church, and in his opening remarks he referred to Isa. 58:13, 14: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord;" as being just what the Lord wanted of man in regard to the American sabbath.

The first speaker said he believed in the Sabbath. He believed that the ten commandments stood to-day as when God gave them on Sinai, not one having been abrogated.

He believed in the enforcement of sabbath (Sunday) laws, yet said he would fight against any law enforcing religious principles. The sabbath laws, said he, were not enforced to make men religious, but for society's good.

The pastor of the church spoke in behalf of the Baptist Young People's Union.

Among other things, he said, "We are determined to stand without swerving for the proper observance of the sabbath. We are scriptural in all things, and we are scriptural in this."

The next speaker in his remarks said: "We are here to stand for the fourth commandment. . . . Sabbath breaking is a mark of a backslidden church. It is time," said he, "we were getting back to the law of God."

The representative of the Christian Endeavor Society laid all the blame for sabbath (Sunday) desecration on the church, excusing the world "because they did not know the seventh day to keep it holy." Another speaker hoped that the time would soon come when all business except works of necessity and charity would cease on the sabbath, or at least, said he, if stores had to be opened, that it would be only for a little while sabbath morning.

What a ridiculous position to take! Claiming to stand for truth against error; claiming the Bible as their only guide; claiming the Sabbath as a sign between God and his people; these men confederate together, their object being the preservation of a day which God in all the Bible never once calls the sabbath!

At the close of the meeting, the writer, who was formerly a member of this church under another pastorate, had a short interview with the pastor. He was asked the question, "Do not the Baptists claim to be strictly biblical in all their doctrine, claiming no other guide than the Bible?" Replying in the affirmative, he was asked, "Where in all the Bible can be found warrant for such a meeting as has just been held?" Pleading ignorance of the meaning of this question, he was asked, "Where in all the Bible can it be found that the first day of the week, Sunday, is called the Sabbath?" His answer was "Oh, that's a question for every man to settle in his own mind." On being asked the question, "What saith the scripture?" his reply was, "There are a thousand and one other things of vastly more importance than the Sabbath on my mind and I have no time to bother with such a subject."

Consistency! here is a man who thinks the Sunday is of such vast importance that he invites the American Sabbath Union to hold a rally in his church for the support of it, who himself spoke for ten minutes, showing his hearty sympathy with the cause, yet says that a thousand and one other things of vastly more importance than the Sabbath of God occupy his mind. A peculiar state of things truly.

The writer also had the pleasure of introducing himself to Dr. J. H. Knowles, general secretary of the Union. The following dialogue ensued:—

Writer—Dr. Knowles, what is the principal object of your society?

Dr. Knowles—The proper observance of the Sabbath.

Writer—The first thing then to know is which day is the Sabbath, is it not?

Dr. Knowles—Certainly.

Writer—One of the speakers tonight quoted Isa. 58: 13, 14 as the day to be kept holy. Is this the day to keep?

Dr. Knowles—Yes.

Writer—Does not God say the seventh day is the Sabbath? Why then do you quote this scripture and apply it to the first day?

Dr. Knowles—Oh, I know you—who you are. You follow us up wherever we go. You are well meaning and earnest, but you look only on one side of the question.

Writer—There is only one side to this question. We are to keep holy the Sabbath day, and God says the seventh day is the Sabbath.

Dr. Knowles—You only look on one side of the question.

Writer—How many sides are there to this question?

Dr. Knowles—What church do you belong to?

Writer—The Seventh-day Adventist.

Dr. Knowles—I knew it. Everywhere we go you follow us, we find your papers and other reading matter.

Writer—Dr. Knowles, I will ask you a plain question and I trust you will give me a plain answer. God in his word says the seventh day is the Sabbath; you say the first day of the week is the Sabbath, now who is right, who speaks the truth, you or God?

Dr. Knowles—You only look on one side of the question.

This is all that could be gotten from the doctor, so leaving a SENTINEL in his hand (the Christian Endeavor special) I bade him good-night.

I would say also that every person who attended the meeting, including speakers, save one who refused it, received a copy of that number of the SENTINEL.

Well may Rome say:—

“Thus sidle to the goal with awkward pace,
Halting on crutches of unequal size,
One leg by truth supported, one by lies,
Secure of nothing but to lose the race.”

THE position now held by Thanksgiving Day is a perfect illustration of how Sunday became a holy day. At first it was celebrated by individuals upon their own motion. Next it received governmental recognition only in a general way, becoming gradually more special as time went on; then at last finding recognition by government as distinctly a Christian thing. When it reached this point it became too “holy” a thing to bear without serious “deseccration” such worldly exercises as common labor or games of ball, etc. The next step that may be looked for is the demand for a law forbidding the interruption and deseccration of the “holy” associations and character of the “sacred” day.

When it was first recognized by the Government in a general way, this was considered a worthy tribute to the value of religion in general, to the Government. When it was recognized by the Government in a distinctly Christian sense, this was counted as a more worthy tribute to the value of “Christianity and its institutions,” to the Government. And now if only a law can be secured “to protect the day from deseccration,” this will be a most worthy tribute to the value of “Christianity and its institutions,” to all the people. And whether a person believes in Christianity and its institutions or not, he must be compelled to obey the law and observe the institution “for civil and sanitary reasons;” and because “religion or rights of conscience does not enter into the matter at all, it is simply a matter of law.”

As the Christian Statesman has declared, and what is most likely the truth, that “President Cleveland’s proclamation will be a precedent for generations to come;” “and not only will Thanksgiving proclamations continue to be issued, but they will have more generally a distinctively Christian character”—we may expect to see such a course pursued with reference to its observance, as we have described. Then Thanksgiving Day will be just as sacred and just as holy as Sunday is now. For then it will have just the sanctions that Sunday has, and will rest upon just such authority as Sunday does.

“Christian Citizenship” In Milwaukee.

BY GEO. M. BROWN.

DECEMBER 17th Mr. A. M. Haswell, Secretary of the National Christian Citizenship League, delivered an address in Milwaukee on the subject of the relation between the working men and Sunday laws.

After stating that he should confine his remarks to the civil aspect of Sunday laws and their deseccration, he expressed the idea that an implied contract exists between every citizen and the Government, by which the citizen agrees to keep the laws upon the statute books, and as the Sunday law is one of these laws, every one is in duty bound to keep it.

He indulged in quite an extended eulogy of the Puritans and their laws and said, “They met in the cabin of the Mayflower—God’s modern ark of the covenant—and there framed the first Sunday law. Similar laws were made by the other colonies and have been adopted by the States.”

“No one,” said he, “favors the repeal of these righteous laws but blatant infidels, howling anarchists, and blind, greedy, grasping monopolies.” He defined personal liberty as “the right to do as I please, so long as I trample on no one’s rights, and no righteous law on the statute book.”

After referring to the agitation of the Personal Liberty League for the repeal of the Sunday law now on the statute books of this State, he said: “Any one who under the sacred name of personal liberty seeks to have the Sunday law repealed is more worthy of the rope or the bullet than were Jefferson Davis and Benedict Arnold.” This statement was applauded by the audience.

He declared that the only hope the workingman had of a day of rest was in having a law, enforcing a rest-day, and said: "Shall we repeal the Sunday law at the beck and cry of howlers who hate the sabbath and the sabbath's God? Never"!! In his estimation those who work for the repeal of the law are enemies of law and order.

Among the methods which he suggested for combating the opposers of Sunday laws, and especially those who were working for the repeal of the laws now in force, he mentioned the circulation of petitions by "the prettiest young ladies" who should secure the signatures of all the voters possible.

He also advised the members of the League to consolidate with every society, Protestant or Catholic, that is favorable to Sunday laws and that will work for them. The audience frequently applauded the speaker, and though the number present was not large, there was considerable enthusiasm manifested. A portion of Nehemiah 13 was read as a Scripture lesson at the beginning of the service, and it was manifest that many would like to "lay hands on" all who do not observe Sunday, even as Nehemiah threatened to lay hands upon the merchants and sellers of fish who desecrated the Sabbath of the Lord in his day.

Where Is the Difference?

W. N. Glenn, in Signs of the Times.

TURKEY is Mohammedan, Spain is "Christian." Armenia has long been trying to throw off the Turkish yoke, and establish her independence. For this reason Armenians have suffered many atrocities at the hands of Turkish soldiers. However, leading Armenians counted on this very thing, and calculated that it would bring them sympathy and assistance from the "Christian nations." They have had much clamorous sympathy, and some assistance in the way of needed provisions and clothing for destitute sufferers, but they have not succeeded in securing what they expected—assistance to gain their political independence. The "Christian nations" have been terribly berated by "Christian" enthusiasts because they have not taken up carnal weapons in defense of "Christian" Armenia's political freedom.

On the other hand, Cuba, fully as much Christian as Armenia, has long been struggling for emancipation from her "Christian" tyrant, Spain. Cruel depredations upon innocent non-combatants, as cruel as any perpetrated by the Turks, have been reported time and again from Cuba. Of course these have been denied by Spain; but woe to the foreigner, of whatever nation, who should undertake to make personal investigation, as has been done by many private individuals in Turkey. Woe to the relief committee who should undertake to carry relief to the destitute sufferers in Cuba. Foreigners who are known to sympathize with the Armenians are safer in Constantinople than they are in Havana if even suspected of sympathizing with the suffering Cubans.

The latest advices from Havana state that all the Americans in that city are designated as "pigs," by the Spaniards, and live in constant anticipation of violence, just because they are Americans, and because the Spanish people and soldiers know that the Cuban insurgents have received some aid from the United States through filibustering parties. The bloodthirsty disposition of many of the people, it is authoritatively stated, has to be satiated by bull-fights to keep down their indignation because the insurgents are not overcome by the Spanish forces.

And it is safe to assume that all of this class of citizens are loyal to "the Church," and would fight for it to the death. Nor is the enjoyment of brutal scenes confined to either the Turks or Spaniards; the prize-fights, the football games, the horse-races, etc., are lavishly patronized in all the "Christian nations." And in all of them the more they indulge in carnal warfare, the greater is the lust for bloody scenes. And this fact ought to be considered before encouraging military organizations among the children and young people in the churches. We cannot expect that an education in the exercise of carnal weapons will develop adepts in the use of the "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God;" for "what concord hath Christ with Belial?" The use of this world's weapons and its modes of warfare have the same deteriorating effect upon human nature in all lands, whether employed by Moslem or professed Christian. Their employment invariably tends to quench the Spirit of Christ.

THE Illinois Supreme Court has decided that, "The statute providing that no female shall be employed in any workshop or factory more than eight hours per day, or forty-eight hours per week, is unconstitutional, because such a statute deprives persons of the privilege of contracting, which is both a privilege and a property right, without due process of law, and makes an arbitrary interference with private contracts, which cannot be justified as an exercise of the police power." That is justice.

ALONZO T. JONES,

EDITOR.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

THE word from Washington, D. C., is that there are thousands of petitions being sent to Congress from all over the country, though far the most of them are from Pennsylvania, calling for the passage of the bill providing a Sunday law for the District of Columbia.

We should like to know what business, yea, what right, the people of the States have to meddle in the matter of laws for the District of Columbia. The people of the District of Columbia are the ones whose business and whose right this is.

Why do not those Pennsylvania people send over petitions to the legislatures of California and Idaho, calling upon them to enact Sunday laws for their respective States?—Simply because they have no right to. To do so would be to meddle in matters that do not at all concern them. That is a matter for the people of California and Idaho themselves to attend to.

It is precisely so with the District of Columbia. The people of Pennsylvania and other States have no more right to send such petitions to Congress—the legislature of the District of Columbia—than they would have to send them to the legislature of California. If they were to send such petitions to the legislature of California, they would, in short order, be given to understand that they had better attend to their own business and let the business of other people alone. And that is what the legislature of the District of Columbia ought to give them to understand.

They need to be told this; for it is the life principle of the Government of the States and of the United States. It is the principle of self-government—government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Each one is to govern himself and let other people alone. It is the principle of the Declaration of Independence—men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with the unalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Thus, by the Declaration, all men are equal in the right to the pursuit of happiness. But these people engage in the pursuit of happiness for themselves and for everybody else besides.

THERE is presented before the people of this nation a most singular, a most mysterious, thing. We beg to be allowed to state the case, and then leave it with the reader for him to explain if he can.

Almost all the professed Christian elements in the whole country are combined in a determined effort to have Sunday recognized and made a fixture in national law, as the Sabbath.

They propose that all within the jurisdiction of the national power, shall be compelled by such law to recognize and observe the Sunday as the Sabbath.

Then, from this national example, they intend to carry the like thing into all the States and Territories of the Union, and thus by law require the recognition and observance of Sunday as the Sabbath throughout the whole nation.

The leaders in this movement, and the vast majority of the others engaged in it, cite the fourth commandment of the Decalogue as the source of their authority for requiring thus the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath.

That fourth commandment says, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

This commandment has been officially called for and read from the Bible precisely in the words here printed, in the presence of the United States Senate, as the authority, and as containing the reasons, for requiring by national law, the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath.

This commandment says plainly, "The seventh day is the Sabbath." And it is just as plain that this is the seventh day of the week. The seventh day to be observed is the seventh day in succession from the one which God observed; and that seventh day which God observed was the seventh day of the week; because the week was the only period of time then in existence of which there could possibly be any seventh day.

Therefore, as this commandment definitely cites the rest of God on the seventh day at the close of the six days' creative process; and as there was no period of time but the week, of which it could possibly be the seventh day; it is absolutely impossible that this commandment to men to observe the seventh day can refer to any other than the seventh day of the week.

But Sunday is the first day of the week. Those who are urging it upon all people as the Sabbath know that it is the first day of the week. The bill now before Congress to enforce its observance in the District of Columbia, as well as the laws of the States, calls it the first day of the week.

Now the singular and mysterious thing to which we call attention is, that those who are calling for national law enforcing the observance of this first day of the week, cite the fourth commandment as the source of their authority for requiring its observance as the Sabbath, while that commandment plainly enjoins the observance of the seventh day of the week, and cannot possibly refer to any other day.

Another phase of this singular and mysterious thing, is that those people hold that the fourth commandment is the word of God. Yet they have so little regard for that word, that they hesitate not at all to substitute a day of their own choice for the day which, even upon their own claim, God has named. They totally ignore the day which the word of God has plainly designated, and boldly endeavor to make this same word of God enjoin the observance of a day to which it cannot possibly apply.

How much regard, then, have those people for the authority of that word as the word of God? How much regard have they for the authority of God, which they themselves say is the substance and life of that word as the word of God? Do they really believe that when the Lord spoke His law He had sufficient clearness of mind to know what He wanted to say; and sufficient ability of expression to say what He meant? If they do really believe this, then will they say that He intentionally spoke so ambiguously when He said the seventh day is the Sabbath, that nobody ever caught the correct idea until two hundred years ago when the Puritans discovered that when the Lord said the seventh day is the Sabbath He meant that the first day is the Sabbath? "To whom, then, will ye liken me, saith the Lord."

If the people of the District of Columbia, or of the States, should treat the laws which these people frame enjoining the observance of the first day of the week, as they themselves treat the law which God has spoken enjoining the observance of the seventh day of the week, what would those people themselves say to that? Everybody knows that such a thing would not be accepted for one moment. It would be denounced as an assertion of self-opinion, and disrespectful to the authority of the Government that is the life of the law.

Is it not then a singular and mysterious thing, that people will claim that a certain word is the word of God, and at the same time treat it as they would not allow for a moment that the word of men should be treated? Shall the words of men be considered as of more force and value than the word of God? "Shall mortal man be more just than God?"

God is the God of judgment. Just and right is He. He will bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil: and it will "be judged by the law." And when He does rise up to judgment, will He regard lightly this light regard for His law? In that day that law will be interpreted by the Judge: not by self-opinionated men.

Now in view of the fact that the people who are endeavoring to force upon all the nation the observance of the first day of the week as the Sabbath, cite as the authority for it the law which enjoins the observance only of the seventh day of the week, while at the same time they hold that law to be the law of God, and that there is to be a judgment of God at which every man shall give account of himself to God and "be judged by the law," is it not a most singular and most mysterious thing that they will act as they do in the matter of the word and the authority of God?

Who Wants Him?

MR. MOODY, the evangelist, has said something calculated to shock the church congregations of New York City out of their moral complacency. What he says of the spiritual condition of this city is of course just as applicable to any other section of the country.

Mr. Moody said before a large audience in Carnegie Hall, that Christ would be no more welcome should he return to the earth to-day than he was when he came to the Jews in Palestine nineteen centuries ago. "Nineteen hundred years," said the evangelist, "have rolled away since Christ found no place on earth to lay his head. His gospel is now preached in all parts of the world, but is it not a fact that even now there is not room on earth for the Son of God, and no nation wants him?"

"Does America want Him? It is a Christian nation. England claims to be the most Christian nation, but if a man stood up in Parliament to-morrow to advocate—could it be possible—that Christ should come in person to rule England, he would be hooted down. France, Germany, Italy and Spain are Christian nations. Is there room for Him in either?"

"Has not Christianity settled down to be a mere lifeless form? Suppose it were possible to petition Christ to return to earth to rule us. How many of the people of New York would sign the petition? Would business men sign it? They would have to change their methods first. Would stock-brokers sign it? It would smash up their business pretty quick. Would saloon-keepers sign it? They would find their occupation gone should they do so.

"I'll bring the question closer home to you. How about the churches? Do they want Him? Pride and form and dignity in the church would have to step down.

"But we can bring the question even closer to us. How many ladies here would vote to have Him come? I think but few hands would be raised should the vote be taken this afternoon.

"There is hardly a name so unpopular in the world to-day as that of Jesus Christ. Thank God there are a few who have stepped out of the world who would welcome Him!"

Mr. Moody knows, and knows so well that he does not hesitate to state it to his congregations, that the "Christian nations" of to-day do not want Christ any more than did the Jewish nation of old. Even the church-going people, he says, do not constitute an exception in this matter. And what Mr. Moody knows, thousands of others in the Church know as well.

What meaning, then, is there in the movement, in which the churches and religious societies are now all engaged, to make this a "Christian nation" by the exercise of their political power. If the churches themselves are not Christian enough to want Christ with them as Mr. Moody described, how can they make anything else Christian? And if they cannot make the nation Christian by the religious stamp which they propose to put upon it, what else can they do, but to make it antichristian? What else was ever done to a nation by giving it a religious stamp?

This is the plain meaning of the movement to make the United States Government profess religion.

Fighting About Prayer.

BY H. F. PHELPS.

UNDER the above heading, the papers of the Northwest are giving an account of a disturbance in a certain school district in Minnesota, the root of which, it seems, is praying in the school. It is said that the "school row has just fairly begun." The clerk, who refused to issue an order, notwithstanding the teacher was qualified for the position, has been fined $10. A prominent county official, who was present at the trial, made a statement that the practice of praying in the school would be continued, while the majority of the school board declare that there shall be no praying in the school.

This illustrates the folly of attempting to foist religion on religious exercises upon a people against their will; or to maintain religious ceremonies, even that of prayer, where it would be better religion to follow the example of the Saviour in withdrawing from the public gaze into the mountains for prayer.

How Will They Conduct the Government?

In the Forum for December, Rev. William Bayard Hale, of Middleboro, Mass., presents a striking review of the "Church Entertainments" of the year 1896. In this, Dr. Hale is doing a good work. In view of the fact that the combined churches of the land have taken it upon themselves to reform the country and especially the Government upon their own ideas of propriety and morals, it is important that the country should know beforehand, so far as possible, about how those ideas run. As they propose to conduct the Government, it is well that the people should know first how they conduct themselves.

From a record "including more than five hundred occasions," Dr. Hale is enabled authentically to report "such religious intelligence" as the following:—

"St. John's Church, Lowell, Massachusetts, in its Easter festivities, produced 'Violet in Fairyland,' and 'A Comedy of Errors up to date.' The Unity Church, Brockton, the Porter Church, Brockton, and various other congregations in surrounding towns, have delighted Southeastern Massachusetts with a laughable performance entitled 'Aunt Jemima's Album.' Another Brockton church has given a Wish-bone Party. The Christian Endeavorers of Menlo, Iowa, have engaged in a New Woman Social."

"St. Paul's, Rahway, New Jersey, and several other religious societies, have presented that awakening and gladdening exhibition, 'The Mystic Midgets.' St. Paul's, Newburyport, Massachusetts, offered 'Mrs. Jarley's Wax-works,' rejuvenescent with Trilby characters (without whom no well-ordered modern church performance is complete) and The Man who Tickled his Wives to Death. Grace Church, Salem, Massachusetts, scored heavily with its 'Masque of Culture.' St. Francis de Sales, Charlestown, Boston, entertained a thousand people at a Progressive Whist Party.

"Members of the New Church, Bath, Maine, came forward with 'Woodcock's Little Game,' said to be a clever thing in the comedy vein, a brilliant series of Living Pictures, and that screaming farce, 'Poor Pillicoddy.' St. Paul's, Pawtucket, Rhode Island, held a Shakesperian Carnival; a reverend cleric, as Hamlet, did effective work in the ghost scene, and selected members of the choir, with others, rendered the lullaby from 'Midsummer Night's Dream.' Dancing furnished a fitting conclusion of the evening, the Grand March being led by Julius Cæsar and the one hundred and twenty-five costumed actors.

"Unusually successful was the last annual Fair of Highland Congregational Society, Larch Street, Providence, whose place of worship was skilfully transformed into a market-place, where macaroni and suspenders—specially mentioned among other articles—were sold. The First Parish, Groton, Massachusetts, danced the New Year in, and realized about twelve dollars. The Asbury M. E. Church, Providence, has given a Hay-seed Party.

Ballou Universalist Church, Providence, has rendered 'Down by the Sea,' a two-act drama; tickets twenty-five cents, dancing not included.

BAD!

"Epworth M. E. Church, Toledo, has enriched its treasury by a Weigh Social. St. John's M. E. Church, Toledo, has given a stimulating entertainment by the Peak Sisters, widely known in American religious circles, introducing that touching ballad, 'Do You Know the Mouth of Man?' in which the gentle art of kissing is referred to ninety times; while the First Presbyterian Church, Toledo, has produced a refined diversion called 'Just Us Girls,' opening with a 'What Is It?' march, in which the young ladies wear their hair over their faces, and masks on the back of their heads; thus convulsing the audience by the spectacle of apparent deformities in an extraordinary series of evolutions.

"Passing on through the notices I have preserved, my eye is caught by accounts of a Mock Town Meeting, a Poker Party, a Fancy Dress Drill, a Tambourine Drill (irreverently described by the secular press as a 'winner'), a Dude Drill, a Great Moral Dime Show (introducing McGinty, a dwarf, and a petrified man), a Spider-web Party, a Mother Goose Market, and a Husking Bee. There are one or two announcements of 'Gymnastic Exhibitions' and 'Athletic Exhibitions,' which I make bold to believe are euphemisms for sparring contests. It was in the Boston Herald of only a day or two ago, that I recognized in the name 'Ike Weir, the Spider,' committed to trial for brutal assault, that of a pugilist long disreputable, who has appeared in my own town of Middleboro, Massachusetts, in a boxing-match which was a feature of a church fair. After having served his time, 'the Spider' will be an even more attractive personage for churches desiring to interest the public.

"The First Reformed Church, Bedford Avenue and Clymer Street, Brooklyn, has this year given a Living-Picture Show in which society women of the Eastern District posed in gilt frames, indifferently as St. Cecelia and Bacchante, The Madonna of Consolation, and La Zingarella. Ladies of St. John's, Youngstown, Ohio, in a black-face performance, made a pleasing appearance when they came before the foot-lights with songs, dances, and local hits.

WORSE!

"Now, I would not cloud with one moment's annoyance the brows of the esteemed persons who get up these shows. I do not carp at sacred Female Minstrels: they don't happen to suit my taste; but I may be peculiar. And yet when I read in the Buffalo Enquirer that at Fredonia, New York, the young ladies not only corked, but appeared in bloomers, and that at Woodside, Long Island, a similar performance was further enlivened by a pleasing act on the part of a young lady who, with enviable agility, if not discretion, kicked a tambourine held above her head, I cannot but feel that—considered as religious exercises—these doubtless delightful occasions may be, in some details, open to criticism.

"Neither can I personally with quite untempered enthusiasm commend the form which consecrated zeal has taken in the case of Grace Church, Erie and Second Streets, Jersey City. According to a press despatch, this congregation made a distinct advance in the art of sacred amusement by its recent production of 'The Talisman,' a three-act opera, the novelty being that the male rôles, those of Sir Roland and Don Carlos, were taken by girls in fleshings. I may be wrong,—the New York Independent will correct me if I am,—but I should be disposed to regard this also as perhaps an error of taste. I know how great is the pressure for more and more exciting shows, upon churches which have gone into the theatrical business,—and the press reports state that Grace Church owes much of its prosperity to the frequency with which it provides high-class entertainments,—but, frankly, there has been, at least until recently, a prejudice against this particular costume as an attire for young ladies in church.

"I have, however, no hesitation in commending—as a successful exhibition of impudent and attractive indecency—the New Woman Social given, according to the New York papers, by the male members of the Methodist Society of Hancock, New York. Some of the more engaging toilets worn by these followers of John Wesley are described in the despatch. 'W. F. Stimpson in lilac bloomers with lace trimmings, was irresistible, as was E. H. Taylor in a Mother Hubbard, and with a weeping-willow plume. E. C. Seeley wore shiny black bloomers, set off with a gorgeous sash. J. Curtis Martin wore red bloomers and an angelic smile. Olin Henderson in check bloomers, Ward Thompson in a shirt waist, and W. H. Dean with balloon sleeves, were also conspicuous.'

WORSE AND WORSE!

"This is, possibly, funny. But for monumental godlessness made endurable by no saving grace of humor, for simian imbecility, for supreme and inimitable folly unmarred by the slightest suggestion either of common decency or ordinary self-respect, for grovelling baseness and depraved vulgarity—the Trilby Party, otherwise the Foot Social, otherwise the Ankle Auction, stands at the head of the church entertainments of the year. While others are trudging along the weary plains of the unimaginative and the ordinary, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Suffern, New York, and St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church of New Brunswick, New Jersey, with unblanched cheek and dauntless eye, have scaled the Alpine heights of deathless shame. I have received from all parts of the country marked copies of newspapers reporting these events; some of the papers bearing the request, 'Please give this your attention.' I am very willing to do so, but I regret the inadequacy of my vocabulary, and I refrain from any further attempt to characterize the performance. In the Trilby Social, as given by the Suffern M. E. Epworth League and the New Brunswick P. E. Olive Branch Society, the young ladies of the church display their—feet, let us say, and be polite,—behind a curtain which is lifted to a height described as 'tantalizing.' Men in front of the curtain view what is displayed of one female after another, and then bid for the privilege of taking her to supper. The charm of the scheme is the ease with which it lends itself to the worse than dubious; and I have no doubt that the press accounts of the scenes which attended the bidding are, in both cases, highly colored, though the most literal truth would certainly be exciting enough. The Boston Sunday Journal illustrated one of these events with a half-page picture; the New York Herald gave it a two-column illustration; the accompanying letter-press, and the reports published in other papers, describe a show which, in a respectable community, under other than ecclesiastical management, might have difficulty with the police.

"Tom-Thumb Weddings and Mock Marriages multiply. Plymouth Church, Chicago, is this year among those which have thus made Holy Matrimony a pleasing joke. One P. E. Church in Massachusetts, fired by the realistic spirit of the modern tank drama, added a vivid touch to its mock celebration of this Sacrament, by the introduction of real choir boys; but an African M. E. Church in New Bedford, with native imitative genius, outshone its white competitors with a sumptuously staged burlesque of the Marlborough-Vanderbilt nuptials. These congregations would profit under the tutor to whom St. Paul consigned Hymenæus and Alexander."

There is much more of the like in the Forum article; but this is enough to give the reader a fair idea of the general course of things in the churches throughout the country. With reference to the whole situation presented by this view, Dr. Hale justly and solemnly remarks:—

"A review of the entertainments of the past year affords evidence that, with dangerous rapidity, church entertainments are taking the nature of improper exhibitions. Ordinary buffoonery no longer draws. The more tempting attractions of the forbidden, the more spicy morsels of the variety theatre are demanded, and are being supplied.

"Let us be human; let us be hearty; let us be, as we were made, men and women; but, in Heaven's name! let us insist that when people appear in, or for the benefit of, churches, they shall keep on their proper clothes. . . . The Church is not a system of theatres and music-halls. It is a divine institution with a definite, particular, and sacred office, distinct from that of all human agencies whatsoever. It is to teach the sacredness of life, by standing for the essentially sacred side of life. Its songs are not merry glees, but litanies of human hopes and sorrows, and chants of human hearts in winged aspirations seeking God.

"If there is in life anything pure, and virginal, and sweet,—God knows it is hard enough to keep the faith that there is! where is there to be kept any place and expression for it, if what are called the houses of God are given over to immodesty? . . . It may be too much to look for cleanliness on the professional stage; but surely it is beyond pardon that any body bearing the name of a Church of Jesus, the undefiled Nazarine, should, by a doubtful exhibition, sully the mind of any pure lad or tender maiden committed to its care."

PERTINENT INQUIRY.

And beyond all this the inquiry is pertinent just now, When the churches of the land conduct themselves in these pernicious ways, how can they be expected to conduct the Government in any better way? And if they could conduct the Government in no better way than they conduct themselves, then what worse thing could befall the nation than to have the control of the Government full under the power and influence of such bodies?

Less than a month ago there was held in Chicago a joint convention of the National Reform Association and the Christian Citizenship League. This convention was held for the purpose of devising ways and means by which the church power could most speedily gain control of the Government and the nation. One of the principal speeches of the convention was made by President Blanchard, of Wheaton College, on "How to Quicken the National Conscience." He declared that "The churches make the conscience of the world at large." Let this be so, and what kind of a conscience will be that of the world at large if it shall follow the lead of the churches as portrayed in their own open practices before the world and for the "entertainment" of the world at large? As a plain matter of fact, the conscience of the world at large to-day is not so benumbed, yea, is not so debased, as these church entertainments show that the conscience of the Church is.

President Blanchard said further that "Nobody will say that amusements are right which the Church of Jesus Christ universally condemns." Let this be so: what then shall be said of amusements of the Church, which the world condemns, but which the Church indulges with avidity?

Thank the Lord, there are yet some faithful souls who are sighing and crying for the abominations that are done in the midst of her. But her sins are fast reaching unto heaven; and when she secures the governmental power to compel the people to drink of the wine of her fornications, her cup will be full, and God will surely remember her iniquities.

And even now the voice from heaven is calling "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues."

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God: having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." 2 Tim. 3:1-5.

THE novelist-preacher, Rev. John Watson, of England, who has been lately so much gazed at in this country, happened in one of his sermons to mention a few things that he believes; and now some of his admirers have caught it up and propose to make it the creed upon which Christendom shall unite. One paper, however, objects to it because "it lacks the essential quality either for a creed or a substitute for creeds, in that it comes without any authority behind it." The truth is, that it has as much authority behind it, as any other creed ever had at its beginning. And if only its advocates could get the Government of the United States to endorse it, then it would have all the authority behind it that any other creed ever had. And if they are only persistent enough, no doubt they can bring about such an endorsement, especially as the United States Government is in the creed business anyhow.

That Sunday Liquor Bill Again.

IN our discussion of the Sunday bill now before Congress, and which we reprinted in our issue of last week, we called attention to the evident fact that it did not in any sense express the real purposes of its framers. We pointed out that it had been toned down to the lowest point, expressly to secure its passage if possible, and then, having the Government committed to the principle, afterward bring forward their real purposes and secure their embodiment in law. It will be of interest to our readers to have the statements of the framers of the bill themselves to this effect.

December 18, there was held in Washington, D. C., the National Convention of the "Woman's Sabbath Alliance," in which the discussion and endorsement of this bill was the principal business. But two resolutions were passed. The first was to ask "pastors of churches to give at least one service during the year to the subject of Sabbath observance." The other one was the following:

"(2) Resolved, That we endorse the bill proposed by the Churchman's League and approved by the District Commissioners for the observance of the Sabbath in the District, and pray that it, or some other, adapted to the needs of the city, may become a law."

The first speaker was Bishop Satterlee, who spoke of the bill as follows:—

"I want to say a few words about this bill that has just been introduced into Congress. Of course this country is made up of many men of many minds; and I think that all civilization tells us that it is very unwise for a government to pass a law that the people will not, or cannot fulfill—that will become inoperative. Lord Salisbury said a very profound truth in one very small sentence some years ago when he said, 'One of the first points for a ruler to consider, or a Prime minister to consider, is not what is ideally best, but what is best under the present circumstances.' You will probably find that the bill will not satisfy the ladies, and it does not satisfy its promoters; but it is the best we can get. This bill, it seems to me, is very good. It does not satisfy me, or you; but if we all unite upon it, let us use all our influence in its favor. It will be a great gain if this bill is passed, at least I think so. Perhaps those who are behind me will speak in a different way regarding it."

Bishop Satterlee was followed by Bishop Hurst, who, however, avoided saying anything about the bill. In this he was wise. Bishop Hurst was followed by Professor Whitman, who, of the bill and what is expected of it, said:—

"There is no more important thing for us to bear in mind than that the things we are doing in Washington are known and read of all men. Most cities can do things for themselves—by themselves. The doings of Washington are National doings. It is therefore a matter of greater satisfaction to all of us who are interested in the well being, who are interested practically in the well being, the enterprise, the best good of this country, to feel that all Christian people, all well disposed people, are joining hands in the interest of the bill that has been spoken of this morning.

"I endorse very heartily the words that have been spoken. The bill is not an ideal bill considered from the Christian point of view; but it is a very much better bill than it seemed likely we could get. We can get no farther in this matter than we can carry the common sense of the community. Far better to have no law at all on the question of the Sabbath, than that we should have a law on the Sabbath that is continually violated.

"A law generally marks the highest point that sentiment has reached. The utmost that a law can serve ordinarily is as a sort of bulwark. Every statute must serve as a sort of safeguard and give us a point to which we can continually refer, that we can keep the public sentiment up to that point. I rejoice therefore that it has been possible to enlist Christian men and women of all beliefs in our city in defence of the bill to which reference has been made—for the names that are behind this bill are simply representative names.

"This is important. It is a significant thing. Public attention has been called to the fact that the President's proclamation this year at Thanksgiving is the first pronounced Christian recognition of Thanksgiving which our Government has ever made. And I know no other way to account for this advance over previous years than as an appeal to the general sentiment which has been growing in favor of the recognition of God as the central fact of our national life. I think the proclamation is at once a repetition of that sentiment, and a concession to it.

"It is of the utmost importance for all these reasons that we push on in the lines indicated."

So, then, "A bill to further protect the first day of the week as a day of rest" and which distinctly declares that "This Act shall not be construed . . . to prevent the sale of malt and spiritous liquors as now provided by law"—that "is a very good bill." Yes, it undoubtedly is a very good bill for the liquor traffic. And "it will be a great gain, if this bill is passed." Yes, it will certainly be a great gain to the liquor business. For when everybody is forbidden, under penalty of from five to fifty dollars, to engage in any kind of honest labor, play, sport, pastime, or diversion, on Sunday, while the bill makes this express provision for the liquor traffic, there can be no room for doubt that it will be an immense gain to the liquor business, if this bill is passed.

No, certainly, "This bill is not an ideal bill considered from a Christian point of view;" but it can be hardly anything less than an ideal bill from the whiskey point of view; from the point of view of idleness, carousal and deviltry.

And Dr. Whitman rejoices "that it has been possible to enlist Christian men and women of all beliefs in our city [of Washington] in defense of the bill." He and everybody else ought to be ashamed of it.

Yes, it is an important and a significant thing that "the names that are behind this bill are simply representative names." It is a pity and a disgrace that these representative names of professed Christians should represent so much favor to the liquor traffic and its baleful accompaniments, that they would deliberately frame a bill prohibiting honest labor while at the same time exempting and sanctioning the sale of malt and spiritous liquors, on Sunday, if it is only "provided for by law."

A Just Criticism.

THE Rev. D. M. Talmage, pastor of the Reformed Church of Westwood, N. J., recently drew upon himself severe denunciation from Christian Endeavor workers connected with his congregation, by a criticism of the Society pledge. He compared it with the Saviour's last commission to his disciples, with the ten commandments, and with the Lord's prayer, and said that the pledge was too weak.

The particular points of his criticism were, that the Christian Endeavor pledge puts striving in the place of doing, sets up the human conscience instead of God's holy law as the standard of duty, and rests upon human promises. "God's promises to us are important," he said, "not our promises to Him. God does not ask me to promise Him anything."

In this Mr. Talmage touches the vital weakness of the whole Christian Endeavor movement. His criticism is true. The pledge is weak—as weak as are all merely human promises. There are many places in which a human promise is proper and necessary; but as a means of righteousness it is weak indeed. It is true that God does not ask man to promise Him anything. He knows that man's promises are altogether too weak to serve His purposes. What God does ask is that men shall have implicit faith in His promises to them.

The Christian Endeavor hosts must face this truth, disagreeable though it be. Their whole movement is vitally, fatally weak—not weak as regards politics, or the changing of the structure of government or of society—but weak as regards the righteousness of God. Like some of the Jews of old, who went about "to establish their own righteousness," those embraced in this movement "have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." If they have done so before, they cease to do so when they adopt the Christian Endeavor methods, for such methods cannot work out that righteousness. The only Book which tells us anything about that righteousness declares plainly that it "is revealed through faith." It cannot be revealed by any amount of electioneering, balloting, legislation, or other manner of political procedure.

FREEDOM OR BONDAGE—WHICH?

Faith is belief of God's word. The Scriptures cite us to the faith of Abraham. "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness." His belief was not a mere intellectual assent to the truth of God's word; it was an "Amen!" to that word. Abraham believed that God would perform what He had promised. God had promised that his seed should be as the sand of the seashore. As Abraham waited for the fulfillment of this promise, and continued childless, he finally engaged in what doubtless seemed to him a truly Christian endeavor to fulfill the promise. The result was Ishmael, the child born "after the flesh." But Isaac, not Ishmael, was the child contemplated in the purpose of God. Ishmael was the child of works; Isaac the child of faith.

Through faith, and not through the works of man, the divine purposes are to be fulfilled.

Abraham did all that any man can do to carry out the purposes of God. But he accomplished absolutely nothing toward the realization of that which he so earnestly desired. His execution of God's promise did nothing at all to advance the cause of righteousness in the earth. His attempt was the most flat and dismal failure that could be imagined. It only placed an obstacle in the way which had to be set aside in the real fulfillment of the promise. "Cast out the bond woman and her son; for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman." Just so must it be with every attempt to fulfill God's purposes through the works and the wisdom of man.

It is the purpose of God that righteousness shall fill the earth. He has promised that it shall be so. His prophets have prophesied of the establishment of His kingdom, and the subduing of the forces of evil that dominate the earth to-day. But how will all this be done? Will man now work out the purposes of God, by the power and methods which he has learned to use? or will those purposes be wrought out now, as of old, through faith? Shall we account that God is able to do and will do what He has promised, or shall we set our own puny, fallible hands to fulfill His promises? These are questions the Christian Endeavor forces would do well to consider before proceeding further in the work of gaining control of political power to "enthroned Christ on Capitol Hill."

The commission of Christ to his followers is, to go into all the earth and preach the gospel to every creature. These are the marching orders for all who would engage in true Christian work. Not to do this, is to proceed contrary to Christ's word; and this is to proceed without faith. The Christian Endeavor forces, in their schemes to take possession of civil governments and wield political power, are proceeding without faith, and therefore without divine power. The Word of God authorizes no such endeavors.

All such efforts can only work against the righteousness which is of faith, which is God's righteousness, and the righteousness that will be manifested in His kingdom.

THE idea of Presidential paramountcy in our Government is a natural and logical development of the idea of the paramountcy of brains and wealth in trade. The two go hand in hand. Together they are leading the Republic away from Thomas Jefferson toward Napoleon Bonaparte, from democracy toward imperialism, from freedom toward dictatorship and tyranny.—New York Journal.

RELIGION ceases to be holy from the day in which it is nothing more than a political institution.—De Pressensé.

That "Great Discovery"!

THE one leading object of the "Christian Endeavor" work for 1897, is to make universal the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath, and instead of the Sabbath. And this is to be accomplished by whatever means can be employed.

In performing its part in the business, the Christian Endeavorer begins its campaign for the year, by booming a fraud. The Endeavorer declares this fraud to be the greatest discovery since Columbus discovered this Continent—"As important in theology as the discovery of America was in geography."

This "great discovery," this fraud in fact, is that the Sabbath of the Lord, the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, was not the seventh day, but "occurred on fixed dates like one's birth-day or the fourth of July." And yet they call it the "weekly Sabbath"! Henceforth then all the people may expect Independence Day to occur, and may prepare to celebrate it, weekly on the fourth of July throughout the year: their birth-days likewise may be celebrated weekly throughout the year. That is a great discovery. And it is as plain as A B C that it is as great a fraud as it is a great discovery.

Yet the Christian Endeavorer actually booms this thing as so great a truth that among other great things to be accomplished by it the Endeavorer "trusts" that "The Jews throughout the world . . . will be led to observe Sunday."

This is a great thing of course, and so are some of the other things "trusted" for by the Endeavorer; but the greatest of all, the thing that brings most satisfaction to the soul of the Endeavorer, the thing that makes it fairly leap for joy, is the halorious fact that by this dismal fiction "The Seventh-day Adventists are left without any standing whatever;" and "The Seventh-day Adventists will simply have no reason for existence." How great indeed must be the Seventh-day Adventists, in the view of the Christian Endeavorer, when a thing that is hoped to leave them "without any standing whatever," and without any reason for existence, deserves to be boomed as the greatest discovery of ages! If the Seventh-day Adventists are really so important an element as this, we hardly expect them to be put out of existence by this fraud, gigantic as it may be.

MR. F. L. BOYNTON, member of the law firm of Boynton & Smith, Kingfisher, Oklahoma Territory, who for some time has been doing a good work in supplying with Christian papers the prisoners in the jails of the Territory, has enlarged the field of his truly Christian endeavor to include "families too poor to subscribe for papers, yet who hunger for Christian reading; and families who are indifferent to Christianity, but who might become interested through good reading." He asks that all who are willing to coöperate with him in this, will send him their address. On receiving your address he will send to you the addresses of persons to whom the papers may be sent; and then you send the papers, postage prepaid, direct to the readers. This will not only supply reading matter to those in need of it, but it will put you in direct communication with those people so that you can do further Christian work in their behalf. We bespeak for Mr. Boynton a hearty Christian response from all our readers.

Is This Laudable?

ONE of the judges of the Supreme Court of the State of New York—Roger A. Pryor—seems to think himself the special guardian of Sunday as "the Christian Sabbath." A Hebrew society applied for a certificate of incorporation. The society desired to hold its annual meeting on the second Sunday of January, each year. The certificate was denied—not because any law prohibited it, but because in the judge's opinion, "In the State of New York the sabbath exists as a day of rest by the common law and without the necessity of legislative action to establish it."

The judge acknowledges that "The question is not whether such meetings on Sunday are illegal; but whether they should be approved by a justice of the Supreme Court;" and then gravely observes, "A thing may be lawful and yet not laudable." That is to say, that without any law judges may curtail the liberty of the citizen according to their own individual view of what may or may not be laudable. And the judge's view of what is laudable may spring from his own personal religious bias; yet that is to make no difference—it is to be imposed upon the citizen, and must be submitted to by the citizen, anyhow; because, though not lawful, he considers it laudable.

Judge Pryor says that "The members of the proposed corporation are of a race and religion by which not the first but the seventh day of the week is set apart for religious observance"; but that "The law which scrupulously protects them in the observance of their ceremonies gives them no license, and I am sure they have no desire, to affront the religious susceptibilities of others." That is the doctrine and the principle of the fullest possible religious despotism. For when I know that others in what they do have no desire to affront my religious susceptibilities, and then I prohibit them from doing those things lest they affront my religious susceptibilities, it is plain enough that my "religious susceptibilities" is only another name for an exceedingly despotic spirit—a spirit that would compel everybody to conform to my religious notions.

So as the conclusion of all this the judge says that "Because the holding of corporate meetings on Sunday is contrary to the public policy of the State, if not to the letter of the law, I decline to approve the certificate." And bear in mind that this "public policy of the State" is not what the people have declared by constitution or statute, but only what the judges without law and against the Constitution have decided to be the public policy of the State because according to their religious notions they consider it laudable.

Indeed, Judge Pryor follows this view so closely that in a case a few days later he refused a certificate to another organization, because their articles provided for holding the annual meetings on the last day of every year, and therefore said meetings would sometimes fall on Sunday!

And we are required to suppose that such things as this are laudable!

THE Catholic Review, of January 3, considers Justice Pryor's decision so laudable a thing that it proceeds heartily to laud it in the following fashion:—

"It is well that our citizens should have from time to time an authoritative reminder that this is a Christian land; a land in which the Christian religion is a part of the fundamental law. Such a reminder has quite recently been twice given by Justice Pryor in the Supreme Court on the occasions when he refused certificates of incorporations to societies whose constitutions required or implied the holding of merely business meetings on Sunday. Both of these had for their objects nothing, apparently, that was not lawful and proper, and both were composed of Hebrews who keep the Sabbath on Saturday.

"The point made by Justice Pryor is that Sunday is a sacred day, to be kept free from business, and that this is so not merely by virtue of the statutes, but also of the more fundamental law, the unwritten law that makes Christianity a part of our system.

"We have several days in the course of the year that are by law exempted from the ordinary obligations of business, such as Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, Independence Day, and the like, which owe their existence to statutory enactment and are therefore described as 'legal holidays.' But though our statute law recognizes Sunday, to which it usually refers as 'the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday,' and though that statute law has sought to protect Sunday from profanation by enactments varying between rigidity and laxity, yet Sunday as 'the Lord's day' is not a 'legal holiday,' it is an institution of our system, such that, if by any chance, no mention of it occurred in our statutes yet would it be upheld by our courts as a part of the law of the land."

From this ready indorsement and use that is made of that decision, it will be seen that it is the most far-reaching thing that has been done toward a universal Sunday-religious despotism since the "Christian nation" decision of the United States Supreme Court.

Judge Pryor's Sabbatarian Novelty.

New York Journal.

JUDGE ROGER A. PRYOR, of the Supreme Court of this State, who a few days ago came out strong for Americanism, has now emerged with equal vigor in favor of Sabbatarianism. A number of orthodox Jews had applied for leave to incorporate a religious society, and Judge Pryor denied the application because the proposed charter provided that the society's annual meetings should be held on the second Sunday in January of every year. Such meetings, in the opinion of the judge, would be "contrary to the public policy of the State, if not to the letter of its law. A thing," he adds, "may be lawful and yet not laudable," which is axiomatic, but does not apply in this case.

This is a novel doctrine in a nation whose birth was due to a desire for religious liberty and whose Constitution guarantees its citizens against interference with their personal liberty within the law. But it is perfectly reasonable, as appears upon reflection. The people choose certain men to be judges over them, men endowed with superhuman virtue and superhuman wisdom, men like Judge Pryor and Magistrate Mott and Justice Divver and the judges of the late Mr. Tweed's time. If they should not supplement the laws enacted by their fallible fellow-citizens with their own virtue and wisdom they would fail in their obvious duty and would not be able to put a good face on it when they come into the presence of the Supreme Tribunal hereafter. The law is only a means to the great end, and not so good a means as Judge Pryor's and Magistrate Mott's heaven-inspired wisdom.

A thing may be lawful and yet not laudable, you know.

That Promised Prosperity.

IN the last three weeks of 1896 there was a failure of a national bank for nearly every business day of that time, carrying down in their train other banks that were connected with them. In the last eight weeks of the year, of business failures of all kinds there were seventy-five more than in the same period of the year 1895.

Of course there are explanations readily offered by those who, before election, made the promises of great prosperity, provided the election should go the way it did go. The most remarkable of these explanations, because it is the most authoritative as well as the most scientific, is that which was given out December 30, by the Comptroller of the Currency, with reference to the failure of the national banks.

He gravely informs the country that one of these banks belonging to the national system was closed, "because of a want of immediately convertible assets." Oh! indeed. Would it be impertinent to inquire, How many banks, unless they were deliberately wrecked, were ever closed except "because of a want of immediately convertible assets"?

When a person dies nowadays, and the doctor does not know what caused death, the public is usually informed that he died of "heart failure." But unless a person is instantly killed, he never dies of anything else than heart failure. For whatever may be the matter with him, so long as his heart keeps going, that is, so long as his heart does not fail, he cannot die. The explanation that is given by the doctor of the national finances, as to why this bank failed, is precisely of the same character as that of the other doctors in the cases mentioned.

His explanation of the results of the failure of "the second largest bank in the city" of Chicago, is that "no other result followed than the failure of institutions for which it had long been the feeder." Well, dear sir, so far as other banks are concerned, when, in fact, could any worse result ever follow the failure of a bank? It is hardly to be expected by anybody that the failure of one bank could result in the failure of another with which it had no connections.

After such "explanations" as this, it is not to be wondered at that he assures the country that instead of these bank failures being taken as any real cause of apprehension, they should be looked upon as "quite the reverse," and taken as a special assurance to public confidence.

He says, that "It would be remarkable if, after the long strain of a political campaign turning so largely upon the discussion of the money question, with aggressive earnestness on the part of both contending parties, some bank and business undertakings did not feel the strain and give way." And this after months of continuous assurances, in which the Comptroller himself was personally engaged, that if only the election could be made to turn as it did, unalloyed prosperity would surely attend every branch of trade and industry!

Everybody knows that the promised prosperity has not come. The Comptroller's statement shows that he knows that it has not come; and therefore he tries to coax it to appear. He says that "It ought to be recognized that capital is not to be drawn out by threats of destruction to it, and will not be. It ought also to be recognized that when the institutions which deal in the handling of credit are compelled, through continued fright of the people, to keep in their vaults excessively large reserves, every branch of manufacturing trade and commerce must languish. The loss from all this, in the largest measure, falls upon the great body of the people who are dependent upon the activities maintained through the extending of credit by banking institutions. The desirable thing, therefore, is to have them loaning, and not hoarding, and their depositors drawing their checks for the purpose of transferring property, instead of to obtain money to place in safety vaults."

To be sure all this "ought" to be so, but it is not so. If all this were so, the promised prosperity would be prevalent. But as it is no more so now than it was before the election, those promises of prosperity were altogether vain.

Let us not be misunderstood. We do not say that the promised prosperity would have come, even had the other side won in the election campaign. If the election had gone the other way, we do not believe that times would have been any better than they are. They might have been worse. And even in the way the election did go, the times may be worse than they now are. We believe they will be worse.

And this is simply to say that in the election campaign the vital causes of present conditions were not dealt with at all. When these causes were discerned, as in some instances they were, they were dodged or beaten back, and a false issue made the all-important thing.

There may be faults in the financial system of the United States; but this is not the cause of the hard times. And such not being the cause of the evils, the cure cannot be found in any schemes of finance. The source of the trouble lies far back of all these things. It lies with the people themselves, as individuals. And as the source of the trouble lies back of the Government itself, no governmental remedies that may be applied will relieve it. No reform will be effective, but the reform of the individual. Of all places in the world, this must be so in a government which is of the people.

Yet as plain as this truth is, it is a fact that, with one exception, every movement for reform that is to-day attempted in the United States is aimed at the Government rather than the individual. Temperance reform has been turned altogether upon the Government. "Sabbath reform" is aimed altogether at the Government. And even what professes to be Christian Endeavor only, is directed almost wholly to an endeavor at reforming the Government. All this is directly the reverse of every principle of the Government of the United States, as well of every principle of Christianity; and therefore can never be anything but the reverse of that which is beneficial to both the Government and the individual.

Shall It Be Reform or Ruin?

At the annual banquet of the New England Society, lately held in this city, Hon. E. J. Phelps made the principal speech, in which he referred to last year's election contest, in the following words:—

"We have passed through a crisis that in my belief is the greatest this country has encountered. The distinguishing quality of this contest has been that it inaugurated for the first time in this land a controversy not merely between sections—which is bad enough—but between classes, which drew the line horizontal instead of perpendicular, separated the more fortunate from the less fortunate."

"The war is not over. One battle has been fought, but the prosperity that sanguine men looked for to follow immediately upon such a victory, has not come. . . . What this country demands is prosperity. If that returns this contest that we have been through will not be renewed. If it does not return it will be renewed, and God only knows what will be the result of it under these circumstances."

No, that promised prosperity has not come. Not only has it not come, but there are no more signs of it to-day than there were a year ago.

There is, however, prosperity of a certain kind that is entirely too prevalent for either the public good or the good of those who enjoy it. It is the kind of prosperity that is manifested in the following account of a reception given in this city on Christmas night for the two dogs named, to four other dogs:—

"The guests of Pet and Trix [these "guests" were the four other dogs] had a supper of candy, cakes and ice cream, served to them by beautiful women in evening dress. The guests of Pet and Trix drank crystal water from saucers of Sevres and Limoges. They were entertained with quadrilles danced by women only, to the music of a chorus of women. Canary birds in a cage enlivened the evening's harmony with their prettiest trills. The old parrot whom Pet and Trix have been taught to regard with reverence said nothing insolent or even frivolous.

The guests of Pet and Trix went home with new ribbons and bouquets of violets. They were invited to come again on New Year's night."

Mr. Phelps and others may cry out all they please against "class-hatred" and against the growing "contest between classes which draws the line horizontal;" but so long as such things as this are carried on while multitudes are in want for the necessities of plainest living, they will cry out in vain.

The AMERICAN SENTINEL has no part in this contest of the classes. We have nothing to do with those who on either side would do aught to excite class-hatred. At the same time, it is but just to remark that the people who engage in such scenes as this dog reception, do more in a single night to excite class-hatred and urge on such a contest as Mr. Phelps deprecates, than anybody else could possibly do in months of agitation. We deprecate class-hatred and class-contest as much as Mr. Phelps or anybody else can. Yet at the same time we know that practically it is absolutely useless to deprecate it, or to cry out against it, so long as these practices prevail, which can only the more excite it.

Mr. Phelps says that if prosperity returns the contest of classes through which the country has passed will not be renewed. At the same time he observes truly enough that the prosperity that was promised and which sanguine men looked for has not come. There can be no doubt that those on the losing side in the late contest are even now as quiet as they are, in hope of the prosperity that was so abundantly promised, provided the election should go as it really did. If that prosperity is not realized, or if times should grow worse, the danger is that when they again enter upon the contest they will do so with the determination to have what they want, promises or no promises, and if prosperity does not come they will bring it. And when that contest does come again, as Mr. Phelps well says, "God only knows what will be the result of it under these circumstances."

If the idle rich could pause in their senseless extravagance only long enough to read a few pages of the last days of the republic of Rome, or of the "ancient regime" immediately preceding the French Revolution, surely they could not fail to see that they are dancing on a volcano. Human nature will have to be changed before they can carry on those practices without exciting and deepening class-hatred. "Can we forestall ruin by reform? If we wait to be forced by events, we shall be astounded to find how much more radical they are than our utopias. Louis XVI. waited until 1793, and gave his head and all his investitures to the people who in 1789 only asked to sit at his feet and speak their mind. Unless we reform of our own free will, nature will reform us by force, as nature does. Our evil courses have already gone too far in producing misery, plagues, hatreds, national enervation."

As for us we know that by the gospel of Jesus Christ, by the power of the word of God, human nature can be changed. To this end we propose to work. Instead of attempting to allay class-hatred by crying out against it, when every day's practices of the idle rich only tend to create and deepen it, we hope so to present the truth of God that men will believe on him to everlasting life; to the destruction of all hatreds, all animosities, all selfish ambitions, all discontents; and to the patient waiting for his Son from heaven. This is the only right remedy. We wish all would apply it.

"National Conscience."

Chicago Dispatch, Dec. 18, 1896.

REV. DR. C. A. BLANCHARD, a college president and a man of unquestionable ability, undertook to prove in an address at Willard Hall yesterday afternoon that the "national conscience," whatever that may be, needs quickening by legislative enactment. The gentleman took his stand in favor of fastening the ship of State to the ship of Zion, and having it towed to the port of its manifest destiny by the Captain of our salvation. He differed radically from the views recently set forth in a Dispatch editorial on Christian citizenship.

We would like to ask the doctor how he and his followers expect to arrive at the "national conscience." Metaphysicians generally agree that conscience is the monitor that approves of what is right, or is thought to be right, and disapproves of what is wrong, or is thought to be wrong, in the individual life. But one system of philosophy may be opposed to another, and yet the schoolmen of each be honest and sincere.

The reply that Christianity universally recognizes the Christ and his divinity is no argument in favor of making him the law-giver through God's, revealed word. The question would arise: Whose Christ is to be enthroned? The Arminians'? Presbyterians would object to this, for those who accept the Westminster confession cannot reconcile creative omnipotence with absolute free moral agency in man.

And Arminians would object to the Christ of Calvin, and both schools would sacrifice blood, if need be, to keep the Christ of Leo XIII. out of our organic law.

The irrepressible conflict between doctrinaires proves the utter impracticability and impossibility of the Bible becoming an organic law.

As the Dispatch said, in the editorial referred to, under such a system, Jews, non-believing Gentiles and agnostics, would be shut out from participation in civil affairs, thus violating a fundamental principle of this Republic—that all men are created equal.

To say that the agnostic, even, should have no vote is bigotry, whether it come from the pulpit or the pew.

Government is neither moral nor immoral—it is non-moral, and its weal depends on the integrity of those in authority.

The gentleman declared that 2,000,000 men in America, employes of corporations, are forced to work on Sunday because the natural affections prompt them. Their wives and children demand it. If they refuse to obey their masters, many of whom are ostentatiously "pious," they are discharged. But all this could be changed.

Let legislation be so shaped that every willing hand will find an opportunity open for honest industry. Then, when a man refuses to work seven days in the week because of his religious scruples, there will not be ten men ready to grab his job and comply with the corporation rules, a conspicuous feature of which is sabbath desecration.

Meantime, the Dispatch would like to have some adherent of Dr. Blanchard describe a composite conscience—one that would fit all the people.

The Workings of Trusts.

A WRITER in the Independent, of December 31, in justifying the organizing and the workings of trusts states more frankly than we have seen before, the facts with reference both to labor trusts and business trusts. This article strikingly confirms the statements which we made in these columns a few weeks ago that the effect of all these trusts is to grind out of men every vestige of individuality, and leave them not even machines, but only parts of a vast machine. To his mind "individualism" has been carried to the extreme and has broken down; and these trusts have taken its place in the grand march of "Progress."

The writer of the article says that he is a manufacturer, and from the article itself we should gather that he is a member of a trust. The particular passages relating to the two kinds of trusts, run as follows:—

THE LABOR TRUST.

"The interior structure of labor organizations is a curious commentary on the economic current of the times, and serves well to point the moral of extreme individualism and the competitive system of business. The Union has as its cardinal principle the right of every member to a full day's pay for a full day's work. The rate is fixed as high as possible; the endeavor is to secure as much pay for as little work as possible. This is the true business instinct as business is now conducted, and it has its counterpart in the aphorism of the merchant (which is often the burden of the drummer's "instructions"): "Get the highest price you can!"

"Each member of a union pledges himself to support the Union and obey its rules. These rules are adopted by majority vote, after free debate; and if a member dislikes a rule he must either obey it or leave the Union. The minority has absolutely no power, and its only right is that of debate. The most important rules are those regulating the wage-rate and the hours of work. No member is to accept less than the Union's full day's pay for a full day's work. There is in it no recognition of superior ability; a carpenter is but a carpenter, a plumber but a plumber, a weaver, a weaver. Time and its compensation are the sole considerations.

"What chance is there under the Union's discipline for the display of special faculty? The law of individualism is that each shall freely exercise the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and in this exercise find his true destiny, secure the fruits of his skill. But the Union steps in to deny this right, to crush the diverse tendencies, the particular abilities of the individual, to force every worker to the level of the whole. It does not admit superior ability. It takes away the spur to ambition and extra effort.

"There is no reason why a member should be a specially skilful workman; for he has no chance to rise, and there is no compensation for his skill. The Union's rules are admirably adapted to the leveling of men. The workman's wages, hours of labor, fellow-workmen and work are chosen for him, and his individual interest is sunk in the interest of the Union. The ideal union is the one whose roll of membership includes all the workers of a trade; and when this ideal is attained, and in some trades it is almost attained, the wages of all might as well be paid into a common treasury, to be used in the maintenance of the members and their families. This is Communism.

THE BUSINESS TRUST.

"The method of the Trust is eminently practical. A number of distillers or rubber-makers enter into an agreement regarding certain main points in their respective lines of business, such as the prices of goods, the yearly production, the fields of operation, etc. If the combination includes all of the principle producers of a given line, the price is placed as high as the market will permit. If there are important producers outside the combination, the price is often fixed below the profit, sometimes below the cost point. The object is to drive competitors into the Trust, or out of the business.

"The market is divided into districts, perhaps, and each producer has the sole right to sell in one of these districts; or, each producer may make a certain grade of goods and nothing else; or, it may be, certain producers will be shut down entirely, on the ground that there is no field for them. In any case the result is the same, for the whole revenue is turned into a common treasury. The most economical plan is the most efficient and the best for each and all.

"The yearly demand is calculated by experts, and "over-production" is avoided by making the yearly output conform to it. It is as simple as the Rule of Three. Economies are effected in every direction. No large sums of cash lie idle in products awaiting a market. Where a dozen houses had a dozen drummers traveling a district, the Trust has one or two, occasionally, when strong enough, none at all, for the dealer is forced by the demand to seek the Trust. The advertising expense becomes trifling. Where there was an office and clerks for each producer, there is now one general office, the Trust's. These advantages show themselves upon the ledger, and are the basis of goodly dividends.

"But, under this system, what has become of the individual? Free competition gave a capitalist the right to fix the prices of his goods, the right to choose his field of operation, the right to determine the rate and volume and character of his product. The Trust denies him this right, usurps so much of his power, and destroys to this extent his business individuality. The fundamental conception of the Trust is—Capital. It does not admit superior ability; where capital is equal, power is equal. It can curtail the influence of the ablest, repress his special faculty, by forcing him to submit to the dictation of the richest. Its effect is distinctly leveling.

"The Trust is thus the natural child of the competitive system, just as the Union is. The workman is sinking his individual interest in the interest of the Union, and the employer is finding his individual interest in the interest of the Trust."

Church and State.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

WHEN the union of the State with the Church was first formed in the days of Constantine, it no doubt appeared to the dignitaries of the Church that the Church would reap great advantages thereby, and that there would be no drawbacks to the Church. So far as the Church was relieved from direct persecution, and in her gain of great popularity and increase of worldly honor and power, the Church calculated rightly; but, at the same time, the transfer of its dependence from God to the State destroyed the spirituality of the Church. In another way, also, the Church clogged its own wheels by its union with the State. When the Church united to the State, it yielded up certain of its rights. A union of the Church with the State is a game of give and take. When the bargain was first consummated, the Emperor Constantine became also the absolute umpire in all matters pertaining to the Church. He was to be consulted in reference to the appointment of the bishops of the different dioceses of the empire, and in Church matters generally.

Other emperors and kings have claimed the same privileges, even to this day. Naturally there have been differences of opinion in regard to who should be appointed, especially since the Papacy was established as a sovereign and political power and the bishops became actual princes; and this often led to conflicts of authority in the State. The history of the troubles and wars arising from the conflicts between the civil powers and the pope and bishops, form no inconsiderable part of European history. All these difficulties would never have arisen had there been no mixture of the civil and religious powers.

These conflicts have not ceased; to-day they frequently break out in Germany, Hungary, Italy, and France. Lately there has been a cabinet crisis in France involving this very question. The Radicals took the ground that the French priests have no right to hold a congress or convention, because they are State officials. This is true because, since Church and State are not yet entirely severed in France, the priests in their appointment must be sanctioned by the State, and they are also paid by the State. There was much discussion in the Chambers, and it was disclosed that the government had warned the priests that they must use no more such language as they had used in the late church council at Rheims. The Radicals were defeated; but the event has drawn aside the curtain long enough for us to see that it is not the best state of affairs for a Church to be so united to the State that the State can direct its policy; but it must be so when the Church consents to receive aid from the State. A paid servant must do his employer's bidding. A Church and State union is really a kind of a mutual concession of both parties by which each party agrees to allow the other party to mind the other party's business! On the main principles of union they agree well, but the quarrelling comes in when the unavoidable and vexing details which are its product are being carried out.

This plan, with all its vexatious consequences, has been on trial for centuries, and its results have been evil and only evil. The fathers of our nation were students of history. They saw these evils, and determined to avoid them by entirely separating Church and State in this country. Under this system, both Church and State have prospered. But the Church is not satisfied. Many American Christians long to have the ægis of the Government thrown over the Church. They hope thus to be able to dictate to the State, and, of course, they may to some extent. But they forget that such a plan will also allow the State to dictate to the Church. They would think it a grand thing to have the State enforce their Church dogmas; but should the State refuse to sanction the election of a bishop, the appointment of a presiding elder, the installation of a pastor, or throw out a caution as to what priests or ministers might or might not say in a convention, they would not enjoy it so well. Yet all this would come in time. They ought to look at both sides of the question, and study the disadvantages as well as the supposed benefits, before they commit themselves to a Church and State theory. Why do they not do this? Has history no voice, or are those who seek a union of the Church with the State blind to reason and deaf to the voice of history?

A PREACHER of this city, David James Burrell, D. D., is trying to work up a general protest of the churches against the methods of the daily newspapers, and against the Sunday newspapers altogether. As a justification he declares "We have a right because we have the power." "We are strong enough to have our way in New York City; and New York City pitches the time for the other cities of the land. Let us act." This principle, or rather want of principle, that might makes right, is fast becoming the accepted justification of the main efforts of the church leaders. But it is altogether antichristian.

News and Notes.

THE managers of the Brooklyn baseball club have decided that the club will play Sunday games during the next season. This, however, is only one side of the subject. The preachers will be heard from later.

Now that the United States Government has professed religion, the natural question arises, What church will it join? Will it join the leading church—the Roman Catholic—or some one of the smaller churches?

SHORTLY before the holiday recess Representative Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, introduced into Congress a petition from the Christian Endeavor Union of that State, representing 207,000 members, asking for a Sunday law for the District of Columbia.

CARDINAL GIBBONS has expressed himself on the subject of the Sunday newspaper. He is quoted as saying that a Christian should select for Sunday reading only a paper that is clean and of high moral tone, and should resolve not to read it until he has first attended service at church.

ONE leading object of the "Religious Amendment" party is to obliterate from the public mind all distinction between the terms "secular" and "irreligious." This Government was made secular, but it was not made irreligious. A large majority of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and of those who framed the Constitution were professors of the Christian religion.

THE General Conference of Congregational Churches, recently in session at Winsted, Connecticut, appointed a committee to draft a Sunday law "which shall state fairly and clearly existing public opinion on this subject, and shall also be enforceable," and "to ask the enactment of some such law by the legislature." The latter body will begin its session this month.

THE five Roman Catholic bishops of the Province of Quebec have unanimously refused to accept the terms of the settlement of the Manitoba school controversy, and press dispatches state that the situation there is such as to amount to "a practical declaration of war between the Roman Catholic Church and the Liberal Party, headed by the Premier, Wilfred Laurier."

AN action has been brought in a Detroit (Mich.) court to restrain the Board of Education from enforcing the use of the book of prepared Bible readings in the public schools. The action is based upon the ground that the State Constitution forbids the legislature to pass any measure requiring any person to attend a religious institution, or levying a tax to support such institution.

THE New England "Sabbath Protective League" has brought an action against the proprietor of the Boston Theater, for allowing a concert to be given there Sunday, the 27th. The law, however, allows the giving of "sacred" concerts, and the court is waiting before granting the warrant until it shall have been decided by "expert testimony" whether the concert was sacred or otherwise.

"THE pastor of a Boston church," says the Christian Register, in a late issue, "last Sunday reminded his audience that, as late as 1830, a number of people were lying in jail in England because they had not attended the parish church. He suggested that, if the same rule were applied to his congregation, a hundred or more would meet the same fate." When preachers have recourse to such facts as this to stir up their congregations, it is easy to see what they would like; and when they shall have succeeded in securing conditions especially favorable for Sunday church attendance, by shutting off all labor on Sunday and all Sunday amusements, through the Sunday legislation which the Church forces are now working to secure, the next step, if the people still absent themselves, will be to affix a penalty for non-attendance. The logic of that movement has not changed at all since 1830.

THE Pope, it seems, is not satisfied with possessing a powerful Swiss body guard, but wants an army at his disposal. A press dispatch from Rome, dated December 29, reports an audience given by the Pope to a body of men representing the old "pontifical army," in which he said he had received offers from Canada, Ireland, and elsewhere from people who were ready to hasten to the defense of the Papacy, and that he "hoped the moment would soon come when he would see himself surrounded anew by sons as faithful and as well beloved" as those which had comprised the old army.

The speech is said to have produced a deep impression in all circles in Rome; but why should it be thought strange that the church of Rome, whose boast is that she never changes, should be as desirous now of controlling a military power as she was before the Pope became a "prisoner" in the Vatican?

The Colorado Sanitarium.

One thing above all others which has made Colorado celebrated, not only throughout this country, but the civilized world, is its invigorating and health-giving climate. Many people have found relief in this State where to-day they are classed as leading citizens of the commonwealth, who, had they remained at home, would long since have filled untimely graves. Many famous pleasure and health resorts are to be found. Homes for the afflicted, and hospitals for the treatment of disease have been established in nearly every city.

One of the latest ventures of this kind is the Colorado Sanitarium, a picture of which is presented with this sketch. This institution is located at Boulder, twenty-nine miles by rail from Denver, the capital of the State, connected with the same by the Union Pacific, Denver and Gulf R. R., several trains running each way daily between the two cities.

Boulder is the University town of the State, possessing one of the leading educational institutions in the West. It is a quiet little city of six thousand inhabitants, beautifully laid out, its buildings constructed for the most part of pressed brick, presenting a most wholesome and pleasant picture. It is a city of both the mountain and the plain, crowded close up against the foot-hills of what the pioneer Spaniard termed the Sangre de Cristo, or "Blood of Christ;" the snow-capped peaks of the everlasting mountains rising in grand sublimity supply the view to the south and west of the town; while stretching away to the eastward and northward as far as the eye can reach lies a beautiful undulating plateau, dotted with fertile garden spots and thrifty ranches.

The climate in which the Sanitarium is located is most delightful. The air is bracing, yet warm and balmy; even during the winter months, while the nights are sometimes quite crisp, the days are as delightful as a day in May or June. Mountain climbing and rides up the beautiful rugged cañon at the mouth of which the Sanitarium is located, through scenery ever changing and most picturesque, afford special advantages by way of pleasure and recreation to those in search of health, or rest from fatigue, mental or physical.

Out of the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year during 1895, 340 days were days of almost cloudless sunshine. The advantage of such weather to those who need out-of-doors life cannot be estimated. The air is heavily charged with ozone and electricity, and has a wonderfully tonic effect upon those whose physical powers are in any way lessened by over work, or disease.

Its benefits to those suffering with pulmonary troubles are unexcelled by any other climate in the world. It is equally advantageous to those suffering with dyspepsia, and sufferers from all chronic disorders. One can reside in the revivifying air of the Rockies but a short time before finding his relish for food materially increased. The enfeebled lungs take on new power and capacity; the weak and disordered becomes strong and capable of doing its work; the emaciated form puts on new flesh; the glow of health is seen in the former sallow countenance; and the whole man feels invigorated and revived by a new flow of life's electric current.

To add to these natural advantages, at the Colorado Sanitarium may be found every agency of known value to the medical profession in the treatment of disease. The main building is a four story brick structure, one hundred by one hundred and twelve feet, supplied with all modern improvements, heated by steam, lighted by electricity, well ventilated, with perfect sewerage, elevators, electric call bells, etc. Commodious bath apartments occupy two floors. In these apartments baths of every description, including the electric light bath, are administered by trained attendants under the direction of skilled physicians.

Electrical treatment is administered in its various forms. A large and well-equipped gymnasium for the development of the physical powers, under the management of trained directors, is maintained.

In the Laboratory of Hygiene, bacteriological, chemical, and microscopical investigation is carried on.

Special advantages, including medicated air rooms for the continuous inhalation of medicated air, are afforded to patients suffering with catarrhal, bronchial, asthmatic, and other lung troubles.

Aseptic operating rooms, and surgical wards are likewise connected with the institution for those needing surgical treatment.

A classified dietary of wholesome and healthfully prepared hygienic foods, with table service equal to the best city hotels, is furnished the guests.

The various departments of the institution are in charge of competent physicians, specialists in their lines, men and women who have graduated from Ann Arbor University, and other leading Eastern colleges. The same methods of treatment so long and successfully used in connection with the Battle Creek Sanitarium (Michigan), are employed in this institution. Indeed, some of the specialists so long connected with the parent institution at Battle Creek are now in charge of the work at Boulder.

There are many tired, sick, overworked men and women in the great centers of the East, who need for the winter months a milder climate such as may be found in Colorado, and the bracing, tonic treatments to be had at the Colorado Sanitarium. Many suffering from throat and lung difficulties, and dyspepsia in its various forms, would find great relief in the bracing air of the Rockies.

The nearly one hundred patients now at the Colorado Sanitarium, represent many States, and nearly every form of chronic disease. To all who may think of availing themselves of its advantages, the Colorado Sanitarium can promise the most courteous attention, and the employment of every means for the recovery of health.

Gentlemen: Wash day has been made easy by the use of the "Cyclone;" have given it a thorough trial. Did a large washing for myself, and assisted a neighbor besides; have washed two very heavy spreads, two quilts, a bed tick, and a few other heavy articles. We get the real worth on these heavy articles more than we can on the common machine. I haven't got to be the last to put my washing out either.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 21, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 3.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

WE have set permanently at the head of our columns that the AMERICAN SENTINEL is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

It is published in the interests of Christian religious liberty first of all, over all, in all, and through all, because that in the realm of the spirit of man, Jesus Christ is the Author of religious liberty and of nothing else.

Jesus Christ created man. He created him with such a nature that his only happiness and his only good can be found in serving his Creator with all his heart, all his soul, all his might, all his mind, and all his strength. For such is "the first of all the commandments."

Yet for all this, the Creator made man so perfectly free that it rests altogether in the man's own choice as to whether he will serve his Lord at all. It was so in the beginning, in the garden; it is so yet, and for evermore; because man in his creation is an element in "the eternal purpose which is purposed in Christ."

Therefore the word in which are revealed the counsels of the Creator in this eternal purpose, that word which liveth and abideth forever, rings out to all, through all the ages, "Choose ye this day, whom ye will serve." "Whosoever will, let him come, and take of the water of life freely." "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world."

His word is "the word of life." It is the word of eternal life—the word of life of the eternal One. To whomsoever that word comes, in this there comes to him eternal life. To reject that word is to reject eternal life. And to reject eternal life is to choose eternal death.

He who rejects eternal life, in that very thing judges himself worthy of eternal death. He who chooses eternal death, thus passes sentence of death upon himself. Therefore it was spoken to them of old, and is written to all, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life," etc. "See I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; . . . therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live."

Thus it is that the Lord can say truly, "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not." That is the truth: and when in that Great Day, the unbelieving meet eternal death, they receive only that which they have freely chosen. And though the Lord created man in the beginning for the highest of all possible destinies, and, when the man by wrong choice lost the way to it, gave Himself that the man might after all attain to it; yet He still leaves him absolutely free to accept or reject this destiny at his own choice.

CHRISTIANITY AND ANTICHRISTIANITY.

This is Christianity. This is the divinely-ordained freedom of mankind in religious things. We ask then, Why will not all professed Christians recognize it and act accordingly? They cannot deny that it is the principle of the word of God: why do they not stand unswervingly upon it? They cannot deny that it is the word and the example of the Lord Jesus: why then do they not in strictest integrity "walk as He walked"?

It is perfectly plain that to swerve a hair's breadth from this principle is to forsake Christianity. For Christians to act in any point or in any degree contrary to this word of Christ, is to act the part of antichrist. This is as plain as that two and two make four.

And yet the professed Christians of almost all sorts are working in almost all ways, to get governmental power in their hands by which they propose to compel men to observe the Christian Sabbath; to compel men to submit to the will of the Church; to compel men by human laws to accept "the reign of Christ on Capitol Hill." Who does not know that this is so?

And because all such work is antichristian, this is first of all why the AMERICAN SENTINEL is uncompromisingly opposed to it. It is first of all in the interests of true Christianity, of genuine allegiance to the word of God, that we oppose the Christian Endeavorers, the mis-called Christian Citizenship League, the National Reformers, and the whole Church combination of the country, in their efforts to control the civil power. In this matter their endeavor is antichristian. Its only influence is to misrepresent Christianity; its only result will be to envelope men more and more in antichristianity.

CONSTITUTIONAL RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IS CHRISTIAN.

The AMERICAN SENTINEL is published also in the interests of constitutional religious liberty. And this because constitutional religious liberty is Christian. The provision respecting religious liberty in all the Constitutions of this country, is the correct statement of the principle announced by Jesus Christ as to the total separation of His religion from all governmental recognition.

Nor was it an accident that this is so. The original provision on this subject, which has been followed in all the Constitutions in this country, is distinctly declared to be so enacted because of this principle of Christianity. Here it is with the leading reasons for it, as written by Thomas Jefferson, in 1779:—

“Well aware that ALMIGHTY GOD HATH CREATED THE MIND FREE; that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishments or burdens, or by civil incapacitations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, and are a departure from the plan of the HOLY AUTHOR OF OUR RELIGION, who being Lord of both body and mind, yet chose not to propagate it by coercions on either, as was in His almighty power to do; that the impious presumption of legislators and rulers, civil as well as ecclesiastical, who, being themselves but fallible and uninspired men, have assumed dominion over the faith of others, setting up their own opinions and modes of thinking as the only true and infallible, and as such endeavoring to impose them on others, hath established and maintained false religions over the greatest part of the world, and through all time; that to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves, is sinful and tyrannical.

“Be it THEREFORE enacted by the General Assembly, That no person shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burthened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinions or belief; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in nowise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities.”

We repeat: This is the original statement, upon which the provisions respecting religious liberty, of all the constitutions of the country have been modelled. This original statement was so framed, in order NOT TO BE “a departure from the plan of the holy Author of our religion.”

Let it be borne in mind too, that this original statement of the Christian principle as a constitutional provision was in an earnest campaign against an attempt of a religious combination to secure governmental recognition of “the Christian religion.” Thus in the origin and establishment of the form of government that is distinctively American, an attempt to secure governmental recognition of “the Christian religion” was uncompromisingly opposed expressly in the interests of the Christian religion and in order not to depart from “the plan of the holy Author of our religion.”

SOME UNDENIABLE TRUTHS.

It is therefore undeniable that this provision in all the Constitutions is the expression of the principle announced by Jesus Christ on this subject, and was intended by those who made it, to be in harmony with “the plan of the holy Author of our religion.”

It is also undeniable that in upholding and defending this provision of the constitutions of the States and the Nation, we are maintaining the vital principle of Christianity for States and nations.

And it is further undeniable that all these churches, leagues, societies, and combinations, that are insisting on the governmental recognition of the “Christian” religion in legislation, jurisdiction, and otherwise, even though they call themselves Christians, are violating vital Christian principle; are departing from “the plan of the holy Author of our religion;” and are taking a course that is positively antichristian.

Let us not be misunderstood. We do not say that the people of these churches, leagues, and societies, are knowingly and intentionally taking an antichristian course. We simply say, what is plain enough, that they are doing it—without any question or impeachment of their motives. We willingly do them the justice really to think that if they knew it, they would not do it.

The priests, the Scribes, and Pharisees, of Judea did not knowingly and intentionally take the antichristian course that they did in crucifying the Lord of glory. If they had known it, they would not have done it. Nevertheless they did it. And they could not have done it any more completely had they known it. Their ignorance as to what they were really doing, did not alter the nature of what they really did. It only lessened the measure of their guilt in the doing of it. And it was proper for the Christians in that day, to tell those church leaders and religious combinations that they had taken an antichristian course and had crucified the Lord of glory.

So it is now: It is an antichristian course that these professed Christian Endeavor Societies and Christian Citizenship Leagues and Christian churches are taking in their efforts to have the “Christian” religion recognized by the governments, State and national, in their jurisdiction and legislation.

It is antichristian, in that in so doing they override constitutional provisions that are expressive of the principle announced by Jesus Christ for governments, and that were established expressly to place and to keep these governments in harmony with "the plan of the holy Author of our religion."

It is antichristian also, in that it is in violation of the vital principle of the government of the Creator and the essential happiness of the worshipping creature.

And it is perfectly proper for the Christians of to-day to point out to them and to all, that such a course is antichristian both doctrinally and constitutionally, even though it be unintentionally.

Therefore as the vital principle of the government of God and the happiness of worshipping creatures is the perfect liberty of the individual, exercised freely upon his own choice; in order to publish a paper in the interests of true religious liberty, it must be published in the interests of religious liberty—CHRISTIAN.

And as the provisions of the American constitutions separating religion and government, are expressive of the principle announced by Jesus Christ for governments, and are thus in harmony with "the plan of the holy Author of our religion," the AMERICAN SENTINEL in being published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian, is published also in the interests of religious liberty—CONSTITUTIONAL, because constitutional religious liberty is Christian.

"If religion is in itself inviolable, it is so no longer when it has ended in a true political society, a corporation which is owner of a portion of the soil. As such, it falls under the power of the State, . . . and its independence decreases in proportion to its political importance, except the government of society should quickly pass into its hands. That which is political in its constitution naturally subjects it to the fluctuations of opinion on the best organization of the State."—De Pressensé.

Christianity and the Common Law.

In his recent decision denying a certificate of incorporation to a Jewish society because it was to hold some of its meetings on Sunday, Justice Pryor, of the Supreme Court of New York, affirms that "In the State of New York the Sabbath exists as a day of rest by the common law." His authority to make this statement is borrowed from the idea which has acquired a show of legal authority in this country, that Christianity is a part of the common law under the State government. That this idea is itself without any real authority, or the slightest foundation in truth, is evident when considered from the Christian standpoint.

What is Christianity? Can it be a part of a human code? Can it be anything of human manufacture? Can it be comprised in statutes, or in customs and observances which have acquired the force of law? If Christianity be a part of the common law, these questions must be answered in the affirmative.

But no truthful affirmative can be given them. Christianity is not a form or set of forms; it is a power, and it is nothing less than the power of God. It is life; for according to the word of its divine Author, he who believes on Jesus Christ has been raised to life from a state of death in trespasses and sins. His life as a Christian is wholly different from his life as an unbeliever. The things which he once loved, he now hates, and what before he hated, he now loves. If his conversion has been genuine, this difference is plainly manifest. He has been "born again." He has received a new creation.

There is no power, no life in law. A statute has no power to execute itself, or to compel obedience from any. Obedience to any human law is secured either by the strength of right principles in the individual's heart, or by fear of the consequences of transgression. There is nothing in the statute which can affect the heart, or supply any power toward the performance of that which it requires.

It will be said, however, that by the statement that Christianity is part of the common law, it is meant only that Christian customs and observances are established in the common law, being recognized and supported by it, as in the case of the "Christian Sabbath." Customs and observances, however, even he they such as the Scriptures enjoins, can at most be but the letter of Christianity, which without the Spirit is a lifeless form. To enforce the letter of Christianity without the Spirit can benefit no one. On the contrary, it is the worst injury, spiritually, that could be inflicted: "The letter killeth; but the Spirit giveth life." 2 Cor. 3:6. As there is no life in it without the Spirit, to enforce the letter is but to enforce spiritual death. And this is what it means to enforce Christianity as a part of the common law.

Nothing more utterly anti-Christian could be conceived. As no condition could be worse, spiritually, than that of the one who holds Christianity itself as a lifeless thing, and in whom the very light is darkness, so nothing more opposite to Christianity could be devised than the scheme of forcing an individual to accept the forms of Christianity, without the power.

The very worst state of things, spiritually, that is to exist in the world, is that foretold by the Apostle Paul in his letter to Timothy, where he says that "in the last days" "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers," etc., "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." The mere "form of godliness" goes hand in hand with all the sins that God's Word denounces. And this form of godliness can be enforced by law, but the power of godliness cannot be enforced. Hypocrisy can be enforced, but piety cannot be enforced. And where the power of godliness is lacking, there must be hypocrisy, and sin of every kind.

A form of godliness without the power of godliness is not Christianity. But when the State forces the forms of godliness upon its citizens, it enforces them as Christianity, and those who receive them through the agency of the State receive them as Christianity. They might not accept them as such upon the word of the secular authorities, but they are not prepared to dispute the assertions of the preachers who are behind the civil authorities in all such work. And thus Christianity itself is made death to them, and ere long they loathe it as they would a corpse. And if they are rigidly bound to it by the law, all the manhood that is in them will resolve to be freed from it at any cost. No man will tamely submit to be bound to a thing that is dead.

Such are some of the indisputable facts that pertain to the blasphemous doctrine that Christianity is part of the common law.

Jefferson on "Christianity a Part of Common Law."

As might be expected, so monstrous a fiction as that "Christianity is part of the common law" did not have its birth in any legitimate way. It started as a "judicial forgery;" but once set going, was adopted and fostered by English judges of the times until it attained full legal growth, and has been bequeathed to our own time as a genuine thing. No less an American and legal authority than Thomas Jefferson has exposed this fraud, and his statement leaves it without any cloak for its true character. Jefferson's words on this point are contained in a letter dated at Monticello, June 5, 1824, written to Major John Cartwright, then of London. Referring to a volume which the latter had sent him on the English Constitution, Mr. Jefferson said:—

"I was glad to find in your book a formal contradiction at length of the judiciary usurpation of legislative powers; for such the judges have usurped in their repeated decisions that Christianity is a part of the common law. The proof of the contrary which you have adduced is incontrovertible. . . . But it may amuse you to learn when and by what means they stole this in upon us. . . . Here I might defy the best-read lawyer to produce one scrip of authority for this judicial forgery; and I might go on further to show how some of the Anglo-Saxon priests interpolated into the text of Alfred's laws the 20th, 21st, 22nd, and 23rd chapter of Exodus, and the 13th of the Acts of the Apostles, from the 23d to the 29th verses. But this would lead my pen and your patience too far. What a conspiracy between Church and State!"

Of the occasion of this judicial forgery, and the use made of it by the English jurists, Jefferson says:—

"In Quare impedit in C. B. H. 6, fo. 38, the defendant Bishop of Lincoln pleads that the church of the plaintiff became vacant by the death of the incumbent; that the plaintiff and I. S. each pretending a right, presented two clerks; that the church being thus rendered litigious, he was not obliged by the ecclesiastical law to admit either until an inquisition de jure patronatus in the ecclesiastical court; that by the same law this inquisition was to be at the suit of either claimant, and was not ex-officio to be instituted by the Bishop and at his proper costs; that neither party had desired such an inquisition; that six months passed, wherein it belonged to him of right to present, as on a lapse, which he had done. The plaintiff demurred. A question was, how far the ecclesiastical law was to be respected in this matter by the common law court. And Prisot (c. 5.) in the course of his argument uses this expression: 'A tels leis que ils de saint eglise ont en ancien scripture, convient à nous à donner credence; car ceo common ley sur quel tonts manners leis sont fonde s.' . . . Finch mis-states this in the following manner: 'To such laws of the church as have warrant in Holy Scripture our law gives credence,' and cites the above case and the words of Prisot in the margin. (Finch's law. B. I. c. 3. published 1613.) Here we find ancien scripture converted into Holy Scripture, whereas it can only mean the ancient written laws of the church. It cannot mean the Scriptures: 1st. Because the term ancient scripture must then be understood as meaning the Old Testament in contra-distinction to the New, and to the exclusion of that, which would be absurd and contrary to the wish of those who cited this passage to prove that the scriptures, or Christianity, is a part of the common law. 2nd. Because Prisot says 'ceo (est) Common ley sur quels tonts manner leis sont fonde s.' Now it is true that the ecclesiastical law, so far as admitted in England, derives its authority from the common law. But it would not be true that the Scriptures so derive their authority. 3rd. The whole case and arguments show that the question was, how far the ecclesiastical law in general should be respected in a common law court. And in Bro's Abr. of this case Littleton says, 'les juges del Common ley prendra conusans quid est lex ecclesie vel admiralitates et hujus modi?' 4th. Because the particular part of the ecclesiastical law then in question, viz.: the right of the patron to present to his advowson, was not founded on the law of God, but subject to the modification of the law-giver, and so could not introduce any such general position as Finch pretends. Yet Wingate (in 1658) thinks proper to erect this quotation into a maxim of the common law, expressing it in the very words of Finch but citing Prisot. Wingate, Max. 3. Next comes Sheppard (in 1675) who states it in the same words of Finch and quotes Y. B., Finch and Wingate. 3. Shep. Arb. tit. Religion.

NO AUTHORITY.

"In the case of King and Taylor, Sir Matthew Hale lays it down in these words: 'Christianity is parcel of the laws of England.' (I. Ventr. 293. 3. Keb. 607.) But he quotes no authority. It was from this part of the supposed common law that he derived his authority for burning witches. So strong was this doctrine become in 1728 by additions and repetitions from one another that in the case of The King v. Woolston the court would not suffer it to be debated, whether to write against Christianity was punishable in the temporal courts at common law, saying it had been settled in Taylor's case, ante, 2 str. 834. Therefore Wood in his Institutes, lays it down that all blasphemy and profaneness are offenses by the common law, and cites Strange, ubi supra, Wood, 409. And Blackstone (about 1763) repeats, in the words of Sir Matthew Hale, that 'Christianity is part of the laws of England,' citing Ventr. and Str. ubi supra, 4. Bl. 59.

Lord Mansfield qualified a little by saying, in the case of the Chamberlain of London v. Evans, 1767, that 'The essential principles of revealed religion are part of the common law.' But he cites no authority and leaves us at our peril to find out what in the opinion of the judge, and according to the measure of his foot or his faith, are those essential principles of revealed religion, obligatory on us as a part of the common law. Thus we find this string of authorities, when examined at the beginning, all hanging on the same hook, a perverted expression of Prisot's, or on nothing, for they all quote Prisot, or one another, or nobody. Thus Finch quotes Prisot; Wingate also; Sheppard quotes Prisot, Finch, and Wingate. Hale cites nobody; the court in Wollston's case cites Hale. Wood cites Wollston's case; Blackstone that and Hale; and Lord Mansfield, like Hale, ventures it on his own authority.

"In the earlier ages of the law, as in the Year Books, for instance, we do not expect much recurrence to authorities by the judges, because in those days there were few or none such made public. But in later times we take no judge's word for what the law is further than he is warranted by the authorities he appeals to. His decision may bind the unfortunate individual who happens to be the particular subject of it, but it cannot alter the law.

"Although the common law be termed the Lex non scripta, yet the same Hale tells us: 'When I call those parts of our laws Leges non scriptæ, I do not mean as if all those laws were only oral; or communicated from the former ages to the latter merely by word. For all these laws have their several monuments in writing whereby they are transferred from one age to another, and without which they would soon lose all kind of certainty. They are for the most part extant in records of pleas, proceedings and judgments, in books of reports and judicial decisions, in tractates of learned men's arguments and opinions, preserved from ancient times and extant in writing.' (Hale's Common Law, 22.)

"Authorities for what is common law may, therefore, be as well cited as for any part of the lex scripta. And there is no better instance of the necessity of holding the judges and writers to a declaration of their authorities than the present, where we detect them endeavoring to make law where they found none and to submit us, at one stroke, to a whole system no particle of which has its foundation in common law, or has received the 'esto' of the legislator. For we know that the common law is that system of law which was introduced by the Saxons on their settlement in England, and altered from time to time by proper legislative authority from that to the date of the Magna Charta, which terminates the period of the common law or lex non scripta and commences that of the statute law or lex scripta. This settlement took place about the middle of the fifth century, the conversion of the first Christian king of the Heptarchy having taken place about the year 598, and that of the last about 686.

CHRISTIANITY NO PART OF IT.

"Here then was a space of two hundred years during which the common law was in existence and Christianity no part of it. If it ever, therefore, was adopted into the common law it must have been between the introduction of Christianity and the date of the Magna Charta. But of the laws of this period we have a tolerable collection by Lambard and Wilkins; probably not perfect, but neither very defective; and if any one chooses to build a doctrine on any law of that period, supposed to have been lost, it is incumbent on him to prove it to have existed and what were its contents. These were so far alterations of the common law and became themselves a part of it, but none of these adopt Christianity as a part of the common law.

"If therefore from the settlement of the Saxons to the introduction of Christianity among them that system of religion could not be a part of the common law, because they were not yet Christians; and if having their laws from that period to the close of the common law we are able to find among them no such act of adoption, we may safely affirm (though contradicted by all the judges and writers on earth) that Christianity neither is nor ever was a part of the common law."

The foregoing is only a part of Jefferson's argument, but sufficient for the purposes of this article. The full text is given as an Appendix to Jefferson's "Reports of Cases Determined in the General Court of Virginia, from 1730-1740, and from 1768-1772," published at Charlottesville, Va., by F. Carr and Co., 1829. His letter constitutes an effectual answer on the point in question, to the decision of the Supreme Court of New York in the case of The People vs. Ruggles, and of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in the case of Updegraff vs. The Commonwealth, rendered shortly before it was written, and frequently cited within recent years in support of laws for the enforcement of Sunday.

Upon a judicial forgery and a monstrous fiction utterly antagonistic to Christianity, therefore, rests Justice Pryor's statement constituting the basis of his decision, that "In the State of New York the sabbath exists as a day of rest by the common law."

At least one member of the Wisconsin legislature has received a communication from the "Superintendent of Christian Citizenship" of the City of Racine, giving him the following information:—

"Arrangements have been made whereby the record of each legislator during this coming season will be forwarded to our superintendent of Christian Citizenship and he will make it his business to see that your constituents know of your record in this legislature; therefore it is to your interest as well as theirs to see that your record is kept clear and above all comment. We assure you that we do this with an object of aiding you as well as the cause we champion.

"Respectfully yours,

"G. C. HARNEY,

"Supt. of Christian Citizenship."

The Daily Advocate, of Green Bay, Wis., says that the gentleman whom it refers to as having received this letter, "interpreted the letter as a threat, as indeed would most people, and he lost no time in replying: at the same time pointing out to Mr. Harney the impertinence which characterized the letter he had written."

It is perfectly plain that these mis-called Christian Citizenship managers are determined to work themselves into places as regular political bosses, and run the governments of States and the nation solely in the interests of what they choose to hold as Christian. They will never stop till they make the religious power dominate the civil as thoroughly as ever it did in Puritan times or the Middle Ages.

Philadelphia Times, Jan. 4, 1897.

At the morning service yesterday in Chambers' Presbyterian Church, the pastor, Rev. Thomas A. Hoyt, D. D., took as the subject of his discourse, "The Ministerial Union and Politics." His text was from 2 Cor. 5:20: "We are ambassadors for Christ." Dr. Hoyt spoke as follows:—

An incident of recent occurrence is the occasion of this sermon. At a meeting of the Ministerial Union of Philadelphia and vicinity, composed of ministers of the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, one of them read a paper, in which were severely criticised the Government of the United States and the great powers of Europe for not having made war on Turkey. I protested against our meddling with affairs of State, and intimated that it were more becoming in us to call men to prayer than to arms. This met with derisive laughter. In the discussion which ensued, some asserted the propriety of ministers urging war and of treating of politics in the pulpit.

It is proper to state that large numbers of the ministers of these several denominations were absent from the meeting, and hence are not parties to this controversy. Of those present many disapproved of the action taken, either wholly or in part, while others yielded to a momentary enthusiasm against their better judgment. My contention is with the accidental majority that uttered or applauded political and belligerent sentiments which I thought and still think inconsistent with our spiritual office.

MINISTERS AMBASSADORS OF CHRIST.

The Ministerial Union will not meet again for three months. Meanwhile the subject thus forced upon public attention demands consideration. We are bound to "commend ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God by the manifestation of the truth." Our fellow-citizens are asking whether the preacher of the gospel is a "free lance," who may talk in the pulpit and ministerial meetings about everything—politics, ethics, æsthetics, economics, sociology, and the ballot box. They also doubt the propriety of the ministers of the Prince of Peace "crying havoc and letting slip the dogs of war." And the further question arises, whether the present decline of the ministry in public estimation is not due in part to their neglect of the one thing needful, while entertaining their audiences with trivial things. To these weighty matter I now invite your serious attention.

The text declares ministers of the gospel to be ambassadors for Christ.

As an earthly ambassador ever anxiously seeks to please his government, so the ambassador of Christ must, above all things, "strive to please not men, but God." If it would be disgraceful in an ambassador to lower his country's flag before a foreign nation, how much more shameful in us to trail Christ's banner in the dust at the demands of men!

The message of the pulpit is positive, immutable truth, based on "Thus saith the Lord." The habit of mind engendered by such a style of thinking and speaking disqualifies the minister in a measure from dealing with politics, which is the science of probability, the art of expediency.

How pitiable, in the eyes of the people of Philadelphia, must have appeared that clerical conclave, engaged in hot debate upon the foreign politics of the nations of the world! How offensive to good taste the bombastic periods in which the governments of the earth were admonished of their errors and summoned to their duties!

PULPIT NO PLACE FOR POLITICS.

But the plea was made that when politics touch ethical questions, ministers as such may treat of them. This I deny. Ethics, as well as politics, is excluded from the pulpit. Ethics is not religion, and religion is the one theme of the pulpit. Ethics is a natural science as much as psychology or physiology. It was cultivated in pagan Greece and Rome, and was completely severed from religion. Aristotle and Cicero taught a better system of morals than Paley and the whole tribe of Utilitarian philosophers, of whom our political preachers are the disciples.

To preach ethics, aside from the sanction of Scripture, the atonement of Christ and the graces of the Spirit, is not Christian preaching. This is the essence of Unitarianism, and the weak point in so many schemes of moral reform. It was the preaching of an outward morality that paralyzed religion in Great Britain and America during the last century, from which decay God aroused His Church in both continents by the true gospel, proclaimed through Whitfield, the Wesleys, and Jonathan Edwards.

The minister of Christ is not authorized to discuss politico-ethical questions.

I plead the example of Christ and his apostles, who lived under an imperial despotism, and yet said: "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," and "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers." Here I take my stand and maintain that the ministers of Christ do not hold a roving commission to correct all evils—political, moral, social. They are not knights errant, prancing forth with lances at rest, to fight everything in sight, even though it be a windmill.

They are ambassadors for Christ, whose single duty it is to obey their instructions. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Like the old prophets they bear "the burden of the word of the Lord."

They are styled "stewards of the mysteries of God," and are admonished that "it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."

They are commanded to "preach the word;" to "preach Christ crucified;" "Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God;" "the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation."

They are with the apostle to determine not to know anything among their people "save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Like Him they must abjure all else, and exclaim: "God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world."

The gospel ministry is the noblest function of humanity. It is an embassy of mercy from heaven—"To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them, and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

So great an office demands all our powers. Let us not fritter these away on temporary affairs. You want to reform the world. Preach Christ, who is the only true Reformer.

Thus I leave the issue between the Ministerial Union and myself in the hands of our common Lord and to the Christian conscience of the people of Philadelphia.

A Sample Sunday Law.

THE New Orleans Times-Democrat, of Jan. 3, 1897, publishes a list of regulations in force in that city a little less than one hundred years ago, which had "for their object the maintenance of good order and tranquility" in the community; among which we note the following:—

"1. All persons, of whatsoever class, who, under any pretext whatever, will have the audacity to blaspheme the name of God our Lord, the Virgin Mary, our Lady, or sacred things, or make use of threatening oaths, will incur the penalties established by the laws of these kingdoms. All workmen or artisans, without exception, of whatever class or profession it may be, who will be convicted of having worked on Sunday or a holy day, during which one can only attend to work in cases of necessity by especial permission, will be sentenced to a fine of $10, or if he is insolvent, to six days' imprisonment; and his employer will pay double the amount.

"It is prohibited under penalty of twenty-four hours' imprisonment, to run carts on holy days and Sundays."

Another section provides that "billiard rooms must not be opened on Holy Days until after the High Mass."

Of course, "good order and tranquility" are very essential things in any community, and it must devolve upon the civil authorities to maintain them. This is the alleged ground of justification for all Sunday laws, and it is just as good justification for this particular Sunday law as for any other that was ever passed.

This law bears the stamp, it is true, of having been passed in the interests of the Roman Catholic religion; but what of that? All Sunday laws bear the stamp of some religion; for it is only religion which gives Sunday a distinction from other days of the week. Is there any choice to be made between a Roman Catholic Sunday law and a Methodist, Baptist, or Presbyterian Sunday law? Have not Roman Catholics an equal right with all others in this respect?

The fact that this Roman Catholic Sunday law prohibited work on other "holy" days than Sundays, only shows the ultimate state of things to which Sunday legislation leads. The Roman Catholic Church was the pioneer church in Sunday legislation, and her legislation with respect to "holy days" rests upon the same foundation as that pertaining to Sunday. Both are justified by the same logic. Sunday is itself only a "holy day;" and if work can properly be prohibited on one such day, it can properly be forbidden on all.

If "good order and tranquility" can be promoted by enforcing idleness on one "holy day," they can be promoted by the same means on all such days. And assuredly good order and tranquility ought to be promoted at all times.

It may be doubted, of course, whether enforced idleness is at all conducive to good order and tranquility. The facts of experience do not testify that way. But as Sunday legislation must be enacted by the civil authorities, if at all, some way must be found to justify it upon civil grounds. Hence we have Sunday laws along with laws against blaspheming "the Virgin Mary, our Lady," to preserve "good order and tranquility," and also as "sanitary measures," to promote the public health, etc. It would be safe to say that religious legislation is as justifiable upon the one ground as on the other.

The fact that the religio-political forces of the country are already engaged in the work of manufacturing "holy" days out of the national holidays, only adds to the evidence that their zeal for Sunday legislation will lead them in the same path taken by Rome. So that it is altogether likely that ere long the American nation will have attained to the point of progress and civilized enlightenment occupied by New Orleans under Spanish domination near one hundred years ago!

The photographers of Michigan are following the example of the barbers, and are calling for a special act of the legislature closing picture galleries on Sunday. The Michigan Christian Advocate, Jan. 16, 1897, says: "We do not consider such an act necessary." And further remarks that "All these men have to do is to shut up shop." Good. That is the very thing the AMERICAN SENTINEL has been saying all the time to every call for any kind of a Sunday law. The words of the Advocate are just as true of every kind of a movement for a Sunday law, as they are of this one. We only hope all the Advocates and all other papers and people will take this position and stand there forever.

Christian Citizenship—Ancient and Modern.

THE Protestant churches of the country, represented in the Christian Citizenship department of the Christian Endeavor Society and the National Christian Citizenship League, propose to establish the kingdom of God in the earth through the instrumentality of human legislation.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP BANNER.

For the benefit of those who have not read the recent issues of the AMERICAN SENTINEL, two quotations are reprinted to show the objects of the Christian Citizenship movement:—

“What is my work as a member of the good citizenship committee? It is to enthrone Christ in every town and city in the State, to have every mayor and every councilman a Christian, then Christ will rule.”—Official Report of the Fourteenth International Christian Endeavor Convention. (Boston, 1895.) p. 215.

“Not until the kingship of Jesus Christ is established over our land and the world, and his teachings made the rule in all public affairs will the Christian Citizenship League have achieved its purpose to prepare the way of the Lord. And then it shall be found that not only has the way for His coming been prepared, but that he has indeed and in truth come.”—The Christian Citizen (Dec. 1896), the official organ of the Christian Citizenship League.

This method of establishing the kingdom of Christ on the earth is not new. It has been often tried and as often has failed. It was first attempted by Constantine and the bishops of his day. One would suppose that the terrible results both to Church and State of that first attempt would furnish an everlasting warning to Christians not to repeat the attempt, but instead of being warned, there are those connected with the Christian Endeavor movement who are so blind to the ruin wrought by that attempt, as to believe that when Church and State were united in the days of Constantine, it was really Christianity that wrapped itself in purple robes and ascended the throne of the Cæsars!

Here is the statement to that effect:—

“In less than three centuries from the ascension of Christ, Christianity, in the person of Constantine the Great, had ascended the throne of the Cæsars and wrapped itself in the royal purple, and ruled the Roman Empire.”—Id. p. 38.

Any man or organization of men that teaches that Christianity ascended the throne of the Cæsars as a result of the Christian citizenship schemes of Constantine and the bishops of his time, has wrong conceptions of both Christianity and citizenship. And in proportion as these teachings are accepted and acted upon by the people of the United States, just in that proportion will both Christianity and civil liberty disappear from the land.

There was a time in the history of Protestantism when the Christian citizenship movement of the Church in Constantine's time was regarded as the destroyer of primitive Christianity and civil liberty.

After quoting that famous article in the Augsburg confession which condemns the confusion of religion with politics, the greatest Protestant historian says:—

“With what wisdom, in particular, the confessors of Augsburg protested against that confusion of religion and politics which, since the deplorable epoch of Constantine, had changed the kingdom of God into an earthly and carnal institution!”—D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation, Book XIV., chap. VII., par. 34.

Inasmuch as Baptists are now so prominently connected with Christian Citizenship, a comment from one of their historians on the Christian Citizenship of Constantine's time is here quoted to show how these Baptists are leaving the old landmarks.

Dr. Thomas Armitage in his “History of Baptists; Traced by their Vital Principles and Practices” has this to say of Constantine and Christian Citizenship:—

“He is said to have seen the cross in the sky, but possibly his Christianity had borne a higher character had he discovered love for the true cross of Christ in his soul: crosses in the firmament are of rather light moral worth. Unfortunately, it was years after this traditional vision that his nominal Christianity allowed him to kill his son, his second wife and others of his family. Full of ambition and passionate resentment, it would require considerably more to-day than a sky miracle, a sword in the hand, and a conquering army at the Malvian Bridge to give him membership 'in good standing' in the Baptist Church recently established at Rome. It is said that the cross in the heavens was attended with the inscription: 'By this sign conquer!' What, and whom? His own sin? His own soul? It seems not. But rather lordship to an unregenerated heathen? This cross story needs revision."—pp. 297, 298.

Inasmuch also, as Christian Citizenship, indorsed by so many Baptists, now proposes to have "his [Christ's] teaching made the rule in all public affairs," another quotation from Dr. Armitage is made to show how the bishops sought and obtained the national sanction of their views of Christ's teachings, and its results as seen by a Baptist.

Describing the Council of Nicæa as it sat waiting for the entrance of Constantine, its Christian Citizenship chairman, Dr. Armitage makes use of this eloquent and truthful language:—

"Alas for them! with all their fortitude, the simplicity of the Upper Room, the 'piece of broiled fish and the honeycomb,' had given place to royal apparel, princely fare, and 'kings' houses;' but there was no Son of man returning fresh from Edom. They sat waiting in solemn silence; but a new head of the church came in, and they rose to do him reverence. . . . The sword of nations and the shepherd's crook lay at his side; but where was the Good Shepherd who laid down his life for the sheep? This is Cæsar, and not 'another King, one Jesus! . . . How are the mighty fallen! Their lawful sovereign and good friend was hailed as their head, and they waited for his 'image and superscription' to attest their orthodoxy. For the first time the old Baptist churches of the world are found crouching at a monarch's feet! Farewell, soul liberty, hie thee to the wilderness for a time!"—pp. 203, 204.

This is the Baptist view of that first attempt to establish the kingdom of God on the earth by means of "purified politics." However, the contemporary Christian Citizenship view as expressed by Eusebius is that then was fulfilled "the prediction of the holy prophets, according to what they uttered ages before, 'and the Saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom.'"—Oration in praise of Constantine, chap. iii.

So blind were the church leaders in the days of Constantine that when they had laid aside the pilgrim garb and donned the purple robe; when they had exchanged the "sword of the Spirit" for the scepter of civil power; they really thought the saints of the Most High possessed the kingdom. But instead, as Dr. Armitage says, there was "inflicted a blow upon the Christian system from which it has not yet recovered."

And as surely as this was true of the Christian Citizenship movement in the fourth century, just as surely is it true of the Christian Citizenship movement of the nineteenth century. And as then so now the mournful warning will be given, "Farewell, soul liberty, hie thee to the wilderness for a time."

CONSTANTINE'S CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP BANNER.

"It is described as a long pike intersected by a transversal beam. The siken veil which hung down from the beam, was curiously enwrought with the image of the reigning monarch and his children. The summit of the pike supported a crown [wreath] of gold which enclosed the mysterious monogram, at once expressive of the figure of the cross, and the initial letters [Greek] of the name of Christ."—Gibbon, vol. 3, chap. 20, p. 12.

Maxentius and Rome and a throne. At the beginning Jesus had made himself king in Zion, to disallow all imperialism there; and did he now rise from his throne to hang his cross of peace an ensign of blood in the firmament, and to indicate that he turned over his universal

A PROMINENT speaker at the recent compulsory Sunday observance convention in Chicago, said:—

"It has been the immemorial custom of our courts and legislatures to follow precedents, and from materials collected from the effete past, from decisions rendered and statutes enacted when the conditions of society were wholly different from what they are under our newer civilization, to construct Procrustes beds upon which they seek to stretch the great issue of the present, chopping, cramping and straining them as mercilessly as did the legendary giant of Athens his fated victims. In this case the victim resists, and thereupon occurs a struggle between the hoary Procrustes of Conservatism and the youthful giant of Progress..”

This was not intended to describe the descent of Sunday legislation from the Church-and-State regimes of antiquity, and its conflict with the spirit of liberty and progress to-day; but it could not possibly apply to anything more perfectly.

Christian Citizenship.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

THIS new phrase, “Christian Citizenship,” is now claiming the field of discussion. To some it seems to present the remedy for all the great evils which threaten our national, social, and personal welfare: To others it appears to be the germ which, cultivated to a successful growth, will constitute an evil more far-reaching and destructive to the individual, society, and the nation, than any of the present or past evils which have stricken our political institutions with the mildew of corruption.

“Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.” This being true, governments can justly exercise no power except derived power. This nation of ours is a “government of the people, by the people, and for the people.” Thus the people themselves are the Government.

This can properly be expressed in other words thus: The people acting together as a government, can exercise no power except what they have, as single individuals, consented to place at the disposal of the mass. The consent of the governed is expressed in the capacity of single individuals, by the exercise of the right of franchise in voting. In this way the individuals indicate what measures they favor, and pledge what power they have to carry them out. At the same time perhaps, and in the same way, they choose agents to accomplish their governmental desires.

The citizen as an individual thus gives his consent to the government, and the government in this way derives power or authority to act. What is termed an officer of government, only has a right to execute the will of the people expressed in the vote. If in attempting to do this as an agent, he finds it will not succeed because threatened by some element of discontent or the invasion of some foreign foe, he has a right to call upon the people who have exercised the power of franchise, in making him their executive, to make their pledges good by a strong police force, or an army sufficiently clothed with the real element of governmental power, which is the sword, to quell the disturbance or repel the invasion.

The governed can only delegate, pledge, or consent to furnish, to the government, physical power. That is the only power ever employed by civil government. In fact all the power that is needed in civil affairs is power to compel uncivil men to be civil.

But after a man becomes a Christian, he has two kinds of power—spiritual and physical. Can both become elements in his “citizenship”?

As the “citizenship” is the original factor and basis of civil government, and really constitutes it, whatever elements make up the citizenship determines the kind of government. The elements of citizenship are simply those represented in the power delegated to the government.

Otherwise there would be injustice. To illustrate: If Christianity were an element in citizenship and yet was to be controlled by the government without being derived from the consent of the governed, this would not be just; because “governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.”

If the government were to exercise authority with respect to Christianity without its being recognized as an element in citizenship nor derived through the consent of the citizens, this would be again to abandon the principle and exercise unjust power because not derived from the consent of the governed.

If Christianity were an element in earthly citizenship and delegated to the government yet not dominated by governmental power, then the government would be guilty of neglecting one of its functions, and violating the trust imposed in it.

Finally: Suppose, as the advocates of “Christian Citizenship” assume, that Christianity is an element in citizenship, and that it is delegated to the government, and the government does administer it. Then the responsibility is shifted from the individual to the nation: and instead of looking to God as the object of worship and obedience, as well as trust and confidence, he looks to the government. And this would be unchristian; because God has definitely forbidden it—“Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help.” Ps. 146:3.

THERE is a contest in this city over a piece of church property, in which Mr. John D. Rockefeller is one of the principals. The case was in court the other day, and in Mr. Rockefeller’s testimony the following passage occurred:—

“Who was the real owner of the lease obtained from the St. Mark’s Church?”

“I was,” he answered.

“But it was held in the name of the church; why was that?”

“The reason for that,” replied Mr. Rockefeller, “was to escape taxation. If I had held the lease in my name the property would have been taxed. If the church held it, it was exempt from taxation.”

This is an illustration of one of the many evils of exempting church property from taxation. Here was one of the richest men in the world, a professed Christian too, who was the real owner of a lease on property; but to escape taxation the false pretense was made of holding the lease in the name of a church. And other testimony showed that the church management was a party to the trick.

The case was tried before Justice Pryor, who a short time ago refused a certificate of incorporation to a society whose annual meetings were to be held the last day of each year, because such meetings would thus sometimes fall on Sunday. He did not at once formally decide the case, but said that from what he could remember of it he should say that "Mr. Rockefeller's part has been purely a benevolent one and will receive due recognition before a higher forum than this"!

But Justice Pryor's "forum" decides questions of religion and men's relation thereto; and how can there be a higher forum than that? Yet though he recognizes a higher forum than his, it is, to his mind such a one that he is satisfied that the "benevolence" of a man who resorts to a legal trick to show it "will receive due recognition" there. We wonder where that forum is.

The Problem of a Weekly Rest.

THE religious and labor federations, the statesmen and theologians, who are laboring over the problem of securing a weekly rest for the toiling masses, are making much ado about nothing. There is no problem involved in the matter at all.

There is not a man on the face of the earth but is now, and has been all his life, supplied with a weekly day of rest. It is given him by none other than the Creator, and by the latter enjoined upon his observance. The only problem that can be connected with it is the problem of doing what the Lord commands.

It is true that some people—very many in fact—make a great problem of obedience to God. But this is because they do not want to obey Him, and do not obey Him in fact. Obedience itself is a very simple thing. Obedience to God, in just the way that God points out, is one of the simplest things in the world. But when men try to obey God in their own way, at once a problem arises; and so great is that problem that it is altogether beyond solution by any wisdom or power on earth. God cannot be obeyed by any man in man's way.

THE LORD'S REST.

What God says concerning a weekly rest is that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." God is the author of the Sabbath; and by resting on the seventh day after six days of work and setting apart that day as a day of rest, He made the week. The Sabbath and the week stand in inseparable relation to each other. The very process of making the one, established the other.

The seventh day Sabbath is the seventh day of the week. God fixed it there at creation, and no human power can move it from its place. God commanded—and still commands—every person to keep it holy; and all that any one has to do in the matter is to do as the Lord directs.

But, it is said by many, "I cannot keep the weekly rest day, on my own responsibility, without a great sacrifice." Possibly that is so. Possibly you would lose your job, and be brought into financial straits. But what of that? If you are willing to make a sacrifice to obey God, you can obey Him. You can take the rest day that He gives you, and get all the good from it that can be realized by any person in the world. If you are a Christian, you will not deny that it does not hurt any individual to lose his job or be brought into a strait place on account of obedience to God. From a Christian point of view, a strait place is not half as bad as a broad place where everything goes smoothly. And if you are not a Christian, you can derive no benefit from the Sabbath, anyway. The Sabbath benefits only those who obey God.

It is said that man needs one rest day in each week; and that is true. If man did not need the Sabbath, the Creator would not have made it. Unremitting toil is not good for the race. No one claims that it is. But the Lord, who made man, knew what kind of a rest man would need, and made the Sabbath to supply that need. The one who takes the Sabbath and keeps it as God has commanded, gets the rest, and the one who does not obey God in this respect, does not get it.

Seven days' work in the week, it is loudly asserted, is contrary to God's order. True; and disobedience to one of God's commands is also contrary to God's order. And the one is no more contrary, and no more hurtful, than the other.

GOD'S LAW IS ENOUGH.

Laws may be passed to enforce the observance of Sunday; the trades unions may adopt regulations to secure the workmen a weekly day of rest; but all such work amounts to nothing, so far as securing benefit to men is concerned. It is wholly unnecessary. Why?—Because God himself has legislated on that very point, and his legislation covers the whole ground. No human legislation can add anything to the command of God; and any legislation that is not in harmony with God's command, would much better never have been enacted.

No matter what may be the needs of the human race; no matter how eloquently or convincingly the modern "reform" orator may be able to discourse on the evils of unremitting toil, the fact remains that the Creator has taken out of the hands of man all legislation touching a weekly rest, by legislating on the subject himself for every individual on the earth; and that legislation remains in full force to-day. If individuals do not heed it,—if they work seven days in the week themselves, or try to force their employees to work, the only remedy still lies in obedience to God's command. Man cannot legislate on the subject of a weekly rest without invading the prerogatives of God.

All men are bound by God's Sabbath law; and when man presumes to make a different law covering the same point, or to re-enact God's law, he is guilty of nothing less than blasphemy.

These considerations make it clear why human Sabbath laws never benefitted the human race in the past, and why no possible benefit can be derived from them to-day.

Clerical Tyranny in Quebec.

Detroit Evening News, January 6, 1897.

ALL the experience of history seems to teach the French-Canadian hierarchy nothing. Like the Bourbon kings, who first established them in power upon the banks of the St. Lawrence, they seem incapable of compromise with facts until the facts overwhelm them and they lose all.

If any body of men ever received a lesson that should be a warning, the Quebec hierarchy received one in the last parliamentary elections, when they undertook to coerce their people, under grave religious penalties, to vote for the Conservative candidates on the Manitoba educational issue, and Laurier carried the province against them by an overwhelming majority.

This defeat has apparently only made them all the more desperately resolved to cling to their arrogant prerogative of dictating the political action of their people.

A French-Canadian author, M. David, recently wrote a small work on the subject of Church and State, in which he took the ground that the State was supreme in secular and political matters. As a loyal Catholic, he submitted the work to the authorities at Rome and it was forthwith put into the index of forbidden books. David meekly withdrew it from circulation, but a French Liberal paper, a warm supporter of Laurier, proceeded to publish it in its columns. Thereupon the bishops issued a mandament forbidding the people to read or support L'Electeur, the offending journal. M. Pacaud, the publisher, announced his intention to cease publishing his paper for lack of support, but to bring suit for damages against the bishops who had ruined him.

With some exceptions, the other French papers of Quebec condemn the action of the bishops, and encourage Pacaud in his efforts for redress. The English papers of the whole Dominion, as might be expected, denounce the course of the bishops as an attack upon civil liberty, which it is the duty of every Canadian, without respect to partisan or religious differences, to resent, and the hierarchy find themselves in the midst of a contest to which that over the Manitoba schools was trifling in its proportions. There will first be an appeal to Rome by the aggrieved editor, and failing there, an appeal to the courts and to Canadian public opinion, which will bring a pretty storm upon these arrogant prelates.

CHURCH PRIVILEGES IN QUEBEC.

When the storm has fully gathered, it will hardly be abated without a full review of the peculiar privileges of the church in the province of Quebec. Throughout the rest of the Dominion the clergy of all denominations depend for their support upon the voluntary contributions of their followers. They are consequently liberal in their treatment of the people and reasonably modest in their claims of prerogative.

The Catholic clergy of Ontario, while they have not openly taken issue with the hierarchy of Quebec, appear to be entirely contented with the compromise which the Laurier government effected in the Manitoba school matter, and never under any circumstances attempt to control the political action of their people by arbitrary mandament. But the French Catholic clergy of Quebec, deriving their rights and privileges, and especially their incomes, from law as established by treaty between France and England, which ceded Canada to the latter power, collect their tithes and fabrique (the latter a tax for the construction of new churches), by process of law.

When the tax remains unpaid, it becomes a first lien upon the property of the delinquent. In many cases the burden has become so grievous that delinquents have thrown up their farms and emigrated to the States, preferring to take their chances penniless in a new and free country, to continuing the hardships to which they were subject under the tyranny of the clergy at home. New England has filled up with these refugees, who in their new homes have prospered and multiplied. Priests have followed them to minister to their religious wants who receive from them a generous and voluntary support.

The church property in Quebec also enjoys peculiar privileges in the way of exemption from taxation which is not confined to the church property proper, but is extended to all accumulations of money or real estate made by the religious bodies. These have naturally grown enormously rich, and the spectacle of their wealth in the midst of the general poverty of the people is now attracting the attention and provoking the resentment of Catholics and Protestants alike in the province of Quebec.

SHALL THE PEOPLE RULE?

These enormous privileges, as valuable to the bishops and as onerous to the people as were those enjoyed by the hierarchy and nobility of France before the great revolution, are regarded by the clergy as invulnerable to attack, because they are buttressed behind a solemn treaty made between England and France. But the rights of Catholic education in Manitoba were based upon the same warrant; yet the Manitobans found a way to sweep them aside and make their own school laws, and that with the cordial assistance of the Catholic voters of Quebec in the last elections. . . . Out of it all may grow a revolution which will be as sweeping against ecclesiastical prescription, although peaceful and bloodless, as was that which overturned the Gallician church and French aristocracy a hundred years ago.

THE Christian Endeavorer announces the "great discovery" that the reason why the Sabbath was kept by God's people prior to the day of Pentecost, was that God delivered the children of Israel out of Egyptian bondage. Possibly this may find credence with people who have never read the fourth commandment; but anyone who knows how that commandment reads knows that it bases Sabbath observance upon the example of God during Creation week. Would it not be better to learn the prominent and important truths relating to Sabbath observance as set forth by Inspiration, than to overlook them in the interests of a "great discovery"?

IN view of the loud demand that the Turkish Government shall be wiped off the earth, the following dispatch to the New York Herald tells an interesting story:—

"CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 10, 1897.—Official advices received here from Jerusalem show that there has been further trouble among the worshipers at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. It appears that the Roman Catholics were opposed to members of the Orthodox Greek Church entering the church by a certain door on the eve of January 6, the day observed by the Orthodox Church as Christmas.

"The latter insisted upon their right to enter, and the result was that the two factions became involved in a serious fight, which did not end until the Turkish authorities intervened to restore order. Some of the combatants were badly injured, but it is not known whether anybody was killed."

Is it not rather a happy circumstance that the Turkish power does exist in order that these devout "worshipers" may be kept from tearing one another to pieces in "orthodox style" at "the Church of the Holy Sepulchre"?

Sunday Observance Against Sabbath Observance.

Rabbi M. Samfield, Editor Jewish Spectator.

MOTTO: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

The evolution of the present Sunday law from the ecclesiastical institutions of the past has been amply proven, nor is there any doubt that the sole motive of its introduction into American State legislation was sectarian in its nature, and has as its object the rigid religious observance of the Christian Sunday, as taught in the Protestant Church.

It was not intended to be enacted as a civil institution, for the mere purpose of providing the laboring classes with a period of rest, recreation and amusement; the very letter of the law testifies against such hypothesis. On the contrary, any recreation and amusement which was not sanctioned by the Church law, the State law would not permit on the Sunday.

For example, the principal prohibitions of the State of Massachusetts are at present:—

"Being present at any dancing, public diversion, show or entertainment, or being present at or taking part in any sport, game or play; fine not exceeding fifty dollars.

"Keepers of places of public entertainment or refreshment not to entertain persons or suffer them to remain in the place drinking, or spending their time idly or at play, or in doing any secular business; fine at first conviction not exceeding fifty dollars; at second conviction, not exceeding one hundred dollars.

"Travelling, except from necessity or charity; going visiting beyond the town limits and using horse cars within town limits is illegal travelling under this statute."

And the Sunday law of the State of Tennessee, although not quite as blue as that of her New England sister, has enough of a bluish tint to demonstrate that it is begotten by the spirit of sectarian influence, and not by the science of political economy—"Any person who shall hunt, fish or play at any game of sport, shall be subject to a fine, etc." (Section 1824, Code of Tennessee.)

These few quotations, to which we could add many more, furnish irrefutable testimony that the State is more anxious to maintain and enforce the religious observance of the first day of the week, in accordance with theological interpretation, than to defend a principle of political economy, and to give the laboring classes an opportunity to recuperate their minds and bodies by the exhilarating influence of social pleasure and amusement. The Puritan spirit has left such indelible sectarian traces in the construction and application of Sunday laws that every unbiased mind can decide at once that all efforts to construe it as a purely civil law must prove a failure. So oppressive are these regulations in certain States to the working classes, that a majority of them prefer the labors of Monday to the gloom of Sunday.

THE STRICTLY PHYSICAL ASPECTS.

Had the State Legislature considered only the physical aspects of a day of rest it would have enacted only such laws as are prohibitions of hard labor and fatiguing work. And instead of proscribing places of amusement and entertainment, it would have encouraged their use in a legitimate manner. It would have permitted all acts and deeds on Sunday which do not carry with them an undue waste of the physical forces and nervous energies of man, and which do not inflict direct injuries upon the life and property of other men.

Aye, the State could have done even more than that, provided the question of a day of rest had been considered upon the general grounds of necessity, and been based upon the science of political economy. Instead of consulting the traditions of the synagogue and church, the scientific men of our age should have been asked how much physical rest is necessary for man under the present conditions of society, with the amount of labor that is allotted to him now in the presence of the helpful mechanical inventions of the age.

Perhaps the conclusion would be reached that labor having increased and causing a larger waste of nerve and muscle, one day in five should be given as a day of rest to the laborer and mechanic; or, perhaps, the researches of competent political economists would prove, upon statistical evidence, that since the introduction of steam and electrical power human force is not taxed half as much in agricultural work and mechanical labor, and that one day in twelve is the just proportion of physical rest to labor.

There is still another result to these observations: It may be discovered that if the eight-hour system is granted as a boon to the laboring classes, no day of physical rest is needed at all, because sixteen hours out of twenty-four are granted for that purpose, which would secure such rest and leisure to the working classes that no civil law of the land need be called in requisition to compel the observance of a special day of rest and repose for the body.

THE TRUE SABBATH IS SPIRITUAL.

God himself has written the law of daily rest in the very heart of creation. Whenever the sun sets at the close of the day the natural period of physical rest commences, then the sabbath of physical rest has come, bringing with it the angel of sleep, the greatest benefactor of the sons of toil. The body needs no special day of rest; each night is its sabbath.

It is the soul, the spirit, which needs a Sabbath, to gain spiritual consolation and religious instruction, and, to provide for this necessity is the office of religion, the mission of each church within its own borders. With this spiritual work the State has nothing to do, and this spiritual Sabbath must unfold its beauty and sanctity by the innate force of religion. The rose and the lily will unfurl their delicate bloom and pour out their sweet perfume only when they are allowed to grow and expand by the innate force which God has laid in root, stem and flower. They would wither in our hands should we make the rude attempt to force asunder their delicate fabric. Even so will the beauty and glory of a spiritual Sabbath fade away, when the hand of the law uses forcible measures to impose it upon man.

"The Law Is Spiritual."

E. J. Waggoner, in Signs of the Times.

"For we know that the law is spiritual." Then there can be no fulfilling of the law save in the Spirit. "God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in Spirit and in truth."

God is Spirit; therefore they that worship Him must do so in the Spirit which he supplies. He provides the means, and does not ask us to worship Him in our spirit, or in our conception of His law.

We are not to worship God as we think Him to be, but as He is. And no one, as stated in the text just quoted, can comprehend God, or define the bounds and limits of His will. Then no man can lay down a rule for another, or even for himself. Here is the unlimited Word. No man can put a limit on the word of God, or say of any text that he has fathomed its depth, and that he has all the truth there is in it. No; the word is spiritual, and no man can fathom the depth of the mind of the Holy Spirit. For this reason no man, and no body of men, is at liberty to put any construction on the word of God; or to change it, or to hold or teach that it means anything different from exactly what it says.

The knowledge of this shuts out everything like religious coercion, persecution, or the laying down of rules for people to follow; for true worship must be rendered in the Spirit which God alone gives. The Word must be taken, not in our own spirit, but in the Spirit of God, and that must lead us into larger and larger ideas, and work in us that which we do not know ourselves.

Men have secret faults of which they are utterly unconcious. Not only so, but no man knows the depth of any sin which is brought to his attention, or the fullness of any command which is enjoined upon him. It is plain, therefore, that no man can measure his own righteousness, nor his own sin. He can simply know that he is a sinner, and that the righteousness of God is given to him. The more of the Lord he knows, the greater sinner he will realize himself in himself to be.

Therefore no man or body of men, whether in Church or State, can lay down rules by which a man must live; because the field of God's requirements is as unbounded as his own life, and must therefore ever keep increasing to our vision; and though men filled the world with books in the attempt to define everything, there still would be something omitted.

The Spirit of God must work its own life in every man. This takes the matter out of the realm of civil government entirely. No human authority whatever can impose the Spirit upon any man, or define the mind of the Spirit.

"LAW OF GOD AS CHANGED BY THE PAPACY."

This chart has been thoroughly revised, and contains some of the more recent utterances of this great apostate power.

The plan of the chart is the same as the old one. On either side are telling quotations from Catholic authorities admitting and boasting of the change, while the "Commandments as Changed by the Papacy" occupy a central position.

It is a forcible presentation of the subject, and will be a valuable help to Bible workers and ministers. Size 36x48 inches. Price $1.00. Printed on thin paper for inclosure in letters and miscellaneous distribution, 50 cents per 100.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 28, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 4.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

A MAN may believe in, and advocate, Constitutional religious liberty, without being confessedly a Christian; and without desiring to be a Christian. But he cannot do so without recognizing and indorsing, and indeed advocating, a Christian principle.

This, because the very principle of Constitutional religious liberty, the principle of separation of religion and the State, the principle of excluding religion from governmental recognition and jurisdiction, is essentially and only a Christian principle.

Though it be possible now for a man to believe in and advocate the truth that religion should be totally separated from government, without being confessedly a Christian, there was a time when such a thing was impossible.

It was Christianity that first announced in the world the idea of separation of religion and the State. This too, at a time when it was death to do so. "The Empire of the Romans filled the world." By law, under penalty of death, that Empire forbade the exercise of any religion that was not recognized by the Roman State. Yet in the very heart of the Empire, in the most prominent cities—Antioch, Ephesus, Athens, Corinth, Rome itself—without State recognition, without asking any such thing, indeed declaring that the State had nothing to do with the subject, Christianity was exercised in all the privileges that it gave.

At that time, for any one to advocate the truth that religion should be separated from governmental jurisdiction, was in itself to confess Christianity. None but Christians would think of doing it. So essentially Christian was the idea, that had an emperor himself adopted it he would have been looked on as having espoused Christianity.

It took two hundred and fifty years of suffering, and sacrifice of everything, to bring the Roman world to the acknowledgment of the principle. It was finally done though. And then when an ambitious clergy took the antichristian step of securing the imperial, governmental recognition of the "Christian" religion—then it was, and not till then, that pagans and enemies of Christianity advocated the principle. Yet it was still the Christian principle it was before, even though it was adopted and maintained by the enemies of Christianity, as well as by genuine Christians, against the outrages of a professedly Christian, though really antichristian, power.

And so the principle yet, and ever, remains a Christian principle only. It matters not who may advocate it, it is still the same Christian principle it was when Christianity first announced it in the world.

If professed Christians had never taken an antichristian course, it is plain that none but the friends of Christianity could ever have accepted and advocated the principle. It is therefore perfectly plain that the apostate antichristian "Christians" are responsible for the enemies of Christianity using the principles of Christianity in opposition to Christianity.

Bear in mind that we do not object to the enemies of Christianity advocating the principle. We have only called attention to the truth, that had there never been any antichristian "Christians," there had likewise never been any enemies of Christianity using Christian principles in opposition to what they suppose is Christianity. What we say is, Let Christian principles be espoused and advocated by whomsoever will do it. It is better that it be done by professed enemies of Christianity than not to be done at all by the professed friends of Christianity. When the principle is so outraged in the house of its professed friends, it is well that it should be so befriended in the house of its professed enemies.

It can never be denied that in the Roman world there was never any thought of any such thing as separation of religion and the State. It cannot be denied that Christianity was introduced into the Roman world in the first century and that it was there in the first and second centuries as really as it ever was at any other time. Pliny, Tacitus, Suetonius, Tragan, Hadrian, and Marcus Aurelius, all give unexceptionable testimony that it was there then.

And just as certainly as Christianity was there then, so certainly did it proclaim the divine right of men to worship according to the dictates of their own consciences; and that the State has of right nothing whatever to do with religion. Thus this Christian principle was announced and maintained there then. It has been maintained in the world ever since, and it will always be maintained in the world.

It will always be a Christian principle and nothing else, it matters not who may advocate it. And it is only antichristianity that will ever under any pretext impugn it or deny it.

Study the Constitution.

In pointing out the dangers that threaten the people of the United States, a writer of clear discernment speaks of the time when "our country shall repudiate every principle of its Constitution as a Protestant and Republican Government."

The AMERICAN SENTINEL has shown quite fully the repudiation of every Protestant principle that has been accomplished for the country. We have also called attention to some things that have been against republican principle. And now we are compelled to notice an immense stride that has been made toward the repudiation of republican principle. This is the statement lately made by the Secretary of State, expressing the view of the President of the United States, that the President would not be bound by the action of Congress if that body were to pass a joint resolution, and he veto it, and then Congress pass it over his veto. This is a clear repudiation of the principle of republican government.

It is true this was said with direct reference to a joint resolution recognizing the independence of Cuba. But that matters nothing. If he can so act upon this point in one matter he can do so in all. The Constitution makes but one exception. Here are the words:—

"Every order, resolution or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and the House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or, being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill."

And the statement of the Constitution in the case of a bill, is that when repassed by the requisite two-thirds majority over the President's veto, "it shall become a law."

Secretary Olney's statement then is formal notice to Congress and the country that President Cleveland does not consider himself under any obligation to administer any "law" that does not please him.

We know that there is much discussion and difference of opinion as to the "meaning" of the Constitution on this question that has thus been raised. But we are not asking any of the parties to this discussion, what the Constitution means. We know what it says. And we know that those who made it intended it to mean what it says. We know also that the men who framed the Constitution were just as able to say what they meant, as any now are to show what they meant by interpreting their language differently from what it says. Even though the Supreme Court were to interpret it differently from what it says, such interpretation should be repudiated by the people. For what Abraham Lincoln said is the truth, "The people of these United States are the rightful masters of both Congresses and Courts: not to overthrow the Constitution, but to overthrow the men who pervert the Constitution." And there is no way to pervert the Constitution but by "interpreting" it differently from what it says.

Of this statement by the Secretary of State, the Houston (Texas) Post, of January 7, well says:—

"When we come right down to the significance of this declaration by Secretary Olney, it is one of the most revolutionary ever emanating from the executive branch of the Government, short of the assertion of the right of secession which some of Mr. Buchanan's secretaries made and carried into open warfare.

"We have almost a constitutional monarch in our Presidency. Few constitutional rulers possess more real power. The assertion of one or two prerogatives more and we would become dangerously near a dictatorship."

"Many people will declare that such fears are idle and baseless, but history is full of executive encroachments upon legislative power. With the Republican centralized Government idea uppermost in our politics, the old Hamiltonian theory of a strong central government, which, reduced to its legitimate conclusions, means a strong executive, will have been greatly fortified if the President or a cabinet officer is permitted to successfully assert the right to disregard an act of Congress, passed by the constitutional two-thirds majority over the President's veto."

If Republican Government is to be maintained in this country, the people of these United States need to read the Constitution of the United States, and think carefully on what it says.

EVERY Christian, Mohammedan and Jewish denomination has its own definition, its own analysis, how the Sabbath should be observed in accordance with their particular creed; and if the State allows its Sunday legislation to be influenced by the Catholic or Protestant Church, in a State where those denominations are numerically the strongest, why should not another State which has Seventh-day Baptists and Adventists as a majority enforce Saturday as a legal holiday, with all penalties attached to maintain its observance?

The Monarchical Spirit in America.

It is interesting to note the monarchical tendencies among the would-be "higher classes" in the United States.

The manifestations of this monarchical spirit and ambition are not by any means few. It is most marked, of course, among the idle rich; but it is by no means confined to that circle.

The ambition of American girls and women, to give themselves and vast fortunes for European titles and misery, is so notorious as to call for nothing more than mere mention in this connection.

Besides these there are thousands who, having no chance to secure titles, spend fortunes to secure the recognition of the titled ones of Europe. People will spend years and thousands of dollars to gain entré to "the Prince of Wales's set," or to a "drawing room" of the Queen of England; this "dignity" to be used in America in holding themselves as far as possible above other people.

And thousands of the people who stay at home, or who, if they go abroad, have not the fortune to attain to such "dignity," are themselves so imbued with the same spirit that they look upon those who have attained to it, as being thereby so far superior to what they ever were before as to be entitled to some sort of worshipful reverence, and they proceed to pay it like any other toadies.

Then those who have in fact attained to such great "dignity" form themselves into exclusive "sets" in their several localities and ape the ways of royalty. And the others who would like to, but can't, will gaze and admire and ape the ways of those who ape the ways of royalty.

It is a fact that there are people who have gone to Europe and spent fortunes in securing a title or the recognition of royalty, in order to obtain entrance to the exclusive sets on this side of the water.

And now there is one of these "sets" that has formed a society, which, instead of having a president, is to have a queen. In presiding she is to sit upon a throne, and have heralds and maids and lackeys and all the other toggery that becomes queens. She is not obliged to wear a crown, but it is specified that she "may or may not," as she pleases—and who will doubt for a moment that she will please to wear one?

Now we are not casting any sort of reflection upon the people of Europe who have dignities, titles and royalties. These things all belong to them, and have belonged to them for more than a thousand years. These dignities fit them and they can wear them becomingly; and in doing so they are entitled to respect. And indeed as so many Americans buy these things and pay immense prices for them, it may be said that these titles, dignities and royal airs belong to them too. Yet for all this they never can wear them becomingly in America; and not one in a thousand can wear them becomingly in Europe. They simply do not fit. And Americans only make themselves ridiculous even in the eyes of Europeans in their efforts to secure them, or to wear them after they have secured them.

Any American who will be simply what he is, just his plain everyday self, can travel all over Europe and be respected everywhere; but those who think they must put on European style and ape European ways, will be endured, if they are not despised, everywhere they go. How could it be otherwise? When people do not respect themselves, how can it be expected that other people will respect them? When people at every turn manifest only littleness and insincerity, how can others do any more than endure them?

It will not do to pass off all this running after foreign titles and dignities and recognitions, as but a little thing. In one sense it is of course a little thing, exceedingly little; but it is not by any means insignificant, especially when an ambassador from the United States becomes so carried away by this spirit, as to compromise his own position and, in the presence of foreigners in a foreign land, criticise his own people as "a people hard to rule" and that "must be held with a steady hand." This from an ambassador of a Government that is "of the people, by the people, and for the people"!

All these things, though appearing very little in themselves, when taken together, are plainly the manifestations of another element working steadily and insidiously onward to the time when "our country shall repudiate every principle of its Constitution as a Republican Government."

Bishop Satterlee on Sunday Laws.

A "MASS MEETING" in the interests of "national reform" was held in the Metropolitan Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., January 17. Dr. Lyman, president of the "Reform Bureau" at Washington, presided.

The principal speaker was Bishop Satterlee, of the Episcopal Church, who addressed the meeting on the subject of "Sunday laws." Some introductory remarks were made by the chairman, in which he said; "What we desire for the capital of this nation, a Christian nation, is that it shall be a Christian city." This was to say that at present Washington is not a Christian city, and this opinion found ample support in the speeches following. How it is that the nation can be Christian, with its capital and seat of government unchristian, he did not explain.

Bishop Satterlee began by saying that he was a Christian, and believed that "no man can call himself a Christian unless he is in all times and places a true witness for the Lord Jesus Christ."

Judged by this rule, what must be thought of the propriety of calling the United States a Christian nation? Is it "a true witness for the Lord Jesus Christ" "in all times and places"? No sane person would affirm such a thing. Yet Bishop Satterlee is fully assured that this nation is indeed Christian. Have the advocates of "national Christianity" two standards of Christianity, one for the individual, and another for the nation? It would seem that they have. Nevertheless there is but one true standard, and by that standard no such thing as national or governmental Christianity can be possible. Christianity will fit the individual, and nothing else.

It must be said that Bishop Satterlee's speech did not speak well for his own knowledge of Christianity. As proof that this is a Christian country, he affirmed that it "is a country of universal suffrage," and said that by this the nation manifests its confidence in humanity, and imitates the example of Jesus Christ, for "He trusted human nature."! What an assertion! If there was one thing Jesus Christ did not do, it was to trust human nature; and if there is one thing the follower of Christ must not do, it is this same thing. Human nature is fallen nature, and fallen nature is sinful nature, so sinful that it can descend to the lowest depths of wickedness. The whole mission of Jesus Christ to this earth was to replace human nature by the divine nature, in which alone any being can safely trust.

To such lengths of error are men of intelligence and high church standing led in the search for some justification for Sunday laws.

"The highest law court in the land," the bishop continued, "has decided that this is a Christian country. And the highest law in dictionary that I know anything about says that Christianity is the common law in America in every State but Louisiana." This being so, we may fairly expect, if Christianity amounts to anything, to find a wonderful difference between Louisiana and other States with respect to the moral condition of society; since in these States all persons would be Christians except such as are lawless. It does not appear, however, by comparison with her sister States, that Louisiana suffers in the least from the failure of the common law in her domain to include Christianity. Nor does it appear that the people of those States which claim Christianity as part of their common law, however faultlessly they may observe the latter, are raised thereby one degree in spirituality above the plane of ordinary human nature.

Coming to the subject of the pending Sunday law for the District of Columbia, the bishop said:—

"Now I wish this law first of all, ladies and gentlemen, because first of all there is a great advantage in this Sunday law that it is proposed to enact, it seems to me, simply because there is not a single word—Christian, religious word—in the law itself. We believe in the eternal separation of Church and State in this country. We must carefully guard that, and we must not force our opinions upon others who have different opinions, and yet who are under the dominion of the same law. I have heard this Sunday law described within the last week by a very prominent legislator as the most moderate law on the subject of Sunday he had ever seen in his life. Therefore it offends no prejudices; therefore all men can unite as far as that is concerned, and become at one in it. There is no place where one can insert an entering wedge. There is not a single knife edge where this objection can be made. Throughout the law, from beginning to end, it speaks only of Sunday and the Sunday rest."

It certainly would not be clear why a bishop in the church, rejoicing in the belief that this nation is Christian in character, and addressing an audience gathered for the express purpose of making the capital of the nation Christian by means of a Sunday law, should consider it a "great advantage" in that law that it contains not one Christian or religious word—were it not for his explanation that "we must not force our opinions upon others who have different opinions, and yet who are under the dominion of the same law." In this country, "We believe in the eternal separation of Church and State." Therefore, "we" must say "Sunday" in our Sunday bill, instead of "Christian sabbath." That makes a great difference in the character of the bill!

In other words, if "we" should force people to rest on the "Christian sabbath," that would be forcing our opinions upon others of different belief. Hence we must only force them to rest on Sunday!

The bishop would prevent any union of Church and State, and any forcing of one person's opinions upon another, by disguising the means that would be used for their accomplishment! But a thing is disguised only that it may the more surely accomplish the purpose for which it is used. And that is the case with this Sunday law. It is a religious law, disguised as completely as possible in order that it may, if possible, deceive Congress and commit that body to Sunday legislation. That is the "great advantage" which the bill contains.

If any further proof of this were needed, it is furnished by Bishop Satterlee's own words, uttered in the same connection; for it is with this evil scheme of Church and State union as it is with murder; it "will out." And so, having called attention to the bill as one not at all religious and that could not offend the prejudices of any, the bishop in the very next breath stripped the disguise completely off, by saying:—

"We are following the sample of the first law, following after the line of the first law—Sunday law, which Dr. Elliott, who is present here this afternoon, told me today was ever enacted in the world—that is the law of Constantine. When the Roman Empire became Christianized many of its people were still heathen; and therefore instead of saying upon the Lord's day, or upon the Sabbath day, in that law of his, it was enacted that upon the great day of the Sun no work shall be done."

This is as true a statement of the purpose of the movement for Sunday legislation by Congress, and as strong a condemnation of it, as was ever uttered. Nothing worse would be said of it than that it is a repetition of the movement inaugurated by Constantine in the fourth century. That first "sample" Sunday law, which was a very mild one, was speedily followed by others more rigid, until the "venerable day of the sun" was forced upon the observance of all classes by a law as complete and undisguisedly religious as the most ardent sun worshiper could desire. Out of that movement of Constantine's, begun by his Sunday edict, grew the union of Church and State, the Papacy, the Inquisition, and the persecution and death of millions of Christian martyrs. How much worse could anything be than a movement which starts out in the United States Government upon this same line?

Therefore, upon the representation made by the friends and advocates of this proposed law, as well as from what appears in the law itself, we are totally and unalterably opposed to its enactment. Nor can we see how any lover of liberty who is familiar with the history of Constantine and of the era which he inaugurated in Church and State, can fail to be as fully opposed to it as ourselves. That the religious character of this bill is disguised, only makes it the worse, and the more worthy of opposition.

Christianity and Common Law.

AFTER reading Jefferson's exposure of the fraud by which "Christianity" was made a part of the common law, which we reprinted last week, the reader may query, how, in the face of such an exposure, it could still be maintained by American judges that Christianity is a part of the common law.

As stated last week, Jefferson's expose—written in 1824, published in 1829—was a complete answer to the New York and Pennsylvania cases. It destroyed the basis upon which those cases were made to rest. Before a religious despotism could be further perpetuated in this country by the fraud that "Christianity is part of the common law," this argument of Jefferson's had to be overridden. This was done by Chief Justice Clayton, of Delaware, in 1837.

In sustaining a conviction for "blasphemy," Chief Justice Clayton proffered an answer to Jefferson's argument. Logically this proffered answer is a confirmation of Jefferson's argument rather than an answer to it; but as it was officially given as an answer, it has been allowed the weight of an answer by those who wanted an established religion, though in fact no such weight justly belongs to it.

Justice Clayton speaks of Jefferson as "this letter-writer": and says that the "letter is phrased in terms more becoming to the newspaper paragraphs [paragraphers?] of the day than the opinion of a grave jurist who feels respect for the memory of the eminent lawyers of England, because he knows and can appreciate their worth." It is thus plain at the start that Justice Clayton had more regard for authority than he had for sound argument; and this character he sustains even at the expense of logically confirming Jefferson's argument while he authoritatively overrides it.

Jefferson had said that "Sir Matthew Hale lays it down in these words: 'Christianity is parcel of the laws of England.' But he quotes no authority." And that "Lord Mansfield qualified a little by saying . . . that 'The essential principles of revealed religion are part of the common law.' But he cites no authority and leaves us at our peril to find out what in the opinion of the judge, and according to the measure of his foot or his faith, are those essential principles of revealed religion obligatory upon us as a part of common law."

To this Justice Clayton says that "they had no occasion to cite any authority"; and that "Sir Matthew Hale was an authority of himself, and is considered as a sufficient authority for a common law principle in every case when there is no contrary authority. What sources of legal knowledge his great erudition may have consulted on this subject, we have no means of certainly knowing nor is it necessary to inquire."

This is the sum and the substance of his "answer" to Jefferson's argument. And thus in spite of logic, in spite of sound argument, in spite of the plainly written Constitution which he had taken an oath to uphold, and solely on the dictum of an English judge, he carries over and establishes in Delaware the English and papal principle of established religion.

After all this it is interesting to see what argument he made on his own part, to land himself comfortably in his arbitrary position. He made a distinction "between a religion preferred by law, and a religion preferred by the people without the coercion of law;" and says that "every court in a civilized country is bound to notice what is the prevailing religion of the people" and by common law to protect it "to the full length of punishing any man who outraged the feelings of the people, by wantonly and maliciously reviling or ridiculing the religion which they had freely preferred."

He then says that if the people should change from the Christian religion and prefer Mahommedanism, then the courts would change their ruling also and punish as blasphemy the reviling or ridiculing of Mahommedanism, while taking no notice of such conduct toward Christianity. Then if the people should drop Mahommedanism and prefer the religion of Judaism or "Joe Smith," the courts would punish as blasphemy the "malicious reviling of Moses" or of Mr. Smith. And all this change and counter-change because "no human power can restrain them from compelling every man, who lives among them, to respect their feelings."

It is perfectly plain, therefore, that Chief Justice Clayton would not have been as just as Pilate was; but would have sent the Lord Jesus to the cross upon the high priest's charge of blasphemy. If any would be inclined to doubt this, then let him read the following:—

"No man could justify himself under the present civil institutions of the State in endangering the public peace [by speaking against the prevailing religion]. He might feel himself impelled by a stern sense of religious duty to brave public opinion and become a martyr for his zeal. All this he might do and justify himself in his own opinion for it before God. . . . He who forcibly resists a bad religion is thus far like him who resists a bad government: if successful in his resistance he may become a reformer of men or a hero: if unsuccessful, a martyr or a traitor."

And by this doctrine it would be a settled thing that the courts would be fully enlisted in the "laudable" work of making martyrs and traitors of all such men. A blasphemer, a traitor, and a martyr, are precisely what were made of the Lord Jesus: and it was done by this identical doctrine.

Such is the doctrine, and such the authority for the doctrine, that is couched in the phrase "Christianity is part of the common law." And such is the means by which that doctrine has been perpetuated in the States of the American Union. For in spite of the splendid efforts of Jefferson and his fellow-workers for religious freedom, and in spite of the constitutional provisions in all the States, Chief Justice Clayton's decision has ever since been accepted as the standard on that subject.

How appropriate it is that such an enormous fraud should be supported by such a horrible doctrine. Yet what a pity and how astonishing it is that either the fraud or the doctrine should ever have found any countenance by men who ever made any pretensions to enlightenment or justice, or who ever heard of Christianity!

Blue Sunday Law With a Vengeance.

New York Herald.

IN refusing to approve the certificate of incorporation of a Hebrew society on the ground that its annual meeting was to be held on Sunday, Justice Pryor has carried the Puritanical spirit of the old Blue Sunday Law of this State even beyond its ridiculous letter.

No objection was made to the character of the society, and there was no pretense that its annual meeting would be disorderly, boisterous, or would in any way interfere with the usual quiet and orderly observance of Sunday. Nor did Judge Pryor find that it would be unlawful for the society to meet on that day. His objection is that the meeting would be "contrary to public policy" and in violation of "the sanctity of the Christian sabbath which is sanctioned and secured by repeated acts of legislation extending from the colonial times to the present year and as well by the impressive deliverances of the Court of Appeals."

That is Blue Sunday Law with a vengeance. Whatever may be said of the rigid Puritanical legislation of colonial times, it is straining the law beyond obvious acts as well as all reason to hold that a harmless meeting of a social organization on one Sunday in a year is contrary to the more sensible public policy and the more liberal popular sentiment that now prevail.

Is This Public Policy?

JUSTICE PRYOR, of the New York State Supreme Court, has decided that it is "contrary to the public policy of the State" for a corporate association to hold its annual meeting on Sunday. Upon what basis of fact does this "public policy of the State"—if such it be—rest?

Would a private business meeting of a corporate association disturb the peace and quiet of the day? Is it upon this basis that the State would from public policy forbid such meetings one Sunday in the year and allow the running of street-cars and railway trains on every Sunday?

Does the public policy of the State forbid such a yearly meeting as a desecration of the day, while allowing the public and noisy desecration of the day by street-car and railway corporations every Sunday in the year? It may be said that this desecration ought also to be prohibited; but that is not the question raised by Judge Pryor's dictum. It is a fact that the State has allowed such desecration of Sunday from time immemorial; and it cannot be assumed that the State has gone contrary to its own public policy.

One other ground remains to be noticed, that of the public utility of idleness as compared with honest employment. Does the public policy of the State demand that the people should be idle on Sunday, doing, in very many cases at least, that which the devil finds for idle hands to do, rather than employed in some honest and virtuous occupation? The question needs no answer.

How then does it appear that a yearly Sunday meeting of a corporate body would be contrary to the public policy of the State? What does appear is that Judge Pryor has mistaken his own private policy for the policy of the people.

WE are informed that some of the managers of the District of Columbia Sunday bill, are trying to make capital at our expense over what they claim is a stroke in the air in our criticism of the bill.

It will be remembered that we pointed out in the bill a palpable compromise with the liquor traffic. They say that this point is vain because there is practical prohibition by law in the District of Columbia. This claim however is merely technical: because whatever this practically prohibitive law may be, it is not enforceable.

This we know from those very people themselves. The Reform Bureau of Washington, D. C., reported in the Union Signal, of January 7, a "Calendar of Reform Bills in Congress," and among them stands this: "Morse Bill (H. R. 1888, House Report 1831), to make the liquor law of the District of Columbia enforceable."

Now we do not believe that there is practical prohibition where the law is not enforceable. A law that is not enforceable is not practical and accomplishes nothing practical. And thus the liquor traffic is rife in the District of Columbia. Those folks will have to try again before they can clear their Sunday bill of a palpable wink at the liquor traffic.

Constitutional Relation of the Legislator to Religion.

From "The Legal Sunday," by J. T. Ringgold.

THE legislator who is induced to vote for a statute by the idea that it embodies a command of Deity, drops his character as a legislator altogether and undertakes to act as the enforcer of the will of the Deity upon other people. This is no part whatever of his duty as a legislator, which is to legislate for the good of the people within constitutional limitations. And, however strongly he may be convinced that there is a divine command for Sunday idleness, and that it would be for the good of the people to have that command embodied in a statute, yet he breaks his oath as a legislator, and is in reality no legislator, but a religious propagandist, when he undertakes by his vote to do the people that good by violating the restraints laid upon his conduct as a legislator by the Constitution. It is to this that he has sworn allegiance as a legislator, to this alone that he owes his existence as such, and to this alone may he rightly turn for the definition and limitation of his duties. And any statute whose provisions by their very nature cause the mind of the legislator, when pondering his vote upon it, to go outside of the Constitution altogether, and to determine his course by his conclusions on the question of whether the statute does or does not embody a command of Deity,—any such statute causes the legislator to break his oath of office. And when it becomes a law by means of legislative votes cast in its favor because of its supposed embodiment of a command of Deity, it sets up the union of Church and State and gives pro tanto a preference to one religion over another.

Let us look at this matter a little closer. Some men decline to admit a Deity; others deny that his will is anywhere recorded; some insist that it is recorded in one place and some recognize it in another. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." For the man himself, of course, when he has found it, the expression of the will of the Deity is enough; he recognizes his obligation to obey, and he thinks other men ought to obey also. But here we must discriminate between the legislator and the man. Admit that the man is right, and that he has found an expression of the will of Deity; admit, further, that the men who compose the membership of the legislature ought to obey that will. What is that will, as expressed in the case in hand? "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." Every man in the legislature, and every man outside of it, ought to obey this command of Deity. If the way to obey it is to be idle on Sunday, then legislators and all others ought to be idle on Sunday. But, observe that there is no distinction whatever in this regard between legislators and others. Both obey or disobey the command of Deity in the same manner precisely. And why? Because this command of Deity, like all other such commands, is addressed to the individual, AS AN INDIVIDUAL, without any regard whatever to his official character.

Honesty, purity, fidelity, are demanded by the will of Deity in all men alike and in the same degree, without reference to social or political distinctions. But if no more is demanded of one man than another by that will, it follows that when a man through the human agency of voting becomes a member of the legislature, while he takes upon himself an entirely new set of obligations and duties with reference to the community, from which a non-member is free, yet his duty to Deity remains just what it was before. The man is the creature of Deity; he must obey the will of Deity. The member is the creature of the State; her will is his law. Thus, before a man becomes a member of the legislature, he is under obligation to obey the will of Deity and "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" but after he becomes a member of the legislature, he is under no additional obligation whatever in this regard. And, as the legislator does not assume any new duty toward Deity, as he undertakes no new functions in the domain of religion by reason of his official duties, so he thence acquires no new rights or privileges in that domain. If he had not, as a private citizen, the right to enforce in others obedience to what he considered a divine command, then he does not get that right by virtue of his election.

The special right he thus acquires is of civil creation and of a civil nature altogether, and therefore to be exercised for civil purposes alone. It is the right to force on others to the extent of his vote, obedience to his notions of the dictates of worldly wisdom, for the sake of worldly welfare alone, and even this only within the limits of constitutional restrictions. And, as the legislator, as such, has no religious duties or privileges, of course there are no commands addressed to him as such, in the Book of Christian religion. To take the case now under consideration: It is nowhere commanded, "Thou shalt vote for a law to compel other people to keep holy the Sabbath day." Upon this point the legislator is as free regarding his action from any command of Deity, as he is regarding his action on a tax bill. Of course he is commanded by Deity to discharge his duties as a legislator conscientiously, as he is to discharge all other duties; but the will of Deity is nowhere expressed as to what his duties as a legislator are. Their definition and limitation are a matter of human constitutional law entirely.

The will of Deity as to specific legislation has never been publicly revealed but once, and that was under the "pure theocracy" of the Jews. And even under that system the legislation was not directed to be enacted by human agency, but both the law and its penalties were specifically revealed. It is as arrogant—shall we not say it is as blasphemous?—in a modern legislature to claim divine sanction for one of its enactments as it would be for a railroad company to assert the same inspiration in the selection of a particular route by its board.

Well, then, may we not say that a conscientious legislator, pondering his vote on a proposed Sunday law, with mind undarkened by the clouds of Brownism, and sincerely desiring to fulfill the will of Deity, would in his official action commune with himself somewhat after this fashion? "It is the will of Deity that I shall herein discharge faithfully the duty I owe to the State, which the State has defined for me, and which I have expressly pledged myself to perform. I am not at liberty to judge for myself what that duty is, unless in cases where my employer, the State, has failed to define it for me. Is this such a case? I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that this question of a Sunday law is a religious question. The character of its advocates, the fact that they consist exclusively of professional religionists, male and female, sufficiently demonstrates that; the nature of the arguments these people use in favor of the law, simply confirms what is already clear from their pressure and their zeal. Now, the State has defined my duties, which it is the will of Deity that I should perform, in the constitution. Let me look at that, and see what my duty is, as to legislating upon religious questions. The constitution says, 'No preference shall be given by law to any religion.' This means that my duty as a legislator is to vote against the passage of any law which gives a preference to any religion.

"Now, let me turn from the examination of the constitution, and examine myself for a moment. I know that these professional religionists are here urging the passage of this law for the reason, and for the reason alone, that they believe it will give a preference to the particular religion which they profess over all other religions. Do I not also know perfectly well, in my own mind, that this belief of theirs is entirely correct? Am I not conscious that my inclination to vote for this law is based purely on my knowledge that it will give a preference to their religion, and my desire thus to oblige a number of good citizens?

"But stop, there is another basis for this inclination of mine. Away down in the depths of my heart, there is a strong hereditary sympathy with the kind of religion these people profess. I may not live up to it—as many of them probably do not—in respect to Sunday observance and in several other respects, but I have still a 'preference' for it. As part of this religion, I have been taught to believe that there is a command of Deity that men shall not work on Sunday, and I should like to see all men obey the commands of Deity. Am I not, then, in danger of allowing my own preference in the matter of religion to influence my vote on this bill? On the other hand, if I feel that it is this preference of others which alone inclines me to vote for the bill, then is it not evident that, to my own inner consciousness, the bill does embody a preference of one religion over another? But, if it embodies such a preference, it violates that constitution which I have sworn to support. It is the will of Deity that I shall not break that oath. Now, will it matter in the least in His eyes whether, in the breaking of it, I vote to give a preference by law to the particular religion which I happen to profess, or to some religion professed by other people?"

The correctness of this line of thought cannot be impeached. It discriminates with right morality between the duty of the individual, which is to give a preference to the religion that he believes to embody the will of Deity, and the duty of a legislator, which is to vote against any law that gives a preference to his own religion or any other, as against all laws that violate the Constitution under which alone he acts as a legislator. It distinguishes justly and properly between the man and the member. It is the reasoning of intellectual honesty, as opposed to the guidance of intellectual dishonesty, consciously or unconsciously inducing the legislator to regulate his official conduct by another standard than that to which he has sworn that he will conform.

Christian Citizenship and Hypocrisy.

THE object of the Christian Citizenship movement is to "prepare the way of the Lord." This preparation is "to have every mayor and every councilman a Christian." When this is accomplished, it is declared, "Christ will rule."

But are the promoters of this movement sure that they are able to discern between Christians and those who only profess Christianity? If it is known that only those professing Christianity can be elected to offices of trust and profit under the Government, will not many profess Christianity merely for the sake of the office? In other words, will not this movement to "prepare the way of the Lord"—by electing only Christians to office, really prepare the way of the devil by putting a premium on hypocrisy? It will be answered that the promoters of this movement are able to judge who are and who are not Christians. But facts show they are not, and the following bit of history will forcibly prove it.

One of the objects of the Christian Citizenship leaders is to secure the enactment and enforcement of rigid Sunday laws. This is a part of their preparation for the coming of the Lord. In order to commit Congress to their movement they have united on securing a Sunday law for the District of Columbia. This done they propose to extend such legislation to all the territories and departments subject to Federal jurisdiction.

Their effort to commit Congress to such legislation by securing a District Sunday law was begun in 1890. It was decided at that time by those engaged in what is now called Christian Citizenship work that it would be wise to select a Southern congressman to introduce the bill in the House and a Northern senator to introduce it in the Senate. Inasmuch as this bill was a "Christian" measure for the purpose of preparing the way of the Lord, it was but consistent that "Christians" be chosen to introduce the bill. After consultation and conference, the church leaders selected Congressman W. C. P. Breckinridge, a member of an honored and influential religious body of the South, to introduce the bill in the House. Subsequent developments revealed the fact that Mr. Breckinridge was at that time sadly lacking in true Christian virtue. These same people who selected this man to champion their Christian Citizenship scheme now speak of him, even after he professes repentance, as "that infamous old libertine named Breckinridge."

Now, did these people, when they selected this member of a Christian church to champion their "Christian" bill,—did they know that he was what they now term him, an "infamous old libertine." If they did they are no better than he was. If they did not, then it is clearly demonstrated that these Christian Citizenship leaders cannot discern between a Christian and an "infamous old libertine."

And as surely as they are not able to discern between a Christian and a libertine, just so surely will their movement drive out of public office self-respecting and honest dissenters who will not be hypocrites, and invite into office such as are willing to put on a Christian cloak for the sake of the spoils of office. This has always been the result of uniting Church and State, or showing governmental favor to any system of religion. It resulted thus when "Christian Citizenship" controlled affairs in the days of Constantine.

Of the hypocrisy engendered by that Christian Citizenship, John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, in explaining the comparative absence of the manifestation of the Holy Spirit in the Christian Church of the third century, says:—

"It does not appear that these extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were common in the Church for more than two or three centuries. We seldom hear of them after that fatal period when the Emperor Constantine called himself a Christian, and from a vain imagination of promoting the Christian cause thereby, heaped riches and power and honor upon the Christians in general, but in particular upon the Christian clergy. From this time they almost totally ceased. . . . The cause of this was not because there was no more occasion for them. . . . The real cause was 'the love of many,' almost all Christians (so-called), was 'waxed cold.' The Christians had no more of the spirit of Christ than the other heathen. . . . This was the real cause why the extraordinary gifts were no longer to be found in the Christian Church; because the Christians were turned heathen again, and had only a dead form left."—Quoted in debates of O. L. Sutliff with Prynne, p. 68.

In answer to the idea that the kingdom of God was established on earth by the success of Constantine's Christian citizenship schemes, John Wesley used this strong but truthful language:—

"A wonderful instance of spiritual blindness is given us in a very celebrated work of a late eminent writer, who supposes that the New Jerusalem came down from heaven when Constantine called himself a Christian! I say called himself a Christian, for I dare not affirm that he was one any more than Peter the Great. I cannot but believe he would have come near the mark if he had said that it was the time when a huge cloud of infernal brimstone and smoke came up from the bottomless pit."—Wesley's Sermon's, vol. 2, p. 97.

From these quotations it is plain that John Wesley considered that clothing Christians in general, and the Christian clergy in particular, with civil power, instead of "preparing the way of the Lord" really prepares the way of the prince of the bottomless pit; and that those who cannot see that this is so furnish a "wonderful instance of spiritual blindness." According to John Wesley, we have in the Christian Citizenship movement which seeks to "prepare the way of the Lord" by electing only

JOHN WESLEY.

[From the Outlook.]

Christians to office, a "wonderful instance of spiritual blindness." John Wesley saw clearly the wickedness of such movements. Would that those who now revere his memory could have their eyes anointed that they might see.

Before the day of Pentecost, the disciples asked for political office in the political kingdom which they supposed their Master had come to establish (Mark 10:36, 37); and for power to punish those who rejected Him whom they thought to be head of that kingdom (Luke 9:56). But the outpouring of the Holy Spirit dissolved all their Christian Citizenship schemes, and their message was "repent . . . and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:38). "Add to your [not to your neighbor's by human law] faith, virtue, and to virtue knowledge . . . for so an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

When all who will, have thus been prepared by the kingdom of grace, then "the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all his holy angels with him," and "then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. 25:31. "Christian Citizenship" can neither promote the kingdom of grace nor the kingdom of glory; it can neither prepare subjects for that kingdom nor enthrone its King. It can and does promote hypocrisy. What its advocates need is the anointing of the Holy Spirit that they may know what this meaneth: "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Zech. 4:6. A. F. B.

Christian Citizenship.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

IF Christianity is to enter the realm of law, it must be an element in citizenship delegated by the citizen to the government. Then the citizens who have delegated this power have not only authorized the government to compel others to act as though they were Christians; but have themselves consented to be controlled by the government in their religion as to belief and practice. And this not alone in some point that is in accord with their choice; but in all things. For, they establish the principle that the government should regulate religious affairs by law, and as the choice and consent of the citizen is determined by voting, the question of religion is at once expelled from the individual conscience instructed by the word of God and guided by the Holy Spirit, and is relegated to the ballot box instructed by the religio-political speaker and guided by the majority.

In this the individual conscience is set aside and utterly ignored, and religion is put into a sphere destitute of the Spirit and wholly unable to exert any power upon the heart.

Such religion may exist; but it is not Christianity. "Every man shall give account of himself to God." He is not required to give account of someone else; nor of any power given to government to compel others to do right, but each shall give account of himself.

Religion by law existed in Rome when she was pagan and when she was papal; but the Christian never wants to, and never will, delegate to government nor to anybody else any power in religion; nor will he consent to be governed in his religion by the mind and conscience of another nor any mass of others. To do so would be to separate from God and ignore Him as moral ruler.

Whatever a man will submit to the decision of others, he holds only on a level with the common things of this world, subject to change at the desire of others. If he should say that he would do this only when the laws favored his views, then he confesses that he is not doing to others as he would have them do to him; and again shows that he has not the religion of Christ. He wants laws in harmony with his convictions, that he may compel others to adopt them. He will not change his convictions, for he claims that Christianity depends on convictions of conscience; but in his zeal to dominate others, he will compel them to abandon their convictions. This again shows that he is destitute of the spirit and works of Christ; for he says, "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not." John 12:47.

The power of the religion of Christ is purely spiritual; and its work is upon the individual heart, which by its influence is moulded after the image of Him that created him. This power cannot be derived by the government from the citizen; but only by the individual from Christ. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature." "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His." He is not a Christian. The power of the Holy Spirit can be derived from Christ by the individual only.

If one has a religion which he can, or wants to, delegate to government, and thinks such religion is Christianity, he is mistaken. He has not learned the first principle of Christianity, which is liberty of conscience to "whomsoever will."

Governments derive their just powers from and by the consent of the governed. The power of Christianity cannot be derived from, or delegated by, the citizen, to government. Therefore the government cannot justly exercise any authority or power in Christianity: neither to make laws nor to execute them, nor yet to employ its authority in issuing proclamations recommending or enjoining Christian worship.

Religion springing from the minds of men may be incorporated into law by government; and these same men who form the government and invent the religion can delegate power and authority to force it upon others; but as it is not a spiritual religion to begin with, but wholly human, outward physical conduct is all that is obtained by the process. And that is not Christianity.

Again: Earthly government cannot exercise any authority whatever in Christianity; for it cannot be delegated by the individual as a citizen.

Whatever does not furnish power to the government, nor submit to be dominated by it, cannot be an element in the formation or maintenance of the government. Therefore, as Christianity can never be an element in the citizenship of earthly government, "Christian Citizenship" is false alike in its conception and in its name.

The truth is, then, that Christianity is known only to those who have come in contact with it as a spiritual power, which, admitted into the heart, renovates the soul and purifies the life from sin. The only source of this power to men is Christ. Could it be delegated to government, or transferred in any manner from one person to another, or to a government, or again from the government to individuals, men could be saved without going to Christ, as Christianity could be forced upon them by the power of the sword. Those who have such a view as that of Christianity are not acquainted with Christianity.

When this "Christian Citizenship" thing professing to be Christianity shall secure control of the Government and with governmental power enforce its notions upon the people, we shall have fulfilled the prediction of Rev. 13:11-15. The power described in this Scripture is termed in Rev. 19:20, "The False Prophet." It will be such because it will profess to represent Christianity when it is nothing of the kind. It will be "The False Prophet" in that it will deceive the people into receiving its doctrines and professions as Christianity, when in fact the whole combination will be antichristian and nothing but the living image of antichrist.

"None of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand."

Pure Anarchy.

"EXCEPT the State be born again, it cannot see the kingdom of God." This statement is conspicuously inscribed upon the official organ of the "Christian Citizenship League," and is credited to a "professor" of "applied Christianity" in a western college. It is the doctrine that Christianity can be applied to the State—that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the State as well as of the individual. There is but one way of salvation, and that is by being "born again," as the Saviour explained to Nicodemus. Supposing then that the State could be "born again," what would result? It would have to manifest the spirit of Christ, which would necessitate that it forgive its enemies; and forgive them not once merely, nor "until seven times," but "until seventy times seven." Matt. 18:21, 22. So as often as the trespasser against the State might say, when brought into court, "I repent," the State would be obliged to forgive him, and discharge the debt! Could any arrangement better suit the desires of the criminal classes? or more quickly and thoroughly destroy the whole structure of civil government? Could any doctrine be more thoroughly anarchistic? These questions answer themselves.

And yet it is actually a fact that this doctrine is, in this very land of enlightened government, now held and advocated by nearly all the leading religious societies! And those who would warn the people against it are denounced as anarchists!

A FEATURE of recent Congressional proceedings at the National Capitol, was an amendment offered by Senator Morgan to the Immigration bill, which would oblige all immigrants to this country, before acquiring citizenship, to be able to read the Ten Commandments. In defending his proposed measure, which he affirmed was introduced "in no spirit of levity," Senator Morgan said he was actuated by "the most serious intention of making every man who comes to the test to acquire American citizenship show before the officer, the Judge who admits him, that he knows the foundations of the Christian religion as they are taught in the Ten Commandments."

He then referred to "the Christian sabbath, which is observed in this country from end to end and enforced by State laws and even by the laws of the United States Government," as an evidence that "we continually recognize in all our . . . political, national and State relations, and relations to the laws of our country, the great underlying foundation" of these commandments. Would the senator oblige immigrants to read Sunday, or first day of the week, into the fourth commandment? When the senator himself is so blind with respect to the Decalogue as to think that it enjoins the observance of Sunday, is he well qualified to lead the blind in the path which it marks out?

When the blind lead the blind, they must both fall into the ditch. When the people of this country allow their legislators to set themselves up as their religious guides, they are not far from disaster.

In and Around the Capitol.

From our Washington Correspondent.

THE people of the city of Washington are fully aware that Wilbur F. Crafts is here with all his methods. On Sunday afternoon, the 18th inst., a so-called mass meeting was held in the Metropolitan M. E. Church. The attendance did not exceed two hundred people. At the close of the meeting the people were requested to vote to Dr. Crafts and his associates the right to petition Congress for the passage of the District Sunday Bill. Some of the people voted and some did not; but the vote was declared unanimous. It was not stated whether Dr. Crafts wanted to represent one hundred or one thousand.

The same scene was enacted in the evening of the same day at another church of the city, where the attendance did not reach one hundred. The vote was taken by a show of hands and many did not vote, but as before the vote was declared unanimous. Since there was no limit placed on the power to petition, it is only fair to surmise that Dr. Crafts will use it to the full extent of his ability.

It is wonderful how these people can pile up petitions by their plan of "representative petitioning." For an example, we have only to call to mind the record of the petitions for the Sunday closing of the World's Fair, when the vote of the churches enabled these men to represent more people in some States than the entire population of the State; so that they represented the increase of population to the present time.

From the beginning already made, we may expect to witness quite as great results as in the past. If the pastors of the different churches where the so-called mass meetings are being held, are only willing to open their church list, the Sunday-school list, the W. C. T. U. list, and the list of names of those that belong to the Young People's societies, regardless of whether they attended the mass meeting or not, the list of petitioners will be a large one, and Congress will be led to suppose that all the people of the District are in favor of the passage of the Sunday Bill.

Dr. H. H. George, representing another wing of the National Reform Party, laboring in the interest of the God-in-the-Constitution resolution, is here also; and Congress will no doubt be treated to more wisdom along the line of last year's contention before the Judiciary Committee of the House, i. e., that there must be a national conscience on all moral questions, and the individual conscience must yield to that of the nation. And while the individual would have to depend on the nation for his conscience, we should still have "no union of Church and State"! Certainly this is as extraordinary as the plan of petitioning in the other wing of the party. The Christian lobbyists are capable of great things.

Religious Liberty in North Carolina.

IN the North Carolina Declaration of Rights, Sec. 1, it is declared that "All men are created equal," and are "endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights" as "life, liberty, the pursuits of happiness, and the enjoyment of the fruits of their own labor." Sec. 26 declares that "all men have a natural and unalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and no human authority should in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience."

This, then, leaves to each person the right to follow his own conscience in his relation to his Creator, and allows the civil government the right to regulate only man's relation to his fellowmen. This is not toleration merely. It asserts as unalienable the rights of men to worship, and at the same time to enjoy the fruits of their own labor—not of five-sixths only, but of all their labor. In other words, it declares that every man has an unalienable right to work all of the time his own conscience permits him, and that "no human authority should, in any case whatever, control or interfere with it."

Now there are in North Carolina, as well as in all other States of this Union, evangelical Christians, as well as Jews, whose consciences lead them to keep as holy time the seventh day of the week—Saturday: and hence to work the other six, including Sunday, the first day of the week. In harmony with the said Declaration of Rights of North Carolina, and in harmony with the Sacred Scriptures, no human authority has any right to interfere with them in this, "in any case whatever." But Sec. 3782 of the Code (Vol. II., p. 573) does interfere and forbid every man exercising that right under a penalty of one dollar for each offense. Thus conscientious, law-abiding citizens are left the choice of losing one-sixth of the fruits of their labor, or being considered criminals in the eyes of this law. Are men enjoying the guaranties of the Constitution while being branded as criminals by the statutes of the State? In other words, Is the Constitution to be made void by the statutes of the State?

Many of the best people of the State often express with great fervor the sentiment of "equal rights to all men and special favors to none;" yet there stands this law forbidding equal rights to all men and granting special favors to some. There it has stood since 1641, an unrepealed part of the Church and State system of colonial days; and can be used to bring unjust pressure upon one class of citizens to force them to conform to the wishes of another class. It can be used as a tool for persecution, as similar laws have been, and even now are being, used in other States and other countries.

How long shall it stand thus a menace to liberty in our State? It menaces not only the liberties of the man who observes the seventh day, but it restricts the liberty of every other man, by demanding the homage due only to God. It says to every man in North Carolina, You have no right to act for yourself in this matter; you must rest on Sunday whether you believe it is right or wrong. You have no right to change your practice even though you in all sincerity change your conscientious convictions.

He who does not now protest against this usurpation of authority, cannot be consistent in protesting, should the authority to make laws fall into the hands of Roman Catholics or infidels or any other class, and they make laws which conflict with his conscience. It is not impossible that such a change may occur.

It is not equal rights to all men to permit one class six or seven days a week in which to earn a livelihood, and say to those of another faith, You can have only five. Again, by the Word of God, the observer of the seventh day knows it wrong to pay the same respect to the first day of the week that he does to the seventh. Hence compulsion here is a restriction of conscience.

Will not the good people of North Carolina, in plain right and simple justice, demand the repeal of this unjust law? Will not the men now assembled in the legislature rise up as one man and wipe forever from the statute books of the State everything contrary to its Constitution and "Bill of Rights" which they are pledged by their oath to maintain? If not, why not?

A CITIZEN.

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 11, 1897.

IN a lecture in this city Sunday, January 3, on "America's Debt to the Catholic Church," Mr. Henry Austin Adams said that "The history of the crew which sailed with Columbus in the Santa Maria shows that a man named Patricius McGuirio stood in the bow of the boat that first touched the shore of the New World, and that in the stern, as tillerman, sat one Giovanni Moranio. These men were the first to jump from the boat to the shore. Their names, Anglicized, were Patrick McGuire and John Moran.

"And the McGuires and the Morans have been here ever since (applause). And there is nothing to show that they ever conveyed to others their title, as first arrivals, to the country."

"Mockery and Sham."

The Independent, Jan. 14, 1897.

THE scandal caused by the protest of the Rev. S. D. Brownjohn against the confirmation of Bishop Temple as Archbishop of Canterbury was not so much the scandal of his interruption of the ceremony as it was the scandal and sacrilege of the refusal to hear his protest.

After full public notice "given to all and singular opposers" of the election of Dr. Temple as Archbishop to come to St. Mary-le-Bow Church on December 22nd to make their objections, Mr. Brownjohn appeared. The royal mandate was read in the presence of eight bishops commissioned by the Crown to confirm the election, citing all opposers, if any, to appear. Mr. Brownjohn arose and said that he desired to protest against the confirmation of Dr. Temple's election because of his belief in doctrines which the protester believed to be absolutely "incompatible with fidelity to the teaching of the Book of Common Prayer."

Thereupon he was told he could not be heard and that it had long ago been decided that the court had no power to entertain such objection. The Archbishop of York concurred, and the opposer was silenced. The ceremony went on and the august company was told that the new primate was a prudent and discreet man, eminent for his knowledge of the Scriptures and in every way suitable to the position.

Then the Apparitor-General proceeded slowly down the aisle, crying:—

"Oyez! Oyez! All ye and sundry who have any objection to the confirmation of the Rt. Rev. Frederick Temple as Archbishop of Canterbury, come forward and ye shall be heard."

Thereupon Mr. Brownjohn arose, and again tried to make his protest; but was again silenced, and told by the Archbishop of York that he could not be heard. Then to cap the absurdity of it all, the Vicar-General denounced as contumacious those who had failed to present their objections:—

"I accuse the contumacy of all and singular the persons as aforesaid cited, intimated, publicly called and not appearing, and I pray them to be pronounced contumacious."

Now if there can be a greater mockery and sham, any greater scandal and sacrilege in a sacred ceremony than the public citation of objectors to whom a hearing is refused, we do not know what it is.

"RIGHT is indivisible: we obtain it for ourselves only by claiming it for others."—De Pressensé.

Fraudulent Petitions to Congress.

BY J. J. GARDINER.

IN the village of Mannsville, N. Y., on Sunday, Dec. 27, 1896, the pastor of the Baptist Church, at the close of the service, read the petition for the "Christian Amendment" to the Constitution, urging its indorsement, stating that if the vote was a majority, the names of the officers of the church would be placed upon it as representing the membership of the church, which consists according to the pastor's statement of one hundred and sixty members.

There was not to exceed fifty of the members present, who were thus called upon to express by vote the wishes of the whole church, to our representatives in Congress. But that is not all; when the vote was taken the writer saw only three who voted in favor of it, although there might have been two or three more whom he did not see. So here we have not to exceed a half dozen persons allowed to declare for one hundred and sixty (for there was no dissenting vote) that they are all in favor of its passage!

Is not this another expression of the doctrine of the priests in the fourth century that it is right to do evil that good may come?

Winona, Jefferson Co., N. Y.

A Remarkable Finding.

New Haven Register.

JUDGE PRYOR's refusal to incorporate a Hebrew society upon the ground that its aim and purposes were calculated to infringe the civil law of New York regarding Sunday observance, continues to excite attention and ridicule.

The petition, which was made to him, set forth the following as the object: "To promote the strict observance of and adherence to such customs, laws, usages and rites of the orthodox Hebrew religion or faith as are not repugnant to, and inconsistent with, the Constitution and laws of the United States and the laws of the State of New York, to improve the condition of the orthodox Hebrew congregations, and to abolish the now existing religious evils.

Judge Pryor refused to sanction the petition because the annual meetings of the society were to be held "on each and every second Sunday in January in each year." This he declared to be an infraction of the civil law, and as a Justice of the Supreme Court, he could not officially approve a meditated infraction of the law. He set forth his views in a long and labored opinion which would have done justice to Judge Gaynor, who has proved his capacity to more peculiar things within a given time than any judge New York has ever had.

As an illustration of the general character of Judge Pryor's finding, we quote the following paragraph: "Although not explicitly stated, it is nevertheless an inference from the face of the certificate before me that the members of the proposed corporation are of a race and religion by which not the first but the seventh day of the week is set apart for religious observances."

It seems incredible that in this nineteenth century the prejudices of a judge can carry him thus far in a matter of this kind. He does not seem to realize that his argument is purely a religious one, and bears very little relation to the law.

Why he should have gone out of his way, as in this instance, to insult this large and influential class of citizens passes all comprehension. The following extract from a Protestant periodical breathes a spirit which Judge Pryor will do well to imbibe: "If this does not stir the latent sense of justice and of loyalty to their ancestral faith on the part of the Jews of New York, they will hardly be worthy of the liberty and the respect that this opinion denies them. Whatever else this opinion may be, it is a shame to its author."

"Desecration" of Christmas.

A WRITER in the Catholic Mirror, of January 2, 1897, says: "The saddest thing connected with the Christmas season is the terrible and widespread profanation of the holy day." If Protestant ministers have a right to protest against the profanation of Thanksgiving Day, Roman Catholics certainly have a right to protest against the profanation of Christmas, which is a "holy day" in the calendar of their church. It is certain, too, that Christmas Day and Thanksgiving Day stand upon exactly equal footing in respect to their alleged sanctity.

That the "profanation" of Christmas Day and other legal holidays is very bad, is true enough; not, however, because any such day is in any sense holy, but because they are given over by the masses to revelling and drunkenness. As the writer above quoted says: "In every section of our country the papers record melancholy and appalling evidence of drunkenness, debauchery, murder, and crimes of all kinds. A great many people think that Christmas is the period for reviving the Roman Saturnalia, or else they so conduct themselves."

And what is there strange about this? The Roman Saturnalia just suited the carnal mind back in the days of the Cæsars, and why should it not just suit the same mind now? There is as much of that mind in the world to-day as there ever was, and as much of it can be found in professedly Christian communities, as anywhere else.

The trouble is that these legal "holy days" furnish the carnal mind with just the opportunity that it seeks. Let an individual have plenty of good, honest labor to perform, and the carnal propensities will remain comparatively dormant. But shut off this salutary employment of mind and hand, by legal provisions designed to "protect" some "holy" day or holiday, and the carnal mind will at once assert itself wherever it has not been dispossessed by the Spirit of God, and the old saying which connects the devil with "idle hands" will be verified. The man is exposed to all evil in order to "protect" the day! Better would it be to protect the man than all the days in the calendar.

The more "holy" days and holidays increase, and the more their observance is made compulsory upon the people, the more drunkenness, debauchery, murder, riot and general lawlessness there will be. And the more honest employment can be provided for the multitudes whose hands are idle, and the more the people are left free to engage in honest work when they want to work, the fewer occasions there will be calling to mind the Roman Saturnalia. The truth of this is so evident that it can be seen by any one who does not feel bound to uphold Sunday laws at whatever cost.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Independent says that "there is no lack of statesmen to-day, who, on occasion, would turn down the Constitution, as a once eminent member of the House did, when he said he did not know what the Constitution had to do 'between friends.'" Every one who is acquainted with the course of Government affairs, knows that this is true. Yet it is a most dangerous condition of things in a Government which professes to stand upon a written Constitution.

Distribution of Literature.

THERE is no better way to disseminate light and truth than through the medium of the printed page, and to this end there have been a good number of very valuable tracts and pamphlets issued from the press. One of the best ways to distribute these and to get people interested in the doctrines they teach, is to hand to the persons desired to be reached a few selected tracts enclosed in a nice envelope having an appropriate inscription printed upon it, stating for what purpose the package has been placed in the hands of the receiver, and a request that the party give the contents a careful perusal, etc.

To supply a growing demand for such envelopes we have prepared ourselves to furnish them on short notice.

Our envelopes are made from 36 Pound Manilla Paper 5½x8 inches in size, and open at the end.

We will print on them, to order, any thing desired not exceeding fifty words, and send at the following rates:—

100 " " " "	0.65
200 " " " "	1.10
500 " " by express, not prepaid,	2.00
1000 " " " " " "	3.00
2000 " " or more, at $2.50 per thousand.

Blank, or unprinted envelopes, $1.80

As samples of what would be appropriate to put on the envelopes we would suggest the following:—

The undersigned takes pleasure in loaning you this package of reading matter for a short time. Will call in a day or so.

_____, Colporteur.

Dear Sir or Madam:

I take pleasure in handing you this package of reading matter, with the hope that you will give the contents a careful perusal.

If you desire more of the same kind, I will gladly supply you.

Respectfully,

_____, Colporteur.

The tracts enclosed in this package are loaned to you for a few days. Please read them carefully. I will call again, and if you desire to purchase them, the price is One Cent for each eight pages. If you desire others I will gladly supply you.

_____, Colporteur.

This package of literature is presented by one of our Sabbath-school children, and the proceeds of sales thus arising will be given to carry the gospel to children in darkened India.

INTERNATIONAL SABBATH-SCHOOL ASS'N.

Presented by, _____

The name and address of the Colporteur can be printed on the envelope with the inscription, or the line left blank and the name can be written. We will make them any way to suit our patrons. Send in your orders.

Tracts Recommended for Use in the Package System.

As the season has already come in which many of our members can find time to go out and distribute reading matter, and as the long winter evenings afford opportunities for reading which most people do not have during the other parts of the year, it is of the utmost importance that our literature be circulated freely just now.

The following list embraces some of our most recent tracts, and we believe will be found admirably adapted to this work.

The tracts will be furnished at one-half the retail prices, and the envelopes will cost about 45 cents per hundred.

Address all orders to your State Tract Society.

A NEW TRACT CATALOGUE.

"Descriptive Catalogue of the Bible Students', Apples of Gold, and Religious Liberty Libraries" is the title of this 36 page catalogue.

It gives a pithy description of each tract and pamphlet in the above Libraries, together with their size and price. It will greatly assist the reader to select such numbers as he may desire to read and circulate; and may be obtained FREE by addressing the Pacific Press Publishing Company, Oakland, Cal.; 39 Bond St., New York City, N. Y.; 18 W. 5th St., Kansas City, Mo.; or Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich.; Atlanta, Ga.

WE have received from the publisher, Mr. J. E. Woodward, of Chicago, a copy of his "Historic and Prophetic Diagram" of the principal dates, eras, and events, in the course of the gospel and the history of the world. It is the best thing of the kind that we have ever seen. The cuts and drawings are excellent, and the plan is admirable. It will richly repay study, and so is worth considerably more than is required to buy it. It is 5 feet 6 inches long by 3 feet 9 inches wide. Printed on heavy cloth convenient for folding and carrying in small space $3.50; on best map-paper, cloth bound, with roller $2.75. Address J. E. Woodward, 4327 Evans Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A New Book.

We have received a copy of a new book, by Alonzo T. Jones, entitled "The Empires of the Bible." The author says that "The effort has not been so much to write a history, as to compile a history from the best that have been already written. And as the period herein studied is that which is covered by the Bible and the inscriptions, the history of Babylonia, Egypt, Israel, and Assyria, is taken almost wholly from these sources.

"This is not done in a way to tell in other language the story that is related in those documents, nor to tell about that story; but in such a way that the reader may have the history as it is told in the Bible and the inscriptions themselves.

"Thus the reader may know that he has before him not only the very words of the best authorities of that period, but of the only authorities, because written by the original actors themselves.

"By thus weaving together in one connected story, the history in the Bible and the inscriptions, it is hoped that the study of both the Bible and the history will take on a new interest in the mind of whomsoever shall read this book."

The book contains 410 pages, 6x9½ inches, and twenty-one full page maps: so that the history is mapped as well as written. We have read the book through, and can heartily recommend it as of great value. We know of no other book that occupies the field that this one does. And there is no other one book that contains so much of the most ancient history as this volume does. It covers the period from the Flood to the Captivity in Babylon. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND RELIGION.

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

The TWO REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE
HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

DID the Lord Jesus make a mistake in regard to the way in which true reform should be conducted and accomplished in the world?

It is certain that all people look upon the mission and work of Christ in the world as having been at least intended to be reformatory.

Was His mission and work then truly reformatory or not? Did He proceed upon correct principles? did He employ right methods to accomplish real reform? or were His principles and methods altogether wrong?

These are not captious questions. They are not asked lightly. We are asking the questions seriously; and we ask that they be considered seriously. These are questions that need to be carefully and seriously considered, especially by all who profess to believe in Christ—by all who profess to have any respect for Him as a Reformer.

We are asking these questions just now, for the especial benefit of the Christian Endeavor Societies, the Christian Citizenship Leagues, the Christian Temperance Unions, and the combined Christian churches of the whole country. And this with especial reference to the principles which they have adopted and the methods which they employ. The principles entertained and the methods employed by these people as would-be reformers, are not at all those of Christ when He was on earth.

The conditions existing when Jesus Christ was on earth were just such conditions as are now upon the earth—only somewhat worse. The evils which then prevailed—private and public, individual and governmental—were precisely such as are now prevalent in the United States. There was corruption in government everywhere, whether municipal or national. Yet He did not, nor did He direct His disciples to, enter into an agitation for either municipal or national reform. He did not engage Himself, nor did He direct His disciples to engage, in the formation of any societies, leagues, unions, or federations, "to enthroned Christ in every town and city in the" Empire, nor to cause Him "to reign supreme on the Capitoline Hill."

When a multitude of people were unanimous in the opinion that He should be King of His own city and His own country, which by the way were at the time governed by outrageously immoral men, He would not for a moment countenance their movement, but left the whole company and went away to the mountain alone.

When at another time the personage whose "seat" was at the Capital of the Empire, who really reigned on the Capitoline Hill, and who at the same time reigned in fearful unrighteousness, voluntarily offered to bestow upon Christ the power over all the kingdoms, and indeed over his whole Empire, according to much the same arrangement as these now propose to have Him reign on Capitol Hill, He unhesitatingly refused the offer.

There was tyranny of capital: and when one who was thus oppressed came to Jesus asking Him to direct an equitable division of the capital, He refused to interfere, saying: "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you? Take heed and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

The social evil was sadly prevalent. Some Pharisees employing the Pharisaic—now the Parkhurstian—method to suppress it, captured and brought to him a guilty one, "taken in the very act," and demanded what He had to say as to stoning her to death. He answered, "He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone at her." "Being convicted by their own conscience they went out one by one" till all were gone and the criminal was left alone with Jesus. Then Jesus said to her, "Woman, hath no man condemned thee? She said, 'No man, Lord.' And Jesus said unto her, 'Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more.'"

Now in none of this did Jesus for a moment convey the impression to the guilty one, nor to her accusers, nor to anybody else; that He either justified or excused what she had done. What she had done was wrong. It was a serious criminal offense. None knew this to its depths better than He. And knowing this, at the same time He showed to the Pharisaical accusers then and now and for all time, that their way of dealing with such people is not the Christian way.

Again, when his disciples decided that because they were his disciples, they were just so much better qualified than all others to hold the offices and exercise authority in the kingdom which they desired to have Him establish then upon the earth, He said to them: "Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them. BUT SO SHALL IT NOT BE AMONG YOU: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister; and whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all. Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many." "I am among you as He that serveth."

So it was in all the life of Christ on earth. At a time when there were greater evils in government and in society than had ever been survived, he never did himself, nor ever hinted that his disciples should, attempt to reform government or society, by any kind of political working, nor by any kind of governmental means. He ever in word and act kept himself far aloof from any suggestion of anything of the kind: and so did his disciples in the infancy and purity of the gospel as He left it upon the earth to be preached by them.

Yet on the other hand he freely employed and poured out to employ his disciples, "All power in heaven and in earth" to the individual to cleanse the heart from all sin and purify the life from all evil, in "every one that believeth," from the leper in the fields to the king in his royal robes, from the slave in his stable and the prisoner in the dungeon to the emperor at the pinnacle of human greatness.

This was Christ and His Christianity then; and this alone is Christ and His Christianity forevermore. Such were the principles maintained, the methods and the power employed, by the Lord Jesus when he the true Christian and the true Reformer was at work on earth for the world; and such alone are the principles that can be maintained, the methods and the power employed, by true Christians and true reformers unto the world's end.

Now if the Christian Endeavor Societies, the Christian Citizenship Leagues, the Christian Temperance Unions, and all kindred "Christian" organizations who have set themselves by political methods and governmental power so to reform the world that "Christ shall be enthroned in every town and city and State," and "shall reign supreme on Capitol Hill"—if, we say, all these professed Christian bodies really believe that the principles and methods of Christ were the correct ones to effect true reform, why do not they adopt these and hold strictly to them?

If on the other hand they think that His principles and methods are now antiquated, that they are not adapted to present conditions, how then can they believe in Him as a living present Person in all affairs, any more than any other reformer of antiquity?

There are very few people who will not allow that Christ was a reformer for His day, and that His work was adapted to the conditions then existing, just as they allow so far the claims of other men who have sought to benefit their people. They will allow, too, that He and His work just as that of others may be looked upon as a good example; but that he is a present living Person and power for all time, and without whom all effort at true reform must fail, they will not allow. Such a belief about Jesus, however, is far from being Christianity.

To believe that Jesus Christ is the Reformer for all time; that the principles held, the methods and the power employed by Him, are adapted to all conditions of the human race; and that in the application of these identical principles, and the employment of these methods and this power, He is an ever-present living Person—this is to believe in Him as the true Reformer. Such a belief in Jesus is Christianity.

Christianity and Civilization.

THE Christian Endeavorers, the Christian Citizenship League, the National Reformers—the combined churches generally—distinctly announce it to be their great purpose to "regenerate the city," to "redeem the State," to "save the nation." This in order to preserve for the world the benefits of the highest state of civilization, which in turn shall redound to the glory of the Church.

To accomplish these great things they declare that the Church must direct the primaries, control the caucus, and have general supervision of all the interests of State and nation; because Christians are best of all qualified to know what is for the true interests of the State, of the nation, and of civilization. Therefore they count the primary as important to the Christian as is the prayer-meeting; to go to the polls as much an act of worship as to go to the Lord's supper; the ballot as much a symbol of Christian standing as baptism.

They argue that the Church is certainly in the world for good; she is to influence people, States and nations, for good. But if she is to keep herself separate from the State, and her work apart from the work and workings of the State, then how shall she fulfill her mission for good in the world? Then at the rate at which corruption is pervading the government of cities, States, and the nation, what will become of our civilization? And then what shall become of the Church?—what indeed will become of Christianity?

The answer to all this is that keeping herself totally separate from the State, and her work entirely separate from the work and workings of the State and the world, is the only way in which the Church can ever influence the State for good. It is only by being not of the world even as He is not of the world, that Christians can ever influence the world for good. •

The Church, the Christian, though in the world, is to be not of the world. The Lord says, "I have chosen you out of the world." "Ye are not of the world even as I am not of the world." As certainly as the Church is in the world, she will influence the world and all that is in it. But the vital question is, shall she influence it for good, or for evil? She will exert a powerful influence one way or the other: which shall it be?

The Church will influence the world, the kingdoms, nations, and peoples thereof, when and only when she is faithfully the Church of Christ, walking only as He walked, and when she is not of the world even as He is not of the world. When it is not so with her, she will influence them, that is true; but it will be only to their undoing.

The truth is, that the Church has nothing to do with civilization as such. Christians have no commission to civilize the world, nor to preserve civilization in the world. Christianity does not aim to civilize anybody. Christianity aims alone at Christianizing men.

If civilization were the object and aim of Christianity, then there was no place for Christianity in the place, and at the time, when it was started in the world in the days of Christ on earth.

Were not the Jews civilized? Then what had Christianity to do for the Jews, if civilization is its object?

But if it be said that the Jews were not up to the proper standard of civilization, then let us turn to the Greeks and Romans. What of them at that time?—They had such a standing in architecture, art, literature, law, and the science of government—all that pertains to civilization—that the very goal of the most advanced nations of to-day is to copy successfully the achievements of those peoples. Therefore we say that if civilization were the object of Christianity there was no place for it at that time within a thousand miles of where it was started in the world.

But what were those people morally, who were so highly civilized? They were heathen. They were civilized heathen. Their "art" was idolatry. Their wisdom was foolishness. Their philosophy was a lie. Their morals were immorality. Amidst all the splendor of their outward civilization, at heart they were savages.

And to those civilized heathen, those civilized savages in fact, the gospel of Jesus Christ is sent, because they needed it just as much as did the savage heathen—the uncivilized savages. But the gospel was not sent to them to civilize them. It was sent to save them. And those who were saved, those who were changed in heart, were civilized, however savage they may have been before.

Thus as a matter of fact, the gospel will have much to do in civilizing people, provided that no effort shall be made by means of the gospel to civilize people. That is to say: If the gospel, which is sent to the world solely to Christianize men, shall be used only to civilize men, then it will not even civilize men. Whereas if the gospel shall be used solely to Christianize men, it will indeed Christianize men, and, as a consequence, will civilize them.

Therefore Christians are not to aim at civilizing men, solely at Christianizing them. Christians are not to seek to civilize men in order to Christianize them. Christians are not to seek to Christianize men in order to civilize them. Christians are to seek to Christianize men solely in order to save them: and when that is done the civilizing will take care of itself.

Let all the power, all the zeal, and all the effort of all these professed Christian organizations, be turned with all the mind and all the soul only to Christianizing people. Then they and the world too will find that they are influencing the city, the State, the nation, and the world only for good. While to continue as they are going, will be only to influence all for unmitigated evil.

A Menace to Republican Government.

THERE is nothing unusual in the fact that some of the leading representatives of wealth and fashion in the nation's metropolis are about to amuse themselves and at the same time accent their standing in "society" by means of a fancy-dress ball, at a cost of a quarter of a million of dollars. Ostentatious wealth has long been wont to manifest itself in this way. The noteworthy feature in the present instance is not the event itself, but its materialization in the face of an all too necessary display of direful and widespread poverty.

The gaunt spectre of desperate human want stalks through the land, and extravagant luxury dares to display herself almost at its side. If the former should turn upon the latter, there would be no occasion for surprise.

It is said in defense of this extravagant affair that it has furnished a large amount of extra employment to costume makers, which is no doubt true. And it is better, of course, that the money should be spent in some way than hoarded in vaults. But there is little or nothing in this to offset the effect of such a flaunting of superfluous wealth in the face of destitution. Probably no worse method could be taken of letting the army of poverty know that they stand in close proximity to almost limitless wealth, which its holders prefer to spend in the most useless manner rather than apply it to their relief.

The situation has attracted attention even in Europe; and the comments which come from that quarter, while not of a nature to foster American pride, are worthy of notice. The London Daily News, of January 26, has the following:—

"In America society is very old, reckoning its age by its ideas, and there is nothing more characteristic in society of that kind than the defiant animation with which the people dance when anybody ventures to whisper that they are on the edge of a volcano. Mr. Bradley-Martin and his guests have no belief in a volcano, and they are making every preparation for a good time.

"Our own younger and altogether more modern community would be disturbed by such discussion, and would probably tone down the frolic and redouble its attentions to the East End."

The same paper notes further that—

"There is a certain suggestiveness in some of the costumes for which arrangements have already been made. There is to be an abundance of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette. Louis the well-beloved will not be forgotten, and it is quite conceivable that some cynic may choose to represent the monarch whose private party for the encouragement of trade was so rudely disturbed by the handwriting on the wall."

Europe has had centuries of experience in dealing with the problems which arise from abnormal social conditions, and her thinking men are qualified to speak understandingly upon such subjects. It is quite possible that a clearer view of the dangers which threaten this Republic from class antagonism is to be found on the other side of the Atlantic than is commanded by the vast majority of those directly concerned.

It is a fact that fancied security often hovers on the brink of the precipice; and finite humanity, when blinded by selfish indulgences and selfish hopes, has often danced above a volcano. We do not allude to these things to excite alarm, but because it is better to know the truth, even though it cause alarm, than to borrow ease from ignorance. It is best to be alarmed, if need be, while there is time to profit by the experience. It is truth that we want, first and always.

When such things happen in a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," it is much worse than would be the case under a monarchy. The revolution which they breed will be against republican government, and only despotism in some form can be the result.

THE trouble with all such methods of reform as that adopted by the "Christian Citizenship" and kindred organizations for the regeneration of society, is that they do not go deep enough. They stop when they reach the Church; but alas! the Church herself needs to be reformed as much as anything else. Reform must start with the individual; it must proceed with individuals. Reform "en masse" or by organization, is a delusion. The Church is an organization; but her purity and righteousness are those of individuals in her communion. There are some in every church, and a large number in most churches, whose piety is but a pretense. They are a part of the organization, but are not made righteous by that fact. The Church herself cannot be pure while any of her members are unrighteous.

A moral reform which is to prove effectual must pierce through every organization and get at the individual. It must reach the individuals in the Church as well as those outside of it. The Christian Citizenship kind of reform does not purpose to go within the portals of the Church. Hence as a moral reform it must prove a failure. It can only drive people to seek refuge within the Church, where as long as they can keep up a pretense of piety, they will be safe. Thus this "reform" will not only fail to benefit the State, but will fill the Church with the unconverted; and that must work the ruin of the Church. There is no safety in stopping short of individual reform, which is heart reform, and to be accomplished only by the power of divine grace.

This is the kind of reform that is most sadly needed to-day. But the professed ministers of that grace seem to be fast going into the business of trying to reform men by civil law. They are thus doing more than any other class of persons to lower the moral tone of society.

The Treaty of Arbitration.

THE treaty of arbitration between this nation and Great Britain, which is now awaiting the ratification of the United States Senate, is hailed by multitudes as a sure omen of an approaching era of widespread if not universal peace. The Rev. Heber Newton, in a recent sermon, went so far as to say that it was a fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah which points, as it is said, to a time when men's swords shall be beaten into plowshares, and the nations learn war no more. Isa. 2:2-5.

We make mention of this to call attention to the fact that there is only one sure guarantee of peace, whether between nations or individuals; and that is the absence of those propensities of the heart from which contention arises. When peace reigns in the hearts of individuals, there will be peace without; and when peace does not reign in the heart, there cannot long be peace in the outward life.

A treaty of peace is very good; but nations have a habit of disregarding treaties when their interests seem to demand it, so that not the treaty, but the selfish interests of the parties concerned, really control the situation. The Behring Sea award did little or nothing to settle the question of the seal fisheries which it concerned. Treaties are susceptible of being interpreted; and when the interests of two nations come into conflict touching some point of the treaty, it is never difficult for them to come to a misunderstanding upon that point.

About one year ago there was a remarkable outburst of "patriotism" in all parts of this country in view of the prospect of war with this same nation of Great Britain.

A little later there was an even greater outburst of patriotic feeling in the latter country, in view of what seemed a menacing attitude towards her on the part of Emperor William and some of the nations of Europe. Such manifestations show as clearly as anything could what is the real mind of both countries, as regards the prospects for peace.

There will be peace in the world just in proportion to the desire of the people in the world to live peaceably. And this desire and disposition to live peaceably will prevail in the world just in proportion to the extent to which men yield themselves to the control of the God of peace. Selfishness, envy, pride, the love of power, do not breed peace. They breed war.

Note the language of the Apostle James on this point: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" James 4:1. The lusts of the flesh can be overcome only by divine grace. The one great antidote for war in the world is the gospel of peace.

There is nothing to be gained by taking a sentimental, rather than sensible, view of this subject. We must not shut our eyes to facts for the sake of seeing pleasing visions in the realm of fancy. The Scriptures of truth do not speak of this age as an age of peace. They warn men of a time when the cry, "Peace and safety" will be the precursor of "sudden destruction." 2 Thess. 5:3. The inspired utterances, above all others, demand our attention now.

If peace is to be promoted in the earth, it will be by means of the gospel of Jesus Christ. There will come a time when "the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Ps. 37: 11. But that time will be when the judgments of the final day shall have swept the wicked out of existence and a new creation shall have come in the place of that so long cursed by sin.

Governmental Chaplains.

BY H. F. PHELPS.

THE usual "contest" over the chaplaincy in the various legislatures is now the order of the day. A reporter of the St. Paul Dispatch, says that "In the house there will undoubtedly be a hot contest for the privilege of keeping up communication between the two very remote powers." It could well be added that such a farce as is often enacted in the name of religion in the utterly vain attempt to do this, could not be, if there were not found in our Government this relic of Church and State union.

The reporter suggests that "it would seem that there should not be such a contest for the place, but there is." But such a contest would never again be possible if the various legislatures would abolish the "place." Why not do it?

What Satolli Accomplished.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

EVER since Mgr. Satolli came to this country as Apostolic Delegate, it has been apparent that there was, in spite of a calm exterior, a deep under-current of clashing interests in the Catholic Church of the United States. There have been two parties in the Catholic Church here. One party wished to partake of the liberal spirit of the age and of this nation which has for the last one hundred years and more set the pace for the age in a liberal direction; the other party desired that the American Catholic Church should eliminate from herself the liberal tendencies of the country and age, and take on habiliments more in harmony with the Catholic Church of the past.

To settle these differences in harmony with the mind of the present Pope and in accordance with the historical character of the Roman Catholic Church was the object of Mgr. Satolli's mission to this country. Upon his arrival, each party strove to win Mgr. Satolli to its side of the controversy. Had the Apostolic Delegate been an American, an Englishman, a Frenchman, or a German, he would have been more liable to sympathize with the spirit of liberality. But he was none of these. He was an Italian—an Italian who does not accept any liberty for Italy except what the Pope may grant; an Italian whose mind from his earliest days has been saturated with the Catholic Church philosophy of the Dark Ages; and who had but one object in coming to America, and that was to check the liberal and independent spirit seen in the American Catholic Church.

The leading Catholic papers have all along denied that there was any such contention in the Catholic Church. They have asserted over and over again that these contentions in the church existed only in the minds of jealous Protestants; and that the church in America was perfectly united. But now that it is all over, and Satolli has put the brake down firm on liberalism, and the bishops have learned submission to the august pontiff who occupies the chair of Peter, the story is freely told.

The editor of the Western Watchman, in an authorized and official digest of the Catholic Church affairs in the United States of the past year, written for a denominational symposium in the New York Independent of January 7, practically admits all that has been suggested of the contentions and their causes in the Catholic Church in the United States. He admits that "the shock of the first encounter shook the whole American Church." The result was that "when the smoke of the conflict was lifted and we could see the result, Satolli was found in possession of the field, and his opponents fled over a thousand leagues of seas."

Of the surrender of the American Catholic bishops to the will of Satolli, he further says:—

"Never was there in the history of the world so powerful a class as the Catholic hierarchy from its institution till the coming of the first Apostolic Delegate; and never did class surrender dearest privileges with such lofty, if reluctant, magnanimity. The fact is the bishops of the United States were God-fearing men, and although unprepared for the change of discipline, they bowed to the command of the Holy Father."

It may be seen by this statement that the American Catholic Church was regarded by the Pope as being in danger of losing its distinctive historical feature of abject submission to the Papacy; and, more, he feared the further continuance in the liberal pathway, and hence interposed his authority to recall the church toward its true character of intolerance from which it has in this country imperceptibly drifted.

One of the steps taken in this direction was the removal of Bishop Keane from the rectorship of the Catholic University of Washington. Of this action the editor of the Watchman says:—

"Bishop Keane was not ponderous, and that was the extent of his offending. But it is doubtful if he would have been removed if he had not advanced dangerous views on Protestantism. Catholics believe that Protestantism is a damnable heresy, worse than any other that has yet arisen in the church. They think it is charity to tell Protestants so; to coöperate in bringing them out of their position of awful danger. . . . Bishop Keane was the paraclete of American Protestants, and gave them consolation which better theologians considered cruel and unjustifiable. For this he was removed from the headship of an institution which was to train the men who were to lead the thought of the American Catholic Church in years to come."

The above is a very significant statement. It proves that the Catholic priests and people of this country are henceforth to be trained upon a method less in harmony with the spirit of American liberty, and more in a fashion of the priesthood of mediæval Europe, when anything which did not agree with the Catholic Church was denounced as "damnable heresy" by decrees of the church, and the believers in such doctrines extirpated, if need be, by the civil rulers—who were the church's most obsequious and obedient servants.

One more thought in this connection is worthy of remark—the time when the Papacy determined to change its policy in America. As long as "liberty" was the true watchword of the American people, such a step could not be safely taken. This, has been the condition of the American people from the birth of the republic until within the past few years. During these years no one suggested that the American people were in danger of becoming too free. Old barbaric, priestly laws have been swept from the statute books, or become obsolete from disuse.

But a change has surely come. The people of America are losing the spirit of liberty. Many of the great men of the nation distrust the people, and think that they can sniff anarchy in the popular discontent. There is a great movement for the enforcement of religion by law; and laws which men of the present age scarcely dreamed were in existence have been resurrected and enforced in our day. The various departments of our Government have at different times given authoritative expressions of governmental approval of that sentiment.

The Pope sees this significant change in American feeling, and as he sees the nation liable to make a great swing back from liberty toward despotism, he would prepare for the change, that the Catholic Church may be in a position to reap the results from this retrogression of sentiment. To put the American Catholic Church into a position to gather the largest possible amount of results of this change in American sentiment was the mission of Satolli. No wonder that he has received a Cardinal's hat in acknowledgement of his remarkable success!

THE advocates of a union of Church and State in the United States seek to evade the objections which lie against their scheme by contending that they seek no union of Church and State, but only a union of the State with religion.

It appears, from an article which the Rev. J. E. Choicy, of Geneva, Switzerland, contributes to The Kingdom (Minneapolis, Minn.), on "The Endowment of Religion by the State in Switzerland," that a union of the State with religion is exactly the system which prevails in that republic. There, says Mr. Choicy, religion is endowed by the State. The republic itself, as a nation, does not endow religion, but it is endowed by each of the cantons, or States. The Federal Government contents itself with assuming a right to negotiate with the "Holy See" in all matters concerning the organization and government of the Roman Catholic Church.

Each canton, we are told, is entirely free to endow what confession it likes. "Each has its own church system. The Roman Catholic cantons sustain the Roman Catholic Church, the Protestant cantons the Reformed Church. In the mixed cantons both churches are sustained by the State." The Catholic or Protestant minority, unless powerful enough to be considered worthy of endowment, have to submit to the will of their religious opponents. "In the cantons of Zurich, where Protestants are in overwhelming majority, a Roman Catholic child will be religiously taught just the same as his little Protestant comrades until he is ten or eleven years old."

The following quotations from Mr. Choicy's article speak further with reference to the practical workings of this system:—

"As the State sustains religion, it often is not content with a mere right of overseeing the Church; it goes so far as to organize itself the Protestant churches by means of laws which are voted by the cantonal houses. A citizen is at the same time member of a church. He himself elects by his vote deputies to the synod or consistory, as well as the minister of his parish. Every young man on attaining the age of twenty, provided he is the son of a Protestant, is registered as holder of a vote in the national church of his canton, without his having made any application. The Church and the Protestant part of the nation are thus one."

"But the endowment of Protestant religion by the State has very great inconveniences. The political government interferes from time to time in religious matters, pretends to enforce its own will, and wounds the feelings of believers. This happened in the cantons of Vaud and Neuchatel. . . . In the year 1847 the Bernese government called a disciple of Baur, Dr. Zeller, as professor of theology, without regard to the feelings of the clergy, of the theological faculty, and of a considerable part of the flock. Several members of the church having drawn a protest against such a call, they were comparatively heavily fined by the courts of justice. Later on the same government appointed as teacher of religion in the seminary of teachers, a man who clearly denied the personality of God, the revelation, inspiration, and authority of Scriptures, and the authenticity and historicity of many books of the Bible."

"To mix up the political citizenship with the membership of the church, has thus some most unhappy consequences. Political powers are allowed to have too great an influence in the church, and this is dangerous. Political and social feelings have then a part in elections, and a majority of votes is often made up by unbelievers."

"No personal assent whatever being asked of the members of the church, they are inclined to forget their responsibility. As the State sustains the Church, it is expected to do everything; people do not feel bound to give their time, their money, and their work."

These are not the comments of a hostile critic, but of one who favors the alliance of the State with religion. That there is no difference in fact between such an alliance and an alliance of Church and State, is too clear to be denied. The results, as Mr. Choisy depicts them, are such as always follow Church and State union. By endowing both churches (Protestant and Catholic) in cantons where both have a large following, the State seeks to avoid the promotion of jealousy and strife between them, which would result from the endowment of either one alone. This, however, is a mere matter of State policy.

The evil of Church and State union is inherent in the principle of such union; and by a union with more than one church, the State only extends the evil. And for this reason a union of the State with religion is even worse than a union of State and Church, as commonly understood. A union of religion with the State means more than a union of the State with some particular church; it means a union of the State with a number of churches. The evil is multiplied in exact proportion to the number of churches which enter into the unholy alliance.

The Christian Church is united to Christ. This union, as set forth in the Scriptures, is sacred and inviolable, like that of marriage. When the Church unites with the State, she forsakes God and joins with Cæsar. She commits spiritual adultery. And when this has been done, it certainly cannot help the situation any if several other churches professing to be Christian go and do the same thing. The State being righteously debarred from union with any one church, it cannot righteously be joined with two or more, either consecutively or all at once. Where even monogamy is a sin, polygamy is certainly no better.

In the United States the prominent religious organizations seek a union of the Government with religion. This is a fact almost too well known to need mention. What the Government or the churches can gain from this movement, if it succeeds, can be seen from the facts here presented with reference to the like movement in Switzerland. These facts, however, demonstrate the movement to be fraught with evil instead of good. There is nothing but evil in it in that country, and nothing else can possibly be the outcome of it here.

It is proposed here, however, to go further in the matter than has been done in the Swiss republic. A union of the State with religion, in a republican government, leaves two alternatives with respect to citizenship. Either it must disfranchise every individual who refuses to conform to the religion of the Government, or, as in Switzerland, each citizen must be counted as a member of some State church simply because he is a citizen, whether he believes in the State religion or not. In the United States it is proposed to disfranchise non-conforming citizens, counting them as infidels and anarchists. This will drive the unscrupulous and hypocritical into the church, and bring persecution upon true Christians and all others who stand in opposition to such antichristian work.

Neither is it proposed by the promoters of the movement in the United States to admit the Church of Rome to participation in the benefits of the State religion. The intention is that this shall be a Protestant "Christian nation," and not a Roman Catholic nation. The papal church, however, will certainly not consent to such an arrangement, and a determined and bitter struggle for a seat on Cæsar's throne must ensue between the papal and Protestant churches.

In Switzerland, although the federal constitution begins with the words, "In the name of Almighty God," it is left with each canton to ally itself with whatever church or churches it may think best: but in the American republic the alliance is to be made a national one, and enforced upon all by the authority of the nation. The result will be as much worse here than in Switzerland, as the nation is greater and stronger than a single State.

"THE essential principle of a trust where capital is involved is found in trusts where labor is involved. There is in our judgment no jurist, political economist, publicist of any sphere of experience or grade of acquirement, who can face the issue and point out a radical distinction between a trust which aggregates capital and an organization which aggregates and monopolizes labor."—The Christian Advocate.

PROBABLY all those connected with the Christian Citizenship movement, should they have occasion to refer to the matter, would severely condemn the Inquisition. But if their movement succeeds, will they not be driven to the establishment of some form of that tribunal?

Nothing is more logical than that an inquisition should follow an attempt to establish the Kingdom of God on the plan that the government should be controlled by the "saints," and that the Christian Citizenship leaders are the ones qualified to decide who are saints. If none but saints can get office under the government, there will be great additions to the number of saints, of those who are saints "for revenue only." And since the presence of counterfeit saints would ruin the proposed kingdom, it necessarily follows that there must be a saint tester to cull out spurious saints.

In the last SENTINEL, it was clearly shown that already our Christian Citizenship friends are sadly in need of a saint tester. It was shown that in 1890 they deliberately selected a Kentucky congressman, of good standing in an influential church, to start their movement, who was at the time he began work on the kingdom, what they now term "an infamous old libertine." They therefore confess that they selected "an infamous old libertine" as pioneer law-maker for their kingdom, thinking of course that he was a saint. Nothing is clearer, therefore, than that some kind of an inquisition is needed by our Christian Citizenship friends to enable them to discern between the righteous and the wicked. This is what the original Inquisition was for. This is what the Spanish Inquisition was for, and this is what its apologists declare it was for, and this is the ground on which it is defended.

The Catholic Mirror, of Aug. 29, 1896, contained an article in defense of the Spanish Inquisition, which attempts to justify the acts of that awful tribunal on the ground that government favor to the Catholic religion produced so many hypocrites that the Inquisition was necessary to cull them out. Here is a portion of the article:—

"To put it briefly, in those middle ages, there was the greatest union of Church and State. . . . All the laws, then, had a tinge of Catholicity, and they were carried out in a manner savoring of the principles of the universal church. . . . In those ages of faith, . . . it was well nigh impossible for a Jew or infidel to ascend to prominence in any walk of life. . . . This was very galling to the avaricious Jew, and numbers of them, thirsting for wealth, while secretly remaining Jews, pretended to profess the Catholic faith, were baptized, pushed themselves into the courts and kingly places, and even were found among the priests and prelates of the church of God. . . . In time, this consumptive germ did not fail to cause great trouble and danger and alarm in Spain. Such a state of things called for immediate action; but since there was no doubt but that very many of the Jews were honest in their conviction, what to do was a very perplexing question. Hence arose a very great difficulty—a difficulty which, as all will agree, could be overcome only by an inquisition."

Since the Roman Catholic Church has been in the State-Church business all her life, she is certainly qualified to know better whether it breeds hypocrisy than our Christian Citizenship friends who are just setting up in business. And from the foregoing we learn that it is the sober judgment of the papal church, the result of long experience, that governmental favor shown to a particular religion inevitably results in multiplying hypocritical professors of that religion, so perfectly counterfeit as to require an inquisition to discover the genuine. Any one with a mind to think and eyes to observe can see that this is true even if the long experience of the Catholic Church did not confirm it. It therefore follows that in the proportion that the Christian Citizenship movement succeeds, just in that proportion it will become the habitation of hypocrites, or as the prophet paints it, "the cage of every unclean and hateful bird." This being the inevitable result, the next question is what will the Christian Citizenship managers do about it? Will they undertake to cull out the hypocrites? and if so, how? It is useless for them to say that they can discern a hypocrite without some form of an inquisition; for it was shown at the beginning of this article that they have not the discernment to do so.

There is an infallible detector of hypocrites which belongs to the true church, but it is not the Inquisition. Hypocrites attempted to unite themselves with the early Christian Church, but in Acts 3:1-14 we learn that it was with fatal result. But this detector was the Holy Spirit, which departed from the church, as John Wesley tells us, as soon as the Church sought help from the State. No, the Christian Citizenship movement cannot have the Holy Spirit to protect it from hypocrites. An inquisition is all that is left. Will the Christian Citizenship managers organize an inquisition? The Origin of Government.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

ANY government that is formed in recognition of the principle that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, at once acknowledges that the governed as individuals are the factors, and the composite product is the government. The individual is the unit, and the government is the combined sum when the units are added together. But the addition is made, the sum is obtained, by the consent of the units.

All of the individuals as units, in a general way consent to the form of government in order that they may each enjoy the protection and other advantages arising from the union. They may not consent to all measures adopted by the majority of the people; but they have consented to government itself. They have consented to be governed themselves, by the political will of the mass, even in things that may not suit them.

Men may differ as to what measures will best serve the purpose of securing to each the enjoyment of his natural rights; but they do not differ as to whether there shall be government. All agree that governments are instituted among men for the purpose of securing individual rights; and that all these rights are to be enjoyed and secured by the protective instrumentality of government.

The foundation principle of the United States Government is stated in the Declaration of Independence: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men." In this brief enumeration of rights, we have an illustration of the kind of rights that the Creator gave to each individual; and which each person has as a natural possession before he becomes a unit or factor in the formation of civil government.

Because of the insecurity of these rights against the invasion of the evil-inclined, governments were instituted to secure these rights,—or rather to secure those possessing them in the enjoyment of them. That is to say,

When people found that their Creator had given them certain rights to enjoy in this life, and that because of the prevalence of injustice, or a disposition on the part of many to rob others of their enjoyment of the rights which God had given them; and desiring to secure these rights for themselves and others; they established governments for that purpose.

Now, the three designating terms employed in the Declaration of Independence are not intended to be limiting; for the language which points out the fact that men are naturally in possession of certain rights, says that "among these" natural rights are life, or the right to live; and "liberty" as wide as the Creator bestowed on man; also the legitimate "pursuit of happiness."

In this we have an example of the nature of all the rights which were given by the Creator to all, or each member of the race alike. Every natural right stands on the same basis and is alike unalienable. In other words, such rights cannot be separated from the individual so long as he has a right to life. Governments rightly organized and administered never take any of these rights from a citizen by virtue of his citizenship; but secure him in the enjoyment of them all.

Man did not in the beginning, and does not now, give up any of his natural rights when he becomes a citizen of civil government. He consents to be governed, and to become a factor in the governing of others, in order that his rights may all be the better secured to him.

The political maxim, and the divine truth, is that governments derive just power from the consent of the governed. It is power, then, and not rights, which is surrendered to a general fund in the formation of government: this power to be employed in defense of the rights of each individual consenting.

But the question may be raised, Did not each individual possess power and a natural right, to defend himself, before he delegated it to the government as a combination?—No. Originally self-defense was not a natural right. Man was in possession of physical power; but it was given in the beginning for another purpose entirely. The matter of self-defense is wholly an artificial necessity, arising with sin and the efforts of the evil ones to use the power God had given them, to impose on others. This evil was selfishness, which proposed to have its own way, even at the expense of others.

Originally, man was endowed with power physically to accomplish certain ends; but self-defense was not a means to any one of those ends. He was given a mind capable, by its superiority, of governing all living things. The Creator gave him a virgin world with the Garden of Eden as a copy for the improvement of the whole in a like manner. The man was given intelligence and power to dress and keep the garden, and to subdue the rest of the earth in a like manner, and people it. Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness were his. But this did not include, it does not contemplate, the pursuit of an enemy; for all were his friends. He was given power to govern himself.

Religion and State in Russia.

RUSSIA has long enjoyed the "benefits" of State religion. From the days of Peter the Great, the Czar has been head of the Church as well as of the State. He has long been recognized as "priest" of the Russian "White House," as well as civil ruler. His empire is and has long been a "Christian" nation.

In Russia the State is united to the "Christian" faith. The Russian legal code, called "Swod," so declares, saying "that in the Russian lands the established faith shall be that of the Christian Orthodox Oriental Catholic Church." Of course, the faith of a "Christian orthodox" church can be none other than the Christian orthodox faith.

The foregoing, with other facts given in the following quotations, are taken from an interesting article contributed to the Independent, of January 28, by a correspondent in Russia.

The Russian legal code declares:—

"The Emperor, as the Christian ruler, is the highest defender and protector of the dogmas of the established faith, the guardian of the orthodox faith and of each and every ordinance of the holy church."

In the days of Peter the Great, each member of the "Holy Synod" took this oath: "I confess and confirm with my oath, that the highest ruler of this college [the synod] is the Czar, our most gracious Lord." The oath exacted of bishops at the present time is as follows:—

"I promise to obey the directing synod for all the Russias in each and every respect as the authoritative legal body of the church, which has been appointed as such by his Majesty Peter the Great, of blessed memory, and has been confirmed by our present ruling Emperor.

"I also confess that I have received this office by the will of his Majesty and by the election of the Synod. And I promise to keep faithfully all that has been enjoined upon me, or shall be enjoined upon me by the Holy Synod, after the consent of his Majesty shall have been secured for the measures decided upon by the Synod."

Peter the Great did not see, however, or professed not to see, that this state of things would interfere with liberty of conscience. "In 1722 Peter declared in a ukase that it was not his purpose to meddle with affairs of conscience, 'although he had by divine authority the absolute power to decide in such matters.'" His idea of interference with conscience was very much like that held by some religious "reformers" of the present time.

The present Russian law in regard to dissenters reads as follows:—

"All the subjects of the Russian Empire not belonging to the Established Church, both native Russians and those from abroad who are in the service of the State, are permitted at all times openly to confess their faith and practice their services in accordance with the rite.

This freedom of faith is assured not only to the Christians of foreign confessions, but also to the Jews, Mohammedans and heathens, so that all the peoples in Russia may worship God the Almighty, with different tongues according to the laws and confessions of their fathers, so that they may bless the government of the Russian Czar and pray for his welfare and prosperity to the Creator of the world."

"This liberty, however," says the Independent's correspondent, "is assured only those persons who are born into a certain confession, but not to those who would adopt or accept a new faith, unless it be that of the Established Church. The legal code reads:—

"It is the privilege only of the Established Church in the Empire to seek others to adopt its teachings and tenets. This faith, however, can be effected only by the grace of God, by instruction, by kindness, and especially by a noble example. Therefore it is never permitted the Established Church to use force in gaining the adherents of other faiths or persuading unbelievers to embrace the orthodox faiths, nor to threaten those who will not come over to the Orthodox Church."

"In the strongest terms every propaganda of others among the adherents of the State Church is forbidden. Whoever persuades an orthodox Russian to join another church, loses all his legal and civil rights, and is banished to Siberia. Those who have left the orthodox communion in this way are put under the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts. Until their return to the State Church they are deprived of all rights over their own children, for whom guardians are appointed, and who are placed in schools approved by the church authorities. If the convert has property where also orthodox people live, he is not allowed to occupy it, and the property is put into the hands of another. In case the convert absolutely refuses to return, all these punishments are made permanent. The ministers of "strange cults" are forbidden by law to engage in any polemics against the State Church. They are not allowed to warn their own members from going over to the Established Church. In fact, they are even compelled to report such conversions to the authorities of the State.

"What almost insurmountable difficulties are by the laws of Russia placed between dissenting members and the performance of their duties, can be seen, for example, from the legal restrictions put upon the Roman Catholics. The Roman Catholic bishops can confer with the Vatican only through the mediumship of the Russian Ministry of the Interior, and without the placet of the Minister they are not permitted to publish any pastoral letters or other official declarations. The disciplinary measures of the bishops are seriously interfered with by the laws of the State offering protection to disobedient priests and laymen. The bishops and priests are not permitted to visit Rome. Only one Russian bishop participated in the deliberations of the Vatican Council in 1870, and he was forbidden to return by the government. Occasionally the Imperial government allows a Roman Catholic bishop to go to the Eternal City. Priests from abroad are not allowed to enter the country without special permission. No Russian subject is allowed to pursue his theological studies in a non-Russian school. Even the appointment of theological teachers by the bishops must be approved by the State.

"The Protestant Church is in no better condition legally. It, too, is merely an ecclesia licita; and the banishment of more than thirty per cent. of the pastors of the three Protestant German Baltic provinces in the last decade shows what the legal status of Protestants is in Russia. Only in Finland, where special conditions prevail, does the Protestant Church enjoy better legal rights. In every respect, however, religious dissent meets the heavy hand of the law. The great Jewish agitator in Kishineff, in Southern Russia, Joseph Rabinowitz, could not effect a Jewish-Christian Church organization because the Russian authorities refused to permit him to baptize. In the light of data like these it seems vain to hope for religious tolerance in the Empire of the Czar."

The trouble is that the Russian people have religious "tolerance," but not religious liberty. Religious tolerance represents the mildest attitude of the State towards dissenters when the State has professed religion; and "tolerance" implies the right to be intolerant whenever the tolerant party may choose so to act. Wherever there is "tolerance" of a religion, there also will always be intolerance to a greater or less extent.

We want no religious "tolerance" in this country; we want religious freedom. And therefore we want no union of religion with the State. If the State professes religion, it will certainly join a church.

Proposed Law for Christmas Observance.

In Atlanta, Ga., the 25th day of December last was made an occasion of revelry and crime, by the baser element of the population, to an extraordinary degree. The result was a proposition by the chairman of the police committee of the city council to obtain legislation which would secure a "proper observance" of the day. The following information relative to the project is furnished by the Atlanta Journal of January 7:—

"Alderman Joseph Hirsch, the new chairman of the police committee of the city council, proposes to secure legislation that will bring about a proper observance of Christmas as a religious holiday. The alderman thinks that rowdism and riotous conduct should not be permitted on Christmas and is determined to at least make an effort to put a stop to the practice prevalent here of celebrating Christ's birthday as if it were the Fourth of July.

"I propose, if possible, to secure legislation that will prevent a repetition of the disgraceful conduct on the part of rowdies which has characterized Christmas in Atlanta in the past," said Alderman Hirsch, this morning. "Christmas is a holiday in celebration of the beginning of the Christian era, and by the Christians is regarded as a holy day. Therefore, it should be observed as such. In the north, east, west and, in fact, everywhere but here, the people observe Christmas as a holy day and attend divine worship. But here the day is turned into a regular Fourth of July. The streets are given over to rowdies, their riotous conduct disturbs the peace as well as the devotions of good citizens. This, I think, is all wrong, and I propose to start a movement that will result in the day being properly observed."

"Captain Connolly, chief of police, heard the remarks of the chairman of the police committee and stated that his views coincided exactly with those of Mr. Hirsch. He said the police did their best to keep order, but were unable to do so."

Anyone familiar with the history of Sunday legislation can easily see the exact parallel which will be furnished by the development of Christmas into a legal "holy day," with the development of the legal "sabbath." First appears the fact that the holiday is made an occasion of unusual lawlessness. This has long been the case with Sunday. For reasons which require no great study to understand, Sunday has long contributed more cases for the police court dockets than any other day of the week. To this fact the champions of Sunday have long been calling public attention; and that this Sunday lawlessness was exceedingly bad and demanded a remedy, could not be denied. And the "remedy" proposed and in many instances secured, was a stricter law for Sunday observance.

Upon the same ground precisely it is now proposed to secure legislation for the observance of Christmas, and a similar movement has been started to secure such an observance of Thanksgiving as will not conflict with the religious exercises of the day. By the same logic these "holy days" stand or fall together.

No one denies the evil of the rioting and criminal excess which our holidays so frequently bring forth. But the proposed remedy can only make the matter worse. Idleness can never become a remedy for crime.

There is no reason why people should not be required to behave themselves as well on Sunday, Christmas, or any legal holiday, as on any other day of the year; and there is no reason why they should not be required to conduct themselves as decently on every day as on these days. There can be no reason whatever for making Christmas, Sunday, or Thanksgiving legally different from other days in this respect.

The only remedy for holiday lawlessness is to cut off the opportunity from those to whose natures such conduct is congenial. In other words, they should be kept at work. If they were not so frequently cut off from honest work by these holidays, the civil authorities would not so often be called upon to furnish them with work in the penal institutions of the State.

THE Pittsburg Catholic, of January 14, notes that "Governor Hastings, in his message, deplors the fact that official statistics show that crime is increasing at a more rapid ratio than our population," and adds: "Building additional prisons will not prove a preventive. When the growing generation is trained in morality, as it is in secular knowledge, the State may look for a decrease. The education from which God is banished is the root of the evil."

The "root of the evil" is the depravity of human nature; and only that which will change that nature can prove a remedy. Will training the growing generation "in morality" avert the evil? The Roman Catholic Church trains the growing generation of her adherents in "morality," but criminal statistics do not speak more favorably for that class of our citizens than for any other. The morality which will restrain people from crime is that which is taught to individuals by the Holy Spirit, through the Word of God; and that morality does not come through any secular channel.

It Has Always Been So.

BY W. E. CORNELL.

MEN and organizations who have stood in defense of a principle that is in its nature reformatory; that strikes at existing evils, have always been the targets of every abuse and calumny that the opposition could heap upon them.

In the days of Christ, the people garnished the sepulchres of the righteous, and with tear-stained cheeks exclaimed, "If we had been in the days of our fathers we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." And yet this very people crucified the Prince of Glory.

Religious reformers in every age have had this spirit to contend with; but after their work is done and they pass off the stage of action, those who live after them, to enjoy the fruits of their labors, invariably look back upon the deeds of their persecutors with a holy horror, while at the same time they themselves may unconsciously be manifesting the same spirit toward a new truth for their day.

Seventh-day Adventists as an organization stand in defense of God's law and all that that implies. Their bitterest enemies, those who have been instrumental in invoking the power of the law against them, openly and under oath, acknowledge that they are good, law-abiding, honest citizens; temperate, and ready for every good word and work. Indeed, it is of them as of Daniel of old, the only occasion against them is "concerning the law of their God."

Seventh-day Adventists know that they have a work to do, and like faithful watchmen they have cried aloud and spared not. They have unflinchingly raised a note of warning against approaching dangers. They stand unalterably opposed to the strong trend of sentiment that is fast setting in favor of measures that have in them the principle of a united Church and State. Because of this they are maligned and denounced in the severest terms by the would-be guardians of Sunday-sacredness. And why? Simply because they see in them a Mordecai in the gate against the consummation of their cherished plans.

Nearly fifteen years ago, an authority among Seventh-day Adventists had this to say:—

"Those who honor the Bible Sabbath will be denounced as enemies of law and order; as breaking down the moral restraints of society, causing anarchy and corruption, and calling down the judgments of God upon the earth. . . . Conscientious obedience to the Word of God will be treated as rebellion."—"Great Controversy," vol. 4, pp. 409, 425.

This prophetic utterance has since been fulfilled to the very letter in many instances. Here is one. Speaking of the opposition of Seventh-day Adventists to National Reformism, Rev. J. R. Day, Secretary of the American Sabbath Union for the State of Indiana, at a mass meeting held in Chicago in 1892, said:—

"It is religious anarchy. It is calculated to break down our rest day, destroy the peace of the country, and bring the judgments of heaven down upon the land."

The Christian Endeavorer, whose "one absorbing purpose, one undying enthusiasm" seems to be that "Christ shall rule the caucus and the common council as he does the church," in its issue of November last, states that the Seventh-day Adventists are "carrying on a guarilla warfare against the United States Government," and in the December issue of the same publication, the editor says:—

"These Seventh-day Adventists are flooding our churches with their literature. . . . They co-operate with the open blatant infidels and other enemies of our country in their attacks upon the Christian Sabbath. . . . The friends of the Christian Sabbath have many enemies to fight, but none appear to us to be more mischievous than the Seventh-day Adventists."

Seventh-day Adventists are not nettled at this classification by the Endeavorer, though it is false in every respect. It is only what might be expected; indeed, it is just what is expected and what has been expected. For more than forty years, with voice and pen, Seventh-day Adventists have been telling all the people that what we now see enacted before our eyes, would take place; and no amount of denunciation, abuse, or misrepresentation will in the least swerve them from their duty as they view it. The warfare in which they are engaged is one on which hinge eternal consequences, and they have enlisted for life.

Des Moines, Iowa.

In the Christian Statesman, of January 23, the editor reports that he called recently upon President Cleveland, "to express to the President our high appreciation of the far-reaching influence" of his Thanksgiving proclamation. "No sooner had we referred to that remarkable document than the President said: 'I have been amazed at the effect of that acknowledgment of Christ.

Letters have come to me in large numbers from various portions of the country, expressing intense satisfaction. My only wonder is that I never made a similar acknowledgment before.' "

The author of that truly "remarkable document" is not surprised that none of his predecessors possessed sufficient wisdom to issue such a proclamation, but only that he himself had not thought of it sooner! That is surprising, truly!

The Struggle for Religious Freedom.

Jewish Spectator, Memphis, Tenn.

"ETERNAL vigilance is the price of liberty." Verily, religious liberty is the most precious prize this republic ever won, and every true American, be he Jew or Gentile, Atheist or Deist, ought to guard well the entrance to the temple of freedom, that no ecclesiastical institution whatsoever enter in the disguise of a civil law to gain the support of State and municipal governments. The peace and harmony binding so many heterogenous religious elements together in this land must not be disturbed, and the curse of religious strife must not be brought upon the land. There are no trifles in the science of politics; the smallest beginning may, in the end, work the greatest mischief; or as Horace says, "He has half the deed done who has made a beginning."

The State of Tennessee, in its declaration of rights upon the statute book, emphatically proclaims: "No human authority can in any case whatsoever control or interfere with the rights of conscience; and that no preference shall be ever given by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship." If, in the presence of this solemn and sublime declaration, it is just and lawful and compatible with the rights of conscience that thousands within the State are deprived of their freedom of will, and its legitimate exercise, by inserting a theological amendment regarding Sunday observance, it is just as lawful to frame a law to introduce the Bible into the public schools of the State as a text-book for religious instruction, and to convene at the hour set apart for the purpose all the Protestant and Catholic pastors of the State, together with rabbis and liberal ministers, to decide what version of the Bible should be used, and, as it were, to fight it out among themselves.

After it has been made just and lawful to read the Bible in the schools, although every creed believes in a different interpretation, it would also be considered a civil act to put God into the Constitution of the United States. It needs only to imbue State senators and legislators with the idea that any sectarian principle can be inserted in the civil law of the land, and there will be no difficulty to make congressmen believe the same thing. "E pluribus unum," "one composed of many," is the motto of the United States, and the representatives of each separate State are frequently elected as members of Congress. If the grand principles of religious liberty and the secular character of our Constitution are ignored and set aside at the sessions of our legislature, why should the same men consider them more sacred and inviolable in the Congress chamber and Senate hall?

They may do all this with the best of intentions—perhaps in order to make the nation purer, better and nobler—but after the mischief is done these intentions will go for nothing. They may also have forgotten history, which told mankind how much misery religious wars have brought to nations of the past, and how much precious human blood was shed in the effort to establish a Church in the State, and to define the God in whose name the law was to be executed.

I know that many will consider this an exaggeration of the consequences which the question at issue will bring, but it is, nevertheless, a logical conclusion. If the Bible is to be taken as an authority in the observance of the Sunday, it is likely to be taken as an authority in legislation otherwise. If an ecclesiastical ordinance is to determine and shape the laws of the State, it is but natural to fear the encroachments of ecclesiastical authority upon the magna charta of the nation. . . . To avoid the Scylla and Charybdis of bigotry and fanaticism the State and the nation must steer clear of the reefs and cliffs of sectarianism. . . .

If every statesman, every member of the legislature or of Congress, would be guided by impartiality of judgment and purity in politics, if all ministers of the gospel and other religious people would recognize the mischief sectarian influences work within State legislation, every Sunday law in the land would speedily be repealed. . . .

We and millions of other citizens have come hither from other countries to seek shelter under the glorious banner of freedom and equality held aloft by a secular government, and no loyal citizen should set at naught these blissful promises, promulgated by the constitutions of the States to every human being in the land. We are Israelites by birth and religious education; we revere the laws of God and the religious maxims of Moses, but we do not desire that the States or the State at large shall enforce and perpetuate the ecclesiastical ordinances of the ancient Jews by virtue of the civil law. We protest against the introduction of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures into the spheres of public education, and denounce the efforts of over-zealous sectarians to put the God of the Jews and Christians into the American Constitution.

In France or in any other republic just emerging from the ruins of a monarchical government, some excuse can be offered for making concessions to ecclesiastical rules. There the Church and State were united for centuries, and a separation cannot be accomplished at once; but here on the virgin soil of America such a union was never contemplated; hence every effort, however small, which would gradually and eventually lead to it, should be repulsed by every true citizen. Within the wide boundaries of this land, many dissimilar creeds and religious associations have now for more than a century lived in peace, harmony and prosperity; it would be treason to disturb this peace and good will.

Whenever the day should come that the Church needs the support of the State, Christianity would be doomed to decay, because if religion has to lean on human law and on a penal code, it betokens debility and decrepitude on the part of religion. Let every denomination observe a day of rest and spiritual elevation for the heart and mind, be it now one day in seven or one day in three, but let them use no other means but moral persuasion and fervent piety to maintain it. . . . Thus the peace and prosperity of all citizens will be secured; the sublime principles of justice, freedom, and equality will be cherished by everyone as the noblest and most precious heirloom of the American nation.

"SENATOR HOAR," says the Independent, "is said to have betrayed deep feeling in resenting the threatening tone of some of the communications to Senators peremptorily demanding the prompt ratification of the Arbitration Treaty. He deemed it a grievous indignity to so honorable a body to hurry it into immediate action by 'jamming spurs into its sides.'"

The senator is right. The members of Congress are chosen to transact the most important business of the nation, and they should do this with that deliberation which waits on wisdom. We hope every member of our national Legislature will refuse to pay any attention to the threatenings of any party or body, big or little, religious or secular.

ONE such "sermon" as was preached on a recent Sunday in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, by the Rev. Lyman Abbott, in which he amused his congregation even to the point of open laughter by his treatment of the Bible story of Jonah, does more to break down the bars of moral restraint in a community than can be offset by all the efforts of reform societies. Dr. Abbott says that the Book of Jonah is a fable, written to teach the goodness and mercy of God. But the average person will lose confidence in a God whose goodness and mercy must be taught by falsehood. The God of the Bible was never reduced to any such straits.

The greatest need of mankind to-day is that of more confidence in God and God's Word.

THE proposed treaty of arbitration between this country and Great Britain does not now seem to be the embodiment of a desire for peace that it did at first. Lord Salisbury is quoted as saying that he will have the treaty in the form in which it was sent to the United States Senate, or not at all; and the Senate profess to see in it a shrewd scheme on the part of the English premier to put this country in a position of disadvantage. Consequently they have so amended the treaty that its acceptance by the representatives of both countries seems likely to be indefinitely postponed.

This only shows that the parties concerned in the matter are looking out for their own interests, respectively, much more than they are looking out for peace.

THE "Old Jewish Saturday" has been a source of untold trouble to the Sunday reformers for these many years. It has a certain dignity and persistency arising from its association with God, the Decalogue and Jesus Christ, which have made it so quietly stubborn when men have ordered it to get out of the way, that even Mr. Gamble, the latest "Daniel come to judgment," has not been able to order it out of court without a struggle. The special aim of these discoverers in the field of Sabbath Reform is to destroy "Saturday" as the seventh day of the week. To do this they are willing to destroy the week if need be,—anything to be rid of the one fact that the law of the Sabbath finds its full expression in the last day of the week.—Sabbath Recorder.

A CRUSADE against Sunday newspapers and Sunday distribution of mails, was inaugurated January 21, by ministers of Annapolis, Maryland. At a meeting held in the First M. E. Church, a committee of seven was appointed to petition the postmaster-general on the subject, and devise such other means as might be necessary to the success of the crusade. The Sunday sermon is coming to rely more and more upon State and municipal legislation to enable it to compete with the Sunday papers.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST
REPUBLICS,

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. It is the greatest submarine tunnel in the world, extending from Port Huron, Mich., under the St. Clair River to Sarnia, Ontario, and connecting the Grand Trunk Railway System of Canada with the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway. It has just been completed at a cost of $2,700,000.

The tunnel proper is a continuous iron tube, nineteen feet and ten inches in diameter, and 6,025 feet, or more than a mile long. The length of the approaches, in addition to the tunnel proper, is 5,603 feet, making a little over two miles.

Trains of the Grand Trunk and Chicago & Grand Trunk Railways are hauled through this tunnel by engines specially constructed for the purpose. They are said to be the largest engines in the world. The entire weight of the engine and tender rests upon ten drive-wheels. The weight of one of these monster engines in actual service is found to be approximately one hundred tons.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD.

Wilt thou rally thy legions to battle,
And march on the City of Light,
Whence angels excelling in power
Were hurled to the regions of night?

Wilt thou compass the city eternal,
Its towers and battlements raze,
And train thy batteries brazen
On the throne of the Ancient of Days?

CAN NATIONS CONTEND WITH GOD?

"At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation." *

For a nation to compel a subject to disobey the laws of a foreign nation, when it knows it is powerless to protect him in so doing, is but to murder its citizen in cold blood, and merit international contempt.

Will the government attempt to protect its citizens against the wrath of an offended God? Will it declare war on the King of kings? Can it marshal its hosts and hurl its serried columns against the Eternal City?

"WE OUGHT TO OBEY GOD RATHER THAN MEN." †

"WHEN they went from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another people; he suffered no man to do them wrong: . . . saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." ‡

If God had intended that his children should submit to governments in matters of conscience, he would not have protected Daniel in the lions' den, the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace, nor have delivered Peter and John, Paul and Silas, from their prison cells, where they were placed for disobeying human enactments.

GOD AND THE POWERS THAT BE.

"RENDER therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." §

God has ordained that governments should exist among men. To these governments he has commanded his people to render tribute, honor, and respect. He has commanded them to be obedient to every ordinance of man, not for fear of punishment, but for the Lord's sake. So long as a government enforces ordinances of men, — such laws only as are necessary for the protection of men in the enjoyment of their equal, natural rights, — they will not come in conflict with the Christian.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS

"I INSIST that if there is anything which it is the duty of the whole people to never intrust to any hands but their own, that thing is the preservation and perpetuity of their own liberties and institutions."—Abraham Lincoln.

FEBRUARY 12 is the birthday of Abraham Lincoln.

Throughout the country on that day there will be held meetings, dinners, etc., at which many speeches will be made in honor of that man in whom were mingled so many of the elements of true greatness.

The AMERICAN SENTINEL heartily joins in the tribute of honor to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. We propose to honor him by honoring the principles to which he was so thoroughly devoted. And that this may be done in the best way, we give to him space in our columns to speak again in behalf of the great principles which called forth the highest efforts of his great powers.

Nor is this done merely as a tribute to his memory. It needs to be done again; because again the principle is attacked, to the advocacy of which he gave the best years of his life, and which he caused to triumph.

In principle, the situation to-day is precisely what it was in 1857-1860. And the position which Abraham Lincoln occupied with reference to the situation as it was in his day needs to be recalled for the instruction of all the people respecting the situation as it is to-day.

The one great governmental principle to which Abraham Lincoln devoted his mighty energies from 1857 to 1861, is THE INALIENABLE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES TO APPEAL FROM, AND TO REVERSE, DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES UPON CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

This principle was denounced at that time as revolutionary. For advocating this principle, Abraham Lincoln was denounced as preaching "monstrous revolutionary doctrine"; as being an enemy of the Constitution and the supremacy of the laws; as giving over the country to violence, to anarchy, to the rule of the mob.

In 1896, this identical principle, with all who advocated it, was denounced in the same way and in the same words. And it was done by men who profess to be not only admirers of Abraham Lincoln, but the very conservators of the principles maintained by him.

Perhaps these same men, on this Lincoln birthday occasion, will again contradict themselves and falsify history, by attempting to honor Lincoln in speech, while both in speech and action they repudiate his principles. We want the readers of the AMERICAN SENTINEL to be prepared to put into the hands of those men, and all to whom those men may speak, Lincoln's own discussion of the principle which he so devotedly maintained.

IN the month of March, 1857, the Supreme Court of the United States rendered a decision on the slavery question, in which the court gave to the Constitution a certain interpretation. The occasion of the decision is of no particular interest to-day; but the governmental principle developed upon the rendering of the decision is of vital interest always to the whole people of the United States.

No sooner had the decision been published than throughout the whole country there was a taking of sides for and against it. From whatever cause, it was but a little while before it was found that United States Senator Stephen A. Douglas and Abraham Lincoln stood distinctly in the place of leaders of the respective sides to the controversy—Douglas for the decision, Lincoln against it.

DOUGLAS AND LINCOLN AT SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

The position and argument of those who accepted the decision of the court were stated by Senator Douglas at Springfield, Ill., about the second week of June, 1857, as follows:—

"The courts are the tribunals prescribed by the Constitution and created by the authority of the people to determine, expound, and enforce the law. Hence, whoever resists the final decision of the highest judicial tribunal, aims a deadly blow at our whole republican system of government—a blow which, if successful, would place all our rights and liberties at the mercy of passion, anarchy and violence. I repeat, therefore, that if resistance to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in a matter like the points decided in the Dred Scott case, clearly within their jurisdiction as defined by the Constitution, shall be forced upon the country as a political issue, it will become a distinct and naked issue between the friends and enemies of the Constitution—the friends and the enemies of the supremacy of the laws."

In a speech at Springfield, "two weeks" later, June 26, 1857, Lincoln replied to this, as follows:—

"And now as to the Dred Scott decision. . . . Judge Douglas . . . denounces all who question the correctness of that decision, as offering violent resistance to it. But who resists it? Who has, in spite of the decision, declared Dred Scott free, and resisted the authority of his master over him?"

"Judicial decisions have two uses—first, to absolutely determine the case decided; and, secondly, to indicate to the public how other similar cases will be decided when they arise. For the latter use they are called 'precedents' and 'authorities.'

"We believe as much as Judge Douglas (perhaps more) in obedience to, and respect for, the judicial department of the Government. . . . But we think the Dred Scott decision is erroneous. We know the court that made it, has often overruled its own decisions, and we shall do what we can to have it overrule this. We offer no resistance to it.

Judicial decisions are of greater or less authority as precedents, according to circumstances. That this should be so, accords both with common sense, and the customary understanding of the legal profession.

"If this important decision had been made by the unanimous concurrence of the judges; and without any apparent partisan bias; and in accordance with legal public expectation; and with the steady practice of the departments throughout our history; and had been, in no part, based on assumed historical facts which are not really true; or, if wanting in some of these, it had been before the court more than once, and had there been affirmed and re-affirmed through a course of years; it then might be, perhaps would be, factious, nay, even revolutionary, not to acquiesce in it as a precedent.

"But when, as it is true, we find it wanting in all these claims to the public confidence, it is not resistance, it is not factious, it is not even disrespectful, to treat it as not having yet quite established a settled doctrine for the country. But Judge Douglas considers this view awful."

AT CHICAGO.

In 1858 Lincoln and Douglas were rival candidates for the United States senatorship; and this supreme court decision was the leading issue. Friday evening, July 9, Senator Douglas made a speech in Chicago, in which, noticing Lincoln's speech upon his nomination for senator, he said:—

"The other proposition discussed by Mr. Lincoln in his speech, consists in a crusade against the Supreme Court of the United States on account of the Dred Scott decision. On this question also I desire to say to you unequivocally, that I take direct and distinct issue with him. I have no warfare to make on the Supreme Court of the United States, either on account of that or any other decision which they have pronounced from that bench.

"The Constitution of the United States has provided that the powers of government (and the constitution of each State has the same provision) shall be divided into three departments—Executive, Legislative, and Judicial. The right and the province of expounding the Constitution and construing the law are vested in the judiciary established by the Constitution.

"As a lawyer, I feel at liberty to appear before the court and controvert any principle of law while the question is pending before the tribunal; but when the decision is made, my private opinion, your opinion, all other opinions, must yield to the majesty of that authoritative adjudication.

"I wish you to bear in mind that this involves a great principle, upon which our rights, our liberty, and our property all depend. What security have you for your property, for your reputation, and for your personal rights, if the courts are not upheld, and their decisions respected when once fairly rendered by the highest tribunal known to the Constitution?

"I do not choose, therefore, to go into any argument with Mr. Lincoln in reviewing the various decisions which the Supreme Court has made, either upon the Dred Scott case or any other. I have no idea of appealing from the decision of the Supreme Court upon a constitutional question to the decisions of a tumultuous town meeting.

"I am aware that once an eminent lawyer of this city, now no more, said that the State of Illinois had the most perfect judicial system in the world, subject to but one exception, which could be cured by a slight amendment, and that amendment was to so change the law as to allow an appeal from the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois, on all constitutional questions, to justices of the peace.

"My friend, Mr. Lincoln, who sits behind me, reminds me that that proposition was made when I was judge of the Supreme Court. Be that as it may, I do not think that fact adds any greater weight or authority to the suggestion. It matters not with me who was on the bench, whether Mr. Lincoln or myself, whether a Lockwood or a Smith, a Taney or a Marshall; the decision of the highest tribunal known to the Constitution of the country must be final till it is reversed by an equally high authority.

"Hence, I am opposed to this doctrine of Mr. Lincoln by which he proposes to take an appeal from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, upon this high constitutional question, to a Republican caucus sitting in the country. Yes, or any other caucus or town meeting, whether it be Republican, American, or Democratic. I respect the decisions of that august tribunal. I shall always bow in deference to them. I am a law-abiding man."

The next night, July 10, 1858, Lincoln spoke in reply, and upon this point said:—

"Another of the issues he says that is to be made with me is upon his devotion to the Dred Scott decision, and my opposition to it.

"I have expressed heretofore, and I now repeat my opposition to the Dred Scott decision; but I should be allowed to state the nature of that opposition, and I ask your indulgence while I do so.

"What is fairly implied by the term Judge Douglas has used, 'resistance to the decision'? I do not resist it. If I wanted to take Dred Scott from his master, I would be interfering with property, and that terrible difficulty that Judge Douglas speaks of, of interfering with property, would arise. But I am doing no such thing as that; but all that I am doing is refusing to obey it as a political rule. If I were in Congress, and a vote should come up on a question whether slavery should be prohibited in a new territory, in spite of the Dred Scott decision I would vote that it should.

"That is what I should do. Judge Douglas said last night that before the decision he might advance his opinion, and it might be contrary to the decision when it was made, but after it was made, he would abide by it until it was reversed. Just so! We let this property abide by the decision, but WE WILL TRY TO REVERSE THAT DECISION. We will try to put it where Judge Douglas would not object, for he says he will obey it until it is reversed. SOMEBODY HAS TO REVERSE THAT DECISION, since it was made, and WE MEAN TO REVERSE IT, and we mean to do it peaceably.

"What are the uses of decisions of courts?—They have two uses. As rules of property they have two uses. First, they decide upon the question before the court. They decide in this case that Dred Scott is a slave; nobody resists that. Not only that, but they say to everybody else that persons standing just as Dred Scott stands, are as he is. That is, they say that when a question comes up upon another person, it will be so decided again, unless the court decides in another way, unless the court overrules its decision. Well, we mean to do what we can to have the court decide the other way. This is one thing we mean to try to do.

"The sacredness that Judge Douglas throws around this decision is a degree of sacredness that has never been before thrown around any other decision. I have never heard of such a thing. Why, decisions apparently contrary to that decision, or that good lawyers thought were contrary to that decision, have been made by that very court before. It is the first of its kind; it is an astonisher in legal history; it is a new wonder of the world.

"It is based upon falsehood in the main as to facts; allegations of facts upon which it stands are not facts at all in many instances, and no decision made on any question—the first instance of a decision made under so many unfavorable circumstances—thus placed, has ever been held by the profession as law, and it has always needed confirmation before the lawyers regarded it as settled law.

"But Judge Douglas will have it that all hands must take this extraordinary decision, made under these extraordinary circumstances, and give their vote in Congress in accordance with it, yield to it, and obey it in every possible sense."

DOUGLAS AT BLOOMINGTON.

Again: In a speech at Bloomington, Illinois, July 16, 1858, Senator Douglas said:—

"I therefore take issue with Mr. Lincoln directly in regard to this warfare upon the Supreme Court of the United States. I accept the decision of that court as it was pronounced. Whatever my individual opinions may be, I, as a good citizen, am bound by the laws of the land as the legislature makes them, as the court expounds them; and as the executive officer administers them. I am bound by our Constitution as our fathers made it, and as it is our duty to support it. I am bound as a good citizen to sustain the constituted authorities, and to resist, discourage, and beat down, by all lawful and peaceful means, all attempts at exciting mobs, or violence, or any other revolutionary proceedings, against the Constitution and the constituted authorities of the country."

LINCOLN SUSTAINED BY AUTHORITY.

The next night, July 17, at Springfield, Lincoln replied and said:—

"Now as to the Dred Scott decision, for upon that he makes his last point at me. He boldly takes ground in favor of that decision.

"This is one-half the onslaught, and one-third of the plan, of the entire campaign. I am opposed to that decision in a certain sense, but not in the sense which he puts on it. I say that in so far as it decided in favor of Dred Scott's master, and against Dred Scott and his family, I do not propose to disturb or resist the decision.

"I never have proposed to do any such thing. I think that in respect for judicial authority my humble history would nor suffer in comparison with that of Judge Douglas.

"He would have the citizen conform his vote to that decision; the member of Congress, his; the President, his use of the veto power. He would make it a rule of political action for the people and all the departments of the Government. I would not. By resisting it as a political rule, I disturb no right of property, create no disorder, excite no mobs.

"When he spoke at Chicago, on Friday evening of last week, he made this same point upon me. On Saturday evening I replied, and reminded him of a Supreme Court decision which he opposed for at least several years. Last night, at Bloomington, he took some notice of that reply, but entirely forgot to remember that part of it.

"He renews his onslaught upon me, forgetting to remember that I have turned the tables against himself on that very point. I renew the effort to draw his attention to it. I wish to stand erect before the country, as well as Judge Douglas, on this question of judicial authority; and therefore I add something to the authority in favor of my own position. I wish to show that I am sustained by authority, in addition to that heretofore presented. . . .

"In public speaking it is tedious reading from documents; but I must beg to indulge the practice to a limited extent. I shall read from a letter written by Mr. Jefferson in 1820, and now to be found in the seventh volume of his correspondence, at page 177. It seems he had been presented by a gentleman of the name of Jarvis with a book, or essay, or periodical, called the 'Republican,' and he was writing in acknowledgment of the present, and noting some of its contents. After expressing the hope that the work will produce a favorable effect upon the minds of the young, he proceeds to say:—

"That it will have this tendency may be expected, and for that reason I feel an urgency to note what I deem an error in it, the more requiring notice as your opinion is strengthened by that of many others. You seem, in pages 84 and 148, to consider the judges as the ultimate arbiters of all constitutional questions,—a very dangerous doctrine indeed, and one which would place us under the despotism of an oligarchy. Our judges are as honest as other men, and not more so. They have, with others, the same passions for party, for power, and the privilege of their corps. Their maxim is, "Boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem;" and their power is the more dangerous as they are in office for life, and not responsible, as the other functionaries are, to the elective control. The Constitution has erected no such single tribunal, knowing that, to whatever hands confided, with the corruptions of time and party, its members would become despots. It has more wisely made all the departments co-equal and co-sovereign within themselves."

"Thus we see the power claimed for the Supreme Court by Judge Douglas, Mr. Jefferson holds, would reduce us to the despotism of an oligarchy.

"Now, I have said no more than this,—in fact, never quite so much as this; at least I am sustained by Mr. Jefferson.

"Let us go a little further. You remember we once had a National Bank. Some one owed the bank a debt; he was sued, and sought to avoid payment on the ground that the bank was unconstitutional. The case went to the Supreme Court, and therein it was decided that the bank was constitutional. The whole Democratic party revolted against that decision. General Jackson himself asserted that he, as President, would not be bound to hold a National Bank to be constitutional, even though the court had decided it to be so. He fell in precisely with the view of Mr. Jefferson, and acted upon it under his official oath, in vetoing a charter for a National Bank.

The declaration that Congress does not possess this constitutional power to charter a bank has gone into the Democratic platform, at their national conventions, and was brought forward and reaffirmed in their last convention at Cincinnati. They have contended for that declaration, in the very teeth of the Supreme Court, for more than a quarter of a century. In fact, they have reduced the decision to an absolute nullity.

"That decision, I repeat, is repudiated in the Cincinnati platform; and still, as if to show that effrontery can go no farther, Judge Douglas vaunts in the very speeches in which he denounces me for opposing the Dred Scott decision that he stands on the Cincinnati platform.

"Now, I wish to know what the judge can charge upon me, with respect to the decisions of the Supreme Court, which does not lie in all its length, breadth, and proportions at his own door. . . .

"Free men of Sangamon, free men of Illinois, free men everywhere, judge ye between him and me upon this issue."

THE FAMOUS DEBATE.

Shortly after the foregoing speech at Springfield, arrangements were made, and the famous debate between Lincoln and Douglas, was entered into. The first discussion was at Ottawa, August 21, 1858. Upon this question, Mr. Douglas said nothing; but Lincoln spoke as follows:—

"Let us see what influence he [Judge Douglas] is exerting on public sentiment. In this and like communities, public sentiment is everything. With public sentiment, nothing can fail; without it nothing can succeed. Consequently, he who moulds public sentiment, goes deeper than he who enacts statutes or pronounces decisions. He makes statutes and decisions possible or impossible to be executed.

"This must be borne in mind, as also the additional fact that Judge Douglas is a man of vast influence, so great that it is enough for many men to profess to be-

"He places it on that ground alone; and you will bear in mind that thus committing himself unreservedly to this decision commits him to the next one just as firmly as to this. He did not commit himself on account of the merit or demerit of the decision, but it is a 'Thus saith the Lord.' The next decision, as much as this, will be a 'Thus saith the Lord.'

There is nothing that can divert or turn him away from this decision. It is nothing that I point out to him that his great prototype, General Jackson, did not believe in the binding force of decisions. It is nothing to him that Jefferson did not so believe.

"I have said that I have often heard him approve of Jackson's course in disregarding the decision of the Supreme Court pronouncing a National Bank constitutional. He says, I did not hear him say so. He denies the accuracy of my recollection. I say he ought to know better than I, but I will make no question about this thing, though it still seems to me that I heard him say it twenty times.

"I will tell him, though, that he now claims to stand on the Cincinnati platform, which affirms that Congress cannot charter a National Bank, in the teeth of that old standing decision that Congress can charter a bank."

LINCOLN AT GALESBURG, ILL.

The next place at which the subject of the nature of Supreme Court decisions was discussed was Galesburg, October 7, 1858. There, on this point, Lincoln spoke as follows:—

"I have turned his [Judge Douglas's] attention to the fact that General Jackson differed with him in regard to the political obligation of a Supreme Court decision. I have asked his attention to the fact that Jefferson differed with him in regard to the political obligation of a Supreme Court decision.

"Jefferson said that 'Judges are as honest as other men, and not more so.' And he said, substantially, that 'whenever a free people should give up in absolute submission to any department of government, retaining for themselves no appeal from it, their liberties were gone.'

"I have asked his attention to the fact that the Cinlieve anything, when they once find out that Judge Douglas professes to believe it. Consider also the attitude he occupies at the head of a large party,—a party which he claims has a majority of all the voters in the country.

"This man sticks to a decision . . . not because he says it is right in itself,—he does not give any opinion on that,—but because it has been decided by the court; and being decided by the court, he is, and you are, bound to take it in your political action as law, not that he judges at all of its merits, but because a decision of the court is to him a 'Thus saith the Lord.'

cinnati platform upon which he says he stands, disregards a time-honored decision of the Supreme Court, in denying the power of Congress to establish a National Bank.

"So far in this controversy I can get no answer at all from Judge Douglas upon these subjects. Not one can I get from him, except that he swells himself up and says, 'All of us who stand by the decision of the Supreme Court are the friends of the Constitution; all you fellows that dare question it in any way, are the enemies of the Constitution.' Now, in this very devoted adherence to this decision, in opposition to all the great political leaders whom he has recognized as leaders, in opposition to his former self and history, there is something very marked.

"And the manner in which he adheres to it,—not as being right upon the merits, as he conceives (because he did not discuss that at all), but as being absolutely obligatory upon every one, simply because of the source from whence it comes,—as that which no man can gainsay, whatever it may be; this is another marked feature of his adherence to that decision.

"It marks it in this respect that it commits him to the next decision whenever it comes, as being as obligatory as this one, since he does not investigate it, and won't inquire whether this opinion is right or wrong. So he takes the next one without inquiring whether it is right or wrong. He teaches men this doctrine, and in so doing prepares the public mind to take the next decision when it comes, without any inquiry."

AT QUINCY.

At Quincy, Ill., October 13, 1858, Mr. Lincoln said:—

"We oppose the Dred Scott decision in a certain way, upon which I ought perhaps to address you a few words. We do not propose that when Dred Scott has been decided to be a slave by that court, we, as a mob, will decide him to be free.

"We do not propose that, when any other one, or one thousand, shall be decided by the court to be slaves, we will in any violent way disturb the rights of property, thus settled: but we nevertheless do oppose that decision as a political rule which shall be binding on the voter to vote for nobody who thinks it wrong; which shall be binding on the members of Congress or the President to favor no measure that does not actually concur with the principles of that decision.

"We do not propose to be bound by it as a political rule in that way because we think it lays the foundation, not merely of enlarging and spreading out what we consider an evil, but it lays the foundation for spreading that evil into the States themselves.

"We propose so resisting it as to have it reversed if we can, and a NEW JUDICIAL RULE ESTABLISHED UPON THIS SUBJECT."

To this and Lincoln's position altogether, on this subject, Judge Douglas on the same occasion replied as follows:—

"He tells you that he does not like the Dred Scott decision. Suppose he does not; how is he going to help himself? He says he will reverse it. How will he reverse it? I know of but one mode of reversing judicial decisions, and that is by appealing from the inferior to the superior court. But I have never yet learned how or where an appeal could be taken from the Supreme Court of the United States! The Dred Scott decision was pronounced by the highest tribunal on earth. From that decision there is no appeal this side of heaven."

And to this Lincoln responded:—

"But he is desirous of knowing how we are going to reverse the Dred Scott decision. Judge Douglas ought to know how.

"Did not he and his political friends find a way to reverse the decision of that same court in favor of the constitutionality of the National Bank? Didn't they find a way to do it so effectually that they have reversed it as completely as any decision ever was reversed, so far as its practical operation is concerned?

"And let me ask you didn't Judge Douglas find a way to reverse the decision of our Supreme Court when it decided that Carlin's father—old Governor Carlin—had not the constitutional power to remove a Secretary of State? Did he not appeal to the 'MOBS,' as he calls them? Did he not make speeches in the lobby to show how villainous that decision was, and how it ought to be overthrown? Did he not succeed, too, in getting an act passed by the legislature to have it overthrown? And didn't he himself sit down on that bench as one of the five added judges, who were to overslaugh the four old ones,—getting his name of 'Judge' in that way, and no other? If there is a villainy in using disrespect or making opposition to Supreme Court decisions, I commend it to Judge Douglas's earnest consideration."

AT COLUMBUS.

At Columbus, Ohio, September 16, 1859, Lincoln spoke the following suggestive words:—

"I wish to say something now in regard to the Dred Scott decision. . . . I undertake to give the opinion, at least, that if the Territories attempt by any direct legislation to drive the man with his slave out of the Territory, or to decide that his slave is free because of his being taken in there, or to tax him to such an extent that he cannot keep him there, the Supreme Court will unhesitatingly decide all such legislation unconstitutional, as long as that Supreme Court is constructed as the Dred Scott Supreme Court is. . . .

"In my judgement there is no avoiding the result, save that the American people shall see that constitutions are better construed than our Constitution is construed in that decision. They must take care that it is more faithfully and truly carried out, than it is there expounded."

AT CINCINNATI.

The very next day—September 17, 1859—at Cincinnati, he also proclaimed the following all-important truth:—

"THE PEOPLE OF THESE UNITED STATES ARE THE RIGHTFUL MASTERS OF BOTH CONGRESSES AND COURTS: NOT TO OVERTHROW THE CONSTITUTION; BUT TO OVERTHROW THE MEN WHO PERVERT THE CONSTITUTION."

AT THE NATION'S CAPITOL.

At the Capitol of the nation, March 4, 1861, when about to take the oath of office as President of the United States, in his inaugural address, and as the final word in a discussion which brought him to the headship of the nation, Lincoln again stated the principle, as follows:—

"I do not forget the position assumed by some that Constitutional questions are to be decided by the Supreme Court, nor do I deny that such decisions must be binding in any case upon the parties to a suit, as to the object of that suit, while they are also entitled to a very high respect and consideration in all parallel cases by all other departments of the Government. And while it is obviously possible that such decision may be erroneous in any given case, still the evil effect following it, being limited to that particular case, with the chance that it may be overruled and never become a precedent for other cases, can better be borne than could the evils of a different practice.

"At the same time, the candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the Government, upon vital questions affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, the instant they are made, as in ordinary litigation between parties in personal actions, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their government into the hands of that eminent tribunal.

"Nor is there in this view any assault upon the court or the judges."

LINCOLN'S PRINCIPLE AGAIN REPUDIATED.

Thus from beginning to end of a discussion and campaign continuing for four years, Abraham Lincoln steadfastly and courageously proclaimed the governmental principle of the right of the people of the United States to call in question, to sit in judgment upon, and to reverse, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States touching the meaning of the Constitution.

To his position as to the principle he was able to bring the weighty authority of Thomas Jefferson—"the author of the Declaration of Independence, and otherwise a chief actor in the Revolution; then a delegate in Congress; afterward, twice President; who was, is, and perhaps will continue to be, the most distinguished politician of our history."

In addition to this he was able to bring to his support the national precedent of President Jackson and the great party of which he was the leader; and even the precedent of Senator Douglas himself, his own chief opponent.

And beyond this, he was sustained in his position by the overwhelming voice of the whole nation, in making him President, as the result of a campaign in which this was the chief issue.

Yet in the face of all this, in 1896 such prominent men as Benjamin Harrison, Chauncey M. Depew, and Bourke Cochran, denounced as revolutionary a resolution embodying the identical principle for which Abraham Lincoln contended and which he sustained by national authority and national precedent.

A SERIES OF STULTIFICATIONS.

And as though to illustrate how completely a man of national prominence can stultify himself, the plainest history, and even his hero, Mr. Depew, in delivering an oration in "honor" of Abraham Lincoln, at Galesburg,

Ill., October 7, 1896, on the very spot where Lincoln spoke twenty-eight years before, attempted to divorce Abraham Lincoln from the principle which he unswervingly maintained, and to commit him to a view that he never even referred to but once in the whole four years' record, and then only to show that it did not apply. Mr. Depew said:—

"If the court interpreted the Constitution against his judgment and conscience, he would bow to its opinion, but agitate to so amend the charter as to clearly establish liberty in that instrument."

All that any one needs to do to see how entirely Lincoln is misrepresented in this statement by Mr. Depew, is simply to glance again at the words of Lincoln as printed in the foregoing columns. We have printed all that has been preserved of what he said on that subject from beginning to end. And in it all, there is not a single sentence to justify Mr. Depew's statement.

The interpretation of the Constitution by the Court, was against his judgment and conscience. But he did not "bow to its opinion." He distinctly said that he did not, and that he would not. He distinctly said that if he were in Congress and a vote should come up on a question whether Congress could do what the Court said it could not do, "in spite of the Dred Scott decision" he would vote that it could. He distinctly said "refuse to obey it as a political rule." "We oppose that decision as a political rule which shall be binding on the voter, on the members of Congress, or the President;" "We do not propose to be bound by it as a political rule."

If that indicates the attitude of one who bows to the opinion of the court in interpreting the Constitution, then we should like very much to have Mr. Depew's definition of the attitude of a man who refused to bow to such an opinion.

Nor is Mr. Depew any more fortunate in his statement that Lincoln would "agitate to amend the Constitution," etc. The plain truth is that in the whole four years' discussion and agitation on this subject by Abraham Lincoln there is not to be found a single sentence that can be construed into an agitation to amend the Constitution as a remedy for the decision which he opposed.

From beginning to end his agitation was solely; his call was only, "Reverse that decision." "Somebody has to reverse that decision, since it was made, and we mean to reverse it." "We propose so resisting it as to have it reversed if we can, and [not an amendment to the Constitution, but] A NEW JUDICIAL RULE established on this subject." "The American people shall see that constitutions are [not amended, but] better construed than our Constitution is construed in that decision."

These are not the words of a man who was agitating for an amendment to the Constitution as a remedy for an interpretation of it that was against his judgment and conscience. Abraham Lincoln was too well acquainted with the fundamental principles of t ment of the United States, and had too much respect for the liberties of the people, to pursue a course that would "establish the despotism of an oligarchy."

As certainly therefore as Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson, and Andrew Jackson, were right, so certainly Benjamin Harrison, Chauncey M. Depew, and Bourke Cochran, are wrong. If, however, it shall be insisted by anybody that Harrison, Depew, and Cochran, are right, then it will have to be claimed that Lincoln, Jefferson, and Jackson, were wrong: and in that case a new set of principles will have to be recognized, which will develop shortly a different order of government from that established by the fathers and maintained by Lincoln—an order of government that will not be "of the people, by the people, and for the people." Were Lincoln alive he might well exclaim again: "Free men everywhere; judge ye between them and me upon this issue."

Additional Authorities.

There are yet other important authorities that are worth recalling in this connection, in order that the reader may have as nearly as possible a complete presentation of this important subject—especially in view of the fact that some of the most prominent men in the country seem to have forgotten it all.

First, there is the authority of one of the makers of the Constitution—John Dickinson—in a pamphlet of 1788, on "The Federal Constitution." He said:—

"It must be granted that a bad administration may take place. What is then to be done?—The answer is instantly found: Let the Fasces be lowered before—the supreme sovereignty of the people. It is their duty to watch, and their right to take care, that the Constitution be preserved, or, in the Roman phrase on perilous occasions—to provide that the Republic receive no damage."

"When one part [of the Government], without being sufficiently checked by the rest, abuses its power to the manifest danger of public happiness; or when the several parts abuse their respective powers so as to involve the commonwealth in the like peril; the people must restore things to that order from which their functionaries have departed. If the people suffer this living principle of watchfulness and control to be extinguished among them, they will assuredly not long afterwards, experience that of their 'temple' 'there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.'"

Further, we have the authority of George Bancroft, the historian of the Constitution. In his work, "The History of the Formation of the Constitution," discussing the "Federal Judiciary," he makes the following statement concerning the Supreme Court, which is also but an extension of the principles laid down by Alexander Hamilton in his discussion of the Judiciary in the Federalist, No. LXXVIII:—

"The Supreme Court was to be the 'bulwark of a limited constitution against legislative encroachments.' ["Federalist," LXXVIII.] A bench of a few, selected with care by the President and Senate of the nation, seemed a safer tribunal than a multitudinous assembly elected for a short period under the sway of passing currents of thought, or the intrepid fixedness of an uncompromising party. There always remains danger of erroneous judgments, arising from mistakes, imperfect investigation, the bias of previous connections, the seductions of ambition, or the instigations of surrounding opinions, and a court from which there is no appeal is apt to forget circumspection in its sense of security.

"The passage of a judge from the bar to the bench does not necessarily divest him of prejudices, nor chill his relations to the particular political party to which he may owe his advancement, nor blot out of his memory the great interests which he may have professionally piloted through doubtful straits, nor quiet the ambition which he is not required to renounce, even though his appointment is for life, nor cure predilections which sometimes have their seat in his inmost nature.

"But the Constitution retains the means of protecting itself against the errors of partial or interested judgments. In the first place, the force of a judicial opinion of the Supreme Court, in so far as it is irreversible, reaches only the particular case in dispute; and to this society submits, in order to escape from anarchy in the daily routine of business.

"To the decision on an underlying question of constitutional law no such finality attaches. To endure, it must be right. If it is right, it will approve itself to the universal sense of the impartial. A judge who can justly lay claim to integrity will never lay claim to infallibility, but with indefatigable research will add, retract, and correct, whenever more mature consideration shows the need of it. The court is itself inferior and subordinate to the Constitution; it has only a delegated authority, and every opinion contrary to the tenor of its commission is void, except as settling the case on trial.

"The prior act of a superior must be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior, otherwise it might transform the limited into an unlimited constitution. When laws clash, the latest law is rightly held to express the corrected will of the Legislature; but the Constitution is the fundamental code, the law of laws; and where there is a conflict between the Constitution and a decision of the court, the original permanent act of the superior outweighs the later act of the inferior, and retains its own supreme energy unaltered and unalterable except in the manner prescribed by the Constitution itself.

"To say that a court, having once discovered an error, should yet cling to it because it has once been delivered as its opinion, is to invest caprice with inviolability and make a wrong judgment of a servant outweigh the Constitution to which he has sworn obedience. An act of the Legislature at variance with the Constitution is pronounced void; an opinion of the Supreme Court at variance with the Constitution is equally so."

This passage is worthy of more extended notice.

(a) "The Supreme Court was to be the bulwark against legislative encroachments" upon the rights of the people. This was the purpose of the founders of that tribunal. But did the people erect no bulwark against judicial encroachments? Or did they suppose that supreme judges were so decidedly infallible that there was no possibility of their encroaching even unconsciously? Did they think it impossible for that Court to make a mistake?—Nothing of the kind. They knew that even supreme judges, being only men, are just like other men, having the same weaknesses and the same liability to mistakes as other men, and therefore being as liable as legislators to mistake the meaning of the Constitution and to encroach upon the rights of the people. And knowing that “a court from which there is no appeal is apt to forget circumspection in its sense of security,” and is thereby only the more apt to make mistakes and encroachments, the people, while setting the Supreme Court as the bulwark against legislative encroachments, retained to themselves the right of final appeal, judgment and decision upon the decisions of the court touching all questions of the Constitution.

(b) “Where there is a conflict between the Constitution and a decision of the court,” etc. But if every decision of the Supreme Court is final in all respects; and if said decisions are to be accepted as final as to the meaning of the Constitution; then it would be impossible that there ever could be any such thing as a conflict between the Constitution and a decision of the Court.

Yet, as it is expressly declared in the Constitution that the people have reserved certain rights and powers exclusively to themselves, and so have forbidden the Supreme Court any jurisdiction in these, it is clearly possible for a conflict to be made between the Constitution and a decision of the Court. And where there is a conflict there must of necessity be some authority to decide. And as the people made both the Constitution and the Court; and as the people stand outside of and above both the Constitution and the Court; it is perfectly plain that in all cases of conflict between the Constitution and the Supreme Court, the right of final judgment and decision lies with the people as an inalienable right.

(c) The court “has only a delegated authority, and every opinion contrary to the tenor of its commission is void.” But if every decision of the court is to be accepted as final in all respects, how would it be possible for any opinion ever to be void? And even though it were possible, how could the fact of its being void ever be discovered? It is true that the court has only a delegated authority, and that every opinion contrary to the tenor of its commission, that is, every opinion contrary to the tenor of the Constitution, is void. And it is equally true that it lies with the people, who delegated this authority, to discover and to disregard and set aside as void every such opinion. And this prerogative lies with the people as their inalienable right.

(d) “An act of the Legislature at variance with the Constitution is pronounced void. An opinion of the Supreme Court at variance with the Constitution is equally so.” An act of the Legislature at variance with the Constitution is pronounced void by the Supreme Court. But when an opinion of the Supreme Court is at variance with the Constitution, whose prerogative is it to pronounce this void and to treat it so?—Clearly this is the prerogative and right of the people.

It is here said, and repeated, that every such opinion of the court "is void." This is true; and if such decisions were completely ignored by everybody, and so left meaningless and void as they are, they could never do any harm. But it is hardly possible that there could ever be a decision in which nobody would have sufficient personal interest to seek to make it of force as far as possible; and every decision, void or otherwise, always stands as a matter of record to be taken up by interested parties and used as a precedent upon which to carry any principle involved, to its fullest extent in real factitive law. For this reason it is incumbent upon the people to see that every such decision is so positively pronounced void, and so regarded by themselves—the supreme and ultimate authority—that it shall not be cited even as a precedent.

There is another excellent statement of this principle, which, though not bearing exactly the force of national authority, is well worthy to be set down here. It is in every respect true, and shows how this subject presents itself to a disinterested mind. Mr. Bryce, in his great work, "The American Commonwealth," speaks thus:—

"How and by whom, in case of dispute, is the validity or invalidity of a statute to be determined?—Such determination is to be effected by setting the statute side by side with the Constitution, and considering whether there is a discrepancy between them. Is the purpose of the statute one of the purposes mentioned or implied in the Constitution? Does it in pursuing that purpose contain anything which violates any clause of the Constitution? Sometimes this is a simple question which an intelligent layman may answer; more frequently it is a difficult one, which needs not only the subtlety of a trained lawyer, but a knowledge of former cases which have thrown light on the same or a similar point. In any event it is an important question, whose solution ought to proceed from a weighty authority. It is a question of interpretation, that is, of determining the true meaning both of the superior law [the Constitution] and of the inferior law [the statute], so as to discover whether they are inconsistent. Now the interpretation of laws belongs to courts of justice."

"How is the interpreting authority restrained? If the American Constitution is capable of being so developed by this expansive interpretation, what security do its written terms offer to the people and to the States? . . . There stands above and behind the Legislature, the executive, and the judiciary, ANOTHER POWER, that of public opinion. The President, Congress, and the courts are all, the two former directly, the latter practically, amenable to the people. . . . If the people approve the way in which these authorities are interpreting and using the Constitution, they go on; if the people disapprove, they pause, or at least slacken their pace. . . . The people have, of course, much less exact notions of the Constitution than the legal profession or the courts. But . . . they are sufficiently attached to its general doctrines, they sufficiently prize the protection it affords them against their own impulses, to censure any interpretation which palpably departs from the old lines."

And upon all this it is well to bear in mind, and proper ever to say, that "there is not in this view any assault upon the court or the judges." It is simply maintaining the fundamental principle of the Government of the United States, and the vital principle of the rights of the people.

Nor is this to say, nor in any sense to imply, that every man is at liberty to disregard, or disrespect, whatever decision of the court he may not personally agree with. It is to say that it is absolutely incumbent on every citizen to be so well read in the Constitution that he shall know for himself the limitations upon the Government, and shall know how to act accordingly. Every citizen must hold himself, as well as the court, and the Government, altogether, strictly to the Constitution.

The Present Practical Bearing of this Discussion.

This discussion would be well worth all the space that is given to it in these columns, even though there were nothing more to it than the calling of the minds of the people anew to a vital principle of their government that is almost wholly forgotten.

But this is not all there is to this matter. The question has a present practical bearing, that is of the greatest importance to all the people of the nation. In 1892, the Supreme Court of the United States expressed its opinion that the first amendment to the Constitution has one language and one meaning with organic acts whose object was "the establishment of the Christian religion;" and that therefore the meaning of the Constitution is that "this is a Christian nation."

This decision has been seized upon, and has been pushed ever since, by the combined religious elements of the country as authority for demanding that religious customs, rites, and dogmas shall be recognized and enforced in the legislation and the actions generally of the Government.

In this crowding religious practices upon the Government, and upon the people by governmental power, the ecclesiastical managers find it "a very wholesome doctrine, and one very full of comfort," that from a decision of the Supreme Court there is no appeal,—that a "Supreme Court decision is a 'Thus saith the Lord.'"

As stated by a Catholic priest, as illustrating the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope, it stands thus:—

"It is strange that a rule which requires a Supreme Court to give final decisions on disputed points in our Constitution, should be abused and slandered when employed by the Catholic Church. Citizens and others may read the Constitution, but they are not allowed to interpret it for themselves, but must submit to the interpretation given by the Superior [Supreme(?)] Court. The Bible is the constitution of the Catholic Church, and while all are exhorted to read this divine constitution, the interpretation of its true meaning must be left to the superior court of the church founded by Christ. The decision of our Federal Supreme Court is final; the decision of the superior court of the church is final also, and, in virtue of the divine prerogative of inerrancy granted the church, infallible. The church has not, does not, and cannot, permit the violation of God's commandments in any case whatever."—Reported in Catholic Mirror, March 2, 1895.

The professed Protestantism of the country, is, if anything, more zealous than is Catholicism in the advocacy of this doctrine. And both alike are greatly pleased to find eminent "statesmen" insisting with all their power and influence upon the same doctrine.

All these vast influences are steadily and rapidly molding public sentiment into the fixed doctrine that Supreme Court decisions on constitutional questions are to be accepted because they are such decisions, without any question as to whether they are right or wrong—as soon as a decision has been made and because it has been made, it is a governmental and national. Thus saith the Lord.

Public sentiment is thus being prepared so to accept any decision that may come from that source. And thus the way is surely being paved for the establishment of a national religious despotism. By repudiating that doctrine, Abraham Lincoln succeeded in averting the establishment of a national civil despotism. And nothing but the repudiation of that doctrine again, by the whole people, can avert the establishment of a national religious despotism. Yet for this, it must be confessed the evil has already spread too far; and it is too late to avert it.

A Mythical Alliance.

THE State Superintendent of the Nevada Christian Endeavor Society, Rev. Francis L. Nash, states in the Christian Endeavorer for February, 1897, that an alliance exists in Nevada between Seventh-day Adventists and the saloon. Here are his words:—

"The saloons and gambling hells make more money on that day [Sunday] than on all the other days of the week, and whenever an attempt is made to rescue the Sabbath, the Seventh-day Adventists stand in with the saloon men and do their best to stamp out the very last vestige of respect and reverence for the day which ought to be loved and honored. As a result, in many places the day is dreaded by the wives and mothers as the worst day in the week—the day for drinking, carousing, and horse racing, a day for fights and brawls, rioting and murder, heaven-daring impiety and beastly impurity."

And upon this the editor of the Endeavorer comments:—

"We are very sorry that this course should be pursued by these people, and hope that in the near future such an alliance of saloon-keepers and Seventh-day Adventists will be unknown."

All this reminds us of the familiar saying, "Important if true." But is it true?

We never heard of any alliance between seventh-day observers and saloonists, from either of the parties themselves. All talk of such a thing has come from other sources.

It is pretty certain that liquor dealers have had no suspicion that they have allies in the Seventh-day Adventists. About the last thing in the world that saloon men would want is a universal acceptance of Seventh-day Adventist doctrine on the subject of temperance.

Reason: Seventh-day Adventists use no intoxicants. In their communion there are neither drunkards nor moderate drinkers. And no saloon-keeper has ever thought of applying for membership in one of their churches. Does this indicate an alliance with the saloon?

More than this: Seventh-day Adventists are, and always have been, prohibitionists. Their literature proves this. We never knew liquor dealers to regard prohibitionists as their allies.

It is true, this religious body are the advocates of the seventh-day as being the Bible Sabbath, and are uncompromisingly opposed to the doctrine that the Sabbath is Sunday. And they are not backward in proclaiming these views, for they believe them to be part of a divine message which must go to the world. But does this constitute an alliance with the saloon? We think not.

And now a glance at the record of those who are publishing this "alliance," by way of comparison. What is their attitude toward the saloon?

Who are the ones that are advocating and working for a law to close all the saloons—on Sundays? Are they Seventh-day Adventists? No; they are the people represented by the Endeavorer. They would have a law closing saloons on Sunday, and allowing them to run the other six days of the week. And thus they would make of the saloon—that iniquitous thing—a law-abiding institution, wherever it would be willing to close its doors on Sunday; and this it is showing itself quite willing to do. It matters not that the Endeavorers desire prohibition, as we fully believe, and have that as their ultimate aim. What they and Sunday advocates generally are actually working for now is the establishment of the saloon by law; for that is what Sunday prohibition means. Seventh-day Adventists regard the saloon as by nature an outlaw.

It will be a good day for the saloon, and a bad day for the cause of temperance, when that evil institution shall be established in our land by a law which rests upon the will of the (professedly) Christian Church.

The saloon wants nothing better than the opportunity to say, I am a law-abiding institution; I am respectable, for I keep Sunday.

Where then is the real alliance, if there be one, between church people and the saloon? Is it to be found with the advocates of the seventh day or of the first?

Finally, it may be mentioned that in 1893 the saloonists of Chicago joined heartily in the plea of the Church people that the World's Fair be closed on Sundays. Of course this constituted no real alliance between the saloon and the Church. The saloon would be better patronized on Sunday with the Fair closed, and it would be both business and good policy on its part to join in the petition. But there was just as much of an alliance as exists between the saloon and the Adventists.

The "alliance" of this people with the saloon is a myth.

The Object of Civil Government.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

THE employment of physical power in self-defense, and in governing others, is wholly an artificial use of this gift. Physical power is God-given at creation; and so is natural, and was appointed to natural and satisfactory ends. The Creator endowed man with intelligence to enable him to control the lower orders of creation; the genius of self-control; and the faculty and physical power to pursue happiness. But sin entered, turning the natural endowments of man into unlawful channels. The race multiplied with men in possession of all their natural rights and powers; but with the inclination to use them wrong, and in selfishness refuse to allow them to others.

Self-defense and civil government, therefore, became artificial necessities. The genius of government, which was of God to the individual that he might govern himself, was now employed to form a system to control those who had lost the power of self-government. The physical power given to enable man to improve the earth and pursue happiness, must now be employed to hold in check the vicious, to secure to as many as possible the enjoyment of their natural rights.

What, then, is delegated to government by the consent of the governed? Power. What kind of power? Physical power.

And this physical power given to man to be employed in other ways, in the pursuit of happiness, is largely consumed by being hurled against the vicious, in the form of police force and armies.

To sum up, all must agree that each political citizen is a factor in the government exercising sovereignty; that all the responsibility of government rests alike on each member; and that each person occupying this position does so by consent. Each consents to the form of administration, the payment of its expenses, the choosing and payment of officers to do the business, and they agree to furnish the power needed to make it all effective.

All the power of civil government is simply physical power, given by the Creator originally for other purposes. The principle of civil government is derived from the genius of self-government, which the Creator implanted in the individual.

Government, as we have it, is an artificial necessity, and not a natural provision of the Creator. The powers that be were originally ordained of God in the individual to keep him in harmony with the right; but sin having made inroads into this arrangement, the same power is now employed by outward means to control those who refuse to recognize order within themselves: or who have entirely lost the genius of controlling themselves from within and now must be controlled by others from without.

It is the power that is in the persons by nature, that was ordained of God; and not the persons in power, nor the measures which they may adopt in the use of that power. It has more often occurred that men have made a wrong use of the power, than otherwise.

Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, was using this power when he compelled all to worship a false God, and attempted to destroy those who were true to the Creator; but this was a wrong use of the power. And God showed him that He did not approve of such a use of the power. When Pilate gave sentence against Christ he was using the power; but not properly.

All bad statutes and all injustice in all ages have been due to a wrong use of the right power. The power was ordained to perpetuate a condition of peace and happiness by the observance of the divinely implanted principle of self-control which was in the heart of each person. In this way, originally, each was his own government, and perfect peace prevailed with no expense or cost of life, money, or labor. No organized effort was needed: there was no place for any such thing.

When men lost from their hearts this divine principle and power of self-government, then in order to approach as near as possible to the conditions necessary to secure in an imperfect state, life and its blessings, they had to be governed from without by organized force, whose symbol is the sword.

With a "government of the people by the people and for the people" who compose it by consent, and give their power to it by consent, as well as assume all its responsibilities by consent, the question may well arise, Who is properly a citizen in this political sense? The responsibility is a grave one.

No Representatives in Religion.

THE members of the State and National legislatures are, as legislators, the representatives of the people. Representatives in what? In religion? No; certainly not. Then what can Congress or a State legislature properly have to do with religious affairs?

As individuals, legislators are like other men accountable to their Creator in all things; but they are not and cannot be accountable to God for other persons, for each individual must render his own account to God. He who expects to render his account or to settle it with God through a State legislature, or even through the Congress of the nation—if there be anyone so foolish—will find himself terribly mistaken in the day of reckoning.

Who is willing to be represented by another in religious faith and practice? Who is willing to make a member of his State legislature or of Congress his representative in religion? Who is willing to be bound in religion by an act of any legislative body? Who will in the day of Judgment fall back with confidence upon such an act as valid authority for his own religious conduct?

The advocates of religious legislation say that legislators are like all other men, bound by the law of God; and so they are. But they are not so bound for other men, but only for themselves. Here is the vital point in the whole subject,—the point which the would-be reformers who are besieging our legislatures overlook or ignore. There can be no representative capacity in religion; and hence while each legislator is bound individually by the divine law, as representative of the people he has nothing to do with religious questions. He must confine himself to civil matters only.

This is not to say that he is to act against religion or against morality. The domain of things secular is not in any sense opposed to that of Christianity, any more than truth and justice in the one sphere are opposed to truth and justice in the other.

Legislators, like all other persons, may properly be urged to be obedient as individuals to the law of God. But to urge them to act thus for their constituents, as their representatives, is a different thing altogether. However righteous it may sound, or however necessary it may seem to be for the good of the country, in reality it is neither necessary nor righteous.

The Almighty will not recognize any arrangement by which one person is made to act for another in religion. Any such arrangement is in reality a heaven-daring piece of iniquity.

Legislators must simply refuse to deal as legislators with religious questions. Such matters must be settled in another way than by legislation. They must be left to the individual conscience and the Word of God.

A Long Felt Want.

THE February Christian Endeavorer contains the following:—

"Intense interest was caused by the publication, in the January Christian Endeavorer, of Rev. S. W. Gamble's discovery that 'the Jewish Sabbath was not Saturday, but was a movable one.' Letters have been pouring in to him and into this office from all over the land, expressing the thanks of the writers that this new theory has been made known. Lack of space prevents our publishing a tithe of the letters that have been received from leading men of every denomination."

Well, we have always thought there was a good deal of uneasiness and uncertainty in the camp of the Sunday forces regarding the genuineness of their sabbath, and now we know it. Their action in this case confesses it. The greeting accorded Mr. Gamble's "great discovery" by "leading men of every denomination," is that of something which supplies a long felt want. A dubious testimonial this, for all the argument which was supposed to furnish an abundant support to the Sunday sabbath heretofore!

And by this very fact, the Rev. Mr. Gamble's "discovery" has done more already to weaken the Sunday institution than it can ever do to sustain it. For ere long it will be found that this "discovery" is not what it seemed at first, and the long felt want will make itself more keenly felt by the adherents of tradition than ever before. These "great discoveries" which overthrow the Sabbath of the fourth commandment have been coming regularly for a long time, and they will continue to come with their accustomed frequency. But meanwhile the Sabbath, like Moses before the infidels, manages to keep right side up.

The Cold Wave in London, Ontario.

BY J. F. BALLENGER.

THE cold wave of "Christian Citizenship" is not confined to the States, but has crossed the Lakes and struck Canada with its chilling blast of "moral reform through political economy."

The Rev. Dr. E. O. Taylor, of Chicago, came to this city by invitation of the W. C. T. U. He spoke in the First Presbyterian Church last Sunday afternoon. He spent one hour in defining what "Christian Citizenship" is. We have heard and read a good deal of the aim and object of this movement, but we never heard or read anything in which the real character of this organization was unmasked as in the above lecture.

The speaker did not try to hide the fact that "Christian Citizenship" meant that the Church should run the State, as the following utterances will show. He said:—

"Human governments are divine, and God's ministers are appointed to administer in civil as well as religious things."

The apostles said, "But we will give ourselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the word." Acts 6:4.

Now if to administer civil governments means to minister the Word, then it follows that the minister must use the power of the civil government to enforce the Word.

This position was further defined by another statement, that—

"Every question, both civil and religious, should be settled by the book" [meaning the Bible].

Then it follows again, that the minister must define the terms of settlement according to the Bible, and when he has decided what the Bible says are the conditions of settlement, he must use the power of the State, which is the sword, to enforce a settlement.

Did pagan or papal Rome ever contend for any more than this? If they did we would like to be shown the page in history where it is recorded.

Again, the speaker said, "Remove the stumbling blocks out of the way of the Church and thus make it easy for man to do right by improving your civil laws."

We had always supposed that the gospel was the power of God to enable men to do right by planting the righteousness of God in the heart through faith in Jesus Christ. Rom. 1:16, 17. We never once dreamed that it was in the power of civil law to remove the cross and make the straight and narrow way to heaven easy.

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
Whilst others fought to win the prize
And sailed through bloody seas?"

Indeed, we can according to the above, just come and join the Christian Citizenship movement and improve our civil laws, and thus make it easy to do right by legislating away the cross. Then we will not need to be "crucified unto the world." We won't need to "suffer with Christ that we may reign with him." We shall need no longer to "watch and pray lest we enter into temptation," for temptations will be removed by improving civil law, and making it easy to do right. Then according to this proposed revolution we can all "live godly in Christ Jesus" without suffering persecution.

Once more; the speaker said:—

"Some people are very strict in attending to the ordinance of baptism and the sacrament, but neglect the ballot box. It is just as much our duty to vote as to pray or to take the sacrament."

Then the commission to preach the gospel should read, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and he that believeth not and does not vote to help to improve the civil laws and make it easy to do right shall be damned!

How any man with an open Bible in his hand and the history of the past before him can put forth such reasoning is a mystery that we are not able to solve.

But such is the blindness of men when they "walk in the sparks of their own kindling." Were it not that the prophets have described and warned us against just such a state of things in the last days, we could hardly make ourselves believe that men could descend into such dense darkness.

Did we not read from the sacred page that there would be a union of religion and the State which would bring about the last great struggle between the powers of light and darkness, we could hardly believe our own ears as we listen to such sentiments as are put forth by these would-be reformers.

"Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

London, Ont., Feb. 2.

THE National Reform party has now abandoned hope with reference to its so-called Christian Amendment to the Constitution, so far as concerns this session of Congress. After being so thoroughly disposed of before the hearing given by a committee of Congress last year, it was left in the hands of the committee without further action, and to a request recently preferred by its advocates for another hearing, reply was sent that no further discussion of the matter could be allowed. Of course it will make its appearance again before the new Congress.

THE extracts from the speeches of Lincoln and Douglas, presented in this paper, are taken from a volume entitled, "Political Speeches and Debates of Lincoln and Douglas." It is a book of 555 pages and is indispensable to every one who would understand the fundamental principles of the Government and the history of the country. Price, $1.50.

To every person who reads this number of the AMERICAN SENTINEL, we say, Please see that a copy of it is put into the hands of all your neighbors, and keep a copy for yourself for reference. It is needed by everybody now, and will be needed more, later on, and you will be glad if then you have it at hand.

MOSES ROSS, a resident of the District of Columbia, narrowly escaped being a victim of the old District law against profanity. He was convicted under the statute December 29, and sentenced to pay a fine of $20 and serve ninety days in the workhouse; but the President pardoned him.

That "Superb" Bible.

Dodgeville, Wis.

AMERICAN SENTINEL, New York City:

The Bible came to hand all right. To say that I am pleased with it will but faintly describe my feelings. It would take too much space to enumerate its many points of excellence, so I will sum it all up in the one word "superb."

There are so many "aids to the study of the Scriptures," and they are so helpful and just what I have been wishing for since I became a "Bible Christian."

Friends and neighbors all say, "I wish I had one like it," and "So cheap." Our seventeen-year-old daughter is about to start out to obtain subscriptions for the SENTINEL, as she wishes for one "just like it."

Please accept my warmest thanks, and believe me to be,

Ever sincerely yours,

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF

✧ ✧ ✧

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

THE Sabbath is a sign which the Lord has established: and "the seventh day is the Sabbath."

God has established this sign between Himself and the believer in Him, that the believer may know that He is the Lord the true God.

Therefore it is written: "Hallow my Sabbaths, and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God." Eze. 20:20.

The first of all things that God is to any other person or thing, is Creator. Unless He creates, there can be no existence of any person or thing but Himself.

As the Sabbath is the sign by which the believer may know that the Lord is God, it must first of all be a sign by which He may be known as the Creator of all things.

Therefore it is written, "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed." Ex. 31:17.

Thus the "seventh day," by being made the Sabbath, has been established by the Lord of heaven and earth as the sign by which it may be known that He is the Lord, the true God.

As the seventh day has been established by the Lord as the sign by which it may be known that He is the Lord; it follows, in the nature of the case, that the Lord has connected with the seventh day that which is suggestive of what He is to the man who believes Him.

Yet all that God is to men, He is in Christ. All that men can know of God is through Christ. For it is written, "No man knoweth the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him."

Then as the seventh day is the sign by which it may be known that the Lord is God; and as God can be known only through the revelation of Christ, it follows that the seventh day is the sign by which it may be known what Christ is, and what God in Christ is, to men.

And as the seventh day is the sign which God has established by which men may know what Christ is, what God in Christ is, to men, it certainly follows that the Lord has connected with the seventh day, that which is suggestive of what Christ is to all who believe in Him.

We have seen already that it is a sign of the creative power and act of the Lord—"It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day He rested and was refreshed." And now since men have sinned, the believer is "His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

Thus the seventh day being the sign, the memorial, of the creative power and act of the Lord, is as truly the sign, the memorial, of that creative power and act in making the individual Christian as it is in the making of the worlds. Creative power being the same wherever manifested, the sign of that power is also the same in all places and at all times that that power is manifested. In other words, the sign of the power is, it must be, as continuous as is the manifestation of the power of which it is the sign.

Therefore as creative power is continually manifested in the individual Christian, and as the seventh day is the sign of the manifestation of that power, it is certain that this sign must be worn by every one who would show true respect and allegiance to the power that has created him. This is why it is that the Sabbath of the Lord, the seventh day, is given by Him as the sign to be worn by every one who recognizes and receives in his own life the working of that power which creates him new in Christ Jesus, that power that makes him a new creature, or rather, a new creation.

But the significance and appropriateness of this sign does not stop here. The Sabbath of the Lord, the seventh day, is a sign, it bears about itself that which is suggestive, of all that Christ is to those who believe in Him.

When He had created the worlds, then, "He rested the seventh day." "The seventh day is the rest of the Lord thy God." And to every person in the world He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." "He is thy rest." Thus the seventh day is the sign of the rest that the believer finds in Christ, as the consequence of the creative act, just as certainly as it is the sign of the creative act itself. The two things are inseparable, therefore the sign of the two things is the same thing. "It is a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God," thy Creator and thy rest.

Yet not only did He rest the seventh day as the consequence of the creative act, but "He blessed the seventh day." The blessing of the Lord is upon the seventh day. The word says so. In this also it is a sign of what Christ is to the person who believes in Him; For it is written: "God having raised up His Son, Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." And "He hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ."

He hallowed the seventh day also: He made it holy. And so He calls it "my holy day," and calls upon all people to remember it "to keep it holy." In this also the seventh day is a sign of what Christ, the Lord is to the believer in Him. For He says, "Thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God." And it is His presence with the believer that alone can make him holy. It was His presence at the burning bush that made that place holy. So it is alone His presence with the believer that makes him holy. It was His presence that made the seventh day holy; it is His presence that makes the believer holy; and the seventh day is the sign of His presence which makes holy the place where it dwells, whether it be the heart of the believer now, or the Sabbath day at the close of creation week.

And He sanctified the seventh day. In this also the seventh day is a sign of what He is to the believer. For the believer is "sanctified by faith that is in Jesus." And "I am the Lord that doth sanctify you." And these two things He himself puts together in such a way that there is no escaping it. "I gave them my Sabbaths to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify them."

Thus the Lord has connected with the seventh day the suggestion of all that He is to those who believe in Him. He has done this, in order that the believer, by the observance of the Sabbath, may ever be growing in the knowledge of the Creator, the Lord and Saviour. To understand these suggestions, to see in the Sabbath the reflection of Jesus Christ, to receive these spiritual impressions—this, and this alone, is Sabbath observance.

The seventh day, then, having been established by the Lord, and plainly declared over and over in His written word, to be the sign of Himself, the sign of what He is in all things to mankind, the sign by which men may know that He is the Lord God—and that He is what He is, bearing always the suggestion of what He is to every one that believeth—what an enormous fraud has been committed in setting it aside and exalting Sunday in its place!

Sunday is not, and cannot be, in any sense a sign of the Lord, nor of anything in connection with Him. He did not rest on the first day; He did not bless the first day; He did not make holy the first day; He did not sanctify the first day.—There is therefore absolutely nothing about the Sunday that is suggestive of what the Lord is to the believer in Him nor to anybody else. It lacks everything that could possibly make it such a sign. It is therefore the most gigantic fraud and imposture that has ever appeared in the world.

And when the churches that have committed and fostered this fraud and imposture, dragged the Congress of the United States into the support of it, and of them in it, there was committed the greatest piece of governmental sacrilege since the night of Belshazzar's feast. So far as it would be possible to do such a thing, the sign which God himself established—the day on which He rested, which He blessed, hallowed, and sanctified—was deliberately set aside, and an absolute fraud and imposture was erected in its place. And now the same ecclesiastics that dragged Congress into the doing of that sacrilege, are working with might and main to get Congress to enact a law compelling people to wear this fraudulent thing, instead of leaving them free with the Lord to wear His own established sign, upon their own free choice. How could impiety go further?

A Sunday Dilemma.

JUDGE RITCHIE, of Ohio, in opening the Court of Common Pleas, of Putnam County, in that State, recently, charged the grand jury that they "should disabuse their minds of the idea that Sunday has any connection with the Christian Sabbath." He proceeded to show that "Sunday was first adopted by Constantine, A. D. 321," who "took it from paganism rather than from Christianity;" and declared that Sunday observance is but a police regulation, and not a matter of moral obligation at all.

This moved a believer in Sunday sacredness, who heard the judge's charge, to reply at length to the same in the local paper, endeavoring to refute the idea that Sunday is not a sacred day.

The judge doubtless delivered his charge with a view to the enforcement of the Sunday law, believing that the law could not be enforced if construed as applying to a sacred institution. To put it on an enforceable basis in the minds of the grand jury and of the people, he felt obliged to divest it in their minds of all claim to any higher nature than that of a police regulation. It can well be imagined what the preachers and church people of the country would think of having the judges in general make such statements about Sunday as a regular part of the proceedings of opening court.

The only logical way out of the dilemma in which Sunday is thus placed, lies in an open confession that Sunday laws are to enforce a religious institution. That is the real ground on which they are demanded by the preachers; and to this basis they will have to come in the public view. On that basis, and not as a matter of police regulation, the public must accept or reject them.

A Serious Predicament.

THE State of New York has got itself into a queer predicament. In the new constitution adopted two years ago, there is a provision prohibiting convicts from being employed in any kind of labor the product of which would compete in the public market with the product of labor outside of the prisons.

The consequence is that there are now in the prisons of the State thousands of men who are forced to remain in absolute idleness. The result of this enforced idleness is that the men are growing desperate and are fighting and trying to kill one another, or are becoming insane, and are trying to kill themselves. They beg piteously for work of any kind, only that they be allowed to employ themselves.

In an endeavor to relieve the horrors of the situation, it has been proposed that the prisoners be employed in the manufacture of such things as must be used in the service of the State itself, and which the State would be obliged to buy. This would give the needed employment to the convicts, and would be only supplying the things that the State must have anyhow.

Among the things that would be thus supplied were the uniforms of the State troops or national guard. It was decided by the State authorities to manufacture these. But as soon as this was learned by the troops, it was resented, "there was general indignation," and they threatened to mutiny rather than to wear any such clothing.

What the outcome of this particular phase of the difficulty has been, or will be, we do not know. But even though the issue were not raised, and the troops were content to wear the clothing so made, by the principle upon which the constitutional provision was established, we do not see how this plan could be allowed to be carried out.

The purpose of the constitutional provision is to prevent prison products from coming into competition with the product of outside labor. It is therefore forbidden to offer in the public market the products of prison labor. This, in order that the outside general laborer may not be in danger of losing the due return for his labor, by being obliged to stand the competition of convict labor.

Yet this same thing is done when the convict labor supplies all the needs of the State; for then the State gets for practically nothing what otherwise it would be obliged to buy in open market at a fair price. Certainly, therefore, this would diminish to that extent the sale of the product of outside general labor; and is in competition with outside labor, as really as though the product of convict labor were allowed to go on the regular market.

Therefore it is plain that even though the troops were content to wear the prison-made clothing, the principle of this constitutional provision would not allow the element that secured its adoption, to suffer this plan to be carried out; because in this way the very purpose of the constitutional provision is frustrated just so far as the proposed plan should be applied.

It is therefore perfectly plain that under that provision of the Constitution of the State of New York, the only thing that can be done with the State convicts is to keep them in absolute idleness. For it is impossible to have them employed at any work without competing with workers outside whose occupation is at the same kind of work whatever it may be.

But that alternative forces the prisoners into the position where they are the prey of evils to which death is preferable, and which when they cannot end in suicide, culminate in insanity. Surely, then, it is plain enough that there is but one thing to do with that provision of the Constitution—that is, to wipe it out at the earliest possible moment.

This, however, would be plain enough, even though there was none of this evil brought upon the prisoners. It would be plain enough, even though it were a benefit instead of an injury to the convicts. Let us leave out all the present situation, and look at the principle as it is in the beginning.

There are thousands of men in prison, who, while they are kept there, must be fed and clothed. There is no escaping that. And this is a great expense to the State. Now the question is, Shall the State bear all this expense itself, or shall it cause the convicts themselves to bear it by employing them in such a way that their labor shall pay the expense of keeping them? In other words, Shall they support themselves and so cost the State nothing, or shall the State support them at great expense? This provision of the Constitution says in substance that the State shall support them at great expense, while they do nothing.

It is true that the claim is that this is necessary and right "to protect the interests of labor." But there is precisely where lies the fallacy of the whole question. The interests of labor are not in any sense protected by this scheme.

Look at it. What is the State of New York? It is simply the people who inhabit the territory that composes, physically, what is known by metes and bounds or on a map as the State of New York.

Where does the State of New York get the money that must be had to pay for the keeping of these thousands of prisoners?—Only from the people in this territory, by taxation. There is no other possible source from which this money can be derived.

Then the naked question is, Shall you and I put our hands in our pockets and pay out honest and hard-earned money to keep in idleness thousands of criminals of all sorts? or shall we have them work and so pay for their own keeping?

It will not do for the laboring man to indulge the thought, that it is only the corporations, the capitalists, and the business men generally, who pay the taxes; and that therefore it is they and not the laboring men who support these convicts. This is not true in fact.

It may be indeed that not one laboring man in a thousand, ever sees a tax receipt of his own. But he is not for a moment to conclude from this that he never pays any taxes. The fact is that he is paying taxes in every cent he spends. When the State expenses increase the taxation must be increased. And when the merchant, the grocer, and the property holder pays increased taxes, this is carried to his expense account and is recovered in the increased price of something that the laboring man, as well as other people has to buy, whether it be house-rent, a hat, a suit of clothes, a pair of overalls, shoes, soap, or what not. So the truth is that if there is any set of men more than another who really pay the taxes, it is the laboring men, though they never formally pay any taxes at all.

Thus, if there is any set of men more than another who are paying the vast expense of keeping in idleness the thousands of criminals in the prisons of the State of New York, it is the laboring men of the State of New York. Yet this provision of the Constitution was inserted to satisfy the contention of the "labor" element and professedly in the interests of the laboring man. It is plain enough, however, that those who did it never thought three steps on the principles involved. That provision of the Constitution is the formulation of an utterly selfish and surface view of things. And in the attempt to remedy a single fancied inequality, a number of real evils are generated which can only grow greater the longer the thing is continued.

Are the "Dark Ages" a Myth?

THE Papacy answers this question in the affirmative. Witness the following from the Pittsburg Catholic, of January 28:—

"The 'Dark Ages' is a favorite subject, constantly alluded to and harped on by dissenting friends. It would be a favor could they show us wherein is the superiority of the present day. Are our people more happy? The fact and truth are that we are relatively inferior to the ages when men had minds sound enough to bend proud reason in humble submission to the Church."

It would be better, then, to get back to the conditions of the so-called "Dark Ages" as quickly as possible! This is the principle upon which the Papacy is working; and this is what will certainly be reached when the people are persuaded to bow "in humble submission to the church," be that church papal or Protestant.

A Military Inaugural.

If reports be true, which we have nowhere seen denied, the inauguration ceremonies at Washington on March 4th next, are to present at least one novel and very suggestive feature. That will be the presence of an army of 35,000 troops, giving to the inaugural the air of a military, rather than a civil, proceeding.

Such an occasion will be hardly more suggestive of the democratic simplicity which marked the inaugural of Thomas Jefferson and other presidents of scarcely yet historic times, and which is eminently proper in a government whose officials are supposed to be servants of the people, than is the inauguration of a Russian czar.

The journey of the President-elect to Washington in the palatial, bomb-proof (or as it is said, accident-proof) car which has been specially provided for the trip, and his entry into office with the accompaniment of military pomp and the gleam of bayonets, can but contain a strong flavor of the despotism and militarism which are characteristic of the governments of the Old World.

Nor will this belie their real significance. Militarism and despotism go hand in hand. The love of military display is invariably greatest where there is the greatest love of arbitrary power. That the love of arbitrary power is great in this Republic, and that the lust for and the exercise of such power are rapidly becoming more marked in our national life, no one can well deny. It is only to be expected therefore that there should be an increase of that upon which arbitrary authority depends for its enforcement.

It is significant that the proposed military inaugural seems to excite little or no protest from the people. It would seem that either they have not yet been informed of the fact, or having fallen in with the view recently enunciated by Mr. Cleveland, of the White House, they believe they will "have to accept the situation," and "face the music." The New York Journal, however, is an exception, and it says:—

"Nothing betrays the departure we have made from the democratic simplicity of our fathers more than the preparations for a grand military display at the inauguration of President McKinley. It is true enough that the President is Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, but that is a title and a prerogative that have never been obtruded except in time of war. The people prefer to think of him as a civil magistrate, setting the example of democratic simplicity and avoiding anything like pageantry in his public functions. Now for the first time in our history he is to be ushered to his place by an army of thirty-five thousand soldiers. What is there in the simple inaugural ceremony of taking the oath of office that is made more dignified or more representative of our tastes and national faith in surrounding him with bayonets. Some of our . . . contemporaries speak of the projected affair with childish enthusiasm, as if indeed the choice of one citizen to execute the will of the rest were an occasion for a European display of militarism.

"Discreet patriots will regret that affairs of national importance are taking this spectacular turn."

We would that all patriots were discreet enough to know why it is that "affairs of national importance" are taking this turn, and what is demanded of them by the situation. The truth is that the Protestant and Republican principles of this Government are fast being repudiated by representatives of the people, and a despotism is surely coming as the result.

A WRITER in a late number of the Missionary Review of the World deems it necessary to defend the cause of missions against the charge that "converts are only from the low-caste people in countries like India."

It is certain that Christianity needs no defense against such a charge as that. If "the cause of missions" needs it, it can be only because "the cause of missions" is lacking in some of the elements of Christianity.

If it should prove true that not a single high-caste person in such countries as India or any other country, had ever accepted Christianity, this would weigh absolutely nothing against the truth, the power, or the merit, of Christianity. It would simply show that all such people had made the greatest mistake that it is possible for any human being to make.

Yet there are thousands of people who propose to measure the merit of Christianity by just such a test as is here suggested. They suppose that if Christianity were to make many "converts" among the "high classes," this would be evidence that it was a pretty good religion. And if only it were to make all its "converts" among the "high classes," this would be evidence that it was a perfect religion—completely adapted to all the needs of mankind. Whereas if it made only a few converts from the "high classes," this would be evidence that it is rather an inferior religion. And if it should make no converts at all from such "class," this would be sufficient evidence that it is a religion worthy of no consideration at all by such altogether wise and proper people as "we" are.

Such views as this, however, are altogether vanity. Such people as these would have rejected Christ when He was on earth, just as did the other Pharisees. Such is precisely the argument made then by the "higher classes:" "Art thou also His disciple? Have any of the rulers or the Pharisees believed on Him? But this people that knoweth not the law"—these unlearned, low class, common folks, who believe on Him—"are cursed." "He goeth in with publicans and sinners, and eateth with them." In fact, not a single one of the "higher classes" there was known to be a believer in Him till after He was dead: then two of them, who had been disciples, "but secretly," stepped out publicly and let be known that they were such.

If Christianity in Christ's day on earth had been dependent on the "high classes" for a place in the world, it would have had no place at all in the world. In fact, in that case it could not have even entered the world; for the only ones in all that land to whom the angels could announce the glad tidings were the lowly shepherds who were watching their flocks and longing for the coming of the promised One.

Christianity knows no higher classes nor lower classes, nor classes of any other kind. It knows only that all men are so low as to be overwhelming lost in sin, and need to be saved. It knows that men of low degree are nothing, and that men of high degree are worse than nothing. It knows that all are lost-alike, and all must be saved alike. And there is no respect of persons with God. Christianity therefore goes to all alike, offering everlasting life and eternal glory. And wherever it is true that there are any classes so "high" that they cannot be converted by it, that is only the more shame to them, and shows that they are really so low as not to be able to discern the value of the highest gift the universe can afford.

Caiaphas was so "high" that he could despise the Lord Jesus and persecute Him to death, and because of it he will sink to eternal perdition. But when the Lord was crucified with the two thieves, one of them was so "low" that he could believe on Him, and because of it he will rise to the heaven height of eternal glory.

Oh! in the presence of Christianity as it really is, for men to talk of "higher classes" and "lower classes," "high caste" and "low-caste," betrays such a lack of comprehension of it as to be painful to every Christian. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Why will any man in the wide world hold himself so high as to despise such a gift?

The Papacy Did It.

THE Papacy is never loth to admit that she changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, and to claim Sunday as a Catholic day. The latest on this point is this from the Western Watchman, of January 21:—

"The Rabbi Hirsch, of Chicago, advises his co-religionists to give up the seventh-day Jewish Sabbath and take up the first day, Catholic Sunday. But he gives a very poor reason for the change when he says, 'we are in America and not in Judea.' He should have said, 'The Catholic Church has ordered the change, and her word is law for all men who want to save their souls.'"

Of course there was no real change of the Sabbath day; but Rome's claim of such a change has been recognized in the opinions and practices of the people. The expression "Catholic Sunday" is entirely correct.

New Sunday Legislation in Missouri.

A BILL has been introduced in the Missouri House of Representatives, and passed by that body, which if it becomes a law, will prohibit all games of any kind, public or private, in any part of that State, on the first day of the week.

In the Kansas City Star, of February 3, we note the following relative to the discussion of the measure in the House:—

"JEFFERSON CITY, Feb. 3.—When Burroughs, of Howell County, a young man fresh from college, introduced a bill in the House to make it a misdemeanor to play base ball on Sunday, and Regan, of St. Louis, taunted him with the declaration that Howell County was so hilly that it contained no place that would give room for a base ball diamond on flat ground, nobody thought that the bill would pass, but it went through the House yesterday afternoon, 77 to 42, and was debated afterward.

"It was the amended bill that passed, but in reality the old statute against horse-racing and cock-fighting, is only reenacted and the new portion only prohibits playing base ball and all other games. If it shall pass the Senate and become a law it will not only prohibit base ball games of any kind on Sunday, but the small boy who plays marbles in the back yard or his father who plays a game of chess in the parlor on Sunday will be liable to be hauled off to jail in the middle of the game. Unless the Supreme Court shall fall back on the old theory of ejusdem generis, which put an end to the prosecution of the ballot box stuffing cases, it is a serious question whether if this bill becomes a law it will not be held that it is an offense against the peace and dignity of the great State of Missouri for small girls to play with their dolls on Sunday, even though saloons are permitted to run wide open on that day."

"The bill was fairly railroaded through. The roll call began before members realized what was going on, and though a dozen tried to make speeches by way of explaining their votes, Collins, of Scotland, who happened to be in the chair, shut them off very promptly.

"After the bill had been passed, Johnston, of St. Louis County, moved to reconsider, and for an hour there was the warmest kind of debate. Martin "roasted" the House for passing a bill which, he declared, was worse than the old Blue Laws of Connecticut. Crisp voiced his antagonism to the bill and declared that for twenty generations members of his family, when they knocked at the pearly gates of heaven, pleaded the promises of God, and that he did not propose to depend for his hope of future happiness on pleading the statutes of Missouri, the sufficiency of which he questioned.

"At 9 o'clock this morning the discussion was resumed on Johnston's motion to reconsider. Wade, of Springfield, surprised the House by urging reconsideration. He said that in the cities there were thousands who were too poor to dress their children properly to go to church.

"Fitzgerald, who is tall and gaunt, twisting one long leg around the other and leaning against a desk in the middle of the House, said: 'I desire to ask the gentleman if he believes that when our forefathers landed at Plymouth Rock they would have spent one hour playing base ball on Sunday?'

"Whitcotton said the House would find before this year should end that no man was more in favor of good morals than he, but this was a measure which could not be justified. 'The idea,' he said, 'seems to prevail here that the public can be made good by law. I say, as a former prosecutor and an attorney, that it breeds contempt for law to place on your statute books laws which the people will not respect. This law is unjust, unmoral, and I will show you by the example of the lowly Nazarene that it is unchristian. Your law will forbid the playing of a game of croquet on Sunday or arrest little boys for playing marbles. This bill is undemocratic; it is against American manhood; it is intolerant.'

After some further discussion, the motion to reconsider was tabled by a vote of 71 to 52.

The bill was sent to the Senate, where, as is reported, it met with no very flattering reception. What further fortune may have come to it we have not yet learned.

What Religion?

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

ONE cannot but remark that when one of our American journalists describes the atrocities practised by the Kurd or the Turk upon the Armenians, he is careful to preface the words "Kurd" or "Turk" with the word "Mohammedan," and the word "Armenian" with the word "Christian." But when the same writers describe the cruelties practised by one people upon another, where both are professedly Christian, they drop those words out of their vocabulary. The following from an editorial in the Inter Ocean will illustrate the point:—

"Cruelties not excelled by those of the Mohammedan Turk upon the hapless Armenian Christian have been perpetrated upon the Cuban by the Spaniard."

Why this sudden transition in the use of descriptive words, in so short a sentence? Why not give the cruel Spaniard the benefit of being Christian, as well as the cruel Turk the name of being Mohammedan? Or why not qualify the rebellious Cuban with the designation of Christian as well as the equally rebellious Armenien? There can be but one reason: It would be a great shock to the feelings of Christians to designate a Christian as a murderer; but the thought of a Mohammedan murderer gives them a very complacent and self-satisfied feeling.

But, really, where is the difference? Is a Christian(?) murderer any better than a Mohammedan murderer? And if it is proper to describe a murderer by telling what religion he professes, why not serve the murderers of all religions equally alike? Probably General Weyler is far more responsible for the atrocities perpetrated upon the Cubans before his eyes, than the Sultan of Turkey is for things done in remote parts of his empire by men over whom he never at the best exercised much control. Yet this will not be charged to Weyler's religion.

The fact is, human passions, when once aroused, know no religion. The fanatical Mohammedan who can, as a poet has expressed it,

"Pause and kneel unshod,
In the fresh blood his hand hath poured,
To mutter o'er some text of God
Engraven on his reeking sword"— has the same kind of religion that the inquisitors of Rome had, the same religion that the Duke of Alva and bloody Claverhouse had—the religion of a debased human nature, inflamed, to be sure, with religious prejudices. And when an American citizen, like a man trying to shoot a partridge, creeps around on Sunday, to desecrate some one setting out tomato plants, or husking corn, that he may have him arrested, fined, and imprisoned, he has enough of this same religion of human nature easily to justify one in placing him in the same class. This religion of human nature is widespread. It may hide under some other name—even the name of Christianity—but it is always the same and is very easily detected.

Sunday Laws and the Judiciary.

TO SUSTAIN SUNDAY LAWS REQUIRES A NON-JUDICIAL FRAME OF MIND IN THE JUDGES.

By James T. Ringgold, of the Baltimore Bar.

THE judicial frame of mind requires that a judge in ruling on the constitutionality of a statute shall be governed by the constitution alone, without the slightest reference to the wishes of the people as expressed otherwise than through that instrument.

The people may change the instrument as their will may change; the judge must follow the will as therein laid down. But judges are human, and, like other men, are under the influence of the Zeitgeist, or what appears to them to be such. And the Brownist religious sentiment has been so strenuously busying itself with this question ever since it obtained a foothold here that the Zeitgeist in America has seemed to set against any fair discussion whatever of Sunday laws.

Many persons desire the maintenance of these laws at any cost in the way of suppression or perversion of their fair consideration. And, while the balloting on such questions as Sunday street-cars, etc., has more than once indicated that in an American community of any considerable size, the "Sunday-law-at-any-price" men (whatever may be the case with the women) are a minority of the total population, they are a very large majority of the "fussy," aggressive, meddlesome folk; they make a noise in the world out of all proportion to their real numbers and importance; and so they are too often mistaken for real representatives of the Zeitgeist.

It is also true that among the supporters of Sunday laws are included many of their systematic violators, who are quite sincerely persuaded that they are necessary for other people. But, while it is true that the noise made by the Brownist Sunday-law advocates is out of all proportion to their numbers and importance (it is an old story, "The shallows murmur while the deeps are dumb"), nevertheless, as was said, this noise has its effect, and part of its effect on the minds of our judges is to produce the impression that an overwhelming majority of the people want the Sunday law sustained at any price. And our judges, being human, are thus biased in advance on this question, and caused to hunt up reasons whereby the Sunday law may be sustained, instead of examining its position under the constitution without any bias toward one conclusion rather than another. They are acting by their light as servants of the people, trying to do their will. But they forget that for them the will of the people is not to be gotten from Brownist pulpits nor Brownist newspapers, but from the constitution alone. And they are, therefore, in a non-judicial frame of mind.

Another effect of Brownism on judges as well as legislators is, by associating the Sunday law with a supposed special command of Deity, to throw around it a peculiar halo of sanctity, which prevents its calm and critical examination, like other statutes, upon its merits as a statute exclusively. It is like that old subject of secession which senators and representatives for so many years tacitly agreed should not be mentioned in the halls of Congress, though they "talked all around it," and the people and papers outside openly debated it in every aspect. There is about the idea of "our American Sunday" something of that "sacredness" that certain statesmen used to ascribe to "the Union." To impeach the eternal verity of the Sunday law or question its expediency is to "touch the Lord's anointed." It is evident that no judicial consideration of a statute is to be expected of a judge who approaches the subject in such a frame of mind as this.

The result of so approaching the consideration of a statute is fatally to blind the judge both with reference to the position and functions of the legislature and with reference to his own position and functions. He comes to look upon the legislature as in some sort the mouth-piece of Deity, and, of course, this renders the expression of its will sacred, and inquiry into the authority of its deliverances rather in the nature of blasphemy or heresy. But this inquiry is one of the chief purposes of his official existence. For him the legislature has properly no connection with Deity. It is simply a part of a machine constructed by human agency for human purposes, and his business is to see to it that the part does not go beyond the purposes for which it was placed in the machine of government. And these purposes are defined and limited by the constitution.

When the question of the constitutionality of a statute is at issue, the judicial frame of mind requires that that question shall be settled by the constitution alone. It no more admits of any deference to a command of Deity, real or supposed, than it admits of deference to a change in the minds of the people, real or supposed, subsequent to the constitution's adoption. So that, if there be a command of Deity recorded anywhere outside of the constitution that a Sunday law with certain provisions shall be enacted, yet this will not render its enactment a legitimate exercise of legislative power, unless it be so under the constitution. And, conversely, though there should be produced from some source an express command of Deity that no Sunday law shall be enacted, yet this will not render its enactment an illegitimate exercise of legislative power, unless it be so under the constitution. So that the commands of Deity have nothing whatever to do with the question of the constitutionality of a statute, except so far as those commands may be embodied in the constitution. And when embodied therein, so far as the courts are concerned, they derive all their sanction and force from their embodiment, and no sanction or force whatever from the fact that they are commands of Deity.

The prejudice produced by the influence of Brownism that there is a special connection between a Sunday law and a divine command, blinds a judge as fatally to his own position and functions as it does to the position and functions of the legislature. He comes to look upon himself as in some sort the upholder, the expounder, and the enforcer of a divine command when this statute is before him, instead of regarding himself in his true light, as part of a machine constructed by human agency for human purposes alone, and like the governor of the steam engine, having for his special duty the seeing to it that the other parts operate in a regular and orderly manner according to the law of their being. He begins to feel that Deity, instead of the constitution, is the author of his official being, to imagine that he has, as judge, a "mission" from "on high," instead of a mere commission from the governor or the people. And for him to falter in such a character, to look beyond this inspiration for guidance, seems like "kicking against the pricks."

And in his case, as in that of the legislator, all this implies a confusion of his personal and his official duty, and he ceases, in fact, to be a judge.

Supposed he is fully persuaded in his own mind that there is a divine command that men should not work on Sunday. It by no means follows that such a belief will justify him in sustaining the constitutionality of a law compelling everybody to be idle on Sunday. The old Hebrew judges decided the guilt or innocence of a party arraigned before them on the charge of violating the fourth commandment, without any reference to its validity, because, like all the rest of the law which they administered, it came from a source unquestioned and unquestionable.

That it was a command of Deity which it was their duty to enforce, was a point not to be mooted. It is otherwise with an American judge. He has no commands to enforce. He deals with statutes. The statutes with which he deals do not begin, "Thus saith the Lord;"

they begin with some such phrase as, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly," etc. And the very first question that he has to consider in dealing with a statute is, Had the General Assembly authority to enact it? And if he permits himself to decide this question with reference to any command of Deity, real or assumed, or with reference to anything whatsoever but the constitution which created the Assembly, and has defined and limited its sphere of action, then he is deciding a judicial question in a non-judicial frame of mind.

His judicial oath included, his position justifies, no such performance. His oath is to support the constitution. If he does not support everything in that constitution, and refuse to support anything outside of it, in his judicial capacity, utterly irrespective of his personal views of what is or is not a command of Deity, then he breaks his judicial oath. If he finds that compliance with his oath forces him to violate a divine command, he may of course, resign; but he cannot act judicially on the bench and break his oath.

Even if there were an express command, "Thou shalt sustain the constitutionality of a Sunday law," no judge of ours could appeal to it as binding on his official action. To do so is at once to decide or judge purely religious questions—the question as to the verity of the command, the question to whom is it addressed, the question of the kind of Sunday law which might be referred to, etc., etc. And a judge who undertakes to decide such questions is setting up the union of Church and State at once; and when he sustains a statute as the result of his conclusions on these points, he is giving effect to a law that grants a preference to one religion over another.

And it may be added that to decide such questions is as impossible as it is illegitimate, for our judges. They have no means whatever of ascertaining what is the will of Deity, nor where it is recorded. They cannot decide for the Jew against the Mahometan that it is recorded in the Pentateuch—or Hexateuch, in modern parlance. They cannot decide for the Christian against the Jew that it is recorded in the New Testament as well as in the Old Testament of the King James version. They cannot decide for the Roman Catholic against the Lutheran that it may be found in the "Apocrypha" as well as in the Testaments recognized by Protestants. Nor, assuming that a certain mandate, couched in human language, could be ruled by the courts to be an expression of the will of Deity, would it be possible for them to authoritatively interpret that mandate when its meaning and application should be disputed; and it is hard to imagine a mandate couched in human language over which such a dispute might not arise.

It will not do, then, for an American judge, any more than an American legislator, to imagine that in his official character he is "an instrument in the hands of Providence." It will not do for him to be influenced in his official action by his private notions of what men ought or ought not to do. He may think it is the will of Deity that men shall not work on Sunday; but this is not the slightest reason why he should sustain the constitutionality of a Sunday law. He may think it is the will of Deity that no interest should be taken for the use of money; yet he dare not refuse to give judgment for its recovery in any amount provided for by the law. It is surely the will of Deity that the rich creditor should be merciful to his impoverished debtor; but the judge must sustain an execution for the uttermost farthing, under the harshest conditions, unless the will of the State, as expressed in its law, allows some exemptions. In short, the will of Deity, so far as the official action of the judge is concerned, is that he shall do his duty, and that duty consists in complying with his official oath to support the Constitution.

We see, then, that the judge who permits his view of the Sunday law (or any other law in free America) to be clouded by his notions of what are and what are not commands of Deity, confounds the official character of the legislator with his individual character, and his own duty, as a judge with his duty as a man. And one who does this manifestly approaches the decision of the constitutionality of the Sunday law or its construction, in a non-judicial frame of mind.

“Enforcing” the Ten Commandments.

E. J. Waggoner, in Signs of the Times.

THE law of God, which is his righteousness, is the one thing which men are to seek. Christ said, “I know that his commandment is life everlasting.” John 12:50. We also are to know the same thing. The law itself is spiritual; it is life everlasting. But life is not a figment, a fancy; it is real, and wherever there is life there must be something living.

When we read that the commandment is life everlasting, it does not mean that the written characters are life. They simply declare the fact. Everlasting life is in Jesus Christ. “As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself.” John 5:26. He is the fountain of life. Ps. 36:9; Jer. 2:13.

The commandment or law of God is everlasting life because it is his own life. Then it is the life of the Spirit of God; and putting the Spirit of God into the hearts of men puts the life of God there. It is the law of the Spirit of life in Christ, that gives freedom and peace with God. “The Spirit is life, because of righteousness;” and “if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.” Rom. 8:1, 2, 9, 10.

Nothing less than the life of Christ is the law of God; and anything contrary to the life of Christ is condemned. Then we can leave the right of any body of men to enforce the law of God entirely outside of the question. It is merely a question of power. Has it the power to enforce the law of God? Has any government on earth power to take the life of God and put it into the hearts of its subjects? Certainly not.

Then when men do make religious laws, and enforce religion upon people, it is certain that they are not enforcing the religion of Christ. Therefore, when they do that, those who are loyal to Christ can have no complicity with it whatever. It is paganism, no matter what form of truth there may be. It is but the form without the power or life. If such enforcement is put in the very terms of the Bible, it is only the more thoroughly pagan; for it is paganism trying to palm itself off as Christianity.

The attempt to enforce the Ten Commandments, even just as they read, would be the greatest dishonor men could offer to the Lord. It would be saying that the law of God is no better than any man may be of himself. It is the same as saying that a man is all right if he keeps the law in such a way that no man can find fault with him. But the man who merely refrains from outward violations of the law may be worse than the man who utterly disregards it, and knows he is guilty. In the latter case the man has nothing wherein to trust, while in the other the man is building himself up in his own righteousness, and thinks that he is all right as long as he keeps the letter so far as men can discern.

But the law is spiritual, and only the power of the Spirit can work righteousness in an individual. The recognition of civil government as having anything to do with the law of God, is directly opposed to the idea of justification by faith.

To lay down a rule or law requiring obedience to the law of God, with a penalty for disobedience, is to say to a man, “You could keep it if you would try; but you will not try, and so we will compel you to do it.” This is putting man on an equality with God.

Anything less than the life of God is sin, and therefore for any power to attempt to enforce any of the precepts of Christ is simply an attempt to compel people to sin, and to hold them in sin.

An attempt is being made to revive in Illinois, a compulsory education law similar to the one that caused so much trouble there and in Wisconsin a few years ago. The author of this new trouble is Mrs. M. J. Flower, of Chicago.

Like the former law, this one invades the rights of private and parochial schools. It declares that “no private or parochial school shall be deemed a school within the meaning of this act unless the school files with the superintendent of public instruction, prior to September 1, of each year, the course of study that shall be pursued during the ensuing year, the course to include all the elementary branches and the English language.”

If such a thing as this shall be allowed to prevail, it will be but another step to where there will be nothing that will be considered private—not even the family circle. It is probable though that the meddlers will never cease. We hope that all who have private or parochial schools will be awake to this evil thing as they were to the other and thoroughly kill this as they did that.

Common Law.

BY D. M. TRAILL.

IN view of the obiter dicta of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Trinity Church decision of Feb. 29, 1892, viz., "that the Christian religion is a part of the 'common law' of Pennsylvania," and that "if we pass beyond these matters to a view of American life, . . . we find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth," it is well to review this statement and to ascertain what the "common law" referred to is, and what bearing it has upon the correctness or incorrectness of that decision.

The great Lord Mansfield defines "law as nothing else than reason modified by custom and authority." Hence every law is composed of two elements—the rational and the historical. All systems of law are agreed in their principles or "rational element," and differ only in the peculiar national modifications, or as they might be termed the "historical element."

The Roman lawyers recognized these differences under the terms "jus civile" and "jus gentium," or "jus naturale." In the Institutes of Justinian we find this statement:—

"Every people ruled by laws and customs (legibus et moribus) uses partly its own peculiar law and partly a law common to all men; for that law or part of the law which each people has established for itself is peculiar to the State and is called the 'jus civile' as belonging peculiarly to the State; but that law which natural reason has established among all men is observed generally among all peoples, and is called the 'jus gentium' as being the law which all nations use." (Inst. III.)

Aristotle also recognized the same distinction under the terms nomos idios or peculiar law and the nomos koinos or common law. He defines the nomos koinos as "the unwritten rules which appear to be recognized among all men," and also as "that which is conformable merely to the dictates of Nature." Coke, the English jurist, agrees with this definition in saying that "the common law of England rests not upon the arbitrary will of man but upon that law which God at the time of the creation of the nature of man, infused into his heart, for his preservation and direction."

Blackstone, in the introduction to his Commentaries, calls this law "the law of nature," and of it says:—

"It is binding over all the globe, in all countries and at all times. No human laws are of any validity if contrary to this; and such of them as are valid derive all their authority, mediately or immediately, from this original. . . . Those rights, then, which God and nature have established, and are therefore called natural rights, such as are life and liberty, need not the aid of human laws to be more effectually invested in every man than they are."

Lord Chief Justice Hobart declares "that even an Act of Parliament made against natural justice . . . is void of itself; for jura nature sunt immutabilia [the rights of nature are immutable], and they are leges legum [the laws of laws]."

How then did Christianity, in opposition to the teachings of God's word and recognized legal authorities, ever become recognized by English and American jurists? We find that by a mistranslation from the Norman-French into English of the arguments of Prisot (A. D. 1458) in one case, and by the subsequent citation of that argument, it has been almost unquestioningly accepted by both English and American jurists ("American State Papers," pp. 127-138).

It is a sorrowful fact that the legal profession of both England and America have neglected the exercise of independent reason in the judging of decisions. The faculty of understanding the principles of the common law and consequently the application of these principles, is almost lost. In the place of that faculty is substituted the practice of citation of authorities, often very questionable and sometimes even palpably in conflict with the very principles of law. This fact has been especially noticeable of late years in the decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

In this matter history is simply repeating itself. The history of the Roman courts in the time of Justinian reveals a picture very similar. The faculty of weighing principles seems to have been lost and various expedients were resorted to for reaching a decision. Of course, all such expedients failed as all such must fail whether in Rome, England, or America, and injustice and folly became doubly apparent in their decisions. Can we expect anything different now?

It requires but the touch of inspiration to complete the picture:—

"The earth is given into the hand of the wicked: he covereth the faces of the judges thereof." Job 9:24. "Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness. . . . And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter." Isa. 59:9, 14.

Congress and the "Reform Bureau."

THE principle upon which the so-called Reform Bureau in Washington, is established, is shown in the following statement by Rev. W. F. Crafts, who presides over its functions:—

"A minister interested in a pending reform bill which The Reform Bureau is promoting, said to the writer: 'It seems as if Congressmen themselves ought to do the work which is done by the Bureau.' This doubtless common thought is due to a common failure to recognize the significance of the word 'representative' as applied to legislators. The Sovereign is the people. At the ballot box the people convey to their 'representative' in the active duties of government their wishes as to currency or tariff or both. On the other more numerous and to Christian citizens more important subjects of legislation, 'representatives' must get information as to what the sovereign people want through the lobby, of which the post-office is an extension."

How very gratifying it must be to Congressmen to know that they have such an easy access to the minds of the people—for of course the vast majority of American citizens make use of this Reform Bureau to communicate their will to Congress!

We had always thought that Congressmen were supposed to have some minds of their own, and were sufficiently well acquainted with the needs of the country and the elements of proper legislation, to be allowed to proceed in the main as their own judgment may direct. But this is because we have never looked at the matter from the standpoint of a "Christian lobbyist."

A Minnesota Protest.

A BILL is now pending in the Minnesota Legislature, which provides "That it shall be unlawful to give or permit to be given, any theatrical performance, amusement, or public exhibition of whatever nature on the first day of the week, commonly known as Sunday;" such act to be punishable by fine of $25 to $100, imprisonment for thirty days or less, and revocation of license for one year.

In view of this a "Protest and Memorial" has been drawn up by citizens of that State for presentation to the Legislature, based on the following reasons:—

"1. Because, this measure enters the realm of the individual mind and would forestall the individual exercise of the right to decide for himself as to how he will spend his time.

"2. Because, until a man shall seek to spend his time by overt acts in the invasion of the equal rights of others, the State has no authority. This is not and cannot be claimed in this case by the supporters of the bill inasmuch as the places of amusement are to be prohibited on one day only.

"3. Because, that 'the first day of the week, commonly known as Sunday,' is the day designated upon which would be prohibited 'any theatrical performance, amusement or public exhibition of whatever nature.'

"4. Because, that this prohibition being placed on Sunday stamps it as a religious measure, purely in the interests of Sunday, because of the supposed sacred character of the day. Thus the movers would guard the sacredness of the day and give the stamp of morality to the theatre.

"5. Because, the State has no standard of morality whereby to measure the sacredness of any day or thing. Indeed, there is no such standard except the divine, even that of the Word of God. And if the State should attempt to apply this standard, it would thereby exalt itself in the place of God in the application and interpretation of that Word, thereby assuming to itself the attribute of infallibility which belongs alone to God.

"6. Because, such an attempt to apply this standard in civil matters would lead to statutory interpretation which would be to set up a human standard above the divine, even above the Bible itself.

"7. Because, that to allow that the State has the right and the power to apply the Bible in civil matters, would be to allow its right and power to apply that standard in spiritual matters as well.

"8. Because, such statutory interpretations of that divine standard—the Bible—would be of no force whatever, except by penalties more or less severe (an example of which may be seen in the aforesaid bill), the execution of which would lead to persecution. Indeed, it could most truly be said to be persecution itself. All of which would be contrary to the Constitution and a gross violation of the true American principle of individual rights in all matters of conscience.

"The principle upon which all should act is well stated by Herbert Spencer, thus: 'Every man has a right to do whatsoever he wills, provided that in the doing thereof he infringes not the equal rights of any other man.'

"In the language of the citizen, soldier, statesman, General Grant, 'Keep the Church and State forever separate.'

At the services in connection with the installation of the new rector of the Catholic University at Washington, Cardinal Gibbons made a speech, in which he said:—

"If I had the privilege of modifying the Constitution of the United States, I would not expunge or alter a single paragraph, a single line, or a single word of that important instrument."

Of course not. What use from the papal standpoint could there be in having the Constitution amended when according to the ruling of the highest Federal Court, it already sanctions the doctrine that the United States is a (Catholic) "Christian nation." No nation ever yet got to be "Christian" by civil or ecclesiastical pronouncement without becoming a Catholic "Christian" nation in the process.

Sunday Cars in Hamilton, Ontario.

"Liberty," Toronto, Ont.

AN interesting case has recently been heard before the Court of Appeals in this city. Justice Rose decided some time ago that the running of street-cars on a Sunday was not a violation of the Lord's Day Act. An appeal was made from this decision by the attorney-general of the province.

Of course the question could not be discussed upon its merits, as it was simply a decision, as to whether the terms of the Lord's day Act were such as to prohibit the cars from running. Some of the arguments presented by the prosecution were decidedly unique. Among other things it was argued that a "traveller" was not a person going from one part of the city to another in a street-car. That "conveying traveler" was something different from "carrying passengers."

The question discussed was not, "Is it right?" but

"Is it according to law?" The decision of the judges will probably not be given for several weeks yet.

We would gather from this action of the Union that, among other things, they considered good citizenship to consist in a strict observance of Sunday; and that good citizenship work consists in setting spies (good Christians, I suppose) to watch those who congregate at the parks on Sunday to see that they do not desecrate the Sabbath!

If those who visit the park on Sunday indulge in incivilities, or what would be considered such on other days of the week, they should be prohibited, of course; but if this good citizenship committee is so much taken up with its own affairs during the six days of work that they will permit then what they prohibit on Sunday, simply because they consider it to be Sabbath desecration, the committee would better be discharged. Their work is neither good citizenship nor good Christianity.

Policy vs. Principle.

E. G. Lane, Pastor First Baptist Church, Boulder, Colo.

ONE of the most discouraging features of all our modern life is the tendency and disposition of men to do all things for policy's sake. We find it in all spheres of life, in social, business, political and religious life. Many men, and it is safe to say the majority of men, are what they are, or where they are, for the sake of policy. Principle has very little consideration except as it is policy to have a principle. That heroism which prefers principle to policy in the face of death, starvation and repudiation is fast dying. Principle can be bought and sold, conscientious convictions are sacrificed for the sake of policy.

Business men stoop to unscrupulous means and questionable methods for policy's sake. Men join lodges, associations, clubs and fraternities, and all organizations not for the principle advocated, but because it is good policy, will add to their trade, increase income, enable them to sell more cloth or coal, more groceries or dry goods, more milk or meat. Often times the principles advocated by these associations are in direct opposition to those held by the men joining.

Policy rules principle in the political sphere. This is marked. Thousands of politicians are what they are for what they can get. Political plums make some men accept any principle.

One of our public men is represented as saying that "No man could make a platform that he could not stand on." He is the representative of a large class whose principles change with the wind.

And not the least discouraging feature is the fact that political parties are forcing men to surrender their principles for the sake of policy.

No more infamous crime could be committed than that of compelling men to disregard their conscientious convictions and the principles of their lives. The bankers and employers who threaten their debtors and employees with the withdrawal of loans and cut in wages, or the withholding of work, are committing an atrocious crime.

Where is the freedom of thought of which we boast? A man dare not think for himself. If he would feed and clothe his family he must not have any principles of his own, but accept those of his employers. It is a crime, a shameful crime, and the voice of blood cries to God out of the earth, the voice of millions who, if they would live decently, must bow to the will of their employers. It is a crime against honesty, a crime against liberty, a crime against humanity, a crime against divinity.

These men are using money as the golden shears to sever the locks of strength of the toiling millions of mankind—using money as shackles to bind Samson-humanity to their grinding mills. Tighter have the shackles been bound with each revolution of the wheel, and harder has the task been made.

The eyes of reason have been put out, burned out with the fires of poverty.

But methinks I see the locks growing, the strength returning, and Samson let out for the amusement of this Philistine host. Samson-humanity wearies—who can wonder, with conditions hourly becoming harder, daring neither to voice nor vote principles which will remedy these conditions—who can wonder at their wearying, and if not relieved, like him of old, they will ask but one privilege, to lean against the pillars of State, and with one mighty lean tear away the pillars and bring down this mighty republic in destruction upon their lords, even though it cost them their lives.

But the last place in which we would look for this lack of principle is in the church, yet here, it seems, we have it most. Many men are in the church not so much from principle as policy. Their profession is not based upon the principles of religion, but on the policy of their business. The cloak of Christianity is assumed to gain the confidence of the people. They seek the Lord and his people not because of his works for them—the dying on the cross, the agony of the garden to save them, but because of the loaves and fishes—what they could get out of it. They give not from principle, but policy, hoping to receive again. They make much of the profitableness of godliness in this life, and little of that which is to come. They emphasize that verse, "Give, and it shall be given unto you again," but pass over that other scripture, "Do good and lend, not hoping to receive again."

They give from a mercenary, and not from a missionary spirit. Then, too, there are many Christians who for policy's sake will sacrifice their Christian principles: like Pilate, they deliver their Lord to be crucified. Jesus is sold for thirty pieces of silver as truly to-day as when Judas sold him. He is betrayed by his followers into the hands of sinful men for dollars and cents. His name is blasphemed, his religion repudiated, because of these policy Christians.

Christianity is profitable unto this life, but he who seeks it for its profitableness will not find it profitable in the life to come.

In answer to "We have cast out devils and in thy name done many wonderful work," they will receive "depart from me, I never knew you."

Honesty is the best policy, but he who is honest because it is the best policy is not honest at all.

The crying need of the hour is for men of principle: men who are what they are because of principle; men who will stand by their principles and defend them; men who would rather starve than surrender them, rather die than depart from them.

"God give us men! a time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lusts of office do not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor—men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And condemn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog,
In public duty and in private thinking;
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large profession and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Goodness weeps, Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps."

Two events of recent date which were in no way related to each other, yet which have a bearing on the same subject, were, the meeting of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance at the house of one of New York City's millionaires, January 28, and the Bradley-Martin fancy dress ball at the Hotel Waldorf, February 11. The meaning of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance is that Woman has come to the "rescue of the sabbath,"—not the women of the lower or ordinary walks of life, but those of wealth and high standing in "society," such as figure in the homes of millionaires and in the functions of Washington social life. The meaning of the Bradley-Martin ball,—well, that can be left to the judgment of the reader. But the question which naturally arises is, Might not these ladies in "high society," who have arisen to "rescue the sabbath," properly begin their reform work a little nearer home?

NOTHING worthy of mention took place at the Bradley-Martin ball at the Hotel Waldorf the evening of the 11th, but several things worthy of note took place just outside of it. One of these was the barricading of a public street leading past the hotel entrance, so that no one could pass along that portion of it unless he was so outlandishly attired as to look like a fool, in which case it was presumed he—or she—was to be a participant in the ball. The reason this is worthy of note is that there is not a very long step between the barricading of a public thoroughfare by the city's "four hundred" for their own selfish pleasure, and the barricading of public streets by the four hundred thousand at the other end of the social scale, for a purpose not in any way designed to promote the happiness of the rich.

SPEAKING of the Senate's amendments to the proposed arbitration treaty, the New York Herald of February 4, says:—

"We all remember the instantaneous and decisive effect of Mr. Olney's manifesto on the question of recognizing belligerency or independence. He told the Senate they had nothing to do with it; that recognition was a purely Executive function, and that the Executive would not relinquish it. There was some senatorial spluttering for a few days. Then it was clearly seen and universally admitted that Mr. Olney was right, and the swagger about his 'defiance of Congress' subsided. In the matter of ratification, the constitutional right of the Senate is, of course, beyond dispute, and nobody disputes it. But what the President and Secretary of State can do is to compel the Senate to choose between ratification and rejection."

This is the language of that monarchical spirit whose growth in the United States constitutes a significant sign of the times.

ONE of the first official acts of the President-elect, after his inauguration, will be, it is said, to call a special session of Congress, to convene about the middle of March. The "reform" lobbyists which infest the halls of the Capitol may be expected to seize upon the earliest possible opportunity to introduce their measures for the subversion of American principles of government, and the friends of liberty everywhere must manifest increased vigilance in discovering and resisting the encroachments of the enemy.

A BILL is before the Wisconsin Legislature to repeal the Sunday law of that State. On the other hand, an agitation for stricter Sunday observance has been begun by the Christian Endeavor forces, who are pledging themselves to abstain from all Sunday trading, reading of Sunday papers, bicycle riding for business or pleasure, and also to call for the closing of post-offices on Sunday, and for a more rigid enforcement of the Sunday law.

THE sale of newspapers by vocal announcement, in the manner customary with newsboys, is now prohibited on Sundays in the District of Columbia. The first Sunday on which the law went into effect, four newsboys were arrested for its violation, and were held for trial under bonds of $100 each. Friends of liberty in Washington have provided for their defense.

ARGUMENT on a bill to repeal the Sunday law of North Carolina was heard by the Legislature of that State, February 9. We have not learned the result.

THE Pastors' Association of Dallas, Texas, have petitioned the Legislature of that State to pass a law prohibiting ball playing in the State on Sundays.

That "Superb" Bible.

Dodgeville, Wis.

AMERICAN SENTINEL, New York City:

The Bible came to hand all right. To say that I am pleased with it will but faintly describe my feelings. It would take too much space to enumerate its many points of excellence, so I will sum it all up in the one word "superb."

There are so many "aids to the study of the Scriptures," and they are so helpful and just what I have been wishing for since I became a "Bible Christian."

Friends and neighbors all say, "I wish I had one like it," and "So cheap." Our seventeen-year-old daughter is about to start out to obtain subscriptions for the SENTINEL, as she wishes for one "just like it."

Please accept my warmest thanks, and believe me to be,

Ever sincerely yours,

R. G. W. COLLINS.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF

✠ ✠ ✠

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most, if not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

We are all more than pleased with the Bible in every way. As a book it is thoroughly well made and elegant in all its parts. As a Bible the self-pronunciation is a new feature, and this is only one of its many excellencies. The type is a great delight to me.

THE Sabbath is God's, not man's.

The Lord says that it is "the Sabbath of the Lord thy God:" "My holy day."

It was made for man, that is true; but it itself is the Lord's, designed for the good of man.

It is the Lord's institution, established for the good of man: and it is the man's, and is only for the good of men, when it is held ever to be the Lord's and is devoted sacredly to the object for which the Lord established it.

What is that object?—That man may know only the Lord. Therefore it is written: "Hallow my Sabbaths, and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God." "It is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you."

THERE are many people who do not know that Jehovah is God. There are many who say that they do not know whether there is any God at all. Yet all can know that Jehovah is God.

All that any one needs to do to know that Jehovah is God, is merely to employ the means which He has established that He may be known. "Hallow my Sabbaths and they shall be a sign between me and you that ye may know that I am the Lord your God."

Surely that is simple enough. Surely that proposition is fair enough. Wherever there is one who does not know God, let him hallow the Sabbath of the Lord and he will know that Jehovah is God. And if any one will not take enough interest in the matter to do so simple a thing as that, he is certainly without excuse.

And think of it: It is eternal life to know God; for it is written, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Eternal life is in knowing God; and by hallowing His Sabbaths God may be known; and yet men will despise His Sabbath, will trample it under foot, will ostracise, cast-out and persecute those who hold it, will set up a fraud in its place, and will make laws to compel the acceptance of the fraud instead of the genuine!

God established the Sabbath: man established the Sunday. The word of God says that "the seventh day is the Sabbath:" the word of man says that Sunday is the Sabbath. The word of God is the truth; therefore the seventh day is the Sabbath, by which is the knowledge of God, by which is eternal life; and Sunday is the fraud.

Is it wise then, is it safe, for Congress, State legislatures, or judges, to allow themselves to be made instruments in a grand scheme to shut away from men the God-given means of attaining to the knowledge of God and eternal life?

Who is the one most interested in keeping from men the knowledge of God? Who is the one most determined to keep men from the way of eternal life? Who? Every one can tell. Then into whose hands are they playing who by legislation, by law, or by any other means, keep men from the observance of the Sabbath of the Lord? In whose interests is it that Sunday—the false Sabbath, the false sign—is exalted, and supported, and forced upon men by all the power of earth?

We know that this is not the way that the Sabbath question is usually looked at; but this is the way it should be looked at, for this is the way the Bible puts it—and the Bible is right.

In the times of the French Revolution "the clerical party demanded a monopoly, and wished to establish their right, to the exclusion of the right of the religious minorities."—De Pressensé.

Liberty Not Lost.

LIBERTY—in the highest and truest sense of the term—cannot be lost except by voluntary surrender. No combination of Church and State power, no Sunday “laws,” no restrictions that can be put upon an individual by religious legislation, can of themselves take away that individual liberty that is from God.

God is infinitely superior to all these forces, and it is His will that every one of His creatures should be free. This is so, because freedom is indispensable to the rendering of that worship which is due from the individual to his Creator. God can accept no worship and no service that is not freely given.

It is not therefore in any spirit of hopelessness that we point out the dangers which now threaten the liberties of the American people. It may be, indeed, that the Constitution, and those principles of justice which it embodies, and upon which both the national and State governments are founded, will no longer serve as a protection to individual rights. It would seem that this is all but true of the situation even now. But even though the Constitution be entirely subverted, and though the very pillars of free government fall, soul liberty must still remain at the disposal of its divine Author. Its source is higher than any earthly constitution or government. All of liberty that ever found its way into such embodiments, was placed there by Him who presides over the destinies of all men; and when any people reject it as a principle of government, there still remains that avenue through which the gifts of God descend in their most perfect form, and which no governmental power can control.

This avenue the individual himself controls, and its use depends upon his own volition. It is the avenue of faith in the Word of God, necessitated by the relation of every individual to God. That relation is an individual relation, and is independent of earthly governments or power.

What we would do, in view of the encroachments upon the guaranties of liberty set in the principles and institutions of the Government, is to point out to all the one sure means by which liberty may be retained in the individual life. We are not prophesying the loss of all liberty. We know that liberty will not be lost; that after Sunday “laws” shall have been made as oppressive as enthroned despotism can make them, and enforced as rigorously as the churches are demanding they should be, even after the decree shall have been enforced that none may buy or sell save such as do homage to the papacy through that day she has set up,—there will be those who in the very midst of persecution will enjoy liberty in its fullness, because they have been set free by the Son of God. “If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.”

It was the Son of God who, in the midst of the “burning fiery furnace” kindled by Nebuchadnezzar of old, brought to the three faithful ones such freedom as had never been theirs before. And that was a lesson for all time of the futility of any effort of earthly government to take away liberty from the soul.

And the time is coming—such is the unmistakable indication of events—when every individual must settle it with himself whether in his own case liberty shall be lost, or retained as these ancient worthies retained it. But this need cause no person fear or despondency. Never were the three Hebrews better off, or in the enjoyment of greater happiness, than when in the midst of the fiery furnace.

The prospect before every individual who will believe and obey God is bright indeed. We would not fail to point to this as well as to the gathering storm of religious persecution.

The Two Ways.

In one of the cities of the West, lately, it was arranged to celebrate by a ball, the opening of a new union depôt. The celebration happened to be appointed for a Wednesday night.

“The ministers of sixteen churches of the city” published “an emphatic protest,” among other things, “against the presumption of arranging for such an opening on the night generally conceded to the prayer-meeting, without any consultation with those most nearly concerned.”

This is another of those general pointers that show how determined are the preachers to rule everybody and everything. They insist that people who are not religious shall conform in an altogether outward and formal way, to the ways and institutions of those who are religious. That is, they insist that people who are not religious, shall act as though they were religious, when they have no heart in it.

People who are not religious have just as much right to find entertainment in the way that they choose, as the people who are religious have to find entertainment in the way that they choose. In other words, people who are not religious have just as much right to go to a ball as people who are religious have to go to a prayer-meeting. And there is no sort of presumption in those who are not religious, going to such entertainment on the same night that the religious ones go to prayer-meeting. Indeed, the only presumption in the case is in anybody calling such a thing presumption.

Now we are not admitting for one moment that a ball is as good as a prayer-meeting. There is no kind of comparison between them. A ball is not a good thing at all; while a prayer-meeting is only good. But there is also a great difference between the two sorts of people. The people who go to balls, ought to go to prayer-meeting instead. They ought never to go to balls at all; and they ought to go to prayer-meeting every time. But all this must be of their own free choice. And to show a disposition that would compel them to go to prayer-meeting if we could; or that censures them for going somewhere else on prayer-meeting night; is not the best way to cause them to choose, or incline them, to go to the prayer-meeting.

THE REALITIES OF CHRISTIANITY.

Of course no Christian ever goes to a ball. The Christian has substantial pleasures and entertainments of an order so much higher than balls or anything else that this world can furnish, that such things can find no place in his thought at all. To him the prayer-meeting so far surpasses the ball or any other worldly entertainment, that there can never be any shadow of rivalry or divided purpose when the two things fall on the same night. He is a Christian. He is not of this world, even as Christ is not of this world. His mind, his affection, his heart, is set on things above, not on things on the earth. And his pleasures and entertainment are from a source as much purer, and are of an order as much higher, than this world or anything that is of this world, as is the difference and the distance between heaven and earth.

Now the person who goes to balls and finds his pleasures and entertainment in such things as this world affords, does not know that Christianity presents these higher pleasures and richer entertainments. And while he does not know this, shall he be deprived of what little fleeting pleasure he may be able to find in the world where he is? And above all, shall he be deprived of it by professed Christians? And more than this, when "the ministers of sixteen churches" show so much jealousy of his little joy, is such action calculated to convince him that there is a reality about the superior pleasures which they say belong with the religion that they profess?

SEPARATION FROM THE WORLD.

These ministers said of themselves: "We, as ministers of the gospel and followers of a religion that demands of us separation from the world, take this opportunity to offer our emphatic protest," etc. It is true enough and it is supremely proper that they should be followers of a religion that demands of them separation from the world. Why, then, being separated from the world, do they still try to run the world as though they yet belonged to it? The proper thing for us to do, who are separated from this world, is so to present the transcendent glories of the world to which we belong that people will leave this old sinful, troublesome, fleeting world, and come over to the happy, holy, eternal bliss of the world to come, but which to the Christian begins already in this.

Those who are of this world know that the best that they can get from it is unsatisfactory. They know that even the best pleasures that it can afford do not satisfy—that they are not pleasures at all for more than the moment. On the other hand those who have hold on the heavenly world know that every item is very satisfaction itself—their joy is full, their peace passeth all understanding, their meditation is sweet, their study is a delight, their very labor is restful. Those who know this good of the other world even in this, are to let its love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness and goodness, so shine in their lives, they are to be so glad, so rejoicing in the Lord always—and all this is simply to say that they are to be Christians—that those who know only the apples-of-Sodom-pleasures and good of this world shall see that there is a source of pleasure and of all goodness and truth—that there is indeed a world that is so much better than this one that they will freely, gladly, leave the fleeting shadows of this one, and enter into the enjoyment of the eternally-enduring substance of the other world.

LET US NOT BE HARD-HEARTED.

Then even though they will not take the good and the joy of the world to which we belong, oh let us not be so hard-hearted as to want to deny to them the little pleasures that they try so hard to find in this world. There is but little of it at the very best, and even though there were much of it there is but a very short time at the most in which they can possibly have it. Then when the pleasure is so little, so fleeting, so unsatisfying, and the time so very short in which they can have it, even though they take all the time they will ever have; it is cruel to want to deprive them of it; and to brand it as presumption if the times of their uncommon pleasures happen to fall at the times of our common ones.

No, no. The Christian, while exceedingly sorry that people who for the taking can have the best that the universe affords will seek to be pleased and satisfied with the very worst, will not attempt to take from them against their will or their wish the little empty pleasures that they may be able by such hard endeavor to gain.

DON'T ASK PEOPLE TO BE DISHONEST.

It is proper also to say to these "ministers of sixteen churches" and to all others, that the Lord Jesus does not want any person to make pretensions to being religious from any sort of outward considerations whatever. He does not want any person to act as though he were religious when his whole heart is not in it. Here is His word: "Either make the tree good and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt and his fruit corrupt; for a tree is known by his fruit." The Author of Christianity would rather have a man to be openly and honestly worldly than to have him make a profession and an outward show of Christianity when he is not a Christian. Either make the tree good and his fruit good, or else make the tree corrupt and his fruit corrupt, and be done with it.

The Lord wants no criss-cross work. He wants it straight and honest from the heart, or not at all. And every man who has any respect for himself wants it so too. And it is in every way better to have it so. It is better for a man to be honestly wicked than to be hypocritically good. An honest infidel is better—he is a better man and it is better to have him in the world—than a dishonest Christian.

Of course, rightly speaking, there is no such thing as a dishonest Christian: for if he is dishonest in anything he simply is not a Christian. But yet every Christian is obliged with sorrow to confess that there are those who bear the name, and make the profession, of being Christians, who are not honestly such. They are such only from policy of some phase—perhaps indeed that they may not be counted presumptuous by the ministers of sixteen churches, when the night of their worldly pleasures happens to be the same as the prayer-meeting night. But may the Lord save the people from all such religion as that!

Let all who bear the name of Christian be Christians indeed; then there will not be nearly so many people going to balls on prayer-meeting nights; and then those who do go to balls on prayer-meeting nights will not be denounced as presumptuous by those who do not go.

God's Word vs. a Colonial Ordinance.

AMONG the reasons set forth in a recent communication to the Board of Trustees of Carnegie Hall, Pittsburg, protesting against the opening of the hall for Sunday concerts, we note this:—

"3rd. As Christians we find abundant authority for our position in the Word of God, but to those who take a different view of Scripture, or decline obedience to its mandates, we respectfully call attention to the fact that the First General Assembly of Pennsylvania, on December 7, 1682, in passing the first law in regard to the observance of the 'Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday,' declared that 'for the ease of creation people shall abstain from their usual common toil and labor, that they may better dispose themselves to read the Scriptures of truth at home and frequent meetings of religious worship.' Many unsuccessful attempts have been made to repeal or amend this law, but it has remained in force down to the present time. Besides this, it is well settled among Anglo-Saxon nations that neither amusement nor labor should be carried on on the Lord's Day."

So then, those who "take a different view of Scripture," whether they revere the Word of God or not, ought to set that aside in deference to this ancient colonial ordinance, passed by the "First General Assembly" of Pennsylvania, under the impression that they were legislating "for the ease of creation"! Do the parties who made this protest hold the Scriptures so lightly themselves?

As to the attitude of Anglo-Saxon nations toward the "Lord's Day," if it be not a fact that more amusement is "carried on" on Sunday than on any other day of the week, both our own observations and the testimony of the press are sadly at fault.

Another reason given in the protest is that "The concerts are likely to interfere seriously with the attendance upon the afternoon sessions of the Church and Sunday schools." But have not the one class of citizens as much right to hold a concert on Sunday, as the other class have to hold a Sunday school? Are rights determined under this Government by class distinctions?

It is surprising that a cause which appeals so largely to credulity and prejudice as does that of Sunday legislation, can make such progress in this country as it does.

The Clergy Against the Bible.

Now that the political campaign is ended, the preachers are finding time between the filling of their respective pulpits and laying plans to get control of the Government, to discuss the question of the infallibility of the Bible. As the Bible says nothing about political campaigning or getting control of the civil power as belonging to the work of the Christian ministry, but speaks distinctly to the contrary, it is perhaps not strange that the question of its infallibility should have become a mooted point.

Foremost in the ranks of dissenters from this once cardinal principle of orthodoxy, is the Rev. Lyman Abbott, of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Dr. Abbott's discourses seem to be in the main a statement of his disbeliefs in regard to the Scriptures. He does not believe Genesis—that has been known ever since he became the successor of Henry Ward Beecher. Not long ago he raised a laugh in his congregation over the idea of the truth of the Book of Jonah; and a little later he announced his disbelief in another portion of the sacred volume. Just what parts of the Bible—if any—he places out of the realm of fiction, it would be difficult to judge from his discourses. One thing he does believe in, however, and that is a strict Sunday law. In the February Christian Endeavorer, we find him saying:—

"I think that experience demonstrates that Sunday rest must be secured not merely by private agreements, but by legislative enactments vigorously enforced."

Some of the papers have been drawing comparisons between Dr. Abbott's words concerning the Book of Jonah and the words of Thomas Paine on the same subject, and discover such a similarity of language as to lead to the conclusion that it is a case of teacher and pupil. The only difference is that in Paine's day infidelity did not presume to speak from the "Christian" pulpit.

What has made the question of the Bible's infallibility especially prominent just now, however, is a discussion which took place at a meeting of about three hundred prominent Methodist ministers at the Methodist Book Concern, New York City, February 15. There the editor of the leading Methodist journal in America, Dr. Buckley, stated that he did not believe in the infallibility of the Bible in the English version. This announcement created considerable disorder, in the midst of which Dr. Buckley maintained his position and demanded that the question be put to vote. This was finally done, with the result that only one vote was obtained for the view that the Bible, in English, is infallible.

Of course, the practical effect of this attitude of this representative Methodist body will be to lessen confidence in the Bible, as read by the masses in English-speaking countries. And since the latter can read no other, they are from this latest Methodist standpoint left without any Bible at all; for a Bible that is fallible is not the Word upon which we can depend for salvation. Faith being the indispensable requisite to salvation, and demanding unquestioning belief of the Word of God, we must have that Word itself, or derive no benefit from the plan of salvation.

And the same is of course true of the German, French, or any other Bible, since all these are but translations of the original text, and therefore as fallible as the English Bible. The work of the British and Foreign Bible Society and similar bodies in giving the Bible to the nations and races of the world, must be discounted, since they have only furnished translations, which are therefore fallible. And even if we would go back to the original text for an infallible authority, we are met by the fact that there are nothing but copies of the original writings now in existence; and of course a copyist is just as fallible as a translator.

Hence the doctrine that the Bible, in the English or other tongues, is not infallible, is equivalent to a denial of the infallibility of any Bible known to the world to-day. The real nature of this objection may be understood from the fact that this is one of the leading points sought to be made against the Bible by the author of the "Age of Reason."

As the AMERICAN SENTINEL stands for liberty, for justice, for equal rights to all men, so it stands for the Christian's Bible, against the traditions, customs, and popery which have sought to take the place of the Word, and which have ever been a menace to the liberties and rights of the people. The less reverence men have for the Bible, the more reverence they have for tradition and the opinions of men in higher station than themselves; and the more this reverence finds expression, the nearer do men come to the full realization of popery.

We believe it would be well for the clergy to settle the question of their belief in the Bible's infallibility before proceeding further with the scheme to take control of the Government and make the "revealed will of Christ" the supreme authority in our civil affairs. Are they sure that we have the "revealed will of Christ" in the "fallible" English Bible? This is a question which ought, with them, to take precedence of all others.

RECENTLY the Pennsylvania State Capitol at Harrisburg was destroyed by fire; and now it is announced that the State legislature is to convene for its next session in an M. E. Church of the city. A Christian Statesman writer announces the fact with the air of one who regards a church building as the most appropriate place anyhow for the transaction of State business, and remarks that "the manner of granting the church and its immediate and cordial acceptance may well be regarded as significant of closer relations in our political life between Christians and the Government." He further observes that if the "powerful Christian influences about that temporary State Capitol," "should be mighty enough to give the legislative proceedings the atmosphere of a prayer-meeting," no one would be "so foolish as to think that any righteous interest of the Keystone commonwealth would suffer from it."

We would naturally have supposed some other place would be chosen for a session of the State legislature than the interior of a church. However, that may have been the best place available; and we should think the arrangement might be made to work, provided affairs of State are not allowed to get in the way of the Sunday school, prayer-meeting, religious sociable, society meetings, choir practice, or other matters of regular church work. However, we trust the transfer is not to be permanent. The basis of all proper State legislation is individual rights; and an understanding of these, with a mind to work for their preservation, as simple honesty and justice demand, are the essentials which should give character to the atmosphere in legislative halls:

An Illustration of Greek "Learning."

IN a recent number of the Christian Advocate, of this city, there was printed—and from a Doctor of Philosophy too—one of the most thoughtless articles we ever saw in a journal of any standing. We do not mention it here to criticise it, but to call the sober attention of thoughtful people, and of that kind of thoughtless people too, to an important consideration that is involved in it.

This Doctor of Philosophy was in Greece and sent to the Christian Advocate an account of his journey from Patras—which is the principal port of the Gulf of Corinth to Piræus, which is the port of Athens, with descriptions of the Acropolis of Corinth and the Acropolis of Athens.

In his description of the temples of the Acropolis of Athens he speaks of them repeatedly as "sacred"—"the sacred cella of her sacred house," etc. He does not say that by the Greeks and other heathen anciently they were considered sacred. Nowhere in the article does it appear that he used the word with any such idea as that it is merely in accommodation to ancient notions. Every sentiment in the article bears irresistably to the conviction that the writer himself considers those places sacred and uses the word in the same sense that the ancient Greeks did. In other words, the writer is evidently so imbued with Greek ideas, Greek conceptions, and Greek modes of thinking, that what to them was "sacred" is to him sacred.

But everybody knows that those Greeks were sheer heathen. And all who have read much know that they were heathen of such a sort that their very idea of sacredness was profanity, and their most sacred emblem an obscene symbol. That a man in this age, in the presence of Christian ideas and in a Christian journal should speak of the places that to those heathen were "sacred," and himself use the word in the same sense as did they, certainly shows a thoughtlessness that is remarkable.

But this is not all. Please read the following:—

"Thirdly comes the crown and pride of all temples made with hands, the Parthenon, the temple of the Athenian Virgin. To attempt any description of this superb shrine would be a work of supererogation alike distasteful to gods and men."

"Distasteful to gods." Is it true, then, that there are really such things as gods to whom things can be distasteful? Does this writer think that the Greek gods still have their habitat on the Acropolis of Athens and round about, so that if he should take the liberty of writing up their shrines for the consideration of the barbarian Americans, they would be displeased—does he? If not, what does he mean? And if he does, what does he mean?

Does he not know that such of the Greek gods as had any real identity, were devils? While Athens and Corinth were in their glory, and their gods were worshiped in all the corrupt and corrupting rites that became them, it was written to people who dwelt there: "The things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils." But they sacrificed unto their gods. Are these devils the gods for whom this writer has so much respect that he would not do so slight a thing as to write a detailed account of their "sacred" shrines lest he should do that which was "distasteful" to them?

If not this, then does he believe that the mythical things of the vain imagination of the Greeks, were really gods, and of such enduring substance that they still continue in the ancient haunts; so that if a person should not there walk softly and with reverent mien or should attempt to write about them and their "sacred" places, they would be offended—at least in taste? Does he not know that they were "nothing?"

If he believes neither of these things, then why does he write so? For, as before suggested, there is no hint that he writes otherwise than with sobriety and from conviction. And if he believes either of them, then his article betrays a remarkable thoughtlessness.

It is not to be supposed that he takes devils to be these gods, and would hesitate to do anything distasteful to them. It is possible, however that his mind may have become so thoroughly saturated with Greek ideas, his imagination so pervaded with Greek conceptions, and his admiration so engrossed with the "perfections" of Greek sentiment, that all these things appear to him just as they did to the Greeks themselves, that they are all as real to him and in the same way as they were to the Greeks themselves. And that this is indeed most probable, is strongly suggested in his statement that the Parthenon was "the crown and pride of all temples made with hands." But this again betrays sheer thoughtlessness or worse. Did he never read the description of the Temple of God at Jerusalem that was built by Solomon? It far surpassed the Parthenon.

Surely every person who will think at all on the subject can see at once that the Greek gods were in conception nothing but the reflection of the imagination of the Greeks themselves. And every person who has read knows that in disposition and character the Greek gods were perfectly devilish. And if then he will think for a moment he will see clearly that in disposition and character the Greek gods were but the reflection of the disposition and character of the Greeks themselves. He will see therefore that these gods were, so far as themselves were concerned, literally nothing; but were in fact only the Greeks themselves—and every one of them has been dead from a thousand to two or three thousand years.

Then as for the gods themselves, why should this writer think that he could do anything that would be distasteful to nothing? And as for the Greeks who were in fact their own gods, but who have been dead so long, why should he think he could do anything distasteful to them? And as the dispositions and characters of those Greeks when they were alive were so essentially devilish, why should he hesitate to do what might be distasteful to them even though they were all alive to-day. That the thing were distasteful or even offensive to them would be one of the best possible evidences of the essential virtue of it, and that it was the very thing to do.

An important question upon all this is, Where is the merit in Greek philosophy, religion, or art—for their art was but idolatry? What possible good can come to anybody from contemplating and absorbing such a mass of falsehood, corruption and vanity? The Latin field is the same. Yet these are the chief field, and the pride, of "learning," in almost all the colleges in the world. It is so, even in professed Christian colleges. But how is it possible for young men, or young women, or anybody in fact, to study such stuff as all that really is, without becoming essentially paganized? It is not possible.

But what was this paganism to Greece and Rome? What did it do for them? What did this philosophy, religion, and art, in its perfection, do for the Greeks and Romans? Was the result of all this with them, so altogether good and profitable, that it needs to be reproduced in the world? Every man who thinks, knows that the height of Greek and Roman development, when all this "shone" in its "brightest lustre," was the deepest state of moral degradation that had ever been seen in the world since the day that Sodom and Gomorrah perished. Does it need to be reproduced in the world? Every decent man is compelled to say, No. Then why should that which produced it before be reproduced and glorified in the world? Can you indulge the cause and escape the effect? It is time that the people began to think.

We have reached a time when individualism finds its sole refuge in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Tried for Selling Sunday Papers.

As announced in our last issue, an effort is being made to put a stop to the sale of Sunday newspapers by newsboys in the District of Columbia. This effort is made, of course, in the interests of Sunday observance; but it could not be based on a Sunday law, because no such law exists in the District. To have Congress enact such a law is one of the special aims of those calling for religious legislation at the present time.

The prosecution was therefore based on a regulation made by the District Commissioners to prohibit "any needless noise or outcry" within the District, on all days of the week alike. The section under which the prosecution was brought, decrees that,— "No person within the District of Columbia shall make any needless noise or outcry, or any noise or outcry for the purpose of advertising wares or for the purpose of attracting," etc.; "providing, however, that newsboys in the exercise of their calling may cry their newspapers between the hours of 6 A. M. and 8 P. M. on secular days of the week, and between the hours of 6 A. M. and 10:30 A. M. on Sunday."

On the 31st day of December, 1896, the last clause was struck out by the Commissioners, thus limiting the crying of papers by the newsboys to "secular days of the week."

The trial was held February 14 in the police court, Judge Kimball presiding. The defense was conducted by General Birney and Major Carrington.

The points raised by the defense were, that while Congress could properly delegate to the Commissioners power to legislate in purely municipal matters, such grant was a special one, and must be construed strictly; that the ordinance was arbitrary and unreasonable, and in excess of the power granted by Congress. General Birney declared that the regulation would prohibit the crying of babies, and any person who made a noise needlessly, would be punishable under it.

"Even Congress," he said, "could not pass a law of that kind so as to make it Constitutional, because, God gave us lungs and gave us the right to employ these lungs in any proper way so as not to disturb others. That is the limitation; a man's right extends only to the boundary of the rights of other people.

Major Carrington said that Congress never intended to confer power to prohibit noises other than such as were of the nature of a public nuisance; that no other government on earth possessed any such regulation as the one under consideration; that it was a restriction of liberty which even the Czar of Russia could not maintain; and further, that no one had a right to say upon what part of the day a person might engage in his business. "What," he inquired, "would a stranger here in this boasted land of liberty think of the fact that newsboys could not without the consent of the Commissioners sell papers between the hours of six and nine o'clock?"

Notwithstanding the arbitrary, tyrannical, and absurd character of the regulation, however, the District Attorney contended that it was neither unreasonable or absurd. The judge reserved his decision.

It is quite consistent that a regulation of this nature should be invoked in support of a cause which aims at compulsory Christianity.

It will be noticed that the regulation as left by the action of the Commissioners in December last, provides that newsboys may cry their papers "on secular days of the week." This of course involves the question of what days of the week are secular. And as the distinction indicated by the word is one based on religion, the court in deciding a case under the regulation must decide a religious question; and this no earthly court can do. The only authority upon such a question is the Word of God; and it is no part of the business of the courts to construe that Word.

And that Word, it may be mentioned, says nothing about any sacred or non-secular character belonging to Sunday. "The seventh day," it tells us, "is the Sabbath." And since this is true, the first day of the week cannot be any other than a secular day.

The Mole Hill and the Mountain.

In the New York Christian Advocate of February 11, we note the following:—

"It has been reserved for the State of Nevada to descend to a lower step of legislative degradation than has been sounded by any State in the Republic for many a year. For a long time the instigators of the brutal prize fight have been driven from State to State with their debasing exhibitions by legislative enactment. Even in Texas, which many ill-informed persons seem to think is the synonym of things uncivilized, a special session of the legislature was held, when an invasion of the State was threatened, to pass a law forbidding the bullies of the prize ring from disgracing the name of that State with their performances.

But Nevada is now to become the nursing-mother of prize fighters. Nevada, with a diminishing population—a State whose transformation into a Territory would not be regarded as lamentable by the country at large—has passed a law licensing prize fights at the rate of $1,000 apiece. The honor of the nation is besmirched when a State passes such a pernicious piece of legislation, over which good men hang their heads in shame and the members of the short-haired gentry rejoice.

"The governor of a Western State, when invited to give expression to the extraordinary and unfortunate conduct of the Nevada governor and legislators; uttered his sentiments in these vigorous words:—

"I do not hesitate to go on record as saying that I regard the act of legalizing prize fighting in Nevada as being not only unpardonably pernicious, but utterly iniquitous and monstrous. Under the most favorable circumstances, the prize ring has always been the resort of law-breakers and ruffians, as a rule, and the startling intelligence that one of the States, dignified by a place in the Union, has deliberately entered into copartnership with professional promoters of public exhibitions of un-speaking brutality, and prostituted its power in aid of undisguised lawlessness, presents a phase of degradation that must necessarily be regarded as a crime against society, and such a distinct reproach to our boasted civilization that the effect cannot be otherwise than to condemn us as a people by thus offending the moral sentiment and provoking the righteous criticism of the enlightened nations of the globe."

We notice this only because of some queries which naturally connect themselves with it, which call for explanation; and the more so because the above quotation seems to express the ideas of a large number of more or less eminent authorities upon the subject.

Do these would-be teachers of morality and molders of public opinion really think that it is worse to license a prize fight than to license a saloon? We know what the fruits of the saloon are, and if there can be any more baneful, we would like to be told what they are. Yet almost every State in the Union licenses thousands of grog shops, to say nothing of gambling hells, and other places of vice and debauchery. Is there any disgrace in this?

Do these things constitute any reproach to our "boasted civilization"?

It would seem not, in the view of those who have been so shocked at the action of the governor and legislature of Nevada. If otherwise, why are such things not "driven from State to State, with their debasing exhibitions, by legislative enactment"?

Some States have enforced Sunday laws upon honest, conscientious observers of the seventh-day Sabbath, punishing them by fine and imprisonment, and even working them in the chain-gang. Yet we never heard from any of the leading religious journals that there was any disgrace in this to State or Nation.

Several hundred thousand men—husbands and fathers—go down every year into drunkards' graves, several hundred thousand homes are blasted, several hundred thousand children made paupers, through the grog shops licensed in every part of the land. Yet the "honor of the nation" was all unsullied, until at last it was "besmirched" by a bill to legalize prize fights!

More than this; the State of New York itself has for some time licensed "glove contests," and contests of this kind are conducted in the heart of New York City, between which and the contests licensed in Nevada there is not, as to character, the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum. Yet it is only the State of Nevada which has been thereby brought into disgrace!

This, and much more that might be said, prompts the query before mentioned,—Do these persons who are declaiming so loudly against the State of Nevada really believe what is plainly inferred from their words? If they do, then as moral teachers they are about as reliable as were the Pharisees denounced by the Saviour, who strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel.

If, on the other hand, they do not believe what in effect they say, they are guilty of disgraceful hypocrisy.

In either case, we can but wonder what kind of a standard of morality these persons must possess, by which to justify such teaching. And what will become of sound public sentiment under the molding influence of such teachers? Can it be expected that it will be anything else than pharisaical?

The disposition to gloss over great iniquities, while laying great stress upon the wickedness of comparatively small offenses, is one of the most baleful signs of the times. When this was done by the Pharisees of old, the nation of Israel was nigh to its end.

The great need of the hour is for men of principle,—men who will denounce evil not because it may be fashionable to do so, but simply because it is evil, and who will condemn it in proportion to its magnitude, no matter how firmly it may have become entrenched in law and custom; men who are not seeking for some cheap expedient by which to acquire a reputation for morality; men who know the difference between true morality and "respectability;" men to whom character is of more value than reputation. In short, the great need of the hour is for more Christians.

Repudiating the Ballot.

THE following from a letter by General Master Workman Sovereign, of the Knights of Labor, was printed in the New York Herald, of February 15. It indicates in a startling manner how far the country has already lapsed from the standard of Republican government, and the proximity of national perils which have been wont to attend monarchy and imperialism:—

"Private Dalzell, in a Washington newspaper, seems to overlook the fact that in the recent election one million voters in this country lost faith in the ballot, and that the Iron Brotherhood and the Industrial Army, both secret revolutionary societies, are now being organized in every part of the country.

"What we need is an agitation at home that will force the people to a test against our own social and economic disorders. Scarcely a day passes that I do not read one or more appeals to join one or the other of the revolutionary orders now being formed in this country, and offers of money and arms are frequently received if I will give my efforts to the cause of revolution.

"Thus far I have persistently declined to give aid or encouragement to such movement. But if, through the writings of such men as Private Dalzell, revolutions come in spite of all efforts to prevent it, I will not be found among the cowards, nor on the side of the plutocratic classes.

"One word in favor of war with a foreign country will multiply tenfold into a desire for revolution at home. The general unrest of the people is not caused by a hatred of foreign nations, but because of robbery imposed on them by class legislation of our own Government, and if incited to war as a relief, they will direct their attack against the source of their oppression, and not against a foreign nation that did not possess the administrative power to impose the conditions from which they suffer.

"These facts should be considered by Private Dalzell before invoking heaven to hasten war with another country. I still have hopes of a peaceful solution of our difficulties, and will work to that end; but if, as Private Dalzell says, the only remedy is in war, I prefer to have the war at home.

"What moral right have we to impose war, with all its cruelties and destruction and desolation, on a foreign country as a means of relieving our own distress and the result of our errors? Furthermore, to provoke a foreign country to war would not prove a permanent remedy for domestic wrongs. It would inflate the volume of government securities and impose increased burdens on the debtor classes. It might also result in adding our country to the conquests of some monarchical or despotic power, and make us slaves to tyranny and oppression. Insurrections start with a spark and are quenched with a deluge.

"One reason in favor of insurrection to idle, starving and overburdened people is more potent in exciting war than a thousand reasons against insurrections in preserving the peace. Dalzell may not know what the secret revolutionary societies are doing. For his benefit I will quote the following from the prelude of a secret circular now being distributed by one of the revolutionary societies just mentioned:—

"COMRADES: There comes a time in the affairs of men and nations when desperation compels the human mind to pause and bring to its aid that element of reason so long discarded. We have reached such a crisis in the destinies of this American Republic.

"One hundred years of national existence has demonstrated that the political fabric of our Government contains within its warp and woof the elements of its own destruction, with the fact that the ballot has proven a most lamentable failure as a safeguard of free institutions.

"In the closing of the nineteenth century we see a class despotism establishing itself upon the ruins of the Republic. An oligarchy is now in power, and already the hideous phantom of imperialism overshadows us, as embodied in the autocratic claims of the Federal Court and the acts of unbridled military despotism characteristic of the Federal Government of to-day.

"What is to be done? We have appealed in vain to the ballot. Every trial of strength in the political arena has resulted in victory for the unscrupulous money power.

"There is nothing surprising in this. The ballot is a weapon best wielded by the hand of cunning and craft. History records no nation that freed itself by voting. No: let us be frank. The hour has come for men to lay aside the mask and look each other in the face.

"Fellow reformer, would you be free? Would you see the regime of corporate power and class despotism at an end? Would you see the shackles stricken forever from the limbs of humanity and behold emancipation, the rebirth of the nation which Jefferson revered, that Paine wrote and wrought to establish? Do you believe that this can come through the ballot? No, you do not.

"Have not the Reformers spent their lives, their fortunes and their energies in the cause of political reform through the ballot box, and what has been the result?

Have they not seen the cunning and unscrupulous always victorious, emerging from every campaign master of the spoils? Have you any hopes that this will be changed in the future? The past is one long protest against the ballot as an instrument of reformation.' "

The Sunday Law in Texas.

BY A. W. JENSON.

JANUARY 12, 1897, the first session of the twenty-fifth legislature of Texas, convened at Austin, and on the 15th, House Bill No. 11, for the promotion of Sunday sacredness, appeared, which reads as follows:—

"Any person who shall hereafter labor or compel, force or oblige his employes, workmen or apprentices, to labor on Sunday, or any person who shall hereafter play base ball, foot ball, or any other game of like kind on Sunday; or any person who shall hereafter hunt game, of any kind whatsoever on Sunday, within one mile of any church, school-house, or private residence, shall be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars."

This bill was read the first time and referred to Judiciary Committee No. 2, and on the 18th of January, it was by the committee reported back to the House with recommendation to pass with the following amendments:—

Section (1) to be amended by inserting after "whatsoever," the words, "with firearms and dogs, or either," and by striking out the words "within one mile of any church, school, or private residence;" thus making it a misdemeanor to work, hunt, or play ball of any kind anywhere in Texas on Sundays.

On the 21st of January the Judiciary Committee reported it correctly engrossed, and on January 23, it was read the third time and passed. January 26, Mr. Ward called up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. The motion to reconsider prevailed, and the bill was again laid before the House on its final passage.

Mr. Ward then offered an amendment to the bill, covering that part of it which related to the hunting of game, as follows:—

"Or any person who shall hereafter hunt game of any kind whatsoever on Sunday within one half mile of any church, school-house, or private residence; or any person or persons who shall hereafter play baseball, football, or any game of like kind on Sunday, within one half mile of any church, or any other place of public worship, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than $30 nor more than $200."

Mr. Love offered to amend the amendment by striking out the words "one half mile" and inserting the words "one mile." This was tabled by motion of Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward's amendment was put and lost.

On the question of final passage the bill was lost by 55 yeas to 57 nays.

The following words spoken on the occasion by Representative J. F. Wolters, show that there is yet left in Texas some patriotism and regard for personal liberty:—

"I vote 'No' on House Bill No. 11, in its original form, as well as in its amended form. In my opinion the churches in Texas are amply protected by the laws now upon our statute books. I believe that private residences and the inhabitants thereof are amply protected. I consider this bill an infringement upon the rights of the citizens of Texas to enjoy the freedom of thought and action guaranteed them by the Constitution, to the perpetuation of which the Democratic party is pledged by the most sacred ties of tradition and by clearly enunciated declarations in the Democratic platform upon which the great majority of the members of this House, including myself, were elected.

"Believing in the undying principles of democracy which has for its keystone the great principle that in a free government every citizen should be permitted to think and to act as he may please, so long as he does not infringe the rights of any other citizen, I vote 'No.' "

In times like this when there is such a cry and demand for legislation on religious subjects, it is refreshing indeed to hear utterances like the above, so publicly and boldly set forth; and although we know from the sure Word of prophecy that it cannot be long before such voices will be heard no more, or at least when heard cried down, we thank God and take courage to step into the openings as they present themselves, ever remembering that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Austin, Texas, Feb. 14, 1897.

Sunday in the Montana Legislature.

"Montana Bivouac," February 1.

ALREADY two Sunday bills have been introduced in the Montana Legislature. One is for closing the saloons on Sunday, and the other, if passed, will be a general Sunday law, reading as follows:—

"An Act to prevent the transaction and performance of business or work, except business or works of necessity, charity or mercy, on Sunday, and to amend certain laws in relation thereto.

"SECTION 1. That Section 531 of the Penal Code of Montana be and the same is amended to read as follows:—

"SECTION 531. Every person who transacts, conducts or performs any business, work or labor, except works of necessity, charity or mercy, on Sunday, or the first day of the week, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"Provided, This Act does not apply to any person who habitually observes and keeps some other day of the week as the Sabbath, and abstains from his usual avocation on such day.

"SECTION 2. Section 532 of the Penal Code of Montana, being a section of said act, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:—

"SECTION 532. Every person who violates any provisions of this Act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined for the first offense any sum not less than $10, and not more than $50, and shall be fined for any subsequent violation any sum not less than $25, and not more than $1,000."

How is this for a Rocky Mountain State whose very air ought to inspire freedom in every individual?

Priestism in Power.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

It is said that the witch doctors, or Fetish priests, rule over the King of Benin, and that their influence is responsible for most of the human sacrificing and slaughtering in that country. Go where one will in the world, or look through secular history, and it will be found that wherever a priestly caste has most influence in government there has been the greatest wickedness. Many think that this is solely because it is bad religion that gets into power, and that if only good religion could be lifted to authority in the councils of State it would be a desirable thing. But good religion asks for no authority or power from man; it rests upon the power of God and preaches a gospel of divine power. Whenever religion forsakes this in order to secure power in the State it becomes bad religion, and its whole influence is evil, whether amongst whites or blacks, civilized or uncivilized.

THE New York Christian Advocate, the leading Methodist organ in this country, recently expressed itself on the subject of governmental chaplains, by saying that in many cases they are "undesirable ministers unloaded upon the Army and Navy by the different denominations;" that they are characterized by "indifference and intemperance," and that they "make the position a sinecure, finding their pleasure in ease, travel, and society." We are not disposed to question these statements. All the evidence we have met with on the subject confirms their truthfulness. Nor is anything else to be expected from an attempt to combine a civil with an ecclesiastical office. The wonder is that the Government should in the face of such facts, still retain this Church-and-State feature. But instead of abolishing the office, Congress is now asked to remedy the difficulty by providing that applicants for it shall undergo a rigid examination. This, too, notwithstanding that clause of the Constitution which excludes any religious test in determining the fitness of applicants for governmental positions.

AN exchange says that "The ministers of Salt Lake City, Utah, have passed resolutions recommending capital punishment, based on these grounds, to wit: 'That the Bible favors the infliction of the death penalty for the crime of murder; that the Lord has never ordered it repealed; that it has never been repealed, and is, consequently, still in force; that such being the undisputed facts in the case, it follows that it is right; and therefore the Utah legislature should so recognize it and make laws in conformity."

This is the doctrine that the United States Government is asked to accept in the proposed "Christian Amendment" to the Constitution. By that amendment, the Government would be bound to enforce by civil penalties all that is commanded in the Word of God and not repealed. And as the Bible leaves no side of human life and duty untouched, but covers all by its precepts, the Government, having passed the amendment, would merely have to consider theological questions as to what the Bible enjoins. And of course it would devolve on the theologians to say what a command of Scripture means, and whether it has been repealed, or is still in force. This would make of Congress an assembly of contending theologians? It is our impression that there is enough of such controversy in the country as it is.

Proposed Sunday Law for California.

THE following Sunday bill was introduced in the California Legislature by Mr. Emmons, of the Assembly, February 2:—

"AN ACT

"TO AMEND THE PENAL CODE OF THIS STATE BY ADDING THREE SECTIONS THERETO, TO BE KNOWN AS SECTIONS 299, 300, AND 301, RELATING TO SUNDAY, AND THE OPENING OF CERTAIN PLACES OF BUSINESS ON THAT DAY.

"The People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:—

"SECTION 1. Three new sections are hereby added to the Penal Code of this State, to be known respectively, as sections two hundred and ninety-nine, three hundred, and three hundred and one, and to read as follows, to wit:—

"Section 299. Every person who, on the Christian Sabbath gets up, exhibits, opens, or maintains, or aids in getting up, exhibiting, opening, or maintaining, any bull, bear, cock, or prize fight, horse race, circus, gambling-house, or saloon, or any barbarous and noisy amusement.

"Section 300. Every person who keeps open on Sunday any store, workshop, bar, saloon, banking house, or other place of business, for the purpose of transacting business therein, is punishable by fine not less than five nor more than fifty dollars.

"Section 301. The provisions of the preceding section do not apply to persons who, on Sunday, keep open hotels, boarding-houses, barber shops, baths, markets, restaurants, taverns, livery stables, or retail drug stores, for the legitimate business of each, or such manufacturing establishments as are usually kept in continued operation; provided, that the provisions of the preceding section shall apply to persons keeping open barber shops, bath-houses, and hair-dressing saloons after twelve o'clock meridian, on Sunday."

A correspondent writes us from Sacramento that this bill was placed in the hands of the Committee on Judiciary, instead of the Committee on Morals, because the clergy who are back of it discovered that the latter Committee were not favorable to Sunday legislation.

Over-Conscientious.

BY W. E. CORNELL.

It is a remarkable coincidence that during the last year or so particularly, there has sprung up, not only in our own country, but in other lands as well, and even in the islands of the sea, a wonderful zeal on the part of Sunday observers for the preservation of the day from the inroads of "Continentalism."

It is really pitiful how frantic some of the appeals are, and what momentous consequences hinge on the success of their efforts in this direction. It is such a wicked thing for the laboring men of our large cities to take their families on the only day they are free, to the parks, the lakes, or any other place where a breath of fresh air can be secured, that these Sunday guardians would stop every railroad train, every street car, or other means of conveyance to these resorts. It reminds one of the time during the Dark Ages when men who showed signs of apostacy from the church were sacrificed in order to save their souls. However, these very zealous people have no compunctions of conscience in demanding of their kitchen girl that she do double duty on that day in preparing an extra fine "Sunday dinner," because they are to entertain the reverend so and so. They are too pious to read a Sunday newspaper, and would suppress every one of them, yet if they be ministers, they are only too glad to use its columns in which to make their announcements; and it is a notorious fact that the advertising columns of the Sunday issue of our dailies are more largely patronized by the church-going business men than any other issue of the week.

There is so much hypocritical pious cant, such glaring inconsistencies and straining at gnats and swallowing camels in much of this effort, that it is not to be wondered at that it is receiving some merited satirical rebukes. A late issue of Judge puts it this way:—

"I hear that the Rev. Brother Thirdly has refused an increase of salary," said Mr. Gummy to Mr. Glanders.

"Yes, that is true."

"Rather remarkable thing, wasn't it? I never heard of a clergyman doing such a thing before."

"Yes, his refusal was a strange thing in itself, but the reason he gave for his refusal was even more remarkable."

"What reason did he offer?"

"He said that his present income was quite sufficient for his wants, and that if he had an increase of salary he would have more than he could use conveniently. That would oblige him to put some of his money in the bank, where interest would be earned incessantly on his deposits, and he really couldn't think of letting his money earn interest on Sunday."

We admire honesty of purpose in a man, even though his efforts be directed in behalf of a bad cause; but when he sets himself up to pluck out the motes that he imagines are in his brother's eye, while at the same time he is blinded by the beams that darken his own vision, he need not feel grieved if there are occasionally administered to him some pretty sound rebukes.

Des Moines, Iowa.

That "Divine Law."

W. N. Glenn, in "Signs of the Times."

FROM the Congressional Record, of December 14, we cull the following excerpt from the proceedings in the Senate:—

"MR. GALLINGER.—I present a series of resolutions adopted at a union Thanksgiving service in the town of Hudson, N. H., in reference to the Armenian question. The closing resolution I desire to put on record:—

"That international and divine law would justify the Great powers of Christendom in putting an end immediately to these atrocities, even though it should necessitate the dismemberment and destruction of the Turkish Empire."

"The resolutions are signed by G. W. Buzzell, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church; C. D. Swett, pastor of the Baptist Church, and F. P. Chapin, pastor of the Congregational Church."

The question arises, By what divine law are "the great powers of Christendom" justified in destroying the Turkish Empire? The assumption of such a resolution is that "the great powers of Christendom" are Christian; from that standpoint, we ask the question, By what divine law are Christians justified in destroying empires? Christ said of himself, "The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them," and he has given neither precept nor example for saving men by means of the sword.

It is a prerogative of the Lord to remove kings and to set up kings (Dan. 2:21; 4:17), and he has given no law authorizing Christians to assume any such responsibility. In His providence he has used armies to overthrow nations, and He has commissioned one nation to chastise or to overthrow another nation. But these are not authorized by any general divine law (or international law, either) to do so at their will. When the Lord wants such a work done, he overrules circumstances in a special way to bring about his purpose.

The Lord does not send Christians to bear the sword against their enemies; no retaliation against persecution is of Christ. "I say unto you, That ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Matt. 5:49. As Christians, we are as sheep among wolves, and "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal." The only offensive weapon in the Christian's armor is the "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

That the Turkish Empire is to come to its end, and that in a short time, there can be no doubt. We believe that such a result is foreshadowed in the Word of God. That the Lord will use the power of other nations to bring about this result, there is no doubt. But when he does use the physical forces of the so-called "Christian nations" to put down a kingdom, it will have been demonstrated that they are not Christian. The very fact of their using weapons not prescribed in the armor of Christ is evidence that they do not belong to the spiritual army of Christ.

When Peter drew his sword to defend the Master's cause in the Garden of Gethsemane, the Lord said to him, "Put up thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Matt. 26:52. And in all the rules and regulations of the Christian army that order has not yet been countermanded. Those professed Christians who are continually calling for the use of the sword, or the civil law, which is the same thing (for the civil law is nothing if not backed by physical force), should ponder the circumstance recorded in Luke 9:51-56. Here it is related that Christ sent two of his disciples before him to a village to secure lodgings. But the people would not receive him. The disciples were very indignant, and proposed to call down fire from heaven upon the place. "But he turned and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of."

Not the Spirit of Christ.

"Pitkin (Pa.) Miner," January 29.

TRUE Christians should try to exemplify the character of our Saviour. But how about the great denominations of professed Christians of to-day? Do they possess the noble attributes so profusely displayed by Jesus when he was upon earth?

Did our Saviour curry favor with the "powers that be" in order to advance his teachings, or did he appeal to the God-loving and God-fearing element within man, and plead earnestly with him to accept the gift of "eternal life?" Coercion and the struggle for civil power, now going on, to compel people to worship God according to man-made laws, were never taught by Christ.

The Saviour was crucified and nailed to the cross by so-called religious people. . . . This same affection governs the powerful church denominations of to-day. The zeal shown in the endeavor to get civil authority in their hands is every day apparent. All true Christians should be characterized by liberality and charity.

Let every one worship God in the manner dictated by their own conscience. The world will be better off by so doing.

THE doubtful utility of teaching religion in the public schools, as demanded by many people, is illustrated by the following quotation from a recent discourse in the chapel of Leland Stanford University, by a professor of the University of California:—

"The idea of salvation, for instance, which belongs to theology and not religion, and on which rests the whole scheme of Christ's position in the Church, is fast losing ground. The need of salvation is not a natural feeling, else there would be no need of revivals to create it. The belief rests entirely on authority and will be gradually cast aside, for beliefs founded on authority alone cannot live."

Also this, spoken on the same occasion:—

"The character of Jesus has suffered in this way. He has been attacked by skeptics as he never could have been had not too zealous believers lifted him out of the pale of humanity into Deity. Nobody would think of picking to pieces his beautiful sermons and the account of his life, had not the claim of absolute perfection been set up for him—a claim he never advanced for himself."

If religion is to be taught in the schools by college professors, it is pretty certain that it will be mainly the teaching of the "higher criticism."

"Christian Endeavor" in Toronto.

A TORONTO journal makes the following notes of a recent Christian Endeavor convention in that city:—

"At the first meeting of the Toronto Union, held after the regular annual meeting for the election of officers for the present year, a large portion of the time was devoted to devising ways and means for suppressing 'Sabbath desecration,' as they were pleased to call honest civil employment on the first day of the week.

"Attention was directed particularly to good citizenship work by communication from the Westminster Presbyterian and Cooke's societies. The communication of the former society spoke of the desecration of the sabbath last summer in the public parks, and was referred to the Good Citizenship Committee, while the latter communication alluded to the agitation raised by the city milkmen to have the Sunday milk delivered on Saturday. The Union heartily sympathized with the Dairymen's Association in their efforts to suppress Sunday labor, and passed a resolution to that effect.

"The Good Citizenship Committee was given full power to act as it deemed best in the distribution of literature and the providing of scrutineers in the elections that are expected to take place at an early date on the question of Sunday cars and prohibition.

"It was agreed that the banner which the Union intended presenting to the suggested Lord's Day Alliance canvass be reserved to be given as a reward for the best service by any society in the coming Sunday street-car contest, provided the societies which had entered the competition previously announced consented to this arrangement.

"The Union placed on record its approval of the aims and objects of the Lord's Day Alliance, and left each society to determine—with the approval of its own church authorities—how it could best assist the Alliance in forwarding its work."

We are as strongly opposed to the desecration of the Sabbath as anyone can be, but we are more strongly opposed to the methods adopted by the Christian Endeavor Union for its suppression, even supposing the first day of the week to be the Sabbath. We had supposed that the work of suppressing sin was one which was accomplished by the preaching of the gospel to the sinner, not by setting ourselves as spies to watch him; and when detected in sin, to set the police after him, instead of praying with him.

ANOTHER great massacre is reported from the island of Crete, which has become the storm centre of European politics. This time, however, it is the Mohammedans who have been massacred by the "Christians." Two thousand of the former are reported slain—men, women, and children—constituting almost the entire population of the town of Litia. We have not noticed any expressions of horror from Christendom over this occurrence.

The term "Christian" is here applied to the perpetrators of this massacre with the same propriety as when it is used in designating the United States or any of the great powers as a "Christian nation." If the manner and spirit exemplified in the slaughter at Litia were Christian, then the use of that term as here mentioned is appropriate. But where was any such spirit ever exhibited by Christ?

Christians do not constitute a military power in this world, nor fight with carnal weapons.

REPRESENTATIVE ENGLE, of the Colorado House, recently gave a somewhat startling variation to the usual course of Sunday legislation by introducing a bill to make Sunday in that State, from a legal point of view, "a day for the rest, recreation, or amusement of the people, as they may see fit," and providing for the fining and imprisonment of "any person or persons interfering with the privileges and rights of the people as conferred by this act." The bill was defeated by only three votes. The attempt called out an attack from the Ministerial Alliance of Denver, who denounced the bill in strong terms. Evidently they have no desire for a taste of their own medicine.

By statute and by the arbitrary will of judges in "common law" decisions, the State of New York requires everybody to be idle at least one whole day each week.

If any should be so altogether obstreperous as quietly to engage in perfectly honest labor—in other words, if he should fail to be idle on Sunday—then, if he should refuse to pay a fine, he would be imprisoned, and so compelled to be idle all the time.

Surely it must be that the people of the State of New York think that idleness is the chief end of man.

THE Catholic Standard and Times reports a professed Protestant doctor of divinity who explains "the growing tendency among Protestants to take up doctrines of the Catholic Church" "as being due to the reaction, or swinging back of the pendulum, from the radical departure taken at the time of the so-called Reformation—which, like all reforms, went too far.” Yes, and when these compromisers shall have succeeded in thus reforming the Reformation, there will be upon the world again the pall of the Dark Ages.

TORONTO, Ont., is the banner city of America in point of legal Sunday observance; but it has a “Lord’s Day Alliance,” which is not by any means behind like organizations elsewhere in active work. This Alliance is now besieging the Provincial government for a compulsory half-holiday each week in all the shops. Besides this, they also ask that all shops except drug stores be closed on Saturday evenings at nine o’clock. The government has promised to take the matter into consideration.

These “Lord’s Day” Alliances do no mean to go out of business with the concession of their first demands.

THE Union Signal says that “Whoever helps to add a wholesome holiday, that is, a holy-day, to the people’s calendar of saints, has set in motion a mighty influence.”

Yes, he has—a mighty influence for evil. To say nothing of the evils of saint worship, this very thing of making holidays to be holy-days, which now seems to be almost an established thing, has set in motion an influence mighty enough for evil to sink this whole nation.

ISAAC NUSBAUM, a storekeeper, of Bradford, Pa., was arrested February 9, for having sold goods on Sunday in violation of the law. He was held in $100 bail for trial, which was set for the 19th. It appears that the arrest was due to a determination on the part of Nusbbaum to disregard a compact of the clerks of the city for the early closing of stores. It is frequently the case that the Sunday law is used to force compliance in some direction not contemplated at all by its requirements.

THE Sunday-law forces have evidently determined upon a general advance in the western States. Sunday bills are making their appearance in the legislatures all over that section. Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Colorado, Texas, Montana, Arizona, California,—in all these the Sunday-law mania has appeared in the law-making assembly, and doubtless other States might properly be included in the list. We trust our readers appreciate the significance of this demonstration.

ONE great difficulty in the way of reform legislation, writes an advocate of the “Christian Amendment to the Constitution,” is that legislators do not know what “the people” want. So he urges those in favor of such an amendment to write to their representatives in Congress, urging its adoption. Then Congress will know what “the people” think about it! In no direction are the religious amendmentists working harder than in that of trying to impress Congress with the idea that they are the people of the United States.

THE Walla Walla College, Washington, conducts a Correspondence School in addition to the regular work of the College. We are acquainted with the Faculty and its work, and can heartily recommend it to all who would like to have the advantage of systematic instruction at home. A new term is to begin March 1, 1897. For further information, address Prof. E. A. Sutherland, College Place, Washington.

REPORTS from Bahia, Brazil, state that a band of about 3,000 religious fanatics, armed with Winchester rifles, are intrenched in the mountains of that State, and that their leader has proclaimed a “holy war” for the re-establishment of religion and the monarchy. The government has undertaken to suppress them, and several battles have been fought, with great loss of life.

A BILL now pending in Congress bears the title, “To prevent the multiplication of suicides.” It is worthy of notice as illustrating the tendency among would-be reformers to believe that legislation is capable of providing a panacea for every ill. The prevalence of suicide will no doubt be proportionate with the increase of poverty, drunkenness, and vice.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most, if not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 25 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

"LAW OF GOD AS CHANGED BY THE PAPACY."

This chart has been thoroughly revised, and contains some of the more recent utterances of this great apostate power.

The plan of the chart is the same as the old one. On either side are telling quotations from Catholic authorities admitting and boasting of the change, while the "Commandments as Changed by the Papacy" occupy a central position.

It is a forcible presentation of the subject, and will be a valuable help to Bible workers and ministers. Size 36x48 inches. Price $1.00. Printed on thin paper for inclosure in letters and miscellaneous distribution, 50 cents per 100.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD.

Wilt thou rally thy legions to battle,
And march on the City of Light,
Whence angels excelling in power
Were hurried to the regions of night?

Wilt thou compass the city eternal,
Its towers and battlements raze,
And train thy batteries brazen
On the throne of the Ancient of Days?

CAN NATIONS CONTEND WITH GOD?

"At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation."⁶

For a nation to compel a subject to disobey the laws of a foreign nation, when it knows it is powerless to protect him in so doing, is but to murder its citizen in cold blood, and merit international contempt.

Will the government attempt to protect its citizens against the wrath of an offended God? Will it declare war on the King of kings? Can it marshal its hosts and hurl its serried columns against the Eternal City?

"WE OUGHT TO OBEY GOD RATHER THAN MEN."⁷

"WHEN they went from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another people; he suffered no man to do them wrong: . . . saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm."⁷

If God had intended that his children should submit to governments in matters of conscience, he would not have protected Daniel in the lions' den, the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace, nor have delivered Peter and John, Paul and Silas, from their prison cells, where they were placed for disobeying human enactments.

GOD AND THE POWERS THAT BE.

"RENDER therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's."⁸

God has ordained that governments should exist among men. To these governments he has commanded his people to render tribute, honor, and respect. He has commanded them to be obedient to every ordinance of man, not for fear of punishment, but for the Lord's sake. So long as a government enforces ordinances of men,—such laws only as are necessary for the protection of men in the enjoyment of their equal, natural rights,—they will not come in conflict with the Christian.

"SELF-PRESERVATION is the first law of nature."

But self-sacrifice is the first law of grace.

In order to self-preservation, self-defense is essential.

In order to self-sacrifice, self-surrender is essential.

In self-defense, the only thing that can be employed is force.

In self-surrender, the only thing that can be employed is love.

In self-preservation, by self-defense, through the employment of force, force meets force, and this means only war.

In self-sacrifice, by self-surrender, through love, force is met by love, and this means only peace.

Self-preservation, then, means only war; while self-sacrifice means only peace.

But war means only death: Self-preservation, then, meaning only war, means only death. While self-sacrifice, meaning only peace, means only life.

Self-preservation being the first law of nature, nature then means only death. While self-sacrifice being the first law of grace, grace means only life.

But death is only the wages of sin: nature, then, meaning only death, it is so only because nature means sin. While life being only the reward of righteousness: grace meaning only life, it is so only because grace means righteousness.

Sin and righteousness, nature and grace, are directly opposite and antagonistic elements. They occupy realms absolutely distinct. Nature, self-preservation, self-defense, force, war, and death, occupy only the realm of sin. Grace, self-sacrifice, self-surrender, love, peace, and life, occupy only the realm of righteousness.

The realm of sin is the realm of Satan. The realm of grace is the realm of God. All the power of the domain of grace is devoted to saving men from the dominion of sin. This in order, that "as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign, through righteousness, unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord."

On which side do you stand in this great controversy?

Is It a Christian Mission?

THE Christian Observer observes that "the work of the Rev. Gilbert Reid, in China, is distinctly to the higher classes. In that country Mr. Reid believes that the educated and official classes must be reached before much can be accomplished for those beneath them."

This work of Mr. Reid is professedly Christian work. It is a mission distinctly to the higher classes. It is proposed to bring these higher classes to Christianity; then by these bright examples of Christian grace and virtue accomplish much for "those beneath them."

But we wonder what means is to be employed by Mr. Reid to do this. As his mission is professedly Christian, the Bible is the only thing that can rightly be used for the work to be done. But for the mission and the method of work here proposed he has no Bible; for the Bible is directly against it.

The root idea of this mission is distinction of classes—respect of persons: while the Bible holds to the eternal truth, that "There is no respect of persons with God." How then can he use the Bible in the work of a mission whose root idea is against Bible principle?

As this is professedly a Christian mission, it is fairly to be presumed that the faith of Christ is to be the all-important theme; but the faith of Christ plainly forbids that which is the fundamental proposition of the scheme. It is written, "My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. . . . For if ye have respect of persons ye commit sin; and are convinced of the law as transgressors. How then can men be brought to Christ, by methods whose fundamental principle is contrary to the expressed word and faith of Christ? And if they are not brought to Christ, then what will the mission accomplish?

But this is not all: As Mr. Reid's is professedly a Christian mission, it is to be supposed that he will follow the method, and present the word, of Christ. There came to Jesus once, one of "the higher classes"—one of "the educated and official class"—a ruler of the Jews, a member of the Sanhedrim. The first words that Jesus said to him were these: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

This high-class man didn't understand that, and asked, "How can a man be born when he is old?" "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

If Mr. Reid does not preach this to the higher classes to whom he has gone, then he will not preach to them Christianity at all. And as certainly as he does preach it, and as certainly as any of them accept it and are born again, so certainly they will no longer be of "the higher classes." On their own part they will not count themselves of "the higher classes," but of the lowest, the chiefs of sinners; and on the part of "the higher classes" those who are born again will no longer be recognized or counted as belonging in their "class" at all.

Yet more than this: Even though Mr. Reid's scheme should succeed exactly according to his plan as described, no man would be justified in concluding that it was the work of Christianity throughout. Even though he should succeed in getting "the higher classes" to accept his religion and still remain "the higher classes," so that "those beneath them" could be attracted by their example, the mission would yet lack the essential element of Christianity.

Everybody knows the readiness of the lower classes to court the attention and favor of the higher classes by imitating their ways, whether it be in the cut of their hair, the cut of their beard, the cut of their coats, or the cut of their religion. Whatever becomes fashionable among the higher classes will be readily copied by those beneath them. And only let Mr. Reid's religion become fashionable among the higher classes of China or anywhere else, and just then he will find "much accomplished for those beneath them" in the way of their imitating the ways of the new fashion in religion.

But it would not by any means be Christianity. Whole nations have been thus "Christianized;" but they were further from Christianity when it was done, than when they made no pretensions to being anything but heathen. At first they were only heathen. But after being so "Christianized," they were heathen and hypocrites besides. When they were only heathen, there was room, and a possibility, for them to become genuine Christians by accepting the faith of Christ upon principle. But when they became heathen, who, by only an outward form, gave themselves credit for being Christians, they thus shut themselves off from becoming Christians indeed, by having made it only a cloak for their heathenism.

Christianity is not a fashion: it is a principle. It is not a thing that can be imitated: it is a new life planted in the heart. It cannot be derived from any example of "the higher classes," but from God alone, by a personal faith in Jesus Christ.

And just because it is a principle and not a mere profession; because it is a new life and not a new fashion; in its very nature Christianity can never recognize any classes, nor class distinctions, nor have any respect of persons whatever. The cross of Jesus Christ abolishes and obliterates all middle walls of partition, by obliterating "the enmity" from which arise all such things.

In the light of the plain words of Scripture, and of what Christianity really is, it is plain enough that all that Mr. Reid's mission is, is to carry to China a phase of philosophy and civilization that is different from that which they have. But neither philosophy nor civilization nor even a compound of both, is Christianity.

An Expansive Gospel.

J. C. Hiden, D. D., in "The Independent," May 21, 1896.

IN none of our Lord's final directions is there the slightest hint that Christianity was to wait upon civilization; nor does anything in that "missionary magazine," the Acts of the Apostles, give the least color to such a view. The wise according to this world often tell us that it is useless to attempt to evangelize barbarians; that we must first instruct them in at least the rudiments of civilization, and thus prepare them for the reception of the gospel.

This view savors of the baldest rationalism. Does God care only for civilized people? No; Christianity does not come to help man after he has helped himself, but in his helplessness; and it is quite easy to lay too much stress upon what is called, "the connection between Christianity and civilization." We know that not a few of the most cultivated men in ancient as well as in modern times, have been very wicked. Julius Cæsar was one of the most accomplished men that ever lived. From a moral point of view, the boasted Greek civilization was rotten to the core. Even Plato's "Republic" advocates the twin villainies of communism and "free love."

Tweed was an "educated" man. Aaron Burr was one of the most accomplished politicians that ever figured in American history. His native talents were splendid. He was well educated. He was an able soldier under Washington. He was one of the most uniformly successful advocates that ever practiced at any bar. As an orator he stood in the very front rank in an age which produced Fisher Ames and Patrick Henry. His eloquence was so overpowering as to melt his bitterest enemies to tears, and make them forget where they were. He was, perhaps, the most magnetic man that has lived since Julius Cæsar. . . . Barely missing the Presidency, and easily first as Vice-President, he spent most of his life in a blaze of glory, and has left to posterity a name which will be the synonym for infamy as long as American history is read, or American politics discussed among men. . . . No; civilization hath "no relish of salvation" in it.

Between Christianity and civilization there is, indeed, an antithesis which is too frequently overlooked, even by thoughtful men. Civilization is mainly a social force, operating upon a community. Christianity is a spiritual force, operating upon the individual. It is about as difficult to civilize an individual as it is to convert a State. Rough people can be converted

Among the Greeks one and the same word meant "morals" and "manners." The same linguistic phenomenon appears in Latin; and the reason is that morals were manners, and nothing more. However highly "cultivated" a heathen people may be they will still be barbarians morally. Christianity makes an immense difference between morals and manners. Samuel Johnson was not so "elegant" as was Lord Chesterfield; but he was a much better man than the polished, licentious nobleman; Chesterfield was the nobleman; but Johnson was the noble man.

Some critics would have us believe that the Sermon on the Mount is all right, and that the New Testament morality is of a high order; but that the Old Testament is so full of barbarisms that our cultivated age cannot accept it as authority. But again, I ask, Does God care only for people of cultivation? Did not Paul preach, at Lystra as well as at Athens? The Pentateuch presents marked internal evidence that much of it was immediately addressed to people who had recently emerged from slavery and were still in a semi-barbarous condition.

John Foster wrote the most splendid of his essays to show why men of taste were so generally opposed to evangelical religion; and it now seems to be in order for some smart critic of the Wellhausen school to write an essay to show why God cares nothing for barbarians.

Paul evidently did not think that uncultivated people were outside of the pale of God's sympathy, or of gospel work. He was debtor both to the Greeks and the barbarians; to the wise and the unwise. "The regions beyond," whether inhabited by scholars or by ignor-amuses, were the regions which especially fired his ambition and kindled his zeal. He was always anxious to go to some new place where Christ had never been preached; and he seems never to have asked whether the place was "cultivated," or whether the people were civilized.

Let any pastor ask himself the question, "Are my most cultivated people my best people?" One of the very best members of any church that I have ever served could barely spell his way, with many blunders, through a chapter of the Bible; and some of the most troublesome church members that I have ever known were very highly educated.

The gospel is indeed expansive. It is addressed to people of all grades of culture, and to those of no culture. Greeks and barbarians are to be all won by Christ, and one in Christ.

George Washington's View of Sunday.

IN its issue of February 21, a New York journal quotes from a recent book by Paul Leicester Ford, entitled, "The True George Washington," the following concerning the latter's view of Sunday, as indicated by his words and practice:—

"His daily 'where and how my time is spent,' enables us to know exactly how often he attended church, and in the year 1760 he went just sixteen times, and in 1768 he went fourteen, these years being fairly typical of the period 1760-1773. During the presidency a sense of duty made him attend St. Paul's and Christ churches while in New York and Philadelphia, but at Mount Vernon, when the public eye was not upon him, he was no more regular than he had always been, and in the last year of his life, he wrote:—

"Six days do I labor, or, in other words, take exercise and devote my time to various occupations in husbandry, and about my mansion. On the seventh, now called the first day, for want of a place of worship (within less than nine miles) such letters as do not require immediate acknowledgment, I give answers to. . . . But it hath so happened, that on the last Sundays—call them the first or the seventh as you please, I have been unable to perform the latter duty on account of visits from strangers, with whom I could not use the freedom to leave alone, or recommend to the care of each other, for their amusement."

HE SOMETIMES WORKED ON SUNDAY.

"What he said here was more or less typical of his whole life. Sunday was always the day on which he wrote his private letters—even prepared his invoices—and he wrote to one of his overseers that his letters should be mailed so as to reach him Saturday, as by so doing they could be answered the following day. Nor did he limit himself to this, for he entertained company, closed land purchases, sold wheat, and, while a Virginia planter, went fox hunting on Sunday.

"It is to be noted, however, that he considered the scruples of others as to the day. When he went among his Western tenants rent collecting, he entered in his diary that, it 'being Sunday, and the people living on my land apparently very religious, it was thought best to postpone going among them till to-morrow,' and in his journey through New England, because it was 'contrary to the law and disagreeable to the people of this State (Connecticut) to travel on the sabbath day—and my horses, after passing through such intolerable roads, wanting rest, I stayed at Perkin's Tavern (which, by the bye, is not a good one) all day—and a meeting-house being within a few rods of the door, I attended the morning and evening services, and heard very lame discourses from a Mr. Pond.' "

It thus appears that Washington neither regarded Sunday as a sacred day nor kept it as such, though he was always careful to respect the religious scruples of others. Is it true, then, as certain religious people would have us believe, that Sunday-keeping is an essential feature of the highest type of citizenship? It is generally admitted, we believe, outside of National Reform circles at least, that the "father of his country" was, in point of citizenship, as noble a type of manhood as this nation ever produced.

WASHINGTON AGAINST RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE

Again, in the matter of respect for the religious scruples of his fellowmen, of whatever race or belief, Washington left an example worthy of imitation. How far his sympathies would have been from any effort to coerce men by Sunday laws or other religious legislation, may be judged from the following, also furnished by Mr. Ford:—

"There can be no doubt that religious intolerance was not a part of Washington's character. In 1775, when the New England troops intended to celebrate Guy Fawkes' Day, as usual, the General Orders declared that 'as the Commander-in-Chief has been appraised of a design, formed for the observance of that ridiculous and childish custom of burning the effigy of the Pope, he cannot help expressing his surprise that there should be officers and soldiers in this army so void of common sense as not to see the impropriety of such a step.'

"When trying to secure some servants, too, he wrote that 'if they are good workmen, they may be from Asia, Africa, or Europe; they may be Mahometans, Jews, or Christians, of any sect, or they may be Atheists.' When the bill taxing all the people of Virginia to support the Episcopal Church (his own) was under discussion, he threw his weight against it as far as concerned the taxing of other sectaries, but adding:—

"'Although no man's sentiments are more opposed to any kind of restraint upon religious principles than mine are, yet I must confess that I am not among the number of those who are so much alarmed at the thoughts of making people pay towards the support of that which they profess, if of the denominations of Christians, or to declare themselves Jews, Mahometans; or otherwise, and thereby obtain proper relief.

"'As the matter now stands I wish an assessment had never been agitated, and as it has gone so far, that the bill could die an easy death; because I think it will be productive of more quiet to the State, than by enacting it into a law, which in my opinion would be impolitic, admitting there is a decided majority for it, to the disquiet of a respectable minority. In the former case, the matter will soon subside; in the latter it will rankle and perhaps convulse the State.'

"Again in a letter he says:—

"'Of all the animosities which have existed among mankind those which are caused by difference of sentiment in religion appear to be the most inveterate and distressing, and ought most to be deprecated. I was in hopes that the enlightened and liberal policy which has marked the present age would at least have reconciled

Christians of every denomination so far that we should never again see their religious disputes carried to such a pitch as to endanger the peace of society.'

"And to Lafayette, alluding to the proceedings of the Assembly of Notables, he wrote:—

"'I am not less ardent in my wish that you may succeed in your plan of toleration in religious matters. Being no bigot myself, I am disposed to indulge the professors of Christianity in the Church with that road to heaven which to them shall seem the most direct, plainest easiest, and least liable to exception.'

If the people of America to-day would only entertain the same liberal, kindly sentiments toward their fellow-citizens, there would be no religious persecution, no demand for a "Christian Amendment" to the Constitution, and no movement for union of Church and State.

Sunday Newspapers and the Public Safety.

JUDGE KIMBALL, of the District of Columbia, before whom several newsboys were recently brought for having sold newspapers on Sunday in their accustomed manner, has decided that the ordinance under which they were charged is to be upheld as reasonable and just.

In his decision Judge Kimball says that "the use of all property, more especially that situated or used in the in the public streets, is subject to the exercise of the power of reasonable police supervision and regulation, for the protection of the public health and safety;" and that "in a case like the present, where the question is one of practical fact, unsettled by experience, and resting in opinion, a court should surely hesitate to set up its judgment in opposition to that of the municipal officers, who, by virtue of their training, observation and experience in the performance of their duties, ought to be well informed and capable of arriving at satisfactory conclusions in such matters." This is to say that it is merely a question of opinion, not settled by experience, whether the crying of papers by newsboys on Sunday is or is not inimical to "the public health and safety"! We could hardly imagine a statement more ridiculous.

If newsboys are threatening the public health and safety by crying their papers on Sunday, why are they permitted to do the same on Monday and other days of the week? What happens to put the public health and safety in the city of Washington in such an extraordinary state of precariousness on Sundays?

This is a matter which should have immediate investigation, for the enlightenment of the rest of the country which has not yet learned the danger to the public health that lies in the crying of newsboys selling papers on Sunday.

THE last years of the nineteenth century will be full of stirring events. The great struggle will be the effort to make this great secular nation profess Christianity.—Martinsburg, Pa., Weekly Herald.

Sunday Laws, "Disturbance," and "Nuisance."

By James T. Ringgold, of the Baltimore Bar.

THERE is a general agreement about loud noises, bad odors, explosives, etc., etc., as nuisances, because they interfere with physical comfort or safety. And so the law embodies a consensus that, for physical reasons, having regard to a change in physical conditions, some things may be branded as nuisances both by civil and criminal law if done at night, which would not be so if done by day. But in the case of all these things, the standard of damages is the same for all classes of persons. Bad odors are frequently more objectionable to one person than to another; loud noises are distracting to some, matters of indifference to others; the proximity of explosives will alarm many, while a few will laugh at their terror. Of all these varying dispositions, these grades of emotional sensitiveness, the law takes no notice, because, as said, to measure and judge of them is beyond its power.

Applying this principle to injuries to religious emotions or sentiments, we see at once that they are beyond the reach of law. There are Christians whose religious sentiments are shocked by the erection of a Jewish synagogue, and even more so by the building of a church for any other denomination of Christians than their own. But the law has no balm for their wounds. And the want of this general consensus respecting religious exercises, even if it were possible for the law to determine what are such, and even if their requirement of special police conditions were conceded, is an all-sufficient reason for the law's declining to give them greater consideration than it gives to exercises of any other sort.

At present there are many who say that all religious exercises are a sheer waste of time. There have always been thousands who have considered that unless the exercises are conducted under certain auspices, they are considerably worse than a sheer waste of time. Between these varying opinions the law has neither the jurisdiction nor the means to decide; and therefore it confines itself to "keeping the peace" at all times, and allowing every citizen to indulge at all times in any sort of exercise not incompatible therewith, and to call it religious or by any other name according to his own will. Now, as already observed, the courts never miss the point in this connection except when they come to deal with Sunday laws. But the principle is just as applicable to Sunday laws as anywhere else. And its result when applied to these laws is to prove that they cannot be sustained as measures for the protection of religious exercises.

But, in truth, the construction judicially given to the Sunday laws when they are sustained on religious grounds, refutes the assumption that they have any necessary connection with the question of religious meetings or private or domestic religious exercises. Of course, if their object were to provide certain police conditions required for such meetings or exercises, the fact that no such meeting was going on in the neighborhood, or was actually interfered with, and that no such exercises on the part of any person were interrupted, would be a conclusive defense for the doing of an act on Sunday which might be done on other days. But the irrelevancy of the question whether meetings or exercises have really been interfered with by Sunday activity, is judicially settled by the view taken of the nature of that right which Sunday laws are held necessary to protect, and of the disturbance against which they are designed to guard.

One of the definitions of "to disturb" given by Webster is, "to agitate the mind," and he adds that the mind is disturbed by envy. This is an excellent illustration for the purpose. A mere emotion may disturb,—no sensation or perception of any kind is necessary. Whatever tends to awaken or kindle that emotion is the producer of a disturbance. The voluntary Sunday idler is thus disturbed by another's Sunday work, though he neither sees nor hears it. It weighs down his mind if he knows that it is going on. This knowledge arouses in him an emotion which it must be admitted is inconsistent with his use of the day for religious profit, being ninety per cent. pure malice. The disturbance done to him we are told—and rightly told in the last citation—grows out of his conviction that for another person to work on Sunday is "a breach of God's law and a violation of the party's own religious duty."—William's Case, 4 Ire.. 400.

And it is evident that the disturbance produced by the conviction that a party is guilty of such conduct beyond the reach of the Brownist's sight or hearing is quite as great when he is not engaged in any religious exercises, alone or in company, as when his "services" are actually in progress. Nay, it must be the greater when he is otherwise altogether unoccupied, because then he is able to concentrate his whole energies on the reflection that, at the other end of the town, say, somebody is doing what the Brownist does not think he ought to do on Sunday. And this reflection cannot be otherwise than disquieting to a Brownist, the vital essence of whose mental life is the fixed belief that it is his business to set other people straight, and the feeling that the dignity and authority of Deity itself are insulted and defied by the perverse people who decline to be set straight according to the gospel of the Brownist.

Plainly enough, it is the disturbance of himself by this disquieting reflection which the Brownist voluntary idler wants a Sunday law to prevent. But we must not omit to notice an ingenious attempt to establish the position that the real purpose of the law is to prevent the disturbance of the non-Brownist involuntary idler. The words, "to the disturbance of others," are added to the prohibitions of work and labor in some of the statutes. They first appeared in the New Hampshire Sunday law. In construing them, the court adhered rigidly to the religious view of the statute, but adopted an entirely new view of its purpose. It considered that the object of compulsory Sunday idleness was not the spiritual betterment of the reluctant idler, nor the prevention of his interference with voluntary idlers in their religious exercises, nor yet the relief of their minds from the harrowing thought that somebody might be at work somewhere. At least it ignored these aspects of the subject altogether, and enunciated the proposition that the real protégée of the Sunday law is one compulsory idler whom another may "disturb" in his idleness, even with his perfect acquiescence!

The court held that it was "safe" to give the word disturbance a "comprehensive meaning;" and that the fact that people willingly submitted to, and took part in, a thing did not make it non-disturbing to the party himself; or, in other words, that a man may be disturbed by doing what he wants to do! The court then went on to say that the object of the statute was to prevent the distracting of people from religious observance, and that "nothing should be tolerated that tends to defeat it." And on the basis of this construction of the law it set aside a contract to buy a horse, because the vendee was disturbed by the offer, which he willingly discussed; because a witness whom the vendee took with him to the conference was disturbed, though he went along willingly enough; and because the wife of one of the parties was disturbed, as was proven by the fact that while the transaction was in process of consummation, she sat in the room reading a newspaper!—Varney vs. French, 19 N. H., 233.

And, later, "disturbance" was said to consist in "acts calculated to turn the attention of those who are present from their appropriate religious duties to matters of merely worldly concern," which evidently makes it a breach of the Sunday law to address a remark to a man on any other than religious topics, such, for example, as the state of the weather; and, accordingly, it was held that executing a will in the presence of others, disturbed them; for, the court said, "if business has been transacted of a secular character, and not within the exceptions, and in which two or more persons have taken a part, the disturbance is a conclusion of law."—George vs. George, 47 N. H. 27; see also Thompson vs. Williams, 58 La., 248.

But common sense shows us that all this is uncommon nonsense. The question whether a man is "disturbed" or not by the conduct of another, is so evidently a matter altogether within the man's own breast that the logical maxim of the law is volenti non fit injuria,—that is to say, What a man willingly put up with, entitles him to no damages at law, gives him no disturbance of which the law can take cognizance. And this logical maxim is always respected and applied by the courts, save in the matter of Sunday laws; wherewith, indeed, logic has nothing whatever to do.

But the Brownist is logical enough when he is intellectually honest with himself. And then he knows full well that when he swears out a warrant against A on the ground that the latter has disturbed B by doing business with him on Sunday, he is seeking to have A punished, not for any disturbance done to B, because in fact there was none; but he is seeking to have A punished because of his knowledge that the business was done on Sunday, though he neither saw nor heard anything of it, and did not even know of its being done till long after the Sunday of its doing was over. This it is that "disturbs" the Brownist's soul to that degree that only the fining of A by the magistrate, can restore its equilibrium. And it has been shown that with the matter of soul-equilibrium American law has and can have nothing to do.

It will not fail to strike the candid reader that there is something curious and suspicious about the very mention of religion in connection with the judicial consideration of an American statute. That American judges should be found recognizing the true character of Sunday laws, as civil embodiments of a religious dogma, and sustaining them on that very ground, is only one among many illustrations of Macaulay's remark that "man is such an inconsistent creature that it is impossible to reason from his belief to his conduct, or from any one part of his belief to another."

The "Christian Powers" Against Christians.

THE great "Christian Powers" of Europe have furnished new evidence of their Christianity(?) by espousing the cause of the Turk against the "Christian" population of Crete. Upon this the New York World, of February 24, makes this comment:—

"When the ink is hardly dry on their formal protests against the unspeakable atrocities of the Turks in Armenia the Tory powers of Europe express their real opinions by bombarding the Cretan camp at Canea in the interest of Turkish barbarism.

"The Cretans have won their independence and have driven the barbarians who have oppressed them for two centuries to the protection of the guns of the men-of-war kept in the harbors to enforce the opinions of enlightened statesmen in London, Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg.

"These gentlemen lately filled the newspapers of the world with expressions of their horror when men, women and children were tortured and massacred in Armenia because of devotion to their religion. We were told that their representatives in Constantinople were 'coercing the Sultan;' that he was in imminent danger of being driven out of Europe as a brigand, an outlaw, an enemy of the human race—as he is.

"Now when all this is put to the test, when a gallant people, refusing to be butchered as were the unfortunates of Armenia, have risen for their rights, have defeated the cowardly assassins who represent the Sultan's Armenian policy in its application to Crete, and have won for themselves the admiration and respect of the world, the allied powers of Europe, representing its intrenched Toryism, take the side of the Turk. They threaten to drown in the roar of their most Christian cannon the appeal which the Christian Greeks make to civilization against their Mahometan tyrants."

Of course, the real truth is, that the so-called "Christian" powers, with their gunboats and armies, no more represent Christianity than does the army of the Sultan. When it comes to action, they are moved by some selfish motive every time. For the sake of pecuniary gain, or to block the path of some ambitious rival, any one of them would side with that power which is the open and bitter enemy of Christianity, in its warfare upon those professing to be Christians. This is what their fleets and armies are for, and this is the kind of "Christianity" which makes use of fleets and armies. True Christianity has no use for either.

A Significant Confession.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE Christian Statesman, of January 2, contains a very interesting article under the heading, "The American-Armenian Question," signed by "American Citizen." The editor of the Statesman vouches for the "standing and responsibility" of the writer, who, I suspect, is a general contributor to that paper and devoted to its purposes. The article no doubt gives a truthful description of the way the Greek Church and Catholic Church priests connive together to hold the Armenians, Stundists, and other small sects of Christians, in check. But the strange thing about this article is that this writer cannot see that such acts are the natural outgrowth of the Church-and-State theory of government held by both the Pope of Rome and the Russian priests—that very theory which he and the Statesman are endeavoring to establish in this nation.

While the Greek Church and the Catholic Church are not agreed on all things, they are agreed on the principle that the State should support the Church. During the late Parliamentary struggles in Hungary, the clergy of both these churches have opposed themselves to the people who demand reforms. Each of these churches wants all there is, but upon a pinch they agree to stand by each other, each hoping that it will secure the larger proportion of the spoils.

Is not this about the same way that things are working in this country? The great churches are combining and pressing their claims upon the Government for recognition; one cannot do it alone, so there is a union of forces. Should there be a small sect, like the Adventists, in the way, the greatest good to the greatest number demands that it be crushed out! In other words, the great and dominant churches of our land propose to do to weak dissenters here the same thing that the Catholic and Greek churches propose to do with the Armenians and Stundists. Those Protestants who are in charge of this work in this country flatter themselves that they will at some future time eliminate the Catholic Church from the division of spoils of honors and emoluments, to be gained by a national religion. But they will suffer a most grievous disappointment. Even the writer in the Statesman above referred to, in the same article quoted, laments that the State Department of our Government is now controlled by the Jesuits. Thus he says:—

"Jesuits so control what we call our country, especially in its State Department, as they do that of most of the European courts, that they, the Jesuits, practically, are the country."

Thus, by this writer's own confession, the Jesuits are already entrenched in our Government and running it with a high hand. Many more proofs of this are given in the same article. Now this writer, in harmony with the paper in which his article appears, believes that this nation should take a position in a more authoritative manner than it yet has done as a Christian nation; that the whole national policy should be shaped in harmony with Christian principles. But who is to do this? According to his own statement—and his "standing and responsibility" are vouched for by the editor of the Statesman—the Catholic Church, represented by its most crafty order, the Jesuits, is even now managing Government affairs and is shaping the policy of this "Christian nation."

Can this power be dislodged from this vantage ground?—No, indeed; and every step taken toward forcing a national and governmental recognition of Christianity as the legalized religion of this nation elevates the Catholic Church and drives another nail into the coffin of Protestantism.

The only way by which Protestantism can have any hope of success in an encounter with organized and crafty Romanism is by the use of the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. By that means Protestantism has won some notable victories. When she throws down that defensive weapon she is as helpless before Romanism as was Roderick Dhu when he threw away his shield to face on equal terms the more skillful Fitz-James. Protestants are giving up that Word. The Bible is not believed by them as it used to be. They are looking to other means to advance the religion they profess. They are particularly anxious for governmental acknowledgment, craving the same things which Catholics have so long enjoyed and in so many nations. They will find their budding prospects blasted in the very hour of their fancied success. Their hopes will be like—

"Dead Sea fruits which tempt the eye,
But turn to ashes on the lips."

That a recognition of Christianity by our Government will be of no particular use to Protestants this same writer confesses by saying that the indignities suffered by American Protestant missionaries in Turkey would not have been allowed by Jackson or Grant. But neither of these Presidents said so much for national Christianity as Mr. Cleveland has done. Thus national Christianity, in its practical results, means national advantages for Catholicism, but not for Protestants. Thus, Protestants prepare the soil, and sow the seed; Catholics watch its growth, and secure the harvest. That this must be so; that the whole effort now being made in this country to recognize Christianity as the religion of the nation will be used by the Roman Catholic Church for her own advantage and aggrandizement, the article in the Statesman is an unwilling but very significant confession.

Investigating the Trusts.

THE Court of Inquiry which State Senator Lexow has been conducting against some of the Trusts doing business in New York City, discloses the desperate and doubtful nature of the contest which the people have begun for a curtailment of these baneful institutions. From the result of this attempt, it would seem that little if anything is to be expected from the State in this direction. The Trusts simply bade defiance to the State, and the State could not force them to do otherwise. Their representatives declined to produce the books which the State desired to inspect, and did not hesitate to "disremember" such facts and figures as the Trusts had determined to keep from public view.

In connection with this it is interesting to note that a recent decision of the Federal District Court has pronounced the Texas Anti-Trust law to be unconstitutional. This was a measure which prohibited all combinations to raise or lower prices, except of agricultural products and labor. The decision—which was rendered by Judge Swayne—very properly points out that such a measure denies the constitutional guaranty of the equal rights of citizens before the law, forbidding to twenty per cent. of the population what it allows to eighty per cent. Thus it falls under condemnation as class legislation. And it is difficult to see how a law against Trusts could be framed which would not be liable to condemnation in the courts upon similar grounds.

When the victims of the Trusts become convinced that no relief is to be hoped for through the regular methods of governmental procedure, they will have recourse to methods of their own which are now contemplated in the theory of republican government. Only as men become more willing to deal with their fellows by the principle of the Golden Rule, will there be any substantial relief from the evils which threaten the disruption of the Government.

THE question whether public money shall be appropriated by Congress for sectarian schools is again before the National Legislature. The simple truth concerning this is that no public money can be rightfully taken for a sectarian use, and that when the people's money is thus misapplied in one case, it does not mend the matter to repeat the act in a number of other cases. No extension of wrong can ever make wrong right.

"Christian Endeavor" and the "New England Sabbath."

THE "Christian Endeavor" and "Epworth League" forces of Worcester, Mass., have arisen to the rescue of the "New England Sabbath." Not by the power of the divine Word, however, do they propose to accomplish this object; not by lifting up Jesus Christ, as all true Christian endeavor is supposed to do; but by the power of the police force of the city of Worcester.

They have drawn up and forwarded to the chief of police of that city, the following petition:—

"To James M. Drennan, Chief of Police of the city of Worcester, Massachusetts—

"The undersigned individuals, members of the good citizenship committee of the Worcester local union of Christian Endeavor, having a membership of 2,500 members, hereby respectfully and earnestly represent to you: First, that the laws of this State (chap. 434, sec. 2, Acts of 1895, 'An Act to regulate the observance of the Lord's Day'), are in common repute so notoriously and habitually violated in our city by shopkeepers, druggists, newsdealers, tobaccoists, and others as to convince us that this lawlessness, if allowed to continue, will imperil the morals of the youth, and also the moral standard of our city; and, second, therefore, we respectfully appeal for the enforcement of this law, and also to use your power as the chief executive of this department of the Worcester city government, by proclamation or otherwise, through the officers under your direction, to secure to us and our imperiled city, the protection to which these neglected laws entitle us as citizens of this city.

"(Signed) JOSEPH WILLIAM ALLEN,
WILLIAM E. OAKLEY,
HIRAM G. GEARY."

"The above petition was indorsed by a unanimous vote of the Worcester local union of Christian Endeavor and the Worcester Epworth league circuit, representing a total membership of 3,500 members, at a union meeting held in Park Congregational Church, on Monday evening, Feb. 8, 1897.

"(Attest) GEORGE E. COPELAND,
"Pres. Worcester local union of 'C. E.'
"BURTON C. PRIEST,
"Pres. Worcester circuit of Epworth leagues."

The section of the State Sunday law to which the petition refers, is as follows:—

"SECTION 2. Whoever on the Lord's day keeps open his shop, warehouse or workhouse, or does any manner of labor, business, or work, except works of necessity and charity, or takes part in any sport, game or play, or public diversion, except a concert of sacred music, or an entertainment given by a religious or charitable society, the proceeds of which, if any, are to be devoted exclusively to a charitable or religious purpose, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $50 for each offense; and the proprietor, manager or person in charge of such game, sport, play or public diversion, other than such concert of sacred music, or an entertainment given by a religious or charitable society, the proceeds of which, if any, are to be devoted exclusively to a charitable or religious purpose, shall be punished by fine not less than $50 and not exceeding $500 for each offense; but nothing in this section shall be held to prohibit the manufacture and distribution of steam, gas or electricity for illuminating purposes, heat or motive power, nor the distribution of water for fire or domestic purposes; nor the use of the telegraph or the telephone, nor the retail sale of drugs and medicines, nor articles ordered by the prescription of a physician, nor mechanical appliances used by physicians or surgeons, nor the letting of horses and carriages, nor the letting of yachts and boats, nor the running of steam ferry boats on established routes, or of street railway cars, nor the preparation, printing and publishing of newspapers, nor the sale and delivery of newspapers, nor the wholesale or retail sale and delivery of milk, nor the transportation of milk, nor the making of butter and cheese, nor the keeping open of public bathhouses, nor the making or selling by bakers or their employes of bread or other food usually dealt in by them, before 10 o'clock in the morning, and between the hours of 4 o'clock and half-past 6 o'clock in the evening. Whoever conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall not be liable to the penalties of this section, for performing secular business and labor on the Lord's day, if he disturbs no other person.

It will be noticed that of the four classes of individuals specified in the petition as conspicuous violators of the law, two—druggists and newsdealers—are among those whose business the law permits. The explanation of this is not difficult. The object of the Endeavorers is to stop Sunday desecration, of which open drug stores and news depots are, in their view, as real examples as any to be found. What the law may specify as permissible on Sunday is with them a minor consideration. Their object is not to enforce the law, as it is, but to stop Sunday business by means of the law; and they will have it amended or construed, if possible, to suit their purpose.

Zeal for Sunday is wont to clothe itself in the guise of zeal for law.

The Worcester Daily Telegram of the 13th ult., reports that Chief Drennan, of the Worcester police, has caused the petition and Sunday law to be published, with this notice to the citizens:—

DEPARTMENT OF POLICE.

Worcester, February 11.

The following petition has this day been received at these headquarters. An abstract of the same was published in the newspapers a few days ago, and I have already taken action on the same. Any inroads on the sacredness of the New England sabbath in violation of law cannot be permitted. Ignorance of the provisions of law is no justification for its violation; in order, however, that all may be familiar with the law regarding observance of the Lord's day, I have caused chapter 434 of the Acts of 1895 to be published in the daily papers.

JAMES M. DRENNAN,

Chief of Police.

It will be seen from this that Chief Drennan considers it to be the duty of the police to "guard the sacredness of the New England sabbath." He views the "sacredness" of that institution as being of a kind that can be guarded by the police. There will be "inroads" made upon it if certain kinds of business are allowed to proceed on that day. But these "inroads," according to the petition, have been going on for a long time already. Yet this notice is put forth on the assumption that its "sacredness" is still intact.

It is also assumed that the "New England Sabbath" is the "Lord's day." This of course is a theological question, and due allowance must be made for a police officer when he undertakes to handle such subjects. But it seems too bad that the Christian Endeavorers should force city officials not appointed to office with any reference to their theological qualifications, to make a show of themselves in this direction.

To a reporter for the Telegram, the chairman of the "good citizenship committee," by whom the petition was drawn up, said: "We are waiting to see if Chief of Police Drennan does anything about the matter, and if not we will take up the cudgels and with the assistance of our attorney will bring cases into court ourselves."

And all this is done—ostensibly—in the name of Him who never invoked the civil arm or made use of earthly power to advance his cause. Would it not be well for those Christian Endeavorers and Epworth Leaguers to become better acquainted with Jesus Christ?

Sunday Labor Not Compulsory.

In a letter to the Golden Rule for January 28, Rev. W. F. Crafts, one of the foremost champions of Sunday laws, objects to the idea that Christians might be "compelled to work on the Sabbath," and says that "when Christians count it a sufficient excuse for not doing right that it would cost something, and a sufficient reason for doing wrong that it will pay, we cannot expect victories."

True; and that is just the reason the cause of Christianity cannot be advanced by legislation. "We cannot expect victories" so long as "Christians" have not principle enough to do what they believe to be right, without having laws to make it easy for them to do so. Mr. Crafts adds:—

"But it would seem that in our day God does not intend that those who keep his day shall even suffer financial loss. I have searched the world over to find one who has lost by bravely refusing to do Sunday work. I have found many who gained, but only one case of serious loss, even from an earthly standpoint."

Well, then, what is the use of all this talk that is heard about the necessity of Sunday laws to give the poor workingman a chance to obey God? If he is not to suffer even financial loss by keeping Sunday as a matter of religious principle, what more can be asked for him? Why not let every Christian act from principle, and settle the question in that way? Is it not better that men should act from principle than from some selfish motive?

There is no possible reason why any Christian should want legislation on the subject of obedience to one of God's commands. Who is it that provides for him and for all men, whether living in obedience to God or not? Does he believe that it is God who does this? Then, if he believes this, can he not have faith enough in his God to believe that He who cared for him in his disobedience, will also care for him when he becomes obedient?

What is the standard of Christianity that is to be set up in this land? Is it that which says Christians must have the arm of the State to lean on in their journey to the celestial realm, and must have things made pleasant and convenient for them by civil enactments? The Seventh-day Adventists have pursued their way without the aid of any law in favor of the day they keep except the fourth commandment of the Decalogue. They have done this, and prospered, from the first, not only without such aid, but often in the face of legal opposition, and of all the inconvenience that can be caused by differing in belief and practice from the majority around them. They neither ask nor desire any aid from the civil power, but are entirely willing to do as they believe God commands, and leave the results with Him. Is not this the standard of Christianity that ought to be maintained?

Obedience to God from principle, simply as the result of faith in His Word, is Christianity. Anything less than this is not Christianity at all. Hence there can be no human law in favor of religion which is not contrary to Christianity. And therefore no such law ought ever to be enacted.

A "Great Discovery" vs. the Bible and History.

"Chicago Israelite," January 9, 1897.

ONE of the funniest theological discoveries is reported in the Chicago Tribune (December 28) as coming from one S. W. Gamble, a reverend gentleman of the South Kansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This gentleman discovered that the "Jewish Sabbath" was not Saturday, but was a changeable day and that "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" never referred to Saturday. The gentleman did not notice that next to this commandment it is ordained, "six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, and the seventh day shall be the Sabbath to the Lord thy God;" hence it could not mean a changeable day. Then he admits that from the Exodus to the crucifixion the Jews did observe this self-same seventh-day Sabbath. There is some confusion of ideas in Mr. Gamble's mind, as indeed what Sabbath day was kept before the exode he cannot know, and that the Jews after the crucifixion always kept that very seventh-day Sabbath—there never was a difference of opinion among the Jews on this point, although they lived thousands of miles from one another, and for long centuries without intercommunication. The Falashees of Abyssinia and the Jews in the Rhenish cities and in Ratisbon, all claim to have been there respectively long before the crucifixion and yet they keep the same seventh day Sabbath as they did in Jerusalem, Antioch, Alexandria, and Rome in the time of the Cæsars, as you can see from the Latin classics.

According to the Tribune Mr. Gamble's argument runs thus:—

"The Sabbath of the Jews, from the Exodus until at least after the crucifixion, occurred on fixed dates—that is, on the fifteenth day of Abib, or Nisan, each year, because it commemorated their freedom from Egyptian slavery on that date. It occurred the same day of the week with the fifteenth day of Abib until the day of Pentecost. The week including Pentecost contained six work days and two Sabbaths. The six work days followed the day of Pentecost Sabbath, which would bring the next Sabbath after Pentecost on the next day of the week to what it had been preceding that time in the year, making a change of the Sabbath day at Pentecost to the next day in the week each year.

"The same law holds good in the count of the Sabbath years and the year of jubilee. Each jubilee period was a perfect cycle in itself. The last week of years in each jubilee period contained six work years and two Sabbath years."

If the reporter of the Tribune invented this argument, he is guilty of murder with intent, malice, and forethought; it is a wicked satire on good Mr. Gamble. If the said reporter pleads not guilty, then the fallacy and folly of this argument are suicidal to Mr. Gamble's theology. The Passover has no connection whatever with the weekly Sabbath, although like every other feast ordained by Moses it is called a Sabbath, or a "time of rest." In the second place, Pentecost being on the fiftieth day after the first of Passover, came at the beginning of the eighth week, and there can be no weekly Sabbath at the beginning of a week, as said in the Decalogue,—"Six days thou shalt labor and the seventh day shall be Sabbath. No Mosaic law can go against the Decalogue.

Aside from all this, the Pentecost and the Passover have no connection whatever with the Sabbath. The year of release was every seventh year exactly as the Sabbath was every seventh day. The jubilee year was added to the seven times seven years to make the era year in round numbers of fifty in place of the century, as we count now. The whole argument of Mr. Gamble is a theological fiction versus historical fact, futile and worthless.

ONE of the assumptions upon which Sunday laws are sought to be upheld, is that Sunday as a rest day is an "American institution." It seems incredible that any intelligent person could regard this plea as anything more than an assumption, and an exceedingly poor one at that. An American institution is something the origin of which can be traced back to some event or series of events in the history of the American nation. But as every person knows, the Sunday rest can be traced back for ages before the American nation came into being. And if it were, as claimed, an American institution, that fact would entirely destroy its claim to rest upon an authority higher than that of man. But in the matter of commanding and enforcing religious observances, man has no authority whatever.

By way of making this claim more plausible, however, it is asserted that the Sabbath is "an American institution on the civil side of it." This was said by a prominent speaker at the recent Sabbath Observance convention at Pittsburg, Pa. But was the Sabbath instituted by the Creator with one side of it lacking, which it was to be left for man to supply? Was not the Sabbath a perfect institution when it came from the hand of the Creator? Did the Creator ever make anything that was imperfect?

These questions answer themselves, and entirely sweep away the idea of a "civil side" to the Sabbath. The Sabbath came to man in Eden, before there was any civil government on earth; it was a complete institution then, and it was the same then that it is to-day.

Religious Coercion is Antichristian.

"Present Truth," London, England.

WHY is it that those who have passed under the name of Christian, and whom the world at large counts as representative of Christianity, have, so universally, sought temporal power?

He who is really Christian follows in the footsteps of Christ, does he not? But Christ avoided even the slightest assumption of temporal authority. He even refused to be an arbitrator in a simple dispute as to the division of property, saying to the one who sought the intervention, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?"

The persistent and fatal error with which so many of His personal followers were possessed was that He was about to set up an earthly kingdom. But Christ combated this error continually, taking every occasion of reproving them for their worldly ambitions, and of setting before them the contrast between the futility of all earthly things and the eternal stability of the mansions of that kingdom eternal in the heavens, which he went to prepare.

The follower of Christ must follow Him in truth, or else he is not a disciple and a follower, but a pretender and a traitor. Christ sought no temporal authority over men. He strenuously refused even the smallest opportunity for the exercise of such power. Is it then consistent with the life and example of the Master, for those who claim to be his disciples, to seek to dominate over their fellow-men?

If the example of Christ is followed, those who carry His gospel will use no authority in religious things, other than the persuasion of the Word. Christ judges no man. He Himself said so. He permits all men to judge themselves, to choose that which they will, whether it be life or death. This being so, it is impossible for men who claim to speak for Christ, and exercise authority from him, to coerce men into accepting and receiving eternal life. Spiritual coercion is futile. It even goes beyond futility, it defeats itself, and becomes an active agent in the opposite direction to that in which it purports to work.

The fact that this is so marks the origin of this great deception, and its masterly development to the present hour, as coming from the arch-enemy of God and mankind. When the teachings of the Word of God, and the example of Christ, are so plain, and the evidences of the destructive working of Satan's deceptions so evidently seen, it is indeed a "mystery of iniquity" that men should choose the antichristian way and call it Christian.

Carnal Methods.

BY A. SMITH.

NATIONAL Reformers, so called, are not only determined that existing State Sunday laws shall be enforced, but that national laws of that character shall be framed and put into effect against those who do not believe that day to be the Sabbath, and those who treat it with indifference as such.

Such laws are carnal weapons, used to coerce unbelievers. Such methods are not Christlike. Says Paul, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal." 2 Cor. 10:4. None but carnal minds will use carnal weapons in defense of religious dogmas; and Paul says, "The carnal mind is enmity against God." Rom. 8:7.

Mahomet used carnal weapons to enforce his religion, and National Reformers and their numerous allies have entered upon a like career of coercion. The object to be gained and the method employed may be different in force, but the controlling spirit is the same. What difference does it make in principle whether one is compelled to observe a single religious dogma, or all the dogmas composing a given system of religion? There is none except in degree.

If the compulsory observance of Sunday as the weekly Sabbath is better, socially and morally, for unbelievers and the community in which they dwell, why not carry the principle further and compel everybody to profess religion? For, is not true religion a good thing for any community? At revival efforts people are urged in some way to make a public avowal of their purpose to serve the Lord; but many hesitate, and others sneer and oppose. Now would it not be a good National Reform scheme to cause a law to be framed to punish with fine or imprisonment those who refuse such earnest persuasion? Romanism and Mohammedanism furnish excellent examples of such methods.

Some of the State Sunday laws contain exemption clauses in favor of those who observe the seventh day as the Sabbath; but the law of God contains no exemption clause. It is morally wrong for anybody in the world to use the seventh day as secular time, for God has declared it to be holy.

Sunday, as a sabbath, is a man-made institution; and the same power that embodied exemption clauses in the laws compelling its observance can abrogate such clauses at will whenever public sentiment may demand it. Are lovers of liberty willing to supinely surrender their God-given right to freedom of choice in matters of faith and attendant practices to any man or class of men who assume the place of God in dictating and enforcing morals? The greatest danger on this point lies in the fact that the people generally do not know their danger, and probably will not until this God-given boon shall have been forever lost.

THE Pennsylvania State Sabbath Observance Association, recently in session at Pittsburg, did not let slip the occasion to point to the destruction of the State Capitol by fire as a manifest judgment of God upon the State for "Sabbath breaking." At least, as expressed by the editor of the Christian Statesman, it looked much as if such were the significance of the occurrence. Inasmuch, however, as Pennsylvania has more stringent Sunday laws, and enforces them more rigorously than almost any other State, the query cannot well be avoided, why she should be singled out from her more wicked sister States as the mark of divine retribution. If the event carries any such significance, it may well be that the judgment came on account of the antichristian attitude of the State which finds expression in the enactment and enforcing of her Sunday statutes.

STATE SENATOR AHEARN, of New York, has undertaken to provide a remedy for corporations against the decisions of religiously-minded judges, of which an illustration was recently furnished by Judge Pryor. He has introduced a bill in the New York legislature to eliminate from the law governing corporate bodies, that provision which requires such associations to declare their times of meeting in the articles of incorporation.

In the annual report of the "New England Sabbath Protective League" for 1896, reference is made to the Sabbath as "that institution which underlies all morality and true religion." Yet there is no other commandment in the Decalogue which religious people treat so loosely. Any one of the other nine is assumed to mean what it says, and is taken as binding upon mankind just as it reads. No one seems to see any room for question about them. But when we come to the Sabbath commandment, which is no less plain, and specifies "the seventh day" as the Sabbath for all mankind, we are told that it does not mean the keeping of any particular day; but merely of "one day in seven." And some say that it is not binding at all, having somehow been dropped out of the Decalogue at the crucifixion of Christ. How can it be expected that any moral reformation will take place while religious teachers hold such views of "that institution which underlies all morality and true religion."?

A "CALL for united prayer for the Lord's day" is to be issued by the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the "Sabbath Associations" in the different States, setting apart April 3-12 as a period of seeking "for a deeper love and a better observance of the Lord's day, and for the preservation of the civil laws by which its holy rest and quiet have been preserved in most parts of our country."

This call, in so far as it relates to "a deeper love and better observance of the Lord's day," is timely; especially in view of the fact that the members of these organizations are laboring under the impression that God's words "the seventh day is the Sabbath" mean that the first day is the Sabbath; that the day which God calls "My holy day" (Isa. 58:13) is the first day of the week; and that Jesus Christ, in affirming his Lordship of the Sabbath (Mark 2:28), answered the objections of the Pharisees by a reference to the first day of the week. We trust that during this designated season of prayer some of these individuals may become convinced that the Lord really means what He says.

THE citizens of Carson, Nevada, are reported to be so well pleased with the partial revival of business and increased circulation of money that have followed the arrival in their midst of the two noted "heroes" of the prize ring, that all opposition among them to the coming "battle," has died out, and it even has the indorsement of the local clergy. In this we have an illustration of the fact that it is not morality, but money, that controls affairs in this world; and the men who control the monetary situation of the world, as it is to-day, are more responsible than any others for its wickedness and crime.

In an effort to point out a similarity between the American Constitution and the religious system of the Papacy, a writer in the Catholic Standard and Times, of January 23, says that "According to the Constitution every citizen is eligible to the highest position in the gift of the people, and we all know that the highest post in the hierarchy is open to the humblest son of the church. In Church and State fitness and availability and not pedigree is the paramount claim to office."

This is probably the reason why Italy has been made to furnish nine tenths of the cardinals and popes.

SPEAKING of the zeal displayed by the press in England and America to obtain and publish the sentiments of the "holy father" at the Vatican respecting the proposed Anglo-American arbitration treaty, a prominent Catholic journal says: "There is much significance of the changed spirit of the times in secular newspapers thus seeking the view held on great public questions by the head of the Catholic Church."

Yes; the "spirit of the times" is giving marked evidence of deterioration from the sturdy independence which characterized the days of our fathers.

A DISPATCH from Winnipeg, Manitoba, gives the information that "The battle between the Catholic Church and the Laurier and Greenway governments is to be renewed in the law courts. The government will appeal to the courts to declare the St. Boniface election void on the ground that Archbishop Langevin intimidated his parishioners by threats of excommunication if they did not vote for the church candidate." This election was carried by the Catholics, but by so slight a majority that it is regarded as a practical victory for the government.

"An encouraging sign of the times is the way in which the historians who have been most popular with the great masses of the people in this country are being written out of favor in the secular press. Apropos of the death of Joel T. Headley, not only is he classed in the American school of romantic historians, but Irving, Prescott and Abbott are classed with him. And may they and all who have given an anti-Catholic bias to their works have no successors!"

THE "New England Sabbath Protective League," at its second annual session, held last January, chose as its president U. S. Senator George F. Hoar, of Worcester, Mass. The latter was written a letter of acceptance of the office, in which he says: "I believe thoroughly in a day of rest, which shall be largely devoted to the contemplation of divine themes and to the worship of God and teaching His law, and in protecting the observance against disturbance by secular labor, or other discords, by law."

A WELL-KNOWN millionaire of this city, who condemned the extravagance of the late fancy dress ball, is reported as having recently taken a mortgage on the property of his own brother, who is in straitened circumstances, as security for a fifty-dollar loan. This furnishes an illustration of the most useless sort of individual a community can contain. The millionaire hoarder of wealth is far more to be condemned than the most reckless fortune squanderer that lives. See James 5:3.

In a report of a sermon preached in Cooper Union, New York City, February 22, Rev. A. C. Dixon is quoted as saying: "I am not going to make a patriotic address—though I'd like to. God pity the man who has no better country than this. It's the best country in this world; but there's a better country where Jesus Christ is King." We commend these words to the Christian Endeavorers, who have set out to "enthroned Christ on Capitol Hill."

A LARGE part of the present-day teaching in regard to Sabbath observance simmers down to this: "It isn't the keeping of a particular day that is enjoined in the Sabbath commandment; that is a point that is not essential, provided you keep Sunday. You needn't be particular so far as the Lord is concerned; but if you don't keep Sunday, we'll get our Sunday law into operation and make you wish you had kept that particular day!"

"It is to be hoped," says the February Christian Endeavorer, "that we will hear no more of the foolish . . . saying: 'It makes no difference what day of the week we observe as Sabbath, so that we observe one.'" Sunday defenders, take notice.

THE United Society of Christian Endeavor announces that the next annual convention of the organization will be held in San Francisco, July 7-12.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD.

Wilt thou rally thy legions to battle,
And march on the City of Light,
Whence angels excelling in power
Were hurled to the regions of night?

Wilt thou compass the city eternal,
Its towers and battlements raze,
And train thy batteries brazen
On the throne of the Ancient of Days?

CAN NATIONS CONTEND WITH GOD?

"At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation." ⁶

For a nation to compel a subject to disobey the laws of a foreign nation, when it knows it is powerless to protect him in so doing, is but to murder its citizen in cold blood, and merit international contempt.

Will the government attempt to protect its citizens against the wrath of an offended God? Will it declare war on the King of kings? Can it marshal its hosts and hurl its serried columns against the Eternal City?

"WE OUGHT TO OBEY GOD RATHER THAN MEN." ⁷

"WHEN they went from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another people; he suffered no man to do them wrong: . . . saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." ⁷

If God had intended that his children should submit to governments in matters of conscience, he would not have protected Daniel in the lions' den, the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace, nor have delivered Peter and John, Paul and Silas, from their prison cells, where they were placed for disobeying human enactments.

GOD AND THE POWERS THAT BE.

"RENDER therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's." ⁸

God has ordained that governments should exist among men. To these governments he has commanded his people to render tribute, honor, and respect. He has commanded them to be obedient to every ordinance of man, not for fear of punishment, but for the Lord's sake. So long as a government enforces ordinances of men, — such laws only as are necessary for the protection of men in the enjoyment of their equal, natural rights, — they will not come in conflict with the Christian.

The TWO REPUBLICS.

Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the Powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

THE religious world in general has now entered upon that period of extra-biblical observances which culminates in the festival of Easter.

This festival has acquired an importance in the religious world which is in inverse proportion to the distinction accorded it in the Scriptures of divine truth. By Catholics and Protestants alike, it will be observed in a manner calculated to give the impression that it is a thing of the greatest importance to all Christians, instead of a mere innovation, as it is, without any standing whatever in the Word of God.

Why is this day observed? By Protestants, it is observed in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ. The underlying idea of the observance is that on Easter morning Christ arose from the dead. Easter day is not a weekly or monthly day, but a yearly day; and in its celebration Protestants recognize the fact that the day of Christ's resurrection from the dead is a yearly day. Like any other event,—as for example the birth of the infant Christ,—the day of its happening would recur not once a week or once a month, but once a year. As well might it be claimed that Christmas or Independence day comes every week, as that this is true of the day of Christ's resurrection.

The festival of Easter, we repeat, is on the part of Protestants at least, a recognition of this fact; for if the day of the resurrection comes once a week, it does not come once a year, but fifty-two times a year; and any yearly celebration of the day would be without any reason whatever.

But these same Protestants observe the first day of every week in commemoration of this same event. In this they contradict themselves with reference to Easter; and in the observance of Easter they contradict themselves with reference to Sunday.

Of course, being a yearly day, it could not come every year on Sunday; yet lo, by theological sleight-of-hand it is made to coincide every year with that day of the week! Equally marvelous with this is the fact that it does not have to occur each year in the same month. Sometimes it happens in March, sometimes in April, according as the moon may have full before or after the sun "crossed the line." But whether in one month or the other, it is celebrated as the day of the resurrection of Christ.

Had this celebration been fixed on a certain date, as Christmas is, the religious world would have found itself celebrating, very often, some other day of the week than Sunday in commemoration of the resurrection. And this is the way it should be, if any attempt is to be made to celebrate the day at all. But this would be a contradiction of Sunday observance which even the most accomplished theologian would not be able to explain. Consequently it was decreed that the date must coincide with Sunday, and the month and day of the month were left to adjust themselves to a day of the week.

Of course, nobody knows the date of Christ's resurrection from the dead, any more than the date of his birth. Doubtless it was not designed by the Almighty that these dates should be known. If God had wished either of them to be observed, he would have preserved them for that purpose; but their observance serves no purpose in His economy, and He would not give any people an excuse for observances which He has not commanded.

Would it not be better—infinity so—to observe a day which God has plainly commanded, and which He Himself has fixed in the week? By resting on the seventh day after His six days' labor, and blessing and sanctifying that day as a day of rest and blessing for mankind, the Creator established the weekly division of time, and fixed the seventh day of that period as the Sabbath. Why will the religious world turn aside from the one day which God has so plainly commanded, to do honor to other days which he has never approved? Have they reasons for this which it is certain the Creator will accept?

"Sundays Excepted."

A SPEAKER at the "Christian Citizenship" meeting in Washington, February 28, contended that the words "Sundays excepted" in that clause of the Constitution which relates to the signing of bills by the President, were sufficient to demonstrate that Sunday observance is Constitutional and therefore not un-American.

These words of the Constitution, however, afford no basis whatever for an enforced observance of Sunday. The most that can be deduced from them is an acknowledgment of the President's right to rest on Sunday from his official work. He is granted a certain length of time in which to consider bills passed by Congress before affixing his signature thereto, and in order to avail himself of the full limit, he would be obliged to do such work on Sunday were that day not designated as an exception. Were the words "Sundays excepted" left out, the provision would simply amount to the statement that the President has nine days in which to consider the said bills, unless he should be a man devoid of religious scruples, which would be rarely if ever the case. But the framers of the Constitution designed that the President should have ten days—not nine days—in any case, and accordingly made this allowance for conscientious scruples against Sunday work.

No one claims that mere Sunday observance, in obedience to the dictates of conscience, is unconstitutional or un-American. Neither also is it Constitutional; for what is Constitutional is established in the supreme law of the land. It is simply outside the sphere of the Constitution; and that instrument does not undertake to regulate it in any way. If the President wishes to examine bills on Sunday, there is nothing in the Constitution to prevent him; and he is equally free to observe that day as the Sabbath if he believes that he ought to do so.

But compulsory Sunday observance is another thing altogether. That is not sanctioned by the Constitution in any way. That can be secured only by religious legislation, which is forbidden so far as the provisions of the Constitution extend, and is totally un-American and un-Christian.

The Spirit of It.

THE spirit of the traffic represented by the saloon is strikingly shown in the following words reported as having been spoken by an official of the Ohio Liquor League, at a recent meeting of that body:—

"It will appear from these facts, gentlemen, that the success of our business is dependent largely upon the creation of appetite for drink. Men who drink liquor, like others, will die, and if there is no new appetite created, our counters will be empty, as will be our coffers. Our children will go hungry, or we must change our business to that of some other more remunerative.

"The open field for the creation of this appetite is among the boys. After men have grown and their habits are formed, they rarely ever change in this regard. It will be needful, therefore, that missionary work be done among the boys, and I make the suggestion, gentlemen, that nickels expended in treats to the boys now, will return in dollars to your tills after the appetite has been formed. Above all things, create appetite."

The Union Signal, of January 28, prints the above, and adds: "Such a statement seems absolutely fiendish; and yet, whether spoken or unspoken, the fact remains that the traffic exists only by recruits from among the boys. 'Wanted, a hundred thousand boys,' must be the constant motto of this infamous business, that a few may grow rich and their children live in luxury while their patrons go down to the lowest depths of degradation and poverty."

Yet the Union Signal favors a Sunday-closing law, by which this hideous Moloch would have legal authority for the propagation of his awful work; for it cannot be denied that a Sunday-closing law means legal sanction of the saloon on other days of the week. How can Christians advocate any compromise with this evil? How can Christianity compromise with anything that is "fiendish"? Why should there be a Sunday law for the liquor traffic, any more than a Sunday law for murder?

Sabbath Observance Convention at Lancaster, Pa.

THE annual convention of the "Lancaster County Sabbath Association," was held February 4, at Lancaster, Pa. The session was devoted to a general discussion of topics relating to Sunday observance, and a number of resolutions on the subject were presented and passed in the usual manner.

The points embodied in the resolutions were that,—

1. The Sabbath is an institution of divine origin, of universal and perpetual obligation, declared both in nature and revelation; and has been transferred by divine authority from the seventh to the first day of the week.

2. Beyond all doubt the Lord's day is fast becoming secularized in the entire country.

3. The Republic can be perpetuated only upon the eternal principles of the gospel, and by heeding the command to keep holy the Sabbath day.

4. The Sabbath was given for spiritual development as well as bodily rest, and the Sunday newspaper does not conduce to spiritual development and should therefore be shunned.

5. There should be no Sunday traffic and excursions to deprive workingmen of Sunday rest.

6. The Mayor of Lancaster ought to issue a proclamation stopping all Sunday business and the crying of Sunday newspapers, and municipal legislation should be had in the matter, if necessary.

7. The excuse of closed church doors in the summer months should be removed from those who are not disposed to Sunday observance.

8. Christians should not maintain Sunday excursion trains and other Sunday traffic at camp-meetings and other outdoor services.

9. The citizens of Lancaster protest against any Sunday selling of liquor in hotels, and against any change in the Sunday law of the State, except the imposition of a heavier penalty for its violation.

The discussion of these resolutions developed that variety of opinion respecting the nature and obligation of the Sabbath which is the necessary result of the lack of Scripture and logic behind the first-day institution. The Sabbath being an institution of divine origin and of universal and perpetual obligation, could not possibly have experienced a transfer from the seventh to the first day of the week. It stands in the very bosom of the immutable precepts of the Decalogue. Its very basis is the resting of God upon a particular day, and His blessing of the same. The assumption that it can be changed from that particular day to another day which God neither rested upon nor blessed, and which therefore affords no basis for the Sabbath, is a starting point from which men's minds can progress only further and further from the truth, and arrive only at the most divergent conclusions.

A number of things were said by the different speakers which will not harmonize with the idea of enforced "sabbath" observance.

The president, Rev. Mr. Fry, said that the rock on which the Sabbath day stands is not political expediency nor physical necessity, but religious principle. But what would become of the movement for Sunday enforcement if the plea of political expediency and physical necessity could not be urged in its support?

Rev. Mr. Hayes said that the Sabbath calls men to worship, to commune with God. To try to enforce the Sabbath by law, therefore, is to attempt to force men to commune with God. He said also that the claim so frequently made that the Sabbath is a Jewish institution is absolutely untrue; and this he proved by conclusive evidence. But if the Sabbath is not now a Jewish institution, was it ever such? And if it was never such, what ground in logic or Scripture is there for the phrase "Jewish Sabbath"?

Mrs. Dr. Underwood said that Sabbath rest and Sabbath reverence were inseparable, and could not rightfully be divorced. This being true, as it is, any attempt to enforce Sabbath rest by law must be as improper as an attempt to enforce Sabbath reverence.

Rev. J. Y. Mitchell said: "We hear a great deal of talk at sabbath conventions about Sunday papers, trolley cars, etc., but if members of the Church are the elect of God (and I believe they are) we ought not to consider so much what is transpiring outside as within, and I argue that if every Christian should resolve that henceforth he would keep the Sabbath as it should be observed, it would have ten times as much influence as all the resolutions you can spread upon your minute books." It is at the "house of God" that Sabbath reform needs to begin; but the Church, instead of doing her duty in this respect, is calling for laws to inaugurate such a reform among the "heathen" outside her fold.

Rev. J. M. Titzel was the only speaker to oppose a Sunday law, and this he did in a vigorous address in which he said that the Church should stand for what is right, and that church members should observe the Lord's day because it is right. "Fall back upon the power of law," he said, "and you have nothing upon which to stand. I have no sympathy with the formulation of laws to inculcate morals in the people."

Would that all those who stand before the people as ambassadors for Christ might realize that the Sabbath stands in the power of God, supported by His own immutable law, not one jot or tittle of which can fail while heaven and earth continue. Then they would not be saying to the world, as they do in these "sabbath" conventions, that the Sabbath depends for its enforcement upon the fallible, mutable laws of finite man.

State Interference With the Church.

It would seem from the following which appears in The Outlook of February 13, that Congregationalism in the State of New York has been very seriously restricted, if not practically abolished, by State legislation recently enacted governing religious corporations:—

"By the 'Religious Corporations Law' passed in 1895, without, so far as we have been able to discover, any knowledge or suspicion on the part of the churches generally, and certainly with a total absence of information on the subject among nine-tenths of the churches affected thereby, Congregationalism has been abolished in the State of New York.

"We should have a right to expect in such a law, adopted in a process of codification, simplicity and system. But these qualities are conspicuously lacking. It is not easy to understand what the Religious Corporations Law of 1895 means, nor what its real effect will be. Certain of its provisions are, however, painfully clear. The distinction between church and society is abolished. All persons of full age who are members in good and regular standing, or who have been stated attendants on divine worship in the church and have regularly contributed to its support for the year next preceding, are made qualified voters at all meetings, spiritual and temporal. At every such meeting the pastor, if present, must preside, and in his absence the oldest officer of the church. This presiding officer has the absolute right to 'receive the votes, be the judge of the qualifications of voters, and declare the result of the votes cast on any matter.' He may keep the polls open at the annual meeting just as long as he likes, so as to give his friends time to drum up absent voters from any quarter; or he can shut them up at the end of one hour, subject only to an appeal to the qualified voters present, at which he will do the counting.

"Finally, Congregationalists are apparently furnished with a 'governing religious body' in the American Congregational Union, and Baptists with a 'governing religious body' in the Baptist Missionary Convention. We say apparently, for one section seems to make this provision, another seems to recognize that there are some denominations which have no governing religious body, and by one act in 1896 the Baptists appear to be taken out from the operation of this law altogether, and by another act to be put back under its operation. It is, at all events, provided that if any church 'has failed for two consecutive years to maintain religious services according to the discipline, customs, and usages of such governing body, or has had less than thirteen resident attending members paying annually pew rent, or making annual contribution toward its support,' it may be declared by such governing body to be extinct, and the body may proceed to take possession of its property 'and apply the proceeds thereof to any of the purposes to which the property of such governing religious body is devoted.'

"Under this law members of a Congregational church who have ceased for years to attend upon its services, but have not been stricken from its rolls, may be brought in at any time to outvote those who have regularly attended and regularly contributed to its support. They may fix the salary of the pastor, may employ and discharge or fix the salaries of any other officers, they may, indeed, give any directions not inconsistent with positive law; and the trustees have no option except to obey.

"So the pastor, instead of being any longer one of the brethren, having leadership only in spiritual affairs, is given a control wholly foreign to the spirit of Congregationalism. He determines who can vote, and he may keep the polls open as long as may be necessary to drum up voters to support him in a contested election. In his absence the oldest person who holds any church office becomes presiding officer in his place. There is not even any distinction between the kind of officers, after the church is once organized. The oldest and most decrepit man or woman who has been intrusted with any little office in the church has the right to take the chair and do all the counting. No appeal lies from the decision thus made, except by taking the case into the Supreme Court.

"Finally, the whole idea of independency, which is fundamental to both Congregational and Baptist discipline, is cast aside. The churches are no longer free to determine their own creed, ritual, and method of government. They are required to conform to the 'discipline, customs, and usages of such governing body,' although the very essence of Congregationalism is that there is no governing body and that no church is under any obligation to conform to any discipline, customs, or usages, but is a pure, spiritual democracy, with no law over it but the law of Christ, to be interpreted by itself. Thus the independence of Congregational and Baptist churches, so nobly maintained during a struggle of two centuries, and never questioned in the third century of their existence, is destroyed at a blow by a piece of secret legislation, pushed through without attracting the slightest public attention. The legislation would not be worse if the law forbade bishops to exercise any supervision in an Episcopal church, or abolished the Session, Presbytery and Synod, and General Assembly in the Presbyterian Church and required all churches to be independent.

"The Congregational and the Baptist churches should at once take this matter up; they should discuss it in their church and associational meetings; they should study this law and understand its bearings; they should seek the counsel of the best ecclesiastical lawyers, and then they should make common cause to secure the abolition of a statute which might well be entitled 'An Act to Abolish Independency and to Secure Uniformity of Church Government and Worship in all Independent Churches.'"

Doubtless the authors of this legislation had no intention of abolishing Congregationalism in this State; and that this has been virtually done, as the Outlook declares, only illustrates how easily the power of the State may be made to invade religious freedom. The State has of course the right to legislate in regard to religious corporations, covering the merely civil relation which such bodies bear as corporations to the State. But the State has no shadow of right to undertake to regulate the internal affairs of a church as it would those of a corporation. Very likely the State has been moved to this kind of legislation by a disposition on the part of the churches to make use of the State's power in the regulation and settlement of church matters. Let the Church rely upon the power and wisdom of God for her success; and let the State refrain from any intrusion upon the affairs of the Church.

A One-Day-In-Seven Rest Bill.

A CIRCULAR has been sent out in Massachusetts by a committee of Lowell citizens, asking coöperation in securing the passage of the following bill, which has been introduced into the State legislature, under the title, "An Act to better secure a rest-day for working people":—

"SECTION 1. No county, town, city, municipal or other corporation, organized, located, or doing business in the Commonwealth, and no official, agent, or servant of corporation, or of the Commonwealth, shall directly or indirectly cause or allow any person to perform labor, either under contract or otherwise, for such corporation or the Commonwealth, more than six days in a week.

"SECTION 2. Any corporation or person violating the provisions of this Act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100 for each violation.

"SECTION 3. This act shall take effect July 1, 1897."

The movement to secure this legislation, it is stated, was inaugurated at a meeting of the General Association of Congregational churches of Massachusetts, held at Fall River last May. The circular states that "while this bill will not secure to them [workingmen] all we desire, looking at it as Christians from a religious standpoint, yet we are satisfied it is all that can be obtained by legislation at the present time."

This, of course, is a plain intimation that what "we desire, looking at it as Christians from a religious standpoint," is hoped for from legislation in the future. And what else is to be expected but that preachers and church people will look at the matter "from a religious standpoint," and will be moved in the matter by motives arising from religious belief?

Why has the movement for a legalized weekly rest day been inaugurated and controlled by the churches and religious societies, if the motives behind it are not of a religious character?

It will be noticed that this proposed bill does not specify any day of the week as the day of rest; but it is assumed in the circular that "if this bill becomes a law it will make it the interest of all incorporated companies in the State to reduce their Sunday labor to a minimum."

However this may be, or whatever the reason which makes this a one-day-in-seven bill instead of a direct Sunday bill, the fact remains that no legislation can be proper on the subject of a weekly day of rest. A weekly rest is a matter which the Creator himself took into consideration at the close of creation, and which is entirely covered by his own Sabbath law, the fourth commandment. That law applies to every individual of mankind; it is the best law for a weekly rest that could possibly be made, and is in full force at the present time. Hence there is neither occasion nor room for human legislation on the subject. By any attempt at this, man will only invade the prerogatives of God.

A Protest Against Religious Legislation

BY CITIZENS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF CONNECTICUT

Efforts to induce the legislature of Connecticut to enact new legislation in the interests of Sunday observance, have prompted seventh-day observers in that State to protest to the governor and legislature against such measures, on the ground of their unjust character, and of the guaranties of religious freedom contained in the National and State constitutions.

The protest calls attention to the principles of justice and liberty upon which this Government was founded, as indicated in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Great Seal of the United States, which pledges "a new order of things," the writings of Jefferson, Washington, and others; and to the following definite provision of the constitution of Connecticut upon the point in question:—

"ARTICLE 1, SEC. 3. The exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination, shall forever be free to all persons in this State, provided the right hereby declared and established shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or to justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the State.

"SEC. 4. No preference shall be given by the law to any Christian sect, or mode of worship."

The protest cites recent cases of religious persecution under Sunday laws in Tennessee and elsewhere, and quotes the following in reference to Sunday from a decision by Chief Justice Welch, of the Ohio Supreme Court:—

"The General Assembly of Ohio is not a guardian of the sanctity of the day. If it may protect the first day of the week from desecration because it is the Christian Sabbath, it may in like manner protect the sixth day because it is the holy day of the Mohammedan; and the seventh day because it is the Sabbath of the Jew and Seventh-day Baptist."

NATURE OF TRUE SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

The nature of true Sabbath observance is set forth by the protest in the following:—

"The repeal of Sunday laws does not mean the abolition of the Sabbath. It means that the Sabbath shall be what God designed it to be, a free-will recognition of God's authority over the conscience, and therefore a distinguishing sign of those people who really worship God. The Bible says:—

"It is a sign between me and you. . . . that ye may know that I am the Lord which doth sanctify you."

"When that sign is enforced by arbitrary authority upon all, it ceases to be a sign of the sincere worshiper of God, and become a sign of the slavish submission of the soul to the State. It has been demonstrated in this nation, that religion and religious institutions have never been so prospered as when kept to themselves, without any aid or support from the State. Neither is it reasonable to suppose that this principle would be reversed in the matter of Sabbath observance, but that the claims of the Sabbath would receive far greater respect if only Christian methods were used to bring the institution before the people, instead of the mediæval method of force. In proof of this we would quote an extract from an article in the New-York Observer, by 'Holloway,' correspondent from California, where there are no Sunday laws. Speaking of San Francisco, he says:—

"Labor of all kinds can be carried on without hindrance. But while there is an absence of all Sunday laws, we must not draw the conclusion that there is no respect paid to the Lord's day. Truth compels us to state that San Francisco is a sabbath-keeping city. The drift is plainly in that direction. With very rare exceptions, you will find as much order and quiet in the streets as in some of our most favored Eastern cities. Those who knew California twenty years ago, now witness a far different order of things. The mass of the people respect and keep the Lord's day. No merchant of any respectability keeps his store open on the sabbath."

FUTILITY OF SUNDAY LAWS.

Of the futility of Sunday laws, the protest says:—

"In 1885 Mr. Crafts published his book, 'The Sabbath for Man.' In this book he relates that in order to obtain a world-wide view of sabbath observance, he corresponded with many people in different parts of the world, asking them among other questions, the following:—

"Where have you seen the best sabbath observance?"

"To this a San Francisco clergyman responds—

"Among the Christian people of California."

"Another statement in the same book is—

"Both laymen and ministers say that even in California the sabbath is, on the whole, better observed, and Christian services better attended than five years ago."

"Five years ago,' at that time was three years before the repeal of the California Sunday law."

Touching the proposed legislation, it says:—

"Against House Bill No. 186, entitled 'An Act Amending Section 1569 of General Statutes Relating to Work or Recreation on Sunday,' we most earnestly protest.

"We protest against this amendment because its object is to make more stringent the Sunday laws, which are already contrary to the principles of true Americanism. For a thousand years after Sunday began to be observed as a professedly Christian institution, and for a number of centuries after ordinary work was prohibited on that day, no one thought of prohibiting sports and recreation. Our Puritan ancestors were the first to make this attempt; and to antagonize their influence the laws regulating 'Field Sports' were passed during the reign of the Stuarts.

"This is a revival of Puritanism, per se. If its object were to prevent a nuisance in the form of a disturbance of public worship, it should apply alike to all days, since what constitutes such a nuisance on one day, would constitute the same nuisance on any other. But there are already laws to prevent such a nuisance; and so this, if that were its intent, would be cumulative legislation, and so unnecessary. If its object is to restrain the individual, and direct him for his own personal good, as to how he shall spend the day, we urge and protest that such laws are paternal, and un-American. The State is not the guardian of the individual health or welfare of its subjects."

The basis of the Sabbatic institution, and the conscientious belief of some in the Word of God, are next referred to:—

BASIS OF THE SABBATIC INSTITUTION.

"The fourth commandment of the Decalogue, which is almost universally acknowledged to be the basis of the Sabbatic institution, reads—

"Six days SHALT THOU LABOR, and do all thy work; but the SEVENTH DAY is the SABBATH of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work."

"We conscientiously believe that this means what it says, and that it therefore requires that men shall rest on the seventh day, and habitually work on the other six, including the first."

In conclusion, the protest defines the attitude of those for whom it speaks in the matter of compulsory Sunday legislation, and briefly summarises their objections to the same, as follows:—

"We do not wish to compel others to either think or act as we do in this matter; but we deny their right to compel us, or to in any way molest us, on account of our religious faith and doctrine. While we are loyal supporters of civil government in civil things, yet we can not habitually rest on Sunday, for we dare not do what to us is to disobey God, and to recognize a false and rival sabbath. God has given us the right to obey Him, not as men may happen to decide we ought, but as He by His Spirit guides us into the understanding of His Word; and the Constitution of Connecticut, before quoted, recognizes this right in every citizen, so long as he does not obstruct the worship of others.

"We believe, therefore, that this whole Sunday-law movement is a giant stride backward toward the Dark Ages.

"We believe it to be utterly inimical with both the principles of true Americanism, as defined by the fathers of this Republic.

"We believe that it is logically a complete repudiation of the 'new order of things' to which this Government stands pledged before the world.

"We believe that if it is permitted to go on, ecclesiasticism will be revived, the chains of priestcraft will be forged anew, and the nineteenth century will darken into a night of oppression, instead of proving as it was hoped by the fathers of the Republic that it would, but the dawning of liberty.

"We therefore most earnestly petition the honorable members of the Legislature of Connecticut to stand as patriots for the principles of true Americanism, that this Government may teach, as it was once believed that it would, the lesson of liberty to the world."

The Rearmament of Europe.

"New York Observer," Jan. 14.

THE European governments are again in a panic of fear, or are simulating fear in order to familiarize the minds of their subjects with the necessity for new armaments. In nearly every State with land frontiers to defend the parliaments are, or will soon be, confronted with extra military budgets, even Greece, Holland and Denmark being occupied with projects for fresh levies or increase of armaments. The mingled jealousy and fear on the Continent is so strong that the minutest change in military organization and equipment on the part of one power is instantly noted and followed by the others; that men and guns are counted as carefully as if they were gold pieces, and the alteration of a shoe buckle becomes at once the subject of military discussion. The discovery of a new high explosive, or the invention of a new kind of gunpowder, creates a perfect frenzy of apprehension, and all artillery and rifles must be immediately adjusted to them or created anew, even if it takes the last dollar in the treasuries and mortgages the future.

In the present instance it is France that has started the alarm with the new quick-firing Canet gun, which throws a shrapnel shell loaded with 300 bullets five times a minute, with a range of nearly 7,000 metres, and her request for extra infantry battalions amounting to an increase of 70,000 men. Germany is alarmed in turn, or pretends that she is, in order to drag new credits out of the pockets of her subjects, her newspapers shrieking that with such an increase of French armament, the destruction of the German Empire is threatened. Accordingly, she will, it is reported, expend fifty million dollars in new quick-firing guns, of her own model, the largest isolated expenditure on war material yet known, and will, in addition, create new infantry regiments and reorganize her battalions and brigades. This expansion of armaments will, it is held, necessitate a large increase of war preparation on the part of Austria, which cannot, or will think she cannot, lose her place in the unending race toward war without risks too heavy to bear.

So the struggle goes on, every nation having a lurking fear that it is approaching the end of its resources, yet so oppressed with jealousy and fear that it is unwilling to lighten in any particular the crushing burden of armor it carries. There is not a government that has any confidence in its neighbors, or any feeling of security though armored to the toes, and so continues its preparations as if war were only a question of to-morrow, and was certainly one of next year. Every one of them knows that but for their jealousies, which are not policies upon the maintenance of which their existence depends, but only vulgar jealousies, they might save annually hundreds of millions of money and release two millions of men for the arts of peace; but not one of them is willing to trust the other.

And the worst feature of it all is that there is no probability of any change, for the nations which have struggled on in this way for twenty years can do so for twenty years more, and will do so until some cure for their fears not yet suggested has been found. A war which would kill off a whole generation of men and set the clock of civilization back fifty years might bring back the reign of common sense, though we are not hopeful. As for universal arbitration and disarmament, it is a mere dream of enthusiasts.

In his inaugural address, President McKinley said:—

"The great essential to our happiness and prosperity is that we adhere to the principles upon which the Government was established, and insist upon their faithful observance."

No more truthful utterance could have been made; and we trust it will be kept in mind by the President and also by Congress when they are being urged, as they certainly will be, to depart from those principles by enacting the so-called "Christian" amendment to the Constitution, which would incorporate the "revealed will of Jesus Christ" into the civil law of the land. "The principles upon which the Government was established" separate the State from religion; and they were adopted not because the men who established the Government were irreligious, for they were not; but because they had read and profited by the lessons of history upon that point, and had too much respect for the Christian religion to be willing to see it drawn into the arena of political contention. They believed in religious liberty, which means equality for all religions before the law. Shall this fundamental principle of our Government now be set aside? The attitude of Congress and the President toward the "Christian" amendment will furnish the answer to this question.

The Practical Side of It.

It may seem to many that there is nothing more than theory in the discussion carried on by the SENTINEL touching the Church-and-State tendencies which are seen to-day in the American Government. In their own minds at least such have no doubt queried whether these alleged dangers are likely to bear any tangible fruits. The answer to this query is given in the following figures taken from the biennial report of President Moon, of the International Religious Liberty Association, covering the period from March 4, 1895, to the present date:—

No account is made in this of the temporary confinement of the above and other defendants during the process of their respective trials.

The arrests by States and Territories for this period are as follows: Alabama, 1; Arkansas, 3; California, 1; Georgia, 1; Illinois, 9; Maryland, 10; Mississippi, 2;

North Carolina, 2; Tennessee, 22; Texas, 1; Manitoba, 1; Ontario, 7. Total, 60.

This is the practical side—and intensely practical it is to the victims—of the movement to reestablish the Church-and-State features of colonial times, which the American Government was thought to have happily outgrown. Will you still believe, reader, that there is “nothing in it”?

“Christian Citizenship” Meeting in Washington, D. C.

By Our Washington Correspondent.

THE Reform Bureau on Sunday, February 28, held two “Christian Citizenship” rallies. In the afternoon, a meeting was held in the Western Presbyterian Church, under the auspices of the various young people’s societies of the city, at which Dr. Crafts, Superintendent of the Bureau, presided. The meeting was addressed by Rev. H. W. Ennis of the Philip and Andrew Society, W. H. Pennel, Chairman of the Good Citizenship Committee of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the District of Columbia, Mrs. S. D. LaFetra, Superintendent of the World’s Christian Citizenship Department of the Woman’s Christian Temperance Union, and the chairman of the meeting, Mr. Crafts. The various lines of reform in which the Bureau has been interested during the past winter were presented in a general way; and the following resolution was adopted:—

Resolved, That this meeting, called in the interest of Christian citizenship, hereby authorizes its presiding officer and speakers in its behalf to petition the United States Senate to pass the Morse and Little acts, and both Houses to pass: (1) The Washington bill to further protect the first day of the week in the District of Columbia; (2) The Shannon bill to raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen in the District of Columbia; (3) The Gillett bill to forbid interstate gambling by telegraph; and (4) the Aldrich bill to forbid the transmission by mail or telegraph of pictures or descriptions of prize fighting.

The meeting in the evening was held in the Luther Memorial Church, and there was an audience of perhaps one hundred and fifty. Dr. J. G. Butler, pastor of the church, presided; and addresses were made by Representative Elijah A. Morse, Dr. J. H. Elliott, pastor of the Church of the Ascension, Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, national superintendent of legislation of the W. C. T. U., and Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

Dr. Elliott took for his text the words, “Sundays excepted,” found in the Constitution of the United States. He said in substance; Sunday is excepted because it is a day of rest. It is recognized as such. Of thirty State constitutions defining the veto powers of the governors, twenty-eight have used these words taken from the United States Constitution, “Sundays excepted.” Since it is excepted for the President, why not for the laborer? The President has secured to him by the Constitution of the United States, in the very body of that noble document, a Sunday of rest. How then can it be argued that it is at variance with the Constitution to enact a law with reference to Sunday? The amendment to the Constitution forbidding the establishment of religion cannot destroy this portion of the Constitution. That amendment was proposed by those who had framed the Constitution. The men who framed the Constitution observed Sunday. I am prepared to say that they regularly adjourned on Sunday. They made it a day of rest. Congress recognizes that Sunday is not a legislative day; when they work on Sunday it is still Saturday not Sunday. Congress has seven times enacted Sunday laws. The gentlemen who object to the constitutionality of these laws, do not remember what a reproach they are laying upon Congress when they make that charge. Congress has again and again enacted Sunday laws. How can any one maintain then that it is unconstitutional? Has Congress always made a mistake?

We are fortified still further by the judicial decision which was rendered in the case of King vs. Crowley. In all the States except Idaho and California there are Sunday laws. It is not the enactment of Sunday laws that is un-American; but the absence of such laws. We are not seeking for exceptional legislation, but we are seeking to correct an exceptional lack of legislation.

We are apt to think of the small restrictions that are imposed upon us by Sunday laws; but suppose there had never been a Sunday of rest. Suppose we were to go on day after day and year after year, toiling unceasingly, and some one came and announced a rest day, one in seven, would we not hail him as a benefactor?

When a man becomes a naturalized American citizen, we would have him become naturalized as a Christian. We would have the flags of our country tell all nations of the country’s God.

One of the speakers said that when it came to a choice between attending a prayer meeting and a primary, the Christian citizen should go to the latter.

Dr. Crafts said the two handles of politics are the primary and the lobby. They are now in bad hands; and they must be laid hold of by good hands if politics are ever to be reformed. All of us are to be engaged in politics. We should be members of the first, second, or “third” house. He then acted as chairman of the “third” house, and the same resolutions were presented and adopted as at the afternoon meeting.

SOME of the statements made at the “Christian Citizenship” rally in Washington, reported above, were quite characteristic of the effort to defend the character of Sunday laws. One speaker, for instance, said that “Congress has again and again enacted Sunday laws,” and hence Sunday laws must be right, for Congress could not be mistaken so many times. But recollecting that Congress itself sometimes works on Sunday, he said, “When they work on Sunday it is still Saturday, not Sunday"! This must be on the principle that by turning back the hands of the clock which tells the assembled legislators the time of day, Congress can prolong the last hours of an expiring session without going beyond the day fixed for its close. As a matter of fact, Sunday sessions of one or the other houses of Congress are of comparatively frequent occurrence, the last instance of this being the session of the Senate on Sunday, February 28.

National Christianity.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THERE seems to be something very fascinating to some people in the name of "Christian nation." They regard it as a kind of panacea, a cure-all, for the ills that nations are heir to. They seem surely to forget that if a nation is not Christian, calling it so will not make it so; and if it is truly a Christian nation, it does not need to be called so.

As we scan the pages of history, we are startled by the fact continually forced upon us, that the greatest governmental and national acts of wickedness in many nations were coincident with the time when they posed as Christian nations. The massacre on St. Bartholomew's Day, in France, and the expelling of the Huguenots from the same country, were national acts of the French nation, and they were perpetrated at a time when the people of France had come to believe that it was a Christian nation. Furthermore, an act of the Pope, head of the Catholic Church, which church at that time was almost the only representative of Christianity, popularly so considered, sanctioned the atrocious national crime of the murder of the Huguenots.

There was a "Christian nation" perpetrating one of the greatest national crimes ever known; and the head of what was generally considered to be the Christian Church at that time sanctioned the action! Numerous instances of a similar character, where so-called Christian nations have committed the greatest crimes, might be cited.

If nations are Christian, their acts must be Christian acts. The exact status of their Christianity is better expressed by their deeds than by anything else. Hence the expelling of the Jews from Spain in a past age, and from Russia in modern times, must be considered as Christian acts. Indeed, they are good illustrations of national Christianity.

Take the nations of Europe to-day: they are Christian nations—that is to say, some phase of the Christian religion is united with the State and receives the support of the State. Now, if this profession of religion by the State amounts to anything, if it is a reality, and not a hollow mockery and hypocritical sham, then the organic utterances and acts of these powers, as well as their ruling motives of action, must be of a Christian character. And that is to say that they must be seeking the good of others rather than their own good.

But everyone knows that they act in a way that is directly the reverse of this. Each nation selfishly pursues its own way, with little regard to the rights or desires of others, unless they are forced to respect these rights. It is the constant study of the statesmen of each nation to advantage that nation; and if, in so doing, some other nation is injured, no sorrow is felt.

So strong is this feeling of selfish interest that nations will go to war with other nations and commit murder by the wholesale, that they may retain some advantage, or gain some new one, over another nation. If a nation can commit such acts and be a Christian nation at the time because the decree of a king, an act of Parliament, or the decision of a court, says it is so, will not some Christian-nation theologian please explain to a layman why a man cannot be a Christian man by simply saying he is such, and keep right on in doing all kinds of wicked and selfish actions?

This idea of governmental Christianity which professes to be what it is not, and which is Christian by merely saying so, sets a tremendous example of evil to the people. For if a nation can be Christian while doing all kinds of wickedness, why can't a man practice the same evils and still be a Christian? Thus a "Christian nation" actually leads the people of the nation to accept the ideal, by which the Christianity of the nation is dragged down to the low plane of profession without possession.

A correspondent of the Inter Ocean, writing from the Phillipine Islands, and describing the cruelties practised on the natives by the Spaniards, says: "Spain makes great pretensions as a Christian nation, and yet she indulges in cruel practices the most contrary to the merciful teachings of Christianity." This statement shows the utter hollowness of the profession of national Christianity. A profession of Christianity by a nation in national capacity is the inevitable prelude to cruel practices. It has been so in past ages; it will be so in our age and in our country.

The fathers of our nation knew this, and hence laid down the principle that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." To-day we see many thousands of people who hold that these men were mistaken—that national Christianity, a national religion by law, is a blessing. They are ready to try again an experiment which has heretofore always led to persecution and to most grievous wrongs perpetrated in the name of the merciful Redeemer. May God enlighten their minds to the evil they would do, before it shall be too late.

It is one thing to say that the Bible, as we have it to-day, contains many passages which are not perfect translations of the original text, and quite another thing to say that the Bible is not infallible. There may be many places where the best words were not used in translation, but [the teaching of the Bible is truth, in every book and every text; and that truth can be discovered by a prayerful study of the text, comparing scripture with scripture, as its divine Author intended should be done. The Bible is infallible; and our eminent theologians would admit it if they were not so sure that they are infallible themselves.

Religious Freedom.

From an address by Dr. David Philipson at Mound Street Temple, Chicago, February 20.

WHEN, at the foundation of this Government, the constitutional provision, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," was adopted, it was undoubtedly taken for granted by the great founders of the Republic that the vexed problem of the connection of Church and State, which had caused so much misery in the world, was settled once and forever in the negative.

On Monday will be celebrated the birthday of the man, who, by refusing a crown, made the establishment of the Republic possible. He and his conferees felt that only by keeping religious questions out of the counsels of the Government altogether, was there any real possibility of avoiding the dangers of sectarianism. He once wrote: "Happily the Government of the United States, which grants to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance, requires only that they who live under its protection should demean themselves as good citizens, in giving it on all occasions their effectual support." In these words the man of whom it has been said, "that he had no children that he might become the father of his country," struck the keynote of the true attitude of a free government in all religious questions.

With what clear insight Washington and the great Americans who stood with him at the cradle of this Government looked into the very heart of things. The past is of great value in teaching succeeding generations what to avoid, and if the past has any impressive lesson to teach, it is this of the absolute necessity of the complete separation of Church and State. For no matter what religious party or sect has the upper hand, others will suffer. Real liberty consists in freedom of thought and action for the individual as long as this does not interfere with the like liberty of all others.

But, were Washington to return to earth today he would witness strange sights in this land. He would hear of persistent and continued efforts to have an amendment added to the Constitution recognizing the religion of Jesus Christ as the religion of the land. He would learn that in 1892 the Supreme Court declared that this is a Christian nation; that in that same year Congress recognized Sunday observance; that in 1896 in the Thanksgiving proclamation the President called upon the people to observe the day in the name of Him through whose mediation we were taught how to pray.

He would learn that a few months ago a judge in New York City refused incorporation papers to a Jewish society because its meetings were to be held on Sunday; in rendering his decision he stated that although the law did not forbid the holding of meetings on that day in so many words, yet, the intent of the law was such. He would learn that in the State of Tennessee a Seventh-day Baptist [Adventist] was sentenced to imprisonment for working on Sunday, although he conscientiously and religiously observed Saturday and refrained from all work on that day. Surely these are straws showing which way the wind is blowing. The breadth of spirit that characterized the founders of the Government has given way to a narrow sectarianism the worst feature of which is that it is finding its way into the halls of legislation.

As I recently perused an article in a leading Catholic paper, I wondered what our Protestant friends who are making these continued onslaughts on the Constitution and presenting petition after petition to have the Christian religion recognized as the State religion, would think of it. The bitterness of election contests in various sections of the country wherein the A. P. A. has taken a hand, may indicate what feelings would be engendered in the breasts of these bigoted Protestants at the very suggestion contained in that Catholic writer's contention that in time this will be a Catholic country.

Of course, as always, the difference is as to whose doxy. My doxy is all right; your doxy is all wrong. Truly, it is playing with two-edged tools. All open-minded men and women know that the policy of the complete separation of religion from government is the only safe course. There is nothing that gives greater cause for uneasiness than this reappearance of the narrow spirit of sect, class and race distinctions. The triumph of broad humanity and liberal thought is not yet complete. Despite parliaments of religion and international interests, despite a century of education in the school of liberalizing tendencies, these reactionary movements seem to be growing stronger.

The victories for freedom of thought and religious liberty that have been won can be none too jealously guarded. In this land lies the hope of the world. To be faithful to itself and its high mission it must persist in ever striving to give actual realization to those other words of the first President: "The citizens of the United States of America have a right to applaud themselves for having given to mankind examples of an enlarged and liberal policy, a policy worthy of imitation. All possess alike liberty of conscience and immunities of citizenship. It is now no more that toleration is spoken of as if it were by the indulgence of one class of people that another enjoyed the exercise of their inherent natural rights."

"THAT which has everywhere characterized religious despotism, is the claim to prevent the public manifestation of individual differences of opinion."—De Pressensé.

The Penance of "Lent."

A NEW YORK daily refers to "Lent" as a season in which the "poor do penance for the rich," and in explanation of the statement, gives the following:—

"From data furnished by experts in trade the Journal gives careful estimates herewith of what the poor will lose and what the rich will gain by reason of all the "self-denial" that will gladden the consciences of the fashionable between now and Easter.

"New York spends $3,000,000 a year for flowers alone. Thorley, the florist, says so, and he ought to know.

"The first three weeks of Lent are the dullest of the year," he said yesterday. "Later the trade picks up in anticipation of Easter, but just now it is very poor. In large establishments employes are not discharged, but the decrease of trade affects many who are even less able to stand the loss. The people who gather greens and do rough work, find themselves without employment, and to them Lent means a loss of between $400,000 and $500,000."

"At Sherry's, Delmonico's, the Waldorf and other places of fashionable entertainment, the servants are never dismissed when there is nothing for them to do. Lent to them means only a little well-earned rest. To the marketmen, who suffer by less business at these establishments, however, it tells another story.

"The wholesale merchants from whom provisions for the big banquets are purchased buy less, and the raisers of poultry, fruits and vegetables find no buyers for their produce. The thousands of chickens which would be consumed in supreme de volaille for cotillion suppers, the partridges, grouse, terrapin, asparagus, lettuce, hot-house strawberries, etc., which would accompany them on the menus, will have no purchasers, and those dependant upon the sale of these for support will be obliged to suffer the greatest privation.

"To the dressmakers Lent brings sadness. To their assistants, in many cases, it means no work. The same is true of milliners.

"The musicians who furnish the music for society's dancing will have nothing to do until after Easter. Their idleness will lose them about $25,000.

"Another class of people who will suffer for society's season of penance will be household servants. Many small establishments will do without butlers and footmen, now that entertaining is ended for a while, and the housemaids will be required to do duty for them. A number of residences will be closed, all the servants dismissed, and the owners will go South to be fashionable and economic."

By the way, what authority is there in Scripture for this annual period of penance?

A PASSAGE which invites criticism in President McKinley's inaugural address is the following:—

"Equality of rights must prevail and our laws be always and everywhere respected and obeyed. We may have failed in the discharge of our full duty as citizens of the great Republic, but it is consoling and encouraging to realize that free speech, a free press, free thought, free schools, the free and unmolested right of religious liberty and worship, and free and fair elections, are dearer and more universally enjoyed to-day than ever before."

In saying this the President must certainly be in ignorance of the facts. There was a time not many years since when such a thing as the imprisonment of honest, conscientious men for refusing to keep Sunday, was unheard-of,—when people declared such a thing could never be. But what is the situation now? The table of imprisonments given in another column answers the question. It is neither "consoling" nor "encouraging" to the victims of religious legislation to reflect upon the degree of their enjoyment of the "free and unmolested right of religious liberty and worship."

The No-Definite-Day Theory of the Sabbath.

"Sabbath Recorder," March 1.

In the question column of the Golden Rule [Christian Endeavor organ], of January 28, is the following:—

"J. H. A., Westerly, R. I. Christ's teachings regarding the Sabbath should release all Christians from the formalism that in Christ's own day had so largely destroyed the spirit of true Sabbath observance. The value of the Sabbath consists not in observing a certain day any more than the value of prayer consists in the way we bow our heads or kneel, or the value of the sermon consists in the dress the minister wears. It is not known when the transfer was made from the Jewish Sabbath to the Christian sabbath, but it was a transfer that undoubtedly had apostolic authority. It grew up from the instinctive reverence of the early Christians for the day on which our Lord rose from the grave and ascended into heaven, and from shrinking from celebrating the day in which he remained in the grave."

Analyze this teaching for Christian Endeavorers.

1. There is no more importance attached to "observing a certain day" as the Sabbath, than there is in the form of dress a clergyman may wear, or the position which the body assumes when one prays. That is certainly no-Sabbathism loose enough for the most liberal. Now Sunday is surely a definite and "certain day," a fixed day of the week, and since Sabbath-keeping need not be associated with any one "certain day," it need not be fixed on Sunday, or associated with it. What an excellent theory to cultivate regard for Sabbath reform on Sunday!

2. It is not known when Sunday was put in place of the Sabbath, but "undoubtedly" it was done by "apostolic authority." If the last "undoubtedly" be correct, it can be known easily when it was done. "Apostolic authority" cannot be without the sanction, example or precept, or both, of the apostles; and if it be precepts without example there must be some clear and definite reason why inspired apostles did not follow their own precepts. It happens that the records of the apostolic precepts, and the doings of apostolic men, are confined to a brief period and a plain, uncontested record. The Golden Rule defies logic and history, and "begs the whole question" at issue when it attempts to hide behind such an "undoubtedly," without even a reference, much less a quotation, from the Word of God. Is that teaching young people to build their faith on the Scriptures? Is that loose way of avoiding a vital issue preparing young people to be stalwart Sabbath reformers? . . .

All this comes because the Golden Rule does not dare to follow the Bible and the example of Christ in keeping the Sabbath.

How that Protestantism, so-called, which denies the miraculous in Scripture, is putting a weapon into the hands of Rome, may be seen by the following from the Catholic Standard and Times:—

"The example in Bible-smashing set by the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, is becoming contagious. Not only did he continue his iconoclastic work last Sunday by attacking the character of the Canticle of Canticles (the Protestant Song of Solomon), but another Congregationalist minister, the Rev. Dr. William Lloyd, of New York, declared his disbelief in Balaam's ass having actually spoken to the prophet.

"I believe," he said, "that this talking took place in the prophet's own mind. His conscience put the words into the dumb animal's mouth. The angel in his pathway was also a phantom conjured by his guilty conscience."

"Rationalism is evidently gaining on Protestantism with giant strides."

THE editor of the leading organ of American Methodism, who recently created a "scene" at a meeting of Methodist ministers, by declaring that the English Bible is not infallible, now says that what he said was nothing but "a truism old as the centuries." But if it was nothing anyway, why did he take the trouble to bring it before a meeting of three hundred Methodist ministers? We would suppose that such an assemblage would hardly need to be reminded of a "truism old as the centuries."

In this position Dr. Buckley is indorsed by Lyman Abbott, and the latter is in turn approved by "Bob" Ingersoll. When men deny the infallibility of the Bible, English or otherwise, they place themselves in a line which has an applauding atheist at the other end of it.

It would doubtless be generally conceded that in the process of arresting a man and haling him to the police station, there is nothing which savors of observance of the "sabbath." Yet some people are so anxious that everybody shall keep Sunday that they would furnish extra work for the police force on that day in arresting such as do not want to keep it. Like the man who was determined to have peace even if he had to fight for it, they are determined to have Sunday rest even if they have to make Sunday work to get it. Is it because policemen are supposed to have no souls or to be excused from the requirements of divine law, that they are thus shut out from "sabbath" observance in the interests of "sabbath" observance?

IN view of the complaints made nowadays by Rome's prelates about the "perversion" of history by "Protestant historians," it may be interesting to know what they would regard as proper history. Here is a sample, taken from an address by Cardinal Moran, Archbishop of Sydney:—

"But, in the thirteenth century, the burghers and citizens successfully asserted their claim of liberty, and broad and solid were laid the foundations of what we cherish to-day as our most precious political heritage. 'For Northern Europe,' says Mr. Harrison, 'the thirteenth century is the era of the definite establishment of rich, free, self-governing municipalities.'"

The Papacy will not be satisfied with anything short of "history" which will eulogize the Dark Ages.

THE New York World, of February 28, very properly takes exception to opposition directed against a Cabinet appointee on account of his religious belief, and defends him by quoting the First Amendment to the Constitution, which forbids religious legislation by Congress and any congressional abridgment of freedom of speech. What the World should have quoted, however, is that clause of the Constitution which forbids any religious test in determining the fitness of a candidate for public office. There would be less open disregard of the Constitution if there were less ignorance on the part of the people respecting the constitutional safeguards of their rights.

It is announced from Washington, D. C., that news has been received from Rome that the Pope is preparing a bull addressed to the Catholic hierarchy in the United States calling for a "plenary council" in Baltimore on May 1. This has been done, it is said, by the special advice of Satolli. Mgr. Martinelli will preside at the Council, and will be vested with plenary powers, giving him ecclesiastical preëminence over all other prelates in this country while the session continues. The subjects which will receive special attention, it is said, are public instruction, nationalism, and papal doctrine on the subject of secret societies.

A KANSAS legislator named Walters has, if report be true, introduced in the law-making body of his State, a bill to give statutory force to the Ten Commandments. In support of his bill he said that "the men of the present generation have become doubters and scoffers," and that "having no fear of punishment beyond the grave, they continually violate the law given on Mount Sinai." Religious people are nowadays getting so intoxicated with the idea of making people moral by law, that there is not much reason to doubt the truth of this report.

AN exchange scores a point on Sunday-law advocates who hold to the doctrine of evolution, in the following:—

“Some of the clergy who believe that the six ‘days’ of creation in Genesis mean six geological periods of in-computable length are heard quoting the fourth commandment as authority for Sunday idleness. The commandment sets out that God made the world in six days and rested on the seventh. Why, then, haven’t we a Sunday law enforcing rest for a ‘geological period’?”

SUNDAY, February 28, the Sunday law was generally enforced for the first time upon barbers in New York City. The Corporation Council being called upon for a strict construction of the law, have decided that barbers must not shave customers on Sunday after 1 o’clock P. M., except when the customer is actually in the chair at that hour. If he is only waiting to be shaved when the clock strikes one he must go unkempt.

THE Corcoran art gallery in Washington, D. C., was opened on Sunday to the public for the first time, February 28. Nearly four thousand people improved the opportunity to view the collection of art treasures, the majority being of the class who find in Sunday their only day of recreation. The result was taken as fully vindicating the action of the trustees in opening the gallery for Sunday visitation.

THE Bridgeport, Conn., Evening Post, of February 26, reports a case in court in that city—“the Spiritual Temple Case”—in which the judge said in his charge to the jury, “You are to determine who is the true God.” Such a report seems almost incredible, but in these days a person must be prepared to expect almost anything in the way of developments savoring of a union of Church and State.

IN a matter of the defense of personal rights, one individual stands for the whole people. When individual liberty is attacked in any instance, the whole people are made defendants. When individualism falls, the whole people fall with it.

A SPOKANE, WASH., journal reports that the Sunday law is enforced in Colfax, that State, with much “success.” Even the most liberal sections of the great West seem to be fast retrograding to the mediæval idea of enforced religion.

THE idea that it is better for Christians to go to a primary than to a prayer-meeting, when the two fall on the same evening, is characteristic of that religion which demands the enforcement of Sunday.

A BILL prohibiting all Sunday sports and games is now under consideration by the legislature of New York.

THE saloon-keeper by force of law is compelled to help pay the taxes on my church, in the use of which I denounce his infernal traffic. If the saloon-keeper is taxed to support my church, in all fairness he ought to have something to say in its management. “No taxation without representation.”—Rev. Madison C. Peters.

FOR the same amount of money that New York City is to raise by taxation this year the people of Holland will drain the Zuyder Zee, build a vast moat of solid masonry thirty miles long and reclaim half a million acres of land that will support a population almost as great as ours.—New York World.

“So long as religion does not step out of its province it should not, in any of its forms, depend on the good pleasure of the State. It belongs to the civil power neither to authorize nor forbid it; for here the civil power clashes with a primordial right of the individual.”—De Pressensé.

THE South Carolina House is reported to have passed a bill requiring a license for every business, profession, or calling, including that of ministers of the gospel.

BY a vote of 209 to 149, the British House of Commons decided, February 10, against the prohibition of liquor selling in public houses on Sundays.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most, if not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 28 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

The TWO Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen. REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:-

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

Form the GREAT THROUGH LINE to all Points in the West,

AND OFFER TO THE TRAVELING PUBLIC THE ADVANTAGE OF THROUGH TRAINS WITHOUT TRANSFER, AND A VIEW OF

THE ST. CLAIR TUNNEL,

"THE LINK THAT BINDS TWO GREAT NATIONS."

It is the greatest submarine tunnel in the world, extending from Port Huron, Mich., under the St. Clair River to Sarnia, Ontario, and connecting the Grand Trunk Railway System of Canada with the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway. It has just been completed at a cost of $2,700,000.

The tunnel proper is a continuous iron tube, nineteen feet and ten inches in diameter, and 6,025 feet, or more than a mile long. The length of the approaches, in addition to the tunnel proper, is 3,608 feet, making a little over two miles.

Trains of the Grand Trunk and Chicago & Grand Trunk Railways are hauled through this tunnel by engines specially constructed for the purpose. They are said to be the largest engines in the world. The entire weight of the engine and tender rests upon ten drive-wheels. The weight of one of these monster engines in actual service is found to be approximately one hundred tons.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, MARCH 18, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 11.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

ABOUT as near as anyone can come to divining the purpose of "Lent," as related to Protestants, in the absence of any authority on the subject, is to say that it constitutes a sort of "indulgence" for a life of doubtful piety during the rest of the year.

It would be possible for Lent to be only this, even if it were a season instituted by the Lord; for God's institutions often become perverted. And as it was not instituted by the Lord, it is not possible that it should be anything but this.

The real purpose of penance, in the heathen system of which it forms a part, is that of an indulgence, either to satisfy a past transgression, or to provide for a future one. It is a principle of human nature—and human nature is strictly heathen—that an individual can in some way and to some extent, atone for his own transgressions. This principle crops out everywhere in an individual's way, before he becomes a Christian, of dealing with himself and with others. His own bad deeds, or those of others, are offset in his view by the later "good" deeds of the respective parties. He thinks that he must do something good in order to become good; and that he must first make himself good in this way to a certain extent, before he can come into touch with God.

Having done what he considers a very good deed, by way of penance, his conscience will be eased until he again does something that he knows to be of a decidedly different character, or until he has continued for some time in the pathway of "small" transgressions. Then he feels that he must again do something to set himself straight. So it happens that the Lenten period of penance supplies a want of human nature, coming as it does at intervals convenient for that purpose.

Upon this question of the real nature and purpose of Lent, we may cite the testimony of the papal church. That church is the author of the observance, and being in no sense a divine ordinance, it has never been perverted from its original purpose. In a late issue of Cardinal Gibbons' organ, the Catholic Mirror, the following observations are made by way of preparing the minds of "the faithful" for the occasion:—

"With this week begins the holy season of Lent, when according to the precept and immemorial custom of the church, we should, as far as possible, lay aside worldly thoughts, and especially worldly pleasures, and occupy ourselves with considerations which relate to our eternal salvation. This, indeed, we should do at all times; but more especially in Lent, when everything in the divine offices of our religion reminds us that the passion and death of our Lord are to be soon commemorated.

"There is no person who cannot give up something for the sake of Almighty God, in Lent—all that is necessary is the will to do so. There are pleasures, of doubtful benefit to us spiritually at all times, which should now peremptorily be abandoned. There are the very questionable amusements in which many indulge—the play-going, the reading of light literature, and the various diversions of society. During the penitential season, at least, these recreations should be utterly relinquished, and the discipline of the church should be complied with as rigorously as possible. Then it will not follow at the end that one, looking back with regret and self-reproach, will realize that the holy season for him or her has come and gone in vain."

In brief, the idea here expressed is that during this season of penance, "worldly pleasures" "of doubtful benefit to us spiritually at all times," "very questionable amusements," etc., should be laid aside, and the individual should conduct himself in a strictly Christian manner. And what makes it a season of penance is the very fact that he feels obliged to conduct himself in this way. For forty days a heathen must try to act like a Christian. And truly, if that be not a penance, we cannot think of anything that would be. Every individual who has tried the experiment knows how hard it is to try to act like a Christian before being one.

It will be said, of course, that Lent is for Christians—"the faithful"—and not for the heathen at all. But we do not care anything about the theory of Lent. We are considering only the reality of it, and the reality is that Christians can have no possible use for Lent, because (1) it has no sanction in the Word of God, and (2) a Christian acts like a Christian at all times of the year, and not merely during some period of penance. And he finds no penance at all, but only pleasure, in so doing.

To seek to gain an indulgence for a life of "questionable amusements" and "worldly pleasures" during the rest of the year, by means of the Lenten penance, is no more Protestant or Christian than to purchase an indulgence from the pope direct.

Freedom for a Million Slaves.

THE Christian Endeavorer is much exercised over the matter of "Sunday slavery" which is alleged to be very prevalent in this country. In its March issue it calls for the abolition of this Sunday slavery as the thing of first importance in work for the "rescue of the Sabbath." "There are," it says, "over a million people in the United States who are obliged to work on Sunday against their will."

If the SENTINEL could but reach this million and more of people, it would say to them in the name and by the authority of Him who rules over all, You are not slaves at all, but free men, if you but will to have it so. We have better tidings for you than those who remind you of your slavery. You need not wait for the success of some movement on their part to set you free by law; you are free already. It only remains that you should assert your freedom.

This, of course, you may not be willing to do; but you can do it if you will; and if you do not, your slavery will be voluntary.

You are not compelled to work on Sunday against your will. No one is compelled to do this. You are, at most, only compelled to choose between Sunday work and the prospective suffering of pecuniary loss. But pecuniary loss is not the loss of liberty. The freest individual in the world is liable to pecuniary loss.

If you are in slavery, it is only because you do not know that you are free. That, indeed, is the common condition of mankind. Freedom, full and complete, has been purchased for all. The great emancipation proclamation for the race has been issued, over a name and seal that stand for all power and authority. The only thing necessary for any man is that he shall accept his freedom.

If the slaves of the South had refused to accept the freedom offered them in the proclamation of President Lincoln,—if they had chosen to remain just as they were, refusing to believe that they had been set free, or waiting for some law to be enacted compelling them to be free, they might have remained slaves until this day. In some instances they did, through ignorance, remain in slavery until long after the edict of emancipation went into effect. But the vast majority were willing to take at once the freedom it brought them. They immediately asserted their liberty. But people are very much slower to assert the soul liberty which is just as truly theirs.

By the sacrifice on the cross, the Lord Jesus Christ purchased this liberty for every individual of the race, so that it becomes to each a free gift. But a gift profits not unless it is accepted. By accepting this gift, it becomes the high prerogative of every person to follow always the dictates of his will and conscience.

This, of course demands faith in the word of God. It is faith that sustains the individual in asserting his freedom. His will being always to do that which is right, he simply obeys the dictates of conscience as guided by the Word, and leaves the results with God.

There is no reason whatever why any Christian should complain of "Sunday slavery." The mere fact of such complaint should be conclusive evidence of the non-Christian character of the complainant.

The Christian simply trusts his God and asserts his freedom. Whatever he believes God has commanded, that he does, without reference to any arrangements established by man. Hence he is never without the enjoyment of Sabbath rest. Human customs and regulations must, with him, adapt themselves to the precepts of God, and not the precepts of God to the rules of men.

And this is the liberty that every individual ought to assert. He must assert it, on the basis on which it is offered, if he is to realize it. If he waits for a law to compel him to realize it, he will not realize it at all. Soul liberty cannot be obtained that way.

We say again, there is full and complete liberty for this multitude in "Sunday slavery," for their immediate realization, upon the basis God himself has established for it. God is the Author of liberty and also the Creator of man. He is the God both of the Christian and the gentile. All men should be pointed to that means by which they may know the freedom that God gives, and become forever emancipated from soul-slavery. And why should the Christian Endeavorer point them to anything else?

Christian Endeavorers in Conflict.

THE camp of error is never long free from divisions. How this is illustrated by the Christian Endeavorers with reference to Sunday, is pointed out by an exchange, as follows:—

"The Christian Endeavorer, of Chicago, which has entered upon the task of 'rescuing' Sunday from ruin, according to the 'new discovery' of Mr. Gamble, is almost as severe on the popular notion of 'no particular day,' as it is on us for our adherence to a 'particular day.' In the February issue we find the following paragraph:—

" 'It is to be hoped that we will hear no more of the foolish statement that there is no divine authority for the observance of Sunday as the Christian sabbath; or the other equally untrue saying: "It makes no difference what day of the week we observe as Sabbath, so that we observe one." Followers of Christ should observe only the first day of the week, the Lord's day, the Christian sabbath.

"This is a homethrust at the Golden Rule, Dr. Clark's paper, and hitherto the representative paper of Christian Endeavor, which lately declared that the specific day of the Sabbath was of no more importance to Sabbath-keeping than the clothes a preacher wears are to the sermon he preaches. Has it come to this, that Christian Endeavor leaders are so soon divided as to how Sunday shall be saved? These papers have come to such antagonism by inventing different ways of escaping, or trying to escape, from the claims of the Sabbath. God's law is a troublesome thing when men want to invade it; and the greatest of blessings when men are obedient to it."

Enforcing the Decalogue in Kansas.

THE following is the bill introduced in the legislature of Kansas, by Representative Walters, calling for the legal enforcement of the Decalogue, as mentioned in our last issue:—

"An Act to give statutory force to the Ten Commandments:

"WHEREAS, The men of the present generation have become doubters and scoffers; and,

"WHEREAS, They have strayed from the religion of their fathers; and,

"WHEREAS, They no longer live in the fear of God; and,

"WHEREAS, Having no fear of punishment beyond the grave, they wantonly violate the law given to the world from Mount Sinai; therefore,

"Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas:—

"SECTION 1. Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

"SECTION 2. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image," etc. [Each one of the commandments constitutes a separate section of the Act.]

"SECTION 11. Any man who shall violate any of the provisions of this Act shall be punished as follows:—

"For violating Section 1, $1,000 fine; for violating Section 2, $1,000 fine and one year in the penitentiary; for violating Section 3 or Section 4, $500 fine; for violating Section 5, $500 fine and six months in the penitentiary; for violating Section 6, hanged by the neck until dead; for violating Section 7, penitentiary for life; for violating Section 8, fine or imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; for violating Section 9, imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; for violating Section 10, fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"SECTION 12. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the statute book."

If this proposed measure stood alone as the only thing of the kind which has been brought to public notice, it might be dismissed as a joke. But the facts of the situation justify something more than its mere mention as a piece of "freak" legislation.

This proposed measure only contemplates in part, and on a small scale, what is proposed in the "Christian Amendment" to the Constitution, which has progressed far beyond the possibilities of a joke. That amendment says that "the revealed will of Jesus Christ" shall be "the supreme authority in civil affairs" in every State in the Union. The revealed will of Christ includes the law of ten commandments. The "Christian Amendment" would do for every State what Mr. Walters' measure proposes to do for the State of Kansas.

It is proposed that the Kansas legislature shall enact, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." As the speaking party in this enactment would be the legislature, the law would be that the legislature must be the god of everybody in the State. And the god who speaks the law having been determined in the first section of the Act, the same god would be meant by the phrase "the Lord thy God" in succeeding sections. Thus by the third section it would become blasphemy to speak lightly of the Kansas legislature, and in the fourth section this assembly would put forth the stupendous claim of having created the heavens and the earth!

Absurd as such claims would be, they are no more than what is really involved in every instance of religious legislation. For religion being the performance of those duties which an individual owes to his God, only God can rightfully command such duties; and when such duties are commanded by any party, that party by that very act assumes to be God. Every law upon the statute books of the States which enjoins the observance of the "Lord's day," involves nothing less than the claim that the law-making party is God.

Yet these "sabbath" laws are to be found upon the statute books of almost every State, and they are not generally regarded as examples of "freak" legislation. Neither, as stated, is the proposed "Christian Amendment" so regarded by the vast majority of those composing the churches and religious societies. And so strong is the support which these give to it, and so potent has their influence upon Congress been shown to be, that the "Christian lobbyists" who have charge of it at the seat of government are actually hopeful that the National Assembly will take favorable action upon it during their next session.

It should be observed also that by Mr. Walters' bill the seventh day of the week will be made the legal sabbath in the State of Kansas. For the fourth commandment plainly says "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work;" and any almanac affords proof that the day "commonly called Sunday" is the first day of the week and not the seventh. The Sunday law itself commonly specifies that Sunday is the "first day of the week." "The seventh day" and "the first day" of that division of time which the Sabbath marks, cannot be one and the same day.

"The seventh day" must mean the day before Sunday, which is commonly called Saturday.

Another point that must not be overlooked is raised by the query as to what will constitute a violation of this Act. Jesus Christ said that hatred in the heart was a violation of the commandment which says, "Thou shalt not kill," which is Section 6 in Mr. Walters' bill. See Matt. 5:21, 22. No doubt it will be acknowledged that there is no higher authority upon the subject than this. The courts will therefore be obliged to take cognizance of hatred as a violation of Section 6 of this State law, of lust as a violation of Section 7, etc., and inflict the penalties specified in the Act. The enlargement of the State prisons and penitentiaries which the punishment of such persons, together with all who were covetous, would demand, it would be needless to try to specify. The penal institutions would simply have to be made large enough to take in the entire population of the State.

If we are really to have a "Christian Amendment" to the Constitution which will make "the revealed will of Jesus Christ" the "supreme authority in civil affairs" for all the nation, it may be well that the experiment should be first tried on the small scale which Mr. Walters' bill proposes, in order that the people may judge of its utility for the wider field of national government. It would certainly be far preferable that the Kansas legislature should pass this bill, rather than that the National Legislature should pass the so-called Christian Amendment.

"What Is Wrong?"

WHAT is wrong? inquires the Rev. C. S. Bullock, in the March Christian Endeavorer, and proceeds to justify and answer the query as follows:—

"Every pulpit in the land guarded by law—nearly one hundred thousand men of learning and ability set for the bringing to the attention of other men the life and death message of God—and yet—

"Multiply the twelve apostles by eight thousand and how soon they would turn the word up-side-down! What is wrong?

"Think of England—the brightest part of Europe. Eighty thousand criminals; one hundred and sixty thousand drunkards; one hundred thousand prostitutes; nearly ten hundred thousand paupers, and a drink bill of one hundred and thirty-six million pounds sterling! Is that the best the gospel of Jesus Christ can do for England?

"Look upon our own land—over seventy-three million population and about twenty million enrolled members in all branches of the church! Seven million young men, of whom but five per cent. are enrolled as members of the church, these, as a fraction of one of the million, attend church somewhat regularly, another million attended occasionally, but five million never attend. Think of arresting over one and a half million of men and women annually—fifty millions in a generation! Crime increases four and a half times faster than the population. What is wrong?

"Here we stand upon the threshold of the twentieth century with the record of forty million people habitually absenting themselves from the house of God! We have perfect machinery and a seemingly large amount of zeal—we are doing everything that we can think of to reach the ungodly—we have tried spinning-wheels and grab-bags, theatricals and tableaux, broom drills and donkey socials. We have fiddled to them and fed them with ice cream and cake, and tickled them with funny stories, yet 'Ichabod' seems to be written upon everything we do. What is wrong?

"Is there a power that can change these things? What is needed? Paul cries, 'The gospel is the power of God.' O, that is what is needed—power! POWER! Power in the Church and through the Church in politics to regenerate society. The only thing that can correct the things that need correction is the 'gospel.' Let us apply the gospel in liberal doses!"

Yes; it is power that is needed, and that power is needed in the church. But the needed power is not political power, but "the power of God." The gospel is not political power. The gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. 1:16. The power comes only to those who believe, and this totally separates it from politics, for politics have nothing to do with faith.

If the Church does not have the power she needs, it is because there is a lack in believing—believing the Word of God. Jesus Christ said to his followers, as he was about to ascend after his resurrection, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. . . . And lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Then why has the Church not power? Is it not because she has forsaken Christ and joined with Cæsar, and is seeking for divine power to be exercised through politics, for the "regeneration of society"? God cannot lend himself to any such scheme. The Church will have to get out of politics before she will realize the power for which some in her communion long.

It seems to be a difficult matter—if not an impossibility—to secure the retracement of a single step which the Government has taken in the direction of union with the Church. An illustration of this is furnished in the action of the Senate Committee to whose lot it fell to report on the Indian appropriation bill sent up from the House. Instead of submitting it without any appropriations for sectarian Indian schools, as was provided for by Congress last year, it was reported to the Senate with a provision that during the coming year such schools shall have the same Government aid as this year, less ten per cent. The provision of Congress in the matter was that after June 30, 1897, all such appropriations should cease; and that during the year ending with that date, the appropriation should be only half that of the year previous. "It strikes us," says the Independent, "that the best way to cease is to cease." But the trouble is that Congress, as represented by this committee, is not seeking the best way to cease.

The "Religious Significance of the Inauguration."

THE Sunday evening following the inauguration at Washington, D. C., the pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. Church, of that city, delivered a sermon on the "religious significance" of the event. This church is one of the largest in the city, and was attended by the President at the morning service of the same day. For his text the speaker read from 2 Kings 11:12, "And they clapped their hands and said, God save the king;" also from Rom. 13:11, "The powers that be are ordained of God." Among other things he said:—

"We are a Christian nation. There is a secular theory of civil government. We have a little band of vociferous secularists and infidels, who have succeeded in giving the public an absurdly exaggerated sense of their numbers and importance, who would de-Christianize the State, who would have judicial oaths, prayers in our legislative assemblies, and Sunday laws abolished; in short, all the Christian elements of our national life. They would destroy our national inheritance and are no more patriots than they are Christians. They deal their deadly blows not merely at revealed religion, but at human liberty and progress.

"The Christian religion is the foundation of all law and all literature, and to be hostile to the Christian religion is to be hostile to the Government in which we dwell.

"The Constitution provides that Congress shall make no law regulating the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification for any office of public trust. These simply secure religious freedom and separation of the Church from the State. They are as a bill of rights, guaranteeing to all the churches full liberty, and forbidding Congress ever to abridge that liberty. It is not a union of Church and State, but the union of Christianity and the State. A free church in a free country; each independent of the other; each fulfilling different functions, yet coöperating together to increase the reverence for law and increase the stability of the Government. The recognized religion of this land is not the Episcopal Christian, the Presbyterian, Roman Catholic or Methodist Christianity, but the Christianity common to all,—a common religion, a universal Christianity."

This paragraph calls for some comment. Let it be noted that there is a vast difference between church freedom and individual freedom. When the papal church enjoyed the greatest freedom, during the dark ages of her supremacy, individual freedom was at its lowest ebb. Church freedom that is not compatible with the fullest individual freedom, is nothing else than despotism. It is individual freedom that the people want. It is this that should be secured to them by the Constitution.

And it is just this freedom that is always invaded by a union of Christianity—so-called—with the State. That union may leave the churches free enough, especially if they prove to be the dominant power under the arrangement—but it invades individual freedom by combining with religion a power which pays no respect to individual option. The State does not persuade; it commands and enforces; and when it is united with "Christianity," it is to command and enforce "Christianity" in so far as the union extends. But it is the divinely-ordained prerogative of every individual to exercise perfect freedom of choice in religion. The State says, You must. Christianity says, "Whosoever will, let him come."

Hence there can never be union of real Christianity with the State.

Of course there is no such thing as "Episcopal Christian," or "Roman Catholic Christian," or "Methodist Christian." There is but one kind of Christianity in the world—one way of being like Christ. And for this reason a union of all denominations, or of the leading ones—with the State cannot possibly be a union of Christianity with the State.

The speaker said further:—

"The recent unanimous decision of the Supreme Court is that this is a Christian nation, destroying as a precedent the famous Tripoli treaty in which the Mohammedan power was assured that the United States was not a Christian nation. The Christian is supported in independent but friendly relations with the civil power. Our Christian life and churches have moved forward most rapidly. The increase in church membership from 1890 to 1895 was over four million. The increase of population falls far below the rate of church progress. The church has steadily and rapidly gained upon the population.

"Shall we surrender our Government to secular control? That would be treason to liberty; that would be the betrayal of the sacred trust we hold for our children; as well as disloyalty to God, and this blessed Book, which is the Magna Charter of human rights and happiness.

"We have evidence of the Christian character of the nation in the inaugural addresses of the Presidents. . . . This last inaugural has been most impressive. Listen to the opening words of the President:—

"In obedience to the will of the people, and in their presence, by the authority vested in me by this oath, I assume the arduous and responsible duties of President of the United States, relying on the support of my countrymen, and invoking the guidance of Almighty God. Our faith teaches that there is no safer reliance than upon the God of our fathers, who has so singularly favored the American people in every national trial, and who will not forsake us so long as we obey his commandments and walk humbly in His footsteps."

"This brings us to the religious significance of this ceremony. This ceremonial can be regarded in no other light than a mutual covenant. The oath of the President to serve the nation carries with it the unspoken vows of the people, to yield obedience to the laws, to support and defend the Constitution, and to invoke the same divine favor and help. The President must realize the sacredness of his office. If the powers that be are ordained of God, then surely the head of a great nation stands very near the holiest ministers of religion."

We are reminded by this of another occasion when some vows were made by a "Christian nation" of old,— the nation of Israel, as they were assembled around the basis of Mount Sinai. There was a covenant made there,—a covenant of the people to obey the voice of the Lord which they had heard from amid the flame and smoke upon Sinai's top. But only about a month later they were found worshipping a golden calf. This occurrence casts no light shadow of suspicion upon the vows of a "Christian nation" to live uprightly. With many, indeed, in the Church as well as without, it is a question whether the American "Christian nation" are not even now engaged in worshipping the golden calf. Considering this subject from the standpoint of its "religious significance," we are certainly warranted in these observations.

The speaker proceeded to define the duties of "the covenant into which we enter as a people" by virtue of the President's inaugural oath. These are, as defined, the duty of reverence for the laws and for those in authority, and the duty of giving our best endeavors to the purification of politics. In this connection he said:—

"We pledge ourselves anew to our country as a Christian commonwealth. The future of the nation is safe only as we are Christians. Those who are lifting up their voice against the Bible, against the sabbath, against our Christ, are the enemies of the best interests of the country. The nations of the past that have gone down in night have sunk because of corruption. Our present condition comes largely because of our lack of faith in God. Let public immoralities be suppressed; let the Lord's day be reverently held, and Sunday newspapers, Sunday traffic, and Sunday labor as far as possible be suppressed. Let our laws be such that it will be easy for men to do good, and hard for them to do wrong. The only bulwark of our nation is Christianity; and without it we have no hope of perpetuity."

This only makes still plainer the idea of the speaker that these "unspoken vows" of the people are to be fulfilled through Christianity. No other view, indeed, would be in harmony with the doctrine that "this is a Christian nation." No other view would invest the President's inaugural with a "religious significance."

The speaker would have done better if he had placed reverence for the right above reverence for the laws and for those in authority. The "laws" are not always right; and "those in authority" not above the right. Reverence for the right is the only safeguard of liberty.

What effect such teaching as this setting forth the "religious significance of the inauguration" will have upon the Administration, remains to be seen.

mittee" organized by a local society, to two hundred for initiating "a movement that shall by persuasion or law cause the discontinuance of any Sunday paper," and three hundred for securing "the discontinuance of Sunday trains on any railroad." The society securing the largest number of these credits will be presented with a "Lord's Day banner" at the coming international convention in San Francisco next July.

Sumptuary Laws.

The Union Signal of March 4 makes the following observations on the subject of "Sumptuary Laws:—

"It seems that sumptuary laws are not so bad after all—when applied to women. We have yet to see a single protest against the enactments of certain municipal councils whereby it is made illegal for women to wear in the theater the 'big hat' of the period. To this we do not object; indeed, we only wish that the law applied to all public assemblies, since it would be much better for the health of the women and far more convenient for those who come to see. We would gladly witness the adoption of a law that women when out walking, should wear no garment that came within three inches of the ground, and we urge it upon our women legislators to introduce such a law in the interest of the public health.

"A speaker recently stated before a Woman's Club in New York that a young lady who had promenaded Fifth Avenue (its most aristocratic street) had kindly submitted the street gleanings of her skirts to a bacteriologist, who captured therefrom seven different kinds of contagious disease microbes. And yet intelligent women insist on dragging their skirts behind them because they think it is more 'stylish.'

"But we cannot help being amused to notice that in this land of 'personal liberty' and 'individual right,' where anything so drastic as a 'sumptuary law' is not to be for a moment tolerated, nobody has raised even a faint little warwhoop in view of the fact that women are now under strict 'sumptuary law' as to their headgear. 'What shall we eat? what shall we drink? and wherewithal shall we be clothed?' may become matters of legislation after all. This is a wonderful age, and we have now established a precedent (a solemn thing to do) for the invasion of the 'liberty of the subject.' After this anything is possible."

Yes; "anything is possible" when legislators once get fairly started in the line of legislation upon the question of what people shall eat or wear. It is of course easy to see in the law against "high hats" in theatres, what is rather facetious than oppressive. There might be nothing very oppressive in a law to compel ladies walking on the streets to wear no garment reaching lower than three inches above the ground. It is quite desirable that street sweeping should be left to those appointed to such work by the city authorities. It is very desirable that people should dress healthfully, eat proper food, and get a proper amount of sleep. Nevertheless we are none of us anxious to be regulated in such matters by legislative fiat. There is a vast step between the con-

THE activity of Christian Endeavor organizations all over the land in the work of securing Sunday enforcement, is indicated by a plan of work outlined in the Golden Rule, of March 4, to be followed by each local society in all the States. This plan is based upon a system of credits to be allowed for proficiency in organization for "Sabbath reform" work, and especially for achievements in securing cessation of Sunday work. The credits range from one, to be allowed for each "Lord's Day Com-dition of being desirable and that of being enforceable at law.

However, it is not unlikely, as suggested, that such questions as "What shall we eat? what shall we drink? and wherewithal shall we be clothed? may become matters of legislation after all." But every act of legislation in this direction, trivial as it may be in itself, undermines a principle that is anything but trivial in its relation to the welfare and happiness of the people. This is the real objection to sumptuary legislation.

THE Omaha World-Herald remarks that "amid the political differences that sometimes engender the worst of feeling among men bound together as citizens of a great nation it is well that we should be occasionally reminded that this is a Christian nation." In other words, it is well that we should be occasionally reminded of something which, from all appearances, we should never mistrust to be a fact.

The Right of Private Judgment.

AN article in the New York Independent, of March 11, contains the following:—

"No better illustration of the rigid control which the Catholic Church exercises over the consciences of its members can be given than the rules it lays down as to what they may or may not read. We give some of these rules as promulgated only last year by the present rather liberal pope as popes go. Here is one:

"'Books of apostates, heretics, schismatics, and all other writers which defend heresy or schism, or in any way tend to overthrow the basis of religion, are absolutely forbidden.'

"Every book which defends our Protestant forms of faith is thus absolutely interdicted. Here is another rule:

"'Likewise are forbidden books of non-Catholics which professedly treat of religion, unless it is known that they contain nothing contrary to Catholic faith.'

"It is not enough, it seems, to forbid books which defend heresy or schism, but any book on religion written by a Protestant is forbidden unless it is known that there is nothing in it that contradicts any part of the Catholic faith. But we are further told in another rule that books by non-Catholic writers which are not on religion, such as novels, we suppose, or scientific treatises, may be read even although they may 'merely incidentally touch on truths of faith.'

"Next follow, in the document from which we quote, the rules about the Holy Scriptures. No edition of the Bible in the original tongues, and no ancient version in Greek, Latin, Syriac, Armenian, Arabic, or any other language of the earlier church, prepared by a non-Catholic, is allowed to any except those engaged in theological or biblical studies, and to them only, provided no attack is made 'in the prefaces or notes, on dogmas of the Catholic faith.'

"Much more is it forbidden to read any edition of the Holy Scriptures in the vernacular prepared by a non-Catholic.

"'Since experience has proved that, on account of man's boldness, more evil than good arises if the Sacred Books are allowed to all without check in the vulgar tongue; wherefore all versions in the vernacular, even though made by Catholics, are entirely forbidden, unless approved by the Holy See or issued under the care of bishops, with notes taken from the holy fathers of the church and from learned Catholic writers.

"'Prohibited are all versions of the Holy Scriptures made by whatever non-Catholic writers, in whatever vulgar tongue, and those especially which are spread broadcast by Bible societies, again and again condemned by the Roman pontiffs, since they entirely discard the most salutary laws of the church relative to the issuing of divine books. But these versions are allowed to those who are engaged in theological or biblical studies, on observing the regulations set forth above.'

"If any Catholic wants, for any reason, to read a book thus forbidden, he must ask permission not of his confessor, but of his bishop; and this permission must not be easily granted, for the rule says that this permission may be given 'only in chosen cases and for good and sufficient cause,' 'only in urgent cases' and 'for single books.' Furthermore, bishops must 'proscribe and take out of the hands of the faithful' any forbidden books that have been circulated. And still further, no Catholic layman is allowed to publish any book on religion without episcopal permission, and no priest can publish on any subject, religious, scientific or social, without such license."

All this is of course utterly contrary to the principle of individual freedom of judgment in religious matters, which is the very essence of religious liberty. It shows how complete is Rome's antagonism to that liberty of which she has claimed to be the champion. Upon this point of the individual right of private judgment, Protestantism claims to stand in complete opposition to Rome. But how fully is this claim sustained by leading exponents of Protestantism? What difference is there in principle between Rome's dictum on the subject, as quoted above, and the following from that very Protestant journal, the Golden Rule, organ of the Societies of Christian Endeavor, in its issue of March 4:—

"ENDEAVORER, Princeton, III:

"You say that through your own unaided study of the Bible you have become convinced that you should change your church and denomination, and you are especially grieved that you must take this step in opposition to the earnest wishes of your mother. Pardon me if I say that no one should take such a serious step as this relying merely upon his own judgment. You should seek the advice of your pastor, and of others who are wiser than you."

In other words: After you have talked with God on the subject of your duty, and He has spoken to you, don't move in the matter until you have had a talk with some man! After consulting with God, don't fail to consult with your pastor and other fallible mortals around you, and thus avail yourself of their superior wisdom! It would not be safe to take God's word alone! Of course, God's word is all right in itself; but you need some human power and wisdom to make you understand it! This is Rome's position exactly, only Rome, with more worldly wisdom, simply brings the individual to the human authority direct, and thereby saves herself much trouble in the management of her adherents. The very essence of Romanism is the interposing of human authority between the soul and God, and the very essence of this "Protestantism" is the same.

We would not quote this if it were not fairly representative of most of the Protestantism of to-day. Protestant instructors are almost always ready to give this advice to those whom they would guide under such circumstances. They do not make it compulsory upon any, to be sure; they can present no commands from the Church "authorities" forbidding an individual to be guided by his own conscientious understanding of God's Word. But they go as far as they can in the way of persuading him to set aside his own mind, and be moved, like an automaton, by the mind of another. They differ from Rome only in the means employed, not in the principle involved or the end sought.

What does God himself say about this? James 1:5 gives the answer: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask [not of his pastor or his 'wiser' friends, but] of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." True Protestantism believes these words, and leaves every individual free to make them a rule of life.

The Cry of "Treason."

BY A. SMITH.

WHEN Ahaziah, a certain king of Judah, was slain by Jehu, king of Israel, his mother, Athaliah, daughter of the wicked Ahab and Jezebel, saw her opportunity to usurp the government, which she did by slaying "all the seed royal" except one, the infant son of the king, and reigning instead of the rightful heir.

For six years she held the scepter, but at the end of that time the young prince, Joash by name, was brought forth from the temple, where he had been hidden by his sister, who was the wife of the high priest, and by the principal men of the land was made king and placed upon the throne of Judah amid the acclamations of the people. But when Athaliah saw what had been done she rent her clothes and cried "Treason! Treason!"

Now, who in this instance was guilty of treason, the lawful king or the subverter and usurper of the government? The answer is obvious.

At the present time there is a large class of people in the United States who, in their mistaken zeal to promote religious legislation, are seeking to subvert the Government from the principles upon which it was founded by our forefathers (the most Christlike in principle of any government ever founded by man) and change it into a religious despotism. Those who oppose this innovation are charged with treasonable purposes; and the passions of men, fired by false applications of patriotic principles, are invoked to frenzy against them as subverters of the Government.

There is real danger threatening our political institutions, and it requires a cool unbiased judgment to meet the issue.

It seems that the bill of Mr. Walters of Kansas, to give the Decalogue legal force in that State, was introduced in all seriousness, according to The Examiner, of this city. "The bill," says this journal, "has already passed to its third reading, and as we go to press Mr. Walters announces his intention of forcing a final vote during the present week. He says that he is meeting with the greatest encouragement from the citizens of his State, and even were he so inclined, he would not now dare to retreat."

A Week of Prayer for "Sabbath Observance."

APRIL 4-11 has been designated by a committee representing the Sunday observance movement, as a "week of prayer for the observance of the Lord's day." Three especial subjects of prayer are set forth in the announcement, as follows:—

"1. That God will bestow such influences of the Holy Spirit as shall quicken the consciences of all Christians that they may give more earnest heed to His command to hallow the sabbath in their homes and in public by refraining from such acts as will tend to weaken regard for the Lord's day.

"2. That He will lead Christians to obey the important part of the fourth commandment: 'Thou, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy stranger,' and to understand that it is a greater sin to require another to do a wrong than to do it ourselves; and that no one obeys God fully in this command until he has done all in his power to secure for those in his employ an opportunity for the enjoyment of sabbath rest and worship.

"3. That He will lead to victory all who are striving to enforce the laws against the open saloon on the sabbath, and such amusements as disturb the peace and quiet of the day."

We are fully in sympathy with the desire that Christians and all others should be led to a better observance of the Lord's day, and trust that this special season of prayer may bear fruit to that end.

In reading the above, however, our eye is caught by the phrase, "the important part of the fourth commandment." This gives rise to some queries. What is the important part of the fourth commandment? This call to prayer for its observance sets forth "Thou, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy stranger" as the important part. In seeking an answer to the query it might be pertinent to inquire, What is the unimportant part of the fourth commandment? Is it that part which specifies which day it is that must be observed as the Sabbath or Lord's day? Certainly this committee did not mean to imply that Sunday observance is not a thing of great importance. Take Sunday out of their aims and calculations, and let no other definite day be substituted, and there would be neither point nor force in this call to prayer for sabbath observance.

That part of the fourth commandment specified in the call is important, certainly. But it is not the important part of the command. Every part of it is important. Every part of every divine command is important. It is of the highest importance. This is a characteristic which attaches to every word that God has spoken to man.

It is utterly useless to engage in prayer for Sabbath observance without believing that every part of God's Sabbath commandment is supremely important, not excepting that part which says, "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Those who would realize profit from this occasion, must believe this, and give every part of the command their sincere "Amen."

"Lord's Day Congress" in Lowell, Mass.

BY F. C. GILBERT.

THE New England Sunday Protective League held another of its congresses on March 4, in Lowell, Mass., for the purpose of agitating the enforcement of Sunday sacredness by law. It seemed evident that the afternoon audience were not wholly inspired with the spirit of the movement, which caused the leaders some displeasure. The real spirit was, however, in no wise lacking among the prime movers.

Rev. O. H. Denney, who conducted the devotional exercises, read from the thirteenth chapter of Nehemiah, and thought the lesson was very applicable to present conditions. The same principles inculcated by that man of God should be instilled in the minds of the people at the present time. The same power which Nehemiah used to compel the men of Tyre to desist from "selling fish on Sunday," should be swayed by the leaders of religionists to-day, he said. And in the course of his growing eloquence he asked, "Nehemiah had authority to compel those people to refrain from selling fish on Sunday. What will God say when asking us [meaning the preachers] if we used our infallible authority in the same way, and we reply we did not?" "We should as ministers of the gospel compel these people to desist from selling their modern fish on Sunday, such as Sunday papers, cigars, soda-water," etc.

We had always thought that there is only one person in this world who claimed infallible authority, but it appears that the popes are legion. Where in the Bible do the preachers find that God endowed them with "infallible authority" to seek power from legislatures to enforce their ideas of Sunday sacredness upon the whole people? Where has the Lord authorized them to lay their hands upon the people to make them desist from selling their wares on Sunday? I suppose the chapter on "infallible authority" must be in the same volume which records that Nehemiah told the people to desist from selling fish on Sunday, and which says that the first day of the week is the Sabbath.

In the address of welcome, Rev. F. K. Stratton confessed that the ministers of the city were apathetic to this phase of the Sabbath (Sunday) question, and hoped there would be a reformation hereafter,—that the ministry would often tell the people they ought to have Sunday laws, and why. He too administered scathing rebukes to the various kinds of modern "fish" sold on Sunday, and protested against their breaking down the modern Sunday. Hence he accorded the Congress a hearty welcome, believing it to be very timely, and hoped it would be the beginning of a successful crusade against all the evils of desecration, etc., etc.

The next speaker, Rev. S. T. Ford, in response to the welcome for the city churches, was not as harmonious on the issue as his predecessors. In fact he was quite "heterodoxical," as he expressed it, and his speech confirmed the statement. He believed in the entire separation of Church and State, and that no legislation should be secured for the sacredness of the day. He said that man could not be made religious by law, and all laws which sought to enforce religion were contrary to the doctrine of Americanism. There is but one way a man becomes devotional, and that is by having his conscience awakened by the Spirit of God. And he remarked that all laws designed to enforce religious dogmas were simply avenues toward uniting Church and State. He thought that the only ground upon which these Sunday laws could be secured was the economic phase,—that people had a right to have one day's rest in seven from labor as a matter of physical necessity. It was apparent his speech did not have a soothing effect upon the ministers generally, but it certainly was a relish to hear one man, in such an assembly, express some vital truths on the subject of religious liberty.

A paper on "the authority of the Lord's day" was read by Rev. S. M. Dick; but that the Lord designed a definite, specific, twenty-four hour period was regarded as foolishness by the speaker. He said it simply meant that the Lord designed that man should rest on a given day; and when the community or the State or country declared which day it should be, then, remarked the speaker, that is the day that the Lord blessed. Of course as long as the people had decided in this nation that the first day of the week was the day, everybody ought to keep that day, for the Bible was authority for the sanctity of the day. We were reminded of what the Apostle Peter said relative to people wresting the Scripture to their own destruction. How sad to hear people, especially those claiming to be in a special manner the representatives of Jesus Christ, distort his sacred word, and make it contradict itself, thus making God a liar.

He cited several instances where fearful damage was done because the day was not observed, and he remarked that the very steam engines wore as much on that day as they did on all the other days of the week combined! Great is the Sunday of America!

Mr. Kneeland, Secretary of the League, took charge of the question box, and gave a statement of the workings of the society. Among the questions asked, one was, "What is the object of Sunday laws?" The reply was, "The object of Sunday laws is to preserve the State." Thus the people are being educated to believe that unless Sunday laws are secured, and the sacredness of the day enforced by these State laws, this Government cannot be preserved. Several other questions were asked and answered, the tendency of nearly all being to annul the idea of seventh-day observance, to set forth the importance of first-day observance, and the necessity of its observance by legal statute.

In outlining the work of the League, to secure a rest day for everybody, he spoke of the acceptance of the presidency of the League by United States Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, and his belief relative to Sunday: "I believe thoroughly in a day of rest, which shall be largely devoted to the contemplation of divine themes and to the worship of God and teaching his law; and in protecting this observance against disturbances by secular labor, or other discords, by law." It is on this line that the League is working,—that the State should make laws compelling people to refrain from labor in order that they might be religious on that day. Or as Dr. Kneeland said: "We must have laws to protect the sacredness of Sunday." He urged the people to give their names which he might present to the various governmental functionaries when necessary, in order that the League may secure power to carry out its end. He spoke of their success thus far, and said they had not lost a case or been refused a thing by either the courts or commissioners, or legislatures, and had no doubt whatever of their ultimate success. He mentioned the fact that there were four bills at the present time pending in the Massachusetts legislature, all of which were presented through the direct or indirect influence of the League. There were bills being presented in other legislatures of New England favorable to their work, and he hoped they would be passed. He told the people of Lowell if they had any influence with their representatives in the legislature, to bring it to bear upon these men to pass these bills; and, said he, "if they refuse, just put them out of the way next time, and give them a back seat."

Thus it is evident what these people are after; and when they secure this power, woe to such as refuse to obey their mandates. The signs on the religio-political horizon are ominous; the clouds are even now gathering thick and fast. Let every lover of liberty awake, and gird on the armor to stand through this rapidly-approaching conflict.

Taxation of Church Property.

By Madison C. Peters. Pastor Bloomingdale Reformed Church, N. Y. City.

THE assessed value of New York City church property, exclusive of parsonages, is $51,217,525. Walk up Broadway from Rector Street, and out Fifth and Madison Avenues, and from these streets alone you can see the under-estimated value of church property in New York. The Great estates of Trinity and the Collegiate churches alone are estimated at $50,000,000. Two hundred millions of dollars is something like a conservative estimate of the value of church property of the metropolis, and when we remember that the assessed value of the real estate of the city is less than $2,000,000,000, it can easily be figured out how highly oppressive exemption becomes to other taxpayers. The taxes have to be paid, and the property that is exempt, or rather omitted from the tax roll, is simply spread upon the other property. Everybody's tax goes up at least one-tenth. The American people would rise up in rebellion against direct taxation for church support, but what is exemption from taxation but an indirect State support of the Church, a virtual subsidy for its support, and at the expense of the general public? The State avoids a deficiency in its revenues by transferring to other property increased taxation, not by the voluntary action of the taxpayers, but by the compulsion of law, all of which is out of consonance with our republican institutions. The founders of our Republic wisely separated Church and State. But if we are taxed for the support of churches, it cannot justly be said that the Church and State are separated.

The churches enjoy no immunity from the operations of the laws of God. They place roofs upon their buildings to keep out the rain, and put up lightning rods to prevent the lightning from striking them. If God does not vary his laws for the benefit of the churches, why should the State be expected to do so?

It is argued that many churches are not self-sustaining at present, and that to tax them would render them still less so. Thousands are less able to provide for their children because of the tax collector. Why should the laborer pay taxes upon his humble home and the religious corporation be exempted? Make all property bear its just and equal share of taxation and you lessen the laboring man's burden. When the workingman feels that his burden is heavier because the magnificent possessions of the Church are omitted from the tax roll, do you wonder that the Church loses its power over him? Tax churches and only those able to bear taxes will dare to be extravagant. Tax churches, and modest buildings will be erected where they are most needed instead of a few imposing structures in the fashionable quarter. Every taxpayer in the State has his percentage of State tax correspondingly increased because of the needlessly expensive church properties of the cities,—churches which he may never enter.

The saloon keeper by force of law is compelled to help pay the taxes on my church, in the use of which I denounce his infernal traffic. If the saloon-keeper is taxed to support my church, in all fairness he ought to have something to say in its management. "No taxation without representation."

Churches are undoubtedly a public benefit, but if the doctrine of benefits be furnished as a reason for exemption on behalf of religious corporations, it refutes itself by proving more than the State can admit without bankrupting itself, for there are other institutions which are public benefits. It costs the community something to enjoy property, and if the Church paid taxes, it would pay only its honest share to secure its enjoyment of the use of property.

Taxation of church property is to the interest of American principles, and in harmony with the experience of nations. Taxing one man for the propagation of another man's religion is admittedly unjust, and, moreover, it is a relic of the principle of Church and State alliance inherited from the Old World, and not yet eliminated from our political system.

Sunday Laws and "Works of Charity."

By James T. Ringgold, of the Baltimore Bar.

To prohibit every kind or phase of activity, even of the body, upon the first day of the week, would evidently involve the keeping of the entire population in a condition of dreamless sleep during the "sacred hours." For, if allowed to dream, some of them would inevitably toss about. And it is in vain to hope that the mass of the American people will ever be induced by the most stringent Sunday law to adopt for fifty-two days in the year the peculiar form of religious devotion attributed to certain Oriental "fakirs," which consists in assuming an uncomfortable position, and maintaining it indefinitely, awake, yet entirely oblivious to external things, and motionless in every muscle. In order to save themselves, then, from the obligation of including the administration of narcotics to the entire population every Saturday night among the "police powers" of the State, the enactors of Sunday laws are forced to put a "saving clause" into these statutes. This saving clause not only fatally betrays the true character and purpose of all Sunday laws, but introduces into them an element of uncertainty, which it is safe to say would cause them to be nullified by the courts if they were anything else but Sunday laws. The standard saving clause of Sunday laws is "works of necessity and charity excepted." Such works as these, then, are allowed on Sunday when other works are not. Why?

If Sunday laws are designed to prevent interference with the civil rights of some persons by others, how come either of the exceptions to be made? It is evident that a work might be charitable in the strictest sense of the word so far as A is concerned, and necessary, from his standpoint, to be done for him by B, and yet infringe some civil right of C's. In such a case, where anything but a Sunday law is concerned, the law rightly and consistently declines to admit the charity of B or the necessity of A as any excuse for the violation of C's legal rights. Though I find a tramp starving, I may not rob a store to feed him. On the other hand, if Sunday laws have a civil purpose respecting the individual, and are designed to prevent his exhausting himself by continuous labor, why should he be permitted to do works of charity any more than any other work on Sunday? Is it not obvious that he may be quite as readily exhausted by such works as by work of any other kind? As a matter of fact, all persons who engage in what are called charitable works testify to their exhausting effects upon the physical strength, whatever spiritual benefit they may involve. These savings, then, of the Sunday laws, thus considered, sufficiently refute the suggestion that any civil right is intended to be or is in fact protected by them.

But the saving of works of charity does more than this. It betrays frankly the true nature and purpose of all Sunday legislation. The question of charity is a question of religion altogether. The civil law has and can have no concern with the matter. The civil law says, "You shall not stretch out your hand to smite your brother;" religion says, "You must stretch out your hand to help your brother." The civil law has no means of determining what is or is not charity, or of enforcing any obligations thereof. It cannot possibly discriminate between works of charity and works of any other sort. In forcing this discrimination upon the courts, by means of the saving of works of charity from the penalties of the Sunday law, the American legislatures have simply forced the courts to deal with a question of religious faith and dogma. Hence it is said: "The means which long-established and common usage of religious congregations show to be reasonably necessary to advance the cause of religion may be deemed works of charity."—Dale vs. Knapp, 98 Pa., 389.

But not only are the courts thus forced to examine into a question of religion pure and simple—they are launched on a shoreless sea of uncertainty without compass or rudder by this saving of works of charity. They are no more competent to deal with the religious question of what is or is not a work of charity than with any other point of religious doctrine. The uncertainty thus injected into the law is well illustrated by the preceding case.

This held that a contract of subscription towards the erection of a church was valid as an act of charity. If so, on what ground is the actual building of the church on Sunday unlawful? Or the quarrying of the stone for its walls, or the dressing of timber for its interior? In a word, where are we to stop in the degree of closeness of connection between the act in question and "the advancement of the cause of religion?" It does not seem possible that the subtlest judicial ingenuity will succeed any better in the future than it has in the past, in affording a satisfactory answer to this question.

Again, it seems hardly consistent with the facts of the case, or with verbal accuracy, to make charity synonymous with religion. All charity is a matter of religion, but all religion is surely not a matter of charity. Religion concerns itself with man's relation to Deity, first of all, and, as a necessary part of that relation, with his duty to his fellow-man. It is only in this latter connection that it comes to embrace charity. Belief and devotion, public or private, are no part of charity. And while the duty of charity is a religious duty, its performance is not necessarily concerned with the advancement of religion in the sense of the propagation of religious belief or the support of churches, etc.

The fact seems to be that the framers of Sunday laws did not regard these things as work at all; and when they made their exception of works of charity, they had in mind the relief of physical pain, the assisting of people in trouble, the doing of kindly, friendly acts, etc., etc. But surely this would throw down many bars which the advocates of Sunday laws are earnest to keep up. It would not merely allow, but include among the duties of Sunday charity every practicable provision for the decent and orderly entertainment of the poor on Sunday, such as the opening of free libraries, museums, and the like, the running of free excursions, etc.

There are many good people who feel that they are doing an act of charity when they combine to send a lot of poor children to the country for a week day, while nothing would induce them to have any part or lot in such a trip if it were made on Sunday. Again, the question might readily arise, Whose charity is it that excuses work under the Sunday law? Assuming that it is a charity in me to charter a steamer and take down the river a number of poor families on Sunday, will that fact be a defense for the captain and the engineer of the vessel, who work for pay as on other days?

Could the company recover the money I had agreed to pay if the agreement was made on Sunday? These considerations are adduced with the view of enforcing the proposition that the saving of works of charity in the Sunday laws introduces an element of uncertainty as to their meaning and application which renders their fair and uniform enforcement according to any fixed standard of interpretation impracticable, and would cause the courts to declare any other than a Sunday law absolutely void on account of the impossibility of construing its provisions by the light of any determinate principles known to the law.

A BILL has been introduced in the New York legislature to prevent the publication in the newspapers of portraits of persons without first having obtained their written consent to the publication. The measure, if passed, would enormously curtail the business of newspaper illustration in this State.

A New Sunday Bill at Albany.

"New York World," March 9.

WHEN Senator Wilcox at Albany declares, as he does in his proposed amendment to the Penal Code, that it shall be an indictable offense to play "the game commonly known as baseball" on Sunday, we know what he means. But when he also prohibits "all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse-racing, gaming, or other public sport, exercise or shows," the average mind finds it hard to follow him.

Is all "playing" on Sunday to be made a crime by law? Is fishing on Sunday to be prohibited? Is riding a bicycle a "public sport, exercise or show?" If Senator Wilcox does not mean what he says, what does he mean? If he means what he says, we might profitably swap legislation with Kansas, where they only propose to enact the Ten Commandments into statutes.

Politics and Religion.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

WHY is it that in society which considers itself cultivated the two tabooed subjects are "religion" and "politics?" No doubt because so many people, who are admitted even to the best society, are unable to control their tempers, or speak with calmness and moderation respecting subjects in which their personal interests are involved, or concerning which their personal prejudices are crossed. In discussing politics it certainly is quite natural that there should be heat and rancour. Here individual prejudices are likely to hold sway and to govern more or less the language and demeanour of those who indulge in political conversation. But in the realm of true religion, the religion of Jesus Christ, prejudice has no place.

There must be, it is true, assured and fixed conviction. But that is quite a different thing from prejudice. Conviction is indeed the natural foe and conqueror of prejudice. Two persons whose hearts are filled with the conviction of the eternal truths of true religion pure and undefiled, may talk together of the hope that is in them with joy and delight. Nothing in word, or act, or look, would pass between them which could mar the amenities of any social gathering. In their hearts prejudices do not exist,—they have been driven out by the conviction and acceptance of religious truth.

Politics cannot exist without prejudice. Indeed it is nothing else than the personal and individual interests, desires, and feelings, of different men and bodies of men, countries and sections of countries, brought into activity and antagonism. It is unavoidable that the partisanship here should be intense. But in the realm of true religion there is no room for partisanship, there can be no selfish interests or desires. Politics, it is evident, cannot be otherwise than disturbing in its tendency; it is inevitable from its very nature. But the very contrary is the fact in the case of true religion from its very nature.

What, then, is the trouble? Why should these two things, direct opposites—the one which makes the most for war, and the one which makes the most for peace—be classed together as the two greatest elements of disturbance, and equally denied admittance to the drawing room? The one, it is true, contains every uncomfortable and disagreeable possibility, but the other contains none. The reason of this strange and ill-assorted companionship in exile is that true religion is utterly misapprehended. That which is thought to be religion, and discussed as religion, is not the Word of God and the Gospel of Jesus Christ, but the visionary politics of an unknown future.

THE absurdity of the application of the ordinance against "loud noises" in the District of Columbia, made by the would-be guardians of Sunday sanctity against the Sunday newspaper, and sustained recently by Judge Kimball, is set out in the following by the Washington Star :—

"The bells sound clear across the sky
With warnings deep and grand,
Policemen loudly tap their clubs
For order in the land.
The engine whistle screams above
The rattle of the train;
Societies go marching to
The lusty band's refrain.

"Then fiercely come the horrid shrieks
Of cars around the curves;
And clanging gongs play havoc with
The most enduring nerves.
But still we lightly smile and vow
Peace has not wholly flown,
For you, O naughty newsboy, are
As mute as any stone!"

A PRESS dispatch from Albany, N. Y., dated the 8th inst., states that a State senator and a number of the Assembly have been asked to introduce in the legislature a bill providing for a censorship of the press, the work of the censors being to read all articles intended for publication and "to eliminate all libellous matter and all matters deemed inimical to the interests of the State or any official thereof." This of course would be in plain contradiction to that provision of the Constitution which forbids any congressional interference with the freedom of the press; but it would seem that the would-be reformers of these days know little and care less whether their schemes are in harmony with the National Constitution, or not. There are many straws like this which are showing the direction of the wind.

In the opening paragraph of his inaugural address, the President assures the people of the United States that "Almighty God" "will not forsake us so long as we obey His commandments and walk humbly in His footsteps." An exchange points out that inasmuch as Inspiration has testified of the Almighty that "Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known" (Ps. 77:19), the assumption that the people are able to "walk humbly in His footsteps" was a "pretty bad break" on the part of the speaker. That is what usually happens when religion gets into political speeches for political effect.

A GREAT mass meeting was held in Cooper Union, New York City, the evening of the 11th, to favor ratification of the Arbitration treaty between this country and Great Britain. Before the meeting had progressed very far, however, it became evident that about half of those present were not in favor of the treaty. When the resolutions in favor of arbitration were about to be submitted, the comparative quiet of the meeting gave place to pandemonium, in which the "peace" men and the opposing faction became decidedly belligerent. A battle was averted only by the determined efforts of a strong force of police.

It is a curious thing that while public sentiment is so universally against allowing two men to fight with their fists to maintain their "honor," it should at the same time be so largely favorable to war for the purpose of maintaining the "honor" of the nation. Do the awful horrors of war make this method of maintaining "honor" a more desirable one for nations than for individuals? How is this?

That "Superb" Bible.

Dodgeville, Wis.

AMERICAN SENTINEL, New York City:

The Bible came to hand all right. To say that I am pleased with it will but faintly describe my feelings. It would take too much space to enumerate its many points of excellence, so I will sum it all up in the one word "superb."

There are so many "aids to the study of the Scriptures," and they are so helpful and just what I have been wishing for since I became a "Bible Christian."

Friends and neighbors all say, "I wish I had one like it," and "So cheap." Our seventeen-year-old daughter is about to start out to obtain subscriptions for the SENTINEL, as she wishes for one "just like it."

Please accept my warmest thanks, and believe me to be,

Ever sincerely yours,

R. G. W. COLLINS.

The TWO Of Great Importance to Every American Citizen. REPUBLICS.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE TWO GREATEST REPUBLICS,

Rome AND THE United States

The study of years and elaboration of many volumes, are presented in a concise and pleasing manner. In reviewing the history of the Roman Republic, the rocks upon which she stranded have been clearly pointed out. It contrasts the principles underlying enforced religious observances, with the true principles of which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The "Two Republics" comprises 896 octavo pages, and is printed from clear, new electrotypes, on fine, tinted paper, beautifully and substantially bound, and is illustrated with 67 full-page engravings. The work is furnished in the following styles of binding:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN,

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND

✢ ✢ ✢

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

THE STORY OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

BY ROSALIND AMELIA YOUNG,
A Native Daughter.

Pitcairn Island, one of the volcanic gems of the Pacific, has been heard of wherever the English language has been spoken. The story of the working out of the problem of human life on its limited territory reads stranger and more thrillingly in many respects than a romance. But most, if not all, of the tales told and books printed have either been too fragmentary or incorrect and misleading. It will be interesting to the friends of that miniature world to know that an authentic history has been written, and that by a native of the island, one to the manor born. Miss Rosa Young is one of the direct descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The book is a plain, unvarnished tale of Pitcairn and its inhabitants from its settlement to the year 1894. It is written with a charming simplicity of style which refreshes the reader and invites a continual perusal. Illustrated with 26 engravings by the half-tone process, and its 23 chapters have each a neatly engraved heading.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, MARCH 25, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 12.
Single Copy, 3 cents.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

THE Church to-day wants power. That is evident enough from her own testimony. She realizes that she is not making that stand against the world's tide of sin and corruption that she should, and in various ways she makes confession of this truth.

But no less true than this is it that there is unlimited power in readiness for her use. To deny this is to deny the very foundation of Christianity.

This power is the power of God. To his disciples Jesus said, as he commissioned them for their divine work among mankind: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. . . . And lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28:18-20. "All power" is certainly as much power as the Church can want.

There is no necessity, then, that the Church should scheme to get possession of more power. She has but to take the power that God provides. And as God has provided "all power" for his Church, it is certain that the Church needs nothing less than this. And it is equally certain that when the Church schemes and bargains for power from earthly sources, she gets only that which is infinitely less than the power she must have to be successful.

But God does not grant his power as an unconditional gift. He cannot allow his own omnipotence to be exercised independently of omniscient wisdom. To allow the Church to use omnipotent power as she might herself think best to employ it, would produce the worst state of affairs that could be imagined. Finite wisdom directing infinite power would be a thing fearful to contemplate.

The possession of this power, therefore, depends upon the connection of the Church with God. And this is indicated by the words of Christ, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." He is the Head of the Church, and by the head all the body is directed. The power which operates through the body is also his. But it is possible for the Church to disconnect herself from her divine Head, and substitute another head in His place, even as has been done by the Papacy. It is possible for the Church to become united to the world and thus separated from Christ. But as decapitation means death, the Church in such a case becomes a dead Church, so far as concerns the purposes of Christianity, and being dead she is without the power of Christ.

It is Christ, the Head of the Church, who works in the Church when it is united to him. But Christ is God; and Christ in the individual, or in his Church, means godliness. The divine power of the Church is the "power of godliness." But there is a "form of godliness" which the Church may have, separate from the power of godliness. This is as the Apostle Paul said it would be "in the last days." See 2 Tim. 3:1-5. All the sins enumerated in this text may go with a "form of godliness;" in other words, may exist in the professedly Christian Church; but with them the Church cannot but deny the power of godliness. Like Peter denying his Lord, she says of this power, I know it not. And she says this by her failure to manifest this power to the world. Claiming to be the Church of Christ, yet having not the power of Christ, she virtually says to the world, that no such power exists.

If, then, the Church finds herself lacking in power, what is the reason? There can be no other reason than that, having become worldly, she has separated herself from Christ. For it is certain that so long as he is with the Church, she has "all power" "in heaven and in earth."

The Church is now seeking political power; but political power is not the power of God. In a sense, all power is of God; but the power of God in His Church must be manifested in godliness. To be seeking for political power is a denial of the power of godliness.

But why will the Church seek for political power? Why will the Christian seek for such power? The Church and the individual Christian are commissioned to preach the gospel, which is "the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth." Rom. 1:16. Nothing but the power of godliness can suffice for the Church in any undertaking pursuant to her divine calling; and nothing but the "power of God unto salvation" can suffice to save any individual from sin. There is no lack of this divine power; and God is no less willing to bestow it now than he was to pour it out on his Church at Pentecost. The only question is, Will the Church give Him the opportunity?

A SUNDAY law is a tax upon the people compelling all to contribute one day's time each week for the maintenance of a church dogma. Our forefathers went to war with Great Britain rather than accede to a tax far less grievous than this.

Strangely Inconsistent.

WHY is it that the nation is not more interested in cultivating the fighting spirit among its citizens? Why, instead of this, are the national and the State governments, with a single exception, doing everything to repress this spirit? The United States maintains a standing army, presumably for the purpose of fighting when such a thing is required. The States maintain their companies of the militia, and it is fair to presume that it is intended these shall fight when there is a call for their services. The same may be said with reference to the navy.

But what would be the use of an army or company of militia who could not or would not fight? Unless these men are both able and willing to fight, the sooner the military forces of the country are disbanded, the better. But if they are to fight, how should the fighting be done? It should be done well, of course; no one can dispute this. No nation ever wanted an army of poor fighters. Fighting, like everything else, is to be done in the most effective manner possible, if at all. This would be the only sane way of seeking to attain the end sought.

Now it will not be denied that the most effective fighting will be done by the army that is composed of the best fighters; and it must also be admitted that the best fighters are those who have most of the fighting spirit and instinct. Every commander who has had experience in actual warfare knows the value of the fighting spirit in his men for securing the victory. It is often said in praise of men of this kind, in the narrative of a military encounter, that they "fought like demons." These are the kind of men every commander likes to have.

This expression, in fact, gives us the standard of excellence in the line of that which armies and navies are maintained to do. The nearer the men in them can come to acting "like demons" when fulfilling the purpose for which the Government employs them, the better will they do that which the Government wants done at the time, and the more valuable will they be to the Government in their military capacity.

We say again, therefore, it is strange that the Government should maintain an army and navy (which in time of war would depend for their efficiency upon the citizens of the States), and at the same time be against the development of the fighting spirit.

The Hope of the Church.

It is the hope of the Church to-day, according to the testimony of the words and actions of her most prominent representatives, that the kingdom of Christ shall "enter the realm of law through the gateway of politics." And this hope is, in her view, to be realized through her own efforts to obtain control of the world's political power.

Has the Church no better hope than this?

It is certain that no such hope as this is set before the Church in the Word of God. Does that Word then provide no hope to be kept in view by the Church in her earthly warfare?

Every one who has read even a small portion of God's Word knows that this is not so. The Scripture is full of hope for our fallen race. It was given the race that they might have hope, in place of the despair which is the fruit of sin. No Christian need be told of the "Christian's hope." No brighter hope was ever cherished than this hope. No hope ever rested on a more secure foundation, or was more sure of realization by the faithful seeker. And the Christian's hope is the hope of the Christian Church.

What, then, is this hope? Many portions of the inspired Word furnish the answer. By the Apostle Paul it is referred to in his epistle to Titus, in his exhortation that we "should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." Titus 2:12, 13. The same apostle, when under arrest before the Roman governor Felix, affirmed his "hope toward God," "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust"; and again, when before King Agrippa, said, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers, . . . for which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" Acts 24:15; 26:6-8.

It would be needless to cite all the passages of Scripture which elucidate this subject. Their testimony leaves no room for doubt or misapprehension. The resurrection of Jesus Christ is set forth as the cardinal truth upon which the hopes of Christians depend. "If Christ be not raised," wrote Paul to the Corinthians, "your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." And he adds, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. 15:17, 19. The resurrection of Christ from the dead is the sure pledge of the resurrection of all those who "sleep in Jesus." And this resurrection is to take place at the second appearing of Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven, in the glory of his Father, and attended by all the holy angels. At that time the righteous will enter upon their eternal reward, which has been secured to them through the gospel. Matt. 16:27; 24:30, 31; 25:31-34, etc.

We are, then, upon this divine authority, to live "soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope"—not of the entrance of Christ's kingdom into "the realm of law through the gateway of politics;" not of the "regeneration of society" through the Church's political supremacy,—but of "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;" even as we are exhorted by the Apostle Peter to consider what manner of persons we ought to be, "in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God." 2 Peter 3:11, 12. Our hope, the Christian's hope, and the hope of the Christian Church, is that of his coming again to earth in the power and glory of his Father, to raise the righteous dead, terminate the reign of sin and sorrow, and take to himself and to their eternal reward all those who shall then stand justified by faith in him.

Is not this hope sufficient for the Church? Could there be a brighter, better hope to illuminate her pathway and cheer her in her warfare against earth's sin and error? Could she look forward to any better, more satisfactory termination of the long contest of sin and righteousness for the supremacy? Is the hope of "regenerating society" and "purifying politics" through the acquisition of political supremacy, a hope that can bear comparison with this?

Why, then, has the Church turned from this "blessed hope," established by God's own Word, to occupy her time and energies with the miserable and chimerical project of trying to usher in the kingdom of Christ through "the gateway of politics?" How long will she live so far beneath her privilege?

One Law for Rich and Poor.

IN the London (Eng.) Westminster Review, Mr. R. Spence Watson makes the following pertinent observations on the subject of Sunday opening of museums and Sunday lectures:—

"Two stock objections are made, both to the opening of museums and similar institutions on Sundays, and to the delivery of Sunday lectures; they involve a certain amount of labor, and certain payments are made to lecturers and others. I could appreciate the force of these objections if they did not apply with equal force to churches and chapels, and to domestic life. I say nothing about the splendid voluntary work which is done here and elsewhere, because that also is true of all these efforts alike. But I wish that those of our opponents who have their own gardens to walk in, their own libraries to read the books of their own choice in, their own pianos to listen to and pictures to look at, would put themselves, in thought, in the places of those whose choice lies between one or two poorly-appointed rooms, the cheerless Sunday streets, and the brilliant and crowded gin palace. Our English Sundays have too long pressed heavily upon those who do not wish to spend morning and evening alike in devotional exercises. To keep them as they have been, I believe to be wrong—altogether wrong—even from the religious point of view."

If people are to be driven by law into the churches on Sunday, why should not the Rev. Mr. Bogus and his contemporaries be obliged by law to furnish preaching that is orthodox and worth listening to?

The "Labor Trust" in Court.

As has been noticed in these columns, the principle of the "trust" is just as susceptible of being used against individual liberty by the organizations of labor, as by those of capital. An instance in illustration of this has come before the public through some decisions of the courts, the last of which was from the court of final appeal. The case is given the following notice in the New York Times:—

"For some six years a case has been wending its slow way through the courts of this State, which, reaching the Court of Appeals, has brought out a decision of great importance as to what we have ventured to call the labor trust. It is a suit brought in 1891 by a workman in a brewery in Rochester against a branch of the Knights of Labor to recover damages on the ground that he had been deprived of the opportunity to work because he would not join the local assembly. The assembly pleaded a contract with the brewers' organization by which the latter agreed not to employ for more than four weeks any man who would not join the assembly, pay its dues, and submit to its rules. This the workman refused to do, was discharged, and afterward was unable to secure employment. He won his case in the lower courts, and has now got a decision in the court of final appeal. The court says:—

"Public policy and the interests of society favor the utmost freedom in the citizen to pursue his lawful trade or calling, and if the purpose of an organization or combination of workmen be to hamper, or to restrict, that freedom, and, through contracts or arrangements with employers, to coerce other workmen to become members of the organization, and to come under its rules and conditions, under the penalty of the loss of their positions, and of deprivation of employment, then that purpose seems clearly unlawful, and militates against the spirit of our Government and the nature of our institutions. The effectuation of such a purpose would conflict with that principle of public policy which prohibits monopolies and exclusive privileges. It would tend to deprive the public of the services of men in useful employments and capacities.' . . .

"Nor will the court admit that the agreement was justified as a means of avoiding disputes. It says:—

" 'While it may be true, as argued, that the contract was entered into on the part of the Ale Brewers' Association with the object of avoiding disputes and conflicts with the workingmen's organization, that feature and such an intention cannot aid the defense nor legalize a plan of compelling workingmen, not in affiliation with the organization, to join it, at the peril of being deprived of their employment and of the means of making a livelihood.' "

The argument of the court recognizes that the "labor trust" is conducted upon the same principles as is any other trust, and merits condemnation upon the same grounds as have been set forth against the combinations of capital; only it would seem that it is somewhat easier to deal with the labor trust through the courts than with those which are representative of wealth.

Enforcing the Laws.

AT a recent meeting of the Christian Citizenship League, of Chicago, in Willard Hall, for the purpose of examining into the qualifications of aspirants for the office of mayor, the discussion turned upon the subject of the enforceability of the laws. One of the candidates for the mayorship, Mr. Hesing, declared that no mayor of Chicago could enforce the laws. The Union Signal quotes Mr. Hesing as saying:—

"I am no hypocrite, gentlemen, and I tell you that many of our laws cannot be enforced. I want to be mayor of Chicago, and, if you vote for me I will enforce such laws as will be for the best interests of Chicago; not for the citizens who meet in Willard Hall; not for the saloon-keepers; not for the Prohibitionists, but for a great city of two million inhabitants!"

In a further description of the proceedings, the Union Signal says:—

"A gentleman immediately arose and asked two pertinent questions. First, 'Who is to decide which laws shall be enforced and which shall not?' To which Mr. Hesing replied, 'Common sense.' Then, second, 'Whose common sense?' To which the response came, 'The common sense of the executive officer, after consultation with his advisory board.' "

Upon this the Union Signal comments:—

"Surely this is the light we have long sought, the missing link in the dark labyrinth of municipal, State and national affairs. The laws of our cities and our nation are enacted by the people. The executive officers are elected by the people, and one of the requirements made of them is that they shall enforce the laws. Surely, what could be more simple than the chain of logic which seems to deduce that laws made by the people, for the enforcement of which representatives are chosen by the people, must, of necessity, be enforced as the people desire. But, say, a hitherto unacknowledged quantity comes to the front as a determinative factor, viz., the 'common sense' of the executive officer. The people have made the laws, he is to say whether or not they shall be enforced, and the absolutely infallible test which is to be applied in determining this point is his personal standard of common sense."

The Union Signal seems to be striving, in common with many would-be reformers of the day, to establish the principle in the policy of the State and of the nation that anything in the form of law must be enforced, good or bad, simply because it is "the law." This is not a safe principle to follow.

It is a fact, and one too plain to be denied, that measures often get upon the statute books which are not susceptible of enforcement. It is much easier to enact laws than to enforce them; it is, indeed, easy to enact as a law that which cannot be enforced at all. And whenever this is done,—whenever a measure is passed which either cannot be enforced, or which becomes obsolete after a short period of attempted enforcement, the result is highly detrimental to the interests of law and order.

The truth which, more than any other, is emphasized by this, is that greater care and wisdom should be employed in legislation. Only such measures should be passed as have the support of justice and good sense, and are therefore susceptible of enforcement. There is an obvious tendency at this day toward legislation of the "freak" variety. This is largely due to the idea, which has become so prevalent, that legislation constitutes a means of moral reform; and so long as this idea prevails, so long will statutes be enacted which can work only harm within the range of their influence.

What is needed is not more legislation, but greater care in legislating; less heed paid to the clamors of would-be moral reformers, and more paid to the demands of justice; respect for right, rather than for that which claims respect only by having usurped the throne of right.

Only upon this basis can there be in truth a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

A SENATE Committee of the Maine legislature gave a hearing March 4, on the following bill for a stricter observance of the "Sabbath":—

"Whoever on the Lord's day fires or discharges any rifle, shot gun, revolver, pistol or other firearm, except as an act of necessity, shall be punished by a fine of $10 and costs of prosecution, for each offense."

Hon. L. T. Carleton presented the bill and spoke in its favor; and Messrs. Huffman and Lamb, Seventh-day Adventists, appeared against it. Of their opposition and the result of the hearing, the Bangor Weekly Commercial of March 12, says:—

"They both carried leather-covered Bibles and quoted Scripture to the committee in support of their position and to maintain their declaration that the seventh day of the week is the Sabbath day. Elder Huffman had numerous tilts with Mr. Carleton, and the bright Kennebec lawyer, who is something of a student of Holy Writ himself, found more than his match. The crowd which gathered about had a fine entertainment. The committee voted to report the bill with an amendment that it shall only apply to cities, towns and organized places, as the bill as originally drawn would prevent the firing of a gun up in the backwoods of Maine."

THE Truth Seeker, a journal opposed to Christianity, in its issue of March 20, inquires: "Can anyone who has read the gospel story of Jesus Christ conceive of him as summoning a policeman to arrest a ten-year-old darkey boy for crying his papers in the streets of Washington, while the pharisees and hypocrites were sitting in the front pews of the churches? Can any stretch of imagination picture him as interfering with a game of ball in a vacant lot, played by lads who had no day but Sunday for recreation?"

Shame on the professed friends and followers of Christ who are doing in his name that which His avowed enemies declare would be entirely beneath His character.

Christ or Creed; Which?

BY W. W. PRESCOTT.

WHEN Christ came to this world as the bearer of life and light and love from God to man, He found that the plain teachings of God's Word had been obscured and even made of no effect through the teachings of those who were the leaders of the people; that religion had been made a burden upon the people; and that what God had given as a blessed means of union and communion with Him had been turned into a yoke of bondage. Much of His example and teaching was directed toward changing all this. He taught the people that religion was a life and not a mere form, ceremony or creed; and He presented the plain teaching of the Scripture as the basis of faith and the rule of conduct, even though it should be in open opposition to the customs and traditions of the time. He Himself was the gospel which He preached; and the word which had already been revealed in language, now "was made flesh" (John 1:14), and revealed in life. Thus Christ became the embodiment and the interpretation of all God's thought for man as set forth in the Scripture. But this brought Him into continual conflict with the religious teachers of his day, who placed their own traditions above the clearest statements of the Word of God.

To His disciples He said, "Follow Me," and then He lived before them, and taught them by precept, the Scriptures which He Himself had caused to be written (1 Peter 1:10, 11), "that the man of God may be perfect." 2 Tim. 3:16, 17. And when those who moulded the religious sentiment of the time asked him, "Why walk not Thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders?" He replied, "Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition . . . making the Word of God of none effect through your tradition." See Mark 7:5-13. "Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?" was His inquiry. Their ideas of the character of God and of religion, both in form and spirit, had become so distorted that when Jesus appeared among them, "the image of the invisible God," they persecuted Him because He would not conform to their ideas of religion, and even claimed scripture authority for putting Him to death (John 19:7), yet being all the time full of zeal for their creed. The experience of Saul, the Pharisee as told by himself (Gal. 1:13, 14), shows how the true spirit of religion may be wholly disregarded in the settled determination to maintain tradition and creed.

This conflict which was waged in Christ's time and against Him has been continued, in one form and another, ever since. In the Acts of the Apostles we have a record of the struggle on the part of the early disciples to establish the truth of the Bible, as lived and taught by Christ, as against the most determined effort on the part of those who professed to be the people of God to maintain the traditions and creed of the Church. Light was refused, and the power of the Holy Ghost was resisted (Acts 7:51) in the vain effort to put man's idea of religion and man's interpretation of the Scripture in the place of "the truth as it is in Jesus." It was in vain that Paul, the Christian, said: "I continue unto this day, . . . saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come" (Acts 26:22), "believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets" (Acts 24:14), since their zeal for their creed was so much greater than their regard for what the Word of God taught.

These same experiences were repeated in the great Reformation of the sixteenth century. The Church had departed from the plain teaching of the Scripture, and had placed the authority of man and the traditions of the Church above the clearest statements of the Word of God. The sole and infallible authority of the Word of God was the primary and fundamental principle of the Reformation. Said the Reformers:—

"The Christians receive no other doctrines than those founded on the express words of Jesus Christ, of the apostles, and of the prophets. No man, no assembly of doctors, has a right to prescribe new ones."—D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation, book 3, chapter 9, par. 4.

When Luther at the Diet of Worms was asked to retract all that he had written contrary to the traditions and the creed of the Church, he appealed to the authority of the Bible, and said:—

"For this reason, most serene Emperor, and you most illustrious Princes, and all men of every degree, conjure you, by the mercy of God, to prove from the writings of the prophets and apostles, that I have erred.

As soon as I am convinced of this, I will retract my error and be the first to lay down my books and throw them into the fire."—D'Aubigne, book 7, chapter 8, par. 50.

But the conflict is not ended, and the platform upon which the Reformers stood is the platform upon which to stand to-day,—an appeal to the plain teaching of the Word of God. All the truth was not seen by Luther and his associates, and their teaching can be safely followed only so far as it is in harmony with the principle which they themselves laid down, the appeal to the Word of God. The principle which is openly avowed by the Roman Catholic Church ("Tradition is to us more clear and safe"—Catholic Belief, p. 45) has received altogether too much sanction in some Protestant churches, and there is need that we "should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints," and should build only "upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone."

Dr. Adolph Saphir has well said:—

"If we have the Spirit's teaching in the Book instead of the Spirit's teaching by the Book, men wish to have it extracted, simplified, reduced to a system, methodized. And then, practically speaking, the creed is above the Bible."

The following statements by Dr. George F. Pentecost are also well worthy of thoughtful consideration at this time:—

"The Church at the time of Christ's ministry on the earth had well nigh lost sight of the Scriptures by the accumulation of creeds, glosses, commentaries, and the like, so that they were more given to creeds and traditions and doctrines of men than they were to the Word of God. We are in the same danger now. . . It is a woful evil to substitute the authority of creeds and confessions of faith for that of the Word of God, which is the only rule of faith and practice for His people, and the only writing that is of binding authority upon the conscience. . . Whenever anyone yields obedience to the creeds of the churches, and surrenders the God-given right of personally searching the Scriptures to find out for himself the truth, then he indeed becomes a slave. . . Never surrender your conscience to any save God, and that on the sole authority of His Word."—In the Volume of the Book, p. 45.

Let every one heed these words, and follow the example of the "more noble" Bereans (Acts 17:10, 11), who "searched the Scriptures daily." All teaching is to be subjected to the test of the Word (Isa. 8:20), and only truth received. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." Col. 2:8. "He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk, even as He walked." 1 John 2:6. "If any man willet to do His will, he shall know of the teaching." John 7:17, R. V. "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." John 8:12. Are we ready to follow the plain instruction of the Bible, as interpreted by the example and teaching of Christ, even though it be contrary to creed and tradition? This is the test of our Christianity.

A Wrong Diagnosis.

ONE of the worst mistakes that can be made in the treatment of disease is that of failing to correctly diagnose the nature of the malady from which the patient is suffering.

The would-be doctors of the body politic should take this fact into careful consideration. That there is something wrong, and that the patient is getting worse instead of better, is evident; and the remedy which they propose is that of religious legislation, in order to make it, as they say, "hard for people to do wrong and easy for them to do right." In this they are making the mistake so common to medical practitioners, of treating the symptoms instead of the disease.

They should have wisdom enough to discern that the symptoms indicate a malady too deeply seated to be reached by any remedial power in legislation.

There is abundant evidence indicating that the seat of the disease is in the heart, the very fountain of life, and not in the hands or feet. In other words, the malady is working insidiously but with deadliest results in the strongholds of morality, from which come the remedies that aim at moral reformation.

The Church is striving to reform politics, but she herself is most in need of reformation. Her representatives are loth to admit this; but many of them see it, and some candidly avow it. Among the latter is the well-known evangelist, Rev. A. B. Simpson, who says:—

"In my opinion the most discouraging features of the times are to be found in the fashionable religion of the day. There are too many loose views in churches themselves in regard to the inspiration of the Bible. There is also the all too prevalent habit of permitting the introduction of worldly things into the churches. There are too many entertainments in the churches themselves to raise funds—entertainments which sometimes are little better than theatrical performances."

Of those features that are not the "most discouraging," the same writer says:—

"We have missionaries in all lands, so I speak with authority when I say that I am convinced the world is wickeder than ever. As civilization advances, sin spreads. Civilized nations are wickeder than the uncivilized. New York and San Francisco are more sinful than Pekin and Singapore. I speak from personal observation, for I have been in all four cities.

"The desire for novelty is such that all kinds of new inventions in crime are taking place. Within a certain period there were 10,000 murders in the United States, and but 300 executions. Divorces are doubling every year or two. Society is getting worse and worse all the time. Public entertainments are becoming lower and lower in tone. I don't care to discuss notorious things, but society is ripening for judgment just as piety is ripening for the coming of the Lord."

Mr. Simpson does not, however, see a remedy for this state of things in legislation. On this point he says:—

"The only measures that I feel called upon to adopt to stem this tide of wickedness are wholly spiritual ones, such as the holding up of the divine truth. I believe, however, that it is quite right for law-abiding officials and public-spirited men to use all the restraints of government to check this onslaught of sin, but on the other hand I believe that the Government is no better than the society it represents. The real remedy is to be found in the religion of Christ.

"My remedy is to have not only churches and preachers, but to make the churches and preachers abandon all these worldly things and follow in the footsteps of Christ and his disciples.

"I do not believe that a mere transient revival, such as takes place at Cooper Union or Carnegie Hall, is going to accomplish all the needed reform. These revivals are good as far as they go, but what we want is a higher standard and a revival all the year round."

Could the Church expend her energies in any more profitable manner than that of seeking a deeper and more permanent revival and the erection of a higher standard of righteousness, in her own midst? Or is it better that she expend them in getting control of legislative power and through that seeking to reform politics? What, reader, is your opinion?

Why the Powers Favor Turkey.

THERE is something seemingly quite anomalous about the situation which has been reached in the Cretan difficulty. The "Christian" powers of Europe have taken the side of Mohammedan Turkey against "Christian" Greece; and this, not because the latter nation have been horrifying the civilized world by slaughtering defenseless and innocent men, women, and children in Crete or in any country; no charge can be brought against Greece of having violated the etiquette of "civilized" warfare. The Cretans, furthermore, are said to be mostly Greek Christians, who long to exchange Turkish misrule for the dominion of their own race, and who therefore welcome the attitude which Greece has taken.

When the Turks were slaughtering the Armenians, sparing neither sex nor age, and perpetrating upon their victims every cruelty in which a fiendish nature could take delight, while a cry of horror and indignation went up from other lands the world over, these "Christian" powers could not be prevailed upon to do more than threaten the Sultan and demand his acceptance of certain schemes of reform, which afforded at best only a promise of relief for the situation. But now, when Greece persists in her course, not of massacre and rapine, but of establishing the independence of Crete against the Turk, these same "Christian" powers quickly arrive at a plan of concerted action and force Greece at the muzzle of their guns to desist.

Why is this? Why do the great powers of Christendom act as though the Turk were a being sacred from interference even in the name of justice or humanity, while at the same time they promptly block the way against a "Christian" power engaged in a seemingly laudable undertaking?

The only possible explanation is that for some reason it is believed that interference with the Turk means war, in which the powers themselves would become involved; and the powers are not yet ready for the outbreak. We say, not yet ready; for it is certain that the powers are not averse to war in itself. If they were, there would not be any war. When two nations are both anxious to keep the peace, there is no more danger of war between them than there would be between two peace-loving individuals. Even if one or even two of the "Christian" powers were anxious to fight, if the rest were averse to war, they could by their combined power easily coerce the two belligerents into maintaining the peace. Hence, so far as war in itself is concerned, there is no reason for the persistent and extraordinary friendship of the powers for the Turk.

But with a general war, there will come an alteration of the map of Europe; and this is the overshadowing consideration with the powers. Some nations will gain by the change and some will not. It is generally agreed that the European domain of the "sick man" will be "thrown open to settlement" by the powers, and possibly some valuable territory in other quarters; and the supreme question is, which of the powers will be most successful in the "grab" for these new possessions. They are in no danger of losing territory that they now own; they do not fear any invasion of that, save as a possible result of quarreling over a division of the spoils. No one of the powers cares to go to war with any of the others, save as a last resort. But they do want new territory and new sources of revenue, and these are to be obtained out of districts which none of the powers now rule. Each one is determined to get its "share" of the spoils, and each is determined that the others shall have only what it considers their "share." Each one wants to define its own share and also the shares of the others. Each one covets the same prize. Each one is determined that above all things, it must not be behind in the race for territorial aggrandizement. This is a misfortune to be avoided at any cost.

As the situation now stands, the powers are afraid, individually, that they are not prepared to get what they want should the redistribution of territory now take place. They want no war just now, but a little longer time to prepare, by diplomacy and an increase of armament, to reap the fullest advantage when the fateful hour arrives.

In a word, it is covetousness that constitutes the secret spring of action in the strange friendship of the "Christian" powers for the "unspeakable Turk." Covetousness is the dominating principle in "Christendom" to-day.

WHEN the Church intermeddles in the affairs of the State, she forfeits the right of protest if the State intermeddles in the affairs of the Church.

Notes of the Week.

THAT decidedly objectionable practice of "slumming," which, a few years ago, was quite a popular "fad," has just been revived in this city by a party of Yale students of theology. It is gratifying to read that they were "surprised" at the discovery that there were no "real slums" in New York; that they paid twenty-five cents each for a bed in a down-town lodging-house, and the beds were clean, and the breakfast next morning was "substantial" in quality and well cooked. But the question still remains—what were these students of theology doing to help themselves to improve their characters as future spiritual guides of their fellowmen, to make the world better and purer and happier, by their "slumming"?

* * *

PERHAPS the "slumming" was of a mild order. Perhaps those under whose guidance the slummers were might have shown them many sights more repulsive than those clean beds, and taken them into many places where crowds of people manage to subsist on meals by no means substantial, or well cooked, and simply did not choose to do so. If this were the fact, they were truly kind to the young theological students. Nothing good ever yet came of clerical "slumming." There can be no manner of doubt that one of its direst results is "sensationalism" in the pulpit. But the greatest objection to it is that it is usually the prelude to that interference by preachers as preachers in the work of legislation and police management which constitutes one of the most objectionable manifestations of the union of Church and State, as it exists among us at the present time.

* * *

Or course, this interference is based on the idea that, somehow or other, men can be legislated into righteousness. Time seems to accomplish but little in the way of getting this notion out of the head of average mankind. The fact that the Master talked to individuals alone; that salvation and redemption are in their very essence matters which belong to the relation between each separate soul and its Creator, and that neither the laws nor the force of the community can affect that relation in any manner or to any degree whatsoever—this simple truth is ignored now to pretty much the same extent that it was ignored when the first union of the self-styled Christian Church with the State was consummated under the pagan Emperor Constantine. Clergymen who "slum" and follow their slumming by sensational activity in civil affairs, are the intellectual descendants of the bishops who persuaded the pagan emperor to enact the first Sunday law.

WHATEVER the result of the Cretan complication, it is to be borne in mind that it will have nothing whatever to do with differences of religion. The "Powers," as they are called, will settle the matter—probably without war —on a political basis alone, and with reference to their own selfish interests. It is safe to say that neither the fact that the Cretans "profess and call themselves Christians," while the Turks are of a different and a hostile faith, nor the real merits of the original controversy—whatever these last may be—will play any conspicuous figure in the final settlement of the matter. The "Sick man of Europe" has long lain at the mercy of these "Powers." They would have killed him years ago, if they could have agreed among themselves just how his property ought to be divided up. Upon this point they seem as far from a common conclusion as they have ever been. But whether he is to owe a further prolongation of his existence to their inability to "come together" now, as in the past, or whether he is ultimately dismembered forever, benefit to Christianity may be an incidental outcome, but will form no part of the design. Christianity, as represented in modern statecraft, finds its expression in the blessings of battle-flags, and in profound thanksgivings for the slaughter of hostile armies, not in the application of the Golden Rule.

DISCUSSION continues about the recent order of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, forbidding newsboys to cry the names of their papers in the streets of Washington on "the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday." These commissioners are three of the most absolute despots that modern times have known. The people over whose conduct and property they exercise an arbitrary and capricious control have no voice whatever in their selection. They are appointed by the president, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States." No amount of tyranny, no acts of wantonness, no abuse of their enormous power imperils their places, unless the strangers to whom they are indebted for their elevation choose to pay attention to their proceedings. It is surely an anomalous state of affairs. Here is a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," this great United States, based on the principle of suffrage; here is a country which fought for and won its independence to vindicate the doctrine that all civil authority derives its sanction and its exclusive sanction from the consent of those over whom it is exercised. And this unalterable principle, this undeniable doctrine is ignored at the very capitol of the nation! Suffrage abolished, consent repudiated, irresponsible authority enthroned in Washington City!

* * *

THE silly and cruel "regulation" in regard to the crying of Sunday papers is only one of many petty outrages which the three arbitors of Washington's destiny have from time to time inflicted upon their fellow-citizens. One has to live in that unfortunate city fully to appreciate the opportunities these men have of annoying their "subjects," and the eagerness with which they avail themselves thereof. Nor is there any hope that this last unnecessary and unwarrantable infringement upon the right to the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness will be abandoned. The motto of the District Commissioners is "no step backwards." Their regulations are like those famous "laws of the Medes and Persians," which, it is said, could never be repealed or modified.

* * *

THE President takes "an oath of office," placing his hand on a Bible. Why? If he broke that oath, he could not be indicted for perjury. The ability of the law to punish him for malfeasance or misfeasance in the discharge of his high and important duties as the chief executive officer of a land containing seventy-five millions of people is in no wise affected by the question of whether he has or has not taken an oath faithfully to perform those duties. His assumption of them, as the sequence of his election, fairly made and duly announced, according to the Constitution and the statutes, is sufficient to expose him to all the worldly penalties that can be attached to any dereliction in their discharge. What, then, is the object and purport of this "official oath," which is taken by our State administrators, from august President down to petty "deputies" of country villages?

* * *

THE answer is plain to those who are fair-minded enough to look the matter squarely in the face. But one answer will be given by all who are also candid enough to confess the truth. The administration of an official oath is simply and solely the recognition of a religious dogma in this free American Union of ours, and an attempt on the State's part or the part of the United States, as the case may be, to avail herself of certain supernatural terrors, in order to secure fidelity and scrupulousness among her servitors. That is to say, the Government invokes in its own behalf and for its own protection a certain belief as to "the hereafter" which is plainly a matter exclusively of ecclesiastical cognizance. This is traveling altogether outside of the proper limitations of governmental action, according to what is affirmed to be the American theory of government.

* * *

NOR is it any answer to this objection against the administration of official oaths, to assert, as some do, that the State does not undertake to threaten the new official with any particular punishments in the next world, when he "swears him into office," but leaves that matter to the conscientious anticipations of such swearer. The point is, that she recognizes, in this performance, the existence of religion, and its existence as a factor in human conduct, and thereby sets up a distinction between a religious citizen and a non-religious citizen, and thereby again violates that fundamental equality of all religions and of no religion before the law which is the very cornerstone of American institutions.

NOR is it any answer to this objection, to instance the case of a man who "affirms," instead of swearing, when he enters on the discharge of public duties. The utter silliness of this proceeding is so patent that, if we could get rid of the oath, the affirmation would soon follow. The responsibility of a State officer for the proper and thorough performance of his obligations to the community does not depend in the slightest degree on his "affirmance" of an intention to do his duty. If he were indicted for failure therein, nobody would dream of resting his responsibility on such an affirmation. It would be utterly superfluous to allege that he made it or to put it in evidence. His responsibility would arise out of his assumption of the functions of his place. The "affirmance," then, of a newly inducted official, amounts to nothing whatever; the oath to nothing more, except as an appeal by the State to considerations with which she has no concern whatsoever, and with which she has no right to intermeddle. Let us get rid of them both.

* * *

THE war in Cuba still drags its slow length along. Nowhere in history do the terrible evils of a united Church and State more strikingly manifest themselves than in the misgovernment of Cuba by the dominant Spaniards. Spain, as is well known, has an expensive and extravagant State church at home, which must be supported by taxes wrung from a distressed and impoverished people. Millions of money going to the maintenance of its priesthood in lines of idleness and luxury are annually contributed by the unwilling inhabitants of Cuba. This oppression has before now proven unbearable, and desperate efforts have been made to shake off the galling yoke. If there were no other reason, this should be sufficient to enlist the sympathies of all true Americans on the side of the insurrectionists. But, query, if—or, let us say when, they are free, will they saddle themselves with the yoke of a domestic established church, like unto that of the foreign country which now holds them down under its heel?

Raising Church Revenue.

It is quite well known that secular entertainments play an important part in church economy as practiced by the popular churches to-day, but the recent action of a Baptist Church in Brooklyn speaks with a startling emphasis upon this point. The facts, as set forth in a prominent New York daily, are as follows:—

"The trustees of the Lenox Road Baptist Church, commonly known as the First Baptist Church of Flatbush, will apply to the Supreme Court for permission to sell the church building and the real estate connected with it.

"This move was taken on account of dissatisfaction with their pastor of part of the society, and is the outcome of the Rev. H. J. Guller's refusal to allow any church entertainments.

"The meeting of the trustees last night, when the decisive action was taken, was stormy. The Rev. Mr. Guller had friends there, and they fought hard to have him retained, but before the meeting was ended they had been whipped around into line and at last gave their consent to the sale of the church property.

"They were confronted with the payment of a $9,000 mortgage and an arrearage of $500 in the pastor's salary. Mr. Guller's friends urged that the church's expenses be reduced by one half in order that they might 'worry along.' The opposition, however, insisted on the sale of the church and its property and an immediate liquidation of its debts; the dismissal of the pastor and the holding of services in a hall. The society will not be severed.

"One trustee said: 'Our pastor has been with us for two years. He refused to allow any church entertainment of any kind, and, as a result, our revenue fell off to such an extent that we have to sell out. Our little entertainments brought in a good deal of money, and the pastor's action was decidedly unpopular.'"

Surely there has been a most wonderful evolution—and revolution—in the method of providing church revenue, since the days of the apostles. Imagine the early Christian Church, as described in the Book of Acts, being on the point of financial disruption because of the refusal of Paul or Peter to sanction church theatricals as a means of providing funds for church work! And the sad meaning of this is that there has been an evolution from the spirit of self-sacrifice possessed by the early church, to a spirit exactly its opposite. There is no reason why, with the possession of the Christian spirit of self sacrifice, an abundance of church funds cannot now be raised in just the way that means were raised by the church in the days of Paul.

However, when the churches get control of the Government, as it now seems that they shortly will, they will perhaps have possession of sources of revenue, which will enable them to dispense with church "entertainments."

Reasons for Disestablishment.

WHILE the churches in this country are seeking for closer union with the State, in England, where the church is "established" and controlled by the State, there is a strong sentiment in favor of severance of the bonds between them. This sentiment finds expression from time to time in Parliament, in the form of resolutions for disestablishment. Recently, says the Outlook (New York), such a resolution was introduced "on the ground that the Church was under the control of the State, its bishops being practically appointed by the Prime Minister, who might be an atheist; that presentations to livings are bought and sold; that it is becoming anti-Protestant, and that it receives an undue and unfair prestige from its alliance with the State. It was also urged," says the Outlook, "that the Church had been unfavorable to civil liberty in the past; that the bishops had opposed the anti-slavery movement; and that an established church is an anachronism at this end of the nineteenth century. The mover of the resolution declared that the Established Church must either be mended or ended; that it could not be mended by a body like the English Parliament, and that, therefore, it must be ended."

These are just grounds of objection to the continuance of Church establishment, and that they are true cannot be denied. It would seem that the lesson they teach should be sufficient to deter enlightened Protestants in this land from an alliance with the State; yet evidently such is not the case.

From a comparison of tables of statistics showing the growth of the Established Church or Church of England, and of the "free churches"—Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, etc., the fact appears that establishment has not prevented the latter from outgrowing the Church of England to a very decided extent. "Establishment" is only a misleading name for that which does not strengthen the English church, but is a millstone about her neck.

True to Principle.

THE Oklahoma Gleaner, a Seventh-day Adventist sheet published at Oklahoma City, prints the following in its issue of March 3:—

"Sabbath, February 20, Brother T. Alexander was summoned to appear as a witness in a case on trial at the court room. It being the Sabbath he remained at home, whereupon the judge sent an officer, who placed him under arrest, and forced him to appear.

"Brother Alexander remembered the instruction of the Lord, 'Take no thought how or what ye shall speak,' but faced the judge, backed by his faithful friend, the Bible.

"'Why have you contemned my court,' said the judge, 'by remaining away when summoned?'

"'I do not hold your court in contempt,' Brother Alexander replied, 'but this is the Sabbath, and I cannot give testimony on this holy day.'

"'Do you mean to say that you will suffer the penalty of contempt of court rather than testify to-day?'

"'Yes, sir, I will.'

"'But you are already here,' protested the judge, 'and you will not be giving evidence of your own free will, but by force.'

"'My Bible teaches me to obey God rather than man,' said Brother Alexander. He was fully confident that he would be placed in jail for the offense, when the interested lawyers agreed to postpone the case to a time when Brother Alexander could be present without interfering with his principles of religious liberty, and he was permitted to return to his home."

This country, and every country, needs men of principle. It needs men who will be true to the dictates of conscience. And no legal sanction ought ever to be given to any effort to swerve an individual from these safeguards of his integrity.

A CURIOUS decision is reported to have been made recently by the Wisconsin Supreme Court, to the effect that persons can be properly exempted from the regulations enforcing vaccination, on the ground that they have conscientious scruples against it. The case came to the Supreme Court from Beloit, where certain "Christian scientists" opposed vaccination as being "a violation of the laws of God." The remarkable thing about this is not that "Christian scientists" should take this position, but they they should be sustained in it by a body of men who are supposed to possess sound judgment.

The Crisis in Theology.

"New York Observer."

IF we are not very much mistaken, one outstanding fact challenges attention at the present time which is full of very serious suggestion as to the spiritual future of America. It is the widespread denial of the supernatural. At the idea of the supernatural, which underlies the whole of the Christian religion, the drive of criticism is tremendous and constant. Never was that idea more uncongenial than it is at present. Scientific theorizings have had something to do with this result, though science has never proved the supernatural out of existence, and now philosophic and religious speculations are helping to swell the outcry against the notion of the miraculous. Much of biblical criticism, too, of the form at present popular, is really in spirit and method the secret foe of supernaturalism.

Of the critical mode of banishing the supernatural from the Bible, Professor Green, of Princeton, has well remarked that it is the most plausible as well as the most effective method of accomplishing this result, because the animus of the movement is concealed, and the desired end is reached not by aiming at it directly and avowedly, but as the apparently incidental consequence of investigations pursued professedly for a different purpose.

It is in view of such facts as these that the gravity of the situation, which even amounts to a theological crisis, appears. That here and there a teacher, perhaps a clergyman, should stand forth as the exponent of radical views of biblical criticism might not be so alarming a circumstance, but when we perceive that such utterances are excused or even applauded by multitudes, that they delude Christians and delight infidels, we are forced to recognize that this radicalism is symptomatic of a widespread decadence of belief in the supernatural. A single miracle might supposably be denied by some individual who reverently accepted others, but it is not to be supposed that when even a single miracle is denied in a rationalizing spirit any miracles at all will long remain credible and accepted. It is the tendency of the thing that makes it to be so full of menace.

It is not so much that a few bold speculators deny these signs and wonders which God showed in the days of old as that multitudes are languidly indifferent to the whole destructive process or are even arousing themselves to apologize for the ruthless iconoclasm. Stripped of all irrelevancies, with which the critics of the truth love to surround their mystifying discussions, the great philosophic effort of the day, from the side of unfaith, is to prove the needlessness, even the ridiculousness, of the supernatural. And if in many cases this effort amounts to an assumption rather than an argument, and is more a drift than a discussion, the seriousness of the situation is thereby not relieved, but rather increased. That is not a real faith in the Scriptures which empties the Bible of its miracles. And with reference to these people who are picking and choosing in their methods of Scripture study a New York newspaper pertinently remarks that "such men do not believe in the Bible. They only believe in the things in the Bible which commend themselves to their belief." They only believe in it as they believe in any other book. It is well worth while to consider whether these things are so. Are we not passing through a serious theological crisis?

SECULAR preaching has taken the place of gospel preaching in too many pulpits of all denominations throughout the country. — Martinsburg, Pa., Weekly Herald.

"They Had Done These Things Unto Him."

BY T. E. BOWEN.

WHAT the Lord did while here on earth had, to a great extent, been written out beforehand. Having himself become thoroughly familiar with these writings of the prophets, he was aware that at different points in his experience what he did was fulfilling Scripture. His disciples were not so conversant with the then written word, and therefore were not aware that the things Jesus did fulfilled the things written of the Christ to come. Had they known—as it was their privilege—it would have been much easier for them to have believed him the true Anointed One—the sent of God.

It was an enemy's work to blind their eyes to the true meaning of the Scriptures referring to Christ's earthly mission. As a result their enemy knew it would be an easy thing to cause them to stumble along in unbelief. "These things understood not his disciples at the first, but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him." John 12:16. Yes, they had been fulfilling the Scriptures and did not know it. In this instance it was a good thing they had done, that of waving palm branches and spreading their garments before him as he rode into Jerusalem; but this was not always the case. Sometimes in their unbelief they were found on the wrong side fulfilling Scripture.

Judas' case represents this point. It had been foretold that one who had often gathered about the same board with Christ should lift up his heel against his Lord.

Again of the betrayal scene Zechariah had written: "And I [Judas foreseen in the act] said unto them [chief priests], If ye think good, give me for my price thirty pieces of silver." Chap. 11:12. Did Judas realize he was fulfilling this Scripture when he "covenanted with them for thirty pieces of silver"? No. But Jesus knew the prophet's words, and while Judas might have known and been saved, still his eyes were blinded by covetousness, and he rushed on to his fearful doom. When too late he saw what he had done.

The lesson is for us. Scripture is still being fulfilled and will be unto the end. God's Word speaks of oppressive religious laws which will be in force when Christ comes. Some of these laws are now in existence, and some no doubt are still to be made. Men of influence will act a part in these things. Their voice may be raised in support of enactments which will result in crushing out individual liberty to serve God "according to the dictates of conscience," and which are also in direct opposition to the principles found in God's Word.

Reader, search the Scriptures, lest when too late you find out "that these things were written of him," and that you have "done these things unto him" in the person of his followers: for "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The "Sixteenth Amendment" Again.

THE following joint resolution was introduced in Congress by Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, March 18. It was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:—

"JOINT RESOLUTION

"Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting an establishment of religion or the free exercise thereof:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by legislatures in the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:—

"ARTICLE XVI.

"Neither Congress nor any State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use the property or credit of the United States, or of any State, or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding, by appropriation, payment of services, expenses or otherwise, any church, religious denomination, or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking, which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

This proposed "sixteenth amendment" has been before Congress on several previous occasions. It is aimed chiefly at the appropriations of public funds for sectarian schools, which Congress seems very reluctant to discontinue.

Gathering the Fruit.

In the Catholic Standard and Times, of March 6, "Father" David, a high authority among English Catholics, gives his answers to a questioner relative to the result of the Pope's recent decision on "Anglican orders," as follows:—

"Did the decision on Anglican orders bring you a notable windfall?"

"Yes. There has been a rush since. The clergymen have shown that they only wished to get Rome's confirmation of their opinion and status and not reunion. Very few, half a dozen only, of them have come over. But many of the people whom they kept back with unreal assurances about the validity of orders have made a rush."

"And the others?"

"The others are still held back, many of them not for long. The question is: How long the High Anglicans or Ritualists will be able to restrain the tendency towards Catholicism. Men are breaking from the lines daily. Were there a commotion a body might pass over. There are only two million communicants in the Church of England, though she counts about twelve million adherents. Of these two millions the Ritualists are sixty thousand. They are no power at all in the country, but a strong influence in the towns. A hundred chances may make their position untenable. They may grow and acquire more and more influence, but their progress is only a better omen. Eventually there must come a breakage. Already the dyke which their clergymen have formed strains under its burden of waters. A chance impulse from behind may make it break. Their position is logically untenable and practically precarious."

No Authority for the Puritan Sunday.

OUTSIDE of England and America, no one—Protestants no more than Catholics—pretends that Sunday is the Sabbath commanded in the laws of Moses. . . . The Spanish, Portuguese, Italian and all Slavonic languages have for Saturday a name derived from "Sabbath"—such are Sabado, Sabbato, Sobota—and the French Samedi and German Samstag are drawn from the same root. The very Sabbatarians of England and America call Sunday the first day of the week, in the same breath in which they quote the fourth commandment in Exodus 20, for the sanctity of the seventh day. Moreover, the day there commanded must in its very nature begin with sunset: for a man is enjoined to remember it, to keep it holy, in plain English to greet its advent, and that can hardly be done with the Sunday-Sabbath which begins at twelve o'clock at night, when most good Christians are asleep.—American Hebrew.

THE following dispatch which was sent out from Ottawa by the Canadian authorities, March 9, should be set over against the claim made in the Pope's latest encyclical, that it is a most grievous injustice to the papal church to represent that she interferes in the affairs of the State: "The government has decided to withhold issuing the writ for an election in Champlain County, Quebec, until Parliament meets, when it will be announced to the House that owing to the attitude of the Roman Catholic bishops it would be impossible to hold a free election. Parliament will be asked to amend the criminal code to make it a criminal offense to exercise spiritual intimidation or influence in elections."

SPEAKING of the revival work carried on by a prominent Brooklyn clergyman at Cooper Union every afternoon, the New York Journal says: "In this work the Rev. Mr. Dixon has adopted the plan of carrying religion into secular places instead of expecting the people to come to church for it, and yesterday he said that it was proposed to hire during the summer every theatre in New York on Sunday nights for preaching, for it had been found that the people would go to a hall or a theatre to hear of religion, but would not go to church. This is a curious indictment of the church."

It is little wonder that the cause of Christianity moves so slowly and seems to demand the "help" of legislation when affairs are so managed in the churches that the "house of God" is one of the last places the common people can be induced to enter.

THE Kansas City Star, of March 10, reports that the Supreme Court of Kansas will soon render a decision on the question of the constitutionality of Bible reading and religious worship in the public schools of that State. The father of a young boy in one of the schools of Barber County has brought suit against the school directors over the expulsion of his boy from school for refusing to take part in the religious exercises with which the school was opened. The case was first carried to the District Court, which granted a writ compelling the board of directors to cancel their decree of expulsion. Now both parties will now contest the matter before the highest State tribunal.

AS IF to prove that the "trust" idea is susceptible of universal application, the Memphis Commercial Appeal outlines a plan for "farmers' trusts," by which, it says, "farmers would be better able to dictate the prices of their products." Farmers owning land in the same vicinity should, it says, "make a pool of their acres; the amount and quality of land, the stock, implements, etc., will represent the shares each man puts into the firm. Then, having agreed upon each man's position as to work and returns, the lands are carefully examined and such portions as are specially suited for different crops are portioned off for that purpose; thus the land that A has been putting into cotton and getting poor results from may be found just the soil for potatoes, and B's pasture may make an ideal cornfield. With so much space to cultivate no seed need be put into the wrong soil and, receiving sufficient attention, the yield will be what it should. This is one benefit to result from the partnership. Another is the immense gain of purchasing by wholesale instead of in small quantities, as the farmers now buy their supplies not raised at home. The division of labor, too, would have its advantages, for few men are good at all things, and in the 'combine' each one would undertake that for which he is best fitted."

Of course, there would be in this the same submersion of individuality in the interests of the "combine" that exists in any other trust. All trusts are, from their very nature, destructive of the spirit of independence.

At a recent monthly meeting of the Cleveland City Ministers' Union, the subject of Sunday ball playing was considered, and a committee was appointed to wait on the city authorities and demand the enforcement of the law against Sunday desecration. In case the authorities refuse to act in the matter, the ministers of the city will be requested to preach on "Sabbath observance" the fourth Sunday in April.

A SETTLEMENT of the Manitoba school controversy seems to have been reached by the action of Archbishop Langevin, who has determined to establish separate Catholic schools at Catholic expense.

AMERICAN SENTINEL, New York City:

The Bible came to hand all right. To say that I am pleased with it will but faintly describe my feelings. It would take too much space to enumerate its many points of excellence, so I will sum it all up in the one word "superb."

There are so many "aids to the study of the Scriptures," and they are so helpful and just what I have been wishing for since I became a "Bible Christian."

Friends and neighbors all say, "I wish I had one like it," and "So cheap." Our seventeen-year-old daughter is about to start out to obtain subscriptions for the SENTINEL, as she wishes for one "just like it."

Please accept my warmest thanks, and believe me to be,

Ever sincerely yours,

ASSUREDLY you would like to read the story of Saul against David with the psalms which David then composed, set exactly in the places where they occurred in the story. Wouldn't you now? Well, just buy a copy of that fine book, "The Empires of the Bible," and on pages 161-172 you have the whole story just as it occurred and each psalm in its place in the story. Many, many other such interesting things are in that book too; and it costs only $1.50.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND

✻ ✻ ✻

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

"THE kingdom of God cometh not with observation," that is, "with outward show."

These are the plain words of the Lord Jesus, whose the kingdom is, who alone knows truly what the kingdom is, who is the rightful king in that kingdom; and who alone rules in the kingdom.

Yet the efforts of the Christian Endeavorers and the National Reformers generally are solely to have "the kingdom of God" come in this nation, altogether with outward show, by outward, worldly, political, means and methods.

They propose to make Christ king and have Him reign on Capitol Hill and in every State and city in the nation. Thus they propose that the kingdom of God shall come in this land, and that the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom.

Thus it is perfectly plain to all who read, that those people do propose to have the kingdom of God come first of all with observation, with outward show. That is to say, while the Lord says that the kingdom of God cometh not with observation or outward show, these people insist that it does come and shall come with observation and outward show. In other words, what the Lord says is not so, they say is so and shall be so.

Isn't it singular that men will attempt to do a thing as Christian, which the plain word of the Author of Christianity repudiates and shows cannot possibly be done as Christian? The profession of Christianity demands loyalty to the principles announced by the Author of Christianity. Disloyalty here is antichristian.

No, no: the kingdom of God cometh not with observation or outward show. But "Behold the kingdom of God is WITHIN YOU;" and except a man be born again he cannot see it. For it is written, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Except a man be born again, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

By this word it is again perfectly plain that the only right thing that anybody can do in behalf of the kingdom of God is to persuade men to be born again. For, it matters not how the kingdom of God may come, or when it may come, no man can ever see it for any good, no man can enter into it, unless he is born again.

What sheer fallacy it is then, what a perversion of the right way, for men to form organizations, hold monster conventions, and manipulate politics in cities, States and the nation, to get "Christians" into all the offices in order that the kingdom of God may be set up and that "Christ may reign on Capitol Hill"!

The kingdom of God comes in no such way as that. And any man who looks upon any such thing as that as the kingdom of God will be ruined by it. The kingdom of God, cometh not with observation or outward show. The kingdom of God can never be set up by men. Only He whose right it is to reign can establish his kingdom anywhere.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation. Neither shall they say, Lo here, or Lo there, For behold the kingdom of God is within you." Unless a man finds the kingdom of God within him, he will never find it outside of him. Any man who does not see the kingdom of God within him will never see the kingdom of God outside of him. And "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

It is therefore conclusive that the only right endeavor that anybody can ever put forth in behalf of the kingdom of God and men's right relation thereto, is to persuade men to be born again. And by the same token it is also conclusive that the efforts of the Christian Endeavorers and other National Reformers to bring by worldly means and political methods, the kingdom of God in city, State and nation, are altogether earthly, vain, unchristian and antichristian.

"The kingdom of God is not meat and drink;" it is not worldly honors; it is not political offices: it is not mayoralties, governorships, nor presidencies; it is not ecclesiastical combinations controlling the civil power or the civil officers: it is none of all these, nor is it anything of any likeness to all these. It is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." And "Except a man be born again he cannot see" it. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into" it.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

"The kingdom of God is within you." And, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

"The kingdom of God is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." And, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

THE "Christian Citizenship" movement is the crusade of this age. This "new crusade," as some call it, is just as wild, visionary, and fanatical as those of the middle ages.—Martinsburg, Pa., Weekly Herald.

The Church as a Light.

THERE can be no more important question for the Church than that of her proper attitude towards the world. This is, of course, a question that must be answered by the Word of God.

From the example of the Church to-day however, it might be concluded that the inspired Word gives no instructions upon this question which apply to the present time. For it is certain that the Church's attitude to-day, as indicated by her efforts to acquire political power and authority, and her hopes for the future in this respect, is not sanctioned by a wisdom higher than her own.

But the Scriptures of divine truth are not silent concerning the duties of the Church and of individual Christians in the midst of their worldly environment to-day. When Christian speakers and writers lament the awful depravity which civilization is unable to hide, and exhort the civil authorities to adopt measures for grappling with the moral emergencies of the times, it is not because all this iniquity was not foreseen and foretold by the Author of holy writ, and instructions given by Him for the guidance of the Church in the most critical hours of moral darkness.

The Scripture likens this period of the reign of sin and evil, to a night. Such indeed it is, with the light of righteousness so nearly obscured as it is by the black shadows of sin. But the Scriptures are full of predictions of a coming day; and even here a light shines upon the pathway of the Christian, in which he is exhorted to walk. "Thy word," says the psalmist, "is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Ps. 119:105.

The night is not passed by the Church of God in slumber. Watchmen are upon the walls of Zion, to warn of lurking dangers and to herald the long-looked-for dawn. In the prophecy of Isaiah an occasion comes when the inquiry is made from Zion, "Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?" And the answer is returned, "The morning cometh, and also the night,"—the morning of an eternal day for the righteous, and of eternal night for the finally impenitent.

The Apostle Paul exhorts Christians to act as become those who have the light of divine revelation. The Church is to know the approach of the coming day. "Ye, brethren," he writes, "are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation."

It is the night of sin, and the drunkenness and revelings of those who are of the night, that we see around us to-day. The terrible depravity that is seen in society at the present time is natural enough to those who are "drunken in the night." It is only such a feature as the reign of carnality may be expected to develop before the night is ended. That night seems now to have reached its darkest hour; but the darkest hour comes just before the dawn.

The Church cannot help the fact that it is night. She cannot turn the night into day. She cannot take possession of the world, and eliminate the sin and evil which have brought night upon it. The divine Word which is her guide, nowhere instructs her to attempt such a thing. But she herself has light—the light of the Word, "that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn" (1 Peter 1:19),—and she is to reflect the light upon the pathway of those in darkness. The divine message now comes to her, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." Isa. 60:1-3.

This is a glorious privilege. It is one which the Church should eagerly embrace. But what is the Church doing? Is she appalled at the "gross darkness" which to-day covers the people? Then let her not appeal to the arm of flesh in the vain fancy that this darkness can be dispelled by civil enactments; but let her arise and flash forth the divine glory from the throne of God. That, and that alone, can dispel the darkness from the way of those who will turn and heed it.

SAYS the New York Observer, of March 4:—

"We have been reading the story of Jonah afresh, and are struck with the great reluctance with which the heathen seafaring men dropped their transgressing passenger overboard. They rowed hard to bring the vessel to land, hoping to save his life. When their efforts proved futile, they let him go, but only after beseeching the Lord not to lay innocent blood upon them. But these sailors were heathen and superstitious. To-day the Christian minister can toss Jonah overboard nonchalantly, in full sight of a Christian congregation. Meanwhile, the dexterous manipulation arouses a ripple of amusement as perceptible as that which passed over the deep into which the son of Amittai was originally dropped."

And the worst of it is that this modern ecclesiastical throwing overboard of Jonah is expressive of a policy which is not limited to Jonah, but includes all manifestations of the supernatural.

The Coming State Church.

IN recent issues of the Christian Statesman, an organ of the Church party calling for religious legislation, the editor has been discussing the question of Church union in the United States. He deems such union entirely feasible on lines which he points out, and is hopeful that it may be consummated in the near future. In designating the Church as it will then be he uses the phrase, "united Church of Christ of the United States." This is the first suggestion we have noticed for a name for the coming American State Church.

In pointing out the principles upon which Church unity is to be secured, the Statesman observes that the Church must have "one uniform standard of practical morals," and adds that "even conceding that it may be a lower standard for the organically united Church than some portions of the divided Church would have maintained for themselves, the general gain will be incalculable." As no part of the divided Church maintains or ever has maintained any higher standard of morality than the law of God, it will, in this view, be an "incalculable" gain for the Church to adopt a lower standard than this, if thereby her divided elements can become united.

This scheme of Church union also includes "an oath binding to the acceptance of the supreme authority of the Scriptures in matters of discipline as well as doctrine, a high standard of practical godly living linked with a full and faithful formulation of scriptural truth, and the consequent faithful proclamation of the latter together with the faithful enforcement of the former." All of which is, in the Statesman's view, quite susceptible of realization.

As regards "heresy" in the Church, we learn that "She has no physical force to meet it, as the nation may meet secession and rebellion against its rightful authority. But she is endowed by her divine Head with government and discipline adequate to such an exigency in her life." It is laid down that "all who rebel against her rightful authority cut themselves off from her communion as schismatics, and are not therefore to be recognized as any part of the visible Church of Christ. The question is not here whether those who thus resist the rightful authority of the Church may be true Christians or not. In the circumstances of this particular case it is a question of authority and insubordination."

And thus "true Christians" may be cut off as heretics and schismatics because of refusal to submit to the "rightful authority" of the Church. And such individuals may when they become numerous enough, form churches of their own, but they will still be heretics, and no part of the "true Church." It was precisely thus that the "schismatic" Protestant churches, as Rome views them, came into existence. They refused to recognize the "rightful authority" of the Church, as expressed in the decrees of church councils and of popes, and are still counted as heretics, and without the pale of the "true Church."

The Statesman says that "with the development of the Romish system this rightful authority of the church through anathemas and intolerance and persecution was dethroned to make way for the despotism of the 'mystery of iniquity' and 'the man of sin.' . . . But in the united Church of Christ of the United States, with principles as different from those of Romanism as light from darkness, rightful authority ought certainly to be able to maintain itself against all schism and ecclesiastical rebellion without any sacrifice of either civil or religious liberty." But it was not "through anathemas and intolerance and persecution" that the Church became what it was before the days of the Reformers, and what, as the papacy, it has since continued to be. The intolerance and persecution were but the manifestation of the change that had already taken place in the Church's character; they were the evil fruit being borne by the evil tree. The tree becomes evil before the evil fruit appears; the Church became corrupt in character before she became intolerant. And this change in her character was nothing else than a change in her principles. It was a change by which human authority was put in the place of the authority of God's Word.

And these principles laid down by the Statesman for the "united Church of Christ of the United States" do not differ at all from the principles of the papacy. The papacy professes to act in perfect harmony with the Word of God; and all she asks of Protestants is submission to the "rightful authority" of the "true Church." And as the "rightful authority" of the Church must prevail, it is more satisfactory to believe that in the exercise of this authority she is infallible. Hence the doctrine of papal infallibility,—a doctrine which is certainly a necessity to any system which makes the separation of "heretics" from the Church a question not of their real Christianity as determined by the written Word, but of their submission to Church "authority."

A VICTORY for prohibition in the city election at Moundsville, W. Va., March 11, was celebrated by the two Methodist churches in the place by a procession of the most prominent members, headed by a brass band. The procession sang hymns and offered prayers. "The day is coming," says the Christian Statesman, "when such victories celebrated in some such way will be common all over the country."

But such methods of celebration will always have a flavor of politics and paganism rather than of Christianity.

The Supreme Court and the Trusts.

PROBABLY no decision of the United States Supreme Court ever occasioned more agitation in the realm of business in this country than that recently given, known as the Trans-Missouri Freight Association decision, sustaining the validity of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, and applying its restrictions to agreements between railways for the purpose of fixing rates of transportation.

The Anti-Trust law upon which the decision is based specifies the following:—

"Every contract combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal.

"Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments in the discretion of the court."

The Supreme Court holds that these provisions apply to agreements between railways as above described, and renders the parties thereto liable to the penalties of the law.

The importance of this decision is seemingly of great magnitude. This is evident from the fact that the business of railway transportation is the greatest of all American industries.

It must not be hastily concluded, however, that this decision constitutes a victory of the people over the trusts. Whether the railways will not find some way to evade the decision, remains to be seen. Nor can these railway trusts be properly included among those "combinations in restraint of trade," which have so arbitrarily and unjustly extracted money from the public purse. The rates of railway transportation as fixed by these associations cannot be said to have greatly exceeded the demands of equity. In support of such associations it is pointed out that before their organization, competition between the roads had resulted in an interminable series of "rate wars," which produced such a fluctuation in prices that "a merchant was afraid to order goods to-day for fear a 'cut' in the cost of transportation to-morrow would cheapen the goods and enable a local rival to undersell him." A reversion to this state of things, it is maintained, would be an injury both to the railways and the entire community.

Nevertheless it must be admitted that the principle of independent business standing and of free competition in trade is violated by these railway pools no less certainly than it is by the most oppressive trust. If this pronouncement of the Supreme Court would be construed as forming a precedent for future decisions relative to the legality of methods employed by the trusts, it might properly be regarded as a victory for the interests which stand opposed to trusts. But it remains for the courts to decide how much value, if any, this decision will have in this direction.

Is THAT a good law which prohibits as a crime the selling of flowers on the streets, while allowing the free sale of tobacco? Such is the Sunday law of New York City. It is one of the fruits which shows the nature of the tree that bears it.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

IN the Twentieth Century Review, No. 1, page 3, this language appears: "Thus it is that human forces are very nearly equally divided and arrayed against each other whenever the long-suffering honest half can endure abuse no longer, and call a halt for battle either by ballot or by bullet. A Christian cannot use the latter means (the bullet), however much he has been wronged, yet oftentimes he neglects the former (the ballot), however much his fellows have been wronged, thereby doing two contrary acts under one professional flag, with the mistaken idea that one whose citizenship is in heaven is at liberty to neglect payment of the peaceable ballot tribute due the 'powers that be' which are 'ordained of God' 'to keep people civil.'"

There are several points here employed which would have been of untold value in this most important of all times had they been treated logically instead of being carelessly thrown together, as in this quotation.

It is stated here that the Christian cannot use the bullet. This is true. The child of God is told first in the sixth commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." Christ shows the depth of this principle by saying that hatred in the heart is murder, Matt. 5:21, 22 and 1 John 3:15 and still further in Matt. 5:44, 45: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."

It is true that the Christian cannot employ any means to kill his fellowmen. Rom. 12:19. "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves . . . for it is written, vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

Let us put to the test of logic the coupling of this quoted paragraph: The Christian cannot use the bullet, but is in duty bound to use the peaceable ballot.

We will start with the very genius of the ballot.

Why is it in the hands of the people? Because this is a government by the people. The ballot is the badge of sovereignty, the crown of authority with a free people. All the power is in the hands of the people and is expressed in the peaceful-looking piece of paper called the ballot.

Every particle of power ever exercised in the legitimate performance of duty in the various departments of the Government, is derived from the people by consent. This consent is expressed through the ballot.

It will perhaps seem absurd to some that there is any need of stating such a universally-conceded truth in America. So it would be if it were not largely lost sight of in essence by the people and denied in theory by illogical writers.

Many of the governed may not secure what they desire, but by the use of the ballot they consent to the decision of the majority whether it be in harmony with their desires or not. The original idea, in the minds of those noble men to whom we are most indebted for the form of our grand Government, was that all the power of the sovereign nation lay in the people and was furnished by consent to a general fund which would be employed to make every department of government effective. This power is transferred by consent, and the consent is the acceptance of the ballot.

When any person consents to submit the affairs of government to the free ballot and himself uses the ballot he is in honor bound to abide its decision. By that act he consents not only to be a submissive subject but assumes sovereignty and contracts to furnish so far as possible the power to carry out the expressed will of the people.

Again, he clothes civil officers with authority. Where does the authority originate?—With the people. Can officers exercise any authority or power not given them by those who vote?

When I commission another to act for me and the commission states in what manner he shall act, I am responsible so long as he acts within the limits of the commission. With the ballot men are commissioned to act in fulfillment of the Constitution on pain of impeachment.

The Constitution, as well as the commissioning of men to fulfill it, is but the drawing out of some of the elements in the ballot.

Then all the duties of the various departments of government in any emergency are but the unfolding of the power in the ballot. The entire Government with all its functions is in the ballot from its peaceful folding at the rural precinct through its practical unfolding in the halls of legislation and the courts of justice; and the execution of just decrees, the oath of office, and the booming of the cannon in defense of the whole.

THE spirit of Christianity is never the spirit of intolerance or of compulsion.

Rome Unmasked in Madagascar.

THE New York Independent, of March 25, publishes a letter from the Rev. James Sibree, missionary of the London Missionary Society, setting forth the persecutions to which Protestants in Madagascar are now subjected under the papal regime which ensued upon the subjection of the island by the French. Mr. Sibree's letter is written from Antananarivo, the capital city. He says:—

"The Roman Catholic priests here, who are also Jesuits, have for many years past been angry and chagrined at the progress made by Protestant missions, and at the large number of their adherents. They have had perfect liberty to teach and to propagate their religion—in fact they have often obtained more favors from the former native government, in the way of getting land for their buildings, etc., than have been granted to Protestant missionaries; but they have not been able, up to very lately, to coerce the people to enter their communion. The establishment of the French power in Madagascar has, however, now given them the opportunity they have long desired, of persecuting Protestants; and they are now using it most unscrupulously.

"Not many days after the occupation of Antananarivo by the French forces (Sept. 30, 1895), a proclamation was issued by General Duchesne, assuring the Malagasy of perfect religious liberty; and this was repeated by the late Resident-General, M. Laroche, as well as by General Gallieni, the present Commander-in-Chief and acting Resident-General. But, notwithstanding these excellent and fair-sounding statements, they have in scores of villages, since the proclamation of the state of siege, become almost a dead letter. The military commandants in several districts have become facile instruments in the hands of the Jesuits in terrorizing the people. In several instances our Protestant churches have been seized and mass performed in them; the schools have in many cases been handed over en masse to the priests; the congregations have been brow-beaten, threatened and frightened into becoming, nominally, Roman Catholics. In very many cases they have been told by people in authority that if they continue Protestants they will be accounted as rebels. They are told that their English missionaries are enemies of France, and, therefore, all who have anything to do with them will also be reckoned as the enemies of France. Local native governors are told that while there is, of course, religious liberty for the people (!), they, as men in authority, ought to be of the same religion as the French nation; and if they stand fast, they are soon accused of disaffection, and are degraded or fined. The consequence, of course, is that numbers of them, to avert suspicion from themselves, become almost more zealous and unjust than the priests themselves, and use all their influence to coerce the people to leave the religion they have been taught.

"Accusations on the most flimsy pretenses are got up against the best men in some of the districts—pastors, evangelists and others; and they are heavily fined, imprisoned, and some are now loaded with chains, although it is perfectly certain that their Protestantism is their only offense.

"It seems now a settled principle that if the majority of the people in a village can be brought, by any means whatever—such as those just named—to say that they are Roman Catholics, the church in the village, although built exclusively by and for a Protestant congregation, and always aided by grants from the London Missionary Society, can be taken for Roman Catholic worship, and the Protestants expelled. This has been done, and the priests are hoping by this clever contrivance that numbers of our Protestant churches will pass into their hands. And from what has been said as to the means used to terrorize the people, it will be easily seen how easy it is to get the majority of the people in a village—numbers of whom never attended any place of worship—to profess themselves to be Roman Catholics. In some villages the priest has gone from house to house with two books to write down the people's names, telling them that all written as Roman Catholics in the one will be perfectly safe, while those in the other will be exposed to all sorts of danger and suspicion. Are any words needed to explain what effect such a proceeding must have upon a large number of weak and still very ignorant people? The result has been that in large villages where, until quite lately, there has never been a single Roman Catholic, the whole congregation has been forced to say that they have 'quite voluntarily' given up Protestantism.

"Things are even worse in the Southern province of Betsiléo than here in Imèrina. Such influences have been brought to bear by the Resident there and the priests that almost all the native officers and governors have been obliged to become Catholics, while a few have made a compromise by joining the Norwegian Lutheran Mission, which is not so obnoxious to the authorities as that of the English Protestants. Another severe blow at the London Missionary Society there is the summary order given to almost all the Hova evangelists and teachers (as well as many who have nothing to do with this province) to immediately leave the work, which many of them have been engaged in for years, and to come up here to Imèrina. After only a very few days' notice, from three to five, they were obliged to sell all their property and houses, at considerable loss, and leave their people. None of the Norwegian or Roman Catholic teachers, however, have been disturbed. One English missionary has been twice turned out of his house on the excuse that it was either required for government service, or that the owner dared not let it to an English missionary. Religious liberty is at present unknown in the Betsiléo province. Did space permit, every one of the statements given above could be abundantly substantiated by detailed facts and written proofs.

"It may be said, in conclusion, that some French commandants have tried loyally to act uprightly and impartially in religious matters, but many others, as already stated, have willingly or unwillingly become the tools of the Jesuits in their strenuous attempts to terrorize the Protestants into becoming Romanists."

And what Rome is in Madagascar, she is in principle, and at heart, in these United States.

THE Pope continues to feel a deep interest, as he says, in all the people of America, Protestant and Catholic alike. At an audience given March 22, in which he received and expressed himself as much pleased with the worship of one hundred sailors of the U. S. cruiser San Francisco, he said:—

"I am pleased to grant an audience to American sailors, as a testimonial of my paternal esteem and affection for the whole American people, who are always dear to my heart and for whom I have never ceased and never shall cease to pray God, who by providential signs does now manifest and in the future will manifest His good will to America even as does His vicar. Continue your voyage. Treasure as a happy souvenir of it this audience. May God guard you amid the storms of the ocean."

Prohibition vs. Sunday Closing.

RECENTLY a vote on the question of prohibiting liquor saloons was taken in the city of Oakland, Cal., the result being that prohibition was defeated by quite a decisive majority. An analysis of the vote, however, develops the interesting fact that prohibition would have won the day had it received the support of the vote in favor of Sunday closing. Upon this point an Oakland journal comments as follows:—

"In this election it has been demonstrated again, as it was in previous movements, that Sunday closing of saloons is not a temperance issue. The advocates of Sunday closing persistently claimed before the election that had the issue been for Sunday closing it could be carried; and now they are equally sure that it could have been carried, while the true temperance issue of closing saloons all the time was defeated. Thus they virtually concede that it was the Sunday-closing element that defeated the true temperance proposition. A committee of ladies canvassed the city before the election, and reported that over 5,000 voters were pledged to vote in favor of the proposition to close all the time; but the count of votes after the election shows that at least 1,300 of them either voted against closing or did not vote on that proposition at all.

"The campaign was carried on quite enthusiastically, yet with a stultifying reluctance expressed by every prominent speaker in the sentiment, 'This fight was forced upon us.' They all admitted that they were prepared for a Sunday-closing campaign, and were chagrined at being obliged to contend for closing up the evil places all the time. From first to last they held up the dire results of the open saloon, yet were unsparing in their censure of the men whom they charged with having forced them to contend for its entire abolition. Bad as the saloon was represented to be, these professed temperance advocates emphasized their regret that the issue had not been one of compromise with the evil thing by allowing it to operate six days in the week. Thus they stultified their otherwise able efforts from beginning to end.

"The Tribune, which gave liberal support to the temperance cause, sums up the situation in a very logical manner, from which we take the following:—

"The fight was by no means an equal one. The liquor dealers are a strong and active body of men and have been organized for years. They have studied the art of politics and are familiar with all its methods."

The church people, on the other hand, did not organize their vote. Less than two weeks ago the matter of entirely closing the saloons was forced upon them. For four years, sustained part of the time by a sabbath-closing association of which the active Dr. Rader was the head, they have made an aggressive campaign in favor of Sunday closing. Toward this end they had labored and felt certain of success. They had thoroughly canvassed the city and a large majority were in favor of closing the open saloons on the sabbath. All the church people and the Christian Endeavorers, who represent a large body of the voters, are confident that Sunday closing would have carried by a big majority.

"Who, then, we ask, is responsible for the defeat of true temperance in Oakland?—Clearly it is the men who favor Sunday-closing of saloons, and of every other place of business as soon as they can stir up the intolerant sentiment to that extent. They have again demonstrated that their anti-saloon cry in the past was simply using the saloon as a fulcrum over which they could rest their lever for prying enforced Sunday abstinence into public favor. Our estimate of the Sunday-closing movement has been again verified, and we trust that the people who have been deceived by it heretofore will hereafter be able to view it in its true light."

A Christian Government.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

A NOTE in the Union Signal, organ of the W. C. T. U., says that "labor leaders, as well as our mission workers, recognize that the great stumbling block in the way of temperance reform in heathen lands, as well as in our own, is the attitude of Christian governments toward the liquor traffic."

What is that attitude? Quite generally it is an attitude of favor and protection. Indeed, this is what the Signal complains of. But is such a course Christian? Is it in harmony with the teachings of Christ and the general tenor of the Scriptures?—No, indeed, it is diametrically opposed to Christianity. Drunkenness is one of the works of the flesh, and those who are devoted to it "shall not inherit the kingdom of God." The heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, inherit the kingdom; but drunkards are disqualified by spiritual law from the inheritance. The kingdoms of this world receive drunkards into the highest offices, and also make laws regulating—not preventing—the sale of liquor.

Another note in the same paper refers to "the very stronghold of the rum power—the government itself." The government the stronghold of the rum power, and still a Christian government! When the course pursued by governments in this, as in many other things, is so contrary to Christianity, how can anyone have the effrontery to call them Christian governments? Can a man who dabbles in the liquor traffic be a Christian?—No, indeed. Neither can a government which does the same be a Christian government.

National Reformers, and the W. C. T. U., which affiliates with them, take a special delight in speaking of our Government as though it were a person, had a conscience, and must be regarded as Christian or unchristian according to its public acts in reference to the Christian religion. If this were so, the Government should be judged Christian or unchristian by the same rule by which a man is judged, that is, its works.

Measured by this rule, can it be said that governments are Christian governments, whose actions in regard to a hundred things, including temperance, are so unchristian,—which are really great corporations for selfish purposes, which go to war for selfish ends, and which discriminate in every possible way against the people of other countries for the same selfish purpose? The idea is preposterous.

A government may through its representatives make a profession of religion; yes, of the Christian religion. But unless it were better than any existing government, it would in reality be a better representation of a slightly convicted sinner, or a backslidden professor, than it would be of a real Christian. When a government shall exist in the world for Christian purposes and Christian ends; not seeking its own but the good of others; manifesting in government affairs the same spirit that a Christian is required to manifest in his private business; which, when it is reviled, will not revile again; when it is smitten by some other nation on one government cheek, will turn the other also,—then we will listen with more patience to the plea that there may be such a thing as a Christian government. But until that time we shall deny that such a thing as a Christian government exists.

Christianity has enough to bear from unchristian Christians, without its being compelled to sustain the shame of Christian governments, so-called, by unthinking religious enthusiasts who forget that nations, as well as men, may steal the livery of the court of heaven that they may better serve self and Satan.

A WRITER in the March number of The Defender, organ of the New England Sabbath Protective League, sees in the desecration of Sunday, the coming enslavement of all labor. He says:—

"If men must work that the proprietors of Sunday newspapers, the owners of railroads, the managers of places of amusement, liquor sellers, etc., may get rich, what is to prevent the early and complete enslavement of all labor? As sure as the sun rises in the heavens from day to day, one result of the fearful sweeping away of the anchorage of Sunday sanctity and rest now witnessed will be the compulsory labor of many helpless toilers on Sunday, when the clouds of commercial depression are again lifted."

Nevertheless it is a fact that the hours of labor per day for most employes are much shorter now than they were a generation in the past, and the tendency of the times under the influence of the labor organizations, is toward a still further shortening of the period of daily toil. This is undeniably true, and it is a very distorted view of the situation which fails to recognize it.

Notes of the Week.

BY JAS. T. RINGGOLD.

PROF. HUXLEY, in his address at the opening of the Johns Hopkins University some years ago, paraphrased the language of one greater than himself when he observed, "It is undoubtedly true that man shall not live by bread alone, but by ideas." It is equally true that by ideas shall man also perish. The right idea—the words that proceeded out of the mouth of the Son of man—is the salvation of the race; the wrong idea, the disregard of Him and of His teachings, is our damnation here and hereafter. Now, words are nothing in themselves. Their only value is as a means of expressing and implying ideas, and if, through implication, the language used by an individual suggests a wrong idea to others, it is no reason for passing it without comment, that the person himself might hesitate to put the idea more explicitly.

HERE is Mr. McKinley, for instance, in his inaugural address, solemnly pledging himself to keep his "oath of office" in language which, by very strong implication, refers his official responsibility as President of the United States to Deity, instead of to the American people, who elected him to that exalted position. This is very objectionable. It is the old idea of "divine right." Kings and queens and emperors rule "by the grace of God," or, at any rate, claim that they do so in their public acts and on their coins. But the President of the United States rules by the grace of the people thereof. Mr. McKinley ought to know that his inaugural oath adds nothing whatever to the obligation which he owes to the citizens, which is that he shall faithfully execute the laws of their making. He ought to know that his punishment for malfeasance or misfeasance, if he should do anything to deserve it, will be meted out to him without the slightest reference to the question of whether or not such an oath was taken by him. He ought to know that the pledge of his address should be addressed to the people who made the President, and not to Deity, who made the man. But never was a greater blunder made than that of the poet when he said:—

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again.
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amidst her worshippers."

In good growth, the vitality of error, its ability to stand what are apparently deadly wounds over and over again, is one of its most remarkable and discouraging characteristics. That old love of the union of Church and State, that old notion of something sacred about government—as purely a human institution or machine as a locomotive—repudiated and denounced by the Master nearly two thousand years ago, still lurks in men's minds, and ever and anon it finds vent in action or utterance. Mr.

McKinley talks of himself as if he were a specially appointed agent of the Creator, filling the Presidency as His representative; and the fiery young Emperor of Germany talks in the same way publicly about himself as ruler of the Fatherlands.

In a neighboring city not long ago, a case arose which strikingly illustrated the inevitable unfairness and injustice of State recognition of religion. In some of the States the appropriation of public money by the legislature or a municipality for the support of sectarian institutions is strictly prohibited by the constitution. But this occurrence happened in a State not blessed with such protection for its people. A little Jewish girl was arrested for peddling, and committed to the custody of a corporation whose affairs are conducted by the partisans of a certain form of Protestant faith, though it is professedly "non-sectarian." Habeas corpus proceedings were taken to get the child before a court. The testimony of the "matron" was the feature of the case which is pertinent here. This good lady averred in the most positive manner, again and again, that there was nothing "sectarian" about the institution with which she was connected. It came out, however, on cross-examination, that "prayers" were "held" therein every morning under the auspices and direction of a minister of a particular denomination of Christians; that daily instruction was given in the tenets of the same denomination; that "services" were conducted by ministers of the same every Sunday; that attendance at prayers, and instructions, and at Sunday worship was compulsory upon all inmates of the "Home;" that a Hebrew rabbi had certainly called there some years ago, but none other before or since that solitary visitor appeared had been seen within the building; that the witness "rather thought" a Catholic priest had been in her parlor on one occasion, though when this happened, or what he was doing there, she could not, for the life of her, remember; and finally, that the young girl in the case had been taken in hand as soon as she arrived, and the work of weaning her away from the religion of her fathers and making a proselyte of her had been begun at once.

THE rank injustice of all this, in view of the fact that the city in which the evidence was brought out as above stated, annually appropriates a large sum of money to the institution where the girl was housed, and that a very considerable portion of this money comes directly out of the pockets of thousands of Hebrew taxpayers who are among the worthiest of the inhabitants—the cruel wrong of this whole proceeding needs no elucidation. There are no people in the world, professedly religious, who care less about proselyting than the Hebrews. On the other hand there are certainly none who are more tenacious of their own faith or more earnestly desirous that their children should ask for the old paths of their ancestry and walk in them. It is nothing less than a high-handed outrage, to take their money and use it as a missionary fund, to pay people to turn their little ones from the faith of their race.

* * *

AND yet, this same wrong must inevitably be worked on Jews, as well as others, wherever the State undertakes to apportion the people's money among charitable institutions not absolutely and exclusively under its own control. All such establishments are sure to be run on the lines of some particular religious cult. The people in charge of them are always full of zeal, and pretty generally satisfied that their way is not only a right way, but that it is the only right way. The expediency, nay, the duty, of persuading and teaching others to go that way is burned into the very core of their hearts and minds. The temptation to make "converts" among the young and impressible is particularly strong. It is all right enough for religious ardor to manifest itself as long as its possessors pay out of their own pockets as they go. But it is not right that Hebrew money should be used by the State to make even nominal Christians out of Hebrew children, nor that Catholic money should be used by the State for the "conversion" of Catholic into Protestant youth nor vice versa. Some day the people everywhere may be aroused to the evil of this practice, and then the constitutions of all the States will put a stop to it for ever.

* * *

IT now appears that, after all, little Greece has been for a long time coveting Crete for herself, and not merely loving the insurgents because, like her own people, they "profess and call themselves Christians," as the Episcopalian prayer-book says. It has been discovered that the Greek Admiral perfidiously failed to communicate the offer which the Powers made through him to the Cretans to guarantee them a practical autonomy, if they would lay down their arms. And one Mr. Stillman, who was United States Consul at Canea during the insurrection on the island which lasted from 1866 to 1869, has just written a letter, in which he declares that when the natives were on the very eve of final success, in the latter year a Greek officer landed without any objection on the part of the Turks, obtained from the confiding rebels the command of their entire force, and immediately surrendered to the enemy without firing a shot! The recent treachery, added to the memory of that historic betrayal of trust, is not likely to strengthen the position of Greece before the civilized world.

THE fact is that nations, like men, are prone in these days of degeneration, to the blasphemous use of Christianity's name as a portion of their capital or stock in trade—a means of worldly advancement and aggrandizement, like money, a reputation for skill in some special art, or aptitude for some particular pursuit, or line of activity. Perhaps it is inevitable that this should be the case. Christianity, first of all, vindicates its infallible efficacy as the guide and producer of good conduct. "See how these Christians love one another," exclaim the yet unregenerate pagans. And so, in time, many come to proclaim themselves Christians, who have never really felt its magic touch on heart or mind, because the very name is associated with goodness and desert, and commands general confidence, not only among genuine Christians, but among those who doubt the gospel story. Something of this disposition to trade on the sacred name of our religion seems to have been manifested by the Greek government, if not by the people. It is probable that the attempt will fail. It ought to fail as ought every undertaking, in business or professional life, to "use the Church for a feeder."

BISHOP NEWMAN, whose name has been quite frequently in the papers of late, was formerly a pastor of the Congregational Church, and was an intimate friend of General Grant. Some years ago the bishop—then a Congregational minister—was called upon to deliver a funeral sermon over the body of a distinguished and wealthy Californian's son. The young man was about eighteen when he died. He had been for some time a student at a prominent university in Germany. The bishop pronounced a glowing panegyric upon him. He credited the youth with all the virtues known to humanity, and all the brilliant qualities that mortal man could possibly possess. He waxed more and more enthusiastic and eloquent as he went on, till humanity seemed to him all too small for the mind and soul of that dead boy. And, so, he reached a height of imagination which enabled him to do what he considered justice to his subject. He actually made the claim that there was no historical parallel to the spectacle of that young man sitting under his professors, except the famous interview between a certain Child and his elders in the temple! It was soon after this marvelous oratorical flight that the Rev. Dr. Newman became a Methodist and a bishop almost simultaneously. The rich Californian's family, it is said, still remember him gratefully for his comparison of their boy to the Founder of Christianity.

CANADA wanted "reciprocity" with the United States and sent two "commissioners" to Washington a short while ago to talk the matter over. According to the dispatches her position was that her agricultural products should be admitted free, in return for certain concessions on her part in favor of the products of American factories. It is stated that the commissioners were explicitly assured that the new tariff bill would provide for the "protection" of the farmers of the United States, as well as for that of the manufacturers.

WITHOUT undertaking to deal with the profounder problems of free trade and protection, the proposition may be safely laid down that the less the United States has to do with Canada in any way the better it will be for the United States, if for no other reason because religion, which every right-minded American citizen is anxious to keep out of our politics as far as possible—both for the sake of politics and for the sake of religion, be it understood—this religion is the very key-note of Canadian politics, and for a certain reason, cannot be eliminated therefrom without some drastic measure, which will not, in the nature of things, be taken for many years, if, indeed, it ever will be taken.

* * *

THIS reason is, that when France was compelled to cede Canada to England, she stipulated in the treaty of cession that the rights and properties of the Catholic Church, as they existed at the time, should never be disturbed. It is a settled principle of what is called "International Law" that sovereign nations will disregard treaty stipulations whenever, in their judgment, their own interests require that they should do so. The only remedy the other parties to the treaty have, is to thrash the violator into a different opinion on this point. There is, therefore, no reason to doubt that England will repudiate her obligations in this regard, should she deem it advisable, in any emergency. But, meantime, there exists in Canada an established church, supported by civil taxation, active at all times in all political movements, now controlling, now influencing, now strenuously opposing governmental action, ordering voters as if they were horses to go in this direction or that, to stop, to move, to back, at its own sweet will.

* * *

BETWEEN a country thus biased in its public course—and whether the bias is for good or for evil is no matter to us—and this free United States of ours, there is a great gulf fixed. The traces of the union of Church and State still left among us are enough for us to fight. Haply, we may never root them out of our institutions, but, at any rate, we want just as little as possible to do with a country wherein religion is a recognized factor in political life, which nobody seems seriously disposed to eliminate:

THE Christian Statesman of March 20 makes this reference to the general "celebration" in Washington, D. C., the evening of the inauguration ball:—

"A number of visitors, whose accounts are now being published, tell of terrible scenes of dissipation in many parts of the city. . . . Hotels fitted up extra bar-rooms, and doubled and more than doubled their force of bartenders. And as the night wore on, under cover of its darkness the drunken and licentious orgies were of the most infamous character. A number of congressmen were among the worst of those who made the night hideous with their shameful rowdiness. Such occasions prove the depth of our corruption as a nation. How much need is there to throw the salt of Christianity into the polluted mass!"

Why, we thought from the Statesman's standpoint, indicated by repeated assertions, that this nation is a "Christian nation," and has been so for a long time, at least since the Supreme Court decision to that effect in 1892. Does the Statesman mean that it is a corrupt Christian nation, so polluted that it urgently needs the "salt" of Christianity to counteract the process of decay? What kind of "Christianity" is it that needs to be sprinkled with the "salt" of Christianity?

The Scripture says that Christians are the "salt of the earth." Matt. 5:13. And the Scripture is true. As salt is sprinkled in a dish of food—a minute quantity in comparison with the mass that is seasoned—so is Christianity in the earth and in the nation. It is but a sprinkling among the people.

Is She the Friend of Temperance?

THE Union Signal of March 25 makes the observation that "the Catholic church and the archdiocese of Boston, by the voice of the clergy, has announced itself the uncompromising friend of temperance." The evidence of this seems to be that "one hundred and seventy priests, headed by the venerable Archbishop Williams, was sent to the legislature of Massachusetts asking that such laws be enacted as will prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in any public park within the commonwealth."

"It is," says the Signal, "declared by those who know the animus of the movement that the great underlying purpose which these promoters of temperance desire to accentuate by every possible and honorable means in their power, is to manifest the attitude of the Catholic clergy on the liquor question in general, and to disabuse the minds of those who have misunderstood the spirit of the church on this matter."

We are as willing as any others to believe that the Catholic church is the "uncompromising friend of temperance," if such a belief can be based upon good evidence. But the evidence which comes to our view does not point that way. The decree promulgated on the subject by the American Catholic bishops at their last session does not forbid communicants from engaging in the liquor traffic, but warns them to "consider seriously the many and great dangers and occasions for sin with which their business is surrounded," and provides that "Should they not abandon the traffic, they must do all in their power to remove the occasion of sin from themselves as well as from selling liquor to minors, or to those who they see will abuse it." They are to "keep their shops closed on Sundays, and at no time allow on their premises the use of filthy or profane language," etc. Thus they are to be careful not to bring "the cause of religion" "into dishonor."

The saloon business in itself is not therefore viewed by Catholic authorities as being a dishonor to their religion.

And again: If the church is so firmly set against intemperance, what is the significance of the following among the Catholic "regulations for Lent:" "Those who avail themselves of this Indult are not allowed to use flesh meat and fish at the same meal, and they are earnestly exhorted to perform some other act of mortification, such as abstinence from intoxicating liquors." It is our belief that from the standpoint of temperance, "mortification" is properly connected with indulgence in intoxicating liquors, rather than with abstinence from their use.

A CALL has been issued for a convention of the national "Good Citizen's Association," to meet in Nashville, Tenn., May 18. The call is signed by Neal Dow, Josiah Strong, George C. Lorimer, Theo. L. Cuyler, and other men of religious and political prominence, and is issued to "all lovers of liberty, prosperity, truth, righteousness, and good government." Evidently the convention should be very largely attended.

The Fly in the Ointment.

THE following from the Bible Echo, Melbourne, Australia, touches upon a condition of things which has its parallel in public affairs in the United States:—

"Friday, February 5, a deputation, said to have included 'gentlemen of all shades of religious and political opinion,' waited on Cardinal Moran to request him to allow himself to be nominated as a candidate to the Federal Convention. In response the cardinal read a lengthy reply, previously prepared for the occasion, in which he signified his willingness to comply with the 'very flattering invitation.' After calling attention to the question of a constitution for the proposed Australian Commonwealth, almost the first thing in this reply the cardinal says:—

"I would wish to see inserted in the preamble to the Constitution some such clause as the following: 'Religion is the basis of our Australian Commonwealth and of its laws; and in accordance with the spirit of religion, genuine liberty of conscience is the birthright of every Australian citizen, and full and free exercise of religious worship, so far as may be consistent with public order and public morality, shall be accorded to all.'"—Melbourne Age, Feb. 6th, 1897.

"If men would but look beneath the surface, they could see in this proposed preamble a proposition for taking a first and long step in the backward direction. It is so worded that many doubtless will not see in it what is really there. On the face of it it may look like a very innocent, harmless, and even laudable affair. But it contains a 'dead fly' which spoils the otherwise good ointment. It declares for 'genuine liberty of conscience' and 'full and free exercise of worship so far as may be consistent with public order and public morality.' But that spoils it all. That puts liberty of conscience and freedom of worship on a variable and treacherous foundation. It makes them the servants of the whims and the caprice of men. It jeopardizes their very existence at the outset.

"'Public order' in Roman Catholic countries may require that every man shall uncover his head while the 'host' or the 'crucifix' is being carried by in procession. 'Public morality' even in Australia may demand that all shall observe Sunday as the Sabbath, while God says the seventh day shall be thus observed. Public order and public morality are often at low ebb and of very inferior quality. They are not the standard of order and morality for the true follower of Christ. He looks to God and His word, and not to the public, for directions in determining what are his duties and limits in religious matters, and he is bound to follow what God says, regardless of what the public may do, say, or think. Therefore we say that no man who knows the history of the past, and who desires to see true liberty of conscience preserved inviolable to the people of these colonies, can afford to consent to such a preamble as the one above proposed, being affixed to any constitution of any colony or commonwealth.

"Cardinal Moran is not the first cardinal who has had the ability by the adroit use and manipulation of language to nullify a good definition of religious liberty by a word or phrase. Cardinal Gibbons, of the United States, says:—

"'A man enjoys religious liberty when he possesses the free right of worshiping God according to the dictates of a right conscience.'—Faith of Our Fathers, page 264.

"But who is to say when a man's conscience is 'right'? With the Catholics a man's conscience is right only when it tells him to be a Catholic, and with the Wesleyans only when it tells him to be a Wesleyan, and so on. According to this, a man in a Catholic country would enjoy religious liberty when he possessed the right to worship according to the rules and regulations of the Catholic Church.

"Here again is seen the 'saving clause' which nullifies the otherwise good statement, and in the twinkling of an eye changes the good into positive evil. Let none be deceived. The Papacy never has declared, and the Papacy never will declare, for the right of the individual to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. This would destroy the whole papal system at a stroke. It will never do it."

An Invasion of the Liberty of the Press.

"New York Herald," March 22.

THE freak epidemic which has so unaccountably broken out in a number of legislatures throughout the country within a few months has brought forth nothing more ultra or uncalled for than the following bill, introduced by Senator Ellsworth at Albany:—

"No person, firm, partnership, corporation, or voluntary association shall print or publish in any newspaper, periodical, magazine, pamphlet or book, any portrait or alleged portrait of any person or individual living in this State without first having obtained his or her written consent to such printing or publication.

"The printing or publishing of the portrait or alleged portrait of such person or individual without such consent in writing shall be a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not less than $1,000 and by imprisonment for not less than one year.

"This act shall take effect immediately."

This, it will be noted, is a sweeping, indiscriminate prohibition of any pictorial representation of any person in any publication without the written consent of such person. The prohibition is not restricted to private individuals; it applies equally to all public officials and public characters. It is not limited to newspapers; it extends to all classes of publications—weekly papers, monthly magazines, pamphlets and books. The penalty prescribed is as ultra and unheard of as the character of the bill. The minimum is a fine of not less than one thousand dollars in addition to imprisonment of not less than a year.

The reason or pretext offered in justification of this amazing measure is that the printing of personal portraits has been carried by certain papers to the extreme of abuse in violation of private rights. No reputable journal will defend or excuse such abuse or ask license to practice it. None will object to any well-aimed legislation to prevent or punish it. If the Ellsworth bill were of that character there would be no objection to its enactment. But so sweeping is it in scope and so tyrannical in penalty that the evil it would work would be infinitely greater than the abuse at which it is so wildly aimed. It is nothing short of an unbridled raid upon the entire illustrated press of the State and a plain violation of that principle embedded in the Constitution that "no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press."

Its intent is, and its effect would be, not discriminate regulation, but indiscriminate prohibition. It would prohibit the publication without written consent of a picture of a candidate for the presidency of the United States, if living in New York, for the governorship or for any other public office in this State. Imagine a law prohibiting the publication of a biography or the personal record, good or bad, of any candidate for official station. Such a man is a public character. The people want to know, and have a right to know, who he is and what he is, and what he looks like. It is not only the constitutional right, but also the function of the press to supply this want. To prohibit pictorial representation in such case would be as clearly beyond the power of the legislature as to prohibit any personal description or comment without written consent.

The constitutional objection to the anti-cartoon feature of the bill is not less obvious, and is even more forcible, since this is aimed at one of the most potent and legitimate journalistic agencies of modern times. The use of satire and humor as moral forces is older even than the satires of Horace or the comedies of Aristophanes. They have figured conspicuously in the literature of every country and every age as lampoons of the oibles and follies, the wrongs and abuses of the times.

The cartoon is but pictured satire and humor and has lent to the modern press which has employed it, a power for public good often surpassing that wielded by the pen.

Pictorial comment on men, measures and issues commanding public attention is, and always has been, as legitimate and secure against unwarranted legislative interference as written criticism. It is a guaranteed right of the freedom of the press. For any abuse of that right a stringent libel law affords an ample remedy. But to declare that no public character shall be cartooned without his written consent would be equivalent to declaring that no public character shall be criticised without his written consent. It would be an invasion of the liberty of the press which popular sentiment would not countenance, the Constitution warrant nor the courts uphold.

If the courts had not shown so much readiness to defend measures which have the sanction neither of justice nor reason, there would not be so much "freak legislation" undertaken by our legislators.

That Sunday Bill Again.

THE following Sunday-rest bill has been introduced in Congress by Mr. McMillan, in the Senate, and by Mr. Harmer, in the House:—

"A B I L L

"To further protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall not be lawful for any person to keep open any place of business or maintain a stand for the sale of any article or articles of profit during Sunday, excepting vendors of books or newspapers, and apothecaries for the dispensing of medicines, and undertakers for the purpose of providing for the dead, or others for the purposes of charity or necessity; nor shall any public playing of football or baseball or any other kind of playing, sports, pastimes, or diversions, disturbing the peace and quiet of the day, be practiced by any person or persons within the District of Columbia on Sunday; nor shall any building operations or work upon railroad construction be lawful upon said day; and for any violation of this Act the person offending shall, for each offense, be liable to a fine of not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars, and in the case of corporations there shall be a like fine for every person employed in violation of this Act laid upon the corporation offending.

"SECTION 2. That it shall be a sufficient defense to a prosecution for labor on the first day of the week that the defendant uniformly keeps another day of the week as a day of rest, and that the labor complained of was done in such a manner as not to interrupt or disturb other persons in observing the first day of the week as a day of rest. This Act shall not be construed to prevent the sale of refreshments other than malt or spirituous liquors, or to prevent the sale of malt and spirituous liquors as now provided for by law, or tobacco, cigars, railroad and steamboat tickets, or the collection and delivery of baggage."

It cannot be pretended that this is merely a "civil Sunday" bill, designed to release the laboring classes from the bondage of Sunday toil. Washington is not a city in which a case can be made out for a Sunday bill upon this ground. The bill is plainly religious in character. Any doubt upon this point would be removed by observing that the bill prohibits everything that would disturb "the peace and quiet of the day." Rest for the laboring men or for any others, possibly excepting invalids, is not dependent upon "the peace and quiet" of the day, so far as these would be affected by the pursuit of ordinary occupations and pleasures.

The bill asks Congress to legislate to uphold the Church dogma of Sunday sacredness,—to recognize Sunday as the weekly Sabbath. That is its real intent, and if this was plainly stated in its title, it would not in the least change its character.

THE Boston Post makes note in the following of the insufficiency of legislation to secure what is sought by the advocates of compulsory Sunday rest:—

"Without entering upon a discussion of the question whether it is possible to regulate by law the conduct of citizens on Sunday further than it is now regulated, the broader question forces itself upon consideration, whether the freest liberty of the individual does not assure the best and wisest observance of Sunday. The Sabbath, by the command delivered to Moses,—and which on the highest authority was 'made for man,'—is essentially a day of rest. Unnecessary labor is forbidden, in order that the opportunity for rest may not be interfered with. But rest means one thing for some men and altogether another thing for others.

"There is the consideration, of course, of the cultivation of man's spiritual nature. The Sabbath pause in secular occupation has from the first been held to be properly devoted to this purpose. It is the day on which men are free to give thought to things above the sordid occupation of bread winning. But can this be aided by law? The utmost that can be accomplished by authority is to secure to those who are spiritually disposed the free enjoyment of the opportunity afforded by the day of rest, undisturbed by the interference of others.

"This the laws undertake to do. And when this is done, all the rest is the work of individual effort,—the rendering attractive of church services, the collection of children into Sunday schools, the inspiration of higher thoughts by visitation and ministration among the lowly."

And it is pertinent to add that "the free enjoyment of the opportunity afforded by the day of rest, undisturbed by the interference of others," is secured by the laws against disturbing religious meetings, independently of any special legislation for Sunday. It is every man's privilege to rest on Sunday and worship on that day if he chooses, and also to worship at any other time that he may choose; for worship should certainly not be confined to one day in the week. And in this he will be protected from disturbance, whether at the Sunday morning service or at the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting. One law covers both occasions, and it is just as reasonable that a law should be framed especially for the prayer-meeting, as that one should be framed especially for worship on Sunday.

The Christian will worship God on all days and keep the rest day He has instituted, independently of human ordinances or regulations; and the person who will not do this is not a Christian, and cannot be made such by the passage of any law.

WHAT would seem to be one of the most puzzling questions developed within recent times, is that of the significance of the phrase "entering politics" or other equivalent expressions. During the Presidential campaign the preachers in hundreds of pulpits all over the land were preaching politics with all their power, yet we were assured that they had not gone into politics. A minister may exhort his congregation to a certain course of political action, even instructing them how to cast their vote, and yet keep, in his own view at least, outside of politics. The point was well illustrated by this statement made by Cardinal Moran, in accepting an invitation to be nominated as a member of the forthcoming Australian Convention:—

"It is not my intention on the present occasion, or at any future time, to enter the arena of politics."

Upon this an exchange remarks:—

"This is indeed a queer statement for a man to make who has just signified his intention of accepting a nomination to a political position if offered him. A man might as well talk of going to war and not entering the army, of going into a house and not entering it, or of baking and selling bread and not entering the bakers' trade, as to talk of standing for an election by the people to a position in civil government and not entering politics. To declare otherwise is to trifle with language and stultify reason. This statement, however, may serve to explain how some men can demand religious legislation and yet assert that Church and State are not thereby united; and how they can advocate religious intolerance and oppression and at the same time declare they are not in favor of religious persecution."

A BILL was introduced in the Michigan legislature, March 4, "To prohibit the opening or keeping open of photographic galleries or studios on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, for the purpose of carrying on or engaging in the art or calling of photography, or in any work pertaining to the art or calling of a photographer on said first day of the week, commonly called Sunday." The bill exempts "persons who conscientiously believe the seventh day of the week should be observed as the Sabbath, and who actually refrain from secular business on that day."

Inasmuch as this State already has a statute forbidding secular business on the first day of the week, this proposed legislation seems superfluous from any standpoint that can be taken. And if it is contended that no law of the State now covers the business of photography, the bill is from this view open to the charge of being class legislation, which has recently defeated certain Sunday bills in other States.

Above and beyond these considerations, of course, is the great fact that this and all other human sabbath laws interfere with the Creator's ordinance of Sabbath observance, and therefore can have no binding force upon any individual.

A HEARING was given March 16 by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Connecticut, on the Sunday bill recently introduced in the legislature of that State. This bill was drawn up by a committee of Congregational ministers of Connecticut, and greatly widens the application and increases the penalty of the existing law. At the hearing a number of Congregational preachers appeared and championed the measure, and two seventh-day observers and a lawyer spoke against it. The latter said that the history of religious legislation in the State was: "First, 'You must go to my church, or I will imprison you, or hang you, or banish you.' When that had grown unpopular, it was: 'You must go to some church, or I will imprison you or fine you.' And now, it is: 'If you don't go to some church, you shan't go anywhere else or do anything else.'" It was also shown by the opposition that the power of State legislatures could not do more than convert one half of a man, and only the outside half at that; and thus pharisees and hypocrites could be made to corrupt and curse the church; but no true Christians.

The impression of those present at the hearing was that the bill would not be favorably reported.

THE success of Satolli as papal ablegate to the United States, has encouraged the pope to try the same plan for the settlement of the church difficulties in Canada. Mgr. Del Val has been charged with the task, and has been invested with the fullest ecclesiastical powers, even to the extent of deposing bishops who may refuse to accept his decisions. It is learned that the forty-five Catholic members of the Senate and Commons, including M. Laurier and all the Catholic members of the government, signed a petition to the pope, asking him to send a delegate to settle the Manitoba school question, thus binding themselves to abide by his decision. A prominent Catholic churchman in London, Ont., which city the papal delegate has lately visited, states that Mgr. Del Val will ascertain just how much concession to the Catholics premier Greenway is willing to make, and that he will state to the premier what is the exact, irreducible minimum of the demands of the Church. He hopes that the maximum of the government's concessions will so nearly tally with the minimum of the Church's demands, that a basis will be established for a settlement of the issues between Church and State.

PROBABLY no great event of history ever had more causes assigned for it than the fall of the empire of Rome. The latest of these, and probably the most unique, is given in an article published in the New York Journal of March 28, in defense of Sunday, by the pastor of St. Luke's Episcopal church, Brooklyn. "When Cicero and Cataline and their compeers," he says, "came to distrust the general religious doctrines, Rome began to totter. A country run without God will sooner or later be run to destruction."

In other words, the "general religious doctrines," even be they such as prevailed in the empire of Rome, must be profoundly revered as the first essential toward the successful running of the country. It must not be run "without god," though the god recognized in its affairs may be the embodiment of no more truth, right, and justice than were the gods of Rome. By this doctrine Sunday observance is easily sustained as essential to the preservation of the Government; and it requires some such doctrine as this to afford Sunday the needed support.

THE question whether this shall become a full sectarian nation or not, must be answered by courageous statesmanship, or in blood and tears. It must be answered speedily.—Martinsburg, Pa., Weekly Herald.

That "Superb" Bible.

Dodgeville, Wis.

AMERICAN SENTINEL, New York City:

The Bible came to hand all right. To say that I am pleased with it will but faintly describe my feelings. It would take too much space to enumerate its many points of excellence, so I will sum it all up in the one word "superb."

There are so many "aids to the study of the Scriptures," and they are so helpful and just what I have been wishing for since I became a "Bible Christian."

Friends and neighbors all say, "I wish I had one like it," and "So cheap." Our seventeen-year-old daughter is about to start out to obtain subscriptions for the SENTINEL, as she wishes for one "just like it."

Please accept my warmest thanks, and believe me to be,

Ever sincerely yours,

R. G. W. COLLINS.

ASSUREDLY you would like to read the story of Saul against David with the psalms which David then composed, set exactly in the places where they occurred in the story. Wouldn't you now? Well, just buy a copy of that fine book, "The Empires of the Bible," and on pages 161-172 you have the whole story just as it occurred and each psalm in its place in the story. Many, many other such interesting things are in that book too; and it costs only $1.50.

The Rights of the People, or Civil Government and Religion.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

THIS IS ONE OF THE VERY BEST BOOKS THAT HAS EVER BEEN WRITTEN ON THE RELATION OF
THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND RELIGION.

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

Do THE preachers of this day really believe that crime is a worse thing than sin? If not, why are they fighting crime so much harder than they are fighting sin?

It is a fact that the clergy are devoting their energies to the suppression of crime. They are preaching about the prevalence of crime, and calling upon the civil authorities to enforce the laws, or to enact new laws which they deem to be needed. They are discoursing persistently upon problems of national, State, and municipal government. The religious societies of which they are the leaders are putting forth their strength to get control of the civil power for the suppression, as they believe, of the iniquity which so abounds under the Government. All this is too plain to be denied. And in it all, the clergy are combating crime and not sin.

It may be, indeed, that they believe they are combating sin. It is probable that this work is so regarded by the majority of the people. Nevertheless they are not dealing with sin, as such, at all. They are not even combating crime in a proper and effective way. They seek to mix religion with civil enactments, and so to manufacture, rather than suppress, crime; for, the more religion is incorporated into the civil laws, the more will those laws be infringed by people who do not believe in religion, or whose religious views are different from those embodied in the law.

Crime and sin are vastly different things. Crime is the violation of human law; sin is the transgression of the divine law. The divine law is "holy, and just, and good" (Rom. 7:12); it partakes of the attributes of its divine Author. Human law is often unjust, and therefore neither holy nor good. A transgression of an unjust law is not sin. On the other hand, a transgression of the divine law is very often not a crime. The divine law embodies the conceptions of Omniscience. It is therefore as much superior to human law as the thoughts of God are superior to those of man. The divine law is "exceeding broad" (Ps. 119:96), covering the domain of the thoughts and desires of the heart. Human law can be of force only in the domain of outward conduct, and even there to only a limited extent.

Hence a vast difference must exist between the means employed for dealing with these two phases of conduct. For the suppression of crime there exists the machinery of civil government, by which are enforced the penalties of the civil law. But this means is altogether inadequate for dealing with sin. And on the other hand, the purposes of civil government could not be secured by the use of the means instituted for the suppression of sin.

Now it must be admitted that from the standpoint of Christianity sin is a very much worse thing than crime. And as this is the standpoint professedly occupied by the clergy in this country, they must be supposed to hold this view of sin. Why then, we may ask again, do they devote their energies mainly to the combating of crime?

Sin cannot be suppressed by legislative enactments, for it cannot be reached by such means. And should all the measures be enacted which the preachers and the religious societies want enacted by Congress and the State legislatures, and should the churches and the religious organizations get possession of all the power for which they are grasping, all this would accomplish nothing toward the suppression of sin. The seat of sin is the heart; and from this secret citadel sin dictates that outward conduct which, when it invades individual rights, is punished by the civil law. The suppression of these outward acts does not touch the sin that is back of them. The trimming of some of the branches of an evil tree does not in the least hinder the flow of sap from its roots.

It must be evident, then, that in calling for the application of the civil law to the evils which abound in the land, or for votes to accomplish the purification of politics, the clergy are not combating sin. Were they combating sin, they would also be combating crime, in a very effective way; for crime, when it is the violation of just law, is always a manifestation of sin in the heart. But in opposing crime by another avenue of attack than the heart, they are leaving sin free to continue its work not only of destroying the soul, but of producing crime as well.

Sin is the transgression of the divine law. 1 John 3: 4. The only effective means therefore for suppressing sin is that which enables the individual to keep that law. And as this law is infinitely higher and broader than man's law, only the Infinite One can provide the means required. And this He has done in the provisions of His gospel, which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. 1:16. It is the privilege of Christian preachers to preach the power of God for the salvation of every sinner. It is their duty as well, and they are not true to their calling if they fail to do it. And what is "the power of God unto salvation"? The first chapter of Genesis furnishes an answer to the question. God said, "Let there be light," and "there was light." He said, "Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters," and "it was so." He said, "Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed after his kind, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind," and "it was so." His word created that which did not exist before; and in "every one that believeth" His word, there is created by its power that which did not exist before, even a new heart, which is clean and without sin. Ps. 51:10. By faith, the sinner becomes a "new creature" in Jesus Christ. 2 Cor. 5:17.

Can those who stand before the people as ambassadors of God do better than to devote their whole energies to the proclamation of the power of God unto salvation, through a new creation in Christ? Can they accomplish more by preaching the power of man for the suppression of crime? The SENTINEL thinks not.

Theological Anarchy.

THE Christian Statesman, of March 13, says that "Sabbath breakers are anarchists at heart." By "Sabbath breakers" it means all who do not keep Sunday.

"Anarchists at heart" are not essentially different from any anarchists. As it is true that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," it must be true that "anarchists at heart" will be anarchists in word and act; and they are therefore to be subjected to the most rigid restraints of the law. This is the Statesman's idea of "religious liberty," by the plain logic of the premises it sets up.

But the question of "Sabbath breaking" is purely a theological one. It is purely a question of theology whether the Statesman is not itself guilty of "Sabbath breaking." For whether the Sabbath be the seventh or the first day of the week, is a question not determined by human law, but by the Word of God; and this question is warmly disputed by religionists to-day. It is a question which theologians would be called upon to decide; and these having decided in any given case who were the anarchists, it would be left for the latter to be dealt with as such by the civil authorities.

This is precisely the regime which prevailed in the Dark Ages.

SEPARATION of Church and State means recognition of the fact that it does not belong to the Church to undertake the work of the State, or of the civil authorities, even though the latter may show themselves negligent or incompetent in the performance of their duties.

Making It Easy To Do Right.

THE Saviour said to his followers, "In the world ye shall have tribulation;" and the Apostle Paul wrote, "All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." People who profess to be Christians ought to believe that Jesus and Paul spoke the truth. Yet to-day, right in the face of their words, we hear this very class calling upon Congress and the State legislatures to enact laws in the interests of religion, so as to make it "hard for people to do wrong, and easy for them to do right."

Again: Of Christians the Word of God declares, "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God;" and the Apostle Paul, speaking as a Christian, wrote: "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2:20. This must be true of every Christian; for it is the very essence of Christianity. It is Christ who lives and who is manifested in the lives of true believers. Christianity is nothing less than the very life of Christ.

Therefore there is just as much need, and no more, of laws to make it "easy for men to do right," as there was of laws to make it easy for Jesus Christ to do right when he walked and taught in Judea. And we learn from the Scripture that Jesus Christ encountered every kind of obstacle, and the fiercest opposition, to right living; yet he did right continually. Can he not then still do right, living in his followers to-day, without the aid of man-made legislation?

It is easy now for people to do right, if they will only go about it right. God has made it easy to do right. It is only necessary that the Word of God should be received into the heart by faith. There is infinite power in that Word, and that power is for the purpose of keeping the individual in the right path. Hence it is no more difficult for a person to do right, under any circumstances, than it is for him to have faith in the Word of God. And the only difficulty about this is that people are so unwilling to lay aside their fancied greatness and wisdom and "become as little children," trusting the Father in heaven with implicit confidence, as a little child trusts its father on the earth.

The Fate of Arbitration.

THE well-meant scheme of securing perpetual peace between two great "Christian" nations by means of a treaty of arbitration, seems not to be proving a success. The proposed treaty in its original form provided that,—

"The high contracting parties agree to submit to arbitration, in accordance with the provisions and subject to the limitations of this treaty, all questions in difference between them which they may fail to adjust by diplomatic negotiations."

In the hands of the United States Senate, on March 31, this was amended to read as follows:—

"Any difference which, in the judgment of either party, materially affects its honor or its domestic or foreign policy, shall not be referred to arbitration under this treaty except by special agreement, nor shall any question as to the continuance in force of any treaty which has previously been made. It is further explicitly specified and agreed that all agreements entered into by the contracting parties under this treaty shall be signed by the President of the United States and receive the approval of the Senate by a two-thirds vote before it becomes binding upon Great Britain or the United States."

This seems to leave room for one more amendment to complete the farce to which the treaty is reduced; and accordingly the Independent (N. Y.) suggests the following:—

"Provided that, in the remote contingency that any case under this treaty is decided against the United States by an arbitral tribunal, such decision shall be null and void."

The moral of all which is that perpetual peace, whether between individuals or nations, cannot be secured without a genuine desire for peace on the part of the parties concerned. And this means the possession and manifestation of the spirit of self-sacrifice,—a thing which in national diplomacy is conspicuous only by its absence.

The Scripture says, "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts." People who will do this will live peaceably; and this is the one and only sure guarantee of the maintenance of peaceful relations.

ARE the majority of the adult citizens of this country Christians? The total church membership is only about 20,000,000 out of a population of 70,000,000 people. And even admitting that a majority of the people are nominal Christians, can it be reasonably claimed that real Christians are in the majority? Certainly no such claim could be admitted.

The religious people of the country, therefore, ought to realize that any attempt to control this Government in the interests of religion, must be dangerous to themselves. For this is a government "of the people, by the people;" and while a majority of the people no doubt have a respect for religion in its present status, an attempt to compel the unchristian majority to conform to religious customs and views held to by the minority, cannot but arouse bitter opposition; and in the storm thus raised their own religious temples may be beaten down upon their heads. They may then learn to appreciate better than they do now that provision of the Constitution which says: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

It is an ominous sign of the times that so many people are ready to take it for granted that a thing is good if it is done in the name of religion. The people need to be instructed, lest the Scripture be again fulfilled, which says, "The people perish for lack of knowledge."

Clerical Opposition to Sunday Ball.

THE clergy of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, are opposed to Sunday ball playing. They have learned that it is the intention of the management of the Cleveland league club to have Sunday games in that city during the coming baseball season, and they have promptly formulated their protests against it.

The question was the topic of discourse at the Dunham Avenue Disciple church (Rev. Mr. Chalmers, pastor), Sunday evening, March 28. "It was the intention of the speaker," says the Cleveland Leader in its report, "to make his remarks on Sunday baseball only a preface to a sermon on 'The Joy of Heaven,' but the latter subject was not touched upon, and the question of baseball became the sole topic of the evening."

This certainly reveals an unusual interest in the question on the part of this representative of Cleveland's clergy. It would seem that he considered a discussion of this subject to be equivalent in value to his congregation to a presentation of the gospel of God. Or can it be that he believed he was presenting the gospel in his remarks upon the impropriety of Sunday games?

The latter inference can hardly be allowed, since the speaker declared that he was presenting the subject from the standpoint of its legality, and not from that of its morality.

Alluding to an interview had with the manager of the Cleveland ball club, the Rev. Mr. Chalmers said:—

"I gave him to understand that I would fight to the end Sunday baseball, not as a preacher, but as a citizen; not with the Bible in my hand, but with the American flag."

Here is a mystery. Why should this minister of the gospel, in opposing that which he believes to be wrong, lay aside his Bible and take up the American flag? The American flag is the symbol of the American Government, and constitutes no standard of right and wrong. The Government may be right, or it may be wrong, but the flag remains its symbol at all times. Why then should the flag be better in the hands of a Christian minister than the Bible for convincing an opponent that he is in the wrong?

What is there in the American flag that discounts Sunday ball playing? Many preachers seem to believe that the Bible is against Sunday ball, and an objection based upon religious grounds might be made with some show of plausibility; but what possible ground of objection to Sunday ball can be embodied in the flag is a question to which neither history nor reason can furnish an answer.

The Rev. Mr. Chalmers says that he would fight Sunday ball not as a preacher, but as a citizen. He is a citizen of the State of Ohio, and there is a law of the State which forbids baseball on Sunday. But what emphasis to this would be given by the American flag? The flag is not the flag of the State, but of the nation; and there is nothing in the national law which opposes Sunday ball. The national Constitution confers no power upon the national Legislature to forbid the playing of Sunday ball. And as a citizen of the United States, bearing the American flag, the Rev. Mr. Chalmers or any other person would necessarily stand in an attitude not at all unfavorable to Sunday games.

The speaker strongly alleged that his attitude in this matter was taken out of regard for law. "I am not standing," he said, "on the moral ground alone. It isn't a question as to whether I think it is right or wrong. It is the question as to whether it is law or not." This is precisely the principle by which the Christian martyrs were condemned and put to death during the Dark Ages. "Heresy" was against the law of the land, and the heretic, after being condemned by the Inquisition, was always turned over to the hands of the civil authorities, and from them received his punishment. It is an evil principle indeed that the only question to be considered in the administration of civil affairs, is that of what is the law. Laws ought always to be just; but they are frequently unjust. And when unjust, Right does not abdicate her throne in their favor. Right and justice always stand as the paramount claimants to our reverence and support. A minister of the gospel ought to be the last person to put the question of "what is the law?" above the question of what is right.

The speaker said further that "you don't have to believe the Bible to stand against Sunday baseball;" and in this he hit upon the truth. Reverence for Sunday is not based upon the Bible, but upon tradition; and the more the Bible is believed, the less opposition will there be to Sunday recreation in any form. The Bible speaks in a number of places of the first day of the week, but nowhere mentions it as a day different in character from any other day except the seventh, which it declares to be the "Sabbath of the Lord."

At the close of his discourse the speaker called upon his congregation for a rising vote in favor of supporting the Sunday law, and all present are said to have responded, with the exception of "five or six young men in the rear of the auditorium." Of this it may be said that to force a vote upon an issue only one side of which has been presented, making the voters commit themselves to that side without considering the evidence that might be given to the contrary, is a method of procedure quite characteristic of the movement for the maintenance and extension of Sunday legislation.

THERE is something decidedly curious about the spectacle of a minister of the gospel stepping out from the sphere of his calling and posing as the champion of law. Why should this be done by the clergy more than by the representatives of any other calling? Are not those in other professions honorable, honest, and law-abiding? Are they not as anxious as the clergy to live under a government in which public peace and prosperity are properly safeguarded by law? These questions must be answered in the affirmative.

Why, again, should it be only in case of a Sunday law that the clergy assume this pose? Are there not very many laws of the highest importance to the welfare of society, which need to be maintained against the assaults of the lawless? It must be admitted that there are. The tendency of the times is, toward an increase of lawlessness, in those forms which are most destructive of human rights. Homicide is alarmingly on the increase, claiming by the latest statistics more than 10,500 victims in this country in a single year. Does not the prevalence of this crime, the epidemic of arson, the increase of robbery and drunkenness and other forms of iniquity which threaten the safety of society, afford as good opportunity to the clergy to become the special champions of law as does the desecration of Sunday?

Of course, from the standpoint of regard for Sunday as a religious institution, this attitude of the clergy is easily understood. But they strenuously assure us that in upholding Sunday laws they do not speak from a religious standpoint, or as preachers, but merely as citizens upholding the laws of the land. It is mysterious, to say the least.

Or, consider that other ground upon which the clergy so often base their support of Sunday laws,—that of physical necessity to the race. Why should the clergy take precedence of all other professions in looking out for the physical welfare of humanity? How does it happen that they know better than any others what man's physical system demands for the maintenance of health? One would suppose that the physicians would know best about this, and that they would have discerned man's physical need of Sunday rest before it was discovered by the preachers. But by some strange oversight they allowed the latter to surpass them completely on this point of physiological knowledge. Indeed, it is only through the preachers that we learn that the medical profession are even now informed upon this point!

And here again we are left to wonder that the researches of the clergy in the realm of man's physical necessities, and their special concern for the same, should be confined to the single matter of Sunday rest. For all this, be it remembered, has nothing to do with the clergy's regard for Sunday as a religious day, but is set forth by them from a purely civil standpoint, such as is held by all citizens in common!

Is it so, indeed? We dislike to doubt the sincerity of those who make this claim; but it must be said that the appearances are sadly against it.

THE Christian Statesman says that people "will learn sooner or later that no civil right can be secured to any citizen on any other than a religious basis." This it says with reference to a demand for the "civil right" of Sunday rest, and it is, of course, an admission that such demands properly rest on a religious basis. That which rests on a religious basis is certainly religious itself; and such is the case with all legislation which the demand for Sunday rest has evolved.

Faltering Protestants and the Roman Revival.

BY MRS. E. G. WHITE.

ST 2-17-14

THE voice of Luther, that echoed in mountains and valleys, that shook Europe as with an earthquake, summoned forth an army of noble apostles of Jesus, and the truth they advocated could not be silenced by faggots, by tortures, by dungeons, by death; and still the voices of the noble army of martyrs are telling us that the Roman power is the predicted apostacy of the last days, the mystery of iniquity which Paul saw beginning to work even in his day.

Roman Catholicism is rapidly gaining ground. Popery is on the increase, and those who have turned their ears away from hearing the truth are listening to her delusive fables. Papal chapels, papal colleges, nunneries, and monasteries are on the increase, and the Protestant world seems to be asleep.

Protestants are losing the mark of distinction that distinguished them from the world, and they are lessening the distance between themselves and the Roman power. They have turned away their ears from hearing the truth; they have been unwilling to accept light which God shed upon their pathway, and are therefore going into darkness. They speak with contempt of the idea that there will be a revival of the past cruel persecution on the part of Romanists and those who affiliate with them.

They do not recognize the fact that the Word of God fully predicts such a revival, and will not concede that the people of God in the last days shall suffer persecution, although the Bible says, "The dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."

Popery is the religion of human nature, and the mass of humanity love a doctrine that permits them to commit sin, and yet frees them from its consequences. People must have some form of religion, and this religion, formed by human device, and yet claiming divine authority, suits the carnal mind. Men who think themselves wise and intelligent turn away in pride from the standard of righteousness, the ten commandments, and do not think it is in harmony with their dignity to inquire into the ways of God. Therefore they go into false ways, into forbidden paths, become self-sufficient, self-inflated, after the pattern of the Pope, not after the pattern of Jesus Christ.

They must have the form of religion that has the least requirement of spirituality and self-denial, and as unsanctified human wisdom will not lead them to loathe popery, they are naturally drawn toward its provisions and doctrines. They do not want to walk in the ways of the Lord, their minds are all open to delusions, all ready to accept and believe a lie. They are willing to have the most unreasonable, most inconsistent falsehoods palmed off upon them as truth.

Satan's masterpiece of deception is popery; and while it has been demonstrated that a day of great intellectual darkness was favorable to Romanism, it will also be demonstrated that a day of great intellectual light is also favorable to its power; for the minds of men are concentrated on their own superiority, and do not like to retain God in their knowledge. Rome claims infallibility, and Protestants are following in the same line. They do not desire to search for truth and go on from light to a greater light. They wall themselves in with prejudice, and seem willing to be deceived and to deceive others.

But though the attitude of the churches is discouraging, yet there is no need of being disheartened; for God has a people who will preserve their fidelity to His truth, who will make the Bible, and the Bible alone, their rule of faith and doctrine, who will elevate the standard, and hold aloft the banner on which is inscribed, "The commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." They will value a pure gospel, and make the Bible the foundation of their faith and doctrine.

For such a time as this, when men are casting aside the law of the Lord of hosts, the prayer of David is applicable,—“It is time for Thee, Lord, to work; for they have made void Thy law.”

THE Pope has a new scheme for regaining his lost temporal sovereignty, evolved from the outcome of the late Italian war with Abyssinia. The Italian government requested the Pope to negotiate with the Negus of Abyssinia on behalf of the Italian prisoners detained by him, and the Pope seemed favorable to the undertaking. And now, says the Independent, "a cardinal, whose name is not given, in conversation with a correspondent of a Catholic paper, intimates that an understanding might be reached between the Vatican and the Quirinal provided King Humbert's court and government were removed from the Eternal City and the Pope was given reasonable assurance of non-interference from the secular arm. He would be satisfied with less territory than the Holy See formerly occupied, but it is absolutely necessary that Rome should be free to him. In return for this concession the Pope would allow the faithful in Italy to take part in the elections."

POLITICS can furnish no answer to the Christian's prayer, "Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven."

The Church Not the Manager of the State.

THE well-known evangelist, Rev. B. Fay Mills, recently gave a series of lectures in the Y. M. C. A. hall in Syracuse, N. Y. In the last of these Mr. Mills spoke on the subject of the mission of the Church, and declared to his audience that "It is the business of the Church to see that the State conducts its affairs in a Christian fashion." This is a doctrine which is being declared everywhere by clergymen who are taking the lead in "moral reform" work at the present time; and the influence which these men exert over all classes whom they address, and especially over powerful and enthusiastic organizations like the Society of Christian Endeavor, forbids the ignoring of their utterances as idle words not capable of producing practical results. It is pleasing to note that on this occasion this doctrine was not allowed to pass unchallenged, the Syracuse Evening Herald, replying to Mr. Mills, as follows:—

"It is the business of the Church to see that the State conducts its affairs in a Christian fashion.

'B. FAY MILLS.'

"Is it? Then if the majority in the State were Jews, would it be the business of the Jews to see that the State 'conducted its affairs' in Jewish fashion? Or if a majority were not Christians, would it be the business of the majority to see that the State was conducted in a way not Christian? This is a Government by majority, but in order to protect as much as possible the minority against the intolerance and persecution which invariably come with majority rule, constitutions are established as the fundamental law of the State under which the rights of the minority to freedom of speech, freedom of printing and freedom of worship are made sure. The genius of our Government is the complete separation of Church and State, yet here is a minister of a denomination which knows the meaning of persecution for nonconformity to the ideas of the majority as to what constitutes Christianity, standing for religious domination—which means denominational domination in its logic—in the State.

"Mr. Mills will have difficulty in finding authority in the New Testament for his doctrine that it is the business of the Church to supervise the State. It was the fear that the mission of Jesus Christ was to institute a sorely needed revolution in Judea that led chiefly to the persecution and death of the Founder of Christianity. Against this charge made by the orthodox Jews he protested. 'Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's' means that he would not have the Church see to it that the State was dominated by it. The words and example of Paul were always in direct refutation of the doctrine enunciated by Mr. Mills. Both knew that the moment the Church became political that moment it would begin to lose in spiritual power, and the history of nineteen centuries has proved the scientific soundness of their position. The Church cannot have an influence upon the State in the way suggested by Mr. Mills without becoming political, and when the Church goes into politics, into government, then such a government as that established by the fathers of this country and whose theory is in the national and State Constitutions, becomes impossible.

"The State of New York, like the United States, is a government for and by the people, which means for and by all the people. This implies necessarily the complete separation of Church and State, the conduct of the State according to ethical principles alone, upon which all religionists and even all agnostics are agreed. It makes the Government a business proposition, an enterprise for the conduct of the common affairs of all citizens regardless of religious creed or political doctrine.

"In the early days of the colonies these were—most of them—conducted in the fashion which happened to be the prevailing idea as to a Christian government, and the history of the colonies is a long record of persecution and tyranny. 'The Church' was that denomination which was in a majority, and all the other branches of the church were looked on as schismatics and rather worse than heathens and infidels. The so-called Christian governments of the colonies were tyrannies, and they constitute one of the most potent of possible arguments against the doctrine enunciated by B. Fay Mills. The history of England, of France, of Germany, of Spain, and of nearly every other European country, and the effect of the so-called Christianization of the Roman Empire are other warnings both to the citizens of the United States as citizens and to the Christian Church as a church against Mr. Mills' doctrine.

"It is the business of the Church to call men to repentance, to preach the gospel—the glad tidings of great joy—to work for the spiritual regeneration of mankind through regeneration of the individual. In this business it has employment for all its energies and talents, and thus employing itself it is a more powerful influence for righteousness in the State and righteousness of the State as a governing corporation, than it can possibly be in attempting directly to dictate policies to the State and to be the State.

"The Government of the United States and of the State of New York are as much the governments of the non-Christian as of the Christian; of the Jew as of the Gentile; of the pantheist as of the Trinitarian; of the agnostic and Deist as of the strictest of the sect of special creationists who believe in special divine direction of the affairs of mankind. It is the business of the Christian Church not more than of the Jewish Church to see to it that the State is dominated by ethical principles, by morality, righteousness, justice and mercy; and it can do this best by following the example of Christ and Paul, not that of Constantine."

The Essence of Religious Despotism.

"Sabbath Recorder," March 29.

THE essence of religious despotism lies in the claim that individual opinions and actions different from those of the despot, must be suppressed, or expressed privately and under such limitations as the despot may impose. The principle is the same, whether the despot be one individual or the concentrated and dominant "public opinion" of the majority. Public opinion is often the most cruel of despotic powers.

All Sunday laws contain the essence of this despotism, even though the theological theories concerning the Sabbath question logically forbid the existence or execution of such laws; for example: it is loudly asserted that God's law asks only the "observance of one day in seven, as individuals may choose." Sunday law adds: "But individual choice must be compelled by the will of the majority to regard one specific day which custom and law unite to designate."

To escape the charge of inconsistency and intolerance, it is added: "The law does not compel men to be religious on Sunday." Certainly not, because it cannot. But it does compel the cessation of labor and business, which is an act of deference to religion, and the only expression of the religious idea which the law can reach. The despotism of public opinion goes as far as it can toward compelling a religious regard for Sunday. When the world was a little more ignorant and religious, majorities were more intolerant, the law compelled attendance at church as well.

Posing as Christian.

BY A. SMITH.

THE nations of the earth are usually represented in the Bible by wild beasts. This custom is not uncommon among the nations themselves. As examples, England is symbolized by a lion, Russia by a bear, etc., the United States being symbolized by an eagle.

In the Bible different symbols are sometimes used to represent the same governments, thus, in Dan. 7:5 Medo Persia is symbolized by a bear, but in 8:3 by a ram. The obvious reason is that no one symbol could express all the leading characteristics of the nations represented. This is true also of the United States. In the Bible this Government is emblemized by a two-horned beast, in profession lamblike, but in legislation, in some respects, dragonic.

It is doubtless well known to the reader that National Reformers, so called, have been seeking, especially since 1863, to so change the Constitution of this Government, or otherwise, as to compel the nation to pose as Christian. They have in part accomplished their purpose except as to changing the Constitution, and the result has been to compel as it were, the two-horned beast to stand upright upon his hind feet and say, "I am a Christian," or to force the "Eagle" to scream, "I am a dove." No given Congress of the United States has yet given evidence of being unduly pious, and should such a desideratum be realized the very next Congress might wofully backslide. Evidently National Reformers have a hard task on their hands to keep the poor doggy standing.

A Good Reply.

THE recent action of the ministers of Cleveland, Ohio, in the direction of suppressing Sunday base ball in that city by law, drew from a lady resident the following reply, which the said ministers might ponder with profit:—

"EDITOR Press: The advocates of all Sunday laws pose as friends of law and order, and assert that all they want is obedience to the law. The clergy have no more to do with the ethics of law than any other citizens.

"They are employed to promulgate the religious dogmas of their respective organizations, and have no right to enforce their ideas of morality upon the base ball team or any one else.

"The observance of Sunday is an act of worship, and what is not of faith is sin. Hence, to compel the base ball team to observe Sunday, according to the conscience of the self-appointed religious committee, would be compelling them to sin. It is self-evident that if the ball players had any regard for Sunday they would observe the day without compulsion.

"What would the attitude of the clergy be should the base ball teams send a committee to command them not to preach on Sunday. But they will say, We have a law forbidding base ball on Sunday, and the law must be enforced. So they said when Jesus was on earth: 'We have a law and Jesus must die by that law.' Like all Sunday laws, it was made in the interest of a certain religion. Ministers were ordained to minister the gospel and not civil law.

"Judge Brown, of New York, said of Sunday laws: 'We do not believe that this gross and ridiculous interference with the private life of citizens can be justified. Where there is no disorder involved, no wrong done, no act performed that is of itself evil, such proceeding is not within the sphere of acts that can be justly regulated by law.'

Mrs. S. G. WOOD."

WHEN our churches shall unite to make the [Sabbath] day "a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable," we shall have a Lord's day which will be significant. Otherwise, never.—A. L. Frisbie, D. D.

News, Notes, and Comment.

A DISTINGUISHED prelate recently lectured in a neighboring city on the Cretan difficulty. Needless to say, he handled his subject altogether from a sectarian standpoint. Among other things it is reported that he dwelt with eloquent and impressive emphasis on the story of "the famous banner carried by the Bishop of Pelos, which led the Greeks to victory in 1821, and which is now being carried by the noble army of Christians who are advancing on Thessaly against Turkey." It is added that "a picture of the banner, with its Greek inscription created an outburst of enthusiasm." This makes very interesting reading in the nineteenth century of "Christian" civilization. When we bear in mind that the purpose of the "advance" made by this "noble army" was to despoil a neighboring country of its territory, and that the "noble army" counts on accomplishing its aim not by square fighting or its own valor, but through extorting support from some stronger power than its own government as the result of international jealousies which its action will arouse—when we remember that such conduct, prompted by such motives, is undertaken in the name of Christianity, we may well wonder what the inscription may be which appears on that "famous banner," and "aroused enthusiasm" in a Christian assembly.

Is it, perchance: "Whatsoever ye will that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them"? Is it "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you"? Or, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"? Or, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance"? Or, "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another"? Or is it possible that the "famous banner" that once led the Greeks to victory and was borne by a "Christian" bishop and is now again in the field had upon it another inscription; and was the enthusiasm of the lecturer's audience aroused by reading the Greek equivalent of these English words: "Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword"?

WELL, well! Since the pagan Constantine "converted," and the "Christian" clergy "went into politics," the same old story has been told over and over again, as this learned lecturer told it. In buildings called "churches," built and kept by the State, men called "clergymen," employed and paid by the State as adjuncts of its police, have, from time to time, as their superiors commanded, blessed banners that were to be carried at the head of regiments, in order to subserve the same purpose for which soldiers are sometimes given infusions of gunpowder and tobacco in whisky—namely, to excite them to a nervous frenzy, so as to make them at once indifferent to their own safety, and ravenous for the life-blood of their antagonists. The first "famous banner" of this sort to be upraised in the name of Christianity was made and sent upon its wicked mission by this same pagan, Constantine, after he and the bishops of his time had consummated the first union of the State with the "Christian" Church. It was called "the labarum." It is upon record that Constantine's soldiers fought harder, killed and wounded more men, and attacked with more recklessness after they got that banner than they did before; and thus was the Prince of Peace obeyed and served by the National Church militant, even as he is to-day.

AND, so, if war eventuate between Greece and Turkey, and the news shall be wired to Athens that the Turks have sustained a great defeat, and thousands of them have been killed, and thousands more of them cruelly maimed for life, the Greek churches will be thrown open, and the priests therein will sing "Te Deum"s in their joy. Te Deum, laudamus for battle and murder and sudden death! Te Deum, laudamus for desolated fields, destroyed cities, ruined homes, and robbery, rape and rapine! Te Deum, laudamus for slaughtered and mutilated men, for widowed and outraged women, for orphaned children, wandering far and wide!

THE Greeks ought to have a "National Christian Hymn" to supplement the work of their National Christian Banner, in the spreading of Christianity and the gospel among those unbelieving Turks. The poem from which the following stanzas are taken would fill the bill admirably. It was written years ago and dedicated to to "the war clergy" of another country far away from theirs:—

"O God of battles! Once again,
With banner, trumpet and drum,
And garments in Thy wine-press dyed,
To give thee thanks we come!

Teach us to hate, and so to fight,
To rob, to maim, to slay,
And when the last red drop is shed,
We'll kneel again—and pray!"

A VACANCY has occurred in the Canadian Parliament, and in due course a "writ" was issued to authorize a new election, in order that it might be filled. A dispatch informs us that the government has been requested to withdraw the writ and inform the Parliament that this action has been taken because a free election is impossible in the city of Quebec, which is a part of the district or province at present without a representative. The reason given for this request and statement is that the Roman Catholic bishop of that diocese, Monsignor Lafleche, is likely to exceed his colleague, Bishop Blais, of Bonaventure, in the exercise of his spiritual influence over the voters. It is a little difficult to understand how this could be done, even with the utmost zeal on the part of the good bishop first named. In these days the Inquisition is not available; and it seems that the last extremity of terror now at the command of the Church is that which she awakens by the threat of excommunication. Inasmuch as Bishop Blais has explicitly announced that he will excommunicate every person who votes contrary to his instructions, it seems that he has about exhausted the resources of his communion as a factor in politics, and all that Bishop Lafleche can do is to prove an honorable second in the premises.

THE political activity of the Canadian clergy is largely the fruit of indulgence, although, as already stated, it originates in the position of extraordinary strength and serenity guaranteed to the Roman Catholic Church by the treaty of cession from France to England. The latter country, as that acute observer, "Max O'Rell," has pointed out, uses the Catholic Church to save it expense in keeping order. The emoluments are preserved, and the price of them is paid regularly. If a robbery is committed, no secrets of the confessional are betrayed, but the self-accused sinner is urged, if not commanded, to give himself up and make restitution. If a young man is too dilatory in his courtship, the "father" orders him either to marry the girl or make way for another less timid or sluggish. And so on. Of course, the English government is doing a serious injustice to its Canadian subjects when it takes their money from them in the form of taxes and then uses a portion of what is thus collected to pay certain men for keeping them in the spiritual slavery which these conditions manifest. It is not at all surprising that a ruling power which thus violates the fundamental principles of justice and true political economy should find itself in danger of losing a valuable territory altogether as a result of its policy. Strong in their treaty-rights, encouraged by the connivance of the ruling power at their encroachments on individual rights and freedom, the priests are ever alert, keen and aggressive in the political life of British America.

"RIEL's rebellion," which at one time threatened to sever Manitoba from the Empire, was caused by clerical intermeddling with the civil administration of that province, carried to an extreme that was fairly unbearable. Riel's rebellion was suppressed with some difficulty and bloodshed. It failed mainly because the oppressed people were at heart attached to the mother country and could not be dissuaded from their reliance on her general fairness, and their confidence that, sooner or later, she would, of her free will, remedy their heavy grievances. To some extent their hopes were justified by the event; but quite recently, the "fine Italian hand" of the Church has been deeply inserted in the coffers of the Manitoba school fund, and the agitation over this proceeding was intense at the last Parliamentary election, spreading, indeed, all over Canada, and shaking the Houses of Parliament at London. It appears that the Church won a substantial victory on that occasion, and we are informed that the settlement finally reached has greatly encouraged the bishops elsewhere in their work of "bossing the job" of the people at the polls. Canada is the country which some people would like to see annexed to the United States.

APROPOS of annexation, I am reminded of a little episode. A certain New York daily was honestly and fairly conducted, in the true interests of the people, for many years. It made mistakes sometimes, like all papers and all men. But it had such a hold on public confidence that it was always credited with doing so honestly, by those whom it failed to mislead. It was a morning daily. There came a time when its proprietors desired to print an evening edition. In order to do this, they borrowed a large sum of money from a certain estate whose interests were inextricably entangled with those of our "Pacific railways." It is not too much to say that this ended the usefulness of the journal as a servitor of the people's welfare. Among other things in which it betrayed their interests and sought to bring trouble into the already too much troubled politics of the United States, was its strenuous advocacy of Canadian annexation. This it urged, because those to whom its soul, as well as body, was apparently mortgaged, had a formidable competitor in the Canadian Pacific line, and they looked upon annexation as a prelude to their getting control of that road, and "consolidating" it under the same management as their own, and thus depriving people of the benefits of competition between the two.

IN the course of its performance of the work assigned to it by its masters, this journal was called upon to deal with the question of a united Church and State. The treaty rights, and the resultant position of the Roman Catholic Church in several provinces, were pointed out by some authorities in Canada as insuperable obstacles in the way of an organic union with our country—"for," said they, "you cannot have an established church in the United States." Hastily the paper in question flew to the rescue. It assured the Canadians that they could come into our union with their church in each province established, because the Federal Constitution prohibited only a Federal church, and left the States free to unite themselves individually with any church, in the work of government! This is true. But what are we to think of a paper capable of thus pointing out an unfortunate omission in our fundamental law and inviting people to join our union whose institutions are utterly incompatible with the spirit of our American system—and all for the sake of "wrecking" a railroad?

OR late years there has been a noticeable tendency to carp at the Christian Bible. The authorship of its various books; the authenticity of its historical accounts; the question of how far each part is entitled to the adjetive "inspired;" the character, as allegorical or otherwise, of many statements; etc., etc.—all of these matters and many like them have been and are still being threshed over in a spirit of decidedly hostile criticism by many writers.

THE latest conspicuous clerical attempt to weaken the Bible has been made by "Rev." Lyman Abbott, who occupies the pulpit formerly filled by the famous Henry Ward Beecher. Mr. Abbott has officially stated that he does not believe the narrative of Jonah and the whale. There was no particular reason, apparent on the surface, why Mr. Lyman Abbott should have chosen a certain occasion to disavow belief in this story. As far as known he had not been asked by anybody whether he believed it or not. Certainly there were plenty more things in the Bible about which a man of his intelligence might have talked in the pulpit besides Jonah and his adventure. It is hardly conceivable that the reverend gentleman had exhausted all other texts, or his ability to deal with them to the edification of his hearers. Why Jonah and the whale just now?

THERE is an answer to this question which is plausible enough to consider, if it be not very creditable to the gentleman in question. It is a fact that among the numerous evils which the cheapness of publication and the development of sensational journalism have brought upon mankind, the cultivation of a morbid craving after notoriety is one of the worst. The desire to have one's name known—to be talked about—of course existed and played its part in human action from the beginning. But before the printing press came this desire could not have more than a comparatively limited gratification. At present, if one does anything curious or remarkable, or out of the way, next morning millions of men will be eagerly discussing the affair in all its phases, and thousands will avail themselves of the first opportunity to see—and, if he is a preacher, to hear—the man who, under other conditions, would neither know nor care anything whatever about him.

THE human mind is so constituted that nothing seems to it more curious and remarkable than to find a man discrediting his own calling. If a very prominent allopathic physician, for example, were to suddenly "come out" in an "interview" repudiating all the standard works of his profession, denying their statements, denouncing their theories, condemning their advice, and yet continue to practice according to his chosen system, people would certainly like to read all about it, and he would be covered with cheap "glory" of the modern newspaper sort. It is just the same way with a preacher who repudiates the Bible or impeaches its authority, and still goes on preaching. Every one recognizes this as a remarkable phenomenon in the world of mind. The man's words acquire an importance that is largely factitious, the dailies print them with flaming head-lines, and the free advertising thus obtained is nearly co-extensive with civilization.

OUR friend "Bob Ingersoll" goes around the country lecturing on "Why I Am An Agnostic." But the good-natured colonel labors under an hallucination when he imagines that very many persons care a particle to learn why he is an agnostic. There are plenty of agnostics outside the churches, and, for that matter, such may be found, occasionally, in some pews of a Sunday. No doubt all of them have reasons sufficient to themselves for being agnostics. An agnostic outside of the church is not sufficiently rare to be interesting. Even an agnostic in his pew on Sunday may be explainable. But an agnostic in a Christian pulpit is indeed a great curiosity and mystery.

POSSIBLY it was a mere coincidence. But very soon after the "Associated Press" and the "United Press" had flashed to San Francisco and Europe the information that the Rev. Lyman Abbott did not believe the story of Jonah and the whale and was anxious for us all to know it, the Rev. Lyman Abbott went forth to lecture. A man of his position would probably draw a fair audience if he appeared under competent auspices, in a large city, purely on his merits. But, coming as he did to a southern town, in the character of an independent Bible critic, who had just been preaching Ingersollism in his own church, he commanded at least ten times as much attention as he could possibly have gotten had he arrived unheralded save by the paid announcements of his proposed lectures in the advertising columns of the newspapers.

THE reverend gentleman said nothing new in the course of his lectures, and did not, according to the dispatches, put the old truths of life and death and sin and suffering and redemption in any specially forcible or striking way. Only one remark seems to call for notice. It is reported that he proclaimed it to be the duty of government to find out what is the will of God, and to enact that will into laws! This is the political philosophy at present accepted by a class of profound thinkers out in the grand old State of Kansas, and they are now trying their very best to apply their theories to the work of practical legislation. The first step in this direction has been the introduction of a bill whereby it is "enacted by the legislature of Kansas: Thou shalt have no other gods before me"! and so on, through the rest of the Decalogue.

THE Rev. Lyman Abbott would admit at once the absurdity if not the blasphemy of such a legislative act as this, were it brought to his attention. Yet it is nothing but a sincere effort to do just what he says ought to be done—to “enact the will of God into laws.” Nobody doubts that Mr. Walters, who introduced this bill, and declares that he did so in all seriousness, and desires to see it passed—no one doubts the verity of his belief that the Decalogue is “the will of God;” and so his performance is directly in accordance with Mr. Lyman Abbott’s advice. The fact is, the learned clergyman gave this recommendation under the dominating influence of that old notion that law, somehow or other, is connected with morality. Blackstone blundered in precisely the same way—but that is another story, and will do for next week.

other, and for discussing and deciding upon the political operations to be undertaken during the ensuing year.” Certain Indian gentlemen consented to act as a reception committee. Near the time for the conference to meet the cholera broke out at Poona and the place of meeting was transferred to Bombay. The actual number of representatives present was seventy-two.

Of that meeting an Indian writer said: “In the history of a nation there is always a day which is marked above all the rest, which sows the first seeds of progress, and which lays the foundation of all future greatness. Such was the day when the patriotic barons of England assembled on the little island of Runnymede to induce their king to sign their great charter of freedom. Such

GROUP FROM THE INDIAN CONGRESS, CALCUTTA, INDIA.

The Indian Congress.

[From our Calcutta Correspondent.]

IN March, 1885, one year before the AMERICAN SENTINEL began its career, it was decided to hold a conference of representatives from all parts of India at Poona during the Christmas holidays. The object of this conference was “to enable earnest laborers in the cause of national progress to become personally known to each was the day when the American patriots sat in the assembly of delegates, and vowed to die for the independence of their country; and such was the day when seventy-two Indian patriots first assembled in Gowalia Tank House to promote the good of their common country. This union of Indian people after ages of separation and ill-feeling was a great historical event.”

At a preliminary meeting of the reception committee the name of the conference was changed to congress

The gathering this year, which I was privileged to attend, was the twelfth annual session, and was held in Calcutta. The actual number of representatives from all parts of India holding certificates was 703. Besides these, hundreds from the country were daily in attendance. An immense pavilion over two hundred feet long by one hundred wide was erected in Beadon square, in which the meetings were held. This pavillion was packed full, and to show something of the enthusiasm among the people, I may say that after the first day when tickets of admission were one rupee each, they were sold to all who could get in at five rupees (about $1.50) each.

The congress has already secured considerable warm sympathy and support from Englishmen of influence. A glance at the resolutions gives an idea of the object of the congress, and I refer to them here not to discuss the political situation in India, but to show the agencies which are in training and the danger that this vigorous body of intelligent and educated Indians stand in of being captured by the religio-political movement already at work in this country.

The congress appeals to the Indian government and also to the Imperial government through a British committee which it has in the House of Commons for, (a) Separation of Judicial and Executive Functions. They say as matters now stand the chief magistrate is often the judge as well as the head of other governmental departments. (b) Provincial Finance. This is designed to prevent extraordinary expenses being thrown onto the country in the creation of which it had no voice. (c) Public Service Examinations. They demand that these shall be held, not in England alone as at present, but in this country at the same time. (d) A recasting of the Educational Service. (e) Extension of Trial by Jury. (f) Abatement of the Salt Tax. Many of the speeches made on these questions were decidedly eloquent.

At the close of the congress, the Indian Social Reform Congress, which is really an adjunct of the one already mentioned, held a meeting. The gathering was not so large, because many Hindoos are opposed, as yet, to the discussion of the questions usually before it, but it is growing in influence year by year. The topics under consideration were: Evil of Child Marriage; Remarriage of Widows; Education of Women; The Curtailing of Extravagant Expenses at Marriages; The Encouraging of Foreign Travel; and an appeal for a law for the better control of religious endowments.

I will not take the time here to speak of this matter of religious endowments; suffice it to say that if the petitioners get the law they are asking for it will be pretty sure to result in a lot of mischief in this country. In 1858, the Queen's Proclamation which referred especially to this country, said, "And we do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under us, that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of our subjects, on pain of our highest displeasure." Since then the government has generally avoided religious questions. But at the present time it is being fairly besieged by the Christian element for a law in behalf of Sunday observance. Up to the present time the government has refused to listen. Of course the so-called Christian population of India is but the merest fraction of the whole, say two millions out of nearly three hundred millions.

Now let the Hindoos themselves demand and secure a law upon a religious question—their demand for the present is refused—but let them get it and then the precedent is established, the way is open for making other laws on religious questions; and then the Sunday movement will the more easily find its way to power in this country, and it will be no marvel to see a bargain struck between Hindoo and Christian over the two questions.

The Lord's Day Union for India, now in its fourth year, in one of its publications, says:—

"Great Victory in America. A great object lesson has just been afforded by the battle at the World's Fair in Chicago. That city is largely dominated by foreigners, and a desperate attempt has been made to keep the Fair going on Sunday. But we now learn that this attempt has failed. Two great opposing petitions were sent to the Directory of the World's Exposition. Eighty thousand persons asked that the gates should be open; but no less than twenty-five millions demanded that they should be shut. The number were: for Sunday opening, 87,507 against 25,825,086. This clearly shows that the American people are still of the same mind as one of their judges who wrote a defense of Sabbath laws, in which he said: 'The Anglo-Saxon race is marching on as an army with banners, and far advanced among them is the banner upon which is engraved, REMEMBER THE SABBATH DAY TO KEEP IT HOLY.' The peoples of Asia should know that there are the deepest reasons for this custom of Sunday observance, which is one of the most characteristic features of the new civilization now overspreading their ancient continent. The most progressive portions of Europe and America are precisely those where Sunday is most revered. Asia will make little progress till she too has a Sabbath rest."

This same publication referred to, again delivers itself thus:—

"But why should the call of the church bells be ignored and the voice of religion disregarded? Men may affect to think they can make what laws they choose for the employment of their time, but the fact remains that God has claimed the day for His service. The first, the most binding, and the most powerful argument for the Sunday rest is that it is commanded by the authority of our Maker himself. Thus runs the fourth commandment of the Decalogue: 'Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.' Ex. 20:8-11. This is the law of God, and the man that breaks it brings himself under the sweep of an inevitable retribution. It has been well described as the earliest law against vagrancy; against cruelty to animals; in favor of aliens; in favor of working men. A curse will cleave to every man who uses his influence to oppose this divine enactment."

But what has all this to do with Sunday rest? Who can tell us what is the method of logic which makes the fourth commandment "the first, the most binding, and the most powerful argument for the Sunday rest"? The fourth commandment in the most definite terms declares that the seventh day is the Sabbath, while everybody knows that Sunday is the first day of the week.

Notes from Canada.

[By Our Toronto Correspondent.]

SEVERAL occurrences having a bearing on the subject of religious liberty have transpired quite recently in the Dominion of Canada. The first event to which we will call attention is the coming of the papal ablegate, Mgr. Raphael Mery Del Val, who comes to this country ostensibly for the purpose of securing a settlement of the Manitoba School question more favorable to the Catholic minority. The arrival of the distinguished visitor in the city of Montreal was made the occasion of quite a display. The following announcement was issued at the Archbishop's palace:—

"His Excellency Mgr. Raphael Mery Del Val, apostolic delegate for Canada, will arrive at Montreal, Dalhousie-square, Thursday evening, at 7.55, by the Canadian Pacific train coming from Quebec.

"On this occasion, the priests of the city and neighboring parishes are requested to have the church bells rung from 8 to 8:30 o'clock, P. M. All the clergy and the faithful of the diocese are specially invited to the official reception which will take place at the Metropolitan Church immediately after the arrival of his excellency.

"By order of the vicar capitular,

"ALFRED ARCHAMBAULT,
"Canon, Chancellor."

In a speech in the Dominion House of Commons on the settlement of the School Question and the mission to the Pope concerning it, Mr. W. F. McLean said, as reported in his paper, the Toronto World, of April 1:—

"I am glad to see that the Prime Minister accepts the responsibility of the settlement which has been made. The Liberals as a party accept the responsibility of the settlement, and, speaking of parliamentary responsibility, I come to another point.

"I say that the Government and their party must take full responsibility for that mission to Rome. They cannot escape that responsibility. They have said that it is on behalf of their party that they went there, and, seeing that we are governed by the principle of Parliamentary responsibility, they must accept that responsibility before the people. They say that they went to Rome to vindicate the civil liberties of the people of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, while I sympathize with them in their efforts to conserve their political liberties, I do not agree with them in the authority to which they went to protect those liberties. It is not in St. Peter's, it is not in the Vatican, it is not in the Seven Hills of Rome that the political, the civil liberties of British citizens are conserved. If there is a temple sacred to British liberty, if there is a place where our rights are to be protected, that temple is within these walls of Parliament. The shrine of our liberties is on the floor of the House, and we, the members of the House, are the sacristans of that temple; we are the priests, the ministers at this shrine; we, worthy or unworthy as we may be, are the men who must protect the civil liberties of the people.

"What will happen to gentlemen on the other side of the House if it turns out that the ablegate now in this country does not come to their relief and does not pronounce in their favor and guarantee their civil liberties, which they now profess they seek to protect? They will have to come down here to defend and protect these liberties if they are assailed.

"I must take objection to the statement of the Solicitor-General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) last night in the comparison he made between His Holiness and Her Gracious Majesty. We who are Canadians say that there is no one but Her Majesty to appeal to in the protection of the civil liberties of British subjects the world over. She is the guardian of our civil liberties, not His Holiness of Rome. . . . When we read the history of the unification of Italy, when we recall the names of Garibaldi and Mazzini, and the other heroes of that struggle, he is not the man whose name should be quoted by the Liberal party in the vindication of the liberties of the people of this country."

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

THE "SUCCESS" NASAL SYRINGE

Of the thousand and one remedies that have been used in the treatment of that very common and horrible disease, nasal catarrh and other nasal affections, none have been wholly successful. The main reason is that the remedy has not reached the diseased parts.

The douche and atomizer have been used to force the medicine through, hit or miss—generally miss—and thus the rough honeycomb-like, burrowed tissues were allowed to retain the irritating, poisonous matter, while the disease progressed from bad to worse. The physician was abused and the medicine declared worthless.

By the use of the "Success" Syringe the medicine is applied without danger or irritation, directly to the disease. Every little cavity, nook and corner can be reached and all foul matter washed away and the disease speedily cured. The tube being soft and pliable there can be no danger as from hard instruments.

WE have formerly called attention to monarchical ideas that have become somewhat prevalent in this Republic of the United States.

As a faithful sentinel we are obliged to do this again, for the thing continues to crop out.

Not long ago an association of women, sending a communication to President McKinley, addressed him as "honored ruler." And this is not the first instance, by a long way, in which this term has been used with reference to the President of the United States.

But the principle of the Government of the United States is a "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people." The national charter of government begins, "We, the people . . . do ordain and establish this Constitution." Thus the people are the only rightful rulers in the United States.

According to this principle the President of the United States is the presiding officer of the people in the organization which they have formed by which they make themselves secure in the rights which they possess and according to which they govern themselves. He administers the will of the people in their rulership. He gives his oath to the people that he will faithfully perform their formally expressed will. So that the people are his rulers, and not he their ruler, according to the vital principles of the national government as established. Therefore the President of the United States is not in any right sense a ruler.

Now we are not saying that President McKinley holds the view that he is the ruler of the people of the United States. We are not saying that he accepted this phrase that those women used in addressing him. We are perfectly satisfied that President McKinley understands himself, and the people, and the Government of the United States, better than that. We are satisfied that he understands these things well enough to be disgusted rather than pleased with such suggestive effusiveness. We fully exonerate President McKinley from entertaining any such suggestion of monarchism. But it is impossible to exonerate from monarchical suggestion those who thus addressed him; and this more especially as it is only one of a number of like offenses from such source.

Yet this is only one phase of the thing. The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times-Herald is filled with it. His account of the late inauguration ceremonies was interlarded with monarchical terms. He actually went so far as to refer to the presidential seat as "the throne." With him the Secretary of State is "Premier." The other Secretaries are "Ministers." The House of Representatives is "the Commons."

If the presidential seat is "the throne," what is the rank of him who occupies the seat? It is only kings who occupy thrones. Thrones are associated only with monarchs.

As for the mere naked word "Premier," it means, of course, only "first in rank or position." But politically it conveys more meaning than that. Of course it is "English, you know;" and it is evident that that is one of the reasons why it is used in the United States. But England is a monarchy; and when these English political terms are used by a writer in the United States, it reveals the taint of monarchism.

Politically, the Premier is "the responsible head of the cabinet." But in the government of the United States the Secretary of State is not "the responsible head of the cabinet." The President of the United States is the head of the cabinet, and he is the only "responsible head of the cabinet."

Again, the Premier is "Prime Minister;" and if the Secretary of State of the United States is "Prime Minister," then, of course, all the other Secretaries become Ministers.

And, again, the Premier is "the representative of the country or of a party;" but in the government of the United States the Secretary of State is not in any sense the representative of the country, nor of the party even to which he belongs.

As "the representative of the country or of a party," the Premier has "a representative will." But the Secretary of State of the United States has no representative will.

These ideas comport only with the political methods of a constitutional monarchy as in England. And when used by anyone in speaking of English politics, all these terms are strictly proper, for they mean something. But when an attempt is made to use these terms with reference to American politics, with reference to the governmental system of the United States, such terms are absolutely meaningless; unless he who uses them entertains the monarchical idea to such an extent that he would have this Government transformed to the extent that the terms should mean here just what their proper political meaning is.

And, in the late administration, wasn't the country given a taste of this view of American premiership? Didn't the Secretary of State of the late administration entertain just this idea of his position? Didn't he consider himself "the representative of the country," having "a representative will" of his own; and didn't he, in behalf of his "monarch," serve notice upon the legislative branch of the Government of the United States that their will, even if expressed in law, would be disregarded unless it conformed to his will? And if this idea could have been carried out to its logical extent, and there had come a crisis between the legislative will and this "Premier" will, what could have been done but to "dissolve the Parliament" and appeal to the country for a decision as to whether this "Premier" was really "the representative of the country" or not.

But every one will say, No such thing as that could ever be. True enough; and therefore it is perfectly plain that in American institutions there is no place for a Premier, and in the bright lexicon of American ideas there is no such word as "Premier."

If the House of Representatives in Congress is "the Commons," then what is the Senate? This correspondent has not yet expressed that in words, as also he has not yet expressed in words the rank of him who occupies "the throne." But if the House of Representatives is "the Commons," there is no escaping the implication that the Senate is "the Lords;" for where there are Commons, in the nature of things there must be Lords; just as in the nature of things where there is a throne there must be a monarch, and where there is a Prime Minister there must be other Ministers, and where there is a Premier he is "the representative of the country."

It will no doubt be said by many that this correspondent did not mean all this in the terms that he used. Well, if he does not mean what the terms mean which he uses, why, then, does he use the terms? Will any say that terms which are freighted with meaning, are used by an intelligent writer in a way that is meaningless? If, with this writer, those terms have not the meaning that belongs to them, then why does he use the terms at all. In expressing himself with reference to American institutions, why does he use terms that are absolutely meaningless, upon any other hypothesis than that they reveal the presence of the monarchical ideas which the terms convey?

It is perfectly safe to say that both the present President and Secretary of State are men of too much sense, and understand American principles too well, to be pleased with the application to themselves of any of these terms. But this is no surety at all that all the men who may ever be called to occupy those positions will be men of such good sense. Let these terms, used too frequently already, become a little more frequent, and it will not be long until men occupying those positions will respond to the ideas thus expressed. Indeed, as already stated, the country has had an inkling of this, and only very lately. Men cannot make themselves monarchs unless there are persons who want a monarch. There never would have been a Pope if there had not been people who wanted a Pope.

Let the people of the United States, who alone are the government, and the rulers, of the United States, see to it that all monarchical terms and ideas shall be resented and kept absolutely under the ban. This the people of the United States owe to themselves, and to all mankind, in order that as long as possible "government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

A Right of the People, Too.

THE Supreme Court of the United States, by a majority of one, lately rendered a decision which destroys the pooling of issues amongst railroads "in restraint of trade." The case that was thus decided came up from the West. At the same time there was on the docket of the Supreme Court a case from the East, in which the same principle is involved. Now it is determined to push this second case with the "hope that some one of the justices may change his view when the Joint Traffic case is heard."

So then the lawyers employed upon this Eastern case are to enter upon a course of argument and persuasion, to get some one of the five justices, who made the other decision, to change his mind; and thus kill that decision and carry the Court the other way. We have not yet seen any statement from any source that this procedure is in any wise revolutionary or anarchistic.

About two years ago, the Supreme Court, by a majority of one, rendered a decision on the question of an income tax. One of the political parties in the campaign last year proposed to have one or more of the justices of the Court change his mind upon that; and proposed to present arguments and persuasions that would in some way bring this about. By leading men in the other party this was denounced as revolutionary and anarchistic.

But how can it be any more revolutionary or anarchistic for the people generally to present arguments and persuasions to induce a Supreme Court Justice to change his mind than it is for some lawyers to do it? Is it absolutely conservative and legal for a number of lawyers to do it, while revolutionary and anarchistic for the people to do it?

And if these lawyers shall succeed in getting one of the justices to change his mind, and so reverse the other decision and commit the United States Government to a directly opposite course from that to which the decision already rendered commits it; and if such a thing is to be accepted by the country as strictly proper, legal, governmental, and conservative;—wherein, then, was there anything else involved in the course of those who last year proposed to have a decision of the Supreme Court reversed and the Government committed to an opposite course with respect to the question of an income tax?

We call attention to this matter now solely to emphasize the point that as a matter of fact, in the practical workings of things, the position which the SENTINEL holds, and has always held, is recognized: that is, that a decision of the Supreme Court is always subject to reversal; and that there is nothing revolutionary or anarchistic in endeavoring to secure a reversal of a Supreme Court decision.

And our contention is, further, that the people of the United States have just as much right to discuss any of these questions and to secure a reversal of a Supreme Court decision as any set of lawyers have. It is no more just to charge as revolutionary and anarchistic any of the people who try to do this, than it would be to charge the lawyers now employed in this railroad case with revolution and anarchy in their "hope that some one of the justices may change his view."

The people of the United States, on their own part, in their own behalf, are just as much concerned in the principles of the Government of the United States as the lawyers are; and they have all the rights that the lawyers have; for who are the lawyers but some of the people? And cannot a lawyer, as one of the people, in a political campaign endeavor to get the Supreme Court to change its mind and reverse a decision, with just as much right as he can as a lawyer in the Chamber of the Supreme Court endeavor to get the Court to change its mind and reverse its decision?

The sum of the whole matter is, that the American principle—the principle held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln, the principle always advocated by the AMERICAN SENTINEL—that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are subject to review and discussion and reversal if possible, by the people of the United States, is absolutely sound, and is vital to government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

A Doleful "Gospel."

IN the endeavor to establish "civic righteousness," upon which the religious effort of this day seems to be centering, the Church has addressed herself to a doleful task. It is a doleful "gospel" which she is obliged to preach as its accompaniment.

For example, there appears in the Christian Statesman each week a column on "Christian Endeavor in Christian Citizenship," conducted by Rev. Chas. Roads, of Philadelphia. This column is filled with accounts of the corruption that exists in certain classes of society and in the sphere of municipal government, and which must be remedied by "Christian Citizenship" methods. In the Statesman of April 3, Mr. Roads dwells upon the evidence of this corruption which was afforded at the granting of licences for saloons by the license court. The plane of morality upon which the judges of the court stood was sadly low. They were "familiar with the slang of the bar-room," and used it for the amusement of the audience. They granted licenses to saloon proprietors in the face of "most damaging evidence" of their bad character, given by himself and the secretary of the Law and Order League. They condoned flagrant violations of the license law because they were committed on "election night," or "football night," etc.

Previous articles by the same writer have described the flagrant criminality which could be seen on the streets after dark in the neighborhood of saloons and elsewhere, and which the police knew all about, but seemingly made no effort to suppress.

This is the familiar story which one reads to-day in "Christian Citizenship" literature, or hears from the pulpit of the would-be reformer, in our large cities. There is corruption everywhere, and plenty of evidence of the same which forces itself upon the attention of even the casual observer. Our great cities are "run" by corrupt "rings" or political organizations or political "bosses." New York City, for example, is largely subject to the unrighteous sway of "Tammany Hall;" and both city and State are, in matters of general government, under the Philistine dominance of "boss Platt." In other cities and States the situation is much the same. And all this must be remedied before "civic righteousness" can be established.

Many efforts in this direction have been made, and are being made, but with unsatisfactory results. A few years ago, the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, with others, undertook the overthrow of "Tammany" and the suppression of municipal corruption in New York City. They stirred the people of the city and engineered an election which "turned the rascals out" in many cases, so that it seemed for a time that the effort was really successful. But the "rascals" who were turned out drifted back, or those who filled their places became like them, and to-day municipal righteousness is as far away as ever.

The Church, however, is preaching that this "right eousness" must come; and the "Christian Citizenship" and kindred movements are the agencies by which it is to be brought in. The "gospel" of civic and political "righteousness" looks forward to the time when all the political offices will be filled by Christians, and righteousness be enforced by faithful men in all departments of the Government. It looks forward to an enthronement of Christ "on Capitol hill," the seat of national authority. It predicts that these things will be realized soon. But meanwhile it is forced to dwell upon the doleful realities which fill the field of vision in the place of its cherished dream.

And these realities must continue, and become more and more doleful, as long as this "gospel" continues to be preached. For not only is there no power in it to make the world one whit better than it is, but as the Church descends into the arena of politics to work out this plan for regenerating society, she must open the door to that corruption which dwells in politics, and thus part with her own moral power to elevate mankind. Politics is the congenial sphere of the hypocrite and the unscrupulous server of self; and when the Church incorporates politics into her own sphere of operation, she must take in the elements which are characteristic of political life. By espousing political methods, she offers an inducement to ambitious self-servers to join themselves to her in hypocritical union. She opens her doors to a flood of worldliness, and puts herself in the condition of a foundering ship at sea. While the Church herself is thus becoming, as the prophetic word has it, "the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird" (Rev. 18:2), it cannot but be that in the world itself, "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3:13.

The gospel of "civic righteousness" operates by means of the ballot. If the ballot fails, the "righteousness" is lost. And what is more uncertain than the ballot? If at times something is accomplished by its agency in the direction of civic reform, the gain is certain to be but temporary. The powers of evil rally their forces, and the next election restores their lost supremacy. The people can be aroused at times to a spasmodic effort to "turn the rascals out" when corruption becomes too rampant in public affairs, but "the people" are mainly occupied with their individual interests, and constitute but sleepy sentinels around the camp of the public weal. As political reformations do not reach the heart, they can at best but remove the symptoms of the malady from which the body politic suffers. But as the disease itself remains, seated in the carnal heart, the symptoms must quickly reappear, and the situation become as bad as before.

The Church has a better gospel than all this to proclaim to the multitudes around her. She has that gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth,"—a gospel that contemplates not merely a clean administration of public affairs, but a clean heart in the individual; not the establishment of a man-made legal righteousness, but of the righteousness of Christ which is by faith; not "the enthronement of Christ on Capitol hill," and in the various seats of State and municipal government, but the reign of Christ on the throne of David in the glorious Capital of the earth made new; a gospel which operates not by the power of civil decrees, but by the power of love; which depends not upon the weak and uncertain agency of the ballot, but upon the word of Omnipotence; which comforts men not with an uncertain prospect of temporal good to come, but with that "love, joy, peace," which are the "fruits of the Spirit" now and here, in the life of every believer, and with the gift of eternal life through Jesus Christ.

Why, oh why, will the Church turn from this glorious gospel, for which all the world is dying, to preach the weak and doleful gospel of "civic righteousness"?

WOULD it not be well for the preachers, as they are about entering on the year's campaign against Sunday baseball, to hunt up the Scripture which states that Jesus Christ opposed Sunday games; or, if they think this proposition unfair, let them find the text which mentions that Christ invoked the aid of the civil authorities to compel men to observe the Sabbath. Do they not claim that Jesus Christ is their example?

This is What the "Sentinel" Advocates.

BY A. F. BALLENGER.

THE SENTINEL is sometimes misunderstood. It is continually saying, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord," is the Church able to make men better.

The SENTINEL is constantly opposing all carnal methods of making men good. It pleads for "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" in place of the law of a carnal commandment from a "Christian Citizenship" committee; the flesh and blood (the word) of the Son of God instead of the ice cream and oyster soup of the church supper; "present truth" preaching instead of progressive euchar parties; power from on high instead of power from the primaries; Pentecost instead of politics. This loyalty to apostolic methods and means is now declared by some to be opposition to Christianity.

The following bit of experience told by Rev. Geo. C. Needham, in the Golden Rule, of April 1, brings to view the fruits of the power which the SENTINEL pleads with the Church to employ in the place of all human schemes for saving men:—

"During one of my evangelistic tours in Ireland I had a very unusual experience. The place of appointment was in an Orange lodge twelve miles from the railroad station. After the long drive in a jaunting-car I found myself physically and mentally disabled. I was overworked, and did not know it until the collapse came suddenly.

"When I reached the platform and faced that packed congregation, to whom I was a perfect stranger, brain and heart gave way. I did not faint nor fall, but kept on my feet by leaning against the desk.

"After the opening hymn I said something like this: 'Dear friends, I cannot speak to you to-night. I am utterly prostrated. I cannot think. Why God permitted me to come here and be humiliated before you, I do not know. He knows, and I can trust Him. I will read a few passages from His Word, and you will go on with the meeting. I will read first what God declares about sin, and what he testifies concerning salvation. Let us expect the power of the Holy Spirit to make His Word effective.'

"With faltering voice and body trembling with weakness, I read these scriptures on sin:—

"Rom. 3:9-11. 'What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; as it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one: there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.'

"Rom. 3:19, 20. 'Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin.'

"Gal. 3:10, 11. 'For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith.'

"The following I read on salvation:—

"Rom. 5:6. 'For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.'

"Gal. 3:13. 'Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree.'

"Isa. 53:4-6. 'Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.'

"Acts 16:30, 31. 'And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.'

"John 3:16. 'For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'

"1 Tim. 1:15. 'This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.'

"After reading these magnificent texts, I sat down. A deep hush was upon us. I felt enveloped with a strange power which made me insensible to physical weariness. My soul rested in God. Jesus was very real and precious.

"There were moments of silence while a potent spell held the people. A solemn awe fell upon them which subdued every soul.

"Then suddenly a piercing scream broke the stillness, while a young lady stood up reaching both hands heavenward. 'Some one whispered, 'Water!' Another cried,

'Fresh air!' but she held them in check with the reply: 'No, no. I want Jesus.'

"Immediately a groan was heard as a strong man fell prone in the aisle, and then another, and yet another. Possibly one hundred men and women were now weeping, praying, and confessing their sins.

"A sweet calm pervaded my whole being; I was not a stranger to such manifestations of the Holy Spirit. And, leaving the people to His oversight, I slipped out by a side door.

"While walking over the field to the public road where my carriage awaited me, I heard footsteps behind me. Looking backward, I saw by the light of a full moon an elderly man on my track. He soon overtook me, and after customary salutations I inquired whether he had been at the meeting, to which he vigorously replied: 'Yes, sir, and I found it good to be there. I can truly say it was a blessed service for me.'

"Then followed this conversation:—

"'I hope you have peace with God, and that you are a saved man.'

"'Blessed be God, I can indeed say that I have peace with God through my Lord Jesus Christ. Praise be to His holy name.'

"'Glory be to His name indeed, for His great love wherewith He loved us. It is cheering to meet with fellow-travelers to the heavenly city. I suppose you have been for many years a child of God.'

"'For many years it was my hope that I would become one of God's children, but now it is more than a hope. I know whom I have believed, and can look up to-night and say, "Abba, Father." Here the old man looked towards the full-orbed moon, while the tears rolled down his furrowed cheeks.

"After a moment of silence he thus soliloquized, apparently unconscious of my presence: 'Yes, yes, bless the good Lord, I know it now! I know it! I am saved! To him be all the glory. He led me to trust in himself alone as my Saviour. I cannot deny his finished work. I do believe him when he said, "It is finished." O, my Jesus —.' The venerable man was now overcome with emotion.

"We stood in silence a few minutes, when he dried his tears, and with steady voice said: 'I will tell you all, sir. For forty years I have been clerk of the church [Episcopalian] in this parish. I believed Jesus Christ was the only Saviour for guilty sinners, and that he died to save us; yet I supposed that was not sufficient for my salvation. I must do something to save myself. I held many discussions with preachers and laymen, always arguing that very sinner must do his part, that he must try to make himself worthy, and have some merit to offer; then he could get some benefit from the Saviour. I had been erecting pillars and props for many years, out of my virtues and character, to lift my soul towards God. I read prayers and responses in the church, with, as I thought, a good heart. I harmed no man. I abstained from dissipations, and supposed myself to be a more highly moral man than our rector. My motto was, "God helps those who help themselves." During these years I was a Pharisee; I did not know that I was indeed a ruined and guilty man; a poor, deceived, religious sinner, going down to the lake of fire. But it is all clear to me now. O, sir, the words you read to-night out of the blessed Bible convicted me. That message came as a great sledge-hammer, breaking to pieces my props and pillars of many years' building, and a little while since, in yonder lodge, I dropped into the arms of the Lord Jesus just as I was. I understood, then, that a sinner is not justified by his works; that only by grace we are saved. I can see now how the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses us from all sin; that not by any merit of mine am I made meet for the kingdom. Nor do I fear the judgment day now, because he said, "Whosoever believeth in me shall not perish, but have everlasting life." My hope now,' added this young-old convert, 'is that I may be the means of leading other deluded souls to the almighty Saviour.'

If all Christians and Christian Endeavorers would preach and practice, only and always in harmony with the above experience, the AMERICAN SENTINEL would rejoice with exceeding joy.

Ballot and Bullet.—No. 2.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

AS THE question of citizenship is being discussed so generally in regard to the responsibility of its exercise and its important bearing upon the most vital issues of the day, it is well for us to look into the real elements which constitute citizenship with its obligations and duties.

Let us call a pause in the zealous rush for recognition, and ask the question, "Who is a citizen?" as to the use of the ballot, and, What is involved in this citizenship?

"Citizen. In its modern use, the term citizen is applied in Great Britain to a dweller in a town, and this either in the general sense of an inhabitant or in the narrower and stricter sense of one who enjoys its privileges and franchises. In France it denotes any one who is born in the country or naturalized in it; and in America it is used in the same sense."—Library of Universal Knowledge, Vol. 4, p. 16.

Here are defined two distinct applications of the term, and a third is intimated. First, a citizen is a resident aside from, and in the absence of, the political rights of franchise. This is the sense in which Paul used the term citizen, when it was insinuated that he was an Egyptian. He said, "I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia; a citizen of no mean city."

Secondly—The sense indicated by the expression, "born in the country or naturalized in it," is that all people born in a country are citizens by birthright; whether granted the privileges and franchises or not, and it includes all of both sexes and all classes. This idea of citizens by nativity can never be set aside even by naturalization in another country. In this sense Paul used the fact of his birthright under the Roman authority in Acts 22:25–28.

Thirdly—The sense which is much more narrow than the preceding two, as it applies only to those who exercise the right of franchise, has a political significance.

It might be well to quote again to show the origin and meaning of the term citizen in this third sense or use.

"Aristotle defines a citizen [who exercises the right of franchise which is signified by voting in this country] to be one to whom belongs the right of taking part both in the deliberative or legislative, and the judicial, proceedings of the community of which he is a member. A citizen therefore can exist only in a free state. Between a citizen and a subject there is this distinction, that whilst the latter merely is governed the former also governs; and thus, though every citizen is a subject, many subjects are not citizens.—Library of Universal Knowledge, Vol. 7, p. 16.

Here we find a plain distinction between citizen and subject. In this sense only those are citizens who exercise the right of franchise, or the right to vote and hold office. The first two senses of residence and nativity, or the place where we live and the country in which we were born, belong alike to every person who has a home or place to live. This application is well nigh universal, while the limited use of the term citizen includes only those who exercise authority to govern. After taking out those who govern all the rest are but subjects.

As the Government of the United States is by the people through their representatives, it holds that every one who exercises the right of franchise is represented in all the legitimate functions of the Government.

Therefore, as governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, the power of the government is simply the sum of the power of the several people who constitute the governing element; or those exercising the right to vote.

This power being first in the single individual and delegated to a general fund by the acceptance of the rights of franchise and by assuming all its duties and obligations, each voter must equally bear the responsibility for the acts of government.

The Folly of War.

THE man to whom God granted to be the wisest of men said, "Wisdom is better than weapons of war." Is it that there are so few wise men among the nations that they put so great trust in navies, armaments, and battalions? If in proportion to their lack of wisdom men put trust in these things, how lamentably little wisdom there must be in the world at the present time. There never was a time in which men put greater confidence in "heavy battalions" than at the present. So, when at last these forces are put in motion, those who have trusted in them most will meet with bitterest reverses. It is not given to those who are, from the human point of view, the swift and strong, to win in the final contests.—Present Truth.

"God helps the heavy battalions," is a quotation which expresses the "faith" of the world's "Christian" nations, as manifested by their works.

Religious Liberty.

BY J. F. BALLENGER.

LIBERTY is defined to be "freedom, exemption; leave; license," etc. Religious liberty is leave or license to worship or not worship God or any other object we may choose, or to worship in any manner we may choose, so far as another is concerned.

To deprive men of this liberty to worship how, when, and what he may choose has caused all the religious wars and persecutions the world has ever seen.

The ground of all this opposition on the part of the persecutor has been that in his opinion the persecuted was violating a civil law. Therefore it is of the greatest importance that we know where to draw the line between religious freedom and civil obligation.

As God is the author of both these we are sure they do not conflict with each other. Religious liberty and civil duty never encroach upon each other if kept in the spheres in which God placed them. It is only when men unite religion and the State that there can be any conflict. Keep the Church and the State separate, and there never can be persecution for conscience' sake.

But the great question and one that has perplexed the minds of statesmen and civil rulers perhaps more than any other is, To what extent can the civil authorities control men without interfering with their religious freedom?

We believe that if we lay aside all bigotry and selfish desires to interfere with other people's business, the above question may be answered so that all may understand and comprehend its import.

Let us lay down a few plain propositions.

First: God has endowed every person with certain natural rights.

Second: These natural rights are inalienable.

Third: Man's inalienable rights are not subject to the control of civil government.

We will not stop here to define all the natural rights of man. Foremost among these is the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. All will concede this truth, except the tyrant, knave, or bigot.

The right to worship God as one may elect can never be taken from him. To take away this right would be to make man an irresponsible being. To do this, one would have to assume the responsibility of another's character and conduct and answer in the judgment for his sin. This is impossible; for God has said, "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Rom. 14:12.

Neither can this right be transferred or delegated to another. The priest, the Church, or the State cannot save any individual. God will hold every person responsible for the exercise of his right to worship and thus form his own character.

As God has given every man the inalienable right to worship or not worship, if he chooses to worship Him, God alone has the right to prescribe the manner of his worship. God has never delegated to the Church or the State authority to say how an individual shall worship Him. Out of the assumption of such authority has arisen all the religious tyranny of the past. The State with the Church behind it as in pagan Rome, or the Church with the State at its back, as in papal Rome, formulated into a creed, certain religious rites and ceremonies, and then demanded obedience to the creed or the life of the offender. Rivers of blood flowed as the result.

If God has revealed to each individual His commandments and ordinances by which he shall worship Him, then each individual can obey these commandments and ordinances to the utmost of his ability without interfering in the least with the same right in every other individual.

If I, in conducting my worship, interfere in the least with another in his worship, I am not exercising my natural rights but assumed rights. And just as I infringe upon the rights of another, I am not complying with God's requirements or the conditions of salvation, but am acting upon my own, or some other man's dictation. And it is impossible for one to obey man's conditions of salvation without trampling upon the rights of another. On the other hand, when we obey God's conditions of salvation it is equally impossible to infringe upon the natural rights of another.

These last propositions may not, at first sight, appear clear to the reader. But a little reflection will enable him to see the truthfulness of these statements.

If you lay down laws and ordinances as conditions of salvation, and I worship by the use of these laws and ordinances, am I not encouraging you in the perversion of your God-given rights and aiding you in degrading those rights to purposes of self-exaltation? What greater injury can I do an individual than to put him in the place of God, by giving him the honor due alone to God? We cannot conceive of a greater injury that we could possibly do to a poor mortal than this.

It is exactly the same with governments. They are made up of individuals, and governors are only chosen to carry out the will of the people. Therefore if I acknowledge the right of the Government to make laws for the formation of religious character, am I not putting the Government in the place of God and worshiping the creature more than the Creator? and in so doing, am I not aiding and abetting the people in degrading their God-given rights to the vilest of iniquity, besides offering the greatest insult to the God of the universe? Therefore we repeat that it is impossible to worship according to man's dictums of religion without trampling upon his natural rights.

But, on the other hand, if we worship God according to the conditions He has prescribed, it is impossible to interfere in any way with the natural God-given rights of another.

News, Notes, and Comment.

MORE than half a century ago, the brilliant and philosophical French author, Mr. De Tocqueville, visited this country, and the result of his investigations was a profound and learned work on "Democracy in America." In this book, Mr. De Tocqueville more than once insists upon his favorite thesis—that democracy had not only set about the work of conducting government for all time in the United States, but that her spirit was so permeating all the countries of Europe that ere long she would take the business out of the hands of royalty and aristocracy, and rule the civilized world after her own methods. The years have rolled along since Mr. De Tocqueville wrote, but the great change which he so confidently predicted has not yet come about. There is but one republic among the great powers of Continental Europe, and it is a republic rather in name than in fact. It has powers of search and seizure which it does not hesitate to use whenever the occasion seems to require their exercise; it rules the press with an iron censorship; it controls the rights of free speech and free assemblage as arbitrarily as any despotism of them all; and, finally, it rests upon no basis in the affections of the masses (outside of its capital city) which can be considered as affording it a guaranty of permanence.

DESOTISMS all the rest, now, as in the days of De Tocqueville; despotisms all, apparently destined to remain for many a day to come. Yet the strength of democratic sentiment has steadily grown ever since the report of the first gun fired with gunpowder sounded the death-knell of the feudal system. By the great advance in education and enlightenment which has marked more modern life, this growth has been marvelously accelerated; so that it may safely be said that more people think intelligently now than at any other period of the world's history, and of those who think intelligently, and sincerely avow their convictions, nine out of every ten are advocates of the democratic theory of politics and public administration. This being the case, it is, at first sight, a remarkable phenomenon that all the great governments of Europe, with the single exception of England, whose position is unique, and that of France, whose position is, to say the least of it, by no means secure, should be as absolute and dictatorial now as they were in the days when Mr. De Tocqueville made his notes, and prophesied accordingly. Moreover, it is to be observed that neither the form of elective government in England, nor the name of "republic" in France prevents either country from practically following the same international policy as the rest.

ALL of these countries contain men of culture and intellectual force strong enough in numbers, and keen enough in understanding, to force a change in the policy, if not the structure, of their respective nations, should they steadfastly combine for such a purpose. What is that policy? Each nation maintains an immense standing army, in time of peace as well as war, at an enormous expense to her tax-payers—each, that is to say, except England, and what she saves on her army she more than makes up for in the cost of her magnificent navy. Each, including England, likewise maintains a vast array of enormous battleships, requiring to build, millions of dollars apiece, and to operate for the purpose of dealing out death and destruction, thousands of dollars a day. France and Germany, Italy and Austria, rob the people not merely of their money, but of their time, for the work of militarism; several years of the best part of every man's life must be spent in the idleness and routine of army life, in order that their victuals may be in proper condition for consuming, whenever the great guns get hungry, and begin to roar to be fed. And the people stand it all patiently. Why?

BECAUSE of the greed for money. The merchants of the "free cities" were the men who at last wiped out from the face of the earth the barons of the Middle Ages. The white wings of the sea rovers were the real harbingers of human liberty. The spirit of commerce crushed the spirit of aristocracy in the beginning. It was a good work for the human race; it lifted a great load of oppression and wrong; it fired the minds of men, and braced their hearts, and brought back to life its divinely-given freedom and grace and love. There was a great resurrection of the dead that had for centuries been buried in the darkness of misery and ignorance and hopeless deprivation. The Sun of Liberty burst through the clouds of bigotry and superstition, people breathed freely and learned to think for themselves, and to walk erect before their fellowmen. The episode, however, may turn out after all to have been nothing but an episode in human history, and, perchance, we only drifted out of a feudal slavery to drift at last into another form of servitude quite as abject and more hopeless.

FOR what shall it profit a man, though he gain the whole world, if he lose his own soul? Wherein is the lust of wealth better than the lust for power? The lust of wealth is even now, before our very eyes, pandering to that other lust, and the mercantile element in Europe is selling back to the "ruling classes" the liberties once wrung from them at the cost of many a gallant life. The impulse of colonization, of national aggrandizement, is the impulse of gain. This is what induces the bourgeoisie everywhere, to submit quietly to grinding taxes, to tolerate vast armies and navies, and relentless conscriptions. They want to extend their trade, and add to their riches. They know they cannot safely do these things abroad without force behind them. Savage and barbarian nations, as a rule, do not care to deal with civilized peoples, except in a very small way. They must be knocked in the head first, they must have the exceeding desirableness of contact with civilization pounded into them with good big cannon balls before they appreciate it fully. Thus, they are taught to buy clothing and other things of which they were not previously aware that they were in any need. It often happens, too, that civilized nations get to quarreling over the question of which of them is entitled to the glory and plunder involved in the extension of "a sphere of influence" over territory occupied by persons unfamiliar with dynamite cartridges and Maxim guns; and this competition can never be settled, once it arises, without at least a show of force. Thus is "trade" indefinitely extended, and Manchester and Liverpool and London wax exceeding rich in consequence. It is an old story. The merchants sent the English army to India, and landed the French troops in Madagascar.

* * *

IN exchange for the "protection" thus afforded, and the opportunity given him of gratifying his instincts of accumulation, the professional trader is willing to disburse a certain percentage of his profits for the support of an idle and vicious aristocracy; and an army and navy, as already indicated, are as essential to the prosecution of his activities abroad as the police are at home.

* * *

It needs no very deep penetration to discover many evidences that the ascendancy of the money power in human affairs which so strongly marks the present phase of history, threatens seriously to undermine the path of democracy, and to stifle the passion for individual freedom. Men to whom the heaping up of riches is the chief, if not the sole aim of life, are not likely to spend much time or thought on the deeper problems of politics. What they mainly desire is to be let alone. Besides this, they have no particular interest in affairs of State, except when they are after "protection." The British free trader really demands this of his rulers just as the American manufacturer claims it at the hands of the Federal Government. The only difference is in the form of protection that is demanded. The Englishman says, "Send out the ships and the soldiers, that I may be protected while I am selling my goods against the clubs and assegais of those savage fellows, and that they may be compelled to purchase of me." The American says, "Put a tariff on such goods as I make, so that my fellow-citizens may be compelled to buy from me at my own price, or go without."

BUT, after he has gotten his protection, the average trader ceases to concern himself seriously about the public administration. Liberty, equality, fraternity, economy, cleanliness in office, possess but little interest for him. These matters, indeed, are rather bores than otherwise. He grudges every moment he gives to them, every cent he is called upon to spend on them. Hence arises the "boss" in the United States, and hence are maintained the aristocracies of Europe. These take the trouble of political matters off of the money-gatherers' hands. They rob him, and he knows it; but he "charges up to profit and loss" what they take from him, and counts on getting it all back with less trouble and more agreeably than if he stood up and fought about it. They encroach on his personal liberty and personal standing in many directions, and he does not complain, so long as he is allowed full play for his bump of acquisitiveness, and even aided in its development. It is a serious situation that is here feebly described. Humanity seems in danger of betrayal in the house of its former friends. If the men who are gifted with the faculty of "getting along" in the world of their own ability shall, in the mass, reach the conclusion that they can get along better under tyranny than under democracy, and sink so low as to act on that conclusion, "it will be freedom herself proclaiming that freedom is a chimera, it will be liberty ringing her own knell all over the globe."

"Ill fares that land, to hastening ills a prey, Where wealth accumulates, and men decay."

* * *

OF a verity, this age of ours is organization- and convention-mad. Nothing can be done without a convention. If a man wants to spell differently from nearly everybody else, he hunts up a lot of spirits worse than himself in this regard, and straightway we have a "spelling-reform convention." If somebody makes up his mind to endeavor to be a Christian, he puts forth a public announcement of the fact, and we wake up in the morning to find a "Christian Endeavor Convention" in session. When the exceeding wickedness of Sunday baseball suddenly dawns on a hitherto placid mind, a "Law and Order League" meets and organizes without more ado. A young fellow is shocked at the information that some of his acquaintances are not as good as they should be, let us say, and a "White Ribbon League" is born instantly of his teeming brain. A parent is perhaps smitten with the consciousness of neglected duty towards her children, and the only way she can think of to atone for her default is to start a "movement" for "a Congress of Mothers" at Washington city. After some earnest soul reaches the settled conviction that strings are preferable to buttons for fastening one's shoes, or vice versa, beyond a doubt we shall read a stirring call for all who believe in strings, or all who believe in buttons, as the case may be, to assemble in mass-meeting, and organize, and advocate an amendment to the Federal Constitution to meet the exigencies of the "reform."

THE latest and most amusing manifestation of the convention madness (mania conveniensis, in the language of alienism) is the proposition for a mass-meeting of "good people," in order to form a "Good Citizenship League," with branches all over the country, and witha mission to "purify" and "elevate" our politics everywhere, national, State, and municipal. The practical difficulties in the way of this new "movement" are fully as great as those which bar the road to success against all similar enterprises—indeed, there are more "discrepancies" about its proposed work than there are about that of any of its prototypes. The first question is, of course, how are these "good people" to be selected who are to represent all other "good people" in the proposed organizing conventions? Are the delegates to be chosen by local conventions composed exclusively of "good people," or are certain "good people" in each locality to elect themselves as delegates, and appear with no credentials but their virtue? When the great convention assembles, who is to determine whether each delegate is duly accredited and entitled to a seat and a vote during the deliberations, or otherwise? Suppose some resolution or declaration of principles is brought forward, and two gentlemen differ radically regarding its merits—are they both "good people," or is one of them proven to be good and the other bad by the disagreement? When the final vote on the "platform" is taken, is the will of the majority to be understood as embodying all true goodness, and must the minority acquiesce therein, and govern themselves accordingly, under penalty of being cast into outer darkness, beyond the pale of good citizenship?

* * *

THE fact is that this "call" for a "Good Citizenship League," is only more palpably ridiculous and vain than like efforts to do the work of goodness by meetings and organizations; it is, at bottom, not one whit more unsound in its impelling principle than the rest of them. One and all, these "movements" are based on a false conception of the nature of righteousness, and of the one and only means of its attainment. Righteousness consists in doing right; not in assembling together to talk about it; not in "organizing" for the purpose of centralizing force in order to have others compelled to do it; not in appointing "committees" on this thing or that; not in the fuss and feathers of "Departments of Reform." The doing of all these things, whereunto the much abused monosyllable "work" is so fondly applied, is not righteousness. Nay, even the real object of them all is not doing right ourselves, but having others made to do what we think right. Grant that persuasion is sometimes contemplated, as well as force, the folly of the whole business is none the less, for men were never yet purified or elevated in the mass either by persuasion or force.

THIS is to say nothing against the gratification of that great and fundamental demand of every human soul that feels the contact of another world—the assembling together at certain seasons to pray and praise. Nor is it to decry the wholesome, cheering, comforting or warming sermons of clergymen whom we know and love, and are spiritually helped by hearing. All these things address themselves to the individual soul. They answer to its needs. And the Church, being an organization, must have stated meetings of its officers to direct its affairs harmoniously—but this is the only purpose for which such meetings may legitimately be held.

* * *

IT has been said that persuasion is a method sometimes adopted by the innumerable "Societies for Setting Others Straight" with which our country is at present infested. It is plain enough that this cannot be their main object. Indeed, it can never be more than a mere incident. For organizations and officers and "departments" have nothing to do with persuasion, nor has persuasion anything to do with them. The only conceivable purpose for which organization can be adopted and carried on is the concentration and application of force. Thus political parties organize—why? Simply because their object is the guidance of legislation along certain lines, the passage and enforcement of certain laws—in other words, their purpose is to bring the will of the minority into subjection to the will of the majority, and to keep it there by the exercise of the "police power." It is nothing to the purpose that they seek first by persuasion to win the majority to their side. Their vital and essential object remains the same. The very origin of their being, the sole reason for their existence is still, in the ultimate analysis, the exertion of force to constrain people to a certain behavior, irrespective of individual belief or desire.

* * *

ALL "Societies for Setting Others Straight" are political organizations, and nothing more or less. Their conventions are party conventions. Their true object is to influence legislation, and so to use the force of the community to make others go their way. The "Cigarette Department" of the W. C. T. U. is not established to persuade men to give up the use of tobacco in a certain form; it is established in order to secure the passage of anti-cigarette laws. The "Department of Sunday Observance" is not established for the purpose of persuading men to be idle or go to church on Sunday, but for the purpose of looking after the passage and enforcement of Sunday laws; and so on. In every city, town and hamlet, the members of these societies may use the persuasion of gracious words, the far better and more effective persuasion of clean, honest, upright lives, over all with whom they may come in contact. For this they need no monster conventions, no reports of committees, no speech-making, no platform, no "pointing with pride," or "viewing with alarm." But they must come together in great masses, and have their chatter printed by the column in the great dailies, and they must hold elections, and caucus, and report and amend and recommit with instructions, and all the rest of it, if they are to impress legislatures, and "the powers that be," and aspiring candidates for office with a wholesome respect for their opinions, and a reluctance to antagonize them on questions of public administration. And so, they produce "a platform," and show a strength of numbers behind it. And this political party work, they call "Reform."

Ans. J. Ringgold.

THE clergy and "Sabbath societies" of the State of New York are up in arms over a bill introduced in the legislature calculated to produce an increase of Sunday labor. It gives to the Chief of Police in the cities power to issue permits to employers for the running of their places of business on Sunday, provided the work done be work of necessity. The authority to decide in an instance of Sunday work whether it was of necessity or not, seems to reside now in the "walking delegate" of the federations of labor.

In this connection it is pertinent to inquire by what rule "works of necessity" on Sunday are to be distinguished from other works? If there is no rule of practical value, it must be admitted that Sunday laws ought to be considered void on the ground of indefiniteness.

More Sunday Legislation in Maine.

BY M. G. HUFFMAN.

SUNDAY legislation seems to be the order of the day. Such work is, or has been, going on in every direction during the winter, Maine not excepted, notwithstanding she prides herself on her liberality, and boasts of her constitution, which guarantees to every man the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.

Four years ago a bill was presented to the legislature early in its session asking that laws be enacted which would prohibit Sunday excursions by railroad companies and steamboats, and properly regulate Sunday traffic, hoping thereby to return to the typical New England observance of the Lord's day. The bill was referred to the Committee on Legal Affairs, before which a hearing was granted. Ministers of the various denominations were well represented and pleaded earnestly in behalf of the bill, claiming that it was the poor laboring man they were wanting to see protected, but the principal speaker in defense of the bill said in his closing remarks: "Give us a law to protect Sunday and the Church will do the rest." Doubtless if that bill had passed and become a law, many honest, conscientious people in the State of Maine would have learned long ere this, by sad experiences, just what "the rest" meant, and the evil that is behind the whole movement.

But the bill was defeated, just as every like bill should be. The committee voted unanimously to give the petitioners leave to withdraw, which meant death to the whole matter, at least so far as that bill was concerned. The action of the committee gave the petitioners such a set-back, that they denounced the legislature with pen and voice for so forgetting their position as to treat such a measure with laughter and ridicule. Even the press heralded far and wide that the Maine legislature laughed at a bill aiming to suppress violation of the sabbath. The bill four years ago received such a blow that it seems as though the Sunday agitators had not as yet wholly recovered from the shock they then received.

Another attempt was made this winter, not so bold as the former one however. The effort this time was not made directly by the ministers, but through lawyer L. T. Carleton, of Winthrop, Maine, Chairman of the Fish and Game Commissioners. Mr. Carleton drew up and presented to the House of Representatives, through a representative from Cornville, Maine, the following bill:—

"Whoever on the Lord's day fires or discharges any rifle, shot-gun, revolver, pistol, or other fire-arm, except as an act of necessity, shall be punished by a fine of $10 and cost of prosecution for each offense."

The title of the bill was, "A better observance of the Lord's day."

A hearing on the bill was granted March 3 before the Committee on Legal Affairs; the bill was very mild in form, and on the surface seemed quite, harmless. Mr. Carleton appeared before the committee in favor of the bill. He said that he had given the matter but little or no thought, hence knew but little or nothing about the subject. He further said that personally he had but little interest in the matter either one way or the other, but the people throughout the State of Maine were writing to him asking him to appear before the committee and plead in behalf of the measure, and he said that he was very much surprised on coming to Augusta, to find any opposition to so modest a request, asking for a law to be enacted to procure a better observance of the Lord's day. He claimed that it was not at all a religious document, and did not pretend to be one; it was simply a law to protect birds that he wanted; but whether Mr. Carleton was or was not interested in the measure, there is no doubt but that the same evil motive was behind, and under this movement that is behind all these Sunday agitations, notwithstanding it was presented under the pretense of procuring a law to protect birds instead of the poor working man, although the bill said nothing about birds.

The writer appeared before the committee in opposition to the bill, on the ground that it was a religious measure, and if passed would tend to unite Church and State, and thus conflict with the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience, and with the right which the constitution of Maine so fully guarantees to every man. The following conversation took place:—

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Mr. Chairman of the Committee, would it be in order for us to ask Mr. Carleton a few questions in regard to this Lord's day bill?

"CHAIRMAN.—Certainly; be free.

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Mr. Carleton, if I rightly understand the bill which you have presented, it is to procure if possible a law for the better observance of the Lord's day; am I correct?

"MR. CARLETON.—Yes, sir.

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Will you please tell the committee what Lord you are here to represent? I read in the Bible that there are many lords and many gods.

"MR. CARLETON.—I presume the one that is recognized on the statute books.

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Which one is that?

"MR. CARLETON.—I do not know.

"MR. HUFFMAN.—If you are here to represent the true God, the Creator, upholder, and ruler of the universe, then the seventh day is His Sabbath, and it constitutes a sign between Him and man that man may know that He is the Lord his God; and to know Him is life everlasting. If by the Lord's day you mean Sunday, then you have nothing more nor less than a heathen festival dedicated to the sun god.

"MR. CARLETON—Elder, would you please loan me your Bible a moment?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Certainly, my brother, I am glad you are coming to the Bible instead of the statute books to find out who is the true God; and I am sure, my friend, that you will have no difficulty in finding that Jehovah is God, if you will but employ the means which He has given by which He may be known; for we read, "hallow my Sabbaths, and they shall be a sign between Me and you, that you may know that I am the Lord your God." And eternal life is in knowing God, and he who cares to remember the seventh-day Sabbath to keep it holy can know God. And if the gentleman becomes acquainted with the true God, he will never again appeal to human power to regulate the observance of the Lord's day, for nothing short of divine power is able to uphold and regulate a divine institution.

"LAWYER L. L. WALTON, a Member of the Committee.—Will the Elder permit me to ask a question?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Certainly.

"MR. WALTON.—Do you think that it would be right to shoot birds on Sunday?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Yes; if it were right the other six days in the week.

"MR. WALTON.—Do you think that it is right to dance on Sunday?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—I do not think it is right to dance any day in the week.

"MR. WALTON.—Would you favor a law to stop dancing on Sunday?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—If dancing is wrong and demoralizing, and interferes with the rights of others, then I would favor a law to stop it every day of the week.

"MR. WALTON.—Suppose you could not get a law to stop it every day of the week, would you favor a law to stop it on Sunday?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—I would not go at it in that way; why stop it any more on Sunday than Monday?

"MR. CARLETON.—When does the seventh-day Sabbath begin, and when does it end?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—It begins at sunset the sixth day and ends at sunset the seventh day.

"MR. CARLETON.—But as the earth turns round and the sun passes from place to place and goes down at night at different times at different places—as you follow around the earth in pursuit of the sun, when does the Sabbath—the Lord's day—begin?

"MR. HUFFMAN.—When does Sunday begin?

"MR. CARLETON.—Please answer my question.

"MR. HUFFMAN.—I don't follow the sun at all; I just wait for the sun to come round to me. I heed the exhortation of God, and remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy as it comes to me—as it does weekly.

"MR. HUFFMAN.—Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee, it seems to us but a waste of time to discuss the question as to whether Sunday is or is not the Sabbath, or whether or not a definite day can be kept; but the vital question is, What ought our State legislature to do about it? Religious legislation is opposed to the constitution of our State, as well as to the natural right of every citizen of this our Commonwealth. What right has any legislature to meddle with religious matters anyway? Such things should be left where they belong—to the family and Church. What we want and what we need is a free Church and a free State. The union of Church and State has always worked to the utmost disadvantage. Christ said, when asked whether or not it was right to pay tribute to Cæsar: "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." Thus he separated Church and State, and is it not the duty of every legislature to keep them as far apart as Christ has separated them? Our representatives are elected by the people to attend to matters pertaining wholly to that which is civil and not to religion."

What is all this clamoring for a Sunday law for anyway, and that too under the pretext that it is the poor birds they would like to see protected from the wicked men who go gunning on the Lord's day, and kill all the insectivorous songsters that haunt the woods. We have now upon the Maine statute books law enough, if put in force, to stop shooting birds on Sunday. Here it is:—

"Sunday is a close time on which it is not lawful to hunt, kill or destroy game or birds of any kind, under the penalties imposed therefor during other close time."

Would it not be well for those who are laboring for a Sunday law to protect birds, as they claim, to see that the laws now upon our statute books are enforced before asking that more be enacted?

The committee voted to report the bill with an amendment that it should only apply to cities, towns and organized places, since the bill as originally drawn would prevent the firing of guns up in the backwoods of Maine. The bill, as it was reported back to the House, and passed the House, looked very much akin to Constantine's law issued in A. D. 321, which applied only to towns and cities.

The bill was killed in the Senate, Senator Stearns, of Aroostook moving to indefinitely postpone the measure. He said he did so out of respect to that large number of citizens who did not believe in cumbering the statute books with needless laws. It would, said he, give employment to a class of people who should not be encouraged. It would be a source of annoyance to honest people. The firing of a gun on Sunday is no more annoyance than the slamming of a door. If the bill means a better observance of the Lord's day, then we have enough laws on this subject. If it is to prohibit firing of guns, then make Sunday a close time on guns.

Thus another effort of those who are laboring so industriously for a Sunday law has failed. When they will make another like effort, is a question.

"The tyranny of Trusts," says a New York journal, "is the most popular of texts; but there is occasionally some tyranny on the other side. For example, a well-known Trust which is building new offices has just received notice from a 'walking delegate' that it must buy the lumber needed in New York City. If it contracts for it outside of this city every man at work on the building will go on a strike."

But the "other side" simply represents another species of the Trust.

That Explained It.

THE magistrate in Essex Market Police Court, New York City, was surprised on Monday morning, April 5, by a great increase in the number of persons brought before him for violation of the Sunday law. From a single police station which records only a daily average of ten arrests for all causes, there were brought to his court on that Monday morning no less than twenty-four individuals charged with having done works not of necessity or charity the previous day.

"Why are there so many petty cases of Sunday law violation?" asked the magistrate, in a tone which evinced disapproval. The reply of the policeman was that the police force had been moved to strict enforcement of the law by complaints sent to headquarters by one Malcolm R. Burney, Chairman of a Christian Endeavor Society, at No. 280 Rivington Street.

"Wearily," says the press report, "the magistrate went through the long docket, and, evidently dissatisfied with his position, imposed fines upon such persons as were proved to have been illegally employed on Sunday."

And, we may suppose, the chairman and others of the society at 280 Rivington Street, read with much satisfaction the news of the rapid spread of Christianity through the agency of the policeman's club.

Meanwhile the victims of the Sunday statute must have wondered what meaning of the term Christianity would justify giving to such work the name "Christian endeavor."

THERE is a world of vital truth in the following from the New York Observer:—

"There is such a thing as the Bible becoming lost in its own literature. In these days of many books about the Bible close and constant study of the Scriptures themselves cannot be too earnestly urged. No lesson leaves, for example, are 'helps' that divert from the scrutiny and memorization of the simple Word. The Bible is not the only, but it is the best commentary on itself."

At the opening of the House of Commons, March 31, three bills of a public character were introduced, one of them being by Mr. Charleton, to secure a "better observance of the Lord's day."

A TORONTO paper states that "the prospects of an early submission of the Sunday car question to the people are brightened by the anxiety of the opponents of the service to have the vote taken before the hot weather comes on."

It is announced from Washington, D. C., that Justice Stephen J. Field, of the Supreme Court, will soon retire from his judicial office, and will be succeeded by the present attorney-general, Mr. McKenna. Justice Field has been from the first a strong advocate of Sunday legislation.

THE drift of events seems to indicate more day by day that the thumb screw and the rack will again be used to help along man's plan of salvation.—Martinsburg, Pa., Weekly Herald.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

Political Speeches and Debates

—OF—

ABRAHAM LINCOLN and STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS,

Containing all the important speeches of "The Giants" from 1854 to 1861, giving a fair and FULL HISTORY OF THE SLAVERY QUESTION, and the great constitutional questions involved therein, from the beginning of the nation to the outbreak of the Civil War. An attack was then being made upon the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. To-day another attack is being made upon these same charters of our liberties. The history made just previous to the Civil War forms a most vital part of the national annals, and should, in itself, warrant the study of those times. But in view of the present attack upon the Constitution, this subject becomes one of the greatest importance to every thinking individual. The work contains 555 pages, printed from new, clear type, with numerous full-page half-tone illustrations, including portraits of Lincoln and Douglas.

THE "SUCCESS" NASAL SYRINGE

Of the thousand and one remedies that have been used in the treatment of that very common and horrible disease, nasal catarrh and other nasal affections, none have been wholly successful. The main reason is that the remedy has not reached the diseased parts.

The douche and atomizer have been used to force the medicine through, hit or miss—generally miss—and thus the rough honeycomb-like, burrowed tissues were allowed to retain the irritating, poisonous matter, while the disease progressed from bad to worse. The physician was abused and the medicine declared worthless.

By the use of the "Success" Syringe the medicine is applied without danger or irritation, directly to the disease. Every little cavity, nook and corner can be reached and all foul matter washed away and the disease speedily cured. The tube being soft and pliable there can be no danger as from hard instruments. THE great ethical problem of the day is the problem of how to make good that which is bad.

This is not a new problem; it is as old as human nature. From the earliest times, human wisdom has persistently sought its solution in the spheres of both individual and national life.

This problem has entered the sphere of politics, and is to-day the center of movements which are engaging the thought and energies of vast numbers of people. This is nowhere more true than in the United States. We are told that the politics of the country are bad, and they must be made good; or as commonly expressed, they must be "purified."

How shall the base metal of which politics now consists be transmuted into gold and silver? The political alchemists who have undertaken the task are the "Christian Citizenship" and "Good Citizenship" leagues which are springing up everywhere throughout the land.

In this undertaking they must certainly fail. But it is equally certain that their efforts will not be without important results.

These organizations propose to work by political methods. They resolve the problem therefore into that of politics purifying itself; which is just as possible of accomplishment as that a bitter fountain should make itself sweet.

It is certain that the good at which this movement aims in politics cannot be realized through bad men in politics. The problem of making bad men good, therefore, is the one which is really sought to be solved by these impossible methods.

There is just one way in which that which is bad in human conduct can be made to give place to good.

Upon this point we have the testimony of the wisest teacher who ever discoursed upon the natures of good and evil. That teacher is none other than Jesus Christ. It will be worth while to turn our attention to His words.

There was one occasion upon which a certain ruler came to Christ and asked him, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" The Master replied: "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but One, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments."

The ruler affirmed that he had kept the commandments. When the Saviour had enumerated them, the ruler said, "All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?" The answer was, "One thing thou lackest; go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." "And when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." Matt. 19: 16-22.

The young ruler had sought goodness by works; but he had not attained to goodness. He thought that he had been keeping the law of God, but he had not been keeping it at all.

The Saviour's words to him expressed the truth that God alone is good. He is the personification of goodness, in and of Himself. There can be no goodness anywhere else except that which comes from Him.

A man can become good only by having goodness given him from God. He cannot make himself good. By the gift of God, through faith, a bad man becomes good; and he becomes good in order that he may do good. This is Christianity. The method of human nature, on the other hand, is to do good in order to become good; and this is heathenism.

The heathen race is continually seeking to evolve goodness from works. But it can never come in that way. It can come only as the gift of God, through that which connects the soul with God. And as politics does not connect with God, it is impossible that real goodness should be realized therefrom.

But there is very much in the world which passes for goodness that is not goodness. The young man who came to Christ thought that he was good. He made a show of goodness in his life; and being outwardly a keeper of the commandments, he no doubt passed—and would pass in this day—for a good man. But his goodness was spurious, and only involved him in ruin at last.

God alone is good; and "God is love." Therefore there can be no goodness apart from love. The young ruler thought he was a good man, but he failed on the test of love. He was not willing to use his riches for the benefit of his fellowmen.

"Good citizenship" and "Christian citizenship" aim to "purify politics,"—to put goodness in the place of evil, in politics. But what kind of "goodness" will it be which will thus be put into politics? Will it be genuine goodness, which is from God alone, or will it be a counterfeit? As certainly as it is a counterfeit, it will involve in ruin all that which depends upon it.

And it is no small thing which is made to depend upon the success of the "Good Citizenship" movement. It is proposed to accomplish by it great things, even to evolve a government in which "Christ and His law" will be the "supreme authority in national as in individual life" (See p. 250). It is proposed by it to usher in the millennium and set up the kingdom of Christ on the earth. If the scheme fails, therefore, what will be the result? What less than the spiritual bankruptcy of all who shall have reared the edifice of their spiritual hopes upon it?

Love is the test of goodness. Will the goodness of "Good Citizenship" stand this test? Will this test be applied to it? Can it be applied by any method of political procedure?

"Love is of God," and "without faith it is impossible to please Him." Faith is the link which connects the soul with God. There can be no real goodness without love, no real love without faith. Does "Good Citizenship" operate through faith? Is faith a method of political action?

Human conduct can be purified only through faith in the Word of God? Nothing that is shaped by human conduct can be good or pure apart from the power of God through faith. And faith cannot enter into politics.

Politics is of this world. It has no connection with "Christ and His law," or with the kingdom of God. It cannot bring "a clean thing out of an unclean." It can prove only a deception to those who trust in it for good.

A New York paper, making note of the fact that on April 14 "many thousands of New Yorkers crowded certain streets of the metropolis, at some risk to life and limb, to welcome, cheer and honor a fellow-being who had just arrived and whose sole claim to distinction is that he is not so far removed from the gorilla as most of us are," gives an explanation for the phenomenon in the following:—

"While every Christian nation in Europe goes armed to the teeth like a border desperado, and in its policies pays no more regard to the precepts of Christ than if he had never lived and taught, is it really so very odd that an individual fighter of genius should not encounter abhorrence only when he enters the chief city of the United States?"

The truth is that the very "Christianity" of most people to-day is of a fighting character. But for all this it is no less true that real Christianity means peace.

Turning and Twisting.

TRUTH bears its own credentials. It does not need the advantage which results from a comparison with error. Yet to some minds the turning and twisting of those who attempt to defend error is the first indication that error is error.

Most people who observe the first day of the week as a weekly holy day, apply to it the Bible name "Sabbath," a name which the Lord applies to the seventh, but never to the first day of the week. "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," is the plain word of the Lord.

Those who teach that the first day of the week is the Sabbath are continually worried by demands from their followers for Bible proof for calling the first day the Sabbath.

One of these demands was recently addressed to a Mr. Gamble, who just now poses as the Sunday-sabbath champion for the Christian Endeavorers. Here it is:—

"Where in the New Testament [give chapter and verse] is the first day of the week spoken of as the Sabbath, or a Sabbath?"

This question, with Mr. Gamble's reply, was published on the first page of the Christian Endeavorer, for April. We quote a part of the reply, and ask the reader to observe the twisting:—

"Proceeding to speak of the resurrection day, he [Matthew] continues, 'as it began to dawn toward the one of the Sabbaths' [translated in the Authorized and Revised Versions, first day of the week], evidently meaning the 'one' of the system that belonged to the Christian era. If the resurrection Sunday was the 'one' of Sabbaths, the next Sunday was the second, etc."

In the very next sentence Mr. Gamble proceeds to destroy what he has attempted to build up, as follows:—

"Acts 20:7, says: 'And on the one of the Sabbaths when the disciples came together to break bread [hold the communion], Paul preached to them, etc.'"

In attempting to explain his new translation, Mr. Gamble says, "If the resurrection Sunday was the 'one' of Sabbaths, the next Sunday was the second, etc."

Very well; then the resurrection Sunday would be the only day which could be called the "one of the Sabbaths," the following Sunday must be called the second of the Sabbaths, and the next one the third, and so on. The meeting on the first day of the week referred to in Acts 20:7, occurred about thirty years after the resurrection Sunday, and since there are fifty-two Sundays in a year, according to Mr. Gamble's new theory, this first day should be called the 1560th of the Sabbaths; but fatal to his new theory, the same words are used to designate this first day of the week as are used to designate the resurrection day, it is "one of the Sabbath," or, as the translators give it, "first day of the week."

Such twisting and turning should make the seeker after truth suspicious of the position which requires such methods to defend it. For a brief discussion of the reasons, for the translation as it appears in the Authorized and Revised Versions, see article on another page, entitled "A Product, Not a Discovery, of Ignorance." A. F. B.

THE "gateway of politics" is altogether too low and too narrow to afford entrance for the kingdom of God.

Lame Sympathy for the Workingman.

THE April Christian Endeavorer, referring to a recent statement in the SENTINEL that what the workingmen of the country want is legislation that will provide more work rather than legislation which will curtail it, says that it certainly will help the situation to reduce the amount of work and the number of workers by means of Sunday laws. "Six men can do a piece of work if they work seven days in the week. If there is no work done on Sunday it will take seven men to do that same work."

But have not the advocates of Sunday laws been all the time telling us that people could do more work in a given time by resting one day in seven, than by working seven days in the week? They cannot deny that this has been one of their stock arguments. Now if this argument be true,—if six men, working six days in the week, can do more work in a given time than six men working seven days a week,—how can it be that seven men working six days a week can do no more work than six men working seven days in the week?

The same issue of the Endeavorer prints a letter from Mr. P. Enright, of the "Executive Board Iron Moulders' Union of North America," in which he says:—

"That there is an estrangement between the Church and organized labor, I regret to state, is true. The unions have done much through agitation and legislation to help their cause. They have had the hours of labor reduced, in some trades, from fourteen to eight, and many other innovations equally as important to the welfare of their members. They claim that through this effort for their betterment the Church has never sympathized with them."

Why has the Church never sympathized with the labor unions in their efforts to shorten the hours of daily toil? Why have the preachers not agitated for reform in this direction in the interests of the laboring classes? The preachers and religious societies want Sunday laws in order (so they say) that the laboring man may have a chance to rest from his weekly toil. But does he not need any chance to rest till it comes Sunday? Is his physical welfare to be conserved entirely by what he can get on Sunday?

The workingmen themselves are the best judges of their own physical needs; and the fact that the labor unions have paid little or no attention to the question of Sunday rest, while making an earnest fight for a shorter day of work and "many other innovations equally as important," shows conclusively that they have not deemed Sunday rest a matter which demands their serious attention. On the other hand, the fact that the preachers and church societies have sought the physical welfare of the workingmen only through Sunday, shows with equal conclusiveness that not the workingman, but Sunday, is the object of their special concern.

More can be gained in the direction of providing work for the unemployed by shortening the day of work, than by shortening the week of work. But who ever heard of a ministerial crusade in favor of an eight-hour day, or of any of the other "innovations" of which Mr. Enright's letter speaks? As that authority states, the truth is that in these efforts for their betterment, "the Church has never sympathized with them."

Why will not the advocates of Sunday laws be candid enough to admit that their real purpose is the exaltation of Sunday, rather than the conferring of an unasked benefit upon the ranks of labor? They have nothing to lose by being frank.

How long will it take to "convert the world" by the "Christian Citizenship" method of substituting the primary for the prayer meeting?

Christians Described in the Second Century.

THE following description of Christians is given by an anonymous writer in the "Letter to Diognetus," written about the middle of the second century. It ought to be profitable for the politics- and pleasure-loving professors of this day to consider what Christians were like in the early days when Christianity went forth into the world with unparalleled power and success:—

"The Christians are not distinguished from the rest of mankind either by nationality or language. They have no separate cities, they use no special dialect, they practice no peculiar mode of life. They inhabit the cities of Greece and the rest of the world just as each finds his place allotted to him. They follow the local customs in respect to meat and drink, costume and other social habits, and yet they carry about them the strange and avowedly mysterious signs of their true nationality. They dwell in their own country but as strangers. . . . Every foreign country is to them a native land, and every native land is to them a foreign country. They marry and bring up their families like other folk, but they do not, like others, expose their infant children. They provide their meals in common, but theirs is no common meal. They live in the flesh, but not after the flesh. They sojourn upon earth, but their citizenship is in heaven. They obey the established laws, and yet by their individual lives they surpass the laws. They love all men, yet they are persecuted by all. They are put to death, and yet are raised to life. They are not understood and yet they are condemned. They are poor and yet make many rich. They are in want of everything and yet in everything abound. They are dishonored and yet by their dishonor are covered with glory. They are defamed, and yet are counted righteous. They are reviled and blessed. They are insulted and entreat men honorably. They do good and are punished as evildoers. When punished they rejoice as being raised to life. The Jews make war on them as Gentiles, and the Greeks persecute them, and yet those that hate them cannot state the cause of their dislike."

THE gospel of God purifies the heart, and through this change in the individual operates toward the purification of what is without the heart. This is the one true principle of genuine reform. It must begin with the heart.

What Sunday Legislation Involves.

BY J. F. BALLENGER.

When the Lord gave His commandments to Israel He wrote them upon two tables of stone (Deut. 4:13), four upon one table and six upon the other. (This division is evident from the very nature of these laws and also from the answer Christ gave to the lawyer in Matt. 22:36-40.) The first table expresses our duty to God alone, the other six express our duty to both God and our fellowmen.

In order now to make clear the limits of human or civil legislation, we will suppose that I was existing as the only person on earth. I could break every one of the first four commandments in actions and thus offend God just as well as I can now, but I could not violate one of the other six in conduct and thus injure my fellowman, yet I could break every one of them in thought and thus offend God.

Again, If I dwelt in the most densely populated city on the globe, I could violate every one of the first four commandments in conduct and not injure a single human being. But I could not violate one of the second table in actions without wronging some one else. Therefore is it not evident that human legislation is limited to the punishment of such acts as are infringements of the natural rights of others.

Now, as the Sabbath belongs to the first table and is wholly spiritual and religious, therefore civil government can never enact Sabbath laws without interfering with man's spiritual and religious duties to God.

Had these distinctions been carefully observed and acted upon by law makers, there never could have existed such a thing as a sabbath law upon the statute books of any State or government of the world.

In fact there has never been a civil sabbath law since Israel was a theocracy. Every attempt to enforce a weekly rest day by human legislation has been an attempt to compel obedience to Sunday as a religious institution. This is just what the prophecy said the Papacy would do and it is just what it has done. Says Cardinal Gibbons through his chancellor, H. F. Thomas: "Of course the Catholic Church claims that the change (of the Sabbath) was her act. . . . And the act is a MARK of her power and authority in religious matters."

Many testimonials, of the same nature, from their writings, might be given. But every intelligent person knows that the Catholic Church claims the power to change the laws of God; and that she puts forth the change of the Sabbath as a sign of that power.

Then what do professed Protestant governments do when they enact Sunday laws?

1. They make an image to the Papacy in legislating upon a purely religious subject. Rev. 14:9-12.

2. They enforce an institution which the papal church claims to be a mark or sign of her power to change God's times and laws. See Dan. 7:25.

3. They set man above God in that they assume to abolish the divine government and put civil government in its place. See Isa. 47:7, 8, and Rev. 18:7, 8.

4. To compel obedience to the Sunday institution is to force the conscience contrary to the command of God and thus assume the responsibility of the character and conduct of the citizen in the final judgment.

5. They destroy religious liberty and undermine the principle upon which all good government rests.

6. They prepare the way for the final destruction of all human governments, as seen in the history of those earthly powers that met their overthrow because they dared to assume the power to control the divine right in man by the union of Church and State.

In view of these facts it behoves every individual to see well to it that we have that freedom that all may have in Jesus Christ. John 8:36.

Followed a Bad Example.

At the New York Conference of the M. E. Church at Sing Sing, which closed April 13, some interesting facts were disclosed which throw light upon the controversy over the building of a Roman Catholic chapel on the Government reservation at West Point.

These facts came out in connection with the presentation of the following resolution, by the Rev. Thomas S. Bond:—

"On March 3, 1897, the Honorable Secretary of War granted permission for the erection of a Roman Catholic church on the Government reservation at West Point, such permission being contrary to the well-established principles of our Government, which, while assuring religious freedom to all, forbids sectarian discrimination and national patronage of any distinctive form of religious faith and practice, and we, the members of the New York Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, most respectfully, protest against such action and respectfully request the Secretary of War to rescind the order granting such a permission.

Resolved, That aforesaid protest, signed by the officers of this body, be forwarded to His Excellency the President, to the Honorable Secretary of War and to the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate."

While this was under discussion the Rev. J. P. Hermance arose and said that the Methodist Episcopal Church had vainly sought the privilege of building a church at West Point, and had been refused for the reason that if such permission were given one denomination it would have to be given to all. Bishop Stephen M. Merrill followed, saying that he was very sorry to hear that the Methodist Episcopal Church had set a bad example, and that the Roman Catholics were only following that example.

A protest that is based upon jealousy has small claim to consideration. It is a pity that Protestants cannot oppose the encroachments of Rome without being logically estopped by their own example from protesting.

Ballot and Bullet.—No. 3.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

It is evident that if governmental power is derived from the people, who govern through their chosen agents the government can exercise no power except that delegated by the people, and as the people can delegate no power but what they possess, it follows that every one thus contributing to this general fund of power, in the nature of the case, not only claims to possess the power and the right to commission others to use it, but pledges himself to come with that power when called upon to repel invasion or to suppress insurrection, even to taking the life of his enemies.

The Christian must be Christlike. Christ was set forth as an example to us. When he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously. 1 Pet. 2:23.

At a time when Jesus was travelling through the country the people refused to open their doors and invite him in, and two of the disciples said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them? Jesus rebuked them, saying, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of; for the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Luke 9:52-56.

"As he is so are we in this world." 1 John 4:17. "Thou shalt not kill." "Put up thy sword, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Matt. 26:52. In this Christ denied to his children the power or right of the sword. What right, then, have they to claim that power and delegate it to others to be used, when they are forbidden to use it themselves. Indeed, this is a virtual use of it themselves, only in an indirect way.

Now the civil government has the right to use the sword. Rom. 13:4. "For he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."

This spirit that wields the sword is not the spirit of Christ. Suppose that a community of true Christians, with the spirit of true love to all men, even their enemies, were to organize a government, where would they get the power or the wrath to wield the sword? When an enemy marched against them they would go out and pray for them, and when they needed provision the Christian government must feed them. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." How could they fight? But the apostle says, "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers." Rom. 13:1.

Yes; and that is as far as the Christian is licensed to go in civil affairs. He should be the very best of subjects and be easily governed, but never assume the responsibility of governing others. or what is the same in a free government, become a sovereign element, a political citizen.

The Christian should not do anything to detract from the divine institution of civil order and its importance among men. He should never oppose any of the proper measures of government; he pays the tribute: constantly recognizing the sovereignty of civil government, in the affairs of this world; and at the same time protests solemnly against its invasion of the things of God.

The powers that be have a commission, and that is to keep the vicious from outward acts which would jeopardize the interests of society. The instrumentality to accomplish this end is the sword.

The Church of Christ has entirely another work—the revelation of Christ to the wicked world in both precept and example, and resounding the invitation, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden [with sin and sorrow and evil passions] and I will give you rest," by sending the Holy Spirit into your heart to subdue all your iniquities. Matt. 11:28; Micah 7:19; making you the most peaceable of subjects to all rightful authority.

With this divine principle as the motive power in the heart no conflict or controversy could ever occur between the Christian and the civil government, so long as the latter contents itself with its own line of work, civil affairs.

The man of the world can be a good citizen by the proper exercise of sovereignty in things of this life, in civil conduct only.

The Christian, by devoting his talents to the things of eternal life and the world to come; things which make for peace, will be the most harmless and least troublesome subject; but cannot be a sovereign here while acting as an ambassador of his sovereign; and while he is a pilgrim and a stranger in the land.

Let the State fulfill its grand and important sphere. Let the Church pursue her humble mission. Then each will be at peace with the other.

It was recorded by Solomon that he that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city; and the truthfulness of the utterance is demonstrated on every hand. The number of "bosses," dictators and popes in the world to-day is directly attributable to the fact that people generally are more willing to be ruled than to take the trouble to rule themselves.

Christianity by Ballot.

W. N. Glenn, in "Signs of the Times."

THE New York Christian Advocate truthfully says that "underneath the ballots always repose the bullets; for if the minority will not submit, force must be brought into requisition or government becomes chaos; and chaos becomes anarchy." Christians should ponder the meaning of this saying. All civil government is founded in force, and no such government can long stand unless sustained by a sufficient physical force to insure the execution of its decrees. If any government has not the necessary force within itself, it must needs have the guaranty of other power or powers possessed of such force. For instance, Turkey has for more than fifty years been sustained by "the powers" of Europe; and still weaker governments, such as Greece, Holland, Belgium, exist by the sufferance of the greater powers. But under whatever circumstances, underneath the ballot, or will of the government however expressed, lies the bullet as the dernier resort.

What shall we say, then, of Christians resorting to the ballot to carry out their ideas of Christian reformation? Is it not logically a resort to the bullet? When the ballot is cast, it is expected that the government will enforce the sentiments thus expressed, by whatever degree of force is necessary; and it must be physical force, for the civil power has no other. It was only because man refused to be governed by the power of righteousness (which is love) that civil government, or a government of force, was instituted. In the Scriptures the sword is used as a symbol of civil government. Of the ruler, Paul says, "If thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain." Rom. 13:4. Anciently the sword was a principal weapon and implement of war; to-day, the main dependence in warfare for enforcing the decrees of governments is bullet-throwing weapons. Hence the significance of the statement that "underneath the ballots always repose the bullets."

Enforcing Christian doctrine and practice by the sword (or power of civil government) always follows a departure from the Word of God. We do not read of any such thing in the first century, and at no later date has that doctrine made such rapid progress, or maintained such a degree of purity. In the United States, where in theory the voice of the people is the government, the ballot is the initial form of expressing the will of the government. Hence, like the decree of a monarch, the ballot could have no influence without the recognized power of force behind it. In these days that power, in case of resistance, is the bullet. So in any resort to the ballot, the bullet is understood in case of determined resistance to the decision of the ballot.

For a number of years there has been an extensive movement on foot in this Government to bring about so called Christian reforms by means of the popular ballot. It is urged that this is a Christian method, but it is a method of force, and is so designed by those who resort to it. At most, the success of such a method could enforce only an outward form of Christian observance; in other words, could only enforce hypocrisy. And if there should be resistance to a sufficient degree, the Government must needs resort to the bullet to carry out the design of the ballot. That those who inaugurated this scheme of nominal Christian reform by the ballot fully understood its purport and logical result, we have in evidence the language of leaders in the movement. One of them, now an editor of a paper that sustains this National Reform movement, is on record as saying:—

"Whether the Constitution will be set right on the question of the moral supremacy of God's law in the Government without a bloody revolution, will depend entirely upon the strength and resistance of the forces of antichrist."

The movement in question was constitutional enforcement of the Christian religion, which it was designed to bring about by means of the ballot, resistance to which would mean the shedding of blood, or the employment of the bullet by the constituted authority of the Government. Not only so, but according to another apostle of ballot Christianity, it was expected that the Constitution so amended would disfranchise all who were "logically consistent" in their opposition to it. Thus it was expected that the ballot in this country would be given exclusively into the hands of nominal Christians, together with the physical power to enforce its decisions.

Such a scheme of "reform" is the aim of the much-lauded "Christian Citizenship" movement. This is a scheme for so-called Christian reform by the ballot, a means that admittedly rests for ultimate success upon the bullet. This "Christian Citizenship" idea lays principal stress upon the ballot instead of the Word of God. It is held that should the primary election come upon the evening of the prayer-meeting, it would be the duty of the Christian voter to attend the primary. Thus the prime dependence is placed upon the ballot, and ultimately upon the bullet, for regenerating the world. This is in marked contrast with the teaching of Christ, whose prayer to his Father was, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." In regard to his disciples, he said, "I have given them thy word;" he said nothing about their using the ballot. On the contrary, when Peter drew a sword to defend his Master, the Lord told him to put it up. And Paul tells us that the Scriptures are sufficient to thoroughly furnish the man of God unto all good works. 2 Tim. 3:16, 17. The doctrine of Christ is to "overcome evil with good."

THE Bible doctrine of Christian unity knows nothing of the word "confederation." Christians are not confederated with God or with each other, though Christianity. "As thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us;" "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one," expresses the mind of Jesus Christ upon this subject. John 17: 21, 23. This alone is Christian unity.

How to Proclaim the Gospel.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

It is a great truth that the gospel of Jesus Christ is of inestimable benefit to mankind, directly, to every one who receives it, and even indirectly to others. The principles of love, mercy, purity and sobriety, which are developed in those who receive the indwelling Saviour, certify that the gospel is the greatest power for righteousness that there is in the world.

It therefore becomes a very important question from both the standpoint of individual salvation and of other interests as well, to ascertain in what manner the Christian religion can be the most successfully propagated, or in other words, the best manner to induce persons to accept for themselves the personal benefits of Christianity.

First, there is the old-fashioned way pursued by Christ and his apostles. That way is to preach Christ in all his divine power as the personal Saviour of every one who will accept his salvation; the receiving of his Spirit which will enable the convert to walk as he walked and to illustrate in his life the life of Christ himself. In this acceptance of Christianity no dependence is placed upon the flesh, nor do ordinances or ceremonies of any kind have any part in the justification or salvation of the sinner. He is saved by faith, which works in him the righteousness of the law.

This way of introducing Christianity was so eminently successful that in the early days of its proclamation, upon one occasion three thousand souls were converted in one day; upon another occasion five thousand were converted, and such perfect harmony and love prevailed among the converts that it has been put on record that "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." This was the primitive way of proclaiming the gospel, and in that period of its progress it has been fitly described as one on a white horse with a bow and crown who went forth conquering and to conquer.

But at an early period there came a great apostasy in the Church. A central head was established at Rome, individual liberty was repressed, the Holy Spirit was not recognized as the director of the Church, and men assumed the position of regulating and controlling the gospel. Soon the Church was joined to the State, and the power of kings and princes was invoked to carry the gospel. By proffered earthly rewards, by threats, by fears, a mongrel gospel was proclaimed. Great apparent results were achieved, but nothing approximating that early success has ever been obtained, nor could it ever be said of these converts from worldly motives that they were of one heart and of one soul. Instead of loving each other they have not hesitated to make war upon and to kill each other!

Strangely enough, with these two examples before the eyes of the Christian world, the tendency at the present day is to use the latter method. To this end ministers preach, editors write, and lawmakers legislate. Christianity by law, is the cry. Thus methods distinctively worldly are put into action to gain an object entirely spiritual and religious! Is it any wonder that the type of Christianity produced by such methods differs so materially from that seen in the days of the apostles? With promises of earthly honors and earthly temporal good entering so largely into the modern religio-political preaching, with man's power for God's power, man's approbation for God's love, earthly penalties for God's punishments, what will the "Christianity" which is the outcome be? It must be something so different from the biblical, the apostolical and the true, that the Lord will not recognize it as His.

The gospel itself, alone, separate from everything else, is a power—it is "the power of God unto salvation." It is so perfect of itself that the addition of anything to it or the taking away of anything from it as a help to rectitude and holiness lessens its power and mars the perfection of its work. It stands alone for perfection of righteousness and of character, high above all that can come from the power of man, either alone, or in an attempted union with it.

We need the gospel; it is the only hope of the age, but we want it pure. We want it separated from all man's pretended helps of governmental patronage, favorable legislation, and temporal rewards. Then will apostolical seasons of power and refreshing be seen, and the world will stand amazed at the exhibition.

THE true character of a person can be known only when he enjoys the fullest freedom. It is so with an institution or a church. The thoughts and intents of her heart cannot be known by observing the doings of the Roman Church in our own land at this time and under present circumstances. She has too much of the wisdom of the serpent to disclaim against religious liberty in this country.—Converted Catholic.

News, Notes, and Comment.

OF course the maintenance of public chaplains in army and navy, and in legislative halls, is a survival of the union of Church and State which alleged Christian bishops and the pagan Constantine set up in the Master's despite. The thing is, perhaps, a small matter, politically speaking, though it is serious enough to one who sees blasphemy in its conception and its execution. But when you start wrong, there is no telling where you will ultimately land. And there are times when the wrong starting of this official chaplainship results in manifestations so grotesque that one may fairly hope, by calling attention to them, to arouse some minds now ignorant or disregardful of the essential evil of the whole business, and thus to discredit it, and help along, however little, the good work of its final abolition.

THE latest gentleman to bring discredit on the employment of public chaplains is a clergyman of Little Rock, Ark. It so happened that on the day before he was called upon to exercise his official functions in the presence of the legislature of that State, one William Jennings Bryan arrived in the capital city. The preacher informed his Creator of this important occurrence, and also notified him that the town was "all astir" in consequence thereof; he then proceeded to deal with the reputation of his man, and communicated to the same Being the fact that many persons were under the impression that Mr. Bryan could travel more miles on the railway and make more speeches in a given time than any other citizen of the United States. He went into a number of biographical details concerning his subject, and served notice in advance that all proper arrangements had been made for the entertainment of Little Rock's distinguished guest, presumably in order, that Deity might understand that He need give Himself no uneasiness on this point.

Now, this is by no means a unique case. Similar irreverent utterances are made at nearly every session of a State legislature, and of the Federal Congress. And the pitifulness of it is that they are often made in perfect sincerity, and without the slightest idea of committing any impropriety or doing an act of irreverence—and made, too, by clergymen whose business it is not merely to be humble and reverent themselves before the Throne, but, by example, as well as precept, to teach the lessons of humility and awe to other people. Perhaps the clergymen themselves are, after all, not so much to blame. The real root of the matter lies in their position. The Catholic clergy come out of it best, because they have a fixed form of words which they repeat by rote, and those words, be it said with all respect and good will, embody "glittering generalities," which any man may believe are useless or profitable, but which, at any rate, never prove offensive to good taste or suggest the idea that the speaker is praying at his hearers, instead of praying to Deity.

ON the other hand, however, nature seems hardly equal to the task of offering anything in the way of an extemporaneous official State prayer which is not more or less a speech to the audience, thinly and poorly disguised. And this for a very good and sufficient reason. Prayer is not a matter of State concern; prayer cannot, from its nature, be offered up in an official capacity; prayer cannot be made for an official body, an ideal, legal entity, like a legislature or an army or the Federal Congress. Hence the hired clergy of the State simply undertake a task too great for them or anybody else, and they uniformly blunder over it and bring the scorn and contempt of scoffers on the most serious and solemn function connected with the religious life.

A CLERGYMAN, of the Methodist Conference, lately in session at Winfield, Kansas, "rose to a question of personal privilege," according to the dispatches, during one of the debates in that body. I suppose he must have said that that was the thing to which he "rose," or the newspaper reporters would not have made use of the expression. But it would be very interesting to know just what the reverend gentleman himself understands by "a question of personal privilege," and what the presiding officer of the conference who, it appears, did not call him to order for his language, considers to be the proper meaning of that well-known Parliamentary phrase. Ordinary people imagine that when a man "rises to a question of personal privilege" in a deliberative body, he is, strictly speaking, "out of order," in the sense that what he has to say is not directly connected with the matter then under discussion, but that he is "privileged" to say it, because of its personal relation to himself, and because, otherwise, his conduct or motives might be unjustly impugned.

BUT this clergyman, his "monitor" and his conference evidently adhere to no such definition. The "personal privilege" to which the bishop arose, and which he was seemingly allowed to exercise without remonstrance or objection from any quarter, consisted in a particularly virulent personal attack on ex-Senator Ingalls for reporting the recent prize fight at Carson City. In the course of availing himself of this "personal privilege," the reverend gentleman charged the distinguished ex-Senator with "prostituting" his intellect, denounced the "ruffian spirit" of Mrs. Fitzsimmons, and branded Mr. Ingalls as a liar. This attack has provoked the caustic Mr. Ingalls to express to the preacher his hope that he has been incorrectly quoted by the press, because, says the ex-Senator, "I should regret to be compelled to believe that Carson has a higher code of ethics than Winfield, or that a pugilist may have better manners than a clergyman."

THE retort seems well-deserved. There are too many clerics who take advantage of their cloth to indulge in language which, if used by a layman, would very likely be followed by a blow. This is, however, not always deliberately done. It is often merely an effect, not fully appreciated, of long impunity and of constant associations with others similarly circumstanced.

THERE has lately been running in the Katholische Volks Zeitung, a German Catholic paper published in Baltimore, a remarkable series of articles, purporting to be from the pen of the president of the new Catholic University in Washington City. There was a report that the president had disavowed responsibility for the views expressed in his name, but this seemed an improbable statement, in view of the standing of the newspaper and the well known high character of its publishers and proprietors. Now comes an interview with the president in which he frankly acknowledges the authorship of the papers and insists that they contain not merely his own personal opinions, but the very essence of true Catholicity. In consequence, they assume great importance and deserve the close attention of all thoughtful Protestants as well as Catholics.

THE articles are cast in the form of a dialogue, supposed to take place between a good Catholic and his duly authorized spiritual adviser. They deal with that curious phase of ecclesiastical controversy which has arisen from the growth of "liberalism" in the American Roman Catholic Church, which brought Satolli to the United States, and drove Bishop Keane from Washington to Rome. The Catholic layman, of course, is a mere "figure head," corresponding, for the purpose in hand, to the big bag that the pugilists hang up to "punch" for the exercise. It is a classical idea, and in skilful hands, like the present, it is a very effective way of writing.

THE layman in question, you understand, has a rather pronounced inclination towards the "liberal" school, and he wants to know if he may not legitimately follow its way, and if not, why not. At the same time he is prepared to yield his private judgment to the better wisdom of his professional guide, philosopher and friend, and he is just in the state of mind which enables him to ask the questions best adapted to bring out the latter's strongest points in reply, and to recognize their force when they are put before him. The result is foregone and he seems perfectly convinced of his error in every number of the paper, though he always comes back for more of the same sort in the next issue.

THE gist of the instruction which this anxious inquirer receives, is that "liberalism" is merely a form of heresy in the Catholic theology; that Leo XIII., so far from feeling kindly disposed towards the new "movement," is violently antagonistic to it, and has said so more than once; that, in short, no one can be a Catholic and a liberal in religion at the same time. Condemnation, in no halting or equivocal phrase, is put upon all Catholics who pretend the contrary.

It seems to me that the learned president is correct. There are only two principles affecting religious belief—the principle of authority and the principle of private judgment. Between the two appears no middle ground. Catholicism stands for the first. It is her very foundation-stone, the cause, the excuse, the essence, the mission of her organization. Protestantism stands, or ought to stand, for the very opposite. The contest between the two for the mastery of the human mind can never, under the immutable laws of thought, be compromised, or settled, until the church Militant shall pass into the church Triumphant.

THIS is not to say that there are no liberal Catholics. If avowal counts for anything, I have known such in the priesthood itself. But the point is, that these people are liberal in spite of their church, and not because of it or even in harmony with its faith and spirit. To the extent of their liberality they are Protestants. Their position is a protest against the church's teaching and tendency, even though they may not be conscious of the fact. The president of the Catholic University evidently does not intend to be numbered among the church's protestors against intolerance and bigotry. His position is perfectly logical and perfectly consistent. The only wonder is that any one in his church should differ from him.

Ans. J. Ringgold.

Do BIBLE reading and prayer in the public schools constitute worship? If so, they are prohibited by the constitutional provision of the States against compulsory support of any place of worship.

If they do not constitute worship in the public schools, do they constitute worship in the churches? If they do not, then it cannot be truthfully pleaded that churches should be exempt from taxation as places devoted wholly to public worship.

But if these exercises constitute worship in the churches, they must also constitute worship in the public schools.

This point furnishes ground for an antichristian journal of this city to charge the representatives of Christianity with "pious evasion" of their obligations; and the force of the objection must be admitted.

“Federation” is the Next Step.

THE New York Independent, of April 1st, devotes nearly five pages to the subject of "Federation of Young People's Societies." These articles were furnished by officials of the several young people's societies. Dr. Carroll, of the Independent, closes his article introducing the subject with the following:—

“As a matter of interest, I give herewith the number of members of the various young people’s societies in the United States, according to the latest reports:—

“SOCIETIES.

"Christian Endeavor Societies" (40 Churches).....	2,162,000
"Epworth League, Methodist Episcopal Church 1,500,000
" " " " " South.....	150,000
"Baptist Young People's Union.....	400,000
"Young People's Christian Union, United Brethren	75,000
"Luther League, Lutheran.....	60,000
"Young People's Christian Union, United Presbyterian.....	35,146
"Young People's Christian Union, Associate Ref..	2,223
" " " Alliance, Ev. Assoc.....	30,407

"Total members.....4,414,776

“Return from the Westminster League, which has, I believe, no national organization as yet, would doubtless swell the total to something like 4,500,000.”

From the articles in the Independent it appears that earnest efforts have been made to unite all these societies under one organization, but the spirit of unity was lacking and their efforts failed. In the absence of Christian unity sufficient to effectual spiritual unity, it is now proposed to organize a gigantic federation of all young people's societies. That the reader may understand the motions actuating this scheme of federation, we quote from one of the articles from the pen of a trustee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor:—

“Federation is the next step forward in the Young People’s movement. It is logical and providential. The uprising of the young people is the most significant fact in the history of modern Christendom—the twenty-ninth chapter of the Book of the Acts. Its import is far reaching.”

“The importance of Federation as facing social problems cannot be exaggerated. The present exigency is putting an emphasis on problems sociological more than theological. Coöperation not as a sentiment but as a power, is demanded. Combine the moral forces of the community and there is no evil that you cannot crush. Combine we must.”

“When the power of the whole Church is felt behind every church, when all the moral forces are coördinated, then it may lift up its head for its redemption draweth nigh.

“Take the Sunday question, which at this moment is paramount. While the Church is relaxing its regard for the sacred day, a conservative influence is coming from the workingman. . . . Facing outward toward all such questions, Federation grows immensely important.”

With this gigantic Federation whose very existence is the result of the lack of Christian unity and therefore the lack of Christ, it is now proposed to crush all evil. With this confederacy it is proposed to save the Sunday-sabbath. "While the Church [professing to be organized by Christ with a union as close as the Father and Son] is relaxing its regard for the sacred day," it is proposed to save it with a confederacy which has its origin in the lack of this union.

Against all such confederacies the Lord warns us by the prophet Isaiah, thus:—

“For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, Say ye not, A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread.”

What the Church and the young people's societies need is the unity which results from the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit upon the heart, and not the empty substitute, federation.

A. F. B.

THE "National Municipal League" is another organization of the "good citizenship" type, which has for its object the reform of municipal government. A conference under the auspices of this League will be held in Louisville, Ky., May 5-7. It is stated that at this conference the churches will be appealed to, "not as denominations, but as congregations and as Christians." What force this distinction will have from a political standpoint does not appear.

An "International Good Citizens' League."

WE have already mentioned the call which has been sent out for a "National Good Citizens' Convention," to be held at Nashville, May 18-20, of this year. This convention, it now appears, has for its main purpose the formation of a permanent organization to be known as the "International Good Citizens' League," with the following aims:—

“1st. To unite for efficient and concerted action, and for mutual encouragement, all friends of good government, liberty and prosperity.

"2nd. To purify politics, and for public office to 'provide out of the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain.'

“3rd. To accept Christ and his law as the true basis of government and the supreme authority in national as in individual life.

“4th. For alleviation of suffering, uplifting of humanity, and, as far as possible, abatement of poverty.

“5th. For universal diffusion of knowledge and promulgation of truth.

“6th. To promote the study of citizen-duty from the Bible stand-point, the glorious opportunities, privileges, and possibilities within reach of that nation whose government honors God’s authority.”

The Christian Statesman prints the above with the observation that "the forces of this proposed convention and league might better unite with either the National Reform Association or the Christian Citizenship League." And this is true, as far as concerns its nature; for in spirit and purpose these three organizations are one and the same.

ONE of the most mysterious things in the world is the "logic" which upholds the Sunday laws. It may be illustrated thus (borrowing from the theology of Sunday observance for the purpose):—

The Sabbath commandment is so indefinite that it does not specify any particular day as the Sabbath.

The world being round, it is impossible for a definite day to be observed on it anyway.

Hence, you must observe that particular day of the week known as Sunday.

Or, again:—

All the ten commandments have been abolished, including the command to observe the Sabbath.

We believe in full religious liberty.

Therefore, you must observe the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, or suffer the pains and penalties of the law.

A Product, Not a Discovery, of Ignorance.

THE following from the Evangel and Sabbath Outlook, of March 25, exposes the ignorance out of which grew Mr. Gamble's recent "great discovery" concerning the Sabbath. Mr. Gamble says that the translation "first day of the week" occurring in the Authorized and Revised Versions of the English New Testament, is due to the ignorance of the translators; and that it should read "first of the sabbaths,"—that is, of the new, or Sunday sabbaths. The Outlook says:—

"As Mr. Gamble confesses, this bold arraignment of the translators of our English Bible is not original with him. A few others, whose knowledge of Greek seems to consist in obtaining the superficial definition of words from the lexicon without entering into the deeper knowledge of the genius of the language, or the nature of the passages translated, have attempted this method of escaping from the facts in the case. Every Greek scholar will smile at the assurance, born of imperfect knowledge, which Mr. Gamble's announcement of the ignorance of the translators and revisers of the New Testament evinces. The English reader can see the fallacy of this part of the new discovery by noting the following facts:—

"The Hebrews named no day of the week except the Sabbath; this was both named and numbered. It was so prominent a feature of the week that it was made the starting point from which the other days were numbered.

"Out of this conception grew the idioms which numbered each day as "First," "Second," "Third," etc., from the Sabbath and in its progress toward the next Sabbath. This conception carried the idea of ownership of the days by the Sabbaths between which they came and went. This thought and the idiomatic expression growing from it, is yet found in Hebrew references to the days of the week. To aid Mr. Gamble in future discoveries we refer him to the Hebrew Prayer Book in which the order of the lessons is indicated as we have explained. There he will find the Hebrew; Hayom yom rishon bashabbath.

"('This day is' one towards, or of, the Sabbath day) translated in the heading of the lesson so described: 'Psalm for the first day of the week.' Examples may be found on page 80 of the Prayer Book by Singer, London, and published for use in the United States under the sanction of the late Chief Rabbi Nathan Adler. The Greek writers of the New Testament followed the idea and the idiom of the Hebrew as nearly as the language would permit. Adopting the Greek 'genitive' (possessive), construction, they wrote: Mia toon Sabbatoon, which our (careless and ignorant translators, according to Mr. Gamble) render in the exactly equivalent English, 'First day of the week.' Mr. Gamble's discovery is the product of ignorance and not of even ordinary scholarship."

MUCH comment has been caused in political and business circles by Senator Chandler's bill, recently introduced in Congress, proposing that the Government take possession of the plant of the Bethlehem and Carnegie steel armor "trust," and operate it until enough armor has been provided for the Government battleships now in process of construction. The occasion of this bill was the refusal of the "trust" to furnish armor to the Government except on exorbitant terms. How the spirit exemplified in the trusts and that in the proposed remedy as well are working away from that individualism which is the foundation of republican government, is set forth in the following from a leading daily of this city:—

"These trusts delight the true socialist. To him they are gratifying proof that unrestrained individualism is by evolution working toward collectivism. The concentration of capital made possible by the improved means of production, communication and transportation, and which results in trusts, the socialist regards as a movement altogether desirable. What he wishes for, what he expects, is that when the business of the country shall come under the control of a few great trusts the Government will step in and substitute itself for the individuals in enjoyment of the monopolies. Then we should have the Government as the only capitalist, the only employer, and the coöperative commonwealth, the dream of the socialist, would be realized.

"Of course there is nothing of which the Rockefellers and Carnegies and Huntingtons disapprove so heartily as socialism. . . . It will strike the millionaires of the trusts and their servitors as grotesque to accuse them of being socialists, yet the professed socialists recognize in them, if not brothers in purpose, then instrumentalities immensely potent for the breaking down of our competitive civilization.

"Senator Chandler, also, will be astonished, and vastly amused, too, perhaps, to find himself classed as a socialist. But, whether he knows it or not, he is really fulfilling socialistic prophecy."

"If the trusts are not too dull to perceive the significance of this Chandler bill they will mend their ways, moderate their appetites and not provoke the people to applaud a proposal which may readily be extended in its application to trusts other than the greedy and defiant, if strictly businesslike, armor combine."

But it is entirely too much to expect that the trusts will moderate their ways because of popular indignation or that the spirit which is separating the Government from the principles of individualism, will stop short of the political despotism which has always been its goal in the past.

THE public will please take notice that a "Good Citizenship" convention is to be held at Nashville, Tenn., May 18-20, for the purpose of providing, among other things, for the placing in public office of "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain." Will all such in the various States please communicate with the meeting, that at the proper time there may be as little delay as possible in filling the offices. (!)

Sunday Law in Washington.

THE Sunday law forces have won what is reported as a great victory in Whitman County, Wash., the result of which will be, it is said, that "all business houses will remain closed on Sunday during the next two years." The fulcrum over which the leverage of the Sunday movement was obtained, was the saloon. The facts in the case are thus stated by the Spokesman-Review, of that State:—

"COLFAX, April 6.—All business houses in Whitman County will remain closed on Sunday during the next two years. The first case brought by Prosecuting Attorney Matthews to enforce the closing of all business houses on Sunday was settled yesterday by the defendant pleading guilty and paying a fine of $75 and costs.

"When Prosecuting Attorney Matthews was nominated for the office he now holds he promised to enforce all laws upon the statute books regardless of public opinion. During the campaign he and Sheriff Sims announced that if elected they would enforce all laws against immorality, and especially the Sunday closing and gambling laws. This was treated by many as campaign thunder and a bid for the church vote, and although again notified when the new officers took their offices the saloons of Colfax were open all day the first Sunday after these men went into office. The second Sunday they did likewise, but detectives visited the various saloons and the next day Riche Montgomery, bartender in the New Castle saloon, was arrested for violating Section 210 of the Penal Code. Upon preliminary examination he was bound over in the sum of $300 to appear for trial in the superior court.

"The saloon men and many merchants agreed to close their places of business on Sunday, provided no more arrests were made, and it was mutually agreed that a test case should be made. Accordingly the town was thoroughly canvassed for subscriptions to carry the matter up and quite a large sum was raised. Eminent counsel was employed by the defendant, and one of the leading attorneys of Colfax was employed to go to Olympia and look through the records to see if there was not a defect in the law whereby it could be rendered non-effective. The result was anxiously awaited and a reply was recently received by wire that there was no hope.

"The defendant, being only an employé of the saloon, desired to leave the State before the case was decided, so a certified check to cover any fine which might be assessed, together with all costs, was deposited with the court, and yesterday Mr. Lefrancis, proprietor of the New Castle saloon, appeared in court and on behalf of Mr. Montgomery, asked to be allowed to plead guilty of the charge. He also asked the court to be as lenient as possible, and declared so far as he was concerned there would be no further violation of the law. Judge McDonald sentenced him to pay a fine of $75 and costs, which he promptly paid.

"This case has been watched with a great deal of interest, as upon its result depended the fate of the Sunday closing law. The result is considered a great victory by the friends of the law, while those who opposed it are correspondingly dejected. Mr. Matthews says he will enforce the law to the letter during his administration, no matter if every voter in the county signs a remonstrance against its enforcement."

The saloon is no ally of religious liberty, and any fight that is conducted in its interests deserves to be lost. Let the battle for religious freedom be conducted independently of the saloon altogether. It is a Christian cause, and does not deserve to be associated with that which is purely of "the world, the flesh, and the devil."

Catholicism in Chile.

THE Rev. Webster E. Browning, Ph. D., writes the following on this subject from Santiago, Chile, to the Herald and Presbyter:—

"In Santiago, when rain was needed, it was once the custom to take the image of St. Isidore from the church of that name, in a procession to the cathedral. If rain followed this action, the image was escorted back to his own church with great honor. If no rain came, the image was publicly scourged or shut up in a room in the cathedral which is used as a prison for the refractory saints who refuse to hear prayer.

"One of the most important processions of the year is that given in honor of the wafer which has been blessed and represents the body of Christ. A procession of priests, boys, etc., issues from the cathedral, and to the sound of music proceeds to the central plaza of the city, where altars have been erected for the occasion. The priest who acts as chief at this time carries a tray upon which has been placed a small wafer. This is carried to the first altar, where it is placed, the altar being raised some fifteen feet, and the people bow or fall in adoration before it.

"According to the Council of Trent, the few words pronounced in an unknown tongue, and by a priest whose character is unknown, over this wafer, have transformed it into the real body and blood of Christ. He is there in that wafer—flesh, bones, skin, hair, muscles, nerves, and in all his personality as the Saviour of men. The wafer is thus escorted to the four corners of the square, and successively placed upon the four altars and adored by the people. The bands play airs from the operas, or other classical music, and all these things together make a scene of noise and confusion, mingled with some little idea of reverence among the people for the wafer god, and all combine to fill the mind with the idea that this is the height of true worship, all that will be needed for many days to assure them of forgiveness of sin and justification before God.

"Evidence of the control which the priests [of whom there are about two thousand in this city] have over the people may be seen every day in the streets. When a Catholic who has faithfully supported the church is thought to be dying, the last sacrament is sent to him. A priest goes in a coach, clad in robes of white; the driver sits in front with uncovered head, and by his side is a boy, also uncovered, who continually rings a bell as the coach is driven through the streets. At the sound of this bell business is for the time suspended. The merchant turns from his customer and kneels at his counter; the driver and conductor of the street-car stop the car and also kneel; the passengers who are Catholics follow their example, and the people who may be passing through the streets immediately kneel and cross themselves. To be sure, there are many in the cars and in the street who do no reverence, but the faithful are expected to do so. There was a time, and not many years ago, when it was unsafe to be in the street and not recognize with due reverence this priest with the sacrament. The hat which was not removed was often knocked off by some zealot. But the sentiment against all these processions is growing, and one now hears only the muttered curse of the bystander, or of the priest if he fail to salute him.

"Other processions and extravagances could be mentioned, but these suffice to show the trend of all the worship, toward that which is outward and ceremonial, to the neglect of the inward heart religion. And it is almost needless to relate the consequences in the lives of the people of this externalism. It has been many times exemplified in history, and with always the same result. The Greek and Roman world, at the coming of Christ, in the depths of iniquity to which they had descended, were reaping the results of their superstitious formalism. The Pharisees made long prayers and gave tithes, but the Lord compared their hearts to charnel houses. The Chileans are a very religious people, so far as regards the observance of the outward form, but their lives show that they are strangers to the new birth which Christ declared to be essential. Mendacity is fearfully prevalent; theft comes as a second nature; the Sabbath is made a day of recreation, and the morals of the social life are very low indeed.

"And yet these are a splendid people. Many are breaking away from Catholicism, and many more secretly despise it. But, disgusted with this, the only religion of which they know, they fall away into French atheism or German rationalism, and cannot be reached. The whole of Chile is open to evangelization, and there are urgent calls in many parts. And, could any one who doubts the need of missionaries but see the degradation and spiritual poverty of the people, not only in Chile, but from Panama to Cape Horn, there can be no question that these doubts would vanish. India needs missions, and Africa; the Japanese and Chinese should be heard in their call for the gospel; other lands are in dire need of the water of life; but shall South America, blessed by nature in so many ways, but blighted by man, be left in darkness?"

A SPECIAL SENTINEL.

THE AMERICAN SENTINEL of April 29 will contain matter of a character to entitle it to a very large circulation. The first article, by A. T. Jones, will be a reply to the charge of sedition made against the AMERICAN SENTINEL. This article will show that the enemies of the American principle of separation of Church and State are really the ones guilty of sedition.

Another article entitled "Murder and the Millennium" will present the awful increase in the murder record of the country, notwithstanding the majority of church leaders declare that the world is growing better. This article will show that while the Church is devoting its time to fighting crime instead of sin, crime is increasing.

A third article entitled "General Grant and Religious Liberty," will present the clear utterances of this great statesman on separation of Church and State. This article will be illustrated with a fine cut of General Grant, and another of the new tomb which will be dedicated April 27, an event of international interest.

Steps should be taken to sell this number on the street and from house to house. This issue will contain at least six appropriate illustrations.

Extra copies can be secured by addressing your State Tract Society, or the SENTINEL direct, at the usual price, $1.00 per hundred, $8.00 per thousand.

Interesting Facts.

At this time when so much is being said concerning the nations of Europe, we believe it will be interesting to everybody to see the picture of some of the people who stand at the head of the various governments. The above heading is the name of a little book, which contains besides 74 pages of very interesting facts brought out in various ways, AN ALBUM OF 21 FINE HALF-TONE CUTS DIRECT FROM THE PHOTOGRAPHS of European royalty, and includes Victoria, Queen of England; Christian IX., of Denmark, and his Queen; Frederick, Crown Prince of Denmark; Oscar, King of Sweden; Sophia, Queen of Sweden; the King and Queen of Greece; Alexander III., Czar of Russia; and Maria Dagmar, Czarina of Russia; Wilhelm II., Emperor of Germany, and his wife; Josef I., Emperor of Austria, his Queen and her son; and others of equal importance and renown.

This little book contains a total of 96 pages, nicely bound, in heavy paper, and was sold by the publisher at 25 cents. We will send it post-paid for 15 cents per copy, two copies for 25 cents. Send now. Postage stamps will be received.

New York Free Circulating Library.

THE usefulness of the New York Free Circulating Library can be greatly extended if donations of books are made to it by the many families who, at this season of the year, are disposing of books and magazines which they do not wish to retain when changing their homes, as many do in the spring, or when moving to the country.

The New York Free Circulating Library will send for any books, if a postal card is sent to the librarian, Mr. Arthur E. Bostwick, No. 226 W. 42nd St.

The Library has of late found its shelves practically denuded of many classes of literature, and there can be few better ways of bestowing books and magazines not needed in families, than sending them to the Free Circulating Library, through which channel they reach hundreds of grateful readers, instead of remaining unused in trunks and closets, as so often happens. Many who cannot afford to be subscribers to the Free Circulating Library will be glad to know that they can contribute their share to the good the Library does in this way.

Nature-Study for Public Schools.

NATURE-STUDY, or seeing familiar things in a new light, is a valuable factor in education. How many people can explain, so that a child can understand, why water puts out fire, why some young squash plants bring their shells out of the ground on their backs and others do not; or show the difference between a leaf-bud and a fruit-bud of the apple; or tell from whence all the house flies come? The world is full of such common things, about which people do not inquire. Yet, such subjects can be made very interesting to children, and they can be taken up in the schools, not as an added recitation, but as a rest exercise once or twice each week to relieve the monotony of the school room and later be made the theme for a language exercise. Here are two important faculties that may be brought into exercise,—accurate observation and the power of expressing definitely what is seen.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER

To secure widespread and favorable publicity for THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, we have decided to place a few introductory sets in each community throughout the country for comparison with all other reference works as to plan, scope, lateness of treatment and general practical and educational value. We feel that every set will create a demand for others. While the distribution will be general in extent, it will last for a limited time only, after which our regular subscription sale will begin, at prices ranging from $48 to $72 a set, according to style of binding. Now, however, to quickly and thoroughly introduce the work, as above stated, we make the price merely nominal (about the cost of paper and printing), the distribution being LIMITED TO A VERY FEW WEEKS, reserving the privilege of withdrawing the offer at any time when we consider a sufficient number of these introductory sets, at the special price, have been distributed.

OUR GREAT SPECIAL OFFER.

SEND $1.00 to THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PUBLISHING CO., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and a full set of eight volumes of THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, in cloth binding will be forwarded to you. The balance is payable at the rate of $1.50 monthly for one year, or about 5 cents a day. If you prefer the half-Morocco binding, the monthly payment will be $2.00, and for full sheep, $2.50 per month for one year. We recommend the half-Morocco style, which is particularly elegant and serviceable, and will last a lifetime. If not entirely satisfactory any set may be returned within ten days and money will be promptly refunded. Owing to the nominal price at which these introductory sets are supplied, transportation charges must be paid by the purchaser; but our entire confidence that the volumes will be gladly received and cheerfully paid for is shown by sending a $48.00 set of books on an advance payment of only $1.00. We also feel that you will thoroughly appreciate this great work and speak favorably of it to others. Each set weighs boxed nearly 50 pounds, and will be shipped by freight unless otherwise ordered. We refer you to the publishers of this paper. Please mention it when writing.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

EDITOR.

NEW YORK, APRIL 29, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 17.

The American Sentinel is published in the interests of religious liberty—Christian and Constitutional.

Any one receiving the American Sentinel without having ordered it may know that it is sent to him by some friend. Therefore those who have not ordered the Sentinel need have no fears that they will be asked to pay for it.

We are obliged to ask our readers to allow us briefly to review the position and work of the AMERICAN SENTINEL.

The reason for this will be made apparent presently, and, we think, will be sufficient to justify this request which we make.

The AMERICAN SENTINEL was established particularly to defend the American principle of separation of religion and the State: because the people who established this paper are Christians, and separation of religion and the State is Christian.

Primarily, of course, this was in the interests of Christianity. But as it is a fundamental principle of the national Government in defending and preserving this principle, in the nature of things this is in the interests of the State.

In other words, as this Christian principle of separation of religion and the State is the fundamental principle, the chief characteristic, of the national Government, and was intended to be so by those who established the Government, it is plain that to work as Christians for the maintenance of this great principle is, in every sense of the word, to work for the highest possible interests of the State.

The establishment of the SENTINEL, and its work in behalf of this Christian principle, was timely, as we then knew and as the great mass of the American people have discovered since; because there was a religious combination calling itself the National Reform Association, that was determined to subvert this principle of the Government, and, by whatever means would accomplish it, to carry the Government into a union of religion and the State, patterned exactly upon the system of the Dark Ages.

From the beginning we insisted, and we still insist, that for the American people to allow this religious combination to succeed in its endeavors would be to allow the setting up in this nation of an order of things that would be in the exact image of the papacy,—not merely because the papacy was the papacy, but because the papacy, with all the manifold evils inherent in it, was but the consequence of the disregard and subversion of the very Christian principle that is the fundamental principle of the Government of the United States. And for a religious combination again to disregard this principle would be to start upon a course whose end could not be in any wise different from that which went before; for the Christian principle is for ever the same, and the consequences of the disregard of it will be ever the same.

As disregard of this principle in the fourth century made the papacy, with all that it has ever been since, so the disregard of this principle in the nineteenth century must make the very likeness of the papacy in all its aspects. The papacy has been in history what it has been, not because the men who made it and have been connected with it were worse than all other men. The men who made the papacy, and who have ever been connected with it, have always been simply human beings, just like all other human beings. What the papacy has been in history is not because of the men, but because of the principles which actuated the men.

Take men from any place on the earth, and let them espouse the principles of the papacy, and the history of the papacy will be reproduced just as far as the men have power to do it. In all our discussions of the papacy our attacks have not been upon the men, as such, who were connected with it; but upon the principles which characterize it and which have caused the papacy to present to the world the history that it has.

Therefore, in pointing out that the success of the National Reform Association would produce in the United States the living image of the papacy, and insisting always that this must be the inevitable consequence, we have done so solely because that the principles which actuate the National Reform Association, and which that Association were determined to fasten upon the Government of the United States, are the identical principles that have produced the history that has been made by the papacy. It is the disregard of the Christian principle announced by the Lord for the guidance of the Church and the State as respects their attitude toward each other.

And in all this we have been maintaining the principle upon which the Government of the United States was founded. For those who made the nation, with its fundamental principle of separation of religion and the State said that "it is impossible for the magistrate to adjudge the right of preference among the various sects that profess the Christian faith, without erecting a claim to infallibility which would lead us back to the church of Rome." Whether they meant in this, to say that such a thing would lead the country back to the domination of the church of Rome itself, or whether they meant that it would lead back to the principles of the church of Rome in the hands of some other sect, is immaterial; because the distinction is so slight as to be indeed immaterial.

We have always said that ruin would come to the nation as certainly as this National Reform scheme should be allowed to succeed; because of the hypocrisy and general devilry that by it would be made to prevail.

We have pointed to the ruin that came upon the Roman empire as the consequence of just such a movement in the fourth century. It can never be too often repeated, and it must never be forgotten, that it was the "Christian" Roman empire that perished under the barbarian raids of the fourth and fifth centuries. It was more than sixty years after the Roman empire had become "Christian" before the flood of barbarians broke upon the empire. It was more than ninety years before the barbarians invaded the Western empire. It was more than thirty years after the three emperors, by a special decree, had required "all subjects of the empire, of whatever party or name, to adopt the faith of the Catholic Church and assume the name of 'Catholic Christians,' " and had thus made the whole empire "Christian," before any nation of the barbarians fastened itself permanently upon Roman soil.

Thus all the evidence shows that it was the "Christian" Roman empire, and not the Pagan, that perished under the invasions of the barbarians, of the North;—and this because the so-called Christian empire was worse than ever the Pagan had been. For under the system of an established church, of enforced religious dogmas, hypocrisy had been added to the natural cussedness that already prevailed; and even as Dr. Schaff has stated, "Nothing but the divine judgment of destruction upon this nominally Christian but essentially heathen world could open the way for the moral regeneration of society."

A like course can not be followed in the United States without reaching a like result. So that the success of the National Reform scheme of Christianizing the United States Government; of making this a "Christian nation;" placing all Christian laws, institutions, and usages on a legal basis, and requiring respect to them as legal by all the people, would be the surest token of impending ruin. This is as certain as the law that "like causes produce like effects."

But this evil is not, and cannot be, confined merely to the United States. We have pointed out that the influence of the United States Government, while it adhered strictly to the principles upon which it was founded, has been powerful to lead all the nations toward religious freedom; so that by foreign publicists this nation has been called "the classic land of religious liberty." And when, under the influence and power of the National Reform combination, this country shall be led to the subversion of these principles, to the recognition of religion in national affairs, the influence of this perversion will be equally powerful to carry the other nations backward again to religious despotism, and thus the evil thing becomes world-wide. Then when "the divine judgment of destruction upon this nominally Christian but essentially heathen world" shall again fall, as surely it must fall, the destruction will be world-wide. And all nations being involved in the evil, it will be impossible for the Lord to find on the earth any new nations by whom to sweep away this earth-breaking curse; and nothing remains but for him to employ the armies of heaven to accomplish the inevitable result, even as it is written:—

"Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand; a day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations. . . . And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?" Joel 2:1, 2, 11.

And so, in the nature of things, the end of the world must come.

In view of all this, we have said, and we still say, that when the National Reform combination succeeds in its endeavor with respect to the United States Government, then the only safety, the only deliverance from certain ruin, for any man, will be to separate utterly from the whole wicked alliance, even as again it is written:—

"And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. . . . Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Rev. 18:4, 5, 8.

Such, in brief, has been the position and work of the AMERICAN SENTINEL from the first number that was printed until this present issue. And such the position and work of the SENTINEL will continue to be, until the last number shall have been issued.

Now we are ready to tell why it is that we have asked the indulgence of our readers while we should restate the position of the SENTINEL; and that is that the men who have been engaged in this evil work of subverting the Christian principles upon which the Government of the United States was founded, and in bringing about this system which, in its turn, can bring only this ruin,—these men are charging us with "sedition" and with "turning away the hearts of citizens from the United States Government."

One of these, in particular, out in the Western Reserve, is making specially prominent this charge. He was born and bred a National Reformer. He has been a leader in the National Reform movement ever since June, 1887, when the National Reform convention held that year at Pittsburg appointed him as chief of their "prayer league," to pray at noon every day for their religious-political "kingdom of God" to come on the earth.

This man is making himself now prominent as a special defender of the flag. It seems he carries with him a United States flag; and before his audiences enters against us the charge of "sedition," of "turning away the hearts of citizens from the United States Government;" and thus, with "disrespect for the flag." He gathers, if possible, a number of veterans of the late war, and puts them upon the front seats; and then, by systematic misrepresentation both of us and his own position, he uses the arts of the demagogue to turn their love for the flag, into the fire of bitter hatred for those whom he has thus set before them as "seditious." Then he caps his climax with drawing forth his flag and handing it to one of the veterans, and has him wave it while he himself leads the audience, or as many of them as he has succeeded in bamboozling, in giving a grand "Hip! Hip! Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!" for the flag. And this "Hurrah" for the flag is expected to be led with the spirit to "kick out of all loyal fraternities" every one of us who "teach sedition" and "turn away the hearts of citizens from the United States Government." The cut on the first page of this paper is a photograph of one of these scenes that he thus worked up not long ago out at Ellsworth, Ohio.

The trick in this is that our opposition to the National Reform movement, our warning against the iniquity and the ruin that must certainly come from the success of that movement, and our calling upon all people to keep themselves separate from the whole scheme and all its workings if they would escape the ruin that it must certainly bring,—this he takes and deftly turns so as to make it appear that it is all aimed against the Government itself.

In other words, all our opposition, and all our warnings, against the National Reform government, he takes up and so turns as to make it appear that they are all against the United States Government as it was originally founded: when the truth is, and as all fair readers of the SENTINEL know, that the very object of the 'existence of the AMERICAN SENTINEL is to maintain the principles upon which the United States Government was originally founded, and in this, in the best possible way to preserve the integrity of the Government itself as it was originally founded, and as our fathers hoped it would forever remain.

And now these men who have removed the very foundation stone of the noble edifice erected by our fathers; and who are now diligently and zealously engaged in remodeling the whole structure so as to make it altogether another government, modeled upon the principles of the church of Rome which our fathers hoped particularly that we should forever escape,—these men are they who charge us thus with “sedition,” with “disrespect for the flag,” and with “turning away the hearts of citizens from the United States Government”!

It may not be amiss to give to our readers some of the specifications as samples of how this man “proves” against us his charge of “sedition.” There are three specific counts upon which he does this.

“First,” he says that we “arouse discontent against the United States Government, disturb public tranquility, etc., by teaching that the Bible identifies this Government with pagan Rome.”

Every reader of the AMERICAN SENTINEL knows that this is altogether a mistake. No such suggestion has ever been made by any Seventh-day Adventist. Our friend simply doesn't know what he is talking about.

His “second” specification is that “they arouse discontent against the United States Government, disturb public tranquility, etc., by teaching that the Bible identifies the United States Government with the papacy.”

This is another mistake just like the one before. It simply is not true. We have never identified the United States with the papacy. We have never even connected it with the papacy, except in the way that we have pointed out in this article: that is, through the mischievous working of the National Reform scheme of which this man himself is now a zealous champion,—this scheme by which they, adopting the principles of the papacy, subvert the true and Christian principles of the Government of the United States, and thus establish here a system of things in the exact image of the papacy.

An image of a thing cannot be identified with the thing itself, except in its relations. This is the only way in which we have ever identified the United States Government with the papacy. And that we are not in any wise amiss in this part of it, will be evident to every one who will read the following statement of fact concerning the National Reform combination in its different stages.

August 31, 1881, these National Reformers published in their official organ the following words:—

“This common interest [‘of all religious people in the Sabbath’—Sunday] ought both to strengthen our determination to work, and our readiness to coöperate in every way with our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens. We may be subjected to some rebuffs in our first proffers, and the time has not yet come when the Roman Church will consent to strike hands with other churches—as such; but the time has come to make repeated advances, and gladly to accept coöperation in any form in which they may be willing to exhibit it. It is one of the necessities of the situation.”

December 11, 1884, in their official organ, they published this:—

“Whenever they [the Roman Catholics] are willing to coöperate in resisting the progress of political atheism, we will gladly join hands with them.”

In his Encyclical of 1885, Pope Leo XIII. addressed to Catholics everywhere the following words:—

“We exhort all Catholics who would devote careful attention to public matters, to take an active part in all municipal affairs and elections, and to further the principles of the church in all public services, meetings and gatherings. All Catholics must make themselves felt as active elements in daily political life in the countries where they live. They must penetrate wherever possible in the administration of civil affairs; must constantly use their utmost vigilance and energy to prevent the usages of liberty from going beyond the limits fixed by God's law. All Catholics should do all in their power to cause the constitutions of States, and legislation, to be modeled in the principles of the true church. All Catholic writers and journalists should never lose for an instant from view, the above prescriptions. All Catholics should redouble their submission to authority, and unite their whole heart, soul, and body, and mind, in the defense of the church.”

In an official report of a conference of leading National Reformers held at Saratoga, N. Y., August 14–17, 1887, the following occurs:—

“REV. DR. PRICE of Tennessee—‘I wish to ask the secretary, Has any attempt ever been made by the National Reform Association to ascertain whether a concensus, or agreement, could be reached with our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, whereby we may unite in support of the schools, as they do in Massachusetts?’

“THE SECRETARY—‘I regret to say there has not. . . . But I recognize it as a wise and dutiful course on the part of all who are engaged in or who discuss the work of education, to make the effort to secure such an agreement.’

“DR. PRICE—‘I rise to move that the National Reform Association be requested by this Conference to bring this matter to the attention of American educators and of Roman Catholic authorities, with a view to securing such a basis of agreement, if possible.’”

The motion was seconded, and adopted. In November, 1888, the then most prominent leader in the National Reform combination, by personal request, secured the coöperation of Cardinal Gibbons with them in urging upon Congress the enactment of a national law to “promote” the observance of Sunday “as a day of religious worship.”

November 12, 1889, at the Congress of Catholic laymen of the United States, the following statement was made:—

“What we should seek is an en rapport with the Protestant Christians who desire to keep Sunday holy.

. . . We can bring the Protestant masses over to the reverent moderation of the Catholic Sunday."

At that time the American Sabbath Union was the leading element in the National Reform combination, and of this word of counsel of the Catholic laymen, the American Sabbath Union said:—

"The National Lay Congress of Roman Catholics, after correspondence and conference with the American Sabbath Union, passed its famous resolution in favor of coöperation with Protestants in Sabbath reform. . . . This does not mean that the millennium is to be built in a day. This is only a proposal of courtship; and the parties thus far have approached each other shyly."

operation of the papacy in this country in bringing the United States Government under the domination of the religious power after the image of the original of the papacy itself. These facts demonstrate that by such means the National Reform combination did at last secure the coöperation of the papacy in its bad endeavor to subvert the original principles of the Government of the United States, and commit this Government to legislation in behalf of religion and in the service of the Church, exactly after the image of the papacy.

It is a fact also that, as the consequence of this very work of the National Reformers which they pride them-

NATIONAL REFORMERS SUPPLICATING ROME.

"This common interest [of all religious people in the Sabbath—Sunday] ought both to strengthen our determination to work, and our readiness to co-operate in every way with our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens. We may be subjected to some rebuffs in our first proffers, and the time has not yet come when the Roman Church will consent to strike hands with other churches—as such; but the time has come to make repeated advances, and gladly to accept co-operation in any form in which they may be willing to exhibit it. It is one of the necessities of the situation."

—Christian Statesman, August 31, 1881.

In 1892 the National Reform combination, in co-operation with the papacy in this country led by Archbishop Ireland, Archbishop Gross, and Archbishop Riordan, did, under threats of political perdition, secure from Congress legislation setting up Sunday as the Christian Sabbath in the place of the Sabbath of the fourth commandment as it was read in Congress from the Bible, and as God spoke it from the top of Sinai.

All this is sober fact. And these references demonstrate that the National Reform combination did certainly for eight years, openly bid and work for the cooperation of the papacy in this country in bringing the United States Government under the domination of the religious power after the image of the original of the papacy itself. These facts demonstrate that by such means the National Reform combination did at last secure the coöperation of the papacy in its bad endeavor to subvert the original principles of the Government of the United States, and commit this Government to legislation in behalf of religion and in the service of the Church, exactly after the image of the papacy.

And now, in the face of this undeniable history of which this man was a part, he has the brass to stand up before a crowd of American people and charge us with "teaching that the Bible identifies the United States Government with the papacy."

If we had really been teaching this, it would have been teaching precisely what he and his fellow-workers were, in principle, both teaching and doing all these years.

And now, as he charges that such a thing is "sedition," and as he and his fellow-workers have been for years doing their very best to accomplish just that thing, both in principle and in practice, while all these years we have been using our utmost endeavor to prevent the first step toward any such thing, it is as plain as A B C that his charge of "sedition" lies against himself and his fellow-workers above all other people, and not against us in any sense whatever. That is the truth.

His "third" specification is that "they are seditious in teaching that the Bible identifies the United States Government with the archrebel Satan, in opposition to truth and righteousness in the earth."

To sustain this specification, he cites our teaching with reference to the beast brought to view in Rev. 13:1-11, of which it is said: "I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." And, as it is plain from the context that the word "dragon" here refers to the devil, this is why he says that we teach "that the Bible identifies the United States Government with the archrebel, Satan."

Here again he plays that trick of taking what we have said, and all we say, of the Government after it has been turned into a National Reform government, and making it apply to the United States Government as it was originally founded.

This scripture as above quoted, refers to the Government in both these phases. The United States Government as it was originally founded, is beautifully described by the word of the Lord, as a beast coming up having two horns like a lamb. That is a correct description of the United States Government as it was originally founded, and as it stood, upon the principles which characterized it,—the two grand principles of civil and religious freedom; separation of religion and the State; no king, and no pope.

Of all the symbols used in the Word of God to illustrate earthly governments, this is the only one that is given the mild and gentle characteristics of the lamb. And this is the word which God has set down as descriptive of the United States Government as it stood in its original beauty, grounded upon the principle which God himself announced, the absolute separation of religion, and particularly the Christian religion, from the jurisdiction or cognizance of the State.

But an anomaly appears; a change occurs. This beast having two horns "like a lamb" comes to speak "as a dragon." This refers to the change brought about through the working of this National Reform scheme. This anomaly marks the result of the National Reform subversion of the principles upon which the Government was founded, and its dragging the Government into an espousal of the principles of the papacy. In the first half of the thirteenth chapter of Revelation, the papacy is represented under the symbol of a beast which has by no means the characteristics of a lamb; and which receives its power and its seat and its great authority from "the dragon," which, in the twelfth chapter, is declared to be "that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan." The symbol then, having two horns like a lamb yet speaking like a dragon, shows that the original character of the Government becomes so changed that the spirit of Satan is manifested instead of the characteristics of a lamb.

Our teaching has always been, and it is yet, that the scripture statement that the beast had two horns "like a lamb," is descriptive of the United States Government as it was originally founded. And it has been our constant endeavor to keep the Government of the United States inseparably attached to these principles. Had this been done, benefits and blessings would from this nation have flowed forth to the nations of the earth, beyond the highest dreams of the far-seeing, noble men who, under God, were instrumental in founding the Government as it was founded.

But the people of the United States, forgetting these principles, and losing sight of the high destiny and the wondrous privileges that God had set before them, have allowed these principles to be subverted, and have allowed the Government in its words and laws to be turned aside, so that already the oppressive, cruel voice of the dragon has been heard. And the same scripture goes on to tell how that this voice will yet further be heard in speaking, and causing that as many as do "not worship the image of the beast should be killed."

Under the deceptive workings of the National Reform principles, persecutions and cruelties after the very image of the system of the Dark Ages will yet be inflicted upon the people of the United States in pursuance of laws of the United States, and in direct coöperation and alliance with the papacy itself in the United States and in the world. And thus a further deception is wrought, and another suggestion of the scripture is detected, in that, while the symbol stands in outward appearance with the characteristics of a lamb, yet it speaks and acts with the spirit of the dragon; and, as it stands in this ambiguous position, is described in another place in the book of Revelation as "the false prophet."

While pretending to represent the principles of liberty and truth, it actually is made to practice the principles of despotism and iniquity; and this change, which means so much to the people of the United States, and to all the world, and which is so vividly expressed in the Scriptures,—all this is brought about through the mischievous workings of the religio-political scheme of the National Reform combination of which this man has been for years, and now is, a prominent and zealous leader.

And now, after all this, in the presence of all this which is only undeniable fact, this man in Ohio, this man, charges us with "sedition!"

Post-Millennialism Makes a Worldly Church.

By the late Dr. A. J. Gordon.

"THIS same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" is the parting promise of Jesus to his disciples, communicated through the two men in white apparel, as a cloud received him out of their sight. When after more than fifty years in glory he breaks the silence and speaks once more in the Revelation which he gave to his servant John, the post-ascension gospel which he sends opens with, "Behold, he cometh with clouds," and closes with "Surely I come quickly." Considering the solemn emphasis thus laid upon this doctrine, and considering the great prominence given to it throughout the teaching of our Lord and of his apostles, how was it that for the first five years of my pastoral life it had absolutely no place in my preaching? Undoubtedly the reason lay in the lack of early instruction. Of all the sermons heard from childhood on, I do not remember listening to a single one upon this subject. In the theological course, while this truth had its place indeed, it was taught as in most theological seminaries of this country, according to the post-millennial interpretation; and with the most reverent respect for the teachers holding this view I must express my mature conviction that, though the doctrine of our Lord's second coming is not ignored in this system, it is placed in such a setting as to render it quite impractical as a theme for preaching and quite inoperative as a motive for Christian living. For if a millennium must intervene before the return of our Lord from heaven, or if the world's conversion must be accomplished before he shall come in his glory, how is it possible for his disciples in this present time to obey his words: "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord shall come"?

I well remember in my early ministry hearing two humble and consecrated laymen speaking of this hope in the meetings of the church, and urging it upon Christians as the ground of unworldliness and watchfulness of life. Discussion followed with these good brethren, and then a searching of the Scriptures to see if these things were so: and then a conviction of their truth; and then? The godly William Hewitson declares that the discovery of the scriptural hope of our Lord's second coming wrought in him a change amounting almost to a second conversion. What if another, not presuming to be named in company with this consecrated saint, should nevertheless set his hand and seal to the affirmation that the strongest and most permanent impulse of his ministry came from his apprehension of the blessed hope of our Lord's second coming?

But how is it that this doctrine, so plainly and conspicuously written in Scripture, could have remained so long undiscovered? In answering this question we see how little ground we have for glorying over the Jews. They did not recognize Christ in his first advent because they discerned in Scripture only those predictions which announced him as a reigning and conquering Messiah. This conception they wove into a veil of exposition and tradition so thick that when Jesus appeared as the lowly and humble Nazarene they knew him not, but "hid as it were their faces from him." And this strong prepossession still obscures their vision so that "even unto this day when Moses is read the veil is upon their heart."

DR. A. J. GORDON.

With the larger mass of Gentile Christians the case is just the reverse. They know Christ crucified, and believing that the cross is to conquer the world and that the preaching of the gospel in the present dispensation is to bring all men to God, they see no need of the personal coming of the Christ as King to subdue all things under his feet and to reign visibly on the earth. This conception in turn has been woven into an elaborate veil of tradition for Gentile believers and "until this day, remaineth the same veil untaken away" in the reading of the New Testament.

It was not so in the beginning. For three hundred years the Church occupied the position of a bride awaiting the return of the bridegroom from heaven—she meantime, holding herself free from all alliance with this world, content to fulfill her calling in witnessing for Christ, in suffering with Christ, and so to accomplish her appointed work of the gathering out of the elect body for the Lord "until he come." A strange and almost grotesque conception to many modern Christians no doubt. But it was while maintaining this attitude that the Church moved on most rapidly and irresistibly in her missionary conquests.

Then came the foreshadowings of the great apostasy. The world which had been a foe to the Church became her friend and patron; Constantine, the emperor of Rome became her head, and thus the eyes of Christians began to be withdrawn from Him who is "Head over all things to his church." The great and good Augustine yielded to the seduction and was among the first to teach that in the temporal triumph of Christianity the kingdom had already come, though the King with whose return the primitive Church had been wont to identify the appearing of the kingdom was still absent. Little by little, as the apostasy deepened, this early hope of Christians became eclipsed till, in the words of Auberlin, "when the Church became a harlot she ceased to be a bride who goes forth to meet her bridegroom," and thus chiliasm disappeared. What moreover would have been deemed an apostasy in the primitive Church grew into a tradition and a creed in the post-Nicene Church, which creed until this day largely rules the faith of Christians.

The most eminent living master of ecclesiastical history, Harnack, photographing in a single sentence the Church of the earliest centuries, says: "Originally the Church was the heavenly Bride of Christ, the abiding place of the Holy Spirit." Does the reader not see that here is the same two-fold conception—Christ in-resident in the Church by the Spirit; and Christ expected to return in person as the Bridegroom for his bride? This was the Church which moved with such rapid and triumphant progress against ancient heathenism. With no power except "the irresistible might of weakness;" with no wealth except the riches of glory inherited through her heavenly citizenship; refusing all compromise with the world, declining all patronage of kings and emperors, she nevertheless went forth conquering and to conquer, till in a few years she had undermined the whole colossal fabric of paganism. And might not the Church of Christ do the same to-day if she were to return to this primitive ideal? and if renouncing her dependence on human resources—wealth and power and social prestige, she were to inscribe upon her banner that ancient motto: "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."—From "How Christ Came to Church," Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, Pa.

ing illustration. While all eyes are thus for the moment turned once more toward the commanding figure which must ever hold so prominent a place in American history, it is a fitting time to recall some of those utterances of the dead leader which, more than his feats of arms, revealed the stalwart integrity and true Americanism of his character. For this purpose there is perhaps nothing more suitable than his Address to the Army of the Tennessee, delivered at Des Moines, Iowa, in September, 1875. It is especially fitting that the American people should recall this address at this time, because of the emphasis it puts upon the fundamental American principle of separation of Church and State, which is just now, through the machinations of religious combinations seeking political power, in the most imminent danger of entire subversion.

Following is the address.

ADDRESS TO THE ARMY OF THE TENNESSEE.

COMRADES: It always affords me much gratification to meet my old comrades in arms ten to fourteen years ago, and to live over again in memory the trials and hardships of those days,—hardships imposed for the preservation and perpetuation of our free institutions. We believed then and believe now that we had a Government worth fighting for, and, if need be, dying for. How many of our comrades of those days paid the latter price for our preserved Union! Let their heroism and sacrifices be ever green in our memory. Let not the results of their sacrifices be destroyed. The Union and the free institutions for which they fell should be held more dear for their sacrifices. We will not deny to any who fought against us any privileges under the Government which we claim for ourselves. On the contrary, we welcome all such who come forward in good faith to help build up the waste places and to perpetuate our institutions against all enemies, as brothers in full interest with us in a common heritage. But we are not prepared to apolo-

GENERAL GRANT'S NEW TOMB IN RIVERSIDE PARK, NEW YORK CITY.

General Grant on Separation of Church and State.

APRIL 27, the birthday of General Ulysses S. Grant, while the representatives of the military world unite in demonstrations of honor to his memory, the remains of the great leader will be transferred from the temporary tomb in which they have reposed since the general's death, to their permanent resting-place in the new and imposing mausoleum in Riverside Park, New York, overlooking the Hudson River, as shown in the accompanygize for the part we took in the war. It is to be hoped that like trials will never again befall our country. In this sentiment no class of people can more heartily join than the soldier who submitted to the dangers, trials, and hardships of the camp and the battle-field, on whichever side he fought. No class of people are more interested in guarding against a recurrence of those days. Let us, then, begin by guarding against every enemy threatening the perpetuity of free republican institutions.

I do not bring into this assemblage politics,—certainly not partisan politics,—but it is a fair subject for soldiers in their deliberations to consider what may be necessary to secure the prize for which they battle. In a republic like ours, where the citizen is the sovereign and the official the servant, where no power is exercised except by the will of the people, it is important that the sovereign—the people—should possess intelligence. The free school is the promoter of that intelligence which is to preserve us a free nation. If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence, on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, in this centennial year of our national existence, I believe it is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundation of the house commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Concord and Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the more perfect security of free thought, free speech, and free press; pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar of money appropriated to their support, no matter how raised, shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian school. Resolve that neither the State or nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical tenets. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contribution. Keep the Church and State forever separate. With these safeguards I believe the battles which created the Army of the Tennessee will not have been fought in vain.

"ART thou he that troubleth Israel?" was the query put anciently by Ahab to Elijah; and the same query has been put in the same spirit to those bearing the message of God, by opposers of the truth, from Elijah's day down to the present. Ahab was the real troubler of Israel, the real enemy of the peace and prosperity of his country.

Murder and the Millennium.

THERE were 10,652 men, women and children murdered in the United States in 1896.

Allowing forty feet to each vehicle and ten vehicles to each funeral, the number of persons murdered in the United States last year would make a funeral procession eight hundred miles long.

Traveling at the rate of five miles an hour it would take six days and sixteen hours for this procession to pass a given point. Starting at noon on Sunday and traveling day and night, the last of this train of tears and blood and blighted hopes, this product of greed and rage and lust would pass by at the early hour of two on the next Sunday morning.

For years this record of blood has steadily increased. The number murdered in 1892 was 6,794; the number in 1896 was 10,652. This is an increase in five years of nearly 57 per cent., while the population in the same time increased less than 12 per cent. And yet in the face of these startling figures the large majority of religious leaders teach that the world is getting better, that we are entering the long-expected millennium.

The authority for these figures is the Chicago Tribune, which publishes on January 1st of each year, among other statistics, the number of homicides during the previous year. This responsible journal could have no object in exaggerating this record of crime.

Those who prophesy smooth things, who have predicted a millennial reign of righteousness now dawning upon the earth, have denied the correctness of these figures in order to break the force of their import. With this in mind the writer corresponded with the Tribune, and received the following clear statement under date of March 31, 1897, of the methods used in collecting these statistics:—

"The only defense needed for the statistics is an explanation showing how they are collected. Every morning the telegraphic reports to the Chicago papers are examined for these and other statistics. In addition to this the leading papers of every important city in every State and Territory are closely scrutinized, and each case is entered. The statistics as a whole, therefore, include every case of murder received by the Tribune by telegraph, and by mail in the exchange list. These cases are carefully kept day by day to the end of the year. My impression is that the totals are under rather than over the exact figures.

"Very truly yours,

"GEO. P. UPTON,

"Asso. Ed. Tribune."

Judge Isaac C. Parker, of the United States District Court, in a signed article in the New York World, of Feb. 9, 1896, writes thus:—

"The record of the last five years ('91-'95) shows that there have been 43,902 homicides in the United States, an average of 7,317 per year. In the same time there have been 723 legal executions and 1,118 lynchings.

"This bloody record shows a fearful increase of crime which destroys human life."

"How can we correct this condition of blood? It must be corrected. If we cannot, the man of crime will soon be in the ascendancy."

In the World, of Feb. 14, 1896, the Judge is reported as saying that—

"The number of persons who have been murdered in the United States in the last five years is six times larger than the continental army at the close of the Revolution, and the number murdered last year is greater than our standing army at the outbreak of the civil war."

"The issue before the country is not money or tariff, but whether or not we are able to guarantee proper protection to human life."

While these fearful facts do not agree with the programme mapped out by a large proportion of religious teachers, yet they do agree with the Word of the Lord, which speaks thus:—

"The number murdered last year in the U. S. would make a funeral procession 800 miles long."

"In the last days perilous times shall come." "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3:1-13.

The theory that all men are to be converted before the Lord's second coming is an error. The Lord's explanation of his parable of the wheat and tares (Matt. 13:37-39) reads thus:—

"He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; the reapers are the angels."

Putting the Lord's explanation into the parable it reads thus:—

Gather not the wicked from among the just lest in destroying the wicked ye destroy the righteous. Let both the righteous and the wicked dwell together in the earth until the end of the world; and then gather the wicked to be destroyed in the furnace of fire, and the righteous for the kingdom of their Father. Compare Matt. 13:28-30 and 13:38-43.

Despite these plain scriptures the religious world is expecting a reign of righteousness and peace on the earth before the second coming of the Lord. Like the Jews at Christ's first coming, the religious teachers of to-day have fixed up a programme for the Lord contrary to the scriptures. Having done this they overlook the startling signs of the times, while watching for signs which shall confirm their unscriptural predictions. In the very presence of the most startling signs of the second advent they come, saying, Show us a sign; just as the Pharisees of old in the presence of the greatest Sign, the Lord himself, demanded "Show us a sign."

Error begets error, and growing weary of waiting for the predicted reign of righteousness they have come to the conclusion that they must bring it by their own efforts. Consequently, we have the modern "Christian Citizenship" movement, with the avowed purpose of bringing about a reign of righteousness by human law; but instead of a reign of peace we have almost a "reign of terror."

The preaching of the cross is the only way to reach the seat of the disease, the carnal heart; but this is fast being abandoned by the Church of to-day for the treatment of crime, the surface symptoms of the disease. Meanwhile, murder multiplies, the funeral train, the pageant of the prince of darkness, swells its ranks and moves on to the city of the dead.

Oh, where are the men of God, whose lips have been touched with a live coal from off the altar, who are men endowed with power from on high, who will at this crisis cry aloud and spare not, who will lift up their voice like a trumpet and proclaim that "all flesh is as grass," that "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts," are men to be saved from their sins?

No conception of the nature of the Sabbath can be at all near the true one which is accompanied by any fear that it will become "lost" because people seem to be paying less and less deference to it. Such a conception puts the Sabbath on the basis of a mere human institution. But the Sabbath is divine, and indestructible.

Ballot and Bullet.—No. 4.

BY H. E. GIDDINGS.

WHEN the citizen takes the ballot where can he stop and be loyal to his pledge?

Where can the Christian begin and be true to God in keeping his loving commands?

Let us take one example. In 1844, many peaceful looking ballots were folded and placed in the boxes. These elected James K. Polk to the presidency. When he was inaugurated these ballots began to unfold, compelling him to take an oath faithfully to serve the people as they had prescribed in the Constitution. Let us carefully watch the ballot unfold and see what is in it.

Texas complying with the conditions was admitted into the Union as a State. The ballot sovereignty had promised to protect each State against invasion. The Mexican army invaded Texas, killing her citizens and destroying property. The President, in pursuit of his oath fastened upon him by the ballot, issued a call for some of the power which the people had promised him that he might carry out his obligations. The power came in the form of men with guns,—in those guns, bullets. The people know the result. Mexicans and loyal U. S. soldiers were killed by the hundreds. If this was not all in the ballot when it was first cast, where did it come from?

The ballot is of no force unless the men who cast it will stand by it,—the men can do nothing without guns and the guns are useless without bullets, and all falls as unmeaning as autumn leaves unless the bullets kill.

But, says the non-combatant, the Christian has no right to use the bullet. By what show of reason then can he fasten it upon others?

This peaceable ballot was bought with consecrated blood placed upon the altar by noble men who pledged their lives, their fortunes, and sacred honor at the shrine of liberty. He who will do less to-day has no right to employ the ballot. Those who use it to-day intelligently and sincerely stand on the same platform with those noble men pledging themselves as fully. He who, when casting the peaceful ballot in the decision of any political question, does not see in it the obligations he is placing others under as well as himself, is not qualified to vote.

A man in order to act properly the part of sovereign in the use of the ballot must see in it not only privileges but also the grave responsibility he is enjoining upon others. He must see that in placing men in responsible positions he is as truly holden for the discharge of their duties as they are, and if there is anything in it which he could not do personally he has no shadow of right to empower another to do it for him.

Our peaceful ballot, as well as the peace we enjoy in using it, was born in blood with the sword and bullet. It has been maintained ever since in the same way. It can be secured no other way.

He who does not see in the quiet ballot the nation's sovereignty in the voter, the solemn responsibility which rests upon officials, the oath of office, the call for troops, the trumpet and the drum, the belching cannon, the groans of the dying and the bloody field; the tears of widows and orphans, desolated homes and blasted hopes, has an imperfect idea of what it means to be a citizen of the grandest of all governments—the United States of America.

Let the Christian be true to his calling, the work of Christ, who came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them.

Let the sovereign citizen be true to the ballot, not only in its peaceful folding, but in its logical unfolding, knowing that the bullet is but the supplement to the ballot. They are by nature united; neither is of any force without the other.

The ballot is the premise of a practical syllogism: "A government of the people, by the people, and for the people," and the bullet is the conclusion.

Let every man stand loyal and true to his calling.

The Loss of Spiritual Power Explains the Appeal to Civil Power.

From "Baptist Principles of Religious Liberty," by Geo. B. Wheeler.

In the "Hallowed Day" before referred to, it is said:—

"We see the sad spectacle of the great moral and religious activities of the Church dropped down into the rut of the ordinary routine of mere business affairs, while her beautiful and glorious life is shorn of its spiritual power."—Page 20.

A paper read before the New York Baptist Pastors' Conference, Feb. 4, 1895, says:—

"The writer feels that this is a pleasure-loving age, when too many of our churches have degenerated into religious clubs, to gratify the esthetic tastes of the wealthy; when refined Christians excuse themselves from disagreeable civic and other duties; when pig sty tenements are rented to the poor at twenty per cent. on value, buildings rented for saloons and brothels, and even license petitions signed by nominal Christians; when the faces of the poor are ground by sweat house proprietors and by iniquitous combinations and trusts in which those who claim to be Christians are interested."

One of the last articles written by the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, entitled "Drifts Among Baptists," in the Watchman, Feb. 14, 1895, says:—

"It is no secret that the liturgical tendency has appeared in some of our Baptist congregations. It has manifested itself indeed in a very mild form—in the chanting of responses, in the use of occasional collects, and in the recitation of the Lord's Prayer and of the Apostle's Creed. This we have met in a few churches, while in many we have encountered a musical service so elaborate and long-drawn-out as to drive the sermon into very narrow quarters. Then quite generally our churches have fallen into line in observing sacred days—Christmas, Good Friday, and Easter. Far be it from us to restrict the liberty in such matters. Yet the practical observation must be made, that ritualism, like eczema in the human body, is generally the symptom of a low state of the blood. As a rule, when the Church becomes secularized, it becomes ritualized, while it is equally true that great revivals pouring through the Church, have almost always burst the liturgical bands and restored it to the freedom of the Spirit."

Rev. Walter Evans, in an article in the Arena, October, 1895, says:—

"The church of the apostles and martyrs, few in numbers, unorganized, poor, despised and persecuted because it was pure, was invincible. But the church of victorious Constantine—the church of royal patronage, intoxicated with worldly success, lulled in the lap of luxury, first slept in security, and then (all but) died in iniquity. So it is ever. Shall history repeat itself? We hope not. We pray not. But no careful observer of men, and events as reflected in the secular and religious press, can fail to see that the relative power of the church over the masses for public and personal righteousness in this nation, has most signally and sadly failed to keep pace with the increase in the number of communicants in the churches. There has been indeed an increase of numbers in the church, but relatively a decline in moral influence and spiritual power. The church has waxed; religion has waned; Christians have multiplied: but the significance of the term has become indefinitely vague; quantity has been attained, but quality lost."

In a remonstrance and petition against allowing the State to judge in matters of conscience, sent to the Connecticut legislature in 1791, it is said:—

"And we long to see religion left entirely in the hands of Christ, to be governed alone by his laws, that the grand controversy may be decided, whether religion is such an adjective that it cannot stand of itself, or so important that it will support itself upon its own merits, and all who trust in it."

O that Baptists would heed the pleadings of a Russian boy, addressed in 1892 to a prayer-meeting in the First Baptist Church of Chicago, following a call of the leader of the meeting for signatures to a petition to Congress for a Sunday law closing the World's Fair on Sunday! Following is the boy's appeal:—

"I am from Russia, the land of intolerance; the land of a union of Church and State. I have seen the scars on the wrists of the missionaries whom you sent to my country—scars made by chains placed on them by Russia's union of Church and State. I joined the Baptist Church in Russia because it trusted in God, not in the State. And now I come to America and enter my beloved Baptist Church, and hear you petitioning Congress for a law to bind chains on the wrists of your fellowmen. I appeal to you in the name of God, Send your petitions to the throne of God, and not to the Congress of the United States."

The statement so often made that Christianity in this country cannot be maintained unless its chief bulwark—the Sabbath—be supported by the civil law, is a terrible reflection on the power of Him who declared that he would be with his disciples till the end of the world, and who said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." It is equivalent to saying that in this country where Christians are protected in every way in the promulgation and practice of their religion (with the single exception of seventh-day observers), their religion is so devoid of vital, inherent power, that without the direct support of the human arm of civil power, regard for its precepts will perish from the hearts of men.

What the Church needs to-day is not civil power, but divine power; a revival of primitive, apostolic, Holy-Spirit religion. The writer appeals to Baptists in the language of the Russian boy, "Send your petitions to the throne of God, and not to the Congress of the United States."

"Send your petitions to the throne of God, and not to the Congress of the United States."

ARIZONA too is afflicted with the Christian Citizenship Sunday Legislation Reform. A friend has sent to us a copy of one of their circulars.

In this they declare that, "If you love your home, you will not approve of foot ball on Sunday;" that, "If you love your country, you will not approve of baseball on Sunday;" that, "If you love your own best good, you will not approve of any public amusements on Sunday;" and that, "If you love God, you will keep the Sabbath holy as He has commanded."

The last of these statements is true enough, as He has commanded that you shall "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work." But all this has nothing whatever to do with Sunday or with what a man shall do on Sunday except that he shall work.

As for the rest of these things, a man can love his home and approve of foot ball on Sunday just as well as to approve of foot ball on any other day. A man can love his country and approve of base ball on Sunday just as well as to approve of base ball on any other day. And a man can love his own best good, and approve of public amusements on Sunday just as really as he can approve of public amusements any other day.

One of the most surprising things in connection with this whole Sabbath and Sunday subject is that men will confound things that are absolutely distinct, assuming the one thing which above all other things it is essential to prove, and presume that the ignorance or indifference of the people will allow it to pass unchallenged. And all this in the face of the Word of God which makes perfectly plain the eternal fact that the seventh day of the week, and that day only, is or ever can be the Sabbath.

A "Significant Gathering" in 1900.

"At the recent meeting of the Board of Control of the Epworth League in New York," says a New York religious journal, "the following resolution was adopted: 'Resolved, That we desire, as heretofore, to express our wish for close fellowship with all Christian young people, and our readiness to coöperate in practical Christian work with the young people of all evangelical denominations, and hereby authorize the general Cabinet to receive or make such advances for a federation of young people's societies, or for a Young People's Congress in the year 1900, as they may deem advisable.'

"This desire for closer fraternal relations with other simliar organizations has been ratified by the trustees of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor, who at their last meeting a few weeks ago decided to take steps toward the holding of a great Young People's Congress in 1900 in some central city to be determined upon later. It is proposed to omit all annual gatherings of such societies for that year, in order that they may be merged into the congress, which will probably be a great and significant gathering."

THE manner in which some kinds of spiritual enterprise unite in this day with carnal enterprise, is illustrated by the following from the N. Y. Christian Advocate, of April 1:—

"'Dr. Talmage's sermons' are sent out to the papers in a syndicate. They are generally represented as having been obtained at great expense by telegraph.

"On the 20th of February last he was advertized to preach at the Florida Chautauqua, at De Funiak Springs, but he failed to keep his promise, and some of the papers stated that a suit was to be begun against him for violation of contract. He appears to have stayed in Savannah, but the sermon that he preached in Savannah was not published in the syndicate papers, and all over the land they published one which he did not deliver, and which purported to have been given at De Funiak Springs."

THAT individual is only half awake who "wakes up" to the need of legislative measures to repress the "increasing desecration of the sabbath." If he were fully awake he would realize that the situation everywhere is far more serious than can be dealt with by any measures short of those which embody the power of God himself, manifested for the saving of the people from their sins.

Orders for the Special "Sentinel."

FEELING confident that our readers will appreciate the value of this special SENTINEL when they see it, much more than would be possible from the mere announcement of it previously made, we have printed a large number beyond that required by our regular circulation, and are ready to fill all orders promptly. Who cannot make good use of at least a few copies of an issue like this? We look for the friends of the SENTINEL everywhere to improve this grand opportunity to do effective work in the cause of liberty.

SATURDAY, May 15, has been fixed upon as the date for taking another vote of the citizens of Toronto on the question of running street cars on Sunday.

THE Bible is not difficult to understand when it is taken as it says.

Whoever will allow the Bible to mean what it says, will never have any difficulty in knowing what it means.

And whoever will allow that the Author of the Bible is capable of knowing what he wants to say, and that he has clearness of mind enough to say what he wants to say, just as he wants to say it, will have no difficulty in taking the Bible as it says, and consequently will have no difficulty in understanding it.

The Bible comes to us as the Word of God. In itself it claims to be the Word of God. It is the Word of God. And whoever will receive it as the Word of God, will find it to be that. Then to allow that the Author of the Bible had sense enough to know exactly what he wanted to say, and ability to say it just as he wanted to say it, is only to allow that God had sense enough to know what he wanted to say, and had sufficient clearness of mind to say it as he wanted to. In other words, it is only to allow that God in giving his Word knew what he meant, and meant what he said.

When the Bible is taken this way and treated thus, no one will have any difficulty whatever in understanding it. And for any man not to take it this way, and not to treat it thus; that is for any man to say that the Bible does not mean what it says, and that it is left for the man himself to say what it means—this is only to claim that he knows better than God just how it ought to have been said, and just what should have been meant. In other words, he puts himself in the place of God.

But when the Bible is taken just as it says, and is allowed to mean exactly what it says because the Author of it knew well enough what he wanted to say to be able to say just what he meant, it is all plain enough. Even a child can understand it then, for it is written, "Who-soever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall in no case enter therein." Now the Word of God is the word of the kingdom. Through that Word we enter into the kingdom. And as whosoever does not receive that kingdom as a little child, cannot have it, it is perfectly plain that it is intended by the Word that a little child shall understand the Word, and that a little child can understand it. Even grown people must receive it as little children, and must become "as little children" in order to receive it.

Any system, therefore, any writing, any way that is taken, by any body, that has a tendency to mystify the sayings of the Bible, to turn them into hard problems or to make them difficult to understand, can never be the right way. And anything offered as an exposition of any doctrine that presents a problem difficult to be understood cannot be the truth. Therefore again, it is written, "I fear lest as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."

The Word of Christ is simple. His Word is plain. It is as simple as A, B, C. And anything that tends to make it anything else than plain and simple, cannot be the right way. The simplicity that is in Christ is the perfection of simplicity. When he was on earth he taught all classes of people at once. The common people heard him gladly because he spoke with such simplicity of language, and such directness of meaning that they could understand him. And it was only the subtlety of the serpent in the Scribes and Pharisees that pretended not to be able to understand him.

It was so in the very beginning. When God placed in the Garden the first human pair, he said to them plainly, "Of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Yet there came the serpent with his subtlety and proposed that the Lord did not mean what he said, that it was necessary that it should be explained, and that he was the one who was qualified to explain it and convey to them the true meaning. He therefore said, "Ye shall not surely die, for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil."

Thus Satan proposed that God had not said exactly what he meant, and had kept back the real meaning, and had left his saying dark and problematical. That is the first explanation that was ever offered; the first comment that was ever made upon the Word of God. And everything since, that has ever tended to make problematical the Word of God, to make it mean otherwise than exactly as it says, is following the same lead. It is of the subtlety that beguiles from the simplicity that is in Christ.

It has been well written of Moses that "He gave God credit for wisdom to know what he meant, and firmness of purpose to mean what he said; and therefore Moses acted as seeing the Invisible." And it was "By faith that Moses endured as seeing the invisible." It is therefore faith to give God credit for wisdom to know what he means, and firmness of purpose to mean what he says. And "without faith it is impossible to please him."

Now it is a fact that there is much discussion of the Sabbath question. Many people seem to have great difficulty in knowing just what day is the Sabbath; yet the Word of God says plainly "the seventh day is the Sabbath." Any person who will simply accept that statement as it stands, taking it simply as it says, will never have any difficulty at all in knowing exactly what day is the Sabbath. And the Bible throughout speaks just as plainly and is as easily understood in all its statements with reference to the Sabbath, as it speaks in this sentence quoted.

The people who accept the Bible statements exactly as they are on this subject, never do have any difficulty at all in knowing what day is the Sabbath. But those who will not accept it have endless confusion and difficulty; and in fact, never do get the question settled to their perfect satisfaction.

That "Great Discovery" lately made by the Christian Endeavorers is only another instance of the confusion, mystification and difficulty that people find by not taking the Word of God simply as it says. It is another instance of the subtlety that beguiles from the simplicity that is in Christ. It has taken years of subtle invention, of contrivance, of cutting and trying, of intricate elaboration, to produce what is now lauded as a "Great Discovery."

And now that it is presented to the world, instead of its being plain and simple as divine truth always is, it is so contradictory to the Scriptures that no man can believe both; and in itself is so intricate and involved that an examination of it forces the query as to whether the author of it himself understands it. If the subject of the Sabbath or any other subject in the Bible were set forth after any such order as this "Great Discovery" is, every man in the world would have just cause for saying that the Bible could not be understood; for it would then lack the essential element of a divine revelation—that is, simplicity.

He who knows most can always make plainest and simplest what he has to tell, however deep the subject he may be discussing. God, knowing all things, and being the embodiment of all wisdom, is capable of making subjects that are of eternal depth so plain that a little child can receive them and understand them. But when anybody, whether it be the devil or a man, not believing what the Lord says just as he says it, undertakes to interpret it and by subtle distinctions to tell what the Lord means, he produces only infinite and eternal confusion. And all who allow themselves to be so beguiled from the simplicity that is in Christ, inevitably find it to be so.

WHEN the Scripture is read that says plainly, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," those who do not believe it and will not accept it as the truth of God, and will not allow that he knew what he wanted to say and then said just what he meant, put on an air of child-like innocence and inquire "The seventh day of what?" or "What seventh day is the Sabbath?"

In the very first chapter of the Bible the Word of God is, that in six days the Lord created the heavens and the earth and all things that are in them. Then the same word follows with a statement that on the seventh day he rested, and that he blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from the work which he had created and made. And that particular seventh day, that rest day is the Sabbath, for Sabbath is rest.

That six days of creative work followed by the seventh day of rest, formed the first week of time that this world knows anything about. And from that record just as it stands, without any interpretation or explanation whatever, it is perfectly plain that the seventh day, which is God's rest day; the seventh day, which is the Sabbath of the Lord, is the seventh day of the week.

Such is the record that the Lord himself has given of his own creative acts through the first six days of the world's existence, and of his rest on the seventh day of the world's existence. These together compose the original week of the world's existence. And every one who will believe the record just as it stands and simply as it says, will know for himself and to his perfect satisfaction what seventh day it is that is meant in the Bible, when it says that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.

THEN if any one wants to have another statement of the case, he needs only to turn to the 20th chapter of Exodus and read what the Lord himself said with his own voice, speaking from the top of Sinai. To his people there assembled and for all people for all time who will be his people, the Lord himself said, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work; . . . for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it."

Here the Lord says that the people are to work six days and rest the seventh, because at creation he himself had worked six days and then rested the seventh day. Now any one who is willing to allow that the Lord tells the truth, and was able to remember at Sinai what he had done at creation, will have no difficulty whatever in understanding what seventh day it is that is referred to in this language. For it is the identical day of his rest at the close of the six days of creation, which cannot possibly be any other than the seventh day of the week; for there was no other existing period of which it could possibly be the seventh day.

The people who stood at the base of Sinai that day and heard that voice, have continued, through their descendants, unto this day; and are scattered over the whole earth, amongst all the nations. And the day that there God gave them, upon his own count, by his own voice, in connection with the facts in which he himself was the actor, they have never lost.

If any one wants yet further evidence, come fifteen hundred years still further down. Then he who made the heavens and the earth, who rested that seventh day at the close of the work of creation, he who spoke from the top of Sinai the word which we have just quoted, stood upon the earth himself in the form of a man as a teacher sent from God. He observed this same seventh day as the Sabbath. He ever called it the Sabbath.

And it was the same day that the people of Israel had observed as the Sabbath, from the day that he himself had spoken from the top of Sinai. And though there was constant criticism of all his words and ways on the part of the Scribes, Pharisees, Lawyers and Rabbis, yet there was never any shadow of a question raised as to whether he observed the proper day as the Sabbath. There was always agreement between him and them as to that. Their objections against him were solely with reference to his manner of observing the day. And he in this as in everything else was the grand exemplar of the right way for all mankind forever.

Thus three separate times the Lord himself has stated the facts concerning the origin and basis of the Sabbath, and has made plain exactly what seventh day it is. First, in the record of the original creation in the first and second chapters of Genesis. Secondly, in repeating with his own voice the record of the original creation. Thirdly, when upon the earth he repeated with his own voice and manifested in his own life the living truth as the example for all mankind.

O that men would believe the word of the Lord which he has taken all this pains to make plain to their understanding. Why will men continue to allow the same serpent that beguiled Eve, and in the same way, through his subtlety, to corrupt their minds from the simplicity that is in Christ?

Intolerance in the Land of Roger Williams.

THE wave of Puritanism has invaded the historic land of Roger Williams, the apostle of religious liberty. The Providence (R. I.) Journal, of April 27, announced that "Next Monday night the City Council will be asked to pass a resolution prohibiting the use of boats on the lakes at Roger Williams Park, and to direct the Park Commissioners to discontinue the use of flying horses [merry-go-rounds] on the sabbath." The demand for this is made by Councilman T. W. Waterman, and is based upon several sections of Chapter 281 of the General Laws of Rhode Island, which prohibit all work and recreation on the first day of the week.

The Journal makes the observation that "after the expenditure of over $1,000,000 to improve and beautify the park, and provide amusement for the people, it is hardly likely that the taxpayers, who are to pay the bills, will relish this;" and adds that "it was argued by a few men, who talked the matter over yesterday, that nobody interfered with the rights of the Councilman from Ward 5 to attend church on Sunday as often as he pleased, and he had no right to interfere with people who, during the week, are compelled to work in shops and factories, and who on Sunday desired to enjoy a little recreation in the parks."

Of course the common people will not relish this, nor can it be supported by sound argument; but neither the wishes of the people nor sound argument are elements which enter into a wave of Puritanism.

The Journal adds that "if the move is being made for the purpose of compelling the people to go to church, it will be a dismal failure." That this is the purpose of all such moves is evident from the fact that they seek to prohibit every other form of occupation on Sunday except going to church. A person must do something, if he is not sick or asleep; and if he can neither work nor engage in sport or recreation, he will be almost driven to go to church. However, as a means of making people any better morally, mentally, or physically, the move will be a "dismal failure" beyond a doubt.

THE Truth Seeker (atheist organ), of April 24, says:—

"When we observe the political activity of ministers, when we note that they are turning their pulpits into rostrums for the advocacy of temporal reforms, when we hear them appealing from the gospel to the statute book, and from Christ to Cæsar, we are justified in concluding that they are losing faith in the efficacy of religion as a power for reforming mankind."

Do the ministers and churches which are "appealing from the gospel to the statute book, and from Christ to Cæsar," realize that by this they are putting an argument—and a very effective one—into the mouths of non-believers to be used against Christianity? Whether they realize it or not, that is what they are doing; and they will have an account to render for it at the bar of God.

That West Point Controversy.

SECRETARY of War Alger has made the following statement of the policy that has been decided on by the War Department with reference to the erection of church buildings on the military reservation at West Point:—

"Much has been said about the building of a Catholic chapel on the grounds of the United States Military Academy at West Point. This was a privilege accorded these people by my predecessor, who said that similar privileges would be accorded to others. You can state that any other denomination desiring to build a chapel on the grounds upon the same conditions will be given an equally advantageous site for the building. No favoritism will be shown to any denomination, and others will be accorded a site equally as good as that of the Catholic chapel."

This decision seems to be a fair one, and will certainly be pointed to as such by the Roman Catholics. But its practical effect is to put the latter in full possession of the field of battle; and this, not on account of what the Catholics have done, but of what Protestants have done themselves. A brief statement of facts will enable the reader to appreciate the situation.

As noticed recently in these columns, the New York Conference of the M. E. Church, at its session in Sing Sing, last April, passed a resolution protesting against the permission granted the Roman Catholics to erect a chapel at West Point, declaring that such permission was "contrary to the well-established principles of our Government"; and in connection with the same they were reminded by one of their number, Rev. J. P. Hermance, that the like privilege had long been sought in vain by the Methodist Church, and that the Catholics were only following Methodist example.

Following this, the late Presbyterian Ministers Conference in Philadelphia passed this resolution:—

"WHEREAS, This permission [to erect a chapel] had been extended to the Roman Catholic church; and, whereas, it was plainly in contravention of the Constitution of the United States to have so closely allied the Church and the State;

Resolved, That the present Secretary of War, General Russell A. Alger, be requested forthwith to rescind such permission and prevent the erection of the church."

And now comes the decision of Secretary Alger, that all denominations are to be treated alike, by giving to each the privilege of erecting a church on the reservation any time that it desires to do so.

As stated, this seems a fair method of settling the controversy, and is such, from the standpoint occupied by some of the parties in it. But the Methodist and Presbyterian churches have just protested against the thing which the Secretary of War has decided to allow, declaring it to be an alliance of "the Church and the State," and "contrary to the well-established principles of our Government"; how then can they avail themselves of the generous permission which the Government has granted in the matter? And how can any other Protestant church, in the face of such action by two of the leading Protestant bodies of the land, take advantage of the same permission?

It is a clear and decisive victory for Rome. And it comes from a "bad example" set by Protestants,—that is, from an espousal by the latter of Roman Catholic principles and methods.

And this is only a sample of what is going on all over the land, in the shape of efforts on the part of "Protestants" to persuade or compel the civil powers to grant them favors. Most noticeably is this true in the matter of legislation for the observance of Sunday. And it is all working to the same result that followed in the West Point fiasco—a clear victory for Rome. In the nature of things, no other result is possible.

No one understands all this better than Rome herself; and she may be relied on to take full and speedy advantage of the situation.

The Gods of the Nations.

If war were not in itself so wicked and the cause of world-wide suffering and bloodshed and moral degradation, the spectacle presented by armed Christendom would indeed be ludicrous. The old pagan contestants had each their special national gods, who were expected to help them. But modern "Christian" powers nominally look to the same God, each one severally confidence that their cause and ambitions are supported by Him. The Russians serve a God whose sympathies are supposed to be Russian, and so it is with all the list of militant forces, even down to the Khalifa who expects Allah to smite the infidels who are coming up the Nile. It is the old paganism; the difference is only in name and in the measure of the light sinned against by those who, having opportunity to know the true God, allow the "god of this world" to fill their hearts with hatred and jealousy and covetousness, which in turn are filling the world with violence. —Present Truth.

A WRITER in The Kingdom, of January 29, laments that the Church is so lethargic in political matters, and says that "it must be made to understand how far short it has come of doing its full duty in political and municipal matters." In this he voices the sentiment of many who pose to-day as religious teachers.

How strange it is, from this standpoint, that the Saviour, in his great commission which sets forth what should be the work of his followers in the world, never even hinted at the important duties they would have in connection with politics! Was this an oversight on the part of the Lord?

Legislation as a Means of Reform.

In the N. Y. Independent, of April 15, that well-known Christian writer, Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler, makes the following pertinent observations upon the reasons for the present status of the cause of temperance reform, strongly deprecating the idea that there is a panacea for the drink evil in legislation. Dr. Cuyler discerns the dangerous fallacy which is embodied in the current popular theory as to the proper means for securing moral reform, and his words sound a timely signal of warning. (In part) he says:—

"After half a century of honest hard work against the terrible drink curse, I feel perfectly sure that to place our main reliance on any kind of legislation, however stringent, is a fatal mistake. There is a prodigiously prevalent idea in our country that legislation is the great panacea for a large portion of the evils that afflict society. The cardinal error of the Populists is that Government is a parental institution; that it ought to run all the railways and telegraphs, that it ought to loan money to the people, that it ought to provide a market for the silver and to provide fiat money in unlimited abundance, etc., etc.

"It is a kindred delusion of some of my well-meaning Prohibitionist brethren that legislation is in itself the cure-all for the innumerable woes of strong drink. They preach nothing else, labor for nothing else, and denounce unsparingly other honest advocates of temperance who decline to look at this great question through their knot-hole, and to pronounce their shibboleth. They strangely ignore the lamentable facts: that there is (for various reasons) an enormous use of intoxicants; that this enormous use creates an enormous demand; and this enormous demand it is which produces the enormous sale of intoxicants. To attempt to prohibit the sale while nothing is done to diminish the use and demand for intoxicants, is as preposterous as to attempt to stop the flow of Niagara by throwing a dam of bulrushes across the face of the cataract.

"Suppose that all the pulpits, all the schools, and all the parents should cease to teach the sinfulness of theft; could there be a police large enough to protect all our property? Against the deadly drink itself, and not solely against the sale of it, our unceasing warfare must be waged.

"It must never be forgotten that the original Maine Law of 1851—in which I thoroughly believe, and in defense of which I have made hundreds of public speeches—was the outcome of a long and widespread agitation, in pulpit, press and popular meetings, against all intoxicants. The drink customs were fought against, and the popular conscience was aroused. In Neal Dow's phrase "the whole State was sowed knee-deep with temperance literature." And the experience of the last forty-six years has proved that where moral efforts have been kept up, and where the popular conscience has been awake and active, the prohibitory law has produced most beneficial results.

"Wherever the people have been lulled into the delusion that the law would enforce itself, wherever moral efforts have not prevented large numbers of people from wanting to drink intoxicants, wherever "drinking clubs" have been organized, and wherever the politicians have made a football of the righteous law, the curse of drunkenness has come back again.

"Legislation to prohibit liquor selling without moral efforts to diminish liquor drinking fails, and will fail to the end of time. Iniquitous and destructive as are the saloons, a large portion of the drinking does not begin there, or even end there. The bottle is in innumerable homes and clubs and restaurants and social gatherings; and as long as the drink is in such demand the traffic in the drink will go on. Short cuts to great moral revolutions have never succeeded; legislation on paper will never damn up torrents of evil as long as the fountain heads of evil remain unchecked. It has been truly said a thousand times that legal action without moral effort is a bird with only one wing; it cannot fly.

"What next? In the face of all the facts from Maine and Iowa and Vermont and New Hampshire and Kansas shall there be no other tocsin sounded than that of "Prohibition"? After twenty-five years of gallant struggle the political Prohibition Party was able to poll only 135,000 votes at the late Presidential election, about 100,000 less than it polled four years before. Shall all the time and money and eloquence and efforts of the friends of temperance be expended in that single direction? If so, the temperance reform is doomed. Back of the "saloons" lie the drink customs; back of the traffic lies the demand for intoxicants; legislation unaided by moral effort is powerless to stay the destructive plague.

"In the early days of the temperance reform we fought the drink evil by vigorous work in the churches, in the pulpits, in the schoolhouses, in the homes; we fought the drink itself. We educated people to total abstinence by solid arguments—medical, moral, social, economical and religious arguments. We have got to educate them again. Not long ago Francis Murphy spent thirty days in Boston preaching total abstinence, and the arrests for drunkenness were 268 the less during that month! Great numbers signed a pledge of abstinence from the drink. Similar efforts elsewhere will produce similar results.

"What next? Others may answer this question as they choose: but my answer, as a lifelong teetotaler and foe of the diabolical liquor traffic, is, Let us have a fresh education against the deadly evils of the drinking customs. Christ's churches are neglecting this; Sunday-schools are neglecting this too much; parents are neglecting this; temperance societies have largely disbanded: moral efforts are dying out; and fearfully are we paying for this wretched policy. Instead of the idle and easy shout, "The saloons must go!" suppose we make an immense effort, in God's strength, to keep people from going to the saloons or anywhere else to buy intoxicants. Stopping the use is the true way to stop the sale. Our substantial victories in the past have been won on those lines; they can be won again; and they will be when parents and patriots and Christians all awake to their manifest duty."

"RIGHTEOUSNESS exalteth a nation," says the Scripture; but it does not follow that any man or set of men should try to exalt the nation through righteousness. Not the men, but the righteousness, is the exalting element; and righteousness comes only as it is imputed, through faith, to the individual. Let every man build 'over against his own house."

Unchristian Advice to Endeavorers.

CERTAIN of the baseball clubs of the "National League" have announced that they will play games this season on Sunday. Whereupon certain leaders of "Christian Endeavor" have inaugurated a campaign against this proposed exhibition of "Sabbath desecration" which is outlined by the Rev. R. DeWitt Mallary, in a recent issue of the Golden Rule. He tells the Christians whom he addresses that "a great deal" may be done to stop this profanation of Sunday, in various ways. "Western Endeavorers," he exclaims, "stir up your sheriffs to execute the law in the cities where this unholy pleasuring violates the Sabbath and the spirit of American institutions. Eastern Endeavorers! when these profaners of the Sabbath, who so brazenly defy you and set at naught your holiest feelings, journey thither to play, let a 'righteous anger' rise up within you against the evil which they flaunt on their banner, and attend no game in which any of those clubs plays. . . . Let them receive a chilling reception at the hands of all Christians."

A number of queries are suggested by such an utterance. Why, for instance, should pleasuring be proceeded against by the sheriff because it is "unholy." Do human laws deal with actions on the basis of their character as holy or unholy? If not, why should the Sunday baseballists be interfered with for playing "unholy" games?

And if this kind of "unholy pleasuring" should be prohibited by law, why should not all other "unholy pleasuring" be likewise prohibited? Why, in short, should there not be laws against everything that is unholy, with sheriffs properly instructed to enforce them?

Again, what is there in a game of baseball on Sunday which constitutes a "brazen defiance" of a Christian Endeavorer, who from his profession may properly be supposed to be busy somewhere in Christian work or worship, far away from the place of worldly sports? The Sunday baseballist does not propose to interfere with the Christian Endeavorer, but the Christian Endeavorer proposes to interfere with the Sunday ball player and forbid him to engage on Sunday in his avocation from which he derives his living. Is this any less a defiance of the baseball player than his Sunday playing is a defiance of the Christian Endeavorer? And has a person any better right to defy another because he is a Christian Endeavorer, than he would have as a baseball player?

Again, what are the "holiest feelings" of Christian Endeavorers supposed to be? Are they feelings which relate in some way to a game of baseball? We had not supposed this to be the case. We give them credit for a higher Christianity than that.

Again, why should Christians, and especially Christian Endeavorers, give to another class of their fellow-beings a "chilling reception"? If they are exceptional sinners, as Sunday ball players are affirmed to be, should not Christians manifest even a warmer fellowship toward them than toward others, that they may, if possible, be won to Christ? If God and Christ do not give the sinner a "chilling reception," what business have Christ's professed followers—themselves sinners—to do so? God distinguishes between the sinner and the sin. Ought not God's children do as much for their fellow-mortals?

Mr. Mallary concludes his exhortation to the Endeavorers with the words, "God make us militant Christians!" Militant against what? Against self and the sin that lurks in our own hearts? It seems not; but against our fellowmen, for the commission of what we consider their crimes! Militant by means of sheriffs and the civil law!—is this the warfare of the "church militant"? We think not.

This advice of Mr. Mallary's to the Christian Endeavorers is in great need of revision.

It was recently reported that France had announced to the Powers, with reference to the war between Turkey and Greece, that unless the Sultan makes overtures of peace, she will "come forward as the defender of the Christian cause." Does this mean that the Christian cause has suffered defeat? If not, why must France come to its rescue?

The outcome of the war illustrates the folly of the idea that the cause of Christianity can be represented by an earthly government with its troops and vessels of war. Any such government is liable to defeat, as has been the fortune of Greece; but can Christianity be defeated? If it can, then there is a power in existence that is stronger than God; for Christianity has its support in God.

The truth is Christianity is the manifestation of God in human flesh, just as He was in human flesh in the person of Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus was unconquerable; and God in human flesh is unconquerable to-day.

The Christian cause has no need of the assistance of France or of any other government. It never was and never can be defeated.

WHEN both plutocrats and socialists are heard invoking the name of Liberty in sanction of their principles and proceedings, as is heard to-day in this "land of freedom," one cannot but query whether the problem of conferring liberty upon "the people" is any nearer its solution to-day, by political methods, than it ever was in the past. The truth is that Christianity, not politics, holds the real and only solution; and in proportion as Christianity wanes in the lives of the people, liberty is lost.

Resist Not Evil.

By Rev. W. J. Harsha, D. D., Pastor Second Collegiate Reformed Church, New York City.

THE bloody conflict between Turkey and brave little Greece is engaging the attention of the civilized world. There remains within the breast of the most highly developed individual a certain savage instinct which thrills in admiration of heroism in battle. Let there be half an excuse for war, and there will be found multitudes of people who will defend it. Let two men have a difference of opinion or a misunderstanding in business, and at once there is a resort to harsh language, to fisticuffs or to the courts. The human race is far from that millennium in which a treaty of arbitration shall be in force in all private and public brawls. The thirst for blood in us, as in the caged tiger, is not dead; it only sleepeth.

It is timely to remember and consider the words of Jesus, "Resist not evil." Count Tolstoi startled the world by insisting upon a literal application of this sentiment to everyday affairs. Christians had departed so far from the precepts of their Master that the Count's religion seemed new and indefensible. So far as his advocacy of non-resistance goes he has simply reminded us of one of the most important principles of the Sermon on the Mount.

Just what does non-resistance of evil mean? Certainly not that we should cultivate a mean and despicable spirit of soft acquiescence when we are kicked or defrauded. The Christian is not required to refrain from proper defence of self, property and loved ones. Manliness and dignity are not denied him. The manliest of all beings was his Master, whose resurrection we have just been celebrating.

Non-resistance implies a desire to suffer rather than to strike, to take abuse rather than to abuse, to bear patiently in order that the offender may be ashamed. Of Jesus it is said, "When he was reviled he reviled not again." He did not answer cruel words with cruel words. There was in His heart no determination to "get even" at all hazards. This is the fault of the present. A practical lex talionis is still in force. The United States Senate is bound to get even with the President in political affairs. The member of the Church of Christ is determined to get even with the fellow-member when a wrong has been done or a slight given. Too much have we forgotten the saying, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

We may not all go forth to battle, but we may all show real heroism in the home. No house so small, no flat so poor, no tenement so dark but it may be illumined by the light of generous love. Forgive that thou mayest be forgiven. Show thyself strong and Christ-like by holding back the ready blow, by checking the quick, hot answer of wrath. Euclid, the great mathematician, once offended his brother, who cried, "May I die if I be not avenged against you one day or another!" To which Euclid replied, "And may I die if I do not soften you by my kindness and bring you to love me again." This is the practical Christian principle which shall live long after the Turkish Empire has become a thing of the past.

Catholic Authority on Sunday Observance.

THE following information on the subject of proper Sunday observance is given by the Pilot, the leading Catholic journal of New England, in its issue of March 13:—

"An esteemed local correspondent of the Pilot asks an immediate answer to these questions:—

"Is it wrong to play cards on Sunday for small sums when the conduct is orderly and the religious duties are fulfilled? Under the same conditions is card-playing allowed in Lent? Is it allowable among friends on a Sunday evening to have dancing in a quiet way?"

"To play cards on Sunday under the conditions above stated is not wrong in itself; but in the State of Massachusetts, at least, it is against the law, and subjects the participants in the game to arrest. Catholics should set an example of respect for the law, even in comparatively small things. Card-playing is not forbidden in Lent. Devout Catholics, however, discontinue attendance at card-parties during Lent, as with far greater reason they abstain from dancing and theatre-going, these amusements not being in the spirit of the season of penance and retirement. Dancing on Sundays, without being necessarily sinful, is opposed to good public opinion religiously and is bad form socially."

Thus it is all right in itself to gamble and dance on Sunday; and this may be regarded as authoritative on the subject, since Sunday as a day of rest and worship is an institution of the Roman Catholic church.

News, Notes, and Comment.

THE progress of civilization in Europe, under the auspices of State religions, has been for many years accompanied by a steady increase in the size of armies and navies. These vast and costly organizations are maintained for the benefit of those who rule "by the Grace of God." Their business is to see that the people of each nation are not deprived of the inestimable blessing of rulers thus commissioned—to save the people from themselves, in case they should, at any time, become so demented as to imaginethat they would be better off if they dispensed with the peculiar manifestation of divine beneficence called a "king" or "emperor;" to extend the particular "grace of God" which is represented by the banner of each nation over the people of another nation through force and violence, whenever the opportunity is afforded; and to prevent a similar extension of every "grace of God," which is symbolized by another battle-flag.

* * *

AND this is all very well for Europe. Every country over there knows that it is right in whatever it does, and when a nation or a man knows what the right is, unquestionably the proper thing is to go ahead and do it. The way they find out what is right for a government to do is to consult the priesthood of the established church. Each nation has a State church of its own, and infallibility is one of the attributes inherent and necessary in a State Church. If the authorities feel uncertain as to the propriety of invading a neighbor's territory, murdering the inhabitants, and extending their boundary lines by stealing land, the State church is always on hand to dissipate their doubts. When she blesses the standards, and gives thanks for every massacre by her disciples, all is, of necessity, well and nobly done. And the other fellow has at hand the same wise and gracious counselor in his State church, so that he, too, knows exactly whether he is on the right side or the wrong one. Thus, war becomes a "holy" thing, is invested with the same spiritual charm that made the Crusaders so enjoy those little tussles in Palestine, and filled the Saracens with pious delight as they cut the throats of the invaders.

* * *

BUT the United States has no such guide, philosopher and friend as a national church. Hence, war seems to be, except as a defensive proceeding, altogether out of our line. It is admitted that setting out to rob and kill our fellow-man is a serious business, that the presumption is against the morality of the transaction, and that one ought to be very sure of its sanction by the highest authority, before embarking in any such enterprise. Now this assurance can never be ours, because, as stated, there is no national church to tell us as a nation that it is the will of Deity we should "move upon the works" of another State with fire and sword. Aggressive wars we are not equipped for; they form no part of our "mission;" if we had a million men and a thousand ships, we could never be certain that we were right in using them against others. The blessed certainty that rapine and murder will find favor in the eyes of the God of love can only be ours after we have complied with the wishes of those who clamor for Federal "recognition" of religion.

* * *

I AM led into this train of thought by reading some items about the United States Navy. The writer congratulates himself on the fact that, at the Grant mausoleum ceremonies "we may have one ship of over 10,000 tons, possibly a second of over 9,000, a third of over 8,000, a fourth of over 7,000, and three others of over 6,000;" and he goes on to enumerate the vast number of "iron-clads," and "cruisers," and "torpedo boats," and all the rest of that ilk which we either possess already, or will possess as soon as the taxpayers' money can be squandered upon them. And he congratulates the citizens of this, our "Christian country," on the state of things which he so exultingly depicts.

* * *

THE twenty, more or less, of devices for facilitating the taking of human life and the destruction of property which made up "the new United States Navy" are eyesores on the ocean. Whether as formidable or not, in the aggregate, as any navy of the "great powers," they cannot possibly be surpassed by the work of mere mortals for intense and complete repulsiveness of appearance. If for no other reason, because they are shocking to every one who cares to look on beautiful things, such as the white-winged sailors of the sea, they ought to be blown up, unless there are the strongest possible reasons of utilitarianism for keeping them afloat; and no more like them should ever be built. But, as a matter of fact, there is every practical reason for doing away with all such monsters forever.

* * *

THERE is probably no more utterly useless thing in existence than this United States Navy. It is even worse than useless. It is a source of great and permanent danger to this country and all of its truest interests. It brings us into constant contact with foreign nations under circumstances which could not be better calculated to bring on "a row" if they were expressly arranged for that purpose. Idle men are sent on long voyages around the world, having about them a sort of order of national sanctity, full of a silly sense of personal dignity utterly unwarranted as a rule by any special excellence of personal character, offensive in their conventional bearing, fondly fancying all slights or insults offered to their Lilliputian magnificence to be an affront against the majesty of a great country; and the miracle is, not that every now and then an international complication results, but that we do not have a new difficulty on our hands every day in the year.

* * *

AND this useless toy is dangerous in another way. "In time of peace, prepare for war." Never was advice offered more rotten at the core of its inspiration. It ought to read, "In time of peace, get ready for making war—and, as soon as you are ready, make it." There is no surer way in the world to bring on a war than to make preparations for it. Give a nation the consciousness that it is "able to whop anybody," and the desire to "whop" is continually present, the temptation to try to "whop" somebody is always alive and feverishly looking for an outlet to indulgence. The "jingo" of the United States finds the navy a continuous and violent stimulant to his perverted nervous impulses. He hates to see so much splendid material wasted. He says, as the writer of the above extract says, in effect: "Just see how many people we could kill at once, if we could only get at them; let us go and find them somewhere!"

* * *

THE Navy is what, more than anything else, makes us ignore that wise advice of George Washington in his "Farewell Address to the American People"—that we should carefully and sedulously avoid all entanglements with foreign countries, their affairs, their difficulties and disputes, whether internal or external. He rightly considered that the United States was most fortunate in being so far away that European life and politics were not and could never, save by our own fault and intermeddling, become a matter of slightest concern to us. He foresaw the endless trouble and disaster that must accrue if we should throw away this tremendous national advantage. He knew there were domestic problems on our hands which more than one century would be required to solve, and that it was our sound course to deal with them alone. And he saw the demagogue's triumph in the "vigorous foreign policy."

* * *

AND it is true that the Navy, by kindling and feeding a spirit of hostility to all the rest of the world, helps the demagogue to distract the minds of the populace from the affairs of home administration. There is no surer way to divert the crowd, when the cry of "stop thief" sounds too close to the ear, than to have a "pal" start a fight on the corner. A knavish tariff, a corporation-dictated "settlement," costing the Government millions of dollars, a plundered treasury—what are all these things, if the "white squadron" can only be sent to bombard a city?

More Sunday-Law Arrests in Arkansas.

THE following letter, addressed to Mr. A. F. Ballenger, from an Adventist friend in Arkansas, has been received at our office:—

"Van Buren, Ark., April 22, '97.

"Dear Brother:

"Brother John Huddleston and myself were arrested for Sunday labor at Fort Smith, Ark., on the 4th inst.

"We had commenced to build a house the Sunday before, and the sheriff said that he had received four complaints on Monday morning—one before daylight, before he got up. He did not bother us that week, but on the following Sunday, the 4th inst., he came down and talked awhile with us about the weather, work, etc., etc., concealing his badge, and after awhile he asked me if I did not know that I was violating the law. I told him that we kept another day than Sunday as the Sabbath; whereupon he remarked with an oath 'That's too thin,' and said he would arrest us both, at the same time exhibiting his official badge. I told him that Bro. H. had been tried for Sunday labor and came clear, and that we had an exemption clause for our benefit; but he would not listen to me and ordered us to put up our tools and go with him to see if we could give bond.

"On our way to the Justice of the Peace's office we passed a man with a wheelbarrow full of sod, working with all his might putting the sod out in his yard with a shovel. I called the officer's attention to it, and also to the street-car driver, telling him that neither one of them kept the day before; but he paid no attention to them. I then told him that it was very plain to me that it was not because we worked on Sunday that we were arrested, but because we kept the Sabbath; that there were a number of vagabonds in the city who would not work at all, and that it would be better to let all work who would.

"He told us that our bonds would be $25 each; but on our way to the office we met the Prosecuting Attorney and he said 'Put the bonds at $100 each.' So the sheriff marched us down through town to the Justice's office; but the Justice being absent, the sheriff with some difficulty made out the bonds for us.

"Then we went to the home of Bro. H.'s brother—not a seventh-day observer—to get him to go on our bonds, but on arriving his wife said he was at the river where he was building a small steamboat. When we got there the officer remarked: "Here is another man at work." Mr. H. was leveling up his boat on the dock, but he did not attempt to arrest him. However, it was just over the line in the Indian Territory.

"Mr. H. signed our bonds and we were released. I then told him that we were going back to work and that if we were going to be arrested again we would make out our bonds and carry them with us to save time and trouble; but he said that we would not be bothered again. So we went and worked that afternoon.

"Our trial was set for the next day (Monday) at 3 P. M. Two hours before the time I was there, and the sheriff introduced me to the Justice of the Peace. The latter, after a few questions relative to our faith, said he would dismiss the cases. I told him that we were ready for trial and would rather it would go on, but he would not order it. I had a long talk with him and with the sheriff and gave them some reading matter, and showed them the account of the Arkansas persecutions as given in "Two Republics." He seemed much interested in it and said he would read up on the subject. I am using all the reading matter I have and could use a good deal more to good advantage.

"Nothing saves us here from suffering the severest penalties of the law but the exemption clause. Our enemies are eager to prosecute.

"Pray for us that we may do efficient work for the Master.

"H. CLAY GRIFFIN."

THE executive committee of the "California State Sabbath Association" recently met and passed a resolution to the effect that Sunday concerts, illustrated Sunday lectures, etc., are a violation of the holy law of the Sabbath, which requires all people to spend the whole day 'in the public and private exercises of God's worship, except so much as is to be taken up in the works of necessity and mercy.' "

We wonder what "holy" Sabbath law can be referred to here. We know of but one holy Sabbath law—the fourth commandment—and that says nothing about spending the day in "the public and private exercises of God's worship, except so much as is to be taken up in the works of necessity and mercy." The quotation reads like some old Puritan regulation of colonial times. Whether this or not, it is a mere human statute, and to designate it as "the holy law of the Sabbath," is nothing short of blasphemy.

Call for a New Church.

A CONFERENCE met April 16, at Scranton, Pa., in answer to a call which affirms that true reformers can no longer consistently condemn sinful and corrupt political parties while supporting and holding religious fellowship with the same political sinners in the church," and hence that "all Christians must come out" of the existing churches, which it asserts are "unfaithful to their Lord," and constitute only "thrice dead shells of official formalism."

The alleged necessity for this coming out is that "the need of the hour and of the age is an organization truly representing the kingdom of God to proclaim the message of salvation for the soul, for society and for the State;" and that "peace and prosperity with the blessing of Jehovah are to be found only in the universal application of the same moral standard to political and corporate acts that is applied to individual matters and relations."

This is only another indication that the spirit of the movement to combine religion with politics is in the very air. But it recognizes that the churches which contain the politicians of the day are so corrupt that all Christians must "come out" of them, and yet it sees no significance in the conjunction of this necessity with the fact that the churches are full of "political sinners."

The truth is that the churches, by going into politics, are getting more and more filled with the spirit of worldliness; and when this new organization goes into politics, as it must if its intentions are carried out, it will soon become as corrupt as any of the rest.

The church that will keep out of politics entirely, will keep pure.

PEOPLE wonder and are startled at the increase of homicide in this country, and ask what can be done to check it; but in the public mind there is but a faint conception of the truth that murder belongs in the same class with all the "works of the flesh," which include many quite "respectable" sins; and that what is needed to lessen the one, is the same thing that is needed to diminish the other; namely, the grace of God in the heart.

Inconsistent Protestants.

THE Bible Echo (Protestant), of Melbourne, Australia, in its issue of March 8, makes some pertinent and forcible observations upon an exhibition of inconsistency recently given there by a conclave of Protestant clergymen. As we have previously mentioned, there is now in process of formation a federation of the six Australian colonies, the convention for the purpose of effecting this having assembled March 20. Among the candidates for election to this convention was Cardinal Moran. His candidature was viewed with alarm by the Protestant clergy, and a number of them met in Sydney, February 16, to protest against it. At this meeting they passed a resolution setting forth that,— "It is impossible to separate the person of Francis Patrick Moran from the position occupied by him as a Roman Catholic Cardinal and Archbishop of Sydney. The entry of so high an ecclesiastic into the political arena necessarily means the stirring up of sectarian rancor, and the introduction of a most undesirable element into the federal elections."

Also that,—

"Since his arrival in Australia, Cardinal Moran has persistently played the part of the religious controversialist on every possible opportunity. He has assailed the religious faiths and practices of his Protestant fellow-colonists; has championed the imperious and impossible claims of the Roman See to absolute supremacy; and has also resorted to statements which have been proved to be untrue to discredit the apostolic labors of men and societies connected with the branches of Christendom which we represent. These statements, when proved to be untrue, have not been withdrawn or apologized for. The unprovoked character of these attacks shows the bias of the Cardinal's mind, and together with his unflinching advocacy of the intolerant claims of the Papacy unfit him, in our judgment, for the position of advocate of the rights of conscience and freedom of worship, as now announced by him."

For these reasons they protested against allowing

Cardinal Moran a seat in the Federal Convention. But were they equally anxious that no Protestant ecclesiastic should be allowed the same privilege? Not at all; they had no anxiety whatever on that point. Nor were they anxious that religion should be kept out of the provisions of the Constitution by which the Federation is to be governed, for it was expressly urged by a "Council of Churches"—Protestant churches, of course—that the Constitution should contain certain provisions of a religious character. They secured petitions to this end and sent them to the Convention. All they were afraid of was that by the election of Cardinal Moran to a seat in the Convention, some of his religion might get embodied in the Constitution in the place of their own. The Echo comments as follows:—

"This is all very well as applied to Cardinal Moran, and bears out the predictions already made that his appearance on the political field would arouse sectarian strife and religious controversy and opposition. And it is doubtless well that it should, remembering what the investiture with civil authority, of cardinals, popes, and religious ecclesiastics, has resulted in in the past.

"But there is a principle involved here which is broader than Cardinal Moran, or even the Roman Catholic Church. If it is impossible to separate the person of Francis Patrick Moran from the position he occupies in the Roman Catholic Church, it is just as impossible to separate the persons of Protestant ministers from the positions they occupy in their respective churches. And if Cardinal Moran's ecclesiastical position excludes him from the right to meddle with politics, so does the like position occupied by Protestant ministers also exclude them from the same.

"Cardinal Moran has as much right to enter politics as have Protestant ministers. He has as much right to seek to introduce religion into civil affairs as have the ministers who compose the Council of Churches. He has as much right to seek through law to establish the supremacy of the Roman pontiff as head of the church in the place of Jesus Christ, as have any number of Protestant ministers to attempt, by the same means, to establish the Sunday sabbath in the place of the Sabbath of the Bible; for both are alike religious dogmas and therefore ruled out of the rightful domain of civil government, and both are alike unscriptural and of the Roman Catholic Church.

"There can be no escape from the logic of this argument. A thing is not wrong because done by a man professing the Roman Catholic faith. It is wrong, if wrong at all, because it is wrong in principle. Let not this be forgotten. A wrong principle followed will lead Protestants astray just as truly as it will Roman Catholics. Name and profession count for nothing here. Principles operate the same the world over.

"Therefore, we say that such a protest as the one above quoted, while good in itself, can come with consistency and with good grace only from those religionists who themselves let politics severely alone, and who oppose, with all their might all attempts to unite Church and State through the introduction of any religious questions whatsoever into civil affairs. Let Protestants see to it that they are consistent and truly Protestant."

THE Pilot, a prominent Catholic journal of Boston, Mass., in its issue of March 13, makes note of the bill before the Kansas legislature to incorporate the Ten Commandments into the code of that State, and says:—

"What about that [commandment] enjoining to 'keep holy the Sabbath day?' According to the Old Testament in which the Decalogue is to be found, the Sabbath day was Saturday. By authority of the Catholic Church of our Lord, that day has been changed from Saturday to Sunday without any sanction of the Old Testament. Wherefore, if the legislature of Kansas pass the proposed law, where will the citizens of the State be 'at,' in the event of trying to make men righteous by act of the legislature?"

Perversion of the Constitution.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

WHEN one protests very vigorously that such and such a thing is not so, when there is apparently no occasion for such a protest, it at once excites the suspicion that the protestor is liable to the implication of the very thing which he denies; since his own vehement protests are evidently thrust out as fenders to ward off a blow that he feels he is liable to receive. This may be seen in the continual protests and assertions that the proposed union of Christianity and the Government in this country is not a union of the Church with the State.

The pastor of the M. E. Metropolitan Church, of Washington, D. C., at which President McKinley worships, is one of these protestors, and the Sunday evening sermon subsequent to the inauguration, listened to by the President, was devoted to a presentation of the idea that Christianity united to the State is the ideal system, and that by such a union the Constitution is to be carried out! As we learn from the Christian Statesman, the discourse was from 2 Kings 11:12 and Rom. 13:1. We will give a few sentences from the synopsis of the sermon as given in the above named paper of April 3:—

"The Christian religion is the foundation of all law and literature, and to be hostile to the Christian religion is to be hostile to the Government in which we dwell. The Constitution provides that Congress shall make no law regulating the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification for any office of public trust. These simply secure religious freedom and separation of the Church from the State. They are as a bill of rights, guaranteeing to all the churches full liberty, and forbidding Congress ever to abridge that liberty. It is not a union of Church and State, but the union of Christianity and the State, etc."

Néver was there a more un-American and ridiculous statement made than that hostility to the Christian religion is hostility to the United States Government. Men were hostile to the Christian religion hundreds of years ago; were they therefore hostile to the United States Government? There are German and French infidels in their native countries; are they hostile to this Government? Washington declared in the treaty with Tripoli that this Government was not founded upon the Christian religion; how then can opposition to Christianity be classed as opposition to the Government?

This position supposes what is not true, that the United States Government and the Christian religion are identical in their scope and design; but they are as different as it is possible for two things to be. One is to save all mankind from sin and to make them holy and happy forever; the other is to conserve the civil rights of Americans; and that only in this life. Making sin against God to be the same as treason against the State is a perfect reproduction of the principles of the papacy. Precisely such teaching in the past has thrust the noblest men into prison, lighted burning piles round dissenters and filled the earth with martyrs. It deifies the State, and demands of every one who reads the words "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," to admit the government on an equality with the God he worships, as a part of his Deity.

Again: the reverend gentleman who voiced these sentiments in the ears of the President thinks that the object of the Constitution and of the Government which it creates is to serve the interests of the church or churches. To him the provisions of the Constitution are only a bill of rights, guaranteeing to all the churches full liberty and forbidding any abridgment of that liberty! Here again is another monstrous perversion of the Constitution. It is assumed that the Constitution considers only the rights of the churches! We have always supposed, and we appeal to history to sustain our contention, that the Constitution was instituted to maintain the rights, not of churches, nor of persons as members of churches, but of men as men. Freedom of men in religious things is the constitutional idea.

If it were not so painful it would be amusing to see how the same old relations that once existed between the papacy and the civil governments of the world are urged under other terms as the proper relations which should exist between this Government and a federation of the churches here. In the place of the "Holy Roman Church," they have Christianity, and in the place of "union" they now offer the word "coöperation." Let no one be deceived by this change of names and terms. The Catholic Church was the name of what passed for Christianity in the Middle Ages, full as much as the confederated churches pass for it now; and "coöperation" can only be attained by a practical union of these churches in their united capacity with the Government.

The enforcement of a religion common to all the churches has in it all the elements of danger that the enforcement of the religion of any one church or sect has. To those who are outside the pale of that religion, it is the same as Rome against the Waldenses; Prelacy against Quakerism; Puritan against Baptist. It is well that Romanism is by this presidential teacher taken as a part of the whole of the new national religion, though against the protests of the Statesman. As a mother of experience she can instruct her unsophisticated, but fast maturing, daughters in those arts of securing her ends by laws, which have been so successful in the past, albeit at the expense of liberty, and which have made all the world wonder after her. She is a great teacher, and it would seem that many are learning her teaching who should be learning from her history in the past the lesson of the great danger of ecclesiastical domination from coöperation with the State in the affairs of government.

Some Significant Statistics.

THE Christian Observer (Presbyterian), of Louisville, Ky., in its issue of March 24, gives the following statistics of church attendance in that city, the reliability of which cannot be questioned. Unless Louisville be an exceptional city—which cannot be reasonably assumed—these statistics have an ominous significance in relation to the question of the general church attendance in this so-called "Christian nation." Do they not speak with startling emphasis of the need of a power nothing short of the "power of God unto salvation" to awaken the people from their condition of spiritual death? Nothing less than God's own power can meet the emergency; and this power is in the simple gospel of his Word. The Observer says:—

"In so far as church attendance is a gauge of the spiritual life and activity of the members, a census of the church attendance reveals the extent and the depth of spirituality in the community. With this in view, and with the kind coöperation of the young men of our Theological Seminaries and of the Young Men's Christian Association, we have recently obtained a report from almost all the evangelical churches in the city of Louisville. In this report are included the seating capacity of the churches, the number of church members on the roll, the number of accessions on profession of faith during the year 1896, and the number present at the morning and the evening services on the Lord's day, at Sunday school, and at the mid-week prayer-meeting. The result of the census is as follows:—

91 Churches report seating capacity.....	39,898
84 " " membership.....	25,423
54 " " men joined (1896).....	489
70 " " number joined (1896).....	2,337
87 " " at morning service.....	14,588
85 " " at evening service.....	10,483
84 " " at Sunday school.....	13,829
53 " " at prayer-meeting.....	2,207

"The population of the city is not far from two hundred thousand persons. According to the census of 1890 it had 161,129 inhabitants. Since that time there has been a natural growth, and also an increase by reason of the annexation of several suburbs. One estimate places the population as high as 215,000.

"Assuming the moderate estimate of 200,000 as its real population, we must deduct for those who have some valid reason for absence from the house of God on the sabbath.

"As the statistics given do not include the colored churches, we must first deduct about 35,000 for the colored population of the city. Of the remaining 165,000, we may assume that about one-sixth are Roman Catholics, and that they attend, with more or less regularity, on their own services. There are also some Jews. Of the 130,000 who remain, perhaps one-fifth are infants and children too young to attend church. Invalids and aged people also may be detained through necessity. And for the care of the infants or of the sick, and for works of imperative necessity (such as would warrant absence from the sanctuary), a yet further allowance must be made. If now we deduct thirty per cent. of the 130,000 as thus detained from one or both services, on any particular sabbath, we shall find in the city about 90,000 who ought to be in the house of God every sabbath, and the most of whom might be expected to attend on the mid-week prayer-meeting.

"There are in this city ninety-eight Protestant churches, besides twenty-five mission preaching points.

"The reports gathered by these young men show that in the ninety-one churches counted, the seating capacity is only 39,898. It would thus appear that in all our evangelical churches for whites, we have room to seat only about one fourth of the people of the city, and less than one half of those who should be expected there on the sabbath day. Does not this afford food for thought?

"Of the white people of this city, probably about 130,000 are to be counted as non-Catholic. Of these, perhaps two-thirds, or nearly 90,000, are of an age to understand and accept the gospel and unite with the church. But the reports that have been brought to us show (in 84 churches) only 25,423 church members, somewhat more than one fourth, and less than one third. Surely this will suggest the room and the need for Christian work in order to reach this vast mass of unconverted people.

"In years gone by, the attendance at church on any sabbath was in excess of the number of members. But from this census it appears that now the number of people present in the churches on sabbath morning is less than three fifths of the membership. In 87 churches, our co-workers found only 14,588 persons present at the morning service. And at night the attendance in 85 churches, as reported to us, was only 10,483, or about two fifths of the membership. If a reasonable part of the attendants were unconverted people, then it would appear that only about half of the church members were at the house of God in the morning, and only about one third of them at the night services.

"This fact may explain why it is that seventy per cent. of the white population of Louisville over twelve years of age are not members of the church. When the people of God neglect the sanctuary, they cannot expect the children of the world to come. If all the Christians in the city would go to church with regularity, they would give to the services a warmth and an interest which would draw the outsiders and lead them also to attend.

"The Sunday school attendance gives us greater encouragement. Of the 13,000 non-Catholic white population of this city, about 40,000 are between five and twenty years of age. Out of these we find a sabbath school attendance of 13,829, which would give us a Sunday school enrollment of about 18,000, nearly one half. (This includes teachers and also infant classes.)

"But all this encouragement disappears when we note the poverty of the attendance at the mid-week prayer-meeting. Out of the 90,000 people who might be there, the count just made (in fifty-three churches) shows only 2,207 actually present. This indicates only about three thousand people at prayer-meeting on Wednesday night in this great city of Louisville, about one in thirty of the adult Protestant people, and only one eighth of the church members. 'Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?'

Are not these the days spoken of by the Apostle Paul (2 Tim. 2:1-5), when there was to be but a "form of god; liness," with a denial of its power? There are churches there are creeds and ceremonies; but where is the power of God?

A SUNDAY measure of the most pronounced Blue-law type is reported as having passed the House of the Connecticut legislature, April 22. It provides that no labor or sport should be allowed in the State between sunrise and sunset on Sundays, and fixes a penalty of $50 for violation of its provisions. One noticeable feature of it is that it specifies that no exception shall be made for persons who observe the seventh day as the Sabbath. Doubtless this latter provision most fully embodies the real spirit of the measure.

The press report states that should the provisions of this bill be strictly construed, they "would stop the electric cars and stages, and would make it unlawful to ride out in carriages or on bicycles or to go boating, fishing or swimming."

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

It shows how Christianity advanced in the Roman Empire, not only without the aid of the State, but in the face of the bitterest opposition from the State; it discusses what the Christian should render to God, and what to the State, and how the powers that be are ordained of God. The book then takes up the history and principles of the movement so active now in the United States, looking toward having the Church try to regulate and cleanse politics, and shows what will be the certain results of following the policy advocated by some of these church men. No matter what your views upon this question, you cannot afford to miss reading this book.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER

To secure widespread and favorable publicity for THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, we have decided to place a few introductory sets in each community throughout the country for comparison with all other reference works as to plan, scope, lateness of treatment and general practical and educational value. We feel that every set will create a demand for others. While the distribution will be general in extent, it will last for a limited time only, after which our regular subscription sale will begin, at prices ranging from $8 to $75 a set, according to style of binding. Now, however, to quickly and thoroughly introduce the work, as above stated, we make the price merely nominal (about the cost of paper and printing), the distribution being LIMITED TO A VERY FEW WEEKS, reserving the privilege of withdrawing the offer at any time when we consider a sufficient number of these introductory sets, at the special price, have been distributed.

OUR GREAT SPECIAL OFFER.

SEND $1.00 to THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PUBLISHING CO., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and a full set of eight volumes of THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, in cloth binding will be forwarded to you. The balance is payable at the rate of $1.50 monthly for one year, or about 5 cents a day. If you prefer the half-Morocco binding, the monthly payment will be $2.00, and for full sheep, $2.50 per month for one year. We recommend the half-Morocco style, which is particularly elegant and serviceable, and will last a lifetime. If not entirely satisfactory any set may be returned within ten days and money will be promptly refunded. Owing to the nominal price at which these introductory sets are supplied, transportation charges must be paid by the purchaser; but our entire confidence that the volumes will be gladly received and cheerfully paid for is shown by sending a $48.00 set of books on an advance payment of only $1.00. We also feel that you will thoroughly appreciate this great work and speak favorably of it to others. Each set weighs boxed nearly 50 pounds, and will be shipped by freight unless otherwise ordered. We refer you to the publishers of this paper. Please mention it when writing.

AMERICAN SENTINEL

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY WORDS, AND BELIEVE NOT, I JUDGE HIM NOT."—Jesus Christ.

ALONZO T. JONES,
EDITOR.

NEW YORK, MAY 13, 1897.

VOL. 12, No. 19.

THE one leading principle of the AMERICAN SENTINEL is absolute separation of religion and the State.

Every other subject, all discussion of other points, is subordinate to the one great subject of separation of religion and the State. And the one great reason for this, the sole basis of it, is that the AMERICAN SENTINEL is Christian.

It is solely because that the separation of religion and the State is Christian that we advocate it. Nor is this a mere sentiment or side issue of Christianity. It is one of the fundamental principles, one of the chief characteristics of Christianity.

The Bible, not merely the New Testament, but the whole book, is the book of Christianity. The New Testament is not a revelation new and distinct from the old; it is the culmination of the revelation begun in the Old Testament.

The Old Testament and the New are one book, one consistent, harmonious revelation of God through Jesus Christ; because Jesus Christ is the revelation of God before the world was made, when the world was made, and through all the history of the world from beginning to end.

The first chapter of Genesis is Christian as certainly as is the first chapter of John. The Book of Genesis is Christian as really as is the Book of Revelation or any other book in the Bible. We repeat therefore that the whole Bible is the book of Christianity, the book of the Christian religion, the revelation of God through Jesus Christ.

And the separation of religion and the State is one of the great thoughts of this great book. It is one of the leading principles of that book which for man is the source of all sound principle.

Many people think that the two or three expressions of Christ as recorded in the New Testament are all that the Bible contains on the subject of the separation of Church and State; and many others are disposed even to argue against these passages and to modify them by other passages from the Old Testament. But separation of religion and the State is one of the original thoughts of the Bible, and reaches from the beginning to the end of the Book; and neither the book nor this subject can be fairly understood in reference to this matter till this is clearly defined in the mind. Therefore that the SENTINEL may be true to its mission and serve in the best way the great object of its existence, we purpose to give to our readers a series of studies of the Bible on this subject from beginning to end.

Being one of the great thoughts of the Bible, one of the great thoughts of God and of our Lord Jesus Christ, this subject is of vital importance to men everywhere in their relations to God, and not merely in their relations to the State. It is a principle, that is involved in the daily experience of the Christian, in his relation to God, and not merely an abstract question that man can stand as it were apart and view simply as a speculative question of the relations between religion and the State.

The ways of God are right. His word is the only certain light, the only sure truth. The principles which he has announced are the only safe principles for the guidance of men. We hope, and shall seriously endeavor, to make each study so plain that every reader can easily see and readily grasp the truth of it.

The first of these studies we shall present now and shall begin at the beginning.

"The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord; and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment.

"And the second is like, namely this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; there is none other commandment greater than these."

"On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

These two commandments exist in the very nature and circumstances of existence of any two intelligent creatures in the Universe. They existed thus in the existence of the first two intelligent creatures that ever had a place in the Universe.

When the first intelligence was created and there was no creature but himself, as he owed to his Creator his existence, as he owed to God all that he was or could be, heart, soul, might, mind and strength; it devolved upon him to render to God the tribute of all this and to love God with all his heart, and all his soul, and all his mind, and all his strength. And this is the first of all the commandments. It is first in the very nature and existence of the first, and of every other intelligent creature.

But the second of these would have no place if there were but one intelligent creature in the universe; for then he would have no neighbor. When the second one was created, the first of all the commandments was first with him equally with the other one; and now the second great commandment exists in the very nature and existence of these two intelligent creatures, as certainly as the first great commandment exists in the nature and existence of the first one.

Each of the two owes to the Lord all that he is or has, and all that he could ever rightly have. Neither of them has anything that is self-derived. Each owes all to God. There is between them no ground of preference. And this because of the honor each owes to God; because to each, God is all in all. Therefore the second great commandment exists as certainly as the first; and it exists in the nature and circumstance of the very existence of intelligent creatures. Consequently, "There is none other commandment greater than these."

These two commandments then, exist in the nature of cherubim, seraphim, angels and men. As soon as the man was created, the first of all the commandments was there, even though there had been no other creature in the Universe. And as soon as the woman was created, these two great commandments were there. And there was none other commandment greater than these.

Now, if these two great commandments had been observed by man on the earth, that is, had man never sinned, there always would have been perfect and supreme religion; and there never could have been a State.

Therefore it is certain that the observance of these two first of all the commandments, means the absolute separation of religion and the State. And thus the principle of separation of religion and the State inheres in the very existence of intelligent creatures.

But man did sin. Mankind did not love God with all the heart nor their neighbors as themselves. Christianity was introduced to bring man back to the position, and the original relations, which he lost. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

It being then the one great purpose of Christianity to restore man to his original condition and relation to God, its purpose is to restore him to the condition in which he can love God with all the heart, with all the soul, with all the mind, and with all the strength, and can love his neighbor as himself. It is to restore him to obedience to these two first of all the commandments. It is to restore him to perfect and supreme religion.

We have seen that such a condition maintained from the beginning would have been the absolute separation of religion and State, because then, there never could have been any State. And now as the one great purpose of Christianity is to restore man completely to that condition, it follows with perfect conclusiveness that Christianity in its very essence, from the beginning to the end and everywhere, means the absolute separation of religion and the State.

"A FREQUENT recurrence to fundamental principles is absolutely necessary to preserve the blessings of liberty."—Constitution of North Carolina, Art. 1, Sec. 29.

Christianity and the State, in Greece.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Herald, who is reporting the proceedings in the war between Turkey and Greece, relates that at a village named Koniskos, a large body of Greek enthusiasts who were on the point of making an advance into Macedonian territory, observed a "solemn" service, in which they all partook of the sacrament and registered the oath "Liberty or death." Upon their caps was the motto "In this [sign] victory," in evident allusion to the famous motto of Constantine, derived from his alleged vision of the cross in the sky, upon one of his expeditions of conquest. To the Greeks all this was a matter of the utmost seriousness. They had not a doubt but that they were engaged in the performance of the duties and ordinances of Christianity.

That this is so is still further apparent from the proclamation which they issued, as follows:—

"Brothers and soldiers of Christ and liberty! We hoist the flag of liberty for the Greek countries. Under its shadow let us unite, having as a watchword, 'Liberty or death!' The justice of our cause is recognized by all free people. Blest by God, let us push onward. Brother Greeks, God is with us?"

They pushed forward,—not to victory, but to defeat, at the hands of the unchristian Turks. The "soldiers of Christ" were routed by the forces of the Sultan! Anti-christ proved stronger than Christianity!

To us, the error of all this is plainly apparent; but in it the Greeks are only illustrating the logical results of the doctrine that religion and the State can properly be united. The Greeks are fighting the battles of their State, but not the battles of Christianity; yet if Christianity and the State can be united, the cause of one becomes the cause of the other, and he who shoulders his gun and goes forth to fight for the State, may properly be considered as becoming thereby a "soldier of Christ." It should be apparent to all Christians at least that Christianity cannot be joined with the State.

Is it any worse to slaughter people with bullet and sword, after the fashion of the pagan, than to kill them slowly by methods which are devised to satisfy the selfish greed of gold-loving "Christians"? Is there any less guilt lying at the door of commercial greed than at that of the Turk?

Is the Sabbath in Danger?

"The gates of hell shall not prevail against it," are the comforting words of Christ concerning the stability of the Christian Church. The Sabbath is one of the vital institutions of Christianity. It is therefore as enduring as the Christian Church. So long as there is a Christ, there will be Christianity; and so long as there is Christianity, there will be a Christian Sabbath.

Whenever it is proposed to repeal a civil law which was enacted with the supposed object of preserving the Sabbath, there are those who declare that the Sabbath is in danger of losing its support,—that "the Sabbath cannot be maintained without the aid of civil law." All such fail to discern the true nature of the Sabbath and Sabbath observance.

The Sabbath law is a part of the ten commandment law. Ex. 20:8-11. "The law is spiritual," says the Scriptures. Rom. 8:14. Only spiritual obedience is acceptable obedience. "The true worshipers must worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him." John 4:23. The Lord requires spiritual obedience to his spiritual law. A spiritual law cannot be upheld by a secular law. The only law which a civil government can enact is secular law. The only kind of obedience it can command of its citizens is civil or secular obedience. It therefore follows that the civil government cannot make or enforce spiritual law. Hence it cannot save or destroy the Sabbath.

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." Zach. 4:6. Not by might of human law, nor by power of the policeman's club, can Sabbath observance be maintained. Only by the Spirit God can this be done.

"The carnal mind is enmity against God; is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." How useless, then, to try to make it subject to the law of God by human enactment!

"God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

It is the Spirit that enables a man to fulfill the righteousness of the law. Only the Holy Spirit, therefore, can enable a man to fulfill (or fill-full) the law of the Sabbath. And the man who is led by the Spirit will keep the Sabbath without the aid of human law. Those who are not led by the Spirit cannot be led to observe the Sabbath by human law.

Let not Christians, then, fear that the Sabbath will be destroyed, if human laws are not enforced to preserve it. On this point Spurgeon said:—

"I should be afraid to borrow help from government; it would look to me as if I rested on an arm of flesh, instead of depending on the living God. Let the Lord's day be respected by all means, and may the day soon come when every shop shall be closed on the Sabbath, but let it be by force of conviction, and not by force of policemen; let true religion triumph by the power of God in men's hearts and not by the power of fines and punishments."—Quoted in Australian Sentinel, Melbourne, March, 1895.

Another prominent Baptist speaks thus:—

"However much we may deprecate the demoralizing tendencies of Sunday theaters and concerts, games and excursions, and the sale of candies and fruits and newspapers on the Lord's day, still we ask for legal restraint upon such things only in so far as they may directly interfere with public religious worship. As Christians we ask of the State only protection in the exercise of our rights of conscience; and we will depend alone upon the truth of God and the Spirit of God to secure the triumphs of Christianity. With an open field and a fair fight, Christianity is more than a match for the world, because 'the foolishness of God is wiser than men.' 1 Cor. 1:25. The almightiness of the eternal God is in the cross. Hence, Christ said: 'And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.'"—"The Lord's Day," by Rev. D. Read, LL. D., p. 31, American Baptist Publishing Society, Philadelphia.

The question whether street-cars shall run, stores open, or public amusements be held on the Sabbath, sinks into insignificance compared with the question whether professed Christians entertain right ideas of Christian institutions, and the power by which they are maintained. It was a failure to comprehend this that led the Church in the days of Constantine to look to him as its head, and to the State for power to promulgate its doctrines and repress heresy. It was this that led to the Dark Ages.

If no professed Christians could be found to furnish capital to run street-cars on the Sabbath; if no professed Christians could be found to operate them on that day; and if no professed Christians could be found to use them on that day; the question of running street-cars on the Sabbath would adjust itself in every "Christian community." To the reply, "professed Christians are not consistent—are not sufficiently conscientious, and must be compelled by civil law to act consistently and conscientiously," we answer, What a comment on nineteenth century Christianity!

The early Christians "took the spoiling of their goods joyfully." They were not only willing to suffer financial loss, but the loss of their lives for the sake of truth. "They loved not their lives unto death." Any professed Christian whose "Christianity" requires the aid of the civil law is not a Christian, and would lose nothing if he sacrificed his "Christianity" to retain his position, and would gain nothing by a law enabling him to retain his "Christianity" and his job. What is needed to-day is not a revival of fourth century methods of making men Christians, but a revival of Christianity.

This is by no means an appeal for the running of street cars, the opening of shops, or the holding of public amusements on the Sabbath. But it is an appeal to professed Christians to look to the "power from on high" and not to human power for the preservation and promulgation of the institutions of Christianity.

"All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. . . . The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever." Isa. 40:6-8.

The Trouble and the Remedy.

THE Rev. Chas. L. Bovard, a Methodist minister of Albuquerque, New Mexico, in a contribution to the N. Y. Christian Advocate, of April 22, on the subject of "Some Alarming Tendencies," says:—

"Ponder this. It is estimated that in the neighborhood of one hundred thousand people flocked to Denver and Albuquerque to see the pseudo Messiah—Schlatter! There is no need of comment upon the intellectual, social, and religious character of so credulous a populace. They are prepared for the wildest vagaries. Can it be that we are two centuries from Salem witchcraft? Nor was the Schlatter following chiefly confined to the ignorant Mexican population, but the cultured yet godless leaders of society were his stoutest defenders. It sometimes seems as though a 'perverse spirit' had been poured out upon the people of this nation, furiously driving them to cut loose from their every conservative mooring."

What is the trouble? We are living in "the blazing light of the nineteenth century"; yet it may be doubted whether credulity and superstition were ever more prevalent than they are to-day. And not the ignorant alone, but "the cultured yet godless leaders of society," constitute the ready victims of their power.

What is the trouble? Do we want more science, more public schools and colleges, more newspapers, more civilization? There was never so much of all this as there is at present. Yet it is nothing short of the truth that "it sometimes seems as though a 'perverse spirit' had been poured out upon the people of this nation, furiously driving them to cut loose from their every conservative mooring."

Ah, there is a "perverse spirit" which works independently of all restraints of science and civilization; a spirit which runs riot in "the blazing light of the nineteenth century" as freely as it did in the ages before it. And that "perverse spirit" is the spirit of opposition to the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the spirit of selfishness and of the prince of evil, which sets at nought the counsel of the Most High. This is an age of Bibles, yet the Word of God is not in the hearts of the people. The power and wisdom of God find no place for operation in their lives.

There is but one antidote and preventive of this perverse spirit which drives the people to such displays of credulity and superstition; and that is, truth; and not "truth" merely, but "the truth as it is in Jesus." Ah, this is the education for the need of which the world is dying,—the knowledge of "the truth as it is in Jesus." There can be no true education without the knowledge of Christ.

When the people know the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," they will have no desire to follow after other manifestations of power claiming to be divine. When they know the voice of the "Good Shepherd," they will not be ready to heed the voice of a stranger.

No one, however capable or qualified by nature and education, need expect to escape the "perverse spirit" of this age and the delusions to which it leads, unless his education shall include an acquaintance with Him who is the Author and embodiment of truth. And that acquaintance can be secured by any and every person by receiving His word into the heart by faith.

A BROOKLYN clergyman, the Rev. E. H. Byington, the son of a missionary, is quoted by the N. Y. Tribune, as saying, "Give them equal equipments, training and opportunity, and I believe that a thousand Moslems will conquer a thousand Christians every time." What kind of Christians can this statement refer to?

The Sabbath from Eden to the New Earth.

A RELIGIOUS exchange makes the following truthful observations relative to the perpetuity of the Creation Sabbath:—

"Commenting on the first four words of the fourth commandment of the Decalogue, as given at Sinai: 'Remember the Sabbath day,' Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown, in their critical commentary, remark that these words imply that the Sabbath 'was already known and recognized as a season of sacred rest.' And so it was, as the Scriptures abundantly prove.

"It was known in the wilderness of sin thirty days before the children of Israel reached Sinai. This is shown from Exodus 16. It was known and observed by a line of godly men reaching all the way back to creation, when God made the Sabbath and gave it to man. And it has likewise been known and observed by a line of godly people ever since Sinai,—by the Israelites, by Christ, by the apostles, by the early Christians, by the Abyssinians, by the Waldenses, by the Seventh-day Baptists, and last of all, by the Christian denomination known as Seventh-day Adventists, a people who observe this most ancient of God's landmarks, and are looking for the near advent of the Saviour of mankind.

"And to take a step into the future, Isaiah 66:22, 23 shows that it will be known and observed in the blessed new earth which the Lord is going to make. How consistent, then, that it should be kept by Christians now when on the very borders of the eternal world! God in a special manner gave His people the Sabbath shortly before bringing them into the promised land of Canaan, and so He is again in a special manner restoring it to His people just before He takes them into the great antitypical promised land."

PARIS—novelty-seeking Paris—has a novelty at last which it is to be hoped will supply all the demand in that line for a long time to come. A noteworthy feature of the terrible calamity which has plunged all Europe into mourning, is the fact, as related in the New York Herald, that an unusual number of people filled the Charity Bazaar on the fateful afternoon, because of the presence of the papal nuncio, Mgr. Clari, who had come to pronounce his blessing upon the enterprise. It was just after the papal blessing had been pronounced, and the nuncio had taken his departure, that death, in a whirlwind of flame, blotted the enterprise, and scores of those engaged in it, out of existence. A terrible illustration this of the amount of protection that can be conferred by the papal blessing.

Christendom's Call to War.

BY E. J. WAGGONER.

It seems as though Christendom were becoming intoxicated with the spirit of vengeance, so that the most peaceably inclined men have lost their senses. One religious paper reprints some floating newspaper stories derogatory to the character of Turks in general, and then exclaims editorially,— and that but expresses the general sentiment among preachers and people.

"Ought such a nation to be tolerated for a moment on the face of the earth?"

Just analyze this: "Ought such a nation to be tolerated for a moment on the face of the earth?" is the same as, "Ought such people to be tolerated for a moment on the face of the earth?" and that includes thousands of individuals, of each of whom it is virtually said, "Ought such a person to be tolerated for a moment on the face of the earth?" That is to say, the spirit of intolerance is already so firmly rooted in the hearts of professed Christians, that they do not wish to tolerate for a moment the existence of those whom they, taking the throne of judgment, have decided to be unfit to live. What is that but charging God with laxness in the discharge of his duty, because he suffers wicked men to live?

How different from the Spirit of Christ! When he was rejected by the Samaritans, and two disciples wished to command fire to come down and consume the inhospitable people, he rebuked them, saying, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Luke 9:51-56. The spirit of desiring to be the instruments of God's vengeance has always been more prominent than the desire to be instruments of his mercy, and when it is once cherished it inevitably results in getting ahead of the Lord, and being both judge and executioner.

THE TRUE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT.

But we have a still stronger rebuke of this bitter, warlike spirit. When Jesus had been betrayed into the hands of his enemies, and a mob of men came to seize him and put him to death, Peter drew a sword in his defense. The blow just missed the head of one of the gang of murderers, and cut off his ear. "Then said Jesus to him, Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Matt. 26:51, 52. And then, as an evidence that he came not to take life but to save it, Jesus healed his wounded enemy. Luke 22:50, 51.

If there was ever a time when it was right to resist oppression and injustice, it was then. Jesus was innocent, as even his judges declared. Here was the worst kind of religious persecution. Every indignity, insult and outrage was heaped upon Jesus, yet he opened not his mouth, and forbade his followers to fight in his defense. How then can any of his followers fight in defense of themselves, or even of their brethren who are persecuted? The disciple is not greater than his Lord.

Peter was well-meaning and sincere in his defense of the Lord, and so would we fain believe are those who now counsel drawing the sword in behalf of the Armenians. But Peter did not then know the Spirit of the Gospel. He was not converted, and within a few hours after his impulsive defense he denied that he knew the Lord. His example is not one to be followed by disciples of Christ. When he became converted, he learned to know the Lord.

Christians are called to follow Christ's example, and to suffer unjustly, without complaining, much less resisting; yet all over the world professed Christians are denying this calling. Why is it?—It is because a spirit, not from the Lord, is seeking to drive them to destruction, for Jesus said, "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." If Satan can only succeed in filling Christians with such zeal for any cause whatever, no matter how worthy, that they will fight for it, he knows that their destruction is sure.

Mark the word "all." There is no exception. "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." It makes no difference who handles it. The sword vigorously wielded by the hands of professed Christians will work as much havoc and destruction as in the hands of infidels, as history abundantly proves. The fact that a man calls himself a Christian, does not make it any more a righteous deed for him to cleave another man's head with the sword, than it would be if a Turk did the same thing.

THE GOSPEL IS FOR ALL.

In prophetic vision the Apostle John saw "a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people and tongues," standing before the throne of God, clothed with white robes, and bearing palms of victory over sin and Satan. Rev. 7:9. That is positive evidence that there will be Turks in heaven. Yet one would not gather from reading the religious press, that there was any possibility of salvation for a Turk. It may be said that the Turks are bitterly prejudiced against Christianity. That is true, and who could expect it to be otherwise? Christianity is to them embodied in the boasted "Christian nations" of Europe, and few of these have ever done anything to recommend the name. But that is not all. Those religious bodies, professing to be Christian, of which the Turks have most knowledge, are the Greek and Armenian churches, and in one important particular the Mohammedan has good reason to believe that his religion is superior to theirs; for he sees the members of those bodies bowing down to and adoring images and pictures, while the Mohammedan abominates the worship of idols. But even this is not the worst. From the time of the crusades, professed Christians as a rule have regarded the Turks with lofty contempt, as beings to be execrated and driven off; now, all Christendom is ringing with unchristian cries for vengeance upon the Turks, and even their utter extermination. Can it be wondered at that the Turks are not drawn towards Christianity, or that they are suspicious of foreigners? But when the just Judge of all the earth punishes the Turks for their misdeeds, who dare say that none of their blood will be upon the garments of those who bear the name of Christian? We appeal to individual Christians to clear themselves, by being Christlike in their words and acts, from all responsibility for Turkish indifference to Christianity.

THE GREAT DECEPTION.

There is a cause for this present cry against the Turks. That it is not caused by the spirit of Christ, needs no argument. What spirit it is that is even now working, may be seen by remembering what it is desired to do with the Turks. The least thing that is demanded, is that they be driven from Europe. Such atrocities, it is said, ought not to be allowed on European soil. But will they be any better on Asiatic soil?—Certainly not. Then what would necessarily be the next step after driving them from Europe—manifestly, to drive them from Asia, that is, from the earth, so far at least as their existence as a nation is concerned. This is even now demanded. Their overthrow will be the last act in the scheme to place the world under the dominion of the so-called Christian powers, thus to fulfil the dreams of a temporal millennium, in which so many have indulged. But each one of these "Christian Powers" will wish to have the supremacy, and so the armies of all will be assembled in Palestine, the center of the Sultan's Asiatic dominion,—when the last struggle takes place. That gathering is thus described in prophecy:—

"And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, for they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. . . . And he [they] gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." Rev. 16:13-16.

Here we are plainly told what spirit brings the kings of the earth together at that place. The deception we see working even now; for that Christendom is being deceived is painfully evident. If men were not already grossly deceived, how could they in the name of Christ counsel war? How could they so misrepresent true Christianity before the world as to claim that the blood even of martyrs demands revenge by the sword? Is it not a terrible deception that is even now closing in upon the world? What an awful thought, that every man, be he minister of the gospel or not, who is upbraiding the Powers for not coercing the Turks, is simply an unconscious agent of Satan to gather the kings of earth to that great battle which is to result in the ruin of all. God grant that many who have thoughtlessly been led away by popular clamor, may recover themselves from the snare of the devil before it is too late, and show to the world, including the Turks, that Christianity means to be like Christ. We have full faith that this prayer will be answered.

The Glories of Peace.

THE following words from a recent sermon by the Rev. Dr. Hillis, of Chicago, are peculiarly appropriate at a time when the spirit of war is spreading death and desolation, and arraying the "Christian" powers of earth against each other, as is seen to-day:—

"The disciples experienced the horrors of the dungeon, the thumb-screw and the fagot. Becoming fiendish in cruelty, Nero clothed the Christians in garments dipped in pitch and tar, and used their blazing forms for lighting up his garden party. Outraged and threatened with extermination, the disciples bethought themselves of swords and shields.

"How could they live in peace with their destroyers? Instinct whispered, 'Defend thyself!' Self-interest said: 'Meet storm with storm, and stroke with stroke.' But in the moment when persecution was fiercest, Paul urged non-resistance. He bade the disciples meet the spy with pity, meet the jailer with gentleness, meet the executioner with forgiveness, thus heaping coals of fire upon the head of each enemy.

"In that hour the persecutor made sharp his sword, and Nero starved his lions to-day, that to-morrow the beasts might be the fiercer for human blood. When all was ready the murderers leaped upon the unresisting disciples. Then, indeed, did Christ's disciples go forth as sheep 'midst wolves. Then did the dove go forth to conquer the eagle and hawk. Having pledged universal conquest to these sons of gentleness, Christ sent his peacemakers forth 'midst all the thunder of universal battle.

"Paradoxical, indeed, Christ's principles of right living. 'Abhor that which is evil, yet love the evil-doer; live peaceably with friends, yet maintain peace with enemies.' What unique contradiction meets us here!

"History tells us of a Roman soldier who was condemned to beasts in the Coliseum. When the lion sprang into the arena, it stopped, startled by the voice of the soldier. A moment later the lion was crawling at the prisoner's feet and licking his hands. The event proved that once, while passing through the African forest, this soldier chanced upon a lion suffering from a thorn that had passed through the foot. By extracting the thorn he made the wild beast to be his friend and a pet, only to meet the lion years later in the arena.

"Strange, indeed, would it be if this story were true, yet less strange than that such a man as the beloved disciple, John, should by his gentleness, extract the fangs of cruelty from a Nero or a Domitian—monsters, these, who exceeded untamed lions in fierceness. Yet good men and true are commanded to maintain peace with all men, while also maintaining an uncompromising hostility against every form of iniquity.

"But how can Moses, heir to the throne of Egypt, abhor the cruelties perpetrated upon his enslaved brethren and yet live peaceably with the tyrants who abused those he loves? How can David, dodging the javelin that Saul hurled, hunted like a partridge upon the mountains before the cruel king, live at peace with the tyrant who pursued him? How can Paul live peaceably with the mob at Ephesus, who stoned the scholar through the streets and left him half dead by the wayside?

"And yet, if Christ abhorred sin and breathed forth words that were like flames of fire consuming men's iniquities, he also maintained peace with Judas, who betrayed his master, and with Pilate, who tortured the man in whom he said he found no fault. Leaving this word, 'Blessed are the peacemakers,' as a watchword for his disciples, Christ sent them forth to war against iniquity, indeed, but also to live peaceably with the transgressor, whose sins they must needs destroy. And if we recall the early conflict of Christianity with heathenism, and review the story how it conquered the Roman world, we shall find that the disciples achieved their victory because they were peacemakers and peace lovers. It has been said that each persecuted Christian by his courage and Christian spirit conquered his own jailer and executioner.

"Full eighteen centuries have passed, and once more has come an era when peacemakers are despised, and physical force is enthroned. So far is mankind from believing in peacemaking that England's motto is not the lamb, but the lion, and America's banner is emblazoned not with the dove, but with the eagle, with its beak and talons, while Russia's symbol is still the bear.

"The foreign nations, whose harbors are crowded with torpedo-boats and warships, whose strongholds bristle with cannons—these nations that stand over against each other like armed fortresses, and to-morrow may cause Europe to tremble with the march of armed men—these peoples exhibit anything save a belief in social progress through peace loving and peacemaking.

To-day the world believes that progress rides forward upon a powder cart. The angel's song of 'Peace on Earth,' has given place to the song of the bombshell and the shriek of the cannon ball. If the sword has fallen from man's hand, it is that it may be replaced with the pistol."

The world will never direct its forces by the maxim, "Love your enemies"; it will never know the victory that peace wins by non-resistance. The "British lion" will never become a lamb, or the "American eagle" a dove. But every person who believes on Jesus Christ is called to a life of peace,—a peace which the world may wonder at but not understand. The exhortation to them is, "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts." If all who name the name of Prince of Peace would but do this, more would be done in a day for the cause of peace in the earth than will ever be accomplished by all the "peace societies" to the end of time.

How much would be gained by Christianity if Christendom should, sword in hand, take the side of the Greeks against the Turks, as is so generally advocated, even by clergymen, that she should? Mr. Frederick L. Chapman says on this point in the April issue of Our Day:—

"The Orthodox Greek church has never been friendly to the evangelical faith; it meets the apostle of the primitive gospel in a spirit of haughty arrogance, and self-satisfied conceit; it recognizes no necessity for betterment in the religious life of people who pay their vows and their tithes in the established church. This spirit is not consistent with progress, with education, or with a spiritual religion. We regret that we must express the conviction that in the event of the triumph of Greece over Turkey, Christian missions in Asia Minor will find a more intolerant atmosphere there than has beset them even under Turkish rule. The torch of arson may not be applied to their buildings, to their churches and colleges, but icebergs in the form of orthodox sanctuaries will arise in the midst and the coldness emanating from these will be apt to freeze the life out of a struggling Christian community."

The worst enemy of Christianity is not the fiery enemy, but the cold enemy of common worldliness.

THE Cleveland Recorder, of April 5, prints a synopsis of a sermon delivered by a clergyman of that city, in which it is stated that, "It is an accepted truth that a man needs one day in seven for rest," etc. The same paper gave also a synopsis of another sermon delivered the same evening by another clergyman of the city, which asserts with equal positiveness that "Those preachers who say that the Sabbath is to be observed because man's infirmities demand time for repairing, are taking a wrong view of the question. They are not true to their calling. They make the law of heaven subordinate to the law of the State."

Both these sermons were delivered in defense of the Sunday sabbath. They give an illustration of the harmony that exists in the camp of error.

News, Notes, and Comment.

A VALUED correspondent expresses himself as surprised and shocked at my calling Mr. Justice Blackstone a blunderer for imagining that law has something to do with morals. He demands with expressed grief, evidently mingled with some suppressed indignation, to know whether I do not recognize law "as the embodied expression of the moral sense of the community." We must start the answer with a definition.

* * *

"MORALS" comes from a Latin word, mos, genitive, moris. The original, radical, etymological significance of mos is "manners" or "customs." Every title and every nation in the world has its own peculiar mos—that is to say, its body of manners, customs, usages. But among the lowest grades of savages, where society, properly speaking, does not exist, it is perfectly immaterial to the rest that now and then some individual arises who does not like any or all of the established methods of conduct, and chooses to behave himself in a fashion that is new and peculiar. He goes his way, and the others go theirs, and nobody is injured in the slightest. It is otherwise with more highly developed social organisms. To the intercourse of people composing these last—that is to say, to the very existence of the organism itself—uniformity of conduct under given circumstances, on the part of every constituent atom going to make up the whole is absolutely necessary. This necessity is at once the origin of human law, and its only justification. The organized whole is fighting for its life against the disintegrating tendencies of its parts, when it expresses its will in a law; it undertakes to extort compliance there with by the exercise of its composite force, whenever necessary, and punishes, by virtue of that same force the open defiance of its will, when once expressed.

* * *

Thus we see that human law is properly and neatly described as "crystalized custom." And we also see that it has to do with manners, conduct, behavior, and nothing else. The "morality" of a people, if we understand by that term, their sense of public utility, their conception of what it is expedient that men should do, from a purely social standpoint, their ideas of the line of personal action which is best adapted to secure and promote the general welfare—this, indeed, their laws will always represent to some extent, at least. But this is not the morality of which my correspondent speaks, nor is it the morality which Mr. Justice Blackstone had in his mind when he spoke of "law"—meaning human law—as having "her seat in the bosom of God," and credited law—human law—with "prescribing what is right and prohibiting what is wrong."

* * *

FOR, with us, "morals" has gotten far away from its etymological significance. It is no longer essentially connected with manners, the sole business of human law. It has come to signify an internal condition, a mental state, a feeling, a sentiment, an emotion, call it what you will, which may or may not find expression in accordance with the requirements of human law, but which never depends in the slightest degree on human law, written or unwritten, common or statute, for its existence or its sanction. It has thus become a matter of individual experience and individual concern, and, being removed altogether from the world of matter to the world of mind, it has escaped forever from the jurisdiction, the cognizance, the dominion of human law.

* * *

THERE is no vain transcendentalism about all this, no useless, wandering, groping metaphysics or mysticism. Neither is there any covert preaching, or exhorting designedly concealed within it. The purpose is not to argue for right-doing, to extol morality, to make anybody esteem it a good thing who does not wish to esteem or follow it. The whole business is with a matter of definition. But definitions, be it observed, are the life of words, and it is only through words that the work of the intellect can be done. If the tools are not the right ones, the production is monstrous, and men are made to follow false lights, and to sail in rotten vessels on the ocean of thought.

* * *

ONCE we dissociate "morals" completely from mos or "manners," we prick the bubbles of many fads. The unspeakable absurdity of all attempts to legislate folks into righteousness becomes glaringly apparent. Nobody will maintain for an instant that it is possible even if it were advisable, to control the thoughts or minds of men by any system of legislation. It was formerly a notion, universally accepted, and acted on with calamitous results to the race, that certain opinions could be knocked, or racked, or burned out of people, and other opinions gotten into them, as substitutes, by similar processes. But this psychological theory is now discarded as hardly consistent with the facts. And that the soul, the mind, the intellect are beyond the reach of legal machinery is, with us, an axiom. If morality, then, in the modern sense, is a matter of internal state, as distinguished from a matter of external behavior, or conduct, law and morality in our day are and must remain entirely distinct and apart. For want of observing this distinction, Mr. Justice Blackstone permits himself to speak of law—human law, be it repeated—as something which commands what is right and prohibits what is wrong. Right and wrong, by whatever standard they may be discriminated, are things which belong to the domain of morals, and have nothing whatever to do with manners, except in so far as good manners follow from good morals. It may be true that the first always follow from the last; but it is certainly true that manners of a high and practically perfect kind may exist, and do, in fact, very often exist without a perceptible trace of genuine morality. Many put on good manners, out of deference to the law of the State; they put them on out of deference to the laws of society, for the reason that they want to "get along" in the world. They do right for fear of legal and of social penalties. They obey the civil law, and the laws or customs of polite intercourse for what there is in it. Such persons are good citizens, and law-abiding, but such are not moral.

* * *

THERE has never yet been a State or country whose laws, sometime or other, have not forbidden what was right, and commanded what was wrong. The history of Mr. Justice Blackstone's own country has been repeatedly stained, at no great intervals of time, with legislation of the vilest character. Some of the greatest infamies ever embodied in human law were upon the statute book when that distinguished commentator delivered those famous lectures of his. He did not disdain to trifle with his own conscience, and tamper with the moral welfare of his pupils' souls, by pitiful special pleading in behalf of such Acts of Parliament, and by the shabbiest Charlatanism of logic, to disguise their true inspiration and purpose. But he is still very highly recommended to the admiration and confidence of American youth in many law schools.

* * *

The object of law—however wildly and disastrously for the race it often blunders in reaching out after the same—is to make good citizens. The business of morality is to make good men. The difference between the good citizen in his relation to law, and the good man, as the product of morality, may be well compared to the difference between a gentleman and a genteel man. The gentleman behaves as such under the influence of an inward monitor, whose orders find expression in his course of life. He is not gentlemanly because it pays. He is just as much a gentleman when he is alone in the forest, "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife," as when he is in the church, the forum, the political meeting, the reception parlor. He is good-mannered, if you choose, at heart. But it is by no means so with the man who is merely genteel. Perfect gentility has frequently been found associated with almost total depravity. Fine ball-room behavior, elaborate courtesy on the bustling thoroughfare, the street car, the railway, the steamboat, at the home and the office—these are practiced by hundreds who not only care nothing for what they should express, but actually make themselves adepts in such matters for the express purpose of accomplishing nefarious schemes. They are perfectly genteel, and at the same time, perfectly villainous. They are the creatures of law. Only morality can change them for the better.

REV. DR. NEWMAN SMITH, of New Haven, Connecticut, "startled" his congregation by refusing to read the Governor's proclamation appointing "Good Friday" as a day of fasting. He explained that he refused to do so because the day was already hallowed by a higher authority than the chief executive of his State.

* * *

I AM not concerned with the aspect of Good Friday, as "hallowed" or otherwise, in making these notes. To each his own "sacred day," or days. But I am always surprised anew when I find State intermeddling in religious matters of this sort going unrebuked, and its occasional repudiation "startling" people in this latter part of the nineteenth century of "Christian civilization." Why, the startling thing about this audacious proceeding among us "free" Americans is that any executive, Federal or State, should dream of undertaking it—should dare to undertake it. What is this act of "setting apart" a day for either thanksgiving or fasting but an impertinent invasion by the civil power where religion alone has place? What is it but an attempt of President or governor to play the part of pope? Who made either of them a judge or a ruler over the people, that either ventures to decide for us whether it is good to give thanks, or to go without food at any time, and what are they who presume to fix a time when others are to do these things? Thomas Jefferson, clear-sighted, sincere, true-hearted man that he was, steered clear of this affront to his fellows, this transcendent absurdity. Grover Cleveland out-Heroded Herod in his last Thanksgiving proclamation. A portion of that extraordinary document was rather in the nature of a dogmatical exposition of the True Faith, such as, in the Roman Catholic Church, not even a pope can utter, but which needs, for its proper formulation, the solemn process of Ecumenical Council.

It is an unfortunate statement of truth that is made by the president of the Portland (Oregon) branch of the "National Municipal League," in the following:—

"The church membership and following is sufficiently numerous to impose its united will upon any political or municipal party in any city of the United States. It could, if united and determined, set up a political or a municipal ideal and compel politicians of every party to conform to it."

The unfortunate thing about it is that the "church membership and following" are being wheeled into line to accomplish this very thing.

The following is part of an editorial paragraph appearing in the N. Y. Independent, of May 6:—

"A clergyman writes us to ask if it would be in violation of the neutrality laws for individuals to present money to King George for the support of his war against the Turk. He believes that 'the fame of Greece at Marathon, in heaven's eyes, has been eclipsed by her fame at Reveni Pass,' and that it is 'a service to the extension of the kingdom of Christ as much to send just now rifles and ammunition to Greece as it is to send Bibles and hymn books to the Congo.' He wants himself to send money enough to buy a few bullets; and he does not believe 'that it would be wrong to pray that if it be God's will each one of them might be an instrument for righteousness.' "

And this clergyman professes to stand before the people as the representative of Him whose doctrine is, "Love your enemies." If the general sentiment of Christendom were not grossly perverted on this point from the teaching of the gospel, would it be possible for a Christian clergyman seriously to give utterance to such utterly heathen sentiments in the name of Christianity?

Precedents Against Government Concessions to a Church.

EDITOR AMERICAN SENTINEL: Please put on record in your valuable paper the following from the Veto Messages of the Presidents of the United States.

February 21, 1811, President James Madison sent to the House of Representatives the following veto:—

"Having examined and considered the bill entitled 'An Act incorporating the Protestant Episcopal church in the town of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, I now return the bill to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with the following objections:—

"Because the bill exceeds the rightful authority to which governments are limited by the essential distinction between civil and religious functions, and violates in particular the article of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that 'Congress shall make no law respecting a religious establishment.' This bill enacts into and establishes by law sundry rules and proceedings relative purely to the organization and policy of the church incorporated. . . . This particular church, therefore, would so far be a religious establishment by law, a legal force and sanction being given to certain articles in its constitution and administration. . . . Because the bill vests in the said incorporated church an authority to provide for the support of the poor and the education of poor children of the same; an authority which, being altogether superfluous, if provision is to be the result of pious charity, would be a precedent for giving to religious societies as such, a legal agency in carrying into effect a public and civil duty.

"JAMES MADISON."

February 23, 1811, the above veto message was sustained by the House by a vote of 74 to 29 (see "Veto Messages," page 11).

February 28, 1811, the President sent to the House the following veto:—

"Having examined and considered the bill entitled 'An Act for the relief of Richard Ferom, William Coleman, Robert Lewis, Samuel Mimms, Joseph Wilson, and the Baptist church at Salem meeting house in the Mississippi territory,' I now return the same to the House of Representatives in which it originated, with the following objections:—

"Because the bill, in reserving a certain parcel of land of the United States for the use of said Baptist church, comprises a principle and precedent for the appropriation of funds of the United States for the use and support of religious societies, contrary to the article of the Constitution which declares that Congress shall make no law respecting a religious establishment.

"JAMES MADISON."

March 3, 1811, the House sustained the President's veto by a vote of 55 to 33.

In view of these precedents, the Secretary of War should immediately rescind his recent inconsiderate and unlawful order granting the Roman Catholic church the privilege of erecting a church on ground at West Point, belonging to the United States. Can a cabinet officer do what Congress could not do? WILLIAM BIRNEY.

Washington, May 6, 1897.

RELIGION in politics means the Church in politics, and the Church in politics means a facsimile of the papacy.

Rome, the Anglo-Saxons, and the World.

From "Present Truth," London, Eng.

In the Catholic Times, of April 9, the Rev. William Barry, D. D. tells the reason why the authorities of the Roman Catholic church gave permission not only to the laity, but also to the younger clergy, to attend the English universities. He says:—

"It was felt that if we aimed at a wide diffusion of our principles and doctrines among the cultivated classes, we could not any more stand aloof from them; we must take our place in English society, gain some experience of the men whom we desired to influence, and no longer stay within the intrenchments that, most serviceable or necessary in their day, had still kept us at a distance from the social life of our fellow-countrymen."

A little further on in the same article comes the following frank and bold statement of Rome's aims and hopes with regard to England:—

"There are at least one hundred millions of people who speak the English tongue; some three hundred millions more fall under their influence; almost a third of the earth's surface lies within the English sphere; and, as we are proud of reminding one another, 'Britannia rules the waves.' In a letter which is now lying before me, signed by one of the most eminent dignitaries in Christendom, I find the conviction set down that 'the English-speaking nations will dominate the world, and that if the Church is to exercise her proper sway in gaining the ear and the heart of the English and American people, her supremacy will be secured.' Impressive words, which carry with them a high privilege and a momentous duty!

"Instead of the Imperial Romans, whom Christianity made its own fifteen hundred years ago, have come the world-subduing Britons. Their genius, literature, laws and methods are peculiar to themselves, yet have not a little in common with the mediæval spirit, while they furnish an amazing contrast to the despotic, centralising, pseudo-classical, and altogether illiberal administration of modern States abroad. Rome, as it appeared to me, might well stretch out a hand to England across the deadly Napoleonic régime that, by the confession of men like M. Taine, is strangling the life out of France and Italy.

"The very fact that Leo XIII. had recognized through his legate in America the free Constitution of the United States with eulogy and admiration, was to me a proof of the kinship between the old English and the Catholic way of dealing with men. Could there be anything more desirable than to encourage a genuine understanding between these two powers, one the supreme spiritual power, the other as truly progressive as conservative, and both alike opposed to anarchic revolution no less than to bureaucratic despotism? England was beginning to recover the elements of the Catholic religion; she had turned her feet into a pathway at the end of which was the apostles' shrine. Could not Rome hasten forth to meet her?"

The fact that Rome's agents speak out so plainly is very significant, showing that she is now sure of her ground.

Whose Authority Do They Acknowledge?

THE Elizabeth (New Jersey) News, of March 18, prints a sermon delivered by "Father" James H. Brady, curate of St. Mary's Church of Elizabeth, delivered March 14, from which we quote the following:—

"Right here it is necessary for me to remind you that the day which you observe as Catholic Christians, and in fact which all others who claim to be Christians do observe, is not the same day which is spoken of in this third commandment. If you look to the Bible as an authority for the observance of the day you will not find it. The Sabbath day spoken of in the Book of Exodus or in the Book of Deuteronomy, as well as the word "Sabbath," mentioned in the New Testament, has relation to the seventh day in the week and not to the first.

"It is well to remind the Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and all other Christians outside of the pale of Mother Church that the Bible, the only authority which they recognize in matters of religion, does not support them anywhere in the observance of the Christian day, namely, Sunday. For them to call Sunday the Sabbath and speak of 'Sabbath-school,' is arrant nonsense. The Seventh-day Baptists are the only ones who properly employ the term Sabbath, because they also observe the seventh and not the first day of the week as the day of rest.

"The Christian Sunday is an institution of the Roman Catholic church, and those who observe the day observe a commandment of the Catholic church, and thus indirectly acknowledge the authority of that church to legislate in the name of God in all religious matters and her superiority over the Bible. For those who believe in the divine authority of the church the observance of Sunday is but natural. Those, however, who otherwise refuse to acknowledge the authority of the Catholic church and yet observe Sunday and regard it as a Sabbath are foolishly inconsistent."

Our Sunday-keeping brethren sometimes grow impatient when these oft-repeated statements of Roman Catholics are brought to their attention. They say, because Roman Catholics assert that to keep Sunday is to "indirectly acknowledge the authority of that church to legislate in the name of God," does not make it so. This is quite true. But the assertion is supported by the following facts:—

1. The Bible says, the "seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

2. It nowhere says the first day is the Sabbath.

3. With the Protestant the Bible is the sole and only authority.

4. The Bible furnishes no authority for the sanctification of the first day and the desecration of the seventh day.

5. The Roman Catholic church professes to furnish this authority on the ground of "her superiority over the Bible."

When Protestants therefore desecrate the Sabbath day contrary to the command of God, and in harmony with the command of the Roman Catholic church, whose authority do they really acknowledge? They may assert that they do not acknowledge the authority of the Roman Catholic church, but whose authority do they acknowledge?

It will not do to assert that the change from the seventh to the first day occurred before the Roman Catholic church came into existence. The principles of the papacy were manifesting themselves in Paul's day, for he declared "the mystery of iniquity doth already work."

There are some Protestants of prominence who admit the absence of a scriptural command for Sunday observance.

"Binney's Theological Compend," published by the Methodist Book Concern, of this city, has this to say on this point:—

"This law [ten commandments] is spiritual and perfect, extending to all the inward creations and outward acts of men, and can never be changed or annulled."—P. 153.

"The seventh-day Sabbath was strictly observed by Christ and his apostles previous to his resurrection."—P. 170.

"Jesus, after his resurrection, changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week."—P. 171.

"When Jesus gave instruction for this change, we are not told, but likely during the time when he spoke to his apostles of the things pertaining to his kingdom. Acts 1:3. This is probably one of the many unrecorded things which Jesus did."—P. 171.

The reader will observe that this is the ground on which the Roman Catholic rests prayers for the dead, adoration of saints, purgatory, etc., etc. When asked to furnish a command of the Lord for these practices, the answer is made that the Lord instructed his church concerning these things, and consequently it was not necessary to record them in the Bible; they come to us by tradition. This is the separating line between the Protestant and the Catholic.

Here is another frank acknowledgment from a prominent member of the Protestant Episcopal church:—

“There are some points of great difficulty respecting the fourth commandment. . . .

“In the first place we are commanded to keep holy the seventh day; but yet we do not think it necessary to keep the seventh day holy; for the seventh day is Saturday. It may be said that we keep the first day instead; but surely this is not the same thing; the first day cannot be the seventh day; and where are we told in Scripture that we are to keep the first day at all? We are commanded to keep the seventh; but we are nowhere commanded to keep the first day. There is another difficulty on this subject: We Christians in considering each of the ten commandments, turn to what our Lord says in explanation of them; for in the sermon on the mount he says, that ‘not one jot or tittle’ of the law shall fail; that he has come ‘not to destroy but to fulfill’ the law; and then he shows in the instance of the sixth, seventh, and third commandments, how he will require them to be fulfilled by Christians, not in the letter only, but in the spirit, the heart, and thought. . . .

“The reason why we keep the first day of the week holy instead of the seventh is for the same reason that we observe many other things, not because the Bible, but because the Church has enjoined it.”*

Here is another from a Baptist clergyman:—

“There was and is a commandment to keep holy the Sabbath day, but that Sabbath day is not Sunday. It will, however, be readily said, with some show of triumph, that the Sabbath was transferred from the seventh to the first day of the week, with all its duties, privileges, and sanctions. Earnestly desiring information on this subject, which I have studied for so many years, I ask, Where can the record of such a transaction be found?—Not in the New Testament,—absolutely not. There is no scriptural evidence of the change of the Sabbath institution from the seventh to the first day of the week.”

“Of course I quite well know that Sunday did come into use in early Christian history as a religious day, as we learn from the Christian fathers and other sources. But what a pity it comes branded with the mark of paganism and christened with the name of the sun-god, when adopted and sanctified by the papal apostasy, and bequeathed as a sacred legacy to Protestantism and the Christian world!”—From a paper read by Dr. Hiscox, before the Baptist Pastors’ Conference, New York City, Nov. 5, 1893.

In the face of all this is it not at least dangerous to try to compel by civil law a Seventh-day Adventist or Baptist to observe the first day of the week? Seventh-day Adventists believe that in observing Sunday men dishonor God and do honor to the papacy. Before this can be denied it must be shown from Scripture that God has removed his blessing from the seventh-day Sabbath and given men permission to desecrate it; that He has revoked his permission to men to work on that day and commanded them to keep it holy. Where are these commands?

Religious Liberty in Washington.

BY J. L. WILSON.

“Absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment, belief, and worship, shall be guaranteed to every individual, and no one shall be molested or disturbed in person or property, on account of religion; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the State. No public money or property shall be appropriated for, or applied to, religious establishment. No religious qualification shall be required for any public office or employment, nor shall any person be incompetent as a witness or juror, in consequence of his opinion on matters of religion, nor be questioned in any court of justice touching his religious belief to affect the weight of his testimony.” So reads Section 11 of Article 1 of the “Declaration of Rights,” of the constitution of the State of Washington (ratified 1889).

Again, we read from Article 26, the “Compact With the United States”:—

“First, That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of this State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.”

These articles would seem to give to every person in this State freedom to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; but though their language is so plain, there are some who are deprived of the liberty granted them under this constitution, as the following will show:—

“At 11:30 o’clock last night the agreement was reached; and under instructions from the court a sealed verdict was permitted and the jurors were allowed to go home. . . . At 9 o’clock this morning they were again brought into court, when a call of the jury developed that one of the jurymen was missing. This juror was D. A. Webb, a devout Seventh-day Adventist, who last night had asked to be excused until Monday before the verdict had been received and whose request was refused. In ascertaining who was missing, the court sent the sheriff after him and dismissed the jury.

“In a short time Deputy Sheriff McClelland located the missing juror at Sabbath-school and brought him to the court. Then the verdict of the jury was announced. . . . The result of the jury’s findings was not near so interesting to the audience by this time as what the court would do with the recalcitrant jurymen. The suspense was not of any length, however, for as soon as the clerk had read the verdict, the court asked Mr. Webb what excuse he had to offer for his action in not reporting with the rest of the jury. The jurymen replied: ‘The Constitution of the United States allows every man to worship in any manner he sees fit.’ That was as far as he got.

* “Plain Sermons on the Catechism,” vol. i, pp. 334-336; by Rev. Isaac Williams, B. D., late Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford; Longmans, Green & Co., 15 E. 16th St., N. Y., and 30 Paternoster Row, London, E. C.; also James Pott & Co., N. Y.

The court took a hand then, and said: 'The Constitution of the United States and the laws of this State say that you are fined $5, and you will be committed until it is paid. Mr. Sheriff, take charge of this man.'

"Mr. Webb started a long speech, in which he quoted Scripture liberally, but the court tired in short order, and Mr. Webb was taken under the care of the sheriff and locked up in the County Jail. Mr. Webb was under restraint about three quarters of an hour, when some of his friends called on the sheriff and deposited the amount of the fine. The jurymen would not himself pay it, saying to do so would be inconsistent with the stand he had taken and with his religious convictions."

This is taken from the Daily Olympian, of April 24, last. Mr. Webb was summoned to appear on the jury April 13; he appeared as requested, and begged Judge Ayre to excuse him from the jury altogether, as he kept the seventh day, and could not act on that day. The judge said, "You can act until that time, then you will be excused." The first Friday came, and a few hours before the Sabbath began the judge said, "Mr. Webb, you are excused." The next week Judge Jacobs, from Seattle, acted in Judge Ayre's place.

When the Sabbath hours were drawing nigh, Mr. W. presented his request to the judge to be excused from serving on the jury during the hours of his day of worship. This the judge would not grant. Mr. Webb, with rest of the jurymen, was locked up in the jury-room until 11:30 Friday evening. When they were dismissed Mr. W. told them he would not appear again on Sabbath morning; but on Sabbath morning the sheriff came after him and took him from the church, where he had met with others of like faith to worship his God. (Is that the liberty that the constitution of the State of Washington grants, without any hearing more than is stated above?)

When Judge Jacobs imposed the fine of $5 and ordered Mr. Webb committed until the fine was paid, Mr. Webb asked for a few minutes to give a reason for his action. So he began by reading, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." The judge then interrupted by saying, "Sheriff, take this man and lock him up; we want no long sermons."

Mr. Webb was then locked up as stated; but a lawyer, Mr. Falkner, paid the fine of his own accord, and Mr. Webb was then set at liberty.

But where is the justice in such treatment at the hands of those that are claiming to mete out justice to the people? Truly, the Lord says: "And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey: and the Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment."

In the April issue of the Nineteenth Century appears an article on "How I Became Pope," which is extracted from the autobiographical commentaries of Pius the Second. History refers to the latter as a person of no small literary ability, which appeared in his authorship of society verse, novelettes, and books of history and travels. Of the circumstances which attended the casting of the vote which elevated him to the pontifical throne, he says:—

"We adjourned to luncheon, and from that moment, what cabals! The more powerful members of the college, whether their strength lay in reputation or wealth, beckoned others to their side. They promised, they threatened. They were even some who without a blush, without a shred of modesty, pleaded their own merits, and demanded the supreme pontificate qualifications. . . . Each man boasted of his qualifications. The bickering of these claimants was something extraordinary; through a day and a sleepless night it raged with unabated virulence."

Such is the testimony of the pope himself as to the character of the proceedings which resulted in the elevation of Pius II. before Christendom as the supreme visible head of the Christian church. But the cause of Christ knows nothing of intrigue.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER

To secure widespread and favorable publicity for THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, we have decided to place a few introductory sets in each community throughout the country for comparison with all other reference works as to plan, scope, lateness of treatment and general practical and educational value. We feel that every set will create a demand for others. While the distribution will be general in extent, it will last for a limited time only, after which our regular subscription sale will begin, at prices ranging from $48 to $72 a set, according to style of binding. Now, however, to quickly and thoroughly introduce the work, as above stated, we make the price merely nominal (about the cost of paper and printing), the distribution being LIMITED TO A VERY FEW WEEKS, reserving the privilege of withdrawing the offer at any time when we consider a sufficient number of these introductory sets, at the special price, have been distributed.

OUR GREAT SPECIAL OFFER.

SEND $1.00 TO THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PUBLISHING CO., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and a full set of eight volumes of the NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, in cloth binding will be forwarded to you. The balance is payable at the rate of $1.50 monthly for one year, or about 5 cents a day. If you prefer the half-Morocco binding, the monthly payment will be $2.00, and for full sheep, $2.50 per month for one year. We recommend the half-Morocco style, which is particularly elegant and serviceable, and will last a lifetime. If not entirely satisfactory any set may be returned within ten days and money will be promptly refunded. Owing to the nominal price at which these introductory sets are supplied, transportation charges must be paid by the purchaser; but our entire confidence that the volumes will be gladly received and cheerfully paid for is shown by sending a $48.00 set of books on an advance payment of only $1.00. We also feel that you will thoroughly appreciate this great work and speak favorably of it to others. Each set weighs boxed nearly 50 pounds, and will be shipped by freight unless otherwise ordered. We refer you to the publishers of this paper. Please mention it when writing.

"THE First of all the commandments is this: Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

"And the Second is like, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

"There is none other commandment greater than these."

"On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

It is certain that if these two commandments had been always observed by all men, there never could have been a State on the earth.

There would have been government, but no State. The government would have been altogether the government of God; He, the only King, the only Governor, on earth even as in heaven.

There would have been society, but no State. Because, men loving God with all the heart, and all the soul and all the mind, and all the strength; and their neighbors as themselves; the will of God would have been done on earth even as in heaven. All would have been one united, harmonious, happy, holy, family.

There is an essential distinction between society and the State.

SOCIETY is the union which exists between men, without distinction of frontiers—without exterior restraint—and for the sole reason that they are men.

The civil society or STATE is an assemblage of men subject to a common authority, to common laws,—that is to say, a society whose members may be constrained by public force to respect their reciprocal rights. Two necessary elements enter into the idea of the State: laws and force.—Janet: "Elements of Morals," p. 143.

This distinction, however, though clear and easily evident, is seldom recognized. Indeed, it is not recognized at all by those who are anxious to secure the union of religion and the State in the United States.

But men did not observe these two "first of all the commandments." They would not love God with all their heart: They would not love their neighbors as themselves. They rejected God as their only Ruler, their only Sovereign, and became ambitious to rule over one another. And thus originated politics and the State.

The Scripture outlines the story of this: "When they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things." "And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind."

Note, that at the first, men did know God. But they chose not to glorify Him, not to honor Him, not to give Him the first place in all their thoughts and actions. Knowing God, they did not like to retain Him in their knowledge.

The next step was that they became vain in their own imaginations. They professed themselves to be wise, of themselves. The consequence was that they became fools; and their foolish heart was darkened.

In their vain imaginations they made gods of their own. And then to assist them in their worship, they made images of the gods which they had imagined.

The image was always the outward, tangible form of the god which they had already conceived in the imagination. Imagining is simply mental image-ing. The outward form of the god, whether it be the shining sun in the heavens or a hideously shaped block of wood or stone, is only the outward form of the image-ing that has already been performed in the imagination.

Thus, from the knowledge of the true God, they went to the worship of false gods. From the light, they went into darkness. From righteousness they went to wickedness.

This is the truth. And the records of the earliest nations witness to it. The earliest records—those of the plain of Shinar—witness that the people at first had a knowledge of the true God. The records of the next two of the earliest nations, Egypt and Assyria, bear witness to this same thing.

In all these places the earliest records testify that the gods were their first rulers and the real kings: while men, in the places of authority, were but the servants, the viceroys of the god who was held to be the real king.

For instance, one of the earliest records from Shinar runs thus: "To [the god] Ninridu, his King, for the preservation of Idadu, viceroy of Ridu, the servant, the delight of Ninridu." Another: "To [the god] Ninip the King, his King, Gudea, viceroy of [the god] Zirgulla, his house built." Another: "To Nana the lady, lady splendid, his lady, Dudea, viceroy of Zirgulla . . . raised."

These are not only the earliest of the records that have been found in that land, but they themselves show that they are of the earliest records that were made in that land. And they clearly testify of the time when as yet, there were no kings amongst men. The gods were the kings; and the men in authority claimed only to be the viceroys of the gods who were held to be the real kings.

And all this testifies of a time further back, when the people knew and recognized God as the only King and rightful Ruler of men. They show also that this knowledge of God was so recent, and still so strong upon the minds of the people, that men who stood in places of authority had not the boldness to assume the title of king, even though they held the power.

The records of Egypt and Assyria testify precisely to these same things. And so far there was as yet no State. There was society.

There came a time, however, when even this lingering knowledge of God as King and only rightful Ruler, was cast off; and the man assumed the full title and prerogatives of king, himself.

The first man to do this was Nimrod. Nimrod was the first man in the world who had the boldness to take to himself the title and prerogative of king, in the face of the yet lingering idea of God as king. And the name which he bears, itself testifies to the fact that his action in this, was considered by men and also by the Lord, as precisely the bold thing which we have indicated. The name Nimrod "signifies rebellion, supercilious contempt, and is equivalent to 'the extremely impious rebel.'"

The Bible record of Nimrod is that "He began to be a mighty one in the earth;" or, as another translation gives it, "He was the first mighty one in the earth."

That is, Nimrod was the first one to establish the might, the power, the authority, of human government, in the form of an organized State. He was the first man to assert the power and prerogatives, and assume the title, of king over men. "And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar."

Consequently, "With the setting up of Nimrod's kingdom, the entire ancient world entered a new historical phase. The oriental tradition which makes that warrior the first man who wore a kingly crown, points to a fact more significant than the assumption of a new ornament of dress, or even the conquest of a province. His reign introduced to the world a new system of relations between the governor and the governed. The authority of former rulers rested upon the feeling of kindred; and the ascendancy of the chief was an image of parental control. Nimrod, on the contrary, was a sovereign of territory, and of men just so far as they were its inhabitants, and irrespective of personal ties. Hitherto there had been tribes—enlarged families—Society: now there was a nation, a political community—the State. The political and social history of the world henceforth are distinct, if not divergent."

Such was the true origin of the State. It was the result of the apostasy of men from God. Such only could possibly be its origin; for if all men had always observed the two "first of all the commandments," it would have been impossible for there ever to be any State. There could have been no human authority exercised. All would have been equally subject to God; He would have been the only Sovereign.

Before Nimrod there was Society. Respect of the rights of persons and of their property was maintained. It was only when the apostasy grew, and men got farther and farther from God, that the monarchical idea was established and personified in Nimrod.

Let us not now be misunderstood. We do not say, nor do we intend to imply, that there should now be no human government, that there should be no State, nor even that there should be no monarchy. We simply say that which is the truth, that if there never had been any apostasy from God, there never could have been on earth any of these.

It is true that these things are the consequences of the apostasy from God. But men having apostatised from God, these things all, even to such Monarchy as that of Nimrod or of Nero, became necessary, just in proportion to the degree of apostasy.

It is better that there should be a government, bad as it may be, than that there should be no government at all. Even such a government as Nimrod's or Nero's is better than none at all. But without apostasy having gone to a fearful length, there never could have been any such government as Nimrod's or Nero's.

Nimrod's example was eagerly followed by all the nations around, until they were all absorbed in it. Society had passed away, and only States remained: and these universally idolatrous. In all that region, only Abraham believed God; and even his own parents were idolators. "They served other gods."

God chose Abraham then to be the father of all them that believe God: the father of all who will have God alone to be their God. Abraham represented then, the religion of God, the beginning of the Church of God.

And, from that State, God separated Abraham. He said to Abraham, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, into a land that I will show thee."

And in thus separating Abraham from that State, from his country, God taught the people then, and through all time, the separation of religion and the State, the separation of Church and State.

THE faith of Christ was not made to be guarded by the power of man, but to guard by its power the man to whom it is given.

"Christian Citizenship" Defined.

IN answer to the question "What is Christian Citizenship," the May Christian Endeavorer says that,—

"We must not confuse the 'Christian citizen' with the idea of the Christian business man, Christian mechanic, Christian father, Christian soldier, or Christian church member; but the 'Christian citizen' is one who brings Christian principles to bear upon his political life."

In regard to which it may be said that the Christian, merely as such, is a Christian business man, Christian mechanic, Christian father, and Christian in every other relation of his life; for Christianity covers the entire range of life's activities. And as the "Christian citizen" is "not to be confused" with this, it plainly follows that something different from this Christianity regulates his conduct as a "Christian citizen."

And such, indeed, is the case; for in politics the aim is to compel men to a certain course of conduct; while Christianity knows no compulsion, but simply says, "Whosoever will, let him come."

True Reform Work Illustrated.

THE well-known temperance worker, Francis Murphy, has recently been conducting gospel temperance meetings in Boston, with great success. Of the agency by which this success has been attained, he says:—

"From the first we had the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. Men who had been enslaved for years by intoxicating liquors signed the pledge, and reverently kneeling, with tears of repentance running down their faces, cried out, 'Lord, have mercy on me; deliver me from the power and dominion of sin.' Thank God, their prayers have been answered in complete deliverance from the drink habit and all other sinful conduct.

"The gospel of Jesus Christ has enabled us to come off more than conqueror in this great struggle with sin in the face of all the people of this classic city of Boston. The press of Boston gave me the most hearty and generous support from the first meeting to the finish, and the ministers also. All denominations heartily united in the name of Jesus Christ. It has been a Pentecostal time. We were all with one accord in one place at one time. Men were filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. The city government were so favorably impressed with the work that they voted to give Faneuil Hall free of charge to me for the work."

And this is what might be done everywhere, if the effort for reform were but conducted by the divine Agency here brought to view. If Mr. Murphy had undertaken to conduct political temperance meetings instead of gospel temperance meetings, would any such success have crowned his efforts? Certainly not. The Spirit of God is the great reforming agency in this world, and without this no righteous reform can be accomplished. If the cause be righteous, its leaders may confidently look to God for the power to crown their efforts with success.

Alas, that so many reformers of this day should be grasping for political power, instead of seeking for the power of the Spirit!

THE gospel of God finds every person in bondage, and calls every person to liberty. "If the Son shall make you free," is its language, "ye shall be free indeed." No person whom the Son makes free can have occasion to complain that he is in slavery.

A Government of God on Earth.

IN a Christian government God is King, Judge, and Lawgiver, and the individual man or woman is the subject who is governed. There is a government of God on earth wherever there is an individual who has entered into governmental relations with God. This can be done only by faith, for "the carnal mind is enmity against God," and only faith in God can eliminate the carnal or natural propensities from the soul.

It is in accordance with God's plan of redemption that the government of God should exist in this form among men. It is the only possible form in which it can exist under the conditions which have ensued since the fall. Every other "government of God," therefore, is not in the purpose of God, and is not God's government. It is as useless for men to try to set up a government of God on the earth as it would be for them to undertake any other form of opposition to God. The plan of redemption can be carried out only as it is now being carried out through the operation of God's grace upon the individual heart, bringing it into subjection to the will of God. And the grace of God must operate through faith.

In the government of God, God's law is the rule of conduct. This is a perfect rule—the only one in existence—being dictated by Omniscience. It would seem that all people who have the Bible should be aware of this;

yet almost the first step that is taken by certain professors of Christianity in their repeated attempts to set up God's government here, is to enact laws. There is no room for legislation in the matter. God's own law covers every possible phase of activity under His government.

What all men ought to do, and the only thing that any man or class of men properly can do, is to fall in with the plan and providence of God, which is working to gather out of all nations and peoples of earth subjects for the kingdom of God, by establishing a government of God in each heart that will yield to the gospel invitation.

When this work shall be finished, as ere long it will, the government of God will beset up on the "new earth," in visible glory.

TRUE reform effort aims to change the man himself, and not merely his circumstances; and this is why human laws possess no reforming power.

A Proposed "Pool" of Churches.

AT an interdenominational meeting of the "Congregational Club" in the Third Congregational church of San Francisco, May 4, the statement was made by one speaker and liberally applauded, that "There are 100 churches too many in the State of California, and if they should die off it would be the best thing for the kingdom of God."

This utterance seemed to strike the key-note for the meeting, and another speaker expressed the opinion that "A commission should be appointed representing all the evangelical churches, to arrange the placing of churches according to population. As to what churches should be placed in any one city, let priority of establishment determine."

After further remarks in support of this idea, a resolution was adopted unanimously providing (as reported in the San Francisco Call) "that steps be taken preparatory to the establishment of a State commission, which shall have for its object the placing of evangelical churches according to population."

This of course means nothing less than a "pooling" of the popular churches for their own interests and against such denominations as do not have "population" on their side. While the thought was not expressed at the meeting, and probably was not contemplated, there can be no doubt that the practical working out of this idea would result in arraying the more powerful and popular church bodies against the numerically weaker ones, which of course will not be regarded by the church "pool" as being at all necessary to the interests of the community in which they exist.

Let the churches seek for the "unity of the Spirit." Any other kind of church union will be worse than the present disunion.

A Candid Admission.

THE "Rescue of the Sabbath in California" is the topic of a communication from Rev. William Rader, of San Francisco, to the May Christian Endeavorer. In it Mr. Rader mentioned that since 1883 California has had no Sunday law, and adds that the California climate invites Sunday desecration (which is obviously true,) and then says:—

"I would not make the impression that the California sabbath is worse than that of Illinois or Massachusetts, or any other State. . . . If California is not what it ought to be, morally, the climate is not wholly responsible. The San Francisco sabbath is observed quite as well as the Chicago sabbath."

In other words, Sunday desecration is no worse in California, where there is no Sunday law, than in Illinois, Massachusetts, or "any other State," where Sunday laws exist, notwithstanding that the California climate is unusually conducive to indulgence in the various forms of Sunday recreation.

Of what use, then, are Sunday laws in the States? What do they accomplish more than to manufacture "crime," by causing the arrest of people for doing what is allowed to be good and lawful on other days of the week!

Where there is the most of the law of God in the heart, the Sabbath will be best observed. But only the Spirit of God can write his law in men's hearts.

Lawless Lawmakers.

THE chief law-making body of the country is involved in a scandal. The fact has come to light that several United States senators have made use of their official positions for purposes of personal gain. By speculating in shares of sugar stock at a time when the price of sugar was dependent upon their own action, knowing that the price of sugar stock would be advanced as soon as certain Senate proceedings became known to the public, they were able to add thousands of dollars to their private wealth. There was no risk involved in the transaction. It was simply a matter of using the knowledge and power which were theirs by virtue of their official positions.

Such a proceeding is plainly dishonest, and therefore in violation of a principle which every law-making body is bound to uphold. More than this: it is a betrayal of a high public trust, and therefore indicative of a thoroughly selfish—or lawless—disposition.

Law-making cannot be safely entrusted to lawless men. And when men in the highest law-making assembly in the land themselves disregard the law, the spectacle affords the strongest illustration of the inability of law in itself to produce good government.

The first need of all men—in positions of public trust or out of them—is an unselfish character. Such a character makes men good as neighbors and good as legislators. But law is powerless to produce this character. Self can be overcome and driven out of the heart only by the grace of God.

When the grace of God shall no longer work upon men's hearts—when by continued rejection the Spirit of God shall have been driven away from them—the Government is doomed. Its Constitution will not save it. No principles of right and justice which have been established in a government by its founders, however noble and great, can avail aught when that government is administered by selfish, unscrupulous men.

True, it is proposed to remedy the situation by removing all such men from office, and putting good men in their places. But of this it need only be said that it cannot be done. The cry, "Turn the rascals out," has long been the campaign motto of the "reform" forces, but the "rascals" are in office still. There is nothing in politics which has a tendency to evolve good men. And as long as men retain natures susceptible to corrupting influences, as long as the masses of mankind remain followers instead of leaders, so long will politics continue to be ruled by the "boss" and the "machine."

The influence of evil is spreading, its power is augmenting; and it cannot be overcome by law. Law will not administer itself. He who makes and administers the law must have his own heart safeguarded from the prevailing selfishness, or the law will not be made the instrument of justice.

Not law, but the grace of God, is first in the maintenance of peace and justice in the earth. Without the power of the Spirit, no reform from evil is possible.

Religious Inebriates.

A SAMPLE of the intoxication that is produced by imbibing religious error is given in the Christian Endeavorer for May. Mr. G. L. Wilson, having evidently read and assimilated the Rev. Mr. Gamble's "great discovery" concerning the Sabbath, writes the following:—

"When Jehovah finished his six days of work, he did not set apart Saturday as a rest, but gave us the astronomically true Sunday, September 27th, A. M. (not Julian). When the ceremonial law was given, after the Sunday sabbath seemed forgotten in Egypt, the tenth to sixteenth Nisan week was given at Passover time, in the year 25, 10 A. M. [2510 A. M. ?], at which time Friday to Saturday was the seventh day of the ceremonial week—only ceremonial; and this date of the month would come on different days in different years, as the Fourth of July comes on different days of the week in different years. In the year 2550 A. M. the manna showed Sunday as the Sabbath. In the year A. D. 30, prophecy showed Sunday, April 7 (9th Julian), to be the restored Adamic Sabbath (not the ceremonial Jewish). It was man's first day of the new creation, but God's seventh day."

Let the reader contrast this jumble with the clear simple, straightforward language of the fourth commandment, and then thank the Lord that he does not have to try to look through a tortuous maze of assumption and supposition to discover his duty with regard to the Sabbath.

An Interesting Case of "Religion in the Public Schools."

On April 24th last, a decision was rendered by two judges in the District Court of Stearns County, Minn., which forbade the conducting of religious exercises in the public schools of Avon. The case was that of Oliver Rasnick, plaintiff, vs. Common School District No. 69. The decision sets forth that religious services which included repetitions of the Lord's Prayer and prayers to "Mary, mother of God," had been regularly conducted in the school from the time of the organization of the school district, without objection from its patrons, until the commencement of the school year of 1896; and that after complaint had been made by the plaintiff and others to these exercises, "a majority of the legal voters of said school district petitioned the trustees thereof to permit and authorize the school house in said district to be used for the purpose of divine worship and for the purpose of instruction in religious matters and religion, the same not to interfere with the use of the school house for school purposes, which petition was granted and notice thereof was by the said trustees given to the defendant."

The practical working of this permission is an interesting feature of the case, and is set forth in the decision (in part) as follows:—

"Four or five minutes before nine o'clock in the forenoon the children were called together in the school room, the pupils required to stand and together repeat the following prayer: 'Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven; give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.—Amen.' And also the following: 'Hail, Mary, full of grace! the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, mother of God! pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death.—Amen.'"

"Then without any intermission or further calling the school to order, the school exercises proper were begun and continued to twelve o'clock. Then, without any dismissal of the school, or intermission, the said prayers were repeated; pupils desiring to do so, however, being permitted to retire before the saying of these prayers. The school was then formally dismissed for the noon hour. Four or five minutes before one o'clock the school was called to order and the pupils directed to stand and repeat the following prayer: 'The Angel of the Lord declared unto Mary, and she was conceived of the Holy Ghost. Hail, Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, mother of God, pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death.—Amen. Behold the handmaid of the Lord. May it be done unto me according to thy Word. Hail, Mary,' etc., as above, 'And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us. Hail, Mary,' etc., as above, closing with the Lord's prayer, as before stated.

"Immediately upon the conclusion of this prayer, and without any intermission or further calling of the school to order, the school exercises proper followed, and continued till four o'clock. At four o'clock the teacher announced 'School is out, and those who wish to go may go.' Then, without further dismissal or intermission, the same prayers were said and the same ceremony had which was followed, on two days of each week, by one half hour instruction in the Catholic catechism. There was no formal dismissal of the school, further than the teacher saying that those who wished to do so could go."

It will be observed that the teacher (a devout Catholic) took pains to minimize the force of the permission to leave the school before the religious exercises began, by proceeding immediately with the latter after a mere perfunctory notice to the young pupils of permission to those who wished, to depart. It is proper to note, also, that nothing would be easier than for an unscrupulous or religiously biased teacher under such circumstances to so manage affairs as to practically nullify, to a great extent, the liberty of absence from religious exercises which is thought to be a safeguard against injustice. In the case of young children, especially—and these are the very ones that ought to be most jealously guarded—such a provision could be easily deprived of its force by an artful teacher.

The decision is eminently just, and will, we hope, serve as a precedent in all similar cases that may arise in the future.

Longitude vs. the Week.

A CORRESPONDENT living in Brooklyn inquires of the SENTINEL how people living in "Fiji, Tonga Isles, and the extreme east of Siberia," can know which day is the Sabbath, "or in fact any other day of the week."

We know of no reason why people living in the regions designated should be obliged to determine the days of the week in any different way from those living in New York City or London or Pekin. And as a matter of fact the inhabitants of those regions have the week and mark the days of the week the same as is done elsewhere, and we have never heard that they experienced any difficulty or were involved in any uncertainty in the matter. Doubtless they would be much surprised to meet with anyone who would express a doubt upon this point.

Adventurous travelers have explored nearly every square mile of the earth's surface, but none of them have had any difficulty, even in the Arctic realms where there is a "day" of six months' length, in keeping track of the days of the week or in knowing the beginning and end of each day.

God made the week and gave it to Adam and his posterity; and this primordial division of time has been maintained uninterruptedly from Adam's day to the present, being marked at its close by the Sabbath, which has always had some observers in every age of the world. The nation of the Jews has observed the Sabbath from the time of the falling of the manna, shortly after their exodus from Egypt, to the present time; and neither Jews, Christian Sabbath-keepers, Roman Catholics, Protestants or heathen, were ever in any disagreement concerning the identity of the days of the week. So all anybody has to do who wants to keep the Sabbath is to take the week as he finds it in the community in which he lives, and observe the Sabbath as commanded when it comes to him. The Creator knew all this when He made the Sabbath, and knew that in commanding its observance He would not be requiring anything difficult or unreasonable.

Dr. Lorimer on the "Puritan Sabbath."

THE Rev. Geo. C. Lorimer, who has for several years past been connected with the Tremont Temple church, Boston, Mass., evidently desires no reestablishment in this country of the "Puritan sabbath." On a recent Sunday he spoke to his congregation on this point, the following, as reported in the Haverhill Gazette, of May 5:—

"The term 'Christian sabbath' was unknown for the first twelve centuries of Christian history. The term 'sabbath' as applied to the Lord's day is unknown to the articles, the canons and the prayer book of the church of England. The Christian idea of the day is of a day of worship, refreshment, rest, peace, joy, liberty. The duty is therefore incumbent upon every Christian to claim these privileges for himself and for all persons committed to his care, and, as far as in him lies, to obtain and preserve it for the whole brotherhood of man.

"Many eminent churchmen have rejoiced during the past few years because of the opening of the art museums and public libraries during a portion of Sunday, yet this boon was the result of years of agitation, and the men and women whose unrelenting demands secured the privilege were denounced as heretical persons who were planning the general wreck of Christianity.

"When the Sunday evening concert was tolerated in Boston the amusement places were crowded every Sunday evening by non-going church people and the streets kept clear of that mob of aimless persons who always throng the public streets during an idle day. Certain churchmen concluded that the Sunday concert was responsible for the small attendance at the evening church service, and acting upon this impression they demanded the police to interfere. What was the immediate result? Every hotel and brothel in the city became crowded and the churches did not gain a respectable increase. Under the Sunday concert plan men were able to go to work on Monday morning, while under the present arrangement they are unable to do so owing to the debauch of the Sunday evening.

"If Sunday be made a day of gloom in this State the inevitable penalty will be loss of commercial importance and the creation of a class of human beings who will be skillful in evading the penalty of law, while indulging in a state of lawlessness which will endanger Christianity."

Why not leave the Sabbath just as it was left to mankind by the Creator?

"Circumstances Alter Cases."

BY JOHN D. BRADLEY.

IN 1830 the Congress of the United States in its famous Sunday mail report, referring to that consciousness of certain inalienable rights felt by every man, said:—

"It is an inborn principle which nothing can eradicate. The bigot, in the pride of his authority, may lose sight of it, but strip him of his power, prescribe a faith to him which his conscience rejects, threaten him in turn with the dungeon and the fagot, and the spirit which God has implanted in him rises up in rebellion and defies you."

It is not often that bigots are thus called upon to take their own medicine, but sometimes in a milder way the principle is no less forcibly illustrated, as will be shown in the following.

Everybody is doubtless acquainted with the position taken during the last Presidential campaign by most of the influential journals of the country on the question of criticism of decisions of the Supreme Court. Of these journals not one was more "conservative" than the New York Evening Post. To question the infallibility of this tribunal, even when a decision was made possible by a majority of only one vote, was to it the essence of anarchy, and, if indorsed by the people, the premonition of certain ruin. So sincerely did it believe this that it made a strong effort to induce the editors of these journals to establish a censorship upon the telegraphic reports and to expunge from the speeches of the "anarchists" all that would tend to lead the simple people astray. But most of these papers, though of the same political faith and maintaining the same doctrine in regard to the Supreme Court, were hardly ready to swallow the assumption that they were the guardians of public thought, or that the people had lost their ability to read and decide for themselves.

Imagine then their astonishment and disgust when they beheld this foremost exponent of judicial absolutism turn and rend this august tribunal when it made the recent decision upon the anti-trust law. The scales seemed to have fallen from its eyes and it says this is one "of the long list of decisions . . . in which the court has revealed its weak grasp of the fundamental principles of law and government." According to the Post's own definition such disrespectful language is anarchy, and the Times-Herald, of Chicago, determined to be consistent in its support of the Supreme Court, says that owing to the class of people which the Post assumes to address, it is anarchy that will have the worst effect.

While it is true that circumstances sometimes alter cases—or rather our view of them—they cannot alter facts and principles. But what are the circumstances in this case? The decisions were rendered by the same court, with the same authority, and made possible by the same number of votes. One was said to be in the interests of the rich, the other was not. The Post indorsed one, the other it did not. In one case the court is infallible, in the other it reveals "its weak grasp of the fundamental principles of law and government."

Now, if the Supreme Court is infallible when it agrees with us, and has only a "weak grasp of fundamental principles," when it does not, it follows that the infallibility rests with us, not with the court. And it may be said that there never was a man—indeed it may be safely said that there never will be a man—who has asserted, or who will assert the absolute finality of any action of the Supreme Court of the United States simply because it is an action of the court, who would not deny the doctrine the very moment a decision was rendered which he thought to be against his interests. So then, let us not say that either our own opinion, or the opinion of the Supreme Court, is final. Let us say that justice, and justice alone, is the ultimate standard. Let us maintain the doctrine that "nothing is settled until it is settled right."

IN a communication to the Cottonwood County Citizen (Windom, Minn.), of Feb. 6 last, taking exception to Sunday evening games and amusements, Mr. C. S. Royse says:—

"There are two institutions which may be looked on as distinctly American—the American sabbath and the American saloon."

Such an admission is fatal to the "American sabbath"; for any institution that takes its rise from the same source whence comes the American saloon, can have no just claim to sanctity. As certainly as the "American saloon" is an American institution, so certain it is that no other American institution can be holy. And no Sabbath is worth anything that is not holy.

The "Sabbath of the Lord" (see Exodus 20:8-11) is holy. The "American sabbath" is but a human institution, and hence has no holiness.

It is reported that the Sultan not long since expressed his opinion of Leo XIII. by the remark, "Who is this pope that's always meddling in the affairs of our State?" the occasion being the presentation of a letter from the Pope to the Sultan, concerning the protection of Christians in Crete. The papal envoy was snubbed, the Pope was deeply offended, and a coldness has existed between the Porte and the Vatican ever since.

Spurgeon Said:

I AM ashamed of some Christians because they have so much dependence on Parliament and the law of the land. Much good may Parliament do to true religion, except by mistake. As to getting the law of the land to our religion, we earnestly cry, "Hands off! leave us alone." Your Sunday bills and all other forms of Act-of-Parliament religion seem to me to be all wrong. Give us a fair field and no favor, and our faith has no cause to fear. Christ wants no help from Cæsar. Let our members of Parliament repent of the bribery and corruption so rife in their own midst before they set up to be protectors of the religion of our Lord Jesus. I should be afraid to borrow help from government; it would look to me as if I rested on the arm of flesh, instead of depending on the living God. Let the Lord's day be respected by all means, and may the day soon come when every shop shall be closed on the Sabbath, but let it be by the force of conviction, and not by force of the policeman; let true religion triumph by the power of God in men's hearts, and not by the power of fines and punishments.—Extract from one of Spurgeon's Sermons, quoted in "Australian Sentinel" for March, 1895.

"It is none of Cæsar's business to deal with our consciences, neither will we ever obey Cæsar in any matter which touches conscience. He may make what laws he will about religion, but by our loyalty to God we pour contempt on Cæsar when he usurps the place of God. He is no more to us than the meanest beggar in the street if he goes beyond his own legitimate authority. To Cæsar, Cæsar's; politics to politicians; obedience, cheerful and prompt, to civil rulers; to God, and to God only, things that are God's; and what are these? Our hearts, our souls, our consciences. Man himself is the coin upon which God has stamped his image and superscription (though, alas! both are sadly marred), and we must render to God our manhood, our wills, our thoughts, our judgments, our minds, our hearts. Consciencs are for God. Any law that touches conscience is null and void, ipso facto, for the simple reason that kings and parliaments have no right to interfere in the realm of conscience. Conscience is under law to none but God."—

"BAPTIST Principles of Religious Liberty," by Geo B. Wheeler, an advertisement of which appears on another page, is destined to accomplish great good in stirring up the pure minds of Baptists to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints along the lines of "soul liberty." The author has received warm endorsements of his pamphlet from prominent Baptist preachers and editors, college presidents and professors, both north and south.

Rev. Arthur S. Burrows, whose ringing words on Church and State we print on another page, writes thus of the pamphlet:—

"My Dear Mr. Wheeler:—

"I thank you for your courteous permission to peruse your "Baptist Principles of Religious Liberty." They are righteous, because based upon the principles of Christ. They are essential, because the only assurance of both individual and national life. Your statement of these principles is a fresh inspiration to simple Christianity, pure church membership, and patriotic citizenship.

"Accept a contribution of mine during 1896, and my best wishes.

"Sincerely yours,

"ARTHUR S. BURROWS."

The Spirit, and the Word.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Your preaching and teaching must be in harmony with the Word of God. I am a Quaker by extraction, and I glory in it, especially when I know what they have been in this country. I dissent from them because I believe they went wrong when they magnified the Holy Spirit to the exclusion, in many cases, of the Word of God. And with all love I would say that if there is one danger ahead for the Salvation Army of the present day, it is lest they should magnify the work of the Spirit of God in experience, apart from the Word of God taught to their converts. Remember that the Holy Spirit is like a locomotive, the Word of God like the steel rails; and you must have the steel rails of the Bible as well as the steam power of the Holy Ghost. Let the Holy Ghost fill you, but He will work along that Book. And I hold that the fact that the Holy Spirit elects to work through that Book is its most complete vindication against all that modern critics have to say. As long as the Holy Ghost is prepared to stand by it and to work by it, I hold it to be in an incomparable sense the word of the living God to man. I am well satisfied to accept it all, Jonah and the fish included.*

Church and State.

By Rev. Arthur S. Burrows.

THE fourth principle for which a Baptist Church stands is, that we refuse and oppose all connection between Church and State, believing that the State has no right to control religion. Conscience must be left untrammelled and so protected as the inalienable right of all, mankind being accountable to God only for its exercise. Each is to follow personal conviction of duty in obeying God, without interference, and each is bound to extend the same right to all others without distinction. We believe that civil government is of divine appointment for common human good [Rom. 13:1-5], that we are to render tribute and honor where due [Romans 13:6, 7], and that we are to pray for rulers and magistrates [1 Tim. 2:1-4]; but we claim that Jesus Christ, whom God has exalted as King of kings and Lord of lords, is the prince of the converted conscience [James 4:12].

REV. ARTHUR S. BURROWS.

Baptists stand for religious freedom among all citizens and repel all State distinctions for political ends. Soul freedom is the bulwark of religious liberty, the inevitable outgrowth of the New Testament principle that each must hear for himself, must repent for himself, must believe for himself, must confess Christ for himself, must be baptized on his own confession [Romans 14:22]. We come into this world one by one, we must go to Christ one by one for his pardoning grace, and we leave this world one by one to be rewarded according to our works if we be Christ's, and to be judged if we be not Christ's [2 Corinthians 5:10]. Hence the State has no authority over the religious beliefs and observances of men, whether orthodox or heretic, atheist or heathen.*

THE best thing that any individual can do for the Sabbath, is to keep it holy.

If the Trumpet Should Sound.

From the "Ram's Horn," Chicago.

The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout with the voice of the Arch-angel and with the trump of God. 1 Thess. 4:16.

THAT is one of the few prophecies which are unfulfilled. Unlike some of those of old, it is not veiled in the language of mysticism and symbol. It is as plain and explicit as words of one syllable can make it. It is as sure of being fulfilled as those prophecies have been which foretold, with surprising minuteness, the birth of Christ and his impressive death. It is as sure of being fulfilled as was that prophecy concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, which, indeed, came to pass with shocking realism. What if the trump should sound to-day, or when Christmas bells peal in celebration of the nine hundredth anniversary of Christ's birth, what would Gabriel and his host of angels find were they to bring to the great ingathering the nations of earth from the east, and the west, and the south, and the north?

Tearful vision for the Master. They would bring him a thousand million souls, two thirds of the world's number who, nineteen centuries after his death and resurrection at Calvary, never heard that he had lived. He would also find his nominal church, not one and united as he charged it to be, but broken up into one hundred and eighty or more distinct sects or divisions, working (so far as they work at all), without practical harmony and often with warring envy. He would find three thousand churches in America alone belonging to what are known as the more evangelical bodies absolutely without a single accession by confession of faith last year. He would find the world in which the church moves and is supposed to exercise its influence, plunging in a frenzied pursuit of riches, or pleasure, or empty fame. He would find, in short, just about such a scene as our artist pictures on page one. If the trump should sound there would not be mountains nor hills enough in the world to hide the terrified throng who would call upon these to hide them, but who are living from moment to moment as if life was an everlasting play day or a dream. It will yet appear that it is a solemn reality.

Applied Christianity.

"APPLIED CHRISTIANITY" is a phrase that is made much use of just now in discussions relating to social and political themes. It is spoken of as if it were a sort of new science, that needed to be quite fully explained before ordinary people could be expected to grasp its meaning.

But the Bible constitutes a text-book on applied Christianity, and anyone who will read and believe what it says, will know exactly what applied Christianity is; and on the other hand, whoever will not seek to this source of knowledge on the subject, cannot know what it is, no matter how much he may be told of what somebody says it is.

The Bible teaches that Christianity is itself an applied thing,—that it is manifested in no other form. For according to the Word of God, Christianity is not a creed, or a round of forms and ceremonies, but a manifestation of the life of Christ. It is the application of the wisdom, the power, the righteousness of God Himself, to the individual, through faith in Christ. It is the application of Divinity to humanity. This will of course be seen and felt in the community which environs it.

This is "applied Christianity," by the agency of the Holy Spirit. It is impossible for man to apply Christianity to anything. Nor is any application of Christianity needed further than that which it is the office of the Spirit to make.

THE Rev. Blustering Boanerges, who beats more dust out of the pulpit cushion than he does sin out of the hearts of his hearers, should bethink himself of the fisherman's adage that "when there is thunder the fish go to the bottom of the sea."—New York Observer.

National Christianity.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

A WRITER in the Christian Advocate, lamenting the destruction of the Armenians by the Kurds and Turks, and suggesting as the only possible way for the prevention of further atrocities the union of Great Britain and the United States against Turkey and Russia, says: "Of course, Christian America is horrified to think of the weary tramp of myriad feet over the blood-stained track to far-away Siberia, fearful dungeons, dismal mines, the lash, the sword, the torture; but, notwithstanding all this, Russia has done much good in Central Asia, and it certainly is not just to call her a little better than Turkey." This was an allusion to what some other writer had said of Russia in the same paper.

After reading the above true description of Russian barbarism which this writer has portrayed, we can but wonder at his own conclusion that it is not just to call Russia "little better than Turkey." What does he want to call her? No better? No; he conveys the idea that Russia is a good deal better than Turkey.

The probabilities are that should this same writer desire to go on a Christian mission to either of these countries, he would prefer to go to Turkey, knowing that he could preach Christ freer from interruption in Turkey than in Russia. Religion is free in Turkey. And any man is free to preach his religion, provided he does not make his religion the means of stirring up rebellion against the government. In Russia any religion besides the Established Church is not allowed. Every other religion than the Greek Russian church is itself under the ban.

What, then, makes Russia so much better than Turkey? Nothing but the supposition that Russia, unlike Turkey, is a Christian nation! The good she has done in Central Asia is that she has conquered certain weak Mohammedan States and annexed them to her empire. But why go to Asia? What good has Russia done in Europe? How does she treat those who preach the gospel there? For them the road to Siberia is always open and always thronged. Russian cruelties, banishments and persecutions are made in the name of Christ, and not in the name of Mohammed. Should Russia gain possession of Turkey, the American missionaries now laboring in that country would have to leave immediately; and should the Armenians or Mohammedan Turks rise in rebellion when under the Russian government, the Russian Cossack would, under the orders of his "littlefather," the White Czar, show himself equal to the Bashi Bazouk and the Kurd.

National Christianity means but little, whether in Russia or the United States. To write it on paper looks well; but to be appropriately written, it should be written with blood,—not ink,—for it always has meant and always will mean persecution and death to dissenters. When Christian America is horrified at Russian persecutions, and Christian Russia is delighted with them, it is time that this national Christianity be analyzed to see of what it is composed. A close inspection will reveal in national Christianity a large amount of pride, priestcraft, bigotry, and love of power, and only the thinnest tinsel of Christianity to cover it—in fact, nothing but the name.

If the national Christianity of the United States is not as bad as that of Russia, it is because it is not yet so firmly established. Let national Christianity once be firmly fixed here, and this land will be a dreary place to the dissenter, who, perhaps, will be glad to seek an asylum under the government of some generous Mohammedan such as have ruled in the past. Yet, strange to say, the desire for a national religion, by law duly recognized and established, is very pleasing to many Americans.

The Chinaman was Right.

"Bible Echo," Melbourne, Aus.

A CHINESE grocer in Sydney, says the Sydney Daily Telegraph, of March 18, when asked by a "city missionary" to sign the Churches' Sunday-closing petition, carefully inquired what the petition meant. "To enforce the closing of all shops on Sunday." "Oh, me close every Sunday and all holidays." "Then sign, and make those close who do not." "No, me no sign; me close myself, not trouble about anybody else." The Chinaman was right. There was evidently more religious freedom slumbering in his bosom than was manifested by the "missionary" who asked him to sign the petition, or the Sanhedrimitish "Council" that sent this "missionary" out with its gospel of compulsion.

Baptists and Christian Citizenship.

From "Baptist Principles of Religious Liberty," by Geo. B. Wheeler.

THE Christian Endeavor Convention which met at Boston, July, 1895, in which the Baptists were largely represented, declared itself as standing for Christian citizenship:—

"Christian Endeavor stands always and everywhere for Christian Citizenship."—Official Report, Fourteenth International Christian Endeavor Convention, Boston, 1895, p. 345, Resolution Six.

Christian citizenship, as defined by the Christian Citizenship League, an organization endorsed by the president and secretary of the Christian Endeavor Society, is:—

"To reveal Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the nation as well as of the individual."—The National Christian Citizenship League Constitution, Art. 2.

"Christian citizenship maintains the supreme right of Jesus Christ to rule municipal and national as well as private life."—The Christian Citizen, (Chicago), October, 1893, p. 7.

The heading to a call recently sent out by the Christian Citizenship League, reads:—

"In the name of the Lord of Hosts. A summons to the followers of Christ to unite against his enemies."—The Christian Citizen, October, 1895, p. 3.

We give two quotations from the call to show its character:—

"The forces of evil are organized, aggressive, insolent, triumphant. Is it not time to marshal the hosts of righteousness in battle array?" "If the prayer, 'Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven,' is ever answered, the people of God must do a twofold work; as in Neh. 4:16-18 where, trowel in one hand and sword in the other, they simultaneously rebuilt the walls of the holy city, and fought the enemy."

Do not these statements clearly indicate a turning away from the power of God which is the gospel, to the carnal weapons of civil warfare, for the purpose of accomplishing the will of Christ here upon earth? And yet this call was endorsed by a large number of the leading clergymen of the country, including many prominent Baptists.

At the Christian Endeavor Convention, held at Washington, D. C., July, 1896, great prominence was given to the subject of Christian citizenship. Fifty-three pages of the Official Report are devoted to this theme, besides the space devoted directly to its kindred theme,—compulsory Sunday observance. Baptists were largely represented in this convention. It is a marvel that Baptists could acquiesce in the sentiments expressed on that occasion, and printed in the Official Record. One statement reads as follows:—

"One purpose of this great Christian Endeavor movement is to enthrone Christ in our national life. . . . To illustrate: Christ got into our national life when the Pilgrim Fathers, in the cabin of the 'Mayflower,' entered into that solemn compact, setting forth that they had undertaken that perilous voyage for the purpose of planting a colony for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith, and pledged themselves to frame civil institutions with that end in view. To that pledge they and their descendants were loyal for the next five generations."

Is it possible that Baptists have forgotten what they suffered under this attempt to "enthrone Christ in our national life"? Have they forgotten the cruel scourging and banishment they suffered under it? or have they repudiated the principles of separation of Church and State for which their fathers struggled and suffered for those five generations? If Roger Williams were here, would he acquiesce in this "Christian Citizenship" movement? or sit in silence while the principles for which he strove and sacrificed are repudiated? Can it be possible that the Baptist church will confirm the enemies of Christianity in their charge that as soon as a weak and persecuted church becomes strong, it repudiates its plea for liberty, and uses the civil power—the weapon of its persecutors—to oppress its dissenting brethren? Verily the editor of the Indiana Baptist speaks the truth when he says:—

"Roger Williams should be on earth again to teach some Baptists that 'the civil magistrate has no authority to punish the breaches of the first table of the Decalogue.'"—Indiana Baptist, April 18, 1895.

Holding Back vs. Stirring Up Strife.

BY BAXTER L. HOWE.

THE Lord is worthy to receive glory and honor and power, because he created all things, and for his pleasure they are and were created. Rev. 4:11.

When man sold out to Satan, the Lord, whose delights were with the sons of men (Prov. 8:31), loved man so much that he "emptied himself" (Phil. 2:7, R. V.) and came to the earth to seek and to save that which was lost.

That which God is more interested in than anything else in this world, is his people (Deut. 32:9), and when he divided the nations and separated the sons of Adam (verse 8) at the tower of Babel (Gen. 11:8), he determined the times before appointed, and set the bounds of their habitation (Acts 17:26), that they should seek the Lord; and if they should feel after him they would be sure to find him, for "he is not far from every one of us."

He gave all life and breath and all things; and when man sinned he put himself just as close to him as it was possible to get, even taking upon himself man's flesh and blood. Heb. 2:14.

God not only delivered up his Son for us all, but with him freely gave us all things. Rom. 8:32.

All the hosts of heaven are studying the plan of salvation (1 Peter 1:2; Eph. 3:10), and are ministering for them who shall be heirs of salvation. Heb. 1:14. They are God's host (Gen. 32:2), and Jesus is their Captain. Josh. 5:15. They know all things that are in the earth. 2 Sam. 14:20. They listen for the word of command from their Prince and hasten to do his bidding. Ps. 103:19-22.

These ministers of God defeat the purposes of proud kings and turn the plans of nations to naught. 2 Chron. 32:21. When the angel who is placed in charge of any nation holds no longer with that nation, that nation goes to ruin. Dan. 10:20.

When a prince or ruler of any people rebels against the interests of God's people, the angel that is in charge of that field is held or bound in that place until he is able to influence the mind of the head of that nation in favor of God's cause, or is released by his Captain.

This truth is plainly set forth in Daniel 10. The prophet was fasting and praying for three full weeks (verses 3, 4). His prayer was heard from the very first and Gabriel was sent to answer it. The prince of Persia withstood him until his prince, Michael, came and released him (verses 12, 13, R. V. margin).

At the golden altar in the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, but near to the entrance of the second, the prayers of the saints are presented. Rev. 8:3. From this altar the prophet heard the voice of Michael that released the angels that had been detained in the country of the Euphrates, holding back the powers from engaging in general war. Rev. 9:13-15. The angels obeyed the command and the powers were turned loose.

From the pages of history, beginning with July 27, 1449, and continuing "an hour, a day, a month and a year" (391 years, 15 days), the student reads the account of slaughter, carnage and ruin that went with and followed in the track of "Apollyon," the "Destroyer," of prophecy,—the "Sultans" of history.

The "sure word of prophecy" points out the year, and even the very day,—Aug. 11, 1840—when the Sultan should surrender his independence. History records the fact of the fulfillment of that prophecy. From that time he has been restricted in his operations.

Why a stay in his awful work? Because Christ, about this time, was to enter upon his last work in the heavenly sanctuary for a lost world.

As he came before the holy law of God, to finish his work as priest, and saw ruin on every hand in the earth, he gave command to the angels to hold, not only the powers in the valley of the Euphrates, but in the world, until God's work should be finished. Rev. 7:1-3.

The powers may gather, statesmen may tremble, and the daily news may proclaim a general war inevitable; but God has said to the angels, "Hold the four winds (war and strife) until my servants are sealed in their foreheads."

To another he has said, "Go through the midst of the city and set a mark upon the foreheads of those that sigh and cry for the abominations that are done in the midst thereof." Eze. 9.

Christ came to seek and to save the lost. To us he says again, "Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me even so send I you." John 20:21.

Then let every minister in the land, let every Christian, stop proclaiming war, stop stirring up the powers to strive with one another, and unite with all heaven in the work of holding the strife. Let them take the gospel of Christ, which is the power of God to save men (Rom. 1:16), and go to sinners as Christ did.

Now is the time for every one who believes in the God that created the heavens and earth to stop presenting their petitions—prayers—to State or national legislatures, to kings or emperors, and to come boldly to the "Throne of Grace" and find help; for this is a time of great need. "Cursed is the man that trusts in man, that maketh flesh his arm. Jer. 17:5.

Let every one who knows God take up this law, even the law of ten commandments written in stone, and go as Paul did to the Corinthians, clothed with the spirit of the living God, and unite with God, Christ and the angels in writing it upon the fleshy tables of the heart. 2 Cor. 3:3. Then will they be workers together with God. 1 Cor. 3:9.

A Bold Statement of Papal Doctrine.

Michigan "Christian Advocate," May 1.

IN the Michigan Catholic, of 26th ult., appears an article on "Freedom and Catholicity," signed by "Veritas." After speaking of the freedom and justice of the American Government, and some of the principles underlying civil power, the writer concedes that the Roman Catholic church derives benefit from the American form of government, especially as to spiritual progress and administrative facilities, but thinks that the Republic, in guaranteeing equal rights to all churches and special privileges to none, restricts the inherent power of Romanism. He then says:—

"The State has no national church, and therefore she regards all churches as equal, i. e., as an organized society; consequently by the law of equity she concedes to none the privileges she does not allow another, and so the Catholic church, while enjoying a freedom common to others, is restrained from her own lawful power to suppress heresy. This, in itself, is an evil. However, the remedy is not in the power of the Catholic church under existing conditions, so instead of stamping out heretical doctrines, which is one of her missions, she strives by every possible means to infuse a true Catholic spirit into the individual, and even goes so far as to carry her crusade against error into the enemies' camp, by conducting missions to non-Catholics."

It is well understood that the Roman Catholic church considers it "one of her missions" to "stamp out heresy" and it is on this very account that Protestant Americans prize their form of government. Thank God that under it there can be no such bloody suppressions of heresy as the persecutions of the Albigenes, the holocausts of the Inquisition or the massacre of St. Bartholomew. The world has seen enough of that sort of thing. Heresy may be provoking and even hurtful, but the Roman Catholic method of suppressing it is repugnant to every sense of right and justice. Because that church still claims "her own lawful power to suppress heresy," we are devoutly grateful that a more just and humane civil power has stepped right in and practically says with Luther—"To burn heretics is contrary to the will of the Holy Ghost."

A DETROIT (Mich.) judge has granted a mandamus against the use of "Readings from the Bible" in the public schools of that city. The Michigan Christian Advocate, of May 15, says that this is a point scored by "opponents of the Word of God." But the Word of God itself teaches the equal rights of all classes of people.

Christian Principles and Politics.

How can Christian principles be brought to bear upon political life? The question is one that demands an answer, for we are being continually exhorted to attend to this as one of our Christian duties.

The principles of conduct of the Christian life are, Repentance and confession of sin, and faith in Jesus Christ. The power of God operating through faith, produces in the life of the believer the "fruits of the Spirit," which are, "Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5:22, 23. In the Christian life the ever present, overshadowing fact in each case is, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me" (Gal. 2:20); and Christ living in the believer conforms the life perfectly to God's standard of righteousness, the Ten Commandments.

This is Christianity; and we are told that this must be brought to bear upon politics. It is built entirely upon repentance, and faith in the Word of God. And we have never yet discovered any principle of politics which necessitate confession of sin, while it is certainly obvious that faith in Jesus Christ may be exercised by persons of any and all political parties, without affecting their political views in the least, save as it may lead them to give up politics altogether.

Every principle of Christianity grows out of faith in Christ as the Saviour of man from sin; every step in Christian life must be taken by faith in Christ. But of this faith politics knows nothing.

SUNDAY, May 16, the Cleveland baseball club will make a test of the Ohio Sunday law by attempting to play a game in that city. Chief of Police Abbott was notified that the large crowd which would be present to see the game would be likely to mob the police if the latter interfered with the exhibition, and he replied, "I shall have an adequate force present to prevent the game, and if necessary the police will be supplemented by the militia." The president of the Cleveland ball team has announced that in case of such interference he will transfer the club to Detroit.

THE "League of American Wheelmen" have put themselves on record as opposed to Sunday bicycling; but it is reported that California and some other Western States are not in harmony with the organization on this point, and may form a league of their own.

THE "majesty of the law" was vindicated recently in New York City, it is said, in the following manner:—

"The city of New York wished to get some property for the approach to the new bridge across the East River. The city owns the property, but the only way that it could be obtained for this purpose was for the city to sue itself in condemnation proceedings. This was duly decided, the Supreme Court has affirmed it, and the city of New York now pays twenty-nine thousand dollars to itself for the land."

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER

To secure widespread and favorable publicity for THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, we have decided to place a few introductory sets in each community throughout the country for comparison with all other reference works as to plan, scope, lateness of treatment and general practical and educational value. We feel that every set will create a demand for others. While the distribution will be general in extent, it will last for a limited time only, after which our regular subscription sale will begin, at prices ranging from $48 to $72 a set, according to style of binding. Now, however, to quickly and thoroughly introduce the work, as above stated, we make the price merely nominal (about the cost of paper and printing), the distribution being LIMITED TO A VERY FEW WEEKS, reserving the privilege of withdrawing the offer at any time when we consider a sufficient number of these introductory sets, at the special price, have been distributed.

OUR GREAT SPECIAL OFFER.

SEND $1.00 TO THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PUBLISHING CO., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and a full set of eight volumes of THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, in cloth binding will be forwarded to you. The balance is payable at the rate of $1.50 monthly for one year, or about 8 cents a day. If you prefer the half-Morocco binding, the monthly payment will be $2.00, and for full sheep, $2.50 per month for one year. We recommend the half-Morocco style, which is particularly elegant and serviceable, and will last a lifetime. If not entirely satisfactory any set may be returned within ten days and money will be promptly refunded. Owing to the nominal price at which these introductory sets are supplied, transportation charges must be paid by the purchaser; but our entire confidence that the volumes will be gladly received and cheerfully paid for is shown by sending a $48.00 set of books on an advance payment of only $1.00. We also feel that you will thoroughly appreciate this great work and speak favorably of it to others. Each set weighs boxed nearly 50 pounds, and will be shipped by freight unless otherwise ordered. We refer you to the publishers of this paper. Please mention it when writing.

WHEN God said to Abraham, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, into a land which I will show thee," Abraham "went out, not knowing whither he went."

God had not yet showed him the land or country into which he was to go, and which was to be his. So far, the Lord had only promised to show it to him.

There were three things, however, which Abraham must do, before he could fairly expect God to show him the country which he had promised, and which was to be his.

First, he was to get out of his country; secondly, from his kindred; thirdly, from his father's house.

He left his country; but when he did so his father and his kindred went with him to Haran, and dwelt there. There his father died; and now, separated from his father's house, he went on to the land of Canaan.

But there accompanied him yet one of his kindred—Lot, his brother's son. While Lot was with him, and he was thus not yet separated from his kindred, though separated from his country and his father's house, the time could not come for God to show him the land, nor the country which he would give him.

But there came a day when Lot should be separated from him. Lot chose all the plain of the Jordan, and journeyed east, and "They separated thus, one from the other."

And just then it was that God showed Abraham the land which he had promised to show him, the country which should be his.

"And the Lord said unto Abraham, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward, for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever."

And the country which the Lord then showed to Abraham, and which he there promised him should be his for an everlasting possession—that country embraced the world—for "The promise that he should be heir of the world was not to Abraham or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."

Therefore, when at the word of the Lord Abraham lifted up his eyes to see what the Lord would show him, he saw "the world to come," which is to be the everlasting possession of Abraham and of his seed—the everlasting possession of all them which be of faith. "For if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

And from that day forward Abraham "sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country;" looking for "a better country, that is, an heavenly;" and looking "for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." For though God promised that He would give to Abraham that land, and to his seed after him, yet as long as he was in this world God really "gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on."

Now note: God had called Abraham out of his original country, and thus had separated him from that. Then he gave him not even so much as to set his foot on in any other country in this world.

Abraham at that time represented the religion of God. The Lord in His dealing thus with Abraham and in recording it, has shown for all time and to all people that it is his will that there should be an absolute separation of his religion from any State.

Abraham, representing at that time the Church of Christ, being thus totally separated by the Lord from every State and country on the earth, there is thus shown to all people, as an original truth of the gospel of Christ, that there should be total separation of Church and State; and that the church of Christ can never have any country in the world.

So also dwelt Isaac and Jacob, heirs with Abraham of the same promise, accepting with Abraham separation from every earthly State and country, confessing that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, looking for the country which God had prepared for them, and the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

And that they accepted this freely of their own choice, by faith in God, is shown by the fact as recorded, that, "Truly if they had been mindful of that country from which they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly, wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city."

This dealing of God with Abraham, and the record of it, were for the instruction of all the people who would believe God, from that time to the world's end. For Abraham was the called, the chosen, the friend of God; the father of all them that believe. And all they which be of faith are blest with faithful Abraham. And not the least element of instruction in this account of God's dealings with Abraham, is the great lesson it teaches that the religion of God means separation of religion and the State.

Further, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not unto seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Therefore the promises recorded and referred to in the scripture, "To Abraham and his seed," are always to Abraham and Christ, and to Abraham in Christ. And therefore, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

And when Christ, that promised seed, came into the world a man amongst men, then in him, as formerly in Abraham, there was represented the religion of God and the church of Christ. And as such he ever maintained the same principle of separation of religion and the State which he himself had set before the world in the life and record of Abraham.

He refused to recognize even by a sign, the wish of the people to make him king. He refused, when requested, to act the part of judge or divider over men as to the rights of property. He refused to recognize the national lines of distinction, the wall of partition, which Israel in their exclusiveness had built up between themselves and other nations. He refused to judge or allow any others to judge any one for not believing on him. He distinctly declared that though he is a king, yet his kingdom is not of this world, and that it is not in any way connected with this world. He distinctly declared the separation of his religion from the State: "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." And when he sent forth his disciples with his heavenly commission to preach the gospel of his kingdom, he sent them not to one particular nation, but to "Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost." He sent them to preach the gospel; not to one particular, favored, exclusive people, but "to every creature."

Thus it is seen again that in every phase of the fundamental principle of the religion of God and the church of Christ, from the beginning to the end of the world, there is required the absolute separation of religion and the State: the total disconnection of his church from every State and country in the world, and from the world itself.

THE New York World sums up the situation of the governmental contest against the monopolies, by the remark that "in the campaign carried on by our patriotic legislators and Attorney-General against the Trust we have observed that although the Trusts are completely defeated in every engagement they are invariably found in possession of the battle-ground the next morning."

"Christian" Atrocities.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE above heading may strike our readers as a misnomer, and in one sense it is. No real Christian can do an atrocious act, and hence such a thing as a Christian atrocity cannot be. But we have used the term "Christian" here in the accommodated sense, the same as it is used in the expression "Christian nation."

Christians do not fight; Christian nations do; Christians do not take property from other Christians by violence; Christian nations do; Christians with lowliness of mind esteem others better than themselves; a Christian nation looks with a high disdain upon other Christian nations and thinks itself and its institutions and ways the best.

So there is a very great difference between the spirit of a Christian and the spirit of a Christian nation—so much so that we shall have to conclude, either that a Christian is not a Christian, or that a Christian nation has no right to such a high-sounding profession.

If we apply the rule laid down by an inspired apostle, "He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he [Christ] is righteous," and "He that committeth sin is of the devil," to men and to nations, we shall be forced to the conclusion that Christians who have attained to a righteous and peaceful life by faith in Christ are righteous, are Christians, and may properly be called so; but that nations which have not so attained but which practise selfishness, fraud, robbery, and even murder—mis-called war—are not Christian at all. And that they are not Christians, though often called so, we refer again to the idea of Christian atrocities.

Adopting the spirit and nomenclature of the times we note that the Moslems and Christians are fighting in Thessaly and in the island of Crete. The war broke out in Crete by a rebellion of the Christians against the Moslems. The great Christian nations of Europe think that they have attained to the high ideal of fighting in a thoroughly Christian manner because they do not kill their prisoners nor the women and children of the opposing party. But the Cretan Christians who are now receiving so much sympathy have not yet attained that exalted state of Christianity where they kill only men! The seaport towns of Crete are filled with Moslem women and children who bear in their bodies the marks of the Christian, but they are not like the marks of the Lord Jesus that Paul bore. No. Women with their breasts cut off, children mutilated in every manner, may be seen in the hospitals. Such atrocious actions might be expected of the wild Kurds of the Armenian mountains who profess the religion of Mohammed; but what about the Greek Christian, boasting of his civilization, of his religion, and posing before Europe as a hero, doing such things!

Christian atrocities! Let the world ponder it and learn that as true as the saying that "All is not gold that glitters," so all is not Christian which passes under that name; and in nothing is the name Christian so abused and disgraced as in the very common expression, "Christian nation."

THE only hope of a republic lies in individual assertions of a character founded and maintained on correct principles.—New York Observer.

What We Need to Bring Prosperity.

THE United States Government began with the setting up of the principle that "all men are created equal." Its founders asserted to the world the doctrine that all are "endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to preserve these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just rights from the consent of the governed." Upon this doctrine they essayed to establish a government which should afford to all persons under it the perpetual blessings of civil and religious liberty.

It is perfectly evident to-day that this ideal of our forefathers has not been realized. We do not have to search for this evidence; one cannot look in any direction without seeing it. Instead of the peaceful country filled with inhabitants in the undisturbed enjoyment of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" which loomed into the perspective of our forefathers, there is seen a nation whose people are arrayed against each other in a bitter struggle for the mastery. And to the vast majority of those engaged in this contest, the struggle is one for the realization of those very conditions of life and liberty which are supposed to be guaranteed by the fundamental law of the land.

We see around us the Trust, and all the various combinations of capital and labor, operating against the enjoyment of individual freedom. We see the strike, with its attendant misery to the families of the poor, only greater than the perpetual misery from which they seek by that hard means to escape. We see the power of wealth to create unjust conditions for its own advantage in political and social life. And from the enslaved and dissatisfied masses we hear the mutterings of threatened revolution.

And if anything were lacking to show the insufficiency of a theory of government in itself to secure the blessings of good government to a people, it is supplied by the fact that both plutocrats and populists invoke the name of Liberty and appeal to the same principles of free government in support of their diametrically antagonistic positions.

"Liberty, equality and fraternity" are good words, but in the mouth of the plutocrat they do not mean what they do in the mouth of the socialist. Whose meaning of the words, whose theories for the realization of these blessings, are to prevail?

There are many explanations put forward defining and locating the trouble with the workings of our governmental system. One explanation asserts that the trouble is with the Constitution: that this was long ago outgrown, and has since been only an incumbrance to good government and a protection to rascality. Another says that wrong political principles have been put in force; another says that the Government ought to be religious instead of secular; another affirms that republican government is a failure, and that a return must be had to some form of monarchy. The tendency in the last-named direction is already very marked.

But the real trouble is not with the Constitution, or with republican principles of government. As Abraham Lincoln said, there are men who would overthrow the Constitution, and pervert right principles of government. A "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," depends upon the people, and not upon principles and constitutions. Right principles in the Constitution are indeed essential, but these count for little when there are wrong principles in the hearts of the people. When the commercial spirit has cast out the spirit of independence, when the love of gain is greater than the love of liberty, the people will certainly lose their liberty, in spite of the best constitution and the soundest governmental theories.

In other words, when the people lose the ability to properly govern themselves individually, they can no longer hope successfully to govern themselves collectively. In such a case it will avail nothing to shift back and forth between two or more political theories.

WHAT SAITH THE SCRIPTURE?

The position of the Christian, and that of the SENTINEL, is that "liberty, equality, and fraternity" are qualities which have their origin in God, and have descended to man from him. Or rather, they are in the hearts of men in proportion as God is in their hearts, being inseparable from Him. And they can be properly understood and appreciated only in the light of the knowledge of God. Of what use is it to the country that men of all classes from plutocrats to populists prate and dispute about these things, without ever arriving at an agreement? Of what use is it that politicians declaim about the virtues of political theories and promise prosperity that does not come?

How long will it take to usher in prosperity upon the nation by way of money "trusts" and labor "trusts"? How long will prosperity be in emerging from the clash of contending "combines," all embodying the spirit of selfishness and hatred? A long time, we venture to say.

In the literature of Scripture, "liberty, equality and fraternity" mean something. They are there used in no selfish sense. To his followers Jesus said, "Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you; but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." It is the theory of government in the United States that those in the chief positions are the servants of the people; but their practical attitude as well as the attitude of the people toward them, is more suggestive of the position of "honored ruler" than of that of servant. The actual exemplification of the theory is not found in any department of the Government. It never was seen in the Government. It never existed anywhere outside of the Christian church.

Again, Jesus said: "Be not ye called Rabbi; for one is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." And to the same end the Apostle Paul wrote to the church at Corinth: "For who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" Here is the doctrine of the equality of all men; and when this doctrine was enunciated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the national Constitution, it was not a product of the human intellect, but a principle of divine government, as old as Christianity itself.

This divine principle of government cannot be worked out on a selfish basis, but only on the basis of Christianity. This is the trouble with its application to human governments. Men are willing enough to adopt the theory that all men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with unalienable rights; but for the most part they do this from a selfish motive. When this principle was appealed to and adopted by the people of this nation, they were seeking to defend themselves from the tyranny of an English king. They sought liberty, not for an oppressed people in Europe or Asia, but for themselves, and in proportion as the nation grew strong and ceased to feel the need of defense against an opposing power, the people relaxed their hold upon their liberties, and the change which Thomas Jefferson foresaw became a reality. Having liberty for themselves, securely, as they supposed, the people became absorbed in the occupations of gain, and their guardianship of liberty was relaxed. They held the precious boon in selfishness, and by selfishness they have well-nigh lost it. But how can it be held in any other way? The question can be answered only by the gospel of God.

"What things soever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God, . . . made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." Phil. 2:4-7. "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth." 1 Cor. 10:24. This is God's method, and this is the example set by Him who was equal with God. And in proportion as God is in men, they will adhere to this rule; they will hold the principle that all men are created equal and are endowed with equal rights,—not for their own benefit, but for the benefit of their fellows.

The trouble is that God is not to any great extent in the hearts of men to-day. They will not let Him into their hearts; they have driven Him almost out of their hearts. And when He is out there is only selfishness left, and selfishness means bad men, and bad men means bad government. A government cannot long rise above the level of the people by whom it is administered.

If there is to be a better government in the United States,—if we are to have prosperity in place of the hard times,—there must be an improvement in the people themselves. The Government cannot improve itself; the Government cannot improve the people. But the people can improve themselves by allowing the divine principle of unselfishness to come into their hearts and rule their lives. The great question is, Will they do it? And this means, for each individually, Will I do it?

Sunday Baseball in Iowa.

It is reported that the Iowa legislature has undertaken to suppress Sunday baseball in that State, by a bill which prohibits all persons from engaging in that game on Sunday, with the exception of observers of the seventh day.

We do not think the latter will be likely to take any advantage of this exemption, for they are not noted as players of baseball, either on Sundays or other days. But the fact that the exemption is made on religious grounds,—that is, the observance of another day as the Sabbath—gives the law itself a religious stamp.

It would certainly be most inconsistent to allow a game of baseball on Sunday by observers of the seventh day, and at the same time prohibit the like exhibition on the part of other classes of people. As an exchange remarks, "A Seventh-day Baptist 'inshoot,' or an Adventist 'home run,' must be just as disturbing to the peace as any other kind. There is no denomination in baseball." It would certainly be hard to give an explanation that would satisfy an average community to the contrary.

That legislators should feel bound to make such a discrimination, in order to escape restricting freedom of conscience, shows that something must be wrong with the Sunday law itself. It is so manifestly unjust to prohibit those who conscientiously observe another day from doing work on Sunday that almost every State in the Union exempts them from the penalties for such work; and on the other hand it is manifestly absurd to say that there is any difference between plowing, carpentering, or baseball playing on Sunday by persons of one denomination, and the same by individuals of any other denomination. There is nothing denominational about work or recreation.

Hence we are driven by both reason and justice back to the starting point of all Sunday legislation, and find that we become involved in wrong the moment such legislation is undertaken.

Who Should Run the Government.

THE country ought to be governed by the best men in it, and the best men are to be found in the Christian Church. Therefore, for the good of the Government and the people under it, the civil offices should be filled by Christians. So reason our friends, the Christian Endeavorers, and they have undertaken, no doubt in all honesty and sincerity, to put the theory into practice.

Or, what is a slightly different theory, but amounts to the same thing in the end, they believe that they themselves are best fitted to run the Government, by controlling the elections to public office, because they are Christians.

This reasoning is fallacious. The best men in the country are certainly Christians, but Christianity does not claim to qualify any person for public office. Christianity is designed to save people from their sins; and because a man is very pious and very good, it does not follow at all that he is better fitted than other people to hold office or to nominate men for office.

Christianity acquaints men with the governments of God; but the government of God and all human governments are totally dissimilar. The one is a government of love; the others are governments of force. The one brings to view the power of God unto salvation from sin; the others bring to view the power of man for the regulation of outward acts. The one is based upon a spiritual, divine law; the others upon the laws of man. The purpose of one is to maintain a perfect individual character; that of the others is to establish a prosperous State.

The very fact that a person is led to espouse the principles of the government of God, must have a tendency to unfit him for service in a government of a totally different character. The governments of earth know nothing of love; the theory is that the offender, if caught, must be punished. If he escapes it is not from any governmental recognition of the principle of pardon upon confession and repentance. No earthly government can recognize such a principle. It could not proceed a day if it should do so.

That country will be most prosperous in which there is the least need of government; and there will be the least need of government where the people are best fitted to govern themselves, as individuals, in harmony with the principle of respect for the rights of their neighbors. Christianity enables a person to do this; and the more real Christians there are in a community, the less need will there be there for the services of the sheriff, the fewer jails and poor houses will be needed, the less taxation will be required, and the less occasion will there be for enacting laws for their benefit. In this way, and this only, is Christianity a help to good government.

The qualifications for being a Christian are totally different from those required for statesmanship. Any person can be a Christian, because every person has the power and wisdom of God pledged to make him one, through faith in Christ. But not every person can be a statesman. Not every person can successfully fill a public office. Nor has God pledged his power or wisdom to qualify any person in this respect. The qualifications for eminence in public life are in the individual at his natural birth. The "new birth" has nothing to do with them.

And when a religious organization, such as that of the Christian Endeavorers, sets out to control the Government for any purpose, it is inevitable that their views will have a religious coloring, and their actions be influenced by a religious bias. Their very nature being religious, and the object of their existence being the furtherance of religion, it can but follow that their exercise of civil power in their organized capacity will be guided by religious reasons. Their endeavors will be as distinctively "Christian" in the matter of running the Government, as in anything else.

As we have often said, the principle of the total separation of religion and the State is a Christian principle; but the endeavor to keep religion and the State separate is not Christian endeavor in the view of the Endeavorers. Their aim is in quite another direction.

The result will be that when the control of elections falls into their hands, men will be nominated and chosen to office on account of their religion, and religion will be connected with their administration of office. Thus religion will work its way into the Government, and with it will go the church; for where religion is there is also some church or church combination. Thus religion in the Government means the Church in the Government, which means a union of Church and State, which means an image of the papacy.

The religious people of this day who want to control the Government need not fancy that they alone of all religious people who in former times have grasped the civil power, are upright and honest. The plan has always brought evil upon mankind in the past, this must be admitted. But we must give the religious people of past times credit for being honest, the same as we do those of to-day. They meant well, just as the Christian Endeavorers mean well to-day. But the history of the papacy in Europe, and of the Puritans in America, testifies of the harm that resulted. It was so because it could not be otherwise. Christianity will not coalesce with a government of force; and it matters not how good and honest are the people who attempt to unite them, or how innocent and plausible is the appearance of things at the start. The only result that can possibly follow is that which has followed in the past—the establishment of a religious despotism.

As before stated, Christianity does not qualify any person for the administration of civil office. On the contrary, it separates a person from the world, and from that which is of the world. It gives him citizenship in a different country. It enrolls him under another government, while it teaches him to live peaceably with all men here, and to be in subjection to the powers that be. The governments of earth are not the product of the wisdom and power of God, but of man; and God rules in them by overruling. The fit symbols of the divine government are the dove and the lamb; of human governments, the eagle and the lion. In the screaming and tearing of the eagle, and the roaring and rending of the lion, God has not called His people to participate.

Judicial Usurpation.

"Twentieth Century," May 1.

THE three cent car fare law which was put into operation in Indianapolis two weeks ago has been declared null and void by a federal judge from Chicago. The judge says it is a piece of special legislation, but whatever it may be there is no evading the fact that the Constitution of the United States never contemplated any such interference with the rights of a sovereign State as this decision forms. It is a most flagrant usurpation. Judge Showalter, who rendered the judgment in this highly important case, denied that the Supreme Court of Indiana has any right to pass upon the matter in controversy. It is a great disappointment to find that the three cent car fare can be abrogated in defiance of the will of the people.

The corporation magnates are naturally highly delighted at the victory they have won. A curious feature is the wholesale series of injunctions issued by Judge Showalter. In the first place, he enjoins the State prosecutor from enforcing the law. He enjoins the governor of the State from executing it. He enjoins the city officials in Indianapolis from recognizing the law, and he enjoins the street railway company from receiving a three-cent car fare. It seems very strange that a Chicago official can thus govern the whole State of Indiana. Government by injunction is evidently capable of infinite expansion and application.

We should not now hear any more nonsense about the will of the people being the supreme law.

"Reading the Fourth Commandment in a Drop of Blood by the Aid of the Microscope."

BY ELD. J. F. BALLENGER.

THE sixth of the educational series of lectures under the auspices of the local plebiscite campaign committee was delivered in the Dundas Street Methodist Church recently by Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, of Washington, D. C. His subject was "The Big Four and Forty More" (reforms). Prominent among the "Big Four" was the sabbath reform. In speaking upon this the doctor said:—

"As in the case of temperance, so in that of the sabbath, we believe the need of the hour is to reinforce conscience with science to show in this case that it is not a Christian doctrine only but a certainty of science that the best health and the longest life cannot be attained without sabbath rest.

After making the above statements the speaker produced a chart drawn up by Dr. Heagler, with the accompanying diagram,— in which the author claims to have made a new discovery showing the "need of the hour," that is, how "conscience can be reinforced with science" by the devoting of one day out of the seven to rest.

The speaker said it was hoped that the chart would soon be inserted in the text books of scientific temperance, which are one by one being revised, as they ought to be as familiar and fundamental in every child's education as the "rule of three," since this rule of seven is more radically essential to wise living.

Each downward stroke (in the accompanying diagram) represents a day's work which is not quite equaled by the upward restorative stroke of the night's rest; so that one is a little weaker every day as the week's work goes on.

It was further claimed that the laborer in a normal day's work, overdraws his oxygen one ounce, and that the normal night's rest restores only five sixths of it. Losing one sixth of an ounce per day, he is six sixths of an ounce short on Sabbath morning,—a whole ounce short,—a whole day behind—in the same condition physically on Sabbath morning and in the same need of rest as on Monday night. He is therefore called to a whole day's rest to balance his account with Nature. If he habitually disobeys this divine law of weekly rest, he runs down more and more until he is far from what he ought to be, as is shown by the chart, about which, the speaker said, doctors do not disagree.

Further, that one breathes less oxygen and uses more during ordinary work than when at rest, absorption of mind checking the respiration to the extent of 12,960 cubic inches in eight hours. Oxygen being but another name for vital force, the bearing of the foregoing facts on health and strength is apparent. So that if this reparation is not supplemented by an occasional longer period of rest, the system is subjected to a gradual falling in pitch. So that one may "read the fourth commandment in a drop of blood by the aid of the microscope."

The reader of the above needs no aid to see the underlying object of this pretended science, or as the Scriptures put it, "science falsely so called." We are sometimes met with the objection that we cannot keep the same day all around the world, therefore a seventh part of time is all that is required; but the above reasoning makes it impossible to keep a seventh or any other equal portion of time.

Every person in the least acquainted with the chemical properties of the atmosphere knows that the vitalizing property of oxygen is found in different degrees in different localities. In the pine regions of the North, ozone or oxygen gas is found in greater abundance than in the lower and more malarial regions of the South. In fact there is scarcely two degrees of latitude where the air is charged with the same proportion of oxygen. So that a law compelling people to stop work a sufficient length of time to take on the wasted oxygen from a certain number of normal days' labor would vary according to the amount of oxygen gas found in the different latitudes. In some localities it would be necessary, according to the above diagram, to have a "Civil Sanitary Sabbath" about every third day, while in more healthy regions these periods of rest might be two or three weeks apart.

In China, the people have kept no sabbath for centuries and yet they have not "run down" or run out either; and facts show that they live to as great age as do those who keep Sunday regularly.

Again, there is a large element in society that live sedentary lives. They need no civil Sunday law to compel them to be idle that they may take in a sufficient amount of gas to keep them from "running down." It would be far better for this class of people if they could get out every Sunday and exercise their muscles by honest toil or innocent amusement.

We quote the following from "Home Hand Book of Domestic Hygiene," page 239:—

"During forced respiration, when a larger quantity of air is inhaled, the quantity of oxygen lost in the lungs, and the amount of carbonic acid gained are of course greater [italics ours], which is also true of the other changes mentioned. It should be remarked that the amount of carbonic acid gained is a little less than that of the oxygen lost."

According to the above, the amount of oxygen lost depends upon the degree of respiration, and this depends upon the amount of exercise taken. Hence, a civil Sunday law should specify just how much each one should respire during the week. Or if this could not be done, then the law should gauge the time of rest to suit each individual case. So that those who work in the furnace in hot weather and respire very rapidly might have their sabbaths come at shorter intervals; and the man whose employment is less violent and in a cool place, and hence respire much less, should have a longer interval between his periods of rest.

Once more: A person with weak lungs who is compelled to labor beyond his strength to get a living for himself and his family would certainly require a longer time to recuperate his wasted energies than a robust healthy person whose occupation required but little physical exercise. Surely a law requiring stated periods of rest could not fall in equal proportions upon all classes. Then how foolish and absurd to think of basing a "Civil Sunday Law" upon the amount of oxygen gas required to recuperate our wasted energies. No one but a drowning man would ever catch at such floating straws.

Those who are acquainted with the history of the papal church need no microscope to read in the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus Christ the outcome of the first Sunday law enacted by Constantine in A. D. 321, in speaking of which Dr. Neander says: "In this way the church received help from the State for the furtherance of her ends." And the same results are seen in the Sunday laws of the present time.

Nor does human vision need artificial aid to see in this whole scheme of civil Sunday legislation the dragonic spirit which was to make war upon the remnant of the church, who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. Rev. 12:17.

Let the reader beware. God is not mocked with any such pretended reforms as are proposed by these men who make void the law of God by forcing upon the people the traditions of Rome. Again we say, Beware!

THE REV. W. F. CRAFTS writes in the May Christian Endeavorer of "The Saturdarians' Waterloo," which he says has been occasioned by Mr. Gamble's "great discovery" about the Sabbath. But the cause of the seventh-day Sabbath has met a good many "Waterloos" of this kind and is still moving on without any mark of having ever been defeated.

TRUMPET TONES

The Power of His Coming.

If men believed the scriptural truth that in the last days "wicked men and seducers shall wax worse and worse" until the Son of man returns to destroy sin and sinners, it would revolutionize church methods. Men would cease trying to save a ship-wrecked world and redouble their efforts to save sinners out of the world. They would drop all National Reform and Christian citizenship schemes of saving the State and go to saving sinners. Knowing this to be true, we print below two articles from prominent evangelists on the subject of the second coming of Christ.

A. F. B.

The Second Coming of Christ.

By D. L. Moody.

WHOEVER neglects this has only a mutilated Gospel, for the Bible teaches us not only of the death and sufferings of Christ, but also of his return to reign in honor and glory. His second coming is mentioned and referred to over three hundred times, yet I was in the Church fifteen or sixteen years before I ever heard a sermon on it. There is hardly any church that does not make a great deal of baptism, but in all of Paul's epistles I believe baptism is spoken of only thirteen times, while he speaks about the return of our Lord fifty times; and yet the Church has had very little to say about it. Now, I can see a reason for this;

THE DEVIL DOES NOT WANT US TO SEE THIS TRUTH, for nothing would wake up the Church so much. The moment a man realizes that Jesus Christ is coming back again to receive his followers to himself, this world loses its hold upon him. Gas stocks and water stocks and stocks in banks and railroads are of very much less consequence to him then. His heart is free, and he looks for the blessed appearing of his Lord, who, at his coming, will take him into his blessed kingdom. . . .

In certain churches, where they have the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof—just the state of things which Paul declares shall be in the last days—this doctrine is not preached or believed. They do not want sinners to cry out in their meetings, "What must I do to be saved?" They want intellectual preachers who will cultivate their taste, brilliant preachers who will rouse their imagination, but they don't want the preaching that has in it the power of the Holy Ghost. We live in the day of

SHAMS IN RELIGION.

The Church is cold and formal; may God wake us up! And I know of no better way to do it than to get the Church to look for the return of our Lord.

Some people say, "Oh, you will discourage the young converts if you preach that doctrine."

Well, my friends, that hasn't been my experience. I have felt like working three times as hard ever since I came to understand that my Lord was coming back again.

I look on this world as a wrecked vessel. God has given me a life-boat, and said to me, "Moody, save all you can." God will come in judgment to this world, but the children of God don't belong to this world; they are in it, but not of it, like a ship in the water; and their greatest danger is not the opposition of the world, but their own conformity to the world. This world is getting darker and darker; its ruin is coming nearer and nearer; if you have any friends on this wreck unsaved, you had better lose no time in getting them off.

REV. D. L. MOODY.

[From Christian Herald, by permission.]

But some one will say, "Do you then make the grace of God a failure?"

No; grace is not a failure, but man is. The antediluvian world was a failure. The Jewish world was a failure. Man has been a failure everywhere when he has had his own way and been left to himself. When the Son of God left heaven, and came to this sin-cursed earth to open up a new and living way whereby we might return to God, the earth would give him no better quarters than a manger for his birthplace, no place to lay his head during the years of his ministry, and only the cruel cross in his death.

Nowhere in the scriptures is it claimed that the whole world shall be brought to the feet of Christ in this dispensation. In the fifteenth chapter of Acts, James says: "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." That is one reason for our Lord's delay. He is waiting until the elect are all gathered out, until his Gentile bride is complete.*

The Blessed Hope.

By Rev. Geo. C. Needham.

"LOOKING for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ."

A blessed hope means a happy one. The word refers to inward enjoyment apart from external environment. The expectations implied in such a hope make all present circumstances of trial or depression "not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to usward. For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God."

IT IS A PURIFYING HOPE.

"And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

As linen bleaches under the sun, the light of this hope cleanses the life from world stains. It loosens the grasp from the things of earth.

The man who has a magnificent mansion in some beautiful locality, and is only tarrying in a city hotel for a few days till he can journey home, will not care to spend his time and money in elaborately decorating his temporary lodging in the strange city. If he purchases bric-a-brac or pictures, the thought in his mind is, "I will take them home." So the Christian, who reckons himself a "pilgrim and a stranger" here, will have little heart to spend his energies on things pertaining merely to the earthly. His city and his home lie beyond. His great concern will be to "lay up treasures in heaven."

IT IS A PACIFYING HOPE.

"Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have praise of God." "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

In the power of this hope all questions of provocation can be patiently laid aside for the Lord to settle on his arrival. The child of God who is pervaded with this hope will be willing to waive all rights of self-vindication, knowing that his "labor of love and patience of hope" will not go unrewarded.

IT IS A COMFORTING HOPE.

"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope."

The lustre of this hope shines most conspicuously in the consolation it brings to those who are called to part with their loved ones by death. The unbelieving bury their dead without any certain or definite expectation of re-union. For in no human scheme of philosophy is the truth of a resurrection even hinted at. But the Scriptures definitely promise this. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." The Apostle Paul, after explaining all this to the Thessalonian Christians, and showing them the immense advantage they had over the heathen who knew nothing about the advent in majesty of Jesus Christ, or of the resurrection, adds finally, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

REV. GEO. C. NEEDHAM

IT IS A GLORIOUS HOPE.

"For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself." "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called; accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure. . . . Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection."

This hope would be meaningless apart from the locality and the circumstances where it anchors itself. It leaps over time and space to the period when Jesus Christ shall himself be glorified as King of kings according to the eternal purpose of the Father.

PROMISES.

This blessed hope embraces several promised glories:

1. We shall be with Christ. Not as in death, when we are said to be "unclothed" and "waiting to be clothed upon with our house from heaven." In an actual sense we shall "see Him as He is," and be ourselves like him, personally and morally.

*"Colportage Library," No. 34.

2. We shall be beyond sinning. Now we groan for deliverance. Pain and the curse encompass us. The consummation of that hope will bring full redemption to the body.

3. We shall know as we are known. "Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."*

News, Notes, and Comment.

THE theory of divine right in government is treasonable in the United States as well as blasphemous among Christians. It is really nothing but the European conception of the divine right of emperors and kings. It does not matter whether you call a man Czar or President, if he owes his position to "the grace of God," and is responsible to Him alone for his actions. It does not matter how you choose your Congress or your legislature, if, after you have gotten either, you propose to consider its proceedings in the light of a revelation, and make it practically an ecclesiastical council. For my own part, I prefer a single tyrant to several hundred. And, if a set of men is to prescribe rules of conduct for me, which I am to accept as "founded on the law of God," I would prefer them to be as few as possible. A smaller despotism is more easily "tempered by assassination," for one thing, than the despotism of the many-headed.

* * *

"DIVINE right" no more exists in the people than in emperor or king. The sovereign people of America are trifled with, and insulted as well, by the puerile maxim "vox populi, vox dei." They know that, try as hard as they may, they often fail to secure the services of public men who are wise and honorable. They know that many wicked laws are passed with wicked purposes, and under the pressure of wicked motives. They know that monstrous blunders are repeatedly made in legislation, and gross wrongs perpetrated in the course of public administration. They do not make the mistake of laying these things at the door of heaven. Sooner or later, they "turn the rascals out."

* * *

AND the people know, too, that they are no more capable of infallibility in the making of a fundamental constitution than they are capable of it in the selection of those who are to act for them under its provisions. Of course, if an American constitution were really "based on the law of God," once promulgated, it would be perfect and unchangeable by any human agency whatsoever. But American constitutions expressly declare that the people may amend them at any time, and at their own sweet will—so that they have a check on their rulers in general and in particular—the first of which may be applied by simply abolishing the whole frame of government, and substituting another; and the second, by the operation of the great principle that elections should be "frequent and free."

* * *

AMERICAN democracy, then, is really applied Christianity, albeit there is no room for "divine right" anywhere in its creed. It applies Christianity to practical politics by removing religion altogether from the business of State-craft. It follows the Master by disclaiming the power and the inclination to soil Christianity with the mire and the dust of civil contention. Not only does it refrain in practice from infringing on individual rights of conscience, but it expressly admits and declares that it has no power to infringe. Every implication otherwise, every suggestion of a connection between civil obligations and duties, and the obligations and duties of the religious life, is rank treason to true Americanism.

* * *

NOR is this offence lessened by that wretched juggling with words which some have lately attempted by declaring that they do not want Church and State, but they do want religion and State. The two are synonymous terms for the purposes of this argument. A State church, like all other churches, has two distinct functions—she is a master of ceremonies and a director of souls. In her first capacity she is less objectionable than in her last. There is no political reason why the State should not set the details of a gorgeous ritual before the people, except the one of expense—which, to be sure, is conclusive. The principle of religious freedom and religious equality, which is what Americanism stands for, and is the constant object of assault—this is violated whenever and howsoever a religious dogma is incorporated in a statute, and wherever a practice is found, in the course of civil administration, which originated in a religious conception, and derives its sanction therefrom. An instance of the first violation is the "Sunday law"; an instance of the second sort is the swearing of witnesses, and the "swearing in" of Presidents, etc.

* * *

ALL "Christian Citizenship" leagues are thus under the ban of the Master's displeasure. Christianity has nothing in the world to do with citizenship. A good Christian—which means simply a real Christian—cannot but be a good citizen. So a real Christian is of necessity a good father, husband, son, as the case may be. But one may be a good citizen without being or even pretending to be a Christian. Jews make excellent citizens, for example. Any man that behaves himself with outward decency is a good citizen. It does not matter whether he does this because he is afraid of the penitentiary, or because he dreads the social ostracism which would follow a different course. He is all right as a citizen, so long as he is all right on the outside.

BUT Christianity has no concern with the outside, except as an indicator of the condition of affairs within. Whether the man does right or not is no matter from her standpoint, unless he does right from one single motive. This test is severe, but there is no other. It is made the more serious by the fact that one is often confused as to his own motives. But the analysis must be made at some time, according to the Master's very explicit announcement. Let us, then, "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's," and—the rest we all know.

Ans. J. Ringgold.

THE vote taken in Toronto, May 15, on the question of running street cars on Sunday, resulted in a victory for those demanding Sunday cars, by a small majority. Toronto can now no longer be spoken of as the model "Sabbath-keeping" city. It is doubtless a great disappointment to the defeated side not to be able longer to compel people to walk on Sunday who would prefer riding, but they can console themselves with the reflection that they and all others are just as free to walk as they were before.

That West Point Chapel Again.

It appears that the Catholics are not, after all, to get their Government chapel at West Point. Attorney-General McKenna has delivered an opinion in the matter, denying the power of Secretary Alger to grant a lease of Government ground at West Point for a longer term than five years, and this limited concession will not answer the purpose which the Catholic authorities have in view.

The facts which led up to the present situation are these: Secretary Lamont, during the administration of Mr. Cleveland, granted "Father" O'Keefe, the Catholic priest at West Point, the privilege of erecting a chapel on ground designated by the commandant, the license for which was to be revoked by the Secretary of War on sixty days' notice. Secretary Alger extended the time of notice to six months. "Father" O'Keefe then proposed that he would erect a stone chapel, costing $20,000, which, on completion, he would present to the United States on condition that it should be used in perpetuity for the celebration of Catholic religious services. The matter came before the Attorney-General, and in his decision he says:—

"This case came before me, and after carefully reviewing all the statutes I decided that the Secretary of War had no color of law to accept a gift such as Father O'Keefe contemplated. I reviewed every statute covering any phase of the matter as to the Secretary's right to grant such a license as was given by both Secretaries Lamont and Alger. On these I decided that it would be impossible to grant such a license without further legislation, and remitted the proposition to Congress.

"There is one statute giving the Secretary of War the power to lease any Government property in his care, not in use, for a period of five years. I could not satisfy myself that the erection of a stone church of the cost and dimensions determined came within the provisions of the law. The fact that the United States reserved to itself the right to revoke the lease or license did not cover the ground, because the mere fact of the erection of such a building contemplated a perpetuity. Such an expense would not be incurred unless the parties tacitly understood that the United States would refrain from exercising its rights.

"This would confront the Government with enduring a perpetuity not contemplated by law, or at some time or in some emergency exercising a right in a manner that might seem invidious. Therefore, because of the absence of sufficient statutes and also on the ground of good public policy, I decided that the Secretary had not power to grant the license sought by Father O'Keefe. My decision is very full and covers all the points. Religious sentiments did not enter into it."

We must not omit to notice the fact that Attorney-General McKenna is a Roman Catholic. It might be thought that he would have decided the matter in a different way, but he says that "religious sentiments did not enter into it," and we are glad to give him the credit of acting in an unbiased, honorable manner. All honor to upright men, whether Roman Catholics or otherwise. The SENTINEL has nothing against Roman Catholics. It has nothing against men of any shade or unbelief. It opposes only what it believes to be evil principles.

DR. ANDREW D. WHITE, ex-president of Cornell University, has published a book on the "Warfare of Science with Theology." That such a warfare exists is undoubtedly a fact; but it should be borne in mind that there is no necessary connection between theology and Christianity.

In a Sunday-school quarterly of recent date Dr. Earl Barnes strikes at a popular religious fallacy by mentioning that "many children have formed their ideas of Satan from the picture on the cans of deviled ham." This is unfortunate enough, certainly; but it might have been still worse if their conceptions on this point had been derived from some pictorial representations of an approved orthodox type. The only authority on the subject is Scripture, and that speaks of Satan as appearing in the form of "an angel of light." 2 Cor. 11:14. The people generally have been so fooled by what theology and tradition have taught them on this point, that they have been prepared to see the devil only in that which to most minds is shocking and repulsive, and not in that also which is beautiful, "respectable," and even "pious;" and as a consequence they have been easily duped by the arch-deceiver. The devil knows enough not to appear with cloven hoofs, horns and tail when he wants to catch people whom anything outwardly repulsive would repel.

Breaking the "Sabbath" to Stop "Sabbath Breaking."

New York "World," May 18.

JOSEPH FINK, of Nanuet, was on his way to church last Sunday, when he saw Farmer Farrell ploughing in his field.

"Why, Brother Farrell," he said, "working on the sabbath?"

"Yes," said the worker, "been delayed by the pesky rains, and got to get things under ground, you know."

Brother Fink forgot about church, and ran off to Justice Haerle's to get a warrant. Justice Haerle issued it and Constable Snyder served it, all on the sabbath.

Brother Farrell was fined $5 for breaking Section 263 of the Penal Code, and Brother Fink felt as good as if he had heard a bushel of sermons.

Miss B., a bright young lady of —ville, had become convinced that Scripture requires the observance of the seventh day of the week, instead of the first day, as the Sabbath; but the Rev. Mr. C., pastor of the Church of the Venerable Tradition, very lucidly showed her that not any specific day, but only a seventh part of time,—any one day in seven—was all the commandment requires to be observed. Meeting her one day shortly after, he said:—

"Good morning, Mary; I hear you are married now."

"Yes; I married one of Mr. Brown's sons," was the reply.

"Mr. Brown has a fine family of sons—seven of them, I believe. Which one did you marry?"

"Oh, no one in particular; I just married one seventh of them," said Mary, while her eyes twinkled.

"Oh—ah—yes—I see, I see," gasped the discomfited pastor, as he resumed his walk.—Gospel Sickle.

The Strength of a Nation.

"New York Observer," May 18.

THE true strength of a nation, or of a society, is never determinable by rough mass measurements, or long insurable against lapse and loss if, after the manner of Asiatic despotisms, the few are allowed to treat the many as though they were their natural born or accidentally subjugated serfs. Power in the last analysis is personal rather than popular. That nation alone can survive in history where the individual factor stands out sharp and clear. . . . Virtue in bulk, and piety by proxy, will not do. Not any number of serfs, howsoever many they be, make nations, make fames, make histories, but only intelligent, self-assertive freemen. We cannot calculate from any amount of corraled cattle. The real unit is the man, not the mass. Historic totals are footed up beginning with the lowest-written integers, and if any ciphers are admitted to Time's enduring columns, it is not the ciphers which take precedence of, but those which follow after the human units. The man is the measure of mankind.

Keeping God's Commandments.

BY C. H. KESLAKE.

To know God and Jesus Christ is to keep the commandments. That this is true will be evident by reading John 17:3: "And this is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent;" and Matt. 19:16, 17: "And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him . . . If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments."

Not only is this true, but the keeping of the commandments is evidence that one knows God. Proof. 1 John 2:3: "And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments." Not that one knows God as the result of keeping the commandments, but that he keep the commandments as the result of knowing God.

It is the bounden duty, apart from the idea of its being a blessed privilege, of every man to "fear God, and keep his commandments." It is because of failure to do this that sin and iniquity abound on every hand and in every conceivable form.

Jesus Christ came into this world with the boundless love of God in his heart, to so reveal the Father that He might bring people to recognize Him and render a willing obedience to His will.

Every word and act on the part of Jesus was with this supreme end in view. In doing this he went forth relying wholly upon God, and trusting in the arm of the Infinite.

In the hearts of all who should yield themselves to Christ there would be implanted that which would not only enable them to love God with all their heart, but also love their neighbors as themselves. This would not only make them good Christians, but would also make them good citizens, rendering honor to whom honor is due, tribute to whom tribute, always remembering that the "powers that be are ordained of God."

Christ worked always and only in harmony with principles, the recognition of which would contribute to the stability of any government—even the principles of the government of God.

It is because these principles are not recognized that the governments of earth are not enduring,—or rather, had these principles alway been recognized, there never would have been but one government—that of God, extending throughout all creation.

As the principles taught and preached by Jesus Christ are not recognized by the governments of earth, and only through these can the stability of any government be maintained, it follows that the time will inevitably come when earthly governments will cease to be, to give place however to the everlasting kingdom of Christ.

When our Lord left this earth he gave to his disciples the great commission of preaching the gospel to every creature, equipping them for that work by endowing them with power from on high—by giving them the gift of the Holy Spirit. They were to be as he was, and just as the Father had sent him into the world, even so sent he them—armed with the same mind.

But it is evident that some of the professed followers of Christ have sought to improve upon his methods. The chief thing that Christ kept in view has—if not altogether ignored—been made secondary, while they have set about reforming the State, making that their chief business. To accomplish this they have sought to secure legislation compelling the observance of God's law. This the Saviour never did, for the simple reason that he knew that that method would not, because it could not, accomplish the desired result.

The great evil, so they think, at which they aim in their work of reform(?) is that of Sunday desecration. This, they say, is a violation of the law of God, supposing Sunday to be the Sabbath. Just what connection Sunday sustains to the Sabbath of the Decalogue has never been shown. Even a cursory glance at the fourth commandment will reveal the fact that Sunday is not the Sabbath, for that reads "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," while every body knows that Sunday is not the seventh day, but the first.

As a matter of fact the first day, as such, is not mentioned in the commandment, and only has a place there by virtue of its being one of the six days in which God made the heavens and the earth, and because of which He says to His creatures, Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work. According to the commandment, therefore, Sunday is only a common working day.

Not only does the fourth commandment show that Sunday is not the Sabbath, but the whole Bible will show the same thing.

This being so, it will be seen that even though their methods of securing obedience to the law of God were correct, all their efforts must end in complete failure, for they are expended in behalf of the wrong day.

This will explain why it is they are seeking human help, instead of relying upon God's power, for Sunday as a Sabbath is only a human institution. But on the other hand, if Sunday were the right day, their methods are wrong.

The violation of the Sabbath, like that of all the other commandments, has its source in the heart. Make the heart right, therefore, and there will be no trouble on the score of Sabbath desecration, or any other evil.

No human law ever enacted could do more than bring about a pretended observance of the day, while it would be adding another to the victim's long list of sins—the sin of hypocrisy.

No human law ever enacted, or that shall ever be enacted, or all of them put together, can ever make a man know the Lord. And as no man can ever really obey any one of God's commandments without his knowing God it follows that the only way in which this work can be done is to simply do as Jesus did—preach the gospel of the grace of God, relying upon the arm of the Infinite One for success.

Our Next Issue.

OUR issue of May 3 will not be a "special," but it will be of special interest to all our readers. Inasmuch as it is issued near the time when the thoughts of the people are directed to the fruits of war,—when they decorate the graves of those who fell in the late struggle, the SENTINEL will devote considerable space to militarism. Excellent cuts will illustrate the preparations for war. Extra copies can be had at the usual price.

Mass meetings were held recently in Pawtucket, Providence and East Providence, in the interests of a more stringent Sunday law in that State, and "strong resolutions" on the subject were passed on each of these occasions.

TO OUR PATRONS:

1. Write names plainly.
2. Remit by P. O. Money Order, or Express Order, or by Bank Draft on New York. Personal checks are not desired.
3. Make all Orders and Drafts payable to Pacific Press Publishing Co., not to the editor or any other individual.
4. We will receive Postage Stamp in small quantities and any kind of good money. Defaced coins will not be taken. If paper money or coin is sent, register the letter.

THE EMPIRES OF THE BIBLE

FROM THE TIME OF THE FLOOD
TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.

By ALONZO T. JONES.

Recent research in Babylon and Egypt has brought to light many valuable historical records that were inscribed in stone by the very men living in those ancient times. These records and the Bible history of the same time are woven together in one connected story. Another important feature of the book is the tracing in a series of twenty-one maps, the course of those empires. The design of the book is unique, and every student either of Bible or history will find it invaluable.

—An Ideal Book of Travel.—

BY LAND AND SEA

A JOURNEY THROUGH FIVE CONTINENTS.

STARTING from the interior of the United States, the reader quickly finds himself transported, as it were, to the scenes of the journey, the several stopping-places being California, Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, England, and Holland. The aim of the narrative, which has been written almost wholly from original notes and observations, has been especially directed to the object of presenting the life and nature of those regions, apart from the mental instruction and its inherent features of intellectual entertainment. The author has happily found, in the object lessons of life under its various phases and conditions, illustrations of moral truths, which are portrayed in a manner at once instructive and attractive. The book contains 392 pages, embellished with over 100 original, full-page engravings designed especially for this work, and numerous part-page illustrations, and is furnished in the following bindings:—

Special Summer School at the Sanitarium.

THE Medical Missionary Board has arranged for a special summer school of ten weeks, beginning July 1 to 15. This school is especially designed to meet the wants of those who need instruction in healthful cookery, hygienic dress, physical culture, simple methods of treatment, Bible hygiene, and personal evangelistic work as a preparation for missionary labor. It is especially designed for ministers' wives, Bible readers, missionaries who are going into foreign fields, teachers of denominational schools, missionary teachers who expect to engage in work in the South, and ministers and all others engaged in church work.

The course will include a rapid survey of the whole subject of hygienic reform and the discussion of its bearings upon the present period of the world's history and our present work. Christian Help work, personal work, cottage meetings, health talks, missionary cooking-schools, the organization of dress and physical culture clubs, health Bible readings, the relation of health principles to the gospel, rescue work, and many other subjects directly and indirectly connected with Medical Missionary work and Christian philanthropy will be considered. The purpose is to prepare men and women who have ability for public labor in various capacities properly to represent the health and philanthropic branches of our work.

The Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association hope to be able to send thirty or forty missionary teachers into different parts of the Southern field next autumn, and one purpose of this special course is to prepare lessons for this special field. Mrs. Steele will give a series of talks in relation to the needs and opportunities of the South and the best methods of work. Professor Sutherland and others connected with the Battle Creek College will give a series of studies on the subject of "True Education." Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, who has had long experience as an evangelist and rescue worker, and who for several years has had charge of the training-school for evangelists under the direction of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, will give a course of instruction in "How to Reach the Unconverted." Mrs. E. E. Kellogg will give a special course in the principles of scientific cookery; Dr. Paulson, Dr. Winegar, Mrs. Dr. Kress, Mrs. Dr. Paulson, and others connected with the Sanitarium, will give instruction in special lines.

There are already numerous applicants for this course, and it is believed that a large number will avail themselves of this favorable opportunity for preparation to aid in lifting the world's weight of woe and misery and ignorance. Those desiring to do so, will be given an opportunity to board at the Sanitarium and pay their way in work. No charge will be made for instruction. Those who wish can board themselves. Several classes will be held daily, and those who can pay their board will find it advantageous to do so, that more time may be devoted study. Practical arrangements will be made for table board at $1.50 per week; rooms, fifty to seventy-five cents a week. We ought to have at least two hundred in this class. The time has come for a long stride forward along these lines. All interested should address the undersigned.

Separation of Church and State.

IN the beginnings of Egypt the same course was followed, as in the beginnings of Babylon and Assyria.

At first they knew the one true God; and he was their only King, their only Ruler.

But they did not like to retain God in their knowledge; and therefore they went into idolatry, and from idolatry into monarchy.

The Egyptian records state that the first rulers of Egypt were the gods; after them the demigods; and after these the kings.

In Egypt, however, the king was not content, as in Assyria, to call himself the viceroy of his god: he claimed to be the very embodiment of the god itself—the god was personified in the king; from him, it was declared, the people “received the breath of their nostrils;” he was “the giver of life.”

And thus, though Nimrod was the first man to establish the authority and assume the kingly title and crown, yet in Egypt his example was followed to the greatest lengths: as Egypt was undoubtedly the most idolatrous nation that ever was on the earth. There apostasy of every kind culminated: so that throughout the Bible the one word “Egypt” symbolizes everything that is contrary to God.

When the power of monarchy had filled the Mesopotamian plain God called Abram out of that country into the land of Canaan where he could be free, and thus made a separation of Church and State, and preached the same to all people.

But in process of time, and by Egypt, the power of monarchy was spread over all countries from Ethiopia to Ararat and Central Asia. Then as his people were obliged to live under the power of monarchy anyhow, the Lord put them where they could do the most possible good—he placed them at the very seat of the world’s empire in Egypt itself.

And there, through all the time of the supremacy of Egyptian empire, with Joseph and Moses beside the throne, and Israel amongst the people, of Egypt, God held before all nations the knowledge of himself. And as soon as the time came when the Egyptian empire must fail, God would place his people once more in Canaan the pivot of the highways of the nations.

To this end there must be again the separation of religion and the State, separation of Church and State. God’s people must be called out of Egypt, in order that they and all the nations might be instructed in the great principles of the gospel, of supreme allegiance to God, of the separation of religion and the State, of church and country.

Moses understood this, and therefore “he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter.” Moses was the adopted son of Pharaoh’s daughter. Pharaoh’s daughter was Pharaoh’s chief wife, and queen. Moses, therefore, by the most complete claim, was heir apparent to the throne of Egypt. The throne of Egypt was at that time the throne of the world; for the power of Egypt then ruled the world. It was the supreme State, the governing empire over all.

For Moses to refuse to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, was therefore to renounce the throne of Egypt. To renounce the throne of Egypt was to renounce the power of empire. It was definitely to disconnect from the power of the State.

At that time Moses was called to have charge over “the house of God which is the Church of the living God.” It was in obedience to this call that he renounced the throne of Egypt and the power of empire. It was because of this that he definitely disconnected himself from the power of the State. And in recording it God designed to teach all people that conformity to his will means the separation of Church and State; that it means the renunciation of the throne and the power of earthly empire—the total separation of religion and the State.

And it was through the faith of Christ that Moses did all this. It was “through faith” that “Moses when he was come to years refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures in Egypt.”

Therefore, from that day to this it has been made plain to all people, that faith in God, the faith of Jesus Christ, the original principle of the gospel and of the Church, means the absolute separation of Church and State, the renunciation of the throne and power of earthly dominion, the total separation of religion and the State.

And this is what faith in God, the faith of Jesus Christ, the fundamental principle of the gospel and of the Church, means to all people in the world to-day.

Religion and Democracy.

At a banquet of the Chamber of Commerce, of Cleveland, Ohio, given May 13, the chief oratorical feature was a speech by Archbishop Ireland, on the subject of “The Sure Foundation of a True Citizenship.” Among his utterances on this occasion worthy of note as showing the drift of papal teaching upon this important topic, are the following: "Patriotism is never so potent as when it is identified with religion." "The crisis for democracy will come when comes the crisis for religion." "The enemies of religion are the enemies of country and democracy."

What religion? it might be well to query in reply. "There be lords many and gods many," and there are religions many, and the archbishop's religion is one of them. But there is only one gospel—one revelation of God to mankind through Jesus Christ. And this cannot be identified with "patriotism;" but mere religion can be so identified, and we may not uncharitably infer that Archbishop Ireland hopes to see his own religion so identified. But what a state of things will exist in this erstwhile "land of the free," when to be irreligious, or to fail to conform to the prevailing religion, will be counted unpatriotic, and subject the nonconformist to the charge of being an enemy "of country and of democracy"!

The "Trust" Evil Illustrated.

THE spectacle of the thousands of employes of garment manufacturers on strike in New York City, while their wives and children starve in their cheerless homes, affords, among other things, an illustration of the workings of the "labor trust." There is truth in the remark made by ex-Senator Edmunds: "They may talk about our honest men with wives and families to support who are willing to work for one and two dollars a day, but they can't get it,—why? Because their union, or their trust, won't allow them. The standard is set for them, and if they don't wait and starve their families until they reach that standard they can't get work anywhere."

Sad, indeed, is the condition to which industry has been reduced by the selfishness of man toward his fellows. The "labor trust" represents a desperate effort by the workingmen to interpose an effectual resistance to the relentless power which from some higher stratum of society is steadily forcing them and those dependent on their earnings, beneath the surface of a respectable existence. In reply to ex-Senator Edmunds a New York journal says:—

"If he will go over to the East Side of New York, look into Walhalla Hall, or make a trip through the teeming tenements, he will gain some idea of a standard of wages and the standard of living which has resulted from free competition in labor. He will find tailors, to the number of tens of thousands, reinforcing their labor unions and saying to each other. 'We will starve if need be, we and our wives and our babies, but we will not return again to the practice of bidding against each other for work at starvation wages.' If he will look into the conditions which have caused the tailors' strike, he will find them bred of exactly the procedure which he would substitute for that of organized labor. One family, either out of the union or indifferent to its rules, agrees to work for a certain contractor for less than the union rates. Presently that contractor underbids his fellows. They investigate, discover the cause, and meet the unfair competition by cutting down the pay of their workers. The process is repeated until the wages become barely sufficient to support the workers, nor does it always stop there, for there are not infrequently some who will work for less than a living wage, supplementing it by vicious or dishonest practices. In every badly organized trade this process goes on."

Nevertheless the "labor trust," at its best, is an evil, however necessary it may seem to be. Man was not designed by his Creator to maintain his existence by means of the trust. To do this is to destroy his own individuality. God would have men learn the great truth that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He would have men learn to put their dependence upon Him as the author and preserver of life, rather than upon a human organization.

Many remedies are proposed for this deplorable condition of affairs, but the Christian student knows that the only effective remedy is righteousness. And therefore the counsel of God's word to those who experience the evils of this situation is, "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." See Jas. 5:1-7. Christ is coming the second time, in "power and great glory," to set up righteousness in the earth, by destroying sin and sinners out of it. This is the true hope for the toiling, groaning myriads of old earth to-day.

"Not by Might Nor by Power."

THE Lord does not carry on his work in the earth by might or by power. That is, he does not work by those agencies which appear most mighty and powerful in the eyes of men. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Zech. 4:6.

In this day we see religious organizations grasping for power. We see the church associations—the Society of Christian Endeavor, the Epworth League, etc., holding conventions and discussing, among other things, what they can do to control elections and put good men into public office. Their hopes in this regard are based upon the millions enrolled in their membership. But what will all this might and power avail in the work of the Lord? Suppose they should get complete control of the Government—what good would it do them or the cause which they profess to represent? What is the use of might and power when the Lord does not work by that means?

Have they forgotten the record of the experience of the prophet Elijah at Mount Horeb? 1 Kings 19:9-13. The prophet was told to "Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the Lord. And behold, the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind. And after the wind was an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake. And after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire. And after the fire a still small voice." And the Lord was in that voice, and that voice set in motion again the work of the Lord which had been suspended by the prophet's flight from Jezreel. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

Do these religious organizations aim to produce a cyclone or an earthquake in the Government? Evidently, they hope to do something of the sort. But what good would it accomplish if they should? The Lord would not be in it. He would not be in it even were they able to duplicate all the awesome exhibitions of might and power displayed at Horeb before Elijah. The Lord is yet in the "still small voice," which is the voice of His Spirit.

"O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end! How should one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight!" "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down," and not by the assault of battering rams and the arms of the encompassing host. By faith the servants of God in old time "turned to flight the armies of the aliens." Heb. 11:30-34. By faith the work of God moves forward in the earth to-day. The world will be deceived by exhibitions of might and power; but by the Word of the Lord his people know that his work is not by might nor by power, but by the "still small voice" of his Spirit.

The Lord's Day and Liberty.

A COMMON view of the question of securing Sabbath observance is expressed in the following from the Outlook of April 24:—

"The question of Sunday observance is by no means a simple one. There are elements in the problem which make it difficult of solution. It is, perhaps, more difficult in this country than in any other because the population is so heterogeneous. In the old New England days Puritan ideals could be realized because the people were all of one class. The same may be said of Scotland. But our population is composed of representatives of many nationalities and of various phases of faith. Simple justice seems to make it imperative that the preferences of differing people should be recognized. How liberty may be granted and yet the Lord's Day preserved is a question not easy to answer."

All this applies to Sunday observance; but none of the facts set forth in this quotation interfere with the securing of Sabbath observance, for the simple reason that Sabbath observance is a part of the Christian life, which is secured through faith in Christ; and it makes no difference how heterogeneous the population is, they are all alike susceptible to the grace of God. Nor do the "preferences" of the people affect the question; for when a person is a Christian, he will prefer to keep the Sabbath in just the way that God has commanded.

From the gospel standpoint, there can be no possible antagonism between liberty and the keeping of the Sabbath; for the Sabbath commandment is a part of the "perfect law of liberty" itself. See Jas. 2:11, 12. "How liberty may be granted and the Lord's day preserved" is therefore a question which can never arise under the provisions of the gospel. God is the author of both liberty and the Lord's day, and he has fixed their relation to each other; and the only thing that his creatures here need to do is to leave the matter just as he has arranged it.

If men would only do this, it would save them a world of trouble.

What is Compulsion?

BY W. A. COLCORD.

THE Christian Endeavorer says:—

"It is estimated that there are to-day over 3,000,000 laboring men in the United States who are compelled to labor every Sabbath [Sunday], or at least to labor on the Sabbath the same as upon other days."

Whoever made this estimate made a miscalculation. There is not a man in the United States who is compelled to work on the Sabbath; no, not in all the world. To work on the Sabbath the same as on other days is a sin, and no man in all the world is compelled to sin. If he were, then sin would not be sin. There is no law in the United States requiring any man to work on Sunday, the sabbath the Christian Endeavorer refers to, and even though there were, no one would absolutely have to work on that day. All could refuse.

"But," says one, "they would lose their jobs, and that means starvation." But what if they did lose their jobs, could not God in His infinite providence provide others? Would He see men starve in refusing to do wrong and daring to do right? Has He not promised never to forsake the righteous? Does He suffer their seed to beg bread? Does He not know their needs, and does He not care for them? Is not their bread and watersure? Where is men's faith in God? In what or in whom are men trusting when they talk of being compelled to do wrong in order to make a living? How can professed Christians expect others to do otherwise than wrong, when they do not possess sufficient stamina to do what they believe to be right? And how much value are they setting upon truth, when they show themselves unwilling to make any sacrifice in order to live it?

Saturday is by far a busier business day in the United States than Sunday. More jobs a hundred times are to be lost by refusing to work on that day than on Sunday, and yet no one hears of observers of the seventh day being compelled to work on the Sabbath. They are not compelled to do anything of the kind. They do not work on the Sabbath, and they live too. They have the courage to live up to their convictions, and trust God for the consequences. What is a man's moral worth who will not do this? Instead of yielding and catering and cringing to the world and worldly customs, and looking to the world for life and sustenance, let men be taught "that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." Let them be taught the faith, the manly independence, and the Christian courage expressed in the following stanza:—

"Dare to be right! dare to be true!
Foes may be many, and friends may be few.
Truth and her champions oft stand alone,
What's a man good for without a backbone?"

If the present blessing in keeping the Sabbath and the final reward for obedience are not sufficient to compensate for whatever sacrifice or inconvenience they may entail in this life, then the Sabbath is not worth keeping at all. But we hold a very different view.

Love Does Not Rule by Force.

BY H. F. PHELPS.

CHRISTIANITY, pure and simple, is founded in love; therefore true Christianity does not rule by force; for true love does not rule by force. Love governs by its own inherent power. There is a power in true love, when once recognized and allowed access to the soul, that will subdue the most stubborn heart. And love thus recognized will be obeyed through its own influence, from the very love begotten of love. A resort to force would be a denial of love's own existence, and a proof that love was not love. And so when that which may be called Christianity resorts to force for the maintenance and observance of its institutions, it is a positive proof that such is not Christianity at all, but only a perversion of Christianity.

"God is love," and being such, cannot govern by force. He cannot—absolutely cannot—coerce His creatures into obedience. He cannot, because such force, such compulsion, is not God, is not in God, is not of God. And if any being claiming to be God, should use force in securing obedience to his mandates, that very act would prove his claim to the Godhead to be false. And if the mighty God should compel his subjects to obedience, the act would be the most positive proof that God is not love, and that love was not the motive power of His government. It would prove that tyranny was the power behind the throne, and that God is a tyrant. All of which is the most positive proof that in any age of the world, whether during the Dark Ages, or in the closing decade of century nineteen, those who seek to enforce the institutions of religion, are not actuated by the spirit of love, the true spirit of Christianity. They may think that they are, but they are most terribly mistaken.

Christ says of himself, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do. . . . I have declared thy name unto them thou gavest me." And "God is love." And his name is declared to be "The Lord God, merciful, gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty." This is God. Such is the name of God. And Christ declared that name in all his teachings, and by every act in life and in his death. It was for this purpose that the name of the Father might be declared before men, that Christ came into the world.

Again Christ says: "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." Therefore as it was the work of Christ to declare that name of love, so it is the work of the believer to declare that same name. As Christ did declare that name by his life and by his death, even so the believer will declare that name of love by his life. This will be so, for it will be Christ in them, dwelling in their hearts by faith, Christ in them declaring that same name of love. And as surely as this is so, so surely will they voice the invitation of Christ, even the voice of entreaty, "Come unto me;" and "Who-soever will, let him come." As the voice of entreaty was heard in the Master, so will the true believer entreat and persuade men to be reconciled to God. As the Master did not appeal to force, they will not do so.

As surely as Christ did declare that name of love, so surely he did not appeal to the civil courts to enforce his teachings, which were but a representation of that name. This he could not do and be true to the name itself. This being so—and that it is so no one can dispute—it will be equally true that the true disciple, the true believer in Christ and in the work of Christ, being actuated by the Spirit of the Master, can no more appeal to the power of the civil law to enforce the teachings of Christ than did the Master himself. All this because it is not in love to do such a thing. It is not in God the Father to do it, it is not in Christ to do it, and it is not in the children of God even to attempt it, for the very reason that all these are actuated by the same spirit of love. And in this is seen the fulfillment of the prayer of Christ, "That they may be one in us."

The Pope's Army.

"Present Truth," London, Eng.

THE pope's kingdom, unlike Christ's, is altogether of this world, and hence do his servants fight. An Italian paper says that he has just reorganized his personal forces. The worst of it is that his influence is able sometimes to set greater armies in motion than this little one which guards the Vatican and keeps up the semblance of his temporal sovereignty. This alone, however, ought to teach his followers that the papacy is an antichristian power. An evening paper, quoting from the Italian Catholic journal, thus describes the army:—

"It is divided into five separate bodies, which are known as the Noble Guard, the Swiss Guard, the Palatine Guard, the Gendarmes, and the Fire Brigade. The first of these, that is, the Noble Guard, is commanded by Prince Altieri, and is composed of fifty young members of the Roman nobility. Each member of the corps receives from three to four hundred lire a month, and a special club is maintained for their use and amusement. The Swiss Guard numbers one hundred strong, and the men are specifically selected for their youth and strength. Their duty is to guard the doors and entrances to the Vatican, and they are armed with the Remington rifle. As under the old regulations they will still carry the halberd while on parade. The Palatine Guard is divided into two companies, commanded by General Eros-tarosa, who has under him a staff of two majors and four captains. This corps raised from among the citizens of Rome, is called out only on special occasions. The gendarmes number one hundred, under the command of Colonel Tagliettri, and are recruited from ex-soldiers of the Italian army, specially recommended by Italian bishops for their religious fidelity and fervor. The firemen, or pompiers, number thirty, and are always in the Vatican."

Christian Petitions.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

It will, we think, be conceded by everyone that when any church or religious order believes that it is being treated unjustly or discriminated against in any way by the government under which it exists, it has a right, as a church, to protest and appeal from such action of the government. But that a church, as a church, should in its organized, authoritative capacity petition the government in regard to the relations of the government to other nations is quite another affair, and its right and propriety in doing so are very questionable. But the church known as The United Brethren in Christ has, in a late general conference held at Toledo, Ohio, passed the following resolution, which is addressed to President McKinley:—

"Based on our latest advice as to the situation, we, the members of the twenty-second general conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, representing 250,000 communicants, do hereby earnestly express the hope that, in behalf of liberty and humanity, you in your wisdom may see your way clear to declare in favor of the recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cuban people."

This is not the first time that a church has endeavored to influence the Government of the United States in a certain direction; but heretofore, as far as our knowledge extends, efforts of this character have been confined to an attempt to influence the Government's action in regard to some affair which concerned no other nation than our own. But here is a change. The United Brethren in Christ, as a church, are trying to influence the Government in regard to a measure of foreign policy, involving its relations with another nation. Not only so, but they are advising an action which many think would embroil this nation in a war with Spain! This is hardly consonant with the true idea of the nature and duty of the Church of Jesus Christ.

The fact is the churchmen of our day have gotten so far away from the true, scriptural idea of what the church exists for, that they are liable to thrust the church into almost anything. Had the first Christian council which assembled in Jerusalem in the year A. D. 51 passed a resolution calling upon the Emperor of Rome to grant belligerent rights to Radimister, who at that time was engaged in a war against Vonones II., King of Persia, it would have been no more incongruous and out of place than this late action of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ.

If this church, or any other church, has a mission or any excuse or reason for a denominational existence, it is for the purpose of saving souls. Neither it, nor any other church, has any mission to advise or suggest to the Government what its foreign policy shall be. If war is troubling any land, there is always a proper thing for Christians to do, and whether they call themselves "United Brethren" or not they can be "united" in this: To humbly petition the King of heaven, through Jesus Christ, that human passions and ambitions may be stayed, war restrained; that kings and rulers may so conduct the civil affairs entrusted to them "that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty" (1 Tim. 2:2), and that the peculiar and sole work of the church, to save souls, may not be restrained or hindered by war or other evil things. Such petitions may be presented every day, and we may be sure that they will not be made in vain.

Love and the Sabbath.

C. H. KESLAKE.

To know God is to know love, for "God is love." No one can know God, and not love, for we read, "He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love." 1 John 4:8. It must therefore be true that he who knows God loves God. And the fact that he loves God is proof positive that he knows God, for again it is written:—

"Every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." 1 John 4:7. Because this is true it is further said, "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God." "If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar, for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" 1 John 4:20.

Thus will it be seen that it is perfectly natural for him who knows and loves God to love his fellowman. It is utterly impossible for it to be otherwise. And so when we read, "This commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also," we may learn that God's commandments are not arbitrary, but that they find their source in, and are the expression of the love that God has for his creatures.

Hence we find the Saviour, in reply to the question, "Which is the greatest commandment in the law?" saying, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first great commandment; and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

As therefore the law and the prophets hang, or depend, upon these two great commandments for their existence, and as the second commandment grows out of the first, and, further, as to love God is really to know him, it is perfectly plain that before a person can obey one single precept of Jehovah he must know him.

By this too we may learn that all God's commandments, finding their source in the love of God, are themselves love, are given in love, and therefore constitute the "law of love" because "God is love."

Now, as certainly as he who knows God loves God, so certainly will he keep the commandments of God. "For this is the love of God that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous." 1 John 5:3. The same truth is expressed in Romans 13:10, "Love is the fulfilling of the law."

Let it be clearly understood that love is not a substitute for obedience to the law of God as many people imagine, but love is itself obedience to the law. There can be no obedience where there is no love; consequently when one disobeys any of God's commandments it is evidence that he does not love God. Now it is true that "we love because he first loved us." 1 John 4:19, R. V. Through what means was it possible for man to learn that God loved him, so that man could love back?

Mankind, through sin, lost the knowledge of God. Not that he ceased to know that a Supreme Being existed, but he ceased to know God as he really is. Sin has so distorted the mind of man that he cannot think straight, so far as the true knowledge of God is concerned, and so instead of having a correct conception as to the character of God, he has quite the reverse. Nor is this all. Sin is so deceitful that not only does it prevent one having a just conception of God, but it deceives the sinner in regard to its own nature, so that instead of his seeing that sin is "exceeding sinful" he regards it as being quite the reverse; he does not realize that sin is death. Rom. 6:23.

How, then, under these circumstances, can God give the sinner the truth so that he will know that God is love? Evidently by revealing himself as he really is. In no other way, than as he really is, could God reveal himself. God is truth, and he could not appear to be anything different from what he is. In thus revealing himself, God would also show what sin really is—simply death. But if that is all that would be accomplished by God's revelation of himself, it would not amount to anything so far as the sinner is concerned, excepting that it would show him how hopeless his condition is, and God himself would derive no particular benefit. There would be no love in that.

But God is love; therefore, in revealing himself to the sinner, and showing him the true nature of sin, God would show him that there is a remedy for sin—for death. It will be obvious that the only remedy for death is life. But no created being has life in himself; God only has that. Therefore, the only remedy for sin and death is the life of God—in other words, God himself, for you cannot separate the life of God from God. He, then, would reveal himself to the sinner to the extent that he would give his life—himself—that he would die for the sinner, and so death—mortality—would be swallowed up by his life. 2 Cor. 5:4; 1 Cor. 15:54. That is love.

"Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us." This he did in Jesus Christ, and in this way he commends his love to us; for thus it is written, "God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5:8. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." And thus "we have known and believed the love that God hath to us." "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life."

Thus through Christ only can we know God; through him only can we know love; therefore through him only can we love God and our fellow-man. And as love is the fulfilling of the law,—as "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments," so it is the truth, a truth beyond the possibility of successful contradiction, that only through Jesus Christ can a soul obey a single commandment of God; and further it is the truth, also beyond the possibility of contradiction, that he who accepts Jesus Christ, not only can, but will keep all the commandments of God. He will keep the fourth as willingly as he will the other commandments.

Would the society of Christian Endeavorers, the American Sabbath Union, the W. T. C. U., and all other organizations who have the same object in view, have the people of this country keep the Sabbath? Then let them preach Christ and him crucified, and their efforts will be successful. Let them preach the love of God, and it will be found that this is not only the strongest power, but the only power by which to secure obedience to the law of the Sabbath, or any other divine command.

AMONG a band of exiled Russian Protestants whose escape from the Caucasus was reported recently in the London papers, was an observer of the seventh-day Sabbath. For such, bonds await in other lands than Russia; and so, when they had escaped to Roumania, writes a friend from that district, "they had hardly set foot in a free land, and mentioned the 'glad tidings' in a Russian settlement there, when a Russian priest had our brother arrested on the charge of being a Russian spy."

There is as much opposition to the keeping of God's commandments to-day as there ever was in the past.

Some Thoughts Suggested by Decoration Day.

WHILE the flowers are still fresh on the graves of our honored dead, let us pause and think. We are called a "Christian nation," and yet this nation quarreled, and in that quarrel a million men were maimed, or lost their health or lives.

What a comment on the "Christianity" of this "Christian nation" to say that the questions of '61 could not be settled without murdering or maiming a million men, and bringing want and wretchedness or woe and widowhood into a million homes!

One would think that a look at the slabs which mark the resting places of the brave husbands, fathers and sons who were buried in that baptism of blood, would cause men to hate the licensed murderer, called War, and shudder at the sight of his marching columns. But no; never has there been such a tendency toward militarism as there is to-day. It is not confined to the element which always selects war by choice as a life occupation, but is all-pervading.

The children of the public school, the children of the private school, and the children of the Sunday school, Protestant and Catholic, are being trained in the arts of war. In New York City alone there is an army of 25,000 school boys. On Grant memorial day a part of this army marched in the great parade carrying their muskets, with flags on which were inscribed the contradictory words "we are for peace." While one could but wonder at the sight of this military tendency on the part of the public school in a nation whose boast has been that its strength lay in justice and intelligence and not in force of arms, yet that wonder changed to amazement when the bristling bayonets of the church armies passed by. Among them were the Baptist Boys' Brigade, Episcopal Church Temperance Legion, Hebrew Orphan Asylum Cadets, St. Francis Xavier (Jesuit) Cadets, Our Lady of Sorrows (Catholic) Cadets, etc., etc.

Turning to the "Christian nations" of Europe we find the situation appalling. More than twenty-one millions of trained soldiers stand ready to march into the battle of Armageddon and empty their veins into its crimson flood. Sea and strait, harbor and river, groan beneath a navy numbering more than two thousand ships and carrying more than twenty thousand guns.* All of this tremendous armament is maintained by "Christian nations," not to defend themselves against the heathen, but against each other in their covetous scramble for each other's territory and for the territory of the heathen. The cost of all this—more than nine hundred million dollars†—is wrung from the people by taxation. The poor man's bread must be divided with the government to make and maintain this murder machinery before he divides it with his children. As a result the masses are growing hungry and restless. The struggle for bread is growing fiercer every hour, and pinching poverty is eclipsing all thoughts of the Prince of Peace.

A wierd and touching incident occurred recently illustrating this fact. It was night in the city of Bethlehem, Pa.,—not "Bethlehem," the birthplace of the Prince of Peace. A stranger was passing along its streets, when suddenly church bells began to ring and whistles to scream. What could it mean? Did it announce some great calamity? Was the city on fire? Oh no. Were the church bells ringing the glad news of the coming of the Prince of Peace or of some great conquest for his kingdom over the passions of men? No, no; the bells of Bethlehem ring out on the silent air no such joyful tidings. They are ringing with hungry tones the announcement that the Bethlehem Iron Co. has just been awarded the contract for forging the armor plate for Russia's great war ships. Men have long been out of employment. Poverty and suffering have resulted. Now they will have work and bread. No matter though it be to make engines of war which shall pour from their fiery throats shot and shell into the breasts of their fellow-men. Now they can eat and drink. No matter though they do eat and drink the flesh and blood of their fellows, —let the bells of Bethlehem ring.

* These figures were computed by Lieut. W. R. Hamilton, Fifth Artillery, U. S. Army, for the "World Almanac and Cyclopaedia (1897)" from the latest official reports on file at the War Department, December, 1896. Inasmuch as military training is compulsory in nearly all European countries, a large proportion of the male citizens has seen military service, thus making the total war strength of the "Christian nations" of Europe, in a case of last resort, more than forty millions of men.

† These figures are computed from the "Statesman's Year Book (1897)" published by McMillan & Co., London and New York. These 900 millions do not include the value of the time of those who are taken from productive industries at the very prime of life and compelled to give from three to five years to military service. This would swell Europe's "Christian nation" yearly war tax to billions of dollars.

These are the signs of the times. And with these awful facts staring us in the face, men will tell us that we are in the dawning of the millennium. That though the Prince of Peace has not yet returned, these are the days of peace.

To those who are disposed to regard these things with complacency we recommend a careful reading of the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory."

"But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief."

Pessimist! some one will say. Yes, pessimist as regards the world in its mad rush for pleasure, pelf and power; but an optimist as regards God's power to accomplish his purposes concerning the world. It is his article on the next page from the pen of Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, Ex-secretary of State, and late ambassador to England. "There is no thoughtful man," says Mr. Bayard, "who is not anxiously questioning in his heart, what does all this preparation portend." It is only the thoughtless man who is not stirred by these facts. It is only those who fail to discern the signs of the times who cry peace and safety at such a time as this.

Reader, can ye not discern the signs of the times? These are not days of peace, but of plague and poverty and passion, of "distress of nations; men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming upon the earth. . . . Then shall they see the purpose to save such as seek salvation and submit to his will. He could not save more without destroying man's free will. "Whosoever will let him come."

Those who have built their hopes on a millennium of peace and righteousness before the return of the Prince of Peace, have built upon the sand. God's Word furnishes no foundation for such a hope.

"Denying ungodliness and worldly lust, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." This is the Christian's hope. To this he looks for the end of strife and war.

Individual Liberty.*

By Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, Ex-Secretary of State, and late Ambassador to England.

NEVER since the world was peopled has mankind stood in such anxious expectancy, awaiting the outcome of the immediate future, as in these closing years of the nineteenth century. Men are wistfully striving to peer through the portals of the year 1900—marvelling as the effect and forces of applied science are unfolded to our comprehension, and discovery moves on, each invention leading in another, in stately procession; we, all the while, wrapped in wonder, are straining in hope and fear to catch the coming word, and to comprehend its import.

Never was speculation so rife, never was the field of human observation so unobstructed and expanded, nor the ascertainment and sifting of facts so facile. Never were opinions more diverse, nor was it ever so obviously important to detect and assert the philosophical principle, in recognition and obedience to which, the lucidus ordo of human government may be preserved and kept in view, and the retrocession of mankind prevented.

HON. THOMAS F. BAYARD.

At no stage of history was it more important to call to mind the great principle that government is a means, not an end, and is instituted to maintain those general liberties which are essential for human happiness and progress.

GREAT MOVEMENT OF UNREST.

There is a deep movement of unrest in the breasts of men, and the forces of society move in strong and variant currents—the concentrated weight of armed repression and the upheavals of popular discontent are alike plainly discernable.

In some countries consolidation of empire progresses remarkably and impressively—in others disintegration is equally signified. Old dynasties, in sorrowful impotency, are drifting helplessly on the surface of events, or sinking palpably and hopelessly into the sea of time, which threatens soon to engulf them, and even the memories of their unproductive civilization—the roots of which have dried up and lost the principle of growth.

Other nations appear glowing, sanguine, self-confidence, in lusty vigor and verility, springing forward and upward as though vivified by an elixir vitæ, which expels fear and feebleness, and sends strength and hope tingling through every fibre.

In some nations the hand of autocratic power and unequal privilege appears to tighten upon society, and if now and then it seems to relax its hold, it is only to extend and fasten more securely its grip upon the masses over whom it bears sway.

In others, the progress of the doctrine and spirit of democracy widens the base of power, and calls into political consolidation the great body of the inhabitants, depositing the ultimate power of decision in a majority of the members.

Never were the destructive forces of warfare marshalled in such impressive array as we see them to-day—never before did earth shake under the measured tread of so many men armed and prepared to be armed—never in history were weapons so lethal, missiles so mighty, and explosives so terrific and powerful, or in hands so carefully drilled and instructed in their employment—never were the preparations for war on land and sea comparable in scale and efficiency, to those of the present day.

Contemplating all these terrific forces, there is no thoughtful man who is not anxiously questioning his heart, What does all this preparation portend? What is to be the result to the civilization and progress of the human race of the conflict of such forces, and the changes it may at any moment create?

WEIGHT OF TAXATION GROWING.

But this disposition to an exaggerated and ever-increasing militarism is necessarily accompanied by grievous pecuniary burdens; the weight of taxation is growing fearfully, and as men are withdrawn from productive industries and remunerative pursuits, the great engine of the State, the sovereign power of taxation, is put in motion everywhere and in every shape to gather revenues to support the vast expenditures.

The forces of productive industry were never so great, and the burdens upon their products were never so heavy. Combination and consolidation to resist injustice and competition for success have gradually arrayed capital and labor in opposite camps, in which the power of each is separately and too often adversely organized, and serious conflicts have occurred, and conflicts more serious are impending, which threaten disaster to that tranquility and good order of the State, which are essential not only for its progress, but for the maintenance of the civilization to which the world has attained.

In this threatened conflict and confusion of the forces of society, and seeking the origin of that free government which is essential for happiness and progress, and how it shall be perpetuated, I ask, What is its germ? What is the seed from which human liberty springs? and which must never be overlooked, but renewed, and replanted and protected as the generations of men pass away and their successors fill their places?

When I contemplate the autocratic power which is exercised in some countries to-day, and behold the organized and associated powers of wealth and numbers welded in such an overwhelming phalanx in others, I ask, Where is the safety and personal freedom of the individual? How is it to be guarded and secured? For the freedom of its individual members is the essential basis of the freedom of the State. The movement of the day, sometimes open, sometimes concealed in the robes of philanthropy and paternalism, but more often discernable in policies purely selfish, is toward State Socialism, as an opposing force to Autocracy. But either is Despotism, and fatal to that individual freedom of man's mind and soul which is the instrumentality by which the world, under the very laws of its origin and progress, has been raised from brutality and barbarism to its present standard of civilization.

growth and progress; of adaptation to those advances and improvements which demand the open mind, the complete liberty of human faculties, first for their discovery, and after that for their reception and assimilation? Is there not cause to fear lest between the upper and the nether millstones of the twin despotisms, military absolutism and socialistic tyranny, the freedom of the individual may be ground to death?

News, Notes, and Comment.

I NOTE that the "A. P. A." is taking an active part in supporting certain public school managers who countenance the reading of the Bible in the establishments under their charge, in spite of the protests of many parents. This matter has frequently led to bitter disputes, and the fate of parties and of statesmen has sometimes hung on its settlement. In Canada the public school and its relations to religion have been discussed with an intensity of feeling fortunately—so far—undeveloped among our people. Nevertheless, every now and then, some very harsh language is indulged in by our disputants, and compromises are, as usual, perfectly satisfactory to nobody. The thing is deplorable; but it is, to some extent inevitable, from the very nature and existence of the public schools.

UNQUESTIONABLY, the undertaking of the work of education by the State involves the surrender of the great doctrine that the function of Heating Armor Plate, Bethlehem Iron Works.

From Scientific American, by permission.

These problems of society rise on every side, and the peace and order of the world are seriously menaced.

WHAT BECOMES OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

The centripetal forces seem to move almost irresistibly towards consolidation and centralization, and in the presence of such exaggerated militarism, with its stupendous powers, with the vast plutocratic combinations of incorporated wealth and capital so closely in alliance; with the widespread national and international popular organizations of labor, with their solidified, massed, numerical force, one asks, with just alarm, What is to become of the individual—the freeman, the essential unit of a society that hopes to retain the principle of civil government is police and police alone. Education is a paternal duty; the State that undertakes it in so far assumes the position of a natural parent—it adopts paternalism into its system of administration. Whether this be a good thing to do or not, the public school is so firmly rooted in the affections of the American people that any attempt to dislodge it would be vain, and no shorter cut to unpopularity can easily be found than any serious criticism or questions on the subject. The tendency is rather to enlarge than to curtail the activities of the body politic in this direction, and no matter how heavy the taxes thus become, they are always cheerfully borne.

BUT, like all other forms of activity, for good or for evil, the work of State education brings with it certain difficulties and perplexities of its own. Always the point is presented—how much of the father's primary duty in the way of education shall the State take upon itself? There is physical punishment, for instance. Conceding its advisability, under any circumstances, shall a public school teacher administer corporal chastisement in person, or merely advise the child's father to do so? There are scores of little matters of personal habit, cleanliness, politeness, etc., etc., which are important parts of a child's education, and respecting which the provinces of parent and teacher are not by any means sharply defined as to their boundaries. Where the relation is merely between two private citizens, how they agree on its establishment, how they modify its incidents, when or why they sever it, concerns no one but themselves. But make the teacher an officer of the State, and you at once convert every detail of his work with every pupil into a thing of public concern, in which the entire community is interested. The greatest embarrassment in this direction grows out of the divergence of religions among the people.

* * *

It is perfectly true that religion is a part, and a very important part of a child's education. But it by no means follows that he should receive this particular part at a public school. The parochial school, it is well understood, in advance, discharges this parental function. It operates under the guidance and direction of a priest or preacher, selected by the parents, accepting their faith, professing and inculcating their creed. Those who send their young to such an institution do so with the desire and upon the condition that certain dogmas shall be taught, along with the sciences, the mathematics and the classics. The teaching is uniform, and acceptable to all alike. But the very moment that you invite the members of more than one sect or denomination to send their children to the same school, then uniformity of instruction in religious matters becomes impossible, without doing violence to the religious faith and sentiments of some one.

* * *

In this, as in all other departments of the world of thought, there is plenty of conscious, as well as of unconscious cant. People play upon the word "instruction;" they even try to tamper with the sacred name of religion. They say they do not want religious instruction; all they want, forsooth, is prayers and Bible reading. But this is wicked trifling with truth and the essence of reality. Instruction is not necessarily given as such. It is given by example—by action. If a teacher were to read out every morning to his class three or four pages of "Tom" Paine's "Age of Reason," without comment, would not his scholars conclude, and rightly conclude, that he accepted the views of that author, and deemed it advisable for them to do the same? If he read it privately, and they detected him in so doing, would they not give to what they secretly perused in the volume all the weight of his personal authority and influence over them?

How does it affect the principle at stake, that either the Bible or the "Age of Reason" is read "without comment"? The Bible is a sacred book. It is partly made up, it is true, of mere historical narration. But it is not read by any but great scholars for its history. It is read and loved by those who choose to read and love it because of what they believe to be its divine inspiration. It is studied because of its assumed authority as an exponent of a religious system, or cult. Those who so treasure it do not desire that it should be read or studied for any other reason, or in any other light, in schools, or anywhere else. Its reading must necessarily be recognized by the scholars as a public proclamation of their teacher that he individually believes in its sacred character, and would have them do so—that he gathers his faith from its pages, and would have them do the same. None of the advocates of the Bible in the public schools would busy themselves in the least about the matter, if they did not build upon this very hope and expectation.

* * *

THE character of the Bible, as a sacred book, renders it impossible that it should be used in a school for any other purpose than to commend a certain form or type of religion to the scholars. This being the case, it is obvious that its use in a public school embodies that union of Church and State against which it is the main purpose of these humble paragraphs to protest most earnestly. Few people stop to think how many points of a purely religious nature are necessarily assumed and preached by the mere act of reading the Bible in a school, as it can only be read—in its sacred character. Is there a Deity? Has he made a special "revelation" to man? Have we here the only such revelation ever made, and do these pages contain it all? And so forth, and so on. Concerning all such topics, there be many minds among men. Differences minute and innumerable exist, and all the differences are about religion, and nothing else in the world. To decide any one of them for the young is to teach and preach religion. To decide any one of them by reading the Bible in the public schools is to effectuate pro tanto a union of Church and State.

* * *

BUT I hear a great cry over "godless education." It is a pretty phrase enough. And men are often guided and governed by phrases. I knew a man once who invented a liniment. He called it, let us say, "Socrates' Grecian Pain-Killer," and nobody would buy a bottle. Comparatively a small number of his neighbors, you see, had ever heard of Socrates; and not one of them cared anything for the Greeks, at that time, because the enlightened press had not yet told them what magnificent disseminators of the gospel of truth and love those lamb-like creatures were. There came into contact with this man another, who invented not, but had analyzed and assayed his fellows. The two formed a partnership; the last mentioned at once changed the name of the liniment. He called it, let us say again, "St. Patrick's Salvation Ointment." He never even suggested any change in the formula. But, in a few years, those partners were wealthy.

* * *

Thus are men swayed by words. And when you talk about "godless education," you seem to many to make a great point for the Bible in the public schools. But, in fact, the phrase is utterly irrelevant. What is the trouble about a "godless education," so far as a school is concerned? The school is established to teach things of this world, not of the next. What has "godliness" to do with the Latin grammar? In what different way would a godly man explain the solution of a problem in quadratic equations, from the way in which an ungodly man would elucidate the same subject? What is the distinction between a godly and an ungodly map of the United States?

* * *

BUT religion is an important part of education. True, but it is not all of education; nor is it a part with which any but a parochial school has anything to do. The origin of the parochial school is easy enough to trace. It originated in the selfishness and laziness of parents. The parent's bounden duty to inculcate in the mind of his growing child the truths of religion, the obligation and the joy of a religious life, is shifted on the shoulders of the clerical master of a parochial school. It is a convenient arrangement, and saves a world of trouble to a really conscientious parent. When such a pious person turns his eyes public school-ward, it seems hard to him that he cannot by its means relieve himself of as much responsibility as he can get rid of through the instrumentality of a parochial school, which costs him a good deal more money than the other. If the Bible is read to his boy at school, then he can spend the evening with the newspaper instead of pondering with the little fellow over the Sermon on the Mount, and be easy.

* * *

A PROMINENT actor preached in a Western pulpit some days ago, and took occasion to say that if there were no vicious audiences there would be no vicious plays. This is true enough, but it hardly constitutes an excuse for those who produce vicious plays. That men have vices is no justification for those who make a living by pandering to them. While there are many clean and beautiful plays, and many honest, upright men and women, no doubt, upon the stage, it is a fact, unless the philosophers of all the ages are wrong, that the moral atmosphere of the play house is distinctly worse than that of the community at large. Perhaps nobody is to blame for this in particular; it may be that, humanly speaking, it is the unpreventable result of the environment.

* * *

THE actor has no home, and no home life for the greater part of the year. He is a wanderer among men. He has no social environment to brace him up on every side. He is forced to keep bad hours, and to live with more or less irregularity. Moreover, there is probably something that tends, at any rate, to weaken the ties of self-respect in his business. To be always "personating"—to live in an artificial world, night after night—to seek applause by the very skill with which you bury yourself from sight, and feign emotions which you do not feel—to cater constantly to the many headed, the thoughtless, the butterflies of society—these things may be considered as drawbacks to the higher life and the ideal moral state of mind.

Sabbath-Keepers Persecuted in Delaware.

Cheswold, Del., May 21st, 1897.

EDITOR AMERICAN SENTINEL:—

Brethren Leslie Munce and Robert Williams will spend Sabbath, May 22, behind the cold bars of a prison cell, because they choose to serve God rather than man.

The particulars of the case are as follows:—

Mr. J. Thompson, justice of peace at Cheswold, Del., called Brother Leslie Munce at the hour for trial and said: "Leslie Munce, you are charged with doing work on the 25th day of April, 1897, the sabbath day. What have you got to say?"

Bro. Munce: "Not guilty."

"Robert Williams, you are charged with a like offense, what do you say?"

Robt. Williams: "Not guilty."

Mr. John Carney was the first witness for the prosecution.

Justice, to Mr. Carney: "Now, John, tell us what you know about this case. Did you see Leslie Munce doing work on the 25th day of April last, the sabbath day?"

Carney: "Yes, sir; on the 25th day of last April I saw Leslie Munce go along the road with a grubbing hoe on his shoulder going toward the church, and he went to the church and stayed a while and came back and went over in the field and went to digging up sprouts; and this man, Robert Williams, picked them up and carried them to the woods and threw them in the woods. And that, sir, is what I saw him do."

Justice, to Maud Carter (second witness): "Tell us what you know about this case of Leslie Munce and Robert Williams. Did you see them doing work on the sabbath day?"

Maud Carter: "Yes, sir, I did see Leslie Munce digging up bushes. I was out to Uncle Will Morgan's and I saw Leslie Munce grubbing up bushes and Robert Williams picking them up and throwing them in the woods. That, sir, is all."

Justice: "Now, Leslie Munce, what do you say?"

Leslie Munce: "Squire, will you allow me to ask the witnesses a few questions?"

Justice: "Yes; I forgot that."

Leslie Munce: "Mr. John Carney, you are the first witness. You say you saw me digging up bushes on the sabbath day."

Witness: "Yes; I did."

Munce: "John, can you tell me which day is the Sabbath day?"

Witness (confused): "Well, I did; we take Sunday; it was on the 25th of April."

Justice: "That won't do; it is contempt of court. We take the first day for the Sabbath, and it is indorsed by the laws of this State and the United States and the civilized world over, as the Sabbath. So your argument won't do."

Munce: "Squire, you say that Sunday is the first day of the week."

Justice: "Yes."

Munce: "The Bible says the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

Justice: "Stop; we don't want the Bible; that won't do; and if you don't stop I will fine you for contempt of court. The Bible is not what we want, it is the law."

Munce: "Well, Squire, can't you allow the evidence of the Bible in this matter?"

Justice: "No; the Bible is not the thing; it is the law we want."

Munce: "Is not that a Bible you swore the witnesses on?"

Justice: "Yes."

Munce: "How is it, Squire, you will not take the testimony of these witnesses unless they swear by God's Word that what they say is truth? If they can be allowed these oaths by God's word, why not accept my statements concerning the Sabbath by God's word?"

Justice: "That will do; I don't want any more. You have got to stop."

Munce: "All right, Squire; I will ask the other witness a question. Maud, why did you seek to do me a wrong?"

Maud Carter: "I wanted to show you what the law could do with you."

Justice (to second witness): "That will do, now; I want you to stop where you are and don't say any more."

Justice to Leslie Munce: "I fine you $4 and costs, amounting to $2.19, making $6.19. And Robert Williams, you are fined with the same amount, making $12.38 in all."

Constable to Munce: "Leslie Munce, what are you going to do?"

Munce: "It is for you and the Squire to say what you are going to do."

Justice: "Are you going to pay the fine?"

Munce: "No; I have done no one any harm, and I cannot pay anything."

So the constable went and got his horse and wagon, and Brothers Munce and Williams got in on the rear seat with the constable in front, and the people seemed to think they were two as harmless criminals as could have been seen.

So Brothers Munce and Williams spent their Sabbath in Dover Jail. But Brother Munce said he never spent a better Sabbath in his life. The Lord was with him, and he never realized the need of the Saviour as at that time, and everything went as pleasant as could be. The hardened criminals seemed to drink in the Word of God like water as they had never had the Bible read to them in that light. Brother Munce had opportunity to give away some tracts and to talk some in favor of the truth. He was in jail only twenty-four hours. Those hardened criminals made him promise them he would come again and bring them some reading matter and read to them. We can accomplish wonders if we will only be led by the Spirit of God.

So we want to say, as the great Teacher said, "We come to do Thy will, O God, for Thy law is within our hearts." And the prospect is that if we continue to keep this law of God there will be more of us to go to jail soon.

The spirit of persecution seems to be stalking at large at present. Those who hate us are taking pains to spy out our liberty, and some of the lower class say they will give in all they see at work on Sunday, both men and women.

FRED H. SEENEY.

By their action in the case of the Rev. W. H. Cossum, who criticised the acceptance by the Baptist Mission Board of a bequest of $250,000 from a well known millionaire, the Board seem to have put a peculiar interpretation upon the scripture that "charity covereth a multitude of sins."

Forty years the Lord led and fed his people in the wilderness.

All this time he was teaching them the way of allegiance to himself—the way of faith.

This he did in order that his purpose might be fulfilled through them in the land whither they were going to possess it.

At the end of the forty years they were encamped in the plain of Moab, opposite to Jericho, preparatory to entering the land of their possession.

While there encamped the will of God concerning them was declared by an irresistible inspiration upon the prophet Baalam, and in words of instruction to his people for all time.

And the words are these: "LO, THE PEOPLE SHALL DWELL ALONE, AND SHALL NOT BE RECKONED AMONG THE NATIONS."

At that time the Lord's people composed "the church in the wilderness" (Acts 7:38); and in thus declaring that they should dwell alone and not be reckoned among the nations, he plainly declared his will that his church should be forever separated from every State and nation on the earth.

God never intended that his people should be formed into a kingdom, or State, or government, like the people of this world; nor that they should in any way be connected with any kingdom, or State, or government, of this world.

They were not to be like the nations or the people around them. They were to be separated unto God "from all the people that were upon the face of the earth." The people were to dwell alone, and were not to be reckoned among the nations.

Their government was to be a Theocracy pure and simple—God their only king, their only Ruler, their only Lawgiver. It was indeed to be a church organization, beginning with the organization of the church in the wilderness; and was to be separated from every idea of a State. The system formed in the wilderness through Moses, was to continue in Canaan; and was intended to be perpetual.

"The government of Israel was administered in the name and by the authority of Jehovah. The work of Moses, of the seventy elders, of the rulers and judges, was simply to enforce the laws that God had given. They had no authority to legislate for the nation." For God had declared plainly: "Ye shall not add unto the word which I commanded you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it."

Thus the principles of their government were solely those of a pure Theocracy. And such "was and continued to be the condition of Israel's existence as a nation." In any government it is only loyalty to the principles of the government, on the part of its citizens, that can make it a success. Consequently, on the part of Israel, it was only loyalty to the principles of a pure Theocracy,—God their only King, their only Ruler, their only Lawgiver—that could possibly make that government a success.

But loyalty to these principles demanded that each one of the people should constantly recognize and court the abiding presence of God with him as the sole King, Ruler, and Lawgiver, in all the conduct of his daily life. Yet it is "by faith" that God dwells in the heart and rules in the life. And "without faith it is impossible to please him." Therefore the existence of the original government of Israel, and the existence of Israel as a nation, depended upon a living, abiding faith in God, on the part of the people of Israel.

And just here, the only point where Israel could fail, Israel failed. The people did not abide in faith. They did not remain loyal to God as their King. "And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the Lord, died, being an hundred and ten years old. . . . And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers: and there arose another generation after them, which knew not the Lord, nor yet the works which he had done for Israel.

"And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim: and they forsook the Lord God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people, that were round about them, and bowed themselves unto them, and provoked the Lord to anger. And they forsook the Lord, and served Baal and Ash-taroath."

Then all the evils that came upon them only as the result of their apostasy and idolatry, they charged back upon the government of God. In their unbelief and apostasy, they could see in the continued raids of the heathen, by which their country was sacked, and themselves were oppressed, only evidence that for all practical purposes the government of God had failed.

They therefore reached the conclusion "that in order to maintain their standing among the nations, the tribes must be united under a strong central government. As they departed from obedience to God's law, they desired to be freed from the rule of their divine Sovereign; and thus the demand for a monarchy became widespread throughout Israel." Accordingly, they said to Samuel, "Make us a king to judge us, like all the nations."

As their hearts were fully set on having a king like all the nations; and as practically they were much like all the nations anyhow; the best thing the Lord could do for them was to let them have their king. Nevertheless he said to Samuel, "Protest solemnly unto them."

Samuel did so, but still they insisted "Nay; but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles for us."

And of it all the Lord said to Samuel, "They have not rejected thee; but THEY HAVE REJECTED ME, that I should not reign over them." And Samuel said to them, "YE HAVE THIS DAY REJECTED YOUR GOD . . . and have said unto him, Nay; but set a king over us."

It was the same story of Babylon, Assyria, and Egypt, over again. When they knew God they glorified him not as God. And as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, the arch-deceiver seduced them into idolatry, and from idolatry into monarchy, in order that he might gain supremacy over them, and by worldly influence entice them, or by force prohibit them, from the service of God.

It was to save them from all this that the Lord had said of them, "The people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations."

If they had remained faithful to this principle, there never would have been amongst Israel a State or a kingdom.

Therefore, in announcing this principle, God intended forever that they should be completely separated from any such thing as a State or kingdom on the earth.

And as when that word was spoken they were "the church," it is absolutely certain that in announcing that principle, God intended to teach them and all people forever that his plainly declared will is that there shall be a complete separation between his church and every State or kingdom on the earth: that there shall never be any connection between his religion and any State or kingdom in the world.

And further: As that people were then the church; and as the Lord said they rejected him when they formed that State and kingdom; it is perfectly plain by the word of the Lord that whenever the church forms any connection with any State or kingdom on the earth, in the very doing of it she rejects God.

And from ancient time all this was written for the admonition of those upon whom the ends of the world are come. Will the people to-day be admonished by it?

GREAT BRITAIN'S interest in the cause of international arbitration is indicated, it is said, by an appropriation for the present year of $109,190,000 for the construction of marine engines of war.

The Mission of the American Sentinel.

THE AMERICAN SENTINEL stands in defense of a principle, and that is why the paper exists. From the day it was established it has been an uncompromising advocate of the absolute separation of religion from the State, not in name only, but in fact. This is a question that concerns every intelligent person in every land under the sun.

Government and religion are both essential, but the spheres of action of each are sharply circumscribed. One presides over the realm of conscience, taking cognizance of the thoughts and intents of the heart; the other deals with overt acts, beyond which it cannot go. One leads the individual to do right because it is right, the other restrains him from evil through fear of punishment or hope of reward.

Every individual is endowed by the Creator with certain inalienable rights. Government is simply a compact entered into whereby the united strength of the majority is exercised in the maintenance of these rights against the encroachments of selfishness and greed. One of these rights is the freedom to worship or not to worship God, according to the dictates of conscience. Jesus Christ, the author of Christianity, gave this liberty of thought and action to all his followers; but this privilege many who have claimed to be his disciples, have refused to their fellows. They have read from his teachings, and from their interpretation of them have formulated a creed. Everything that disagrees with this is wrong, as they view it. Failing by argument to convince those who differ from them, they have sought to invoke the arm of the law to compel an outward acknowledgment under penalty of physical punishment. At best this can only make hypocrites, and a hypocrite is two-fold more the child of the evil one than the open opposer.

Now the point: The trend of passing events indicates that among many so-called Christians there is creeping in the idea that the civil law can be made an adjunct in the propagation of the gospel; and not in our own country alone is this true, but it is pervading Christian lands everywhere. Pride, worldliness and Pharisaism are fast coming into the churches, and just to the extent that the churches have lost the primitive power of the gospel in their work, just to that extent is there a clamoring for civil power to forward their ends, and the logical result of this is but one thing—persecution pure and simple to dissenters.

Against all this the SENTINEL raises a warning voice. There is no power under heaven to make men good at heart but the transforming power of Jesus Christ, and his kingdom is not of this world. His weapons are not carnal, but spiritual; love, not force. In the light of the past and of the sure word of prophecy, the SENTINEL beseeches the people everywhere to open their eyes and discern the signs of the times.

THE most practical education any person can receive is education of the conscience. He will have more use for this than for any other, and more momentous issues will hang on its decisions. The teacher in this education is the Holy Spirit, and the text-book is the Word of God.

Falling Back Upon Rome.

SPEAKING of a change of views recently experienced by a W. C. T. U. evangelist relative to the question of which day is the Sabbath, the N. Y. Christian Advocate, of May 6, says:—

“The question between those who observe Sunday as the Lord’s day and those who maintain that the only day to be observed as a sacred day is the seventh day, is a complex one, that the study of many years would not fully exhaust. There are some questions upon which practical wisdom for busy Christians is to follow the teachings of the Church in all matters that are not flatly and unmistakably contradictory to the Word of God.”

In other words, this question of which day is the Sabbath being so complex and difficult of solution, it is impracticable for the individual Christian to undertake it, and his proper course is to follow the teachings of the Church. This is the principle of popery, as straightly put as it would be by an acknowledged spokesman of Rome.

It sounds odd to hear this leading Methodist organ falling back upon this purely papal principle in defense of Protestant practice in the observance of the Sabbath. Yet, after all, it is not strange, but perfectly natural; for Protestant practice in this important matter, as generally observed, is not Protestant at all, but papal; that is, the observance of Sunday as a sacred day rests not upon the Word of God, but upon tradition and the precepts of “the Church”; and when the champions of Sunday observance find themselves under the necessity of defending it, they at once fall back upon the papal principle of directing conscience by the word of man, instead of the Word of God. Papal practice must be defended by papal principles.

APROPOS to the cry of “hard times” so much sounded by this “Christian nation,” are the following figures given by the Union Signal:—

“The people of this country expended last year $22,-000,000 for chewing gum; $400,000,000 for amusements; $600,000,000 for jewelry; $800,000,000 for tobacco; and $1,400,000,000 for strong drink.”

An Unchristian Petition.

AT a special meeting of the Charleston (S. C.) Ministerial Union, May 14, as reported in the Charleston News and Courier, the following petition to the Postmaster-General was presented and unanimously indorsed:—

“To the Hon. James A. Gary, Postmaster-General—

“Honored Sir: The Sunday railway train, by its ready and wide-extended inducement to travel, both for pleasure and business, is undoubtedly the most influential agency now undermining public reverence for the divinely appointed sabbath.

“The transportation of the mail, except in the vicinity of large cities, is the chief cause and support of the Sunday train.

“The great facilities for daily intercommunication by rail, telegraph and telephone leave no excuse for the Sunday mail as a necessity, a fact sustained by the diminished mail service and almost universal closing of post-offices in England and Canada.

“State legislation cannot stop United States mail trains, therefore the responsibility for Sunday mail service and largely for all Sunday travel rests solely upon the post-office department.

“If the United States Government, through you and your department, by the approval and direction of the President, would set the example of reverence for the Lord’s day by stopping the transmission of mails and closing all post offices on Sunday, it would evoke a divine blessing upon itself and the whole country; would teach a sublime lesson to the world; would confer a great boon upon thousands of its own and other officials and employes, and would put such a stamp of condemnation upon all acts of public desecration of the sabbath as would deter good citizens from their commission, and render all proper Sunday laws, State and municipal, easy of enforcement.

“We, therefore, do most earnestly but respectfully petition you, and through you his Excellency the President, to forbid the transmission of any mails on Sunday, and order the closing of all post-offices throughout the United States on that day.”

Let it be observed that this petition is avowedly in behalf of “the divinely-appointed sabbath.” It does not claim to speak for any "civil" institution. Also, that it asks the Government to "set the example of reverence for the Lord's day," and thus—as it says—"evoke a divine blessing upon itself and the whole country," and "put such a stamp of condemnation upon all acts of public desecration of the sabbath" as would give life to "all proper Sunday laws, State and municipal."

As the matter now stands, these State and municipal Sunday statutes are for the most part shorn of their intended force by their manifest hostility to the spirit of the Constitution, which declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The Postmaster-General is asked by this petition to take a step which will commit the Government to the recognition and enforcement of religion, and thus get over the objection offered by the Constitution.

All this is plain enough to the view of any person who will look at the facts; and that such undisguised Church and-State demands are being made upon the Government is a fact which should cause American citizens who love liberty and believe in the separation of Church and State, to do some serious thinking.

On the question of the danger of losing the Sabbath an exchange makes this pertinent comment: "'Our Sabbath in danger' is the note of alarm sounded by the clergy. The Sabbath will not be in danger so long as nobody is prohibited from keeping it. As for Sunday, the indications are that it will continue to recur once a week for some time to come."

A Menace to Liberty.

"OPEN the Convents," says the Michigan Christian Advocate, of May 22, in commenting upon the death of an unfortunate inmate of one of those institutions, while attempting to escape. The victim was a young woman twenty-two years of age, and her death resulted from injuries caused by leaping from a second-story window of the "Convent of the Good Shepherd," in Indianapolis, Ind. The Advocate says it is scandalous that such things can happen in "the land of the free."

It is very true that such happenings are altogether incompatible with the theory upon which this Government assumes to stand, and such involuntary servitude should be at once abolished by the strong arm of the law. To quote the Advocate's word, "Ecclesiastical prisons are not compatible with civil liberty. Barred doors, rusty keys, dark recesses, unscalable walls, mysterious secrecy, are forbidding enough under State auspices. . . . What was the American Government established for, anyway? If Spanish institutions are to be fostered and perpetuated here, Columbus might as well have refrained from his big discovery."

But what the liberty-loving people of this country need to realize is that more formidable than all the ecclesiastical prisons which Rome maintains, as a menace to American liberty, is the presence of Romish principles in the beliefs and practices of the American people. While these principles remain to enslave the understanding, there can be no safety for that personal liberty which is lost behind barred doors and unscalable walls.

THERE is reported to be a great surplus in the ministry of the Protestant church, no less than four hundred applications having been received for one pulpit in New York City. Nevertheless there is no surplus in the number who are preaching the glad tidings of salvation to sinners, or who are ministering to their unfortunate fellow-beings in the name of Jesus Christ.

Mr. Worldlyman's Advice to Preachers.

In the Herald and Presbyterian, of May 26, "Mr. Worldlyman" writes a "Letter to Preachers," which may explain why the Church is getting into such close touch with the world, and is striving so earnestly to get possession of worldly power. The letter runs as follows:—

"Don't preach first principles all the time. It may be a good sermon, old-fashioned, not up to the times. It is what the people do not care to hear. This humdrum of 'faith, repentance and baptism, and add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity,' is old, and sounds like fault-finding. We are none of us perfect, but we do not want to be told of it all the time. We are doing as well as we can, living about as well as most folks, and our church is as good as anybody's for all that I can see, and I don't know that it is any better. We can read about those things in the Bible if we want to. Give us something new and startling that will please and draw the crowd.

"Our preachers must not be, nor teach their congregations that they are to be, a peculiar people; but they must be like other folks. Just to think, the idea of being a peculiar people, a holy nation, a chosen generation, called out of darkness into light; a people of God, having obtained mercy, and abstaining from worldly lusts which war against the soul; speaking and living honestly, endeavoring to glorify God in our bodies and spirits, which are his. How absurd! How far behind the spirit of the age and the aspirations of the present time. How old-fogyish it looks and sounds. Why, the preacher of to-day must have some theatrical get-up about him. He must strike attitudes in his pulpit, instead of sin and spiritual wickedness in high places; use a few high-sounding words and phrases, such as 'We must be in touch all along the line;' 'The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.'

"Tell people something that interests them. If they hear a passage repeated that seems to justify them in something they want to do, it pleases them. 'Does it not say in the Bible there is a time to dance?' Get very much interested in anything that seems to favor them in the way they desire to go. Tell some witty story to cause a laugh, and you will take. Touch very lightly on Bible teachings and Bible principles, especially the teachings of Christ through his apostles. Talk about higher criticism and an educated ministry, and when you were in college; preach about this great universe, sun, moon and stars; come down to earth once in a while and talk about the wonderful inventions of men—what great things they are doing in these days of steam, telegraph, telephone and electricity.

"This is a great world and we are a great people. The Bible is a great book, wonderful, considering the age in which it was gotten up, but is hardly up to the times. Criticise it as the teachings of men, and when you find anything that does not just correspond with your views, just say: 'Paul was an old bachelor, and did not like the women any way, or had dyspepsia, and did not know what was the matter with him. Peter got the blues, and James had the gout.' Make it sound funny.

"What were Peter, Paul, James or John compared with the men who occupy the pulpits at the present day? Can not the people go to Christ to-day without their instruction—Christ and the Spirit, not the gospel? Smite your breast and cry, 'Christ within!' These men are good, no matter whether they have obeyed the gospel or not; they are honest and sincere, and it does not seem right to tell them they have not obeyed the Master. Preach a goody-goody kind of salvation that will please the people; leave the gospel of Christ and his salvation therein taught out of the question, and you may take the world, or at least the world will take you, in this craze of interdenominationalism, singing: 'The world for Christ, and Christ for the world, with the Christ left out.' "

The Outlook for General Disarmament.

"New York Observer." April 29.

WE fear that those of us who have been looking for the speedy disarmament of the nations, and the settlement of international difficulties by arbitration, are far in advance of the times. For if the present conduct of Greece, Turkey and Spain teaches any lesson at all, it is that the desire to fight is that which nations will sacrifice most to gratify, and the power to fight the last element of national life which they lose. Here are three nations practically bankrupt, and with every inducement to maintain peace and devote their energies to productive labor. Yet on a provocation to war, which with each could have been avoided by small compromises which would not have greatly affected national pride, they place on their frontiers within a few weeks, or send over sea, armies varying in number from 100,000 to 200,000 men. It is not true to say that this is the work of the governments alone, which regard themselves as trustees, and so must be keenly self-regarding as respects national honor. For the peoples are quite as ready to fight, and at the first summons forsake their avocations and join the colors, though they know that they will have nothing save gratification of the fighting instinct for their pay.

Baptist Principles vs. Sunday Laws.

From "Baptist Principles of Religious Liberty," by Geo. B. Wheeler.

1. SUNDAY laws had their origin in a union of Church and State.
2. They were enacted to enforce the observance of a church dogma.
3. They have been perpetuated by church influence, and are therefore religious in origin, nature, and object.
4. They are used to persecute conscientious dissenters.
5. They attempt to enforce a religious observance which pertains to the first table, contrary to Baptist principles.
6. They meddle with religion and matters of conscience contrary to the spirit of Christianity.
7. They were opposed by Roger Williams.
8. They discriminate in favor of the doctrine of one church and against the faith of another.
9. They have, between Sept. 29, 1885, and Dec. 31, 1896, imprisoned 41 conscientious Christians for a total of 1722 days.
10. They have driven 12 Christian men in the chain-gang of Tennessee for a total of 445 days.
11. They have been used by persons calling themselves Baptists, to imprison their dissenting Sabbatarian neighbors, and to drive them into the chain-gang.
12. These cruel persecutions have been defended and encouraged by papers bearing the Baptist name.
13. Sunday laws are not based by their advocates on the idea that one day in seven is needed for recreation from continuous toil, since Sunday-law advocates attempt to prohibit all innocent recreation on that day.
14. Sunday laws would be sumptuary laws, even if it could be proved that they were civil instead of religious, since they would attempt to dictate to the citizen when and how he should employ his time for his physical good.
15. Sunday laws and liquor laws are not alike, since the first seeks to protect the "holy day" from "desecration," while liquor laws seek to protect the man against his liquor-maddened fellowman.
16. Sunday laws attempt to compel men to act outwardly as though they believed the day holy, whether they do or not.
17. Sunday laws attempt to compel Seventh-day observers to treat Sunday with the same outward regard that they pay to the Sabbath of the Lord, thus compelling them to break down the distinction which the Lord commands men to make between the Sabbath and other days of the week.
18. Sunday laws therefore conflict with the conscientious convictions of seventh-day observers, just as laws requiring Baptists to sprinkle their children conflicted with the conscientious convictions of Baptists in the early days of New England.
18. Sunday-law advocates to-day declare that seventh-day observers are not persecuted when imprisoned for failure to observe Sunday, just as the persecutors of Baptists once declared that it was not persecution to imprison a Baptist for refusing to have his child sprinkled.

20. Sunday laws prohibit both work and recreation, thus compelling idleness which is productive of crime.

21. God commands cessation from work on the Sabbath, but this command contemplates a "holy" use of a "holy" day, which can only be secured by making the man holy—something which God can do, but which human law cannot accomplish.

22. Sunday laws are papal in principle in that they are a part of that policy which declares that the State should enforce conformity to church doctrines.

23. Baptists have always taught that Christianity was possessed of enough inherent power to stand without the support of human law; yea, even against it.

24. Agitation for Sunday legislation is increasing in the same proportion that the spiritual power of the church is decreasing,—a parallel to the condition of the popular church in the days of Constantine.

CONCERNING the necessity of individualism as the basis of true reformatory work, Mr. Charles Booth, of London, who has made a special study of the social and moral condition of the people in that city, testifies that "almost every social and economic question . . . derives its ultimate practical importance from a more widely spread and more human care for the individual," and that the hope of uplifting the fallen lies not in State enterprise or Collectivism, but in "the reform of the individual by the individual."

The Salvation Army Decision.

COMMANDER BOOTH-TUCKER, of the Salvation Army, has been convicted in a New York City court of maintaining a public nuisance and of keeping a disorderly house. The "disorderly house" in question is the Salvation Army headquarters in West Fourteenth St., New York City; and the "nuisance" consists of the protracted evening meetings regularly conducted there in the peculiar manner with which the "Army" have made the public familiar.

The "Commander" has issued a statement in which he denounces his conviction as being an invasion of liberty of conscience and an instance of flagrant persecution, without any warrant of law.

That the prosecutors in this case were actuated to some degree at least by malicious motives, seems evident from the nature of the charge which they have succeeded in substantiating in the lower court. The term "disorderly house" has acquired a definite meaning in the public mind which would be most untrue and slanderous as applied to the meeting hall of the Salvation Army.

Doubtless there is less disorder, even in the strictest sense of the term, in a meeting like those complained of than characterizes the all-night revels which are frequently to be noted as a feature of life in "high society."

THE N. Y. Christian Advocate, in making mention of the late report of the New York Sabbath Committee, says: "The efforts to maintain the civil Sunday cannot be understood apart from the labors of this committee. It is no exaggeration to state that whatever is preserved to us of order and Sabbath decorum in this city of New York is mainly due, under God, to the wisdom and energy of the New York Sabbath Committee."

It would have been much to the point if the Advocate had pointed out what logical connection there can be between God and a "Sabbath" committee, and the preservation of a "civil" Sunday.

A Religious Revolt in Canada.

CLERICAL despotism, combined with certain liberalizing influences which that despotism cannot shut out, is driving the people of Lower Canada into open religious revolt. What the poor people of that district have to submit to under the ecclesiastical regime which the Catholic Church has established, may be seen from the following quotation from the London (Ont.) Guardian:—

"It may not be known that according to Quebec law tithes are levied and collected in the same manner as the municipal tax. It often happens that in a given district the bishop decides that a new parish ought to be formed and a church built. He selects the plans and decides what the cost shall be. A rate is then struck, and men have been forced to mortgage their farms in order to meet their payments. The only way to escape is to abjure the church—a course which to the devout Romanist is mortal sin. He exposes his family to the persecution of his former co-religionists, and, of course, is deprived of the means of grace."

Such is the natural fruit of Rome's substitute for "the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free." Gal. 5:1.

THE Catholic Standard and Times, of May 15, makes mention of the recent rebellion of the Catholic members of the Ninth New York regiment against an order to attend religious service in Bloomingdale Reformed Church, New York City; in justification of which it says:—

"We believe there is no rule of the service compelling Catholics to attend a form of service offensive to their feelings and which, as individuals, they are prohibited by their own church under pain of sin from attending."

The Catholics were right in refusing to attend religious service at the dictation of the Government; and they would be equally right in refusing to do a religious act at the dictation of the church. In each case the dictation is that of man, and therefore essentially the same in character. The Government has as good right to compel the performance of a religious act as the church has to prohibit it.

The individual is responsible to God for the character of his actions. And when he submits to any human dictation in religion, whether from State or Church, he denies God's right to govern his actions by the divine principle of love, and to guide him by His Word and His Spirit.

Blue Laws in New Jersey.

"Catholic Standard and Times," May 22.

Laws that are deeply, darkly, but not beautifully blue still guard the coasts of New Jersey. It is not lawful there to try to avert danger to life and limb on the sabbath day, as the Erie Railroad people found out this week when they set a gang of men to work at a level crossing where the ground was found to be unsafe. The Mayor, the Aldermen, the Street Superintendent, and Mr. Dogberry were hurriedly got together, and the watch was directed to arrest all the "vagrom men" who had so outraged the feelings of New Jersey. This was done, and the laborers, having been brought before a justice, were let out on bail. It is entirely lawful to employ men in blue to enforce Blue Laws, but not to endeavor to prevent the town being painted red by some appalling catastrophe on a railway line. These good Jersey people read the Bible, but only, it appears, with one eye open.

A Prior "Christian Nation" Decision.

In a recent issue of the New York Journal, Mr. A. H. Lewis points out that the Supreme Court decision of February, 1892, that the United States is a Christian nation, is not the first decision made in a court of law on this subject, but that as far back as 1813 a decision was rendered which affirmed just the opposite of that of 1892. The circumstances are given as follows:—

"The time was 1813; the scene a town on the Barbary coast. An American privateer put in with three hapless British ships as prizes. The privateer turned over the three captured Britons to Mordecai Noah, afterward high sheriff of New York, and incidentally a newspaper partner of James Watson Webb—then American agent or consul-general to the Barbaries. The privateer wanted the prizes hawked off at public outcry; the Yankee captain hungered for the money he had fought for.

"But the British minister there stationed objected. He pulled a treaty on the Bey of Tunis, who was about to authorize the sale—the Bey, by the way, was to get 20 per cent. This treaty which had been made between the Bey and Great Britain distinctly recited that in event of a war between England and 'any other Christian nation' neither side should be permitted the Barbary ports as a theatre of sale for prizes.

"Noah admitted the treaty, but contended that the United States was not a 'Christian nation,' and didn't fall within the terms of the treaty. Noah showed the Bey our Constitution—our bill of rights. He invoked his olive-colored admiration to the fact that we had no national church, and that Christian, Jew (Noah was a Jew), and Mohammedan, were alike equally free in the enjoyment of every American privilege.

"Therefore, claimed Noah, the United States could not be called a 'Christian nation.' . . . It took the Bey ten minutes to decide with Noah. The United States was not a 'Christian nation.' The British minister was turned down, the prizes were sold, the wise Bey got his rake-off of 20 per cent. of that auction's proceeds, and the decision itself was never attacked. It stands to this day."

In 1813 the Constitution was better known and appreciated than it is to-day.

He Rode on Sunday.

New York "World," June 5.

At last the royal dictum of imperial New Jersey has gone forth. It is vicious and immoral to ride a bicycle on Sunday, unless to church.

Justice Collins, of Westfield, has said it.

A Westfield man was riding his wheel Sunday. He was run down and injured by another wheelman and brought suit before Justice Collins. The Justice, looking over his spectacles, shook his head.

"You were violating the State law in riding on Sunday for pleasure," said the Solomon. "You have no right to sue for damages." And the Westfield man went away and wept.

The Beauties of State Prayer.

PRESS dispatches from Springfield, Ill., under date of June 3, mentioned the following:—

"The chaplain of the House, the Rev. David G. Bradford, opened proceedings to-day in the State legislature with the following prayer:—

"Almighty God, we seek thy presence and blessing at the beginning of another day's diligent labor. Help us, we pray thee, in the discharge of this day's duties. Help these men to remember the poor, tax-burdened people of this great State.

"Contract, we pray thee, the capacious maw of the penal reformatory, charitable and educational institutions of Illinois. May they learn to be content with less money, and may we, who refuse to worship a golden calf, refuse also to worship gold in any other form.

"Forbid that any foreigner visiting our shores shall ever again have occasion to write:—

"Money, money, i, all their cry;
Money's the total sum.
Give us money or else we die,
Oh, let the money come."

"And we will ever give thee endless praise. Amen."
"This prayer was greeted with enthusiastic applause."

TRUMPET TONES

Numerical Growth and Spirituality of the Methodist Church.

By Bishop E. G. Andrews.

So far as numbers may give evidence there has been an almost steady progress. In 1872 there were 76 annual conferences; in 1897, 124; in 1872, in round numbers, and including those on trial, 9,000 effective ministers; now more than 14,000. In 1872 there were 1,400,000 church members and probationers; now there are 2,800,000; in 1872 less than 1,300,000 Sunday school pupils, now more than 2,600,000; in 1872, 13,000 churches, valued at $57,000,000; now 26,000, valued at $109,000,000, with a parallel increase in parsonages and their value.

Has the spiritual life of the Church kept pace with this increase of its numbers, property and gifts, with this extension of its area, with this multiplication of its agencies?

An easy optimism would fain answer, "Yes," but an easy optimism is not admissible in a time of transition like this, when a strenuous, perhaps a narrow, interpretation of the moral law is giving place in many quarters to a perilous laxity, as, for instance, touching Sabbath observances, amusements and selfish extravagances; when the Bible is undergoing a critical and in many cases an indifferent or hostile questioning.—From address delivered at the 25th anniversary of his ordination. New York Herald, May 24.

Without the Power.

By the late John McNeil.

It is positively painful to see the substitutes that are being tried to-day for the power of the Holy Ghost. Miserable substitutes are they all! One church is trying this plan, another that, and not one of them has found a new plan that is a permanent success. They are floundering, and some of them are foundering, and no wonder.

It will be no loss to the kingdom of God if churches which ignore the Holy Ghost should founder. Let us get back to Pentecostal methods. The trouble is that the churches have lost their way to that "upper room."—From "The Spirit-Filled Life." Copyrighted by Fleming H. Revell Co.

The Fourth Century Compared with the Nineteenth.

By the late A. J. Gordon, D. D.

UPON the enthronement of Constantine, the sentiment gradually changed, and the notion grew up that in order to convert the heathen it was necessary to conciliate them by conforming somewhat to their customs. The great Augustine also fell under this delusion, and gave his countenance to the engrafting into Christian worship of usages borrowed from the heathen. He said: "When peace was made (between the emperors of Rome and the church) the crowd of Gentiles who were anxious to embrace Christianity were deterred by this, that whereas they had been accustomed to pass the holidays in drunkenness and feasting before their idols, they could not easily consent to forego these most pernicious yet ancient pleasures. It seemed good then to our leaders to favor this part of their weakness, and for those festivals which they had relinquished, to substitute others in honor of the holy martyrs, which they might celebrate with similar luxury, though not with the same impiety." Here is the door opened through which the whole troop of abominations entered—saint worship, idol worship, virgin worship—till in an incredibly short time the church, which had gone forth to Christianize the heathen, was found to have become herself completely paganized.

The nineteenth century is presenting almost the exact facsimile of the fourth century in this particular. The notion having grown up that we must entertain men in order to win them to Christ, every invention for world-pleasing which human ingenuity can devise has been brought forward till the churches in multitudes of instances have been turned into play-houses, with theater-boards announcing the courses for the gay season, boldly set up at the doors; and there is hardly a carnal amusement that can be named, from billiards to dancing, which does not now find a nesting-place in the Christian sanctuary. Is it then phariseeism or pessimism to sound the note of alarm and to predict that at the present fearful rate of progress, the close of this decade may see the Protestant church as completely assimilated to nineteenth century secularism as the Roman Catholic church was assimilated to fourth century paganism?—*From "How Christ Came to Church." A. J. GORDON, D. D.

News, Notes, and Comment.

WHEN Mr. Blackstone wrote his famous "Commentaries," on English law, the union of Church and State in his country was much closer—much more of a reality, and less of a form—than it is now. The conception of mutual agency as a characteristic of the relation between the two was thoroughly implanted in the minds of the learned, as well as the illiterate. It was, indeed, a postulate of thought, everywhere, something not to be debated, or examined into, but to be accepted, as a matter of course, like the changes of the seasons, or the ebbing and flowing of the tides.

* * *

RARE is the mind that rises above the zeitgeist or "time-spirit" of its age. There was once a Man who did this, and they crucified Him. And years afterward, following His teaching and example, there was one Roger Williams, and him they banished into the wilderness, to starve or freeze, as the case might be. Perhaps we should not be too severe on Mr. Justice Blackstone, because to soar into a purer atmosphere of thought and perception than that by which he was immediately surrounded, was a task beyond his powers. None can deny his intellectual brilliancy; but moral strength and independence are by no means the invariable accompaniments of high mental development.

* * *

BUT to attack ideas is not to vilify or depreciate men. These last are in themselves but instruments whereby ideas are propagated, and commended to the favor of humanity. Men come and men go; ideas, once enunciated, never die; they may affect fewer persons as the ages roll along; they are modified, threshed over, put into new shapes, as circumstances change; they are sometimes apparently ignored for a while, or supplanted by their own progeny—by other ideas which they have suggested, and brought into effective being; but their essential attribute is immortality, and they breed forever and ever.

AND, as men are but the channels through which ideas are conveyed to other men, there is no real common measure of value between the man and the idea. In the great Republic of Thought, all men are equal, as well as free. Truth, which is the only law of the mind's domain, is no respecter of persons. Before her august tribunal, every abstract proposition is tried, and stands or falls according to its merits alone. However able and exalted the advocate, however keen and subtle his argument, however clever the disguise in which a fallacious doctrine may be decked out, the remorseless "Roentgen ray" of right reason is turned on, and casuistry is detected and condemned.

THIS is not the teaching of Loyola. The great "Saint" Ignatius was fond of his famous theory of "probability." He held that there were many cases in which we might safely accept certain things as true, not because they commended themselves to our individual judgment, but merely because of the source from which the assertions came. "You might, yourself, be inclined to doubt this, if it appeared in a book by an unknown author, or if it was told you by a person whose character for discrimination and sincerity you esteemed to be lower than your own, or at least no higher; but you will be fully justified in accepting it, notwithstanding your private doubts, as a matter which is probably true, if you get it from a person whom you concede to be more learned and more intelligent than you are, and whose candor you regard as unimpeachable"—such is the substance of Ignatius Loyola's doctrine of "probability," if I apprehend it aright.

* * *

Now this doctrine of "probability" pervades our jurisprudence to an amazing extent. It is so rooted in many legal minds that ridicule is the reward of him who questions the conclusions of certain eminent jurists, when he is not visited with the scorn and wrath that "blasphemy" awakens among men of another stripe. "Who are you, to question the verity of a principle indorsed by such a man as Mr. Justice Blackstone? Who are you, that you set yourself up as a critic, and doubter, when Judge Marshall has made his ruling, or the great Story has formulated his theory of the Constitution? Do you suppose it is probable that you are right, and such men as these are wrong? Are you so vain and presumptuous as to imagine that such a thing is even possible?"

* * *

I HAVE suffered before now, in my time, from the animus which finds expression in such interrogatories as are here given, and I am afraid I am likely to suffer again. But it cannot be helped. I must insist upon it, that, if the race is to get any profit whatever out of the continuous battle of ideas, it is essential that every proposition shall be analyzed, dissected, weighed, considered, debated, and accepted or rejected per se, and utterly irrespective of the source from which it emanates. There is no quality of intelligence or morals, high or low, about the preacher which affords any final reason for either accepting or rejecting what he says. A scoundrel may evolve a sound moral proposition; a fool may utter a wise thing; a profound philosopher may sometimes chance to drivel.

* * *

APPROACHING Mr. Blackstone, then, with all due respect for his extensive learning and his remarkably clear and accurate way of setting out his matter, yet with no awe of his grandeur, and no predisposition whatever to adopt his conclusions simply for the reason that they happen to be his, rather than somebody else's, we can see, readily enough, many fallacies in his work, and can appreciate the infinite harm which he has done to the English-speaking race by giving to those fallacies the sanction of his high authority. The fact that his book is still used and recommended in nearly every law-school in this country renders it practically a modern work, and perpetuates its capacity for misleading and mischief-making.

* * *

It is Mr. Justice Blackstone who talks to our boys about law—human law, we must bear in mind—as having “her seat in the bosom of God.” This is nonsense, of course; but in the “Commentaries” it is nonsense of a particularly dangerous and objectionable kind. And it is nonsense which is quoted frequently in our time, and is embodied in a certain legal distinction which has received the indorsement of the highest courts of the United States. It is, in fact, the nonsense of the union of Church and State, which finds expression in the classification of human actions, as taken cognizance of by human criminal law, into the malum prohibitum, and the malum in se. The malum in se is the thing which is wrong in itself—as, for example, stealing, murder, etc.; the malum prohibitum is the thing which is wrong only because the law forbids it—as shooting birds “out of season,” bringing goods into one country from another without paying a government “duty,” or importation tax, etc. In other words, things of the first class are immoral, as well as illegal; things of the second class are illegal—query, also immoral?

* * *

A VAST deal of curious erudition has been accumulated around this classification. For example, it is an established general principle that ignorance of the law excuses nobody. This principle, however it may appear to conflict with the actual practice of arguing the law, and taking appeals from courts of inferior jurisdiction, is a principle of absolute necessity; for, as we can never ascertain with any degree of certainty what a man knows or does not know, it is impossible to allow the plea of ignorance to be regarded as a defense against a criminal charge. But it has been said that where an act is only an offense against an express statute, and thus malum prohibitum, without being, at the same time, malum in se, a jury may take into consideration how far actual knowledge of the law ought to be imputed to the offender, and, in this connection, may give their attention to the length of time that the statute had been in force when the offense was committed, and other attendant circumstances of the case.

* * *

THE question of malum or bonum in se as a characteristic of a human action is evidently a moral question—in other words, a question of religion. This is a question which is tried under the law which “hath her seat in the bosom of God.” It is investigated and decided by that awful Judge “unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid.” It is utterly beyond the reach of mere man, beyond the jurisdiction of the courts of his establishment, beyond the purview of any statutes that he can frame or enact. For him to undertake to deal with such a matter, in his judicial administration, is to blasphemously set up a union of Church and State, to wickedly intrude on his fellows’ rights of conscience.

* * *

MR. JUSTICE BLACKSTONE to the contrary, notwithstanding, human law—at any rate, American human law—knows no such distinction between things as that of malum prohibitum and malum in se. It knows nothing of an act as either malum or bonum. The only distinction it recognizes is between that which is prohibitum and that which is non-prohibitum—in other words, between what it punishes as criminal and what it does not punish, because it does not choose to consider it criminal. It matters not whether an act be forbidden under the “Common Law” of England, where that has been adopted by an American State, or whether it is forbidden by a State statute. The Criminal Court judge simply inquires whether or not the person who is arraigned before him on a certain charge has done something which the “law of the land” says he shall not do, or has left undone something which the same law says he shall do. With the point of malum or bonum—the morality or immorality of either the act or the omission, such a judge has nothing whatever to do.

Ans. J. Ringgold.

SAYS the New York Observer, of May 20, in speaking of the Turkish triumph over Greece; “It makes one rage to say it, but barbarism has triumphed through the sheer ineptitude of Christian powers. Its victory is marked by the groans of all Christians in southeastern Europe.”

The Observer is mistaken. There is no more reason why one should “rage” over the triumph of Turkey in the war, than over the triumph of Greece had that been the result of the fighting. The “barbarism” of the affair is in the war itself, and barbarism triumphed when hostilities begun. Going to war is itself a demonstration of the barbarism of any nation that does it. The so-called “Christian powers” are as fair exponents of barbarism in the use of their armies and fleets as is Turkey in her war with Greece.

American Freedom Not Yet Won.

From a Memorial Day oration delivered in Educational Hall at Point Pleasant, N. J., by Mr. H. B. Maurer.

IF General Grant, upon an occasion like this, could say, "Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church and the private school supported entirely by private contribution; keep the Church and State forever separate," it surely will not be unfit or inappropriate for me to give, in this presence expression to similar sentiments; nor do I with any degree of reluctance go further than did he, when I declare that such an absolute divorce of Church and State, as is the boast of some, is not yet here a reality. As long as there are certain laws upon our statute books, and as long as there are in vogue certain customs, there remains here, so far as those laws and customs savor of it, that unholy alliance which has ever proved, wherever tried, a detriment to religion and a curse to the people.

H. B. MAURER.

In justification of them, the advocates of such laws and the champions of such customs, deny that there is here a union of Church and State, and explain the presence of those things among us, of which we, the advocates of religious liberty in its fullest plenitude, complain, as a union of the State and Christianity; but this nation never can be, according to the principles of primitive Christianity, on the one hand, and the principles of the Constitution of the United States on the other, a government of Christians, by Christians and for Christians—the remarkable decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, that this is a Christian nation, notwithstanding—but can only and always be, according to the definition that could emanate only from such a mind as that of the immortal Lincoln, "A government of the people, by the people and for the people." Therefore any law or custom, that infringes upon the rights of conscience of the humblest citizen, is in contravention of the principles of true religion and sound Americanism, be such a citizen an Adventist or atheist, Baptist or Buddhist, Congregationalist or Confucionist, Methodist or Musselman, Papist or Presbyterian, and so on down the alphabet to Unitarian or Universalist.

I am neither an attitudinarian, a platitudinarian, nor a latitudinarian, but a very decided Baptist, and will not hesitate to make my convictions known as such on all proper occasions—such occasions only however where no one is obliged to listen to my sentiments involuntarily. This being my view of the matter under consideration, I am opposed to the use of the Bible in the public schools, prayers in legislative assemblies and religious features of any kind in institutions of all kinds maintained at public expense, defrayed by the compulsory payment of taxes by men of all faiths and no faith. I am most emphatically opposed to that liberty of conscience which those prate about who favor religious liberty for all so long as the other fellow's conscience is what they think a conscience ought to be. I resent all definitions of sectarianism which are confined to Christianity only, for there is sectarianism as to religionists outside of Christianity; for as against the Catholic, all Protestantism's distinctive teachings or interpretations is sectarianism; as against the Jew, the distinctive teachings of both these Christian systems is sectarianism; as against the pagan, all religion, whether revealed in the New or Old Testament or both, is sectarianism; and as against the freethinker, religion from any source is sectarian.

Since Christ's kingdom is not of this world,—since Jesus expressed such sentiments as these: "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not;" "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's;" since a nation is defined to be "a people or community associated together under one civil government; an aggregation of a people of a common stock,"—I must accord to all, as a member of Christ's kingdom and an individual in a nation, the same religious privileges I enjoy; and if by proper persuasion I cannot win others over to my way of thinking in religious matters, I certainly can never do so by coercion. All history shows that compulsory measures in religion react unfavorably upon those who resort to them; so to say the least, they are as unwise and impolitic as they are unjust and unfair, and therefore unchristian and un-American.

Rights of conscience are to-day violated in our country by reason of religious laws, practiced in our land, which must soon demand attention. The question of slavery is settled, thanks to you, old soldiers, and in that Civil War, brought fresh to our memories by these recurring anniversaries, the question of human slavery was settled for the whole world,—since the emancipation of slaves has gone on in every land, save in some portions of Africa. But, in a higher sense, men are not free, and when I say this, I have not Russia, the land of intolerance, in mind; nor Germany and England, with their union of Church and State, but this Union, the dissolution of which you have prevented and rendered for all time indissoluble, let us hope. Here men are not free, and in connection with this assertion, I shall bring to your attention the burning shame of the nineteenth century.

Do you know that within the last three years men have been imprisoned in our southern States for conscience' sake—because they could not conform their conduct to certain laws, conformity to which meant to them violation of conscience? I have the reprint of a photograph taken of a chain-gang at work in Tennessee. Seven of its number—fine, stalwart-looking men, with their long flowing beards, gentle countenances and patriarchal appearance—working in the same gang with despicable criminals! It makes my blood boil to think of it. I tremble with excitement; it is a wonder that the inanimate stones do not cry out against these atrocities; and yet, while preachers vehemently denounce prize-fights, and temperance advocates become frenzied in damning the rum-seller, while with telescopic sympathy our hearts bleed for the famine-stricken of India, the massacred of Armenia, the fool-hardy Greeks, and the struggling Cuban patriots; while to-day we pardonably pride ourselves upon having freed 4,000,000 of slaves,—it is only in a few spasmodic instances that voices are heard in exposure and condemnation of the outrages upon those who have their natural, God-given, inalienable rights to freedom in matters of faith trampled upon.

To the disgrace of my own denomination, I must say it—my denomination, the first always in its advocacy of religious liberty—when there was in session in the State of Georgia a convention of its young people, one of our leading and highly honored preachers and authors attempted to have that body pass resolutions condemning those outrages, and failed. Must every prominent religious body, which once fought for religious rights, when such rights are gained, austere deny them to others? Great combinations are forming for the perpetuation of the laws and for more legislation that will make such outrages still more possible. The Christian Endeavorers, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the American Sabbath Union, the National Reform party and kindred organizations are all clamoring for more legislation to enslave the human conscience.

You cannot have a law without a penalty; and the enforcement of any religious law, and the infliction of its penalty when violated, cannot be anything less than religious persecution. The State must inevitably again lapse to those barbaric times, when it was the all-powerful agency at the beck and call of religious fanatics to carry out their hell-conceived schemes.

Keep the Church and State, even to the last degree, forever separate. Baptists should ever be mindful of the words of our leading organ, The Examiner and National Baptist, which in its issue of Feb. 15, 1894, said:—

"We wonder that the very stones do not cry out against such travesties of justice, that Christian men do not lift up their voices in protest against this wicked perversion of religion, this insult to the name of Christ. And, in particular, why do not Baptists, whose fathers stood against the world for soul liberty, make themselves heard when these relics of medieval bigotry and persecuting intolerance are found in our free country? Sunday laws like those found in Tennessee and Maryland are a disgrace to a Christian commonwealth in this nineteenth century, and should be repealed at the earliest possible moment."

And they should be mindful of this clarion note of warning of that paragon among our preachers, C. H. Spurgeon:—

"I should be afraid to borrow help from government; it would look to me as if I rested on the arm of flesh, instead of depending on the living God. Let the Lord's day be respected by all means; and may the day soon come when every shop shall be closed on the Sabbath, but let it be by force of conviction and not by force of policemen; let true religion triumph by the power of God in men's hearts and not by the power of fines and punishments."—Quoted in the Australian Sentinel, March, 1895.

SPEAKING of the humiliation of the Greeks and the rehabilitating of Turkey which has been the result of the war between them, an antichristian journal says: "There is a lesson in this, we hope. After the experience of Greece nobody should be deluded into a belief that the Christian God will help those who fight in His name; no people should depend upon the powers of Europe for defense; none should be misled by the fanatical jingoism of Christians; none should raise the question of religious differences between nations, nor go to war to settle them."

The Word of the Christian's God says plainly that His servants must not fight, because His kingdom is not of this world; hence it should not need the experience through which Greece has passed to convince people that God will not help those who fight in His name. The fact that some nations and individuals do fight in His name does not constitute an indictment of God any more than the many crimes committed in the name of Liberty constitute an indictment of Liberty.

HAVING failed in her effort for reunion with Rome, the Anglican Church has engaged in a movement for union with the Greek Church, in the interests of which the Archbishop of York has recently made a visit to Russia. Of this the Moscow correspondent of the London Standard says:—

"The visit of Dr. Maclagan has aroused among all classes of society in Moscow an interest amounting to enthusiasm. One of the most popular local papers remarks that, rightly understood, the visit means more for the Orthodox Russians than even the Greco-Turkish war.

The union of the Greek and Anglican churches has been the topic of conversation of late, and whatever be the practical result of such a movement, no doubt such a union has been advanced a step by the cordial reception given everywhere to the Archbishop of York."

THE Russian government having refused to vize the passport of a Jewish citizen of California who wished to enter Russia for the purpose of visiting relatives, and this refusal having come to public notice, Senator Perkins has introduced in Congress the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That this Government request the Imperial Government of Russia to specifically declare whether American citizens are excluded from Russia on account of their religious faith, and if so, that said Imperial Government of Russia be requested to remove such prohibition and to permit Americans of whatever religious faith to visit Russia, if they are not liable to become a charge upon the Empire by reason of poverty or an inability to support themselves by honest labor."

It would seem that at last even Ecuador is to a considerable degree shaking herself free from the incubus and blight of papal priestcraft and Jesuitism. The Jesuits have been banished from the country by a government edict, and the distribution of Bibles is now freely permitted. As a result many of the inhabitants are calling for the Word of God. The weakening of the last strongholds of anti-biblical religion points to the completion of the work of preaching the gospel in all the world for a witness unto all nations, which the Saviour said should immediately precede his second coming.

A RECENT ruling made by Judge Righter, of the District Court of New Orleans, in a case which attacked the right of the city to make grants of public money to denominational institutions, holds that the fact that the grants of money were made to more than one institution renders them non-sectarian. This is on the principle that two wrongs make a right, or that an evil ceases to be an evil by being multiplied.

EX-POSTMASTER-GENERAL WANAMAKER, says the Union Signal, predicts the advent of a new political party, as a result of "the low state to which the political religion of the nation was brought by unscrupulous bosses." It cannot be denied that the "political religion" of the nation is in a "low state;" but the very nature of this "religion" precludes it from attaining to any other plane of activity than a low one; while the "unscrupulous bosses" appear to be a necessary adjunct of every successful political party. A new party can give no permanent relief to the situation, because it is not a remedy that can reach the seat of the difficulty. It is useless to try to lift politics above the level of human nature.

In Topeka, Kans., after twelve years of freedom from open saloons, the State prohibitory law has been defied by the opening of an attractive saloon in the principal street of the city. A mass meeting of citizens called to consider the situation adopted resolutions calling upon the governor to remove the Topeka police commissioners, and demanding the prosecution of all violators of the law. It is public sentiment that determines whether a law shall be enforced or not; and right public sentiment can come only from the education of the public in the principles of self government.

If there were no other proof for the proposition that this is not a Christian nation, its truth would be amply demonstrated by the prevailing cruel, senseless, revolting worship of the goddess of Fashion in the form of the decoration of ladies' bonnets with the lifeless bodies of the innocent, beautiful, songsters that do so much for the farmer against injurious insects and contribute so largely to maintain what little natural beauty is still left in this dark old earth.

Our decoration day number (June 3) has been voted by our friends one of our very best issues. We have a few left. First come first served. Usual prices.

God had said of Israel, "Lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations."

But contrary to his expressed will, and against his solemn protest, Israel set up a kingdom and established a State.

They did this, they plainly said, that they might be "like all the nations." Contrary to all the Lord's wishes, the people would "be reckoned among the nations."

But Israel was the church, while all the nations were States. Israel, therefore, could not be like all the nations without forming themselves into a State.

But Israel being the church, could not possibly form themselves into a State without at the same time, and in the very doing of it, forming a union of Church and State.

They did form themselves into a State, and did thus unite Church and State. But as this was contrary to the Lord's plain word, and against his solemn protest, it certainly stands as the truth that any union of Church and State is against the plain word and the solemn protest of God.

Israel as "the church," which is "the pillar and ground of the truth," was the depository and the representative of the true religion in the world. Then when Israel formed themselves into a State, this was nothing else than a union of religion and the State. And as their forming of a State was contrary to the expressed will and the solemn protest of the Lord, it is clearly the truth that any connection between religion—and above all the true religion—and the State is positively against the expressed will and the solemn protest of God.

And as Israel, the depository and representative of the true religion, in order to form a union of religion and the State, had to reject God; it is certainly true that every other people in forming a union of religion and the State, do, in the very doing of it, reject God.

Nothing can be plainer, therefore, than that the God of heaven and earth, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, is eternally opposed to a union of religion and the State. He will never be a party to any such transaction.

This is why he desired that "the people should dwell alone." This is why he would have it that they should "not be reckoned among the nations." He desired that they should abide with him, and have him their only God, their only King, their only Ruler, their only Lawgiver—their "all in all."

God wanted not only that Israel, but that all people on the earth, should know that he is better than all other gods, that he is a better king than all other kings, that he is a better ruler than all other rulers, that he is a better Lawgiver than all other lawgivers, that his law is better than all other laws, and that his government is better than all other governments.

For this reason he would station Israel in Palestine, at the pivot of the highways of the nations; with the God of heaven as their only King, Ruler and Lawgiver; with his law their only law, and his government their only government; the people dwelling alone and not reckoned among the nations—a holy, happy, people; a glorious church.

Dwelling thus in the sight of all the nations that had forgotten God, those nations would be constantly taught the goodness of God and would be once more drawn to him. Accordingly he told them "Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, . . . that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people."

But Israel would not have it so. Israel would "be reckoned among the nations." Israel would be "like all the nations." And so it has been, from that day to this.

God has never been allowed by his professed people to reveal himself to the world as he really is. His Church has always been too willing to "be reckoned among the nations," too willing to be "like all the nations." She has always been too willing to be joined to the State, to be a part of the State, to have religion a matter of State and government, "like all the nations." And so it is with the church in all the world to-day.

"'Like all the nations.'—The Israelites did not realize that to be in this respect unlike other nations was a special privilege and blessing. God had separated the Israelites from every other people to make them his own peculiar treasure. But they, disregarding this high honor, eagerly desired to imitate the example of the heathen.

"And still the longing to conform to worldly customs and practices exists among the professed people of God. As they depart from the Lord they become ambitious for the gains and honors of the world. Christians are constantly seeking to imitate the practices of those who worship the god of this world. Many urge that by uniting with worldlings and conforming to their customs, they might exert a stronger influence over the ungodly.

"But all who pursue this course thereby separate from the Source of their strength. Becoming the friends of the world, they are the enemies of God. For the sake of earthly distinction they sacrifice the unspeakable honor to which God has called them, of showing forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light.

"The days of Israel's greatest prosperity were those in which they acknowledged Jehovah as their King—when the laws and government which he had established were regarded as superior to those of all other nations." And such will be the days of any people's greatest prosperity.

God's laws, just as they stand, without any reenactment, without any adding to or diminishing from, are superior to all other laws. His government, administered by himself through the operation of his own eternal Spirit, is superior to every other government.

But how shall the people know this, who know not God, so long as his own people will not have it so? How shall the nations know this, when his own professed church will not recognize it or have it so?

Instead of holding fast God's laws and government as superior to those of all States and nations, the professed people of God consider that they must enter the politics and shape the policies, that they must tinker the laws and manipulate the governments, of the States and nations of the world.

Instead of magnifying God's laws and government before all the world, as superior to the laws and governments of all the nations, and showing unswerving allegiance to them as such, the professed churches of God seek to bring down from their superior place the laws and government of God, and mix them up with the laws and governments of all the nations in an unseemly and ungodly union of religion and the State.

And thus the professed churches of God, the young peoples' societies and leagues of Christian Endeavor—all the combined church elements of the land—are following directly in the track of the church of ancient Israel: they will not dwell alone; they will be reckoned among the nations; they will be like all the nations; they will join themselves to the State; they will form a union of religion and the State; they will reject God, that he should not reign over them.

That Elusive Prosperity.

As the weeks go by it becomes more and more evident that the prosperity promised upon the inauguration of a new political administration at the seat of national government, is endowed with the elusiveness of a phantom. President McKinley tells the people to wait and be patient, and the wisdom of patience under the pressure of trials cannot be denied; but very many of the people, and among them some erstwhile staunch supporters of the administration, have arrived at the conclusion that patience, however good in the abstract, has ceased to be a virtue as regards the regime which now prevails in our State and national governments. And there are ominous signs that ere long they will be ready to resort to desperate measures to obtain the needed relief.

There come reports from Western Pennsylvania that a vast army of starving men—the underpaid operatives in mines and mills—are planning an uprising which will be marked by bloodshed and conflagration. In many other parts of the country the industrial conditions are such as to invite an imitation of their example. It is human nature to seek to find relief from the injuries it receives, in an outbreak of human passion. This will bring ruin and more misery, but not prosperity to the community which it affects. The passions of human nature are at the bottom of all the trouble to-day.

While factories are shutting down and wages are being reduced on every side, while the resources of the laborer are dwindling and the ranks of the idle and destitute are being augmented, the coal trust is advancing the price of coal, and the beef trust is advancing the price of meat. And the only reason the price of everything else that is necessary to existence is not advancing, and that we do not have to pay for air and sunlight, is that in the wisdom of the Creator the circumstances governing their production were so ordained as to secure the most of them against manipulation by a trust.

High tariff and low tariff, bimetalism or a gold standard, may cause industrial disturbance and depression, as the country is made to shift from one to the other; but the country can in time adjust itself to the situation which results merely from a political policy. But the happiness and prosperity of the people can never be adjusted to the greed and selfishness which seek to turn the advantages of trade to the benefit of the few, by arbitrary interference with the natural law of supply and demand.

The SENTINEL has no remedy to propose for adoption by the Government or by political parties. It would only point men to that individual remedy which consists in the cherishing of right principles for the control of the individual life, and of faith in Him whose throne is in the heavens, whose kingdom ruleth over all, and who overrules in the kingdoms of this world. It likewise would say to the people, "Be patient;" but it would say it in the language of Scripture, "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." See James 5:1-8. The hope of every lover of justice and peace is the coming of the Lord. "For yet a little, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Heb. 10:37.

"Anarchy" in Monroe County, N. Y.

"Anarchy in Monroe County!" is the startling announcement which comes to our desk, printed in huge black letters upon a leaflet sent out from that section to "every law-abiding citizen." With the glance which takes in this appalling revelation, we catch also a sentence in large red letters calling for a "great law-and-order mass meeting" to consider the situation!

What has happened? Has the awful lynching epidemic broken out in that place? Has somebody been blown up by dynamite? or buildings destroyed by bombs? Hastily reading the statement of the facts, we discover,—what?—That some baseball clubs have been playing ball in the city of Rochester, ON SUNDAY. That is anarchy! for the clergymen of the place are agreed that it is such—speaking not as religionists, understand, but only as citizens.

Even the editor of the Rochester Times appears to share this extraordinary view. In his paper of May 26, speaking—or assuming to speak—for the law-and-order element of that city and vicinity, he says:—

"We do not hesitate to say that so far as it goes, the playing of baseball on Sunday in Monroe County or anywhere in this State, is ANARCHY."

The circumstances which led up to this rather remarkable situation are these. The wave of agitation for an enforced "Sabbath" observance which has been disturbing so many communities in the land, has reached the city of Rochester, and, as stated in a city paper, "some excellent people, including clergymen and Y. M. C. A. officials," started a campaign against Sunday baseball "on the ground that it is irreligious, detrimental to morals, and against the law." They sent a committee to the ball grounds on Sunday to secure evidence against the ball clubs; but the managers having been informed of their purpose refused to admit them, which fact was of course reported and found its way, with accompanying comments, into the columns of the press. The outcome was a call for a mass meeting of citizens in Fitzhugh Hall, on Sunday, June 6, to take measures for the suppression of "anarchy."

The Times, of June 7, gives a report of the meeting, which was attended by two thousand people. The speakers, as was to be expected, were clergymen, who wished it understood that they spoke not as clergymen, but as citizens. They betrayed their real standpoint, however, by their frequent references to the "Sabbath" and the moral law. Some of the utterances which gave character to the occasion, as given in the report, are as follows:—

Rev. Ward D. Platt: "I know that this baseball question is properly a civil question, but in my own mind I cannot get away from the fact that I am addressing an audience that has not relegated to the moles and bats the ten commandments, and that you still have a wholesome respect for an old book that is called the Bible. Most men like to see a game of baseball under proper circumstances and on proper days, but when the owners of these league teams become abettors of violations of the law and attempt to override the best sentiments of our people, then, I am sure, the people will say that they will withdraw their support. . . . These highwaymen have come out and attempted to throttle the laws of our great State in order that they may fill their purses. Here is a law of the State of New York, that rests upon the enactment of a decree thousands of years old, that was consigned to the awe-stricken people that gathered around the base of Mt. Sinai, that is as old as humanity itself, and, I say, here is a law, and what is the fact that confronts us? Three saloon-keepers, owning a baseball nine, have placed themselves in open defiance of the statutes of the State."

Rev. C. A. Merrill: "This fight against Sunday baseball is really insignificant compared with the greater issues at stake. We are battling for the sovereignty of our laws. We ask the people for patriotism. We want to show the poor man that the laws are made for him as well as the rich man; that when a law is made it is to be enforced to the letter, and not governed by the sentiments and opinions of our public officers."

Rev. W. R. Taylor: "Are these men who favor a more liberal Sunday aware that when they make a hole in the wall for Sunday amusements, that the employer of labor will also come in through the same hole? I have faith that when the American people learn that this Sunday rest is a national institution that they will show their teeth and claws and defy the person who dares attempt to take it away from them. And I have even hope for the baseball cranks when they learn that Sunday rest is an institution of our Government."

Rev. C. A. Barbour: "It is no business of the executive officers what the law is, except to find out what the laws are, and then, whether they are good or bad, it is none of their business, it is their duty to see that they are enforced."

It is evident, according to this last quotation, that Mr. Barbour would have justified Pontius Pilate in crucifying Jesus Christ; for the law of the Roman government was squarely against Christianity, and it was none of Pilate's business to consider whether it was good or bad, but only to enforce it. So likewise was the law of the land against the martyrs who were put to death by Rome; and when the church delivered them over to the civil authorities, with a hypocritical recommendation for mercy, it was simply the duty of the latter to see that the law was enforced!

The Rev. Mr. Taylor's statement that "Sunday rest is an institution of our Government," betrays a surprising ignorance of the fundamental law upon which the Government rests. For that law—the Constitution—declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;" and no religious institution can become an institution of the Government until this part of the Constitution is repealed.

The Rev. Mr. Ward omitted to explain how Sunday rest is based, as he asserted, upon the law of ten commandments given at Mt. Sinai. That law says nothing about the first day of the week, as every candid person must admit. Why do Sunday advocates persist in citing a law which specifies the seventh day as the Sabbath, in support of the observance of the first day? But all history testifies that in nothing has the human mind exhibited greater blindness than in its theology.

Doubtless those who assembled this mass meeting for the suppression of "anarchy" were actuated by a sincere desire to better the morality of the community in which they live, and firmly believe that the enforcement of the Sunday law will contribute largely to this result. But the fallacy of this view is so apparent that a moment's careful thought should have sufficed to reveal it. Let us note a few facts bearing on this point.

1. There is no power in human laws to make men better morally. Even the law of God cannot in itself do this. The Scriptures plainly say that it cannot. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." Rom. 3:20. The seventh chapter of Romans, from the tenth verse onward, is a graphic portrayal of the inability of the law of God to save or give any help at all to the sinner. It witnesses to his righteousness if he keeps it, and to his condemnation if he breaks it, and that is all. It furnishes him no power to do right, or to rise from the abyss of transgression. But (Rom. 8:3, 4) "What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

It is the life of Christ—Christ living in man (Gal. 2:20) that makes him better morally, and there is nothing else that can do it. Yet in their human blindness men—and even clergymen—imagine that there is some power in human legislation to make men better, and much of the legislation which goes upon the statute books to-day is framed with that idea in view! It is the supremest folly.

No act of the legislature can put Christ into one human heart; and without Christ there can be no ascent from the low level of human nature. No man by taking hold of himself can lift himself. Humanity cannot lift itself.

2. The whole subject of Sabbath observance is fully covered by the law of God, which specifies that the seventh day (not the first day) shall be observed as the Sabbath of the Lord. That law is binding to-day upon every individual; it stands in the authority and by the power of the God of the Universe, and there is neither occasion nor room for the "Sabbath" legislation which man presumes to put forth.

And when men—clergymen especially—talk about the duty of obeying the laws of the land, they should remember that God's Sabbath law is binding upon every individual in the land, and that that law takes precedence of any law of the land that relates to Sabbath observance. "We ought to obey God rather than men," said the apostles, and that is the rule of Christian life to-day. And there is no greater anarchy than that which sets at naught the law of God.

Mob Rule vs. Civil Government.

THE town of Urbana, in the highly civilized State of Ohio, was the scene recently of one of those tragedies with which the American public have become only too familiar, where the worst passions of human nature hold sway upon the throne of judgment and justice. A negro, guilty of a heinous crime, was under arrest in the jail, guarded by the sheriff and a company of militia. A mob gathered about the jail, and while attempting to break in and get possession of the prisoner, the militia, by order of their captain, fired upon them, and two highly-esteemed citizens were killed. The mob, reinforced, and furious for vengeance, renewed the attack; the sheriff and militia fled, and the prisoner was dragged from his cell and killed by sheer mob violence before being hung in the manner customary to lynchers. The efforts of the sheriff and militia to repulse the mob were for days the theme of angry denunciation on the part of the citizens.

By such occurrences the participants thoroughly demonstrate their utter incapacity for self-government. The sheriff and militia were there for the express purpose of guarding the jail. They had not put themselves there, but had been put there by the citizens themselves—by the very men who came, as an angry mob, against them. They were appointed to their office for the very purpose of making the government something else than a mob—of dispensing justice in a different manner from that employed by a mob. The citizens of Urbana attacked the government they had themselves set up, and for which they were responsible, and substituted for that government the rule of the mob. And by this they demonstrated that their own self-government was a failure, or in other words, that they could not govern themselves.

This occurrence, and the many similar ones which are of almost daily occurrence, speak with no uncertain voice concerning the future of American government. When a people can no longer govern themselves, they must be governed in some other way. They must be ruled by a power outside of themselves, and this means the establishment of a monarchy. Either the people must rule themselves, or they must be ruled by a monarch, or civilization must give place to anarchy.

Following close upon this dreadful occurrence, comes another similar in kind which throws, if possible, a still more lurid light upon our national prospect. It has been said in defense of these lynchings that they are prompted by a desire to secure that justice which so frequently miscarries in the machinery of the courts. But at the town of Princess Anne, Md., on June 9, a negro, who was under sentence of death by hanging, was taken from the officers by a mob while on his way to the jail, and after being kicked and beaten into insensibility, was hanged in sight of the court house. With such proceedings the securing of justice has nothing to do. The only thing secured or aimed at, in them, is the gratification of Satanic passion. The innate savagery of human nature easily breaks through the thin veneer of our 'Christian' civilization.

But what is the remedy? The remedy is individual self-government,—right principles ruling in the heart. For self-government depends not upon some scheme for controlling people in the mass, but upon a power of control exercised by each one over himself. Self-government and individualism stand or fall together. And every combination or "trust" of labor or capital stands as a menace to the continuance of self-government, by its restriction of individual freedom.

The purpose of the Creator is that every person shall govern himself; that there shall be, within him, a principle which directs and controls his whole life in harmony with the highest standard of right. If an individual has not this principle within him, it is the purpose of the Creator to supply it, through the provisions of his gospel.

Let that gospel with its subduing power over every evil passion, flourish and find free course in all the earth. It constitutes the only safeguard against the evils that threaten society and the individual to-day.

Sectarian Appropriations Condemned.

At a meeting of the Washington Secular League, May 31, the subject of "Sectarian Appropriations" was considered, and the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"WHEREAS, Franklin said, 'A religion that depends on the State for its support is, for that reason, a bad religion;' Jefferson said, 'It is wicked and tyrannical to compel any man to support a religion in which he does not believe;' Grant said, 'Keep Church and State forever separate,' and Garfield said, 'The divorce between Church and State should be absolute;'

"WHEREAS, Sectarian appropriations wring from unwilling contributors tax-money for supporting sects in which they do not believe, and

"WHEREAS, The injustice of any religion asking, accepting, or indorsing such unjust sectarian appropriations outweighs all its professed charity, thus neutralizing its influence for good; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That neither our Federal, State, nor municipal governments should ever hereafter make any sectarian appropriations whatever.

"Resolved, That every church, which, by its silence regarding these unjust sectarian appropriations virtually consents thereto, thereby stands convicted of indorsing injustice.

"Resolved, That reform, like charity, begins at home, and that until these unjust churches reform themselves, they can do but little good elsewhere, and are therefore undeserving of any government aid whatever."

No church, however, can be deserving of government aid, under any circumstances, so long as it is true that Church and State should be kept separate.

Sunday in Rhode Island.

THE agitation for stringent Sunday legislation in Providence, R. I., still continues, but an effort is being made to save Sunday diversions and amusements at Roger Williams Park from the prohibitions of the law. Under the present statutes, it is said, "a simple request for the Chief [of police] to enforce the laws would be sufficient to prevent helpful and healthy amusement on the first day, and if the head of the police department was inclined to follow the letter of the law, to stop the running of street-car, steamboats and the like." In the endeavor to place Sunday enforcement upon a "liberal" basis, the following bill was introduced in the legislature May 18:—

"SECTION 1. Section 17 of Chapter 281 of the General Laws is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. Every person who shall do or exercise any labor or business or work of his ordinary calling on the first day of the week, or suffer the same to be done by his children, servants or apprentices, works of necessity and charity only excepted, shall be fined not exceeding five dollars for the first offense and ten dollars for the second and every subsequent offense.

"Provided that nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prohibit the operation of steamboats, steam or electric railroads, the use of amusements at any public park of any city or town, in the discretion of the lawfully constituted authorities of said park, the publishing, selling and delivery of newspapers, or the opening of drug stores whose owners are registered pharmacists. Town Councils and City Councils by virtue of the powers vested in them by Chapter 40, Sections 21 and 22, may in their discretion prohibit the use by any person of any game, sport, play or recreation on the first day of the week.

"SEC. 2. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately."

This measure has, it is said, assurance of strong support in its effort to become law; in which event it would materially modify the danger of an enforced Puritan Sunday which now threatens.

Let nobody be deceived, however, by any modifications of Sunday laws to a more liberal form. The public will get what it wants in the line of Sunday legislation, and their sports and amusements, and the Sunday business of powerful corporations, will not be seriously disturbed. But this will not in the least prevent the heavy hand of "the law" from descending upon the few who keep the commandments of God. That is the way the "discretion" vested in city and State officials will, sooner or later, be manifested.

Over-organization Not the Real Difficulty.

BY JOHN D. BRADLEY.

RECENTLY, on assuming editorial control of the Arena, Mr. John Clark Ridpath, the historian, contributed an interesting paper on "Democracy—Its Origin and Prospects." After pointing out what he considers its three great sources, and sketching the progress of the doctrine of equality, he says that to-day it is evident that there has been a manifest decline in the principles of bold, free democracy. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the United States, a country which originally contained much of promise to lovers of freedom, but which is now "not without its striking analogy to that imperial Republic of Rome, which preceded the empire." Then he exclaims:—

"In the name of reason and history, why is it that this tremendous miscarriage seems to threaten the American Republic? Why is it that here, as elsewhere in all the civilized countries, the ruin and suppression of democracy seem to impend?"

He answers these "tremendous questions," as follows:—

"Democracy has in all countries been crippled by the over-organization of society. . . . Human society begins in equality; it is organized into inequality. . . . It is the common experience of mankind that organization becomes more and more excessive with the progress of a given people until they find themselves overdone and mastered by their own vehicle. . . . Races and nations have been organized to death."

There is much truth in these observations, but over-organization is not the real difficulty. Instead of being the cause of the subversion of democracy, it is but a manifestation of the cause, an important means by which that end is accomplished. The real difficulty is found in the answer to the question, Why does society over-organize? And this may be answered in a word—society over-organizes because the individuals composing it are selfish.

It is the common experience of mankind that in no country have men long been content with equality. In no respect has man more plainly shown his subserviency to the arch-rebel who said, "I will exalt my throne above the stars of God," than in this his supreme passion—the desire to get above and to control his fellows. Organization (or over-organization—for that is what it is when used in this way) affords an effective means for the accomplishment of their desire. It concentrates power and enables a few men to control other men and other things for their own benefit. Its tendency is to make men the slaves of men.

Under cover of the organized machine, that is attempted and accomplished which would not be dared by open and direct force. In short, selfishness is what is indicated by all over-organization. It is at the root of labor trusts, oil trusts, sugar trusts, church trusts, pools and combines of every description, offensive and defensive alliances, and the excessively over-organized militarism of Christendom.

It is useless to deal with organizations and attempt to keep them at the proper point. The only cure is to get love into the heart instead of selfishness, for each individual to "sanctify the Lord of hosts himself," and let God be his fear and his dread. Then there will be no desire to say "a confederacy," for it will be known that associations are powerless to save, and that they mean only destruction.

Christianity Separate From Politics.

It is the teaching of the SENTINEL that Christianity will not unite with politics, and that Christians cannot properly engage in the political contentions and strife which mark the life of the world around them. In this, the SENTINEL aims to set forth what it finds plainly taught in the Word of God. How this theory works in practice, under circumstances calculated to put its value to the test, is told in the following communication from an Adventist missionary to Turkey, in the Present Truth, of May 27:—

"Our workers in Turkey have passed through many peculiar experiences. Wherever they have gone and aroused an interest, they have soon been interfered with by the authorities. This was not because the Turks were especially hostile to our work, but rather because the situation is such in Turkey as to give any who desire to hinder one's activity, special advantages for doing so.

"The Armenians have always chafed under the Turkish yoke, and have agitated in favor of national liberty. To this end they have used all means within their power at home, and have also endeavored to enlist the sympathy and help of foreign powers to gain their long-coveted end. As they saw one after another of the Balkan States gain either total or semi-independence, they felt as though their time had come, and in late years have been especially active. This led to the late great outbreak and massacres. In consequence of their increasing activity, the Turkish government was proportionately active in suppressing them. This made it difficult for our Armenian laborers to go from place to place; and as soon as they held public meetings and awakened an interest, only a word was necessary by some prejudiced person to stir up the authorities against them.

"With scarcely an exception, every time our laborers have gone forth and aroused an interest, difficulty from this quarter has overtaken them; and in almost every case the difficulty was occasioned by the complaint of Armenian or Greek Christians. This resulted in many arrests; but the outcome of it all was that the government ascertained that our Seventh-day Adventist brethren were not political agitators; that they respected governments, and believed that as Christians, and followers of Christ whose kingdom is not of this world, we have nothing to do with revolution, or the overthrow of civil rulers, no matter how oppressive they may be. Had our brethren taken any part in political matters, they would have fared like the rest when the massacres came, instead of escaping, as they did, in every instance.

"The Lord made the government acquainted with the position of our brethren on this point through what seemed at the time to be hindrances. Again and again they were arrested. It seemed hard to bear, and we did not know what the end would be; but the Lord was preparing the way for a great deliverance in the time of trouble that was to come on the Armenians. Now we can see that what appeared to be difficulties were but blessings in disguise. Had our brethren waited until the difficulties began, before declaring their principles, it would not have freed them, as the Turks would have believed that this was only a dodge to save themselves. It was necessary to have this fact well established before the trouble began.

"Quite a number of our people in Turkey are Greeks, and what the present war may bring forth for Greeks in Turkey it is difficult to tell. But we are sure that if these brethren trust wholly in the Lord, the same wonderful providence that was over our Armenian brethren through the Armenian massacres will be over them.

"The degree to which the true situation of our people is understood by the Turk, is well illustrated by the experience of an Armenian priest, who, in order to cause trouble, tried to make a Turkish ruler believe that contributions for the spread of the truth were really for political purposes. A brother writes of it as follows:—

"At Shagshag the Armenian priest together with an Armenian layman called at Yahovah's government and complained against our brethren as though they were collecting tithes to send to Armenia to help the insurgents. The Turkish ruler asked the priest to state these things in a written petition. Then the priest called on the Turkish petition writer. [In Turkey many people are unable to write, and every village has one or more scribes, whose business it is to write documents and letters for the people.] But he at once refused to write such stuff, saying "Sabbatarians never do such things." Then the priest called on another clerk, and received the same answer; then on a third one, and again the same answer. The priest then called on the ruler without the writing, saying, "The clerks refuse to write." Then the ruler sends for all the brethren at Shagshag, and examines them closely about this tithe question; and from each one obtains the same answer, that the tithe is not used for Armenians, but for the Lord's cause—for the preaching of the gospel. The ruler then sent them away in peace. Thus Armenians accused us before the government for the same things that they themselves do, while we work for the Lord."

"These experiences contain an important lesson for all, as we are coming to a time of trouble for the nations

"such as never was," much worse than that experienced in Turkey. But the Lord is now at work, preparing people for this very time, teaching them the position which His children should occupy in the world. It is important that we stand wholly on the principles of the gospel, and so be separated from the world. Then the Lord can do for us what He could not if we were not entirely separated.

H. P. HOLSER."

Christian Endeavor and Politics.

THE position at which the Christian Endeavor movement has arrived in the evolution of its purpose to reform society, is indicated in the following from a newspaper report of an Endeavor rally held in New York City, June 7:—

"The yearly rally of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Fifth District was held last night in the Second Collegiate Church of Harlem, and was quickly turned into a red-hot political rally by the new city magistrate, Job E. Hedges, Robert Fulton Cutting and the Rev. William Justin Harsha.

"We want to hold up good citizenship in all its essentials," said Mr. Cutting, and he hinted that the only way to do it was to join the Citizens' Union and stand by its candidates. By way of a parenthesis he added that he had some membership blanks with him, and would be pleased to furnish them to any one who wished to join the Union.

"We are going," continued Mr. Cutting, "to give the people a chance to put men in office who are beyond question, and men who will carefully administer your affairs. We ask favor of no man. Honesty and virtue should be the only characteristics of the officials of the city. We rely on the young men and young women of the Christian Endeavor to help along Christian citizenship, and to work for men to honestly and admirably administer city affairs."

The speaker went on to eulogize several well-known officials of the city government, and the report adds that "some of the young Endeavorers writhed in their seats at the straight-out politics which he talked."

But what did they expect, and what does anybody expect from the Christian Endeavor movement, but straight-out politics? The mere fact that it has not affiliated with any recognized political party counts for nothing as a preventive against this. The organization has adopted political principles of action, and this in itself gives it a political character. It is working to gain control of governmental power by means of the ballot, for the purposes it has in view; and this is exactly what other political bodies are doing. It is virtually a political party like all the rest.

The sooner those Christian Endeavorers—and we know there are many of them—who would "writhe in their seats" at the sight of their meeting being turned into a "red-hot political rally," find out that nothing else than straight-out politics can come from the movement as now constituted, the better it will be for them.

News, Notes, and Comment.

It has been said that ideas never die. A poet has beautifully sung:—

"Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers,
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amidst her worshippers."

But this is poetry and poetical license. The error of assuming that our judicial system can deal and does deal with men's actions from the standpoint of morality is not only still sustained by our courts, it is repeated by our text-writers, with results which are occasionally so remarkable that they would be amusing, if they were not painful.

To a rightly constituted mind, the spectacle of a great thinker striving to "make sense" out of a popular superstition is never edifying. It is all very well to say that the man has no business to defend what he does not, in the secret depths of his own thoughts, believe in. There may be no conscious truckling to the zeitgeist. The brightest intellects are seldom free from a notion, more or less vague, that it is necessary to keep things as they are, in a general way, if we would prevent them from going to pieces altogether. To regard certain principles as absolutely essential to order and progress; to assume that the state of affairs by which we find ourselves surrounded is the only practicable state of affairs; to doubt our own ability to seriously improve things by altering them—these are often attributes of men endowed with great mental strength.

I OPEN my "Sharswood's Blackstone," and read a long and elaborate "note," suggested by Mr. Blackstone's division of things into mala in se and mala prohibita, and the underlying assumption of this division to the effect that human law is in some way connected with human morality. The profound question here wrestled with is about as follows: Does a thing which is not malum in se become malum when it is made prohibitum? Is it immoral to violate a "game law," in the same sense in which it is immoral to commit murder? Is a man morally bound to obey all the laws of his country just as he is morally bound to obey those laws which punish certain offenses mentioned in the Decalogue?

It goes without saying that Judge Sharswood grapples this psychological problem most manfully, and handles it with skill and vigor. That the result is nil, is not his fault. One need only read a few lines to see how utterly out of place such a discussion is in a law-book, and to appreciate that the text (to which the note is really germane) must itself have roamed beyond the scope of its ostensible purpose, which is the elucidation of human law. And such is the fact. The attempt to blend matters of morality with matters of law is fundamentally illogical, and nothing but absurdity can come out of such an undertaking.

HUMAN law has nothing whatever to do with morals. An act is not moral because this law allows it; it is not immoral because this law forbids it. Morality is the law of conscience. If a man sincerely believes that he ought to obey all human laws, simply because they exist (as some good men have maintained), then a breach of any one of such laws is immoral in him, not by reason of its being a violation of human law, but by reason of its being a violation of the law of his conscience. On the other hand, if a man holds that the mere existence of a human law does not involve any moral obligation on the citizen to obey it, but that it is every one's duty to determine for himself the morality of the conduct which the law prescribes or prohibits—then it is immoral in that man to obey any human law which seems to him to prohibit a moral course, or to prescribe an immoral course. All the Blackstones and all the Sharswoods that ever have been or ever shall be cannot determine such points for anybody except a Blackstone or a Sharswood. They are points that each and every man must settle for himself. If he settles them one way in his mind and acts in another way, he sins against the Holy Spirit within him.

AFTER a man has concluded that a certain law should not be obeyed, then, if he breaks it, he righteously lives up to the law of conscience; yet he sins against society; and the policeman, who is society's high priest, arrests him, and brings him in to answer for his crime. When he is duly convicted, he pays the penalty to society, but he does so as a criminal, not as a sinner.

AND the good old "Common Law" explicitly recognizes its inability to penetrate the conscience, to adjudicate upon morality, to distinguish between malum and bonum, in one of its phrases which has been, from time immemorial, addressed to the prisoner condemned for murder: "The sentence of the court is that, on —, between the hours of —, you be taken — and hanged by the neck until you are dead; and may the Lord have mercy upon your soul." A great deal of wit and sarcasm has been leveled at this old formula. It is argued that there is a palpable inconsistency in expressing the hope that Deity will show mercy to a person in regard to whom we expressly avow our intention to dispense altogether with the exercise of that quality. But such criticism entirely misses the point.

To my mind, the coupling of that last sentence with what precedes is far from being objectionable; it is sub-time. What does the whole thing mean? It means that the State says to the culprit "You have done a deed which marks you out as a being whose presence is a menace to the lives and the peace of those amongst whom you live; the protection of its people from each other is the purpose of the State; it is necessary, in order to accomplish that purpose, that you should be removed; but, in carrying out that purpose, the State does not assume to decide the character of your deed as moral or immoral; it does not undertake to weigh your temptations against your capacity of resistance, and so to determine your responsibility; this it cannot do; but it leaves the matter to the Higher Power, to whom you must answer in this regard; and its last words to you constitute a prayer that when He comes to judge you, He will temper justice with mercy."

So that culpability is one thing, and responsibility is another. And a man may be culpable and punishable under a human law for doing that for which he will not only receive no punishment hereafter, but for which, under the doctrine of future rewards and punishments, he may well obtain a high reward. And so, on the other hand, a man may escape the penalties of human law by suppressing the impulses of his conscience, and, while he may thus appear externally a good citizen, "law-abiding," and all that sort of thing, he will, if he gets his deserts, according to the same doctrine, be none the less held to account as a transgressor. Nor can he plead, in defense, that his action or his inaction was required or enjoined by "the law of the land." For it is not possible that this law should either know or make anything malum or bonum.

Religion in the Constitution of Australia.

THE Australian Federal Convention refused to insert a recognition of God in the preamble of the Constitution which it was the purpose of the session to draft, notwithstanding the importunities of the Presbyterian and some other churches in that country. The Convention decided to deal fairly in this matter with all parties and classes of the people to be governed by the new Constitution; and as this is God's manner of dealing with people, God is in the Constitution in a very practical sense. But He certainly would not be in a Constitution which favored one class of people above others, for God is no respecter persons. He sendeth his rain on the just and on the unjust, and maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good alike. And only those who manifest the same disposition in their dealings with their fellows can consistently profess to be his children.

But the controversy over the question of a constitutional "recognition" of God is not yet ended; for the Church-and-State party hope to carry their point before the Constitution is finally ratified as the fundamental law of the land.

At the session of a commission of the Presbyterian Assembly, held in May, much attention was given to this matter, and it was moved that a committee of Presbyterians lobby at the colonial parliaments for the purpose of counteracting the vote of the Convention, and of securing more recognition of Sunday as a sacred day. Mention was made of the Seventh-day Adventists as having manifested a formidable opposition to the scheme for securing the proposed establishment of religion by the State.

The Australian "National Creed."

The "Bible Echo," Melbourne, Aus.

THE Adelaide Church of England Church News, of March 26, commenting on the petitions which the churches are sending to the Federal Convention, says:—

"We, the members of the Church of England in Australia and Tasmania, desire that in the preamble of the bill which frames the Federal Constitution some words may be inserted setting forth our national creed."

And it adds:—

"In this matter, we thank God, we are entirely at one with all the Protestant bodies of Christians in this city and colony."

And it further says:—

"It is unlikely that our Roman Catholic brethren will fail to show their approval of the main principle."

This is plain language, and shows just what we have maintained from the first, that the design of the petition of the Council of Churches is to establish a "national creed."

And any principle implying such a thing Protestants may rest perfectly assured will be approved of by "our Roman Catholic brethren." The Roman Catholic church indorsed that principle over a thousand years ago. Upon that the whole system of the papacy was built, and out of it grew all the evils and horrors and bitter persecutions of the Dark Ages. When the papacy approves of that principle she approves of her own; and when professed Protestants approve of it, and ask her to approve of it, they are both denying the fundamental principles of true Protestantism and clasping hands with that church, whose history for twelve long centuries is written in the blood of the saints. . . .

We are glad to say there is one church that is not "at one with all the Protestant bodies" in demanding a union of Church and State. It is the Seventh-day Adventist church. This church protests against the whole business, and declares for religious freedom.

Religious Constitutions.

BY M. E. KELLOGG.

THE National Reformers, so-called, who have for years been trying to secure a union of religion with the State in this country by means of an amendment to our national Constitution, are greatly rejoiced that in Australia, now about to form a confederation, there is a strong effort being made to form a constitution after this religious order. To this end the churches of Australia have circulated the following petition, which the members are largely signing:—

"1. That in the preamble of the Constitution of the Australian Commonwealth it be recognized that God is the Supreme Ruler of the world, and the ultimate source of all law and authority in nations. 2. That there also be embodied in the said constitution, or in the standing orders of the federal parliament, a provision that each daily session of the upper and lower houses of the federal parliament be opened with prayer by the president and speaker, or by a chaplain. 3. That the governor-general be empowered to appoint days of national thanksgiving and humiliation."

As might be expected, the Catholics of Australia are very anxious that these principles should be embodied in the Australian federal constitution. They well know that the time may, and probably will, come when they can use this thin edge of a general establishment of religion to drive in the one religion of the Roman Catholic Church and make that the religion of the Australian State. Protestants in their blindness fail to see it. They also fail to see that the adoption of such ideas is a virtual surrender to the Church and State theories which caused so many persecutions in the Middle Ages.

Other points are worthy of notice. The Catholic Church here claims that she has all that she wants in this country; that the Constitution of the United States just suits her; but the Catholics of Australia wish to put into the constitution of that country the very things in regard to religion which were expressly and purposely thrown out and forbidden by the Constitution of the United States! This harmonizes with a late encyclical of the pope in which he said that while "it would be universally lawful or expedient for State and Church, as in America, to be dissevered or divorced, she (the church) would bring forth more abundant fruits if, in addition to liberty, she enjoyed the favor of the laws and the patronage of the public authority." So the Catholics of Australia, and the Protestants too, want more than liberty; they want the "favor of the laws and the patronage of the public authority." Should they get this in principle in the constitution, then the battle will open to see which will get the most in reality. It must be so.
